Laurentian Lodge Receives a Fraternal visit from their Montreal Brethren.

—:o:—

Oddfellowship has received an added impetus this week by the visitation of some 60 of the Montreal Brethren who came to town on Saturday last and were guests of Laurentian Lodge over Sunday.

Upon arrival of the evening train the visitors were greeted at the station by members of the local lodge who lined up on Bethany Street, and headed by the Pipe and Drummers band proceeded down the Main Street, to the Town Hall, where the degree team of Lansdown Lodge exemplified the first and second degrees upon four candidates, after which supper was served in the lower hall when 125 of the local and visiting members sat down and spent a pleasant hour around the festive board.

Just before Mr. W. A. Ball took the flashlight photograph of the gathering Mr. Robert McArthur, District Deputy Grand Master, called upon Past Grand Bro. H. Slater to make the presentation of a veterans Jewel to Bro. H. Kearns, who during the past twenty-five years had been such a faithful and energetic member of the Lodge. Brother Slater performed the task in his usual happy manner and Mr. Kearns suitably responded.

On Sunday afternoon all the members turned out on parade and attended divine service in the Presbyterian Church, which was of unionistic nature, in so far that the choir was composed of the various churches and the platform occupied by the Revs. J. L. George, J. F. Forsythe and J. H. McConnell.

The Rev. Mr. McConnell gave a very earnest address from the text found in 2nd King 10-15. If thy heart be as my heart, give me thy hand.

The speaker brought to mind the six brave hearts in Baltimore who some 94 years ago instituted the order, and led to the present membership of over 2,000,000 hearts that are welded together in the three links of friendship love and truth, bent upon carrying cheer and comfort to those in sorrow and need. Over 6 millions of dollars have been expended in helping to dry the tears of the widow and the orphan and tide over the sickness of their brother men. We are coming to the highest form of civilation, which is brought about by the highest standard of Christianity and that high form is brotherly love. We are doing our noblest, by precept and example to be a neighbor to every other man, be he in our city, our land, or our world. The beneficial character of mutual service has undoubtedly been the secret of its widespread success in the past. "God alone has the power to make us the men we aught to be, and his power is exercised only when we prove to him the love we have for our fellow men.

A collection was taken up on behalf of the Children's Memorial Hospital amounting to $43 75 during which the choir, under leadership of Principal Chas McBurney, rendered a very pretty anthem. Meals were served in the Victoria Hall on Sunday and the visitors returned in a special car on the evening train, expressing many compliments to the beauties of our town and to the hospitality of its citizens.

ENGLAND'S LARGE FARMS.

Less Than Five Per Cent. Have Shown Any Profits.

As David Lloyd George, British Chancellor of the Exchequer, has promised that something shall be done by way of legislation to better the condition of the three classes—the landowner, the farmer, and the laborer—who are supposed to get their living from the land, the English papers are printing articles describing the actual conditions in the country.

It is learned that among the farms ranging from 2,000 to 10,000 acres less than 5 per cent. have shown an annual profit in the last ten years. One writer in The London Daily Mail goes into details in regard to a Midland farm of 2,109 acres, valued at £19,772 under the Finance Act, but which ten years ago could have been sold for three times that amount. The receipts from this farm amounted in 1912 to £1,322 7s 10d and the expenditure to £22 3s 5d, plus that amount.

Owing to the general fall in the value of land the landlord has lost a large capital sum since he came into possession. It is calculated that in England the capital value of land fell by over £1,000,000,000 or over £500,000,000 within a generation, and his due proportion of the national loss has fallen on this landlord. If put into the open market the estate would probably not fetch nearly £20,000, but if it sold at half this price the landlord would be richer than he now is by several hundreds of pounds a year.

One need not go into his reasons for holding, but it is clear that at present he acts as a sort of agricultural credit bank to the estate. Whatever requires capital to be done he does. When the farmers were in a bad way he reduced the rents to a minimum. In the eyes of both farmers and laborers, schoolmaster and parson, who complete the population, he is regarded as the pivot of the organization. Without his capital there would be chaos, and without his personality much less confidence, which is the moral side of credit.

OUR LETTER FROM TORONTO

WHAT IS BEING MOSTLY DISCUSSED AT THE PRESENT TIME.

Rev. John Coburn at the Star—Theatre Plays are Censored—World's Biggest Cross—Toronto Growing.

When Rev. John Coburn donned whiskers and heavy dark blue spectacles and bought a seat for the "gods" at the Star theatre the other afternoon he made a hit with the young "sports" who frequent the burlesque houses. Even if he had come to spy on the performance, they admired his originality and the manner in which he carried out his plan.

The show was entitled "Dante's Daughters," though in reality it was a made-over performance of the "Darling's of Paris," which got so much notoriety through the exposures of Rev. R. B. St. Clair. Mr. Coburn was aware of this fact and decided to see the first performance. So he donned his disguise and headed for the gods. His blue glasses were so opaque he could hardly see, and he had difficulty getting up the stairs. The theatre attendants put him in the back row and wondered why the box office had sold a ticket to a blind man, as he seemed to be. Then they got suspicious. They knew what "Dante's Daughters" really was and were on the look-out for clergymen spies like Mr. St. Clair, who visited the production last year. They examined their blind man closely, discovered his disguise and tried to eject him. But he stood his ground, and they had to leave him for the whole performance. As stated, the crowd admired his ingeniousness and pluck.

It is possible the end of the Star theatre is in sight, though it is too soon yet to prophecy. An amalgamation of what they call the "wheels," that is the management of the circuits, sending out burlesque performances, has resulted in the Star theatre, Toronto, being "frozen out," and after the present season it will no longer be able to get attractions of any kind from its present source. The proprietor is trying to organize a wheel of his own to include other cities and Toronto, and he may be successful.

While there are two burlesque theatres in Toronto, some comment has been caused by the fact that the campaign for cleaning up the theatres, which found its chief inspiration in Rev. R. B. St. Clair's revelations and charges, has been almost entirely directed against the Star.

A Newspaper Censor.

Since the appointment of Wm. Banks, Sen., to the position of censor, there have, however, been few complaints. Mr. Banks is a newspaper man of many years' standing, a prominent member of the Globe staff and foremost in various fraternal and social organizations. He is a canny Scot of quick perception and shrewd judgment, with a will to back up his opinions. So when he says something has to be cut out, it is cut out. And that's the end of it.

In his work he is assisted by two other newspaper men, who devote Monday afternoons and several evenings a week to visiting the various theatres and seeing that everything is on the level.

Much of the censor's work does not appear on the surface. For example, it is said that he virtually prohibited the appearance here this season of Gertrude Hoffman, a famous dancer, who reduces wearing apparel to a minnimum. The story is that he put his foot down and said if she put on her act here he would put her in jail. Anyway she hasn't come yet.

Mr. O'Keefe's Illness.

Mr. Eugene O'Keefe, who, at the time of writing, is stricken with a serious illness, is one of the prominent citizens of Toronto, and possibly the foremost Roman Catholic layman in the Province. St. Augustine Seminary, which is now rearing its walls on its splendid site on Scarboro Bluffs, about ten miles east from the corner of King and Yonge streets, will stand as a monument to his public spirit and affection for his church. His gift to the project in 1910 of $150,000 made the enterprise possible, and he has subsequently made substantial additions. This is by no means the total of his generosity to Mother Church, as he has for years been a generous contributor in all departments. On one occasion he presented a church, namely St. Monica's, valued at some $33,000, to the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation.

Chamberlain to the Pope.

In recognition of his services and character he was in 1909 appointed Chamberlain to his Holiness the Pope.

Mr. O'Keefe is now a very old man, being 86 years of age, but until his recent illness he retained unusual activity. In financial circles he is prominent, being President of the Home Bank, but it is the business of brewing that has furnished him with his life work and has been the source of his wealth. Originally a bank clerk, he organized in 1861 the Victoria Brewing Co., afterwards merged in the present company. Though born in Cork County, Ireland, he has lived in Toronto since he was seven years old.

Biggest Cross in the World.

St. Augustine Seminary is to furnish a training institution for the Catholic Church. It is to be surmounted by a huge cross, 16 feet high, with a cross piece of 8 feet. This cross will be 500 feet above the level of Lake Ontario, as compared to the 328 feet elevation of the weather vane on St. James' Cathedral staple. The cross is to be illuminated with eighty strong electric lights and will, no doubt, be impressive. It is said that it will be the largest illuminated cross in the world.

In connection with the lighting of this cross there may be an interesting controversy. It is said that the present plans of the Church are to light it only on certain occasions, governed by the Church celebrations. But there will, no doubt, be a demand on the part of sailors on Lake Ontario to have it lighted continuously, as it will be the most powerful beacon on the lake. If this is to be done, the Church will ask the Government to pay for the maintenance. And one can see the possibility of religious controversy which will arise if the Government pays for the lighting of a cross for the Roman Catholic Church. It is so easy for this country to drop into religious controversies.

The Seminary is to be open in August next, with Rev. Dr. Kidd, who was secretary to the late Archbishop McEvoy, in charge as President. Dr. Kidd is an Ontario product, a native of Adjala township.

Toronto Still Booming Along.

Toronto's growth shows no sign of slackening off. Building permits for the month of March totalled practically $2,000,000, as compared to $1,500,000 in March, 1912. The number was 732, as against 514. April will be another record month. They will include the new Royal Bank building at the north-east corner of King and Yonge streets, which is to be 20 stories high, and will cost in round figures a cool million dollars. There will also be a new $300,000 theatre, the new Dominion Bank building and other important structures.

Hon. W. T. White.

Toronto people, regardless of party poltics, are following the Finance Minister's career with the keenest interest. Hon. W. T. White is a real native son, and he has been smashing whiskered axioms, so why shouldn't they be taking an interest in him? He has proved for one thing that to be a Ministerial success does not imply a previous training as a professional politician. And that is a good thing for the country to know. As Finance Minister he has not been revolutionary. And Toronto thinks that outside Mr. Borden he is the strongest man in the Cabinet.

Signs of the Strain.

His friends note with some anxiety that his hair is turning grey and that the furrows on his brow are deepening. Canada loads up her Cabinet Ministers with a tremendous amount of detail and at the same time demands scrupulous exactitude in the despatch of each trivial item of business. And the position of Minister of Finance is probably the most outstanding illustration of these things in the country.

SPLIT 40 CORDS AT AGE OF 85

Thankful to the Medicine That Gave Him Ability For the Task.

A VERY INTERESTING CASE.

Few men of eighty-five years of age can boast of much else but poor health and failing strength. And such was the condition of Mr. Benj. Marsh, who is known to every soul in the neighborhood of his home at Lime Lake, Ont.

"Quite unsolicited," writes Mr. Marsh, "I wish to say how I have been bothered for years with stomach trouble. I tried everything I could think of without benefit. I was terribly afflicted with swelling and gas, and had much distress between meals. I tried everything I could think of, but without benefit. Then I was recommended Nerviline. My, but Nerviline did me a power of good—made a new man of me, so that within the last three weeks I have been able to split about forty cords of stove wood. I will always stick to Nerviline and will always recommend it, and would like to meet anyone and convince them if in doubt as to what Nerviline has done for me."

For sour stomach, nausea, belching of gas, cramps and sudden sickness at night, nothing is more helpful in the home, nothing saves so much pain and distress as Nerviline. Large family size bottles, 50c.; small size, 25c., at all storekeepers and druggists or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

SNAIL INDUSTRY REVIVED.

Village of Piddinghoe, England, Sends Them to France.

It has hardly been suspected that in the past many of the fat snails placed before the Parisian gourmet came from England—to be exact, from the Sussex village of Piddinghoe—and that now there are signs that the industry is reviving.

It seems that at the time of the Franco-Prussian war, when many French families sought asylum in England, a certain Mme. Doriat came to Piddinghoe, bought a cottage and began to raise what the inhabitants called "snegs" for the French fishermen who landed for them and took them over to France. The oldest Sussex fisherman in the place was recently interviewed by a London reporter on the subject.

"Yes," he declared, "I mind Mme. Doriat bought a house here and started to keep snegs. She had a little house in the garden where she kept the snegs. Used to get boys to gather them for her, and then keep them till they was fat enough to send to France."

The details of the fattening had slipped out of the old man's memory. "Wasn't it flour she used to feed 'em on?" he asked, and at any rate no one could contradict him.

What he does remember clearly is Mme. Doriat's method of ascertaining if a snail was good and worth the trouble of fattening.

"She used to make the snegs climb up a board sloped against the wall. If they stuck on they was good, an' if they dropped off they was bad. I've seen hundreds of 'em climbing up; but I never tasted one, and I ain't going to."

Mme. Doriat may be dead long since, but the snails of Piddinghoe to this day flourish to her memory. They are fatter than most snails.

Market 300 Years Old.

London, England, possesses a curiosity in the Southwark eel market, which is said to have been held regularly for over three hundred years. It is little known except in the neighborhood where it is held—viz., near Blackfriars Bridge, but now they come mostly from Holland and Scotland. They are not sold by weight, as is usual, but by the handfuls, the price being "fourpence the grab."

HISTORY OF TEA DRINKING.

In Sixth Century Well-Known Beverage Discovered in China.

According to the Chinese, tea was discovered by the great Emperor Chinug in 737. This ruler of the celestial kingdom stands sponsor for everything new in the vegetable line, remarks the Philadelphia Record, and so this legend may or may not be true. It is certain, however, that in the sixth century tea was already a well-known beverage in the land of the poppy and the peacock.

By the eighth century tea was common enough in every part of China and there is a tax record dated in the year 793 showing that Emperor Tih Tsung was determined to exact revenue from tea. Since that date tea has been regularly taxed as a luxury in every country where it is extensively used.

Tea was carried to Japan and cultivation established early in the ninth century. It is quite difficult to establish the exact date when tea-drinking was introduced into Europe. There is no trace of it prior to the year 1588, although other Chinese customs had been imported before then. Tea was brought to Europe by the Portuguese, who were the most daring of the world's explorers and discoverers in that distant day.

The earliest mention of tea drinking in England occurs in a letter from Mr. Wickham from Japan, dated June 27, 1615.

In 1656 the English began to drink tea in society circles, the supply being imported from Java at the cost of $30 to $50 a pound. It is quite needless to say that the common people did not drink much tea during those days. To-day tea is used the world around.

Tarred Rope Horseshoes.

In Germany many horses are shod with shoes made of tarred rope. The object is to prevent slipping on streets covered with asphalt or paved blocks. In some of these shoes there is also a block of wood into which stiff bristles have been driven. This is an additional preventive against slipping and strengthens the shoe. They are light and comfortable for the horse and deaden the sound of the hoof.

CHILDREN NOT ADMITTED

"Wanted, a Housekeeper. Widow without children preferred.—Apply personally or by letter to 16, Manor Road, Hackham."

Peter Platt read his own advertisement through half a dozen times; then he threw down the paper, stared at the clock, banged the heel of his boot upon a smoking coal, and settled himself more comfortably into his chair.

"A widow, because she's less likely to be gadding round with half the lads of the neighborhood; and without children, because I hate the very sight and sound of 'em!" he reflected, staring at the young flame which was licking up between the sides of the coal he had broken. "Nasty, noisy, sticky little beggars, eternally screaming or giggling, and always wanting attention from their precious mammas! Bah! I hate 'em—I hate 'em!"

A loud shouting of children playing beneath his window roused his temper to a dizzy height. He strode across the room, and stood glowering down upon the happy youngsters below.

"Get away! Clear off, or I'll send a policeman after you!" he snarled savagely through the window which he had flung up. "Be off, I tell you!"

The last footfall of the startled children had scarcely died away before a tap upon his door claimed the bachelor's attention. His housekeeper, who was to leave him the following week, followed her modest tap by peeping inside the room, and telling Mr. Platt that a lady had called to see about the situation.

"Has she any children?" snapped Peter.

"H'm! Show her in. What's her name"

"Phyllis Drew," announced the woman, as she withdrew.

"Phyllis!" growled Peter, his lips curling into a sneer. "These working women ought to be punished for giving their brats such fine names! Phyllis, indeed! I shall call her Sally!"

Mrs. Drew entered the room at that moment. She was a comely young woman of about five-and-twenty, with clear blue eyes that gave Peter a curious start as he looked into them.

"Ah! You've called about the advertisement?" said Peter, even forgetting his ill-temper in his admiration for the tender blue eyes. "Well, what can you do? Where've you been before? How long has your husband been dead?"

He fired the questions at her with a brusqueness which he did not wholly feel. And she answered his questions with an easy frankness which somehow pleased him. He found that her voice was as bewitching as her eyes. But he nodded in surly approval, and motioned to her to seat herself.

They talked for five minutes about the business side of the matter; then Peter made up his mind.

"Very well, I'll give you the job," he said. "But, mark you, Mrs. Drew, I'm not only content with the fact that you've no children; you must promise me that no children come into the house at all. This old housekeeper of mine has a fondness for neighbors' children, and she seems to be 'auntie' to half the children in Hackham. That's one reason why she's going. You understand?"

"Very well, you're engaged," snapped Peter.

And whilst he showed her out he averted his own gaze from the blue eyes which seemed to be looking into his soul, and finding there a very different man from the surly fellow whom the rest of the world supposed to be Peter Platt.

But although Peter was able to ward off the attack of Phyllis Drew's blue eyes for many months, he was at last compelled to surrender to them. Before the new housekeeper had been a week at her duties Peter was more than half in love with her. He struggled with the weakness as something to be ashamed of; but he enjoyed it, nevertheless. Moreover, he often thought he saw indications in the young widow which made him believe she might return his love.

There was something more than ordinary civility in the tone of her low voice when she spoke with him—something stronger than ordinary attention in her wonderful eyes when they looked into his own. And Peter, giving himself up more and more to the new delight of love, at last proposed marriage to her, with a shaky voice and a hopeful heart.

"Mr. Platt," said Phyllis, quietly taking a seat opposite to him, "you've done me a great honor, and I—I wish you hadn't!"

"Why?" he rasped, taking instant offence at her hesitation.

"Because it means that I must go. I can't stay on as your housekeeper any longer."

"Then you don't love me?" he muttered, shooting out his lips in surly disappointment. "I thought—in fact, I believed—that—— But, there, it's no use wasting words. You say you won't marry me? You're quite determined that you won't marry me?"

"Quite," she answered, in a voice so deep that he scarcely heard it.

"Very well," snapped Peter. "Leave as soon as you like, Mrs. Drew. And I'll advertise for another housekeeper, as old and ugly as I can get!"

She held out her arms to him with a simple gesture of pleading. He saw her lips trembling.

"Please—please don't be angry and bitter!" she begged. "I never intended to win your love. But don't think that I don't value it. I value your——"

"Good-night!" snarled Peter, turning from her.

Six months later Peter Platt sat alone in his little house, listening to the shrill whistling of a March gale past the curtained windows. His housekeeper—the old and ugly one—was out in the town, and Peter was silently blessing the quiet he was enjoying, free of the laughter and shrieks of the children, who had a moment before been scampering outside the house.

"I hate children!" he told himself, as if it pleased him to repeat the fact to himself. "I hate—— Hello! What's that? A knock? Who on earth comes here to see me on a night like this?"

But he crossed to the big front door and opened it. For a moment he stood staring into the street, his face dark with anger; then he banged the door.

"More of those tormenting children, knocking at a man's door, and then running away!" he snarled. "If I could lay hands on one of the little varmints, I'd—— Good grief! How on earth did you get in here?"

He was staring at a tiny little lad, who was crouching before the fire, and eagerly warming his palms at the blaze.

"I tum in when you opened the door," explained the mite, shivering closer to the fender.

"H'm! I must have been looking right over the top of you, you sly young shaver! Well, you can't stop here, boy. What d'ye mean by knocking at folks' doors and running in like this?"

"I tum in when you opened the door," repeated the lad, too frightened by Peter's warning manner to think of something new to say.

"Well, I'll open the door again, and you can 'tum' out!" growled Peter. But something in the child's helplessness made him pause with his hand on the door-handle. "What's your name?"

"Bertie," quivered the three-year-old tot.

"Bertie what?" demanded Peter.

"Bertie," said the child, shaking his brown hair, which touched his shoulders. "Jus' Bertie!"

"Well, and what street do you live in?"

But Bertie only shook his head.

"I wanted my mummy," he said, evidently not understanding the man's questions. "I t'ought my mummy might be in here."

"Why?"

Again Bertie shook his little head.

"I jus' t'ought," he said. "And I was so cold and tired. I've los' my mummy!"

Peter sat down and stared at the infant problem before him. What was he to do? According to Peter's understanding of his own nature, he ought to put the child into the street again, and let him find his lost mummy as best he could. But, instead of that, he found himself holding out his hands to take the winsome laddie on his knee.

Bertie smiled; and the warmness of that childish smile went straight to the man's heart, and thawed the ice-crust that starved it. Peter's hands instinctively drew the lad nearer to him, and the boy's wee fingers touched his face. A sob rose from Peter—a sob he did not understand. All he understood was that the pressure of the child's hand upon his face had thrilled him as nothing had ever thrilled him before.

With a glance round to make sure they were alone, Peter kissed the laddie. For a moment he forgot that he hated children. He only remembered that the childish face so close to his own was indescribably sweet and endearing.

"I suppose I ought to ask him his name and address again," mused Peter, setting the child on the hearthrug once more, and watching him eagerly. "It's time I set about taking him home. But I'll wait a while; the night is young yet. H'm!" He rubbed his chin reflectively. "I wonder whether I've forgotten how to play with children? In the old days at home, I remember, I used to be a lion, or a tiger, for my sister's baby. Have I forgotten how to be a lion—just once more?"

Impatient for the experiment, he made a dagger of a piece of paper, and handed it to the boy.

"Here's your sword, Bertie," he said huskily, going down on hands and knees. "I'm going to be a lion—in my den under the table here. See?"

"Li-yun!" repeated Bertie, who had evidently played the game before.

"Yes, a lion! Ooo-ooo! Did you hear him roar, Bertie? Now he's coming to gobble you up!"

Bertie's sword attacked him valiantly as he crawled slowly from under the small table. But Peter's boot had somehow become fast between the table-leg and a chair. And whilst he wriggled to extricate himself, he heard the housekeeper let herself in with her latchkey. To his amazement, he also heard the voice of a woman who had entered with the housekeeper.

Whilst Peter struggled to get his foot free, the door of the room swung open, and Phyllis Drew stood on the threshold. Bertie, dropping his paper sword, raced across the room towards her.

"What ever are you doing here, Bertie?" panted Phyllis, staring from Bertie to Peter, who, with a face nearly plum color, was still tugging at the boot, which refused to yield.

"We was playing at li-yuns, and he was the li-yun, mummy," explained Bertie, pointing to the unfortunate Mr. Platt, who was staring up into Phyllis's face with a complexity of feelings which no words could describe.

At last Peter wrenched himself free. He crawled out clumsily, with a feeble effort at a dignity which he had lost, he asked her whether she was, in truth, the "mummy" of the lad who clung so affectionately to her.

"Of course I'm his mother," Phyllis answered. "And I have to thank you, Mr. Platt, for playing games with him here, when I was nearly out of my mind searching for him."

The recent "li-yun" blushed scarlet, and stooped to brush the dust from his trousers.

"I couldn't find out who he was," he countered. "All he would tell me was that his name was Bertie, and that he lived 'in the kitchen.'"

Phyllis laughed and her vexation vanished.

"I'm sorry if I misjudged you, Mr. Platt," she said, holding out her hand. "It was good of you to play with the child—and I'm sure you make a splendid lion! But I thought you hated children?"

"Yes; I thought so myself—until half an hour ago," grunted Peter, taking her hand and pressing it for a moment. "And I thought you were a widow 'without children'?"

"No. I answered your advertisement because I was so tightly pushed for money that it was necessary for me to get a situation instantly. And I gave my Bertie to my mother to keep for me whilst I was your housekeeper here." Her voice dropped lower as she continued: "My mother used often to bring the boy past this house, and she would point out the house as the one where his mummy was. And so the child, when he lost me in the town an hour ago, naturally came here."

"But didn't you tell me you had no children?" cried Peter.

"No. You took it for granted, Mr. Platt. And, knowing that I had a little boy, it was impossible for me to—to——"

She stopped, suddenly confused.

"It was impossible for you to marry me, knowing that I hated children!" broke in Peter, taking her hand again. "But, Phyllis, now that I hate children no longer, will you be my wife?"

The word "Yes" was on Phyllis's lips as Peter felt a vigorous little tug at his coat.

Dayton's Seventh Flood.

Dayton, Ohio, has stood in the shadow of disaster from flood ever since its foundation. No less than six times previous to the present inundation have the rivers which flow through it left their accustomed courses and brought death and destruction of property upon the town. The first of these floods occurred in 1805, the very year that Dayton was incorporated as a town. The sixth was in 1898, and the others in the years 1847, 1863, and 1886.

Selected Recipes.

Cottage Cheese.—Mix one pint of cottage cheese with one-half cupful of chopped English walnuts, one teaspoonful of chopped chives, one teaspoonful of salt and one-half saltspoonful of paprika. Form into balls and arrange in nests of lettuce. Serve with a mayonnaise dressing, to which has been added some chopped olives and capers.

Cheese Cream Toast.—Melt one and one-half tablespoonfuls of butter, add one and one-half tablespoonfuls of flour and when bubbling pour on one and one-half cupfuls of scalded milk, stirring briskly until the sauce is smooth; season with salt, pepper and paprika. Add two-thirds of a cupful of mild, grated cheese and cook until the cheese is melted. Dip six slices of toast in the sauce, place in a hot dish and pour the cream sauce over them.

Boiled Icing—Often one finds that a boiled frosting is either too much done or not cooked enough. A woman whose boiled frosting always calls for praise tells the secret of her success. She uses three tablespoonfuls of water to a cupful of sugar; when the mixture begins to boil she slowly beats six tablespoonfuls of it into the white of an egg, beaten very stiff. Then she lets the remainder of the syrup boil till it hairs; this point in the cooking reached, she beats it gradually into the egg mixture.

Famous London Dish—Take a quarter pound of grated cheese. Dissolve in one cupful of milk, a small quarter of a teaspoonful of soda, then add it to the grated cheese; add a quarter of a teaspoonful of mustard, half a saltspoonful of white pepper, a pinch of cayenne pepper and two tablespoonfuls of browned flour. Heat in double boiler until cheese is dissolved, then stir in three well-beaten eggs, stir a few moments and pour into individual patty-pans or cases, and bake a nice brown. Serve hot.

Cottage Cheese and Chives—Rub the salad bowl with a small clove of garlic or mince the garlic very fine, add two cupfuls of cottage cheese and two teaspoonfuls of chives cut fine with scissors, one teaspoonful of salt and one-half saltspoonful of paprika. Mix well, add a little rich cream if necessary to help it retain its shape, then stir in lightly three tablespoonfuls of chopped pimento; pile upon a bed of cress and ornament with pimento cut in fancy shapes and place upon ice until needed. Serve with mayonnaise dressing.

Good Celery Pickle—For this celery pickle put in the good leaves as well as the stalks. Three parts celery, three parts cabbage, one part onions. Put these through the meat grinder and mix with three-fourths cup of salt to a gallon. Let stand overnight, then drain off what liquid comes away readily. Heat and add the following to every gallon: One quart good vinegar, one-half cup sugar, eight bay leaves, twenty drops oil of cloves, twenty drops oil of cinnamon. Just before stirring this into the vegetables add one-fourth teaspoonful of red peper.

Good Vinegar—To start, use any kind of sweet juice. If you have any jelly that has gone to sugar or that didn't form, or a little sorghum, syrup, or anything of the kind, put it in a stone jar with enough warm water to make just a sweetened water. Take a piece of brown wrapping paper, cut round the size of the jar lid, and put with it a thin layer of bread dough the size of the paper. Roll both up together and drop it in the jar; this will form the plant. Any kind of fruit juice of rinsings from jelly glasses may be added at any time. Keep the jar in a warm place. The contents will be vinegar in about three weeks after the jar is filled and will taste just like cider vinegar. It is a great saving, for one uses so much vinegar in the summer for sliced cucumbers, salads, beets, beans, covering pickles, etc. The same "plant" may be used for years if kept in the juice.

A NIGHT IN THE MARSH.

A Youth's Narrow Escape From Death on tht Kootenai River.

In the Northwest a good many streams flow sluggishly through wide swamps. These swamps lie between parallel ranges of hills, and are formed by the gradual deposit of soil by the river current. They must have been ages in building. Very likely a beaver dam that flooded the valley was the original cause of most of them. The semi-liquid mud is covered with a rank growth of rushes, tules, and water-lilies, with here and there tall grass not unlike small cane.

If you are very cautious, you can cross these treacherous places, but you must be careful not to step into a "well" dug by one of the muskrats that swarm over the marsh. After the fall rains begin, these marshes are feeding-places for innumerable water-fowl on their southward migration. Last season, writes a Companion contributor, a party of four camped on the Kootenai River. One evening, after a day of duck-shooting, only three of the party appeared at camp.

"Where is the junior?" asked John, the last to arrive.

"He is probably waiting for the evening flight," I replied, "and will come in by moonlight."

Night fell, the moon rose, and the boy did not come. At nine o'clock I lighted a lantern and set out to look for him. My companions each took a light and joined me. We reached the border of the marsh and fired a gun several times. There was no response. We chose the shoulder of a hill that loomed dim through the moonlight for a landmark, and pushed into the swamp. Every few yards we called to our lost companion or to each other.

The marsh is three miles across, and we had gone nearly half the distance when John called out, "I have struck a pond several rods across, and shall have to swing to the right to get round it."

We heard him threshing through the rank tules that always border these "pot-holes," and then we heard him cry:

"Here he is, fellows! Come quick!"

The boy was lying on a bed of tules, with the lower half of his body sunk in the cold ooze. The night air had chilled him until he was unable to move or speak. His face was covered with mud, his clothing was torn, his gun had disappeared. It was no easy matter to get him free. We pulled armfuls of tules, and made a platform on which to stand. His feet were so entangled in the snaky lily-roots that it took several minutes of hard work to extricate them. Then we dragged him to comparatively solid ground. He tried to stand, but sank back with a groan.

"Are you hurt?" I asked.

"No, but I cannot stand."

We could not carry him over the quaking morass, and if he stayed on the marsh all night he would surely succumb. So we took off his wet garments, laid him on a bed of tules, and chafed his body until the circulation was somewhat restored. Then each gave something from his clothing to keep him warm. After an hour he was able to move, and we began our difficult homeward journey.

"How did it happen?" I asked, when we had him safely in camp and wrapped in warm bedding.

"About three o'clock," he said. "I wounded a duck, and it fell some distance away. In my eagerness to get it, I neglected to watch for muskrat wells. Suddenly I stepped into one, fell headlong, and thrust my gun out of sight into the ooze. At first I was amused; then I found that I could not move. Every time I tried to lift my foot I sank deeper in the mud. At length I threw myself down, grasped the tules, and tried to pull my self out, but the tules would not hold.

"I called, but you did not hear me. I wasn't much frightened until night came, for I thought some of you would come past on your way to camp; but when the sun went down and no one came, I was frightened. I pulled all the tules I could reach and put them beneath me. It became very cold, and I wondered if the marsh would freeze hard enough for me to pull myself out before I became unconscious. It was a long time before you came. I tried to call to you, but I could not speak. If that pot-hole had not been there, you would have passed on, and missed me. That's all, only I'm awfully tired."

And he turned over and fell asleep.

HORSES EXTRACT CUBE ROOT.

Obtain Correct Answers When Trainer is Absent.

A discussion of a peculiarly interesting character took place at a recent meeting of the French Philosophical Society. This Society has greatly interested itself in the "educated horses of Elberfeld." The animals are the property of M. Krall, and he has taught them reading, writing and arithmetic, or claims to have done so.

The horses can extract the square and cube roots of numbers, performing the operation of multiplication, addition and subtraction which these involve.

The French society has endeavored to solve the problem presented by these remarkable quadrupeds, and invited M. Claparde, the distinguished professor of psychology at the University of Geneva, to address them on the subject.

M. Claparde said that since he had seen the horses two Italian savants had obtained a correct answer from them at a time when their trainer was absent. No hypothesis, he went on, can satisfactorily explain the extraordinary fact of which he had been a witness. Even if there were a trick, it involved great intelligence on the part of the horses. Other contributors to the discussion suggested the possibility of the horses being trained to act in accordance with signs made by their trainer.

M. Darlu, Inspector-General of Public Instruction, marvelled that the animals could learn in a few weeks that which it takes children three and four years of age several months to learn. He was especially astonished at the power of reading which the animals possess.

It was eventually decided that some further experiment should be made, but all the savants agreed that, whether there is trickery or not, the animals' performances are remarkably interesting from the point of view of equine intelligence.

AMERICAN BARRIERS TAKING A TUMBLE

Several Reductions Necessary Before the Tariff Schedule is Scaled Down to That of Canada

Under a consistent policy of protection the United States has risen to an immensely strong industrial position, but for twenty years past its tariff has been far too high—twice as high as that of Canada. It is only reasonable, therefore, that a new Democratic Administration should try to scale down the customs duties to a considerable extent. A few successive reductions of the kind now proposed would bring the average American schedules almost to a level with those of Canada.

United States industries have little to fear from lower duties on clothing, steel, lumber and other products. These industries are controlled by powerful capitalistic combinations, which could readily crush out competition from the lesser manufacturing enterprises of this country and of most other countries. Canadian manufacturers of steel rails and other articles have difficulty in meeting the demands of our own market. So that they have little leisure for an invasion of the United States.

Policy of Conservation

The new tariff bill would place many Canadian farm products on the free list and reduce the duties on many others. In this way our agriculturists would obtain access to the American markets without being exposed to the unbridled competition of half the food-producing countries in the world to which the reciprocity agreement of 1911 would have left them open. In population Canada is a small country alongside a great one, and for the time being our salvation lies in conserving our vast industrial wealth for our own people.

Under present unequal tariff conditions, every Canadian man, woman and child, spends $25 in the States for every $1 which Americans spend on Canadian goods. In this respect the new tariff bill should change things for the better, but, of course, it is designed only to meet existing economic conditions in the Republic. It may or may not reduce the cost of living there to some extent, but in increasing the taxation on luxuries and in levying upon large incomes the measure moves in the right direction.

Only Incidental Effects

When, however, all is said and done, the Wilson bill is a purely American proposal. Its effects in this country are only incidental. That is the viewpint which our legislators must take when they deal with the tariff. Meantime, the proposed reductions at Washington constitute a substantial justification of those who fought and defeated the Taft-Fielding trade arrangement a year and a half ago. For one thing the grievance of the Western Canadian grain-growers would be largely removed by the proposed lowering of the American duty on wheat from 25 cents to 10 cents a bushel. For much of the time during the past year prices of wheat and other foodstuffs have ruled so high on this side of the border as compared with American prices that it is just possible that the organized farmers on the plains have been expecting benefits from access to the American market which [illegible]

The Moving Picture Hall seems to be booming in great shape. There was a good attendance on Saturday night from the village and surrounding district. The pictures were good and the plots most interesting, with a suitable mixture of comedy and drama.

A pleasing feature of the week was the presentation of a handsome gold ring, suitably engraved, to Mr. Sinclair, from the workers in the fuse department. Mrs. Sinclair was also the recipient of a very pretty gold locket and chain. No small excitement was caused in our usually transquil village when Messrs. Walker and W. H. Griffith, Provincial Fish and Game Inspectors, swooped down upon St. Andrews with the weight of the law behind them and made it rather unpleasant for those who were catching dore illegally.

A very interesting debate took place at the Club Rooms on Monday evening, when four of our young ladies debated the weighty question as to whether the world is growing better or worse. The resolution read thus:—"Resolved that it is the tendency of the world to grow worse." The affirmative was upheld by Misses Eva Bradford and Tita Wales, and the Negative by Misses Mary Lamb and Annie Watson, both sides put up clear, forcible arguments, but the judges came to the conclusion that the Optimists had won.

DOMINION CARTRIDGE CO. GUN CLUB OF BROWNSBURG.

On Saturday last the Club held their usual Saturday practice shoot, when they were honored by a visit from one of their Hon. Presidents, Mr. J. S. Boa (the world renowned Trap Shooter) accompanied by Lieut. F. H. Morris (of Bisley fame.)
The chief item of interest in the afternoon's programme was a match between the Brownsburg team and a team captained by Mr. Boa. The match was 250 birds and Mr. Boa's team finished 24 birds ahead. The Brownsburg team was a little nervous at first, considering the talent they were up against, but towards the end settled down and made quite an exciting match.

Poultry Department.

An important part of the poultry work of the Live Stock Branch of the Department of Agriculture, during the past year has been the organization of Co-operative Egg Circles. Ten circles in all have been organized under the auspices of the Branch, working in conjunction with the provincial and agricultural college authorities and the Poultry Producers' Association of Canada. The preliminary work in connection with a number of others has been done, and from present indications it is apparent that this phase of co-operative work is likely to have a rapid growth in the near future.

Being primarily concerned with the improvement of the Canadian Egg Trade the Live Stock Branch has encouraged the formation of these circles because the Movement affords a means whereby the quality of Eggs can be improved as they leave the farm, and the pernicious practice of holding eggs both on the farm and in the country store largely eliminated. Co-operative effort of this kind also affords a medium whereby the eggs in any given community may be collected and marketed frequently and regularly, and insures to the consumer a new-laid egg of uniform quality at no great increase in cost.

At the time of joining the association the members agree to stamp each egg with a given number designated by the Board of Directors. This is done so that the eggs of each member may be indentified when graded and payment made according to quality.

A manager is appointed by the Board of Directors whose business it is to collect, grade, sell the eggs and apportion the returns among the members according to the quantity and quality received. In most circles the eggs from each farm are collected at stated intervals, but in others the members deliver the eggs to some central point such as a creamery, cheese factory, store or house, from which the manager makes the shipment.

It is well known that at certain seasons of the year there is a wide difference between the price received for eggs by the farmer in the country store and the price paid by the consumer in the city. This difference is not nearly so marked in the spring of the year as it is in the late summer, fall and winter. In other words, as the quality of ordinary farm eggs becomes more uncertain the premium placed on new-laid circle eggs increases. While during the spring of the year prices received by circle members may not greatly exceed those paid in the local store, it is a fact that for the eggs produced in the month of December last year the majority of circles in the province of Ontario and Quebec received a price of from 45 to 50 cents a dozen.

A limited number of circles will no doubt be able to take advantage of the rapidly growing select trade in the larger Canadian cities, but from the fact that the wholesale egg dealers in Ontario and Quebec have recently adopted a new system of buying on a basis of quality, it is likely that the product of the majority of circles will find its way to the consumer through the more recently established channels of trade.

The Live Stock Branch stands ready and willing to help on the Egg Circle movement in every possible way. Officers of this Branch are now in the field, and there is available a quantity of literature, including outline of constitutions, by-laws, etc., dealing with the work, copies of which may be obtained upon request from the Live Stock Commissioner, Ottawa.

Prize List for Next Ottawa Fair.

INCREASE OF $250 FOR POULTRY.
IMPROVEMENT IN ALL DEPARTMENTS.

At a series of meetings just held the various committees of the Central Canada Exhibition Association revised the prize list for the coming Ottawa Fair, making several improvements to meet the wishes of exhibitors and the public.

An addition of $35 was made to the prizes for grade dairy cattle. This provides three prizes of $20, $10 and $5, to be competed for by herds of four animals, each over one year. Many Ottawa Valley breeders will be interested in this extension. The usual offers of special prizes came from the Hereford and Holstein associations and Manager McMahon is in communication with the Jersey and Aberdeen Angus associations regarding their contributions.

An excellent classification for field crop products, drafted by Mr. J. Lockie Wilson, was adopted by the Agriculture committe. Grain in sheaves, in sacks, vegetables and other produce from the winners in the field crop competitions, will be shown very artistically. Agricultural and horticultural exhibits, will be combined for this purpose.

The Horticulture committee, as well as improving classification, decided to have the roof of the hall made water tight for the next Exhibition. It is hoped a new hall will be built for the following year.

The Poultry Committee received an extra $250. By means of this all the second prizes will be increased from $1 to $1.50 and the 3rd prizes from 50 to 75 cents. Poultry breeders were given this generous treatment so that their advantage in showing would be equal to that enjoyed by the live stock men, who have freight paid both ways for them. A new egg display was provided for. Prizes of $2, $1 and 50 cents are offered for the best doezen of white eggs and for the best dozen of brown eggs. A similar set of prizes will be awarded for a six dozen collection of each of these classes of eggs. Messrs. W. A. Brown, F. H. Gisborne, and J. A. Belford were appointed to see that his egg exhibit is made an interesting feature. The class of Indian Runner Ducks was added, with prizes totalling $12.

The Horse committee augmented the fund for Agricultural classes by transferring $100 from the General Purpose section. As a general purpose horse has been required to be suitable for either wagon, buggy or plough the change was natural. Prizes in the general purpose class now consist only of single horse and team, attached to vehicles. A new class, Aged Percherons, were added with prizes of $40, $30, $25 and $20. The special high jumping for $150 purse, provided last year, as a Dominion Exhibition feature, is responsible for adding $100 to the open jumping, this year, the special contest being dropped.

Much prominence is to be given lectures and illustrated exhibits by the Dairy committee The Dominion Dairy branch will be given a space for a valuable feature which Prof. Ruddick announced would be furnished for the education of dairymen. The Ontario Department of Agriculture will supply a lecturer at the butter making competitions, and will also make a display showing different fermentations. An innovation in this department will be lectures on bee-keeping in a tent near the Dairy building.

PROVINCES ADVANCE IN MANUFACTURING

The Strong Growing Demand for Building Materials is the Chief Reason

Agriculture is now taken for granted on the prairies, but what about manufacturing? The example of Winnipeg's rise in a little more than a decade to the position of fourth industrial city in the Dominion, has had the effect of limbering the imagination of conservative Canada and now very often the remark is made that Manitoba is more like an eastern province than a member of the middle Western family. But when one talks about manufacturing in Saskatchewan and Alberta, the imagination of some very intelligent people refuses to work; they shut their eyes and say, as pompous, little Governor Simpson said years ago, when speaking of the possible agricultural development of that part of the Northwest Territories now called Saskatchewan, "it is impossible; it can't be done."

But it is being done. Manufacturing is progressing rapidly in both Saskatchewan and Alberta. The kinds of manufacturing plants that are being established in these two prairie provinces may be classed largely under four heads, namely, flour mills, brick and clay products, lumbering with its tributary industry, planing; and steel and iron work. Generally speaking, with the exception of milling, these different forms of manufacturing have been introduced into the Middle West as the result of the strong, growing local demand for building materials.

Just Being Discovered

Writing in Industrial Canada Mr. Norman Lambert says: "Sufficient has been shown now to prove that the prairie provinces, besides admitting of cultivation in places which at one time were regarded as indomitable, have revealed great opportunities to the manufacturer. The development of the past two years shows also that the West is just being discovered, and that discovery will not be complete until more factories, and more mixed farms, and more routes of transportation are established, making the vast prairie territory the self-supporting country it should be."

BETWEEN LOVE AND DUTY;

OR, THE END OF AMBITION, HOPE AND YEARS.

CHAPTER XX.

The hurried footsteps drew nearer; another moment and they would reach the gallery door.

"Will you save me, or will you betray me, Jessy?" panted the desperate man who knelt at her feet, clinging wildly to her skirts. "Say 'yes' or 'no' quickly. If it is 'no,' I shall leap from this window and end it all. They shall never take me alive. You hold my fate in your hands, Jessy. Shall it be life or death?"

To see the man she loved better than anything else on earth in such abject terror, to hear the voice that had whispered words sweeter and dearer than heaven to her pleading with her to save him, seemed to sway the very soul within the girl and cause her to forget everything, save the peril of her lover, who was dearer to her than he very heart's blood.

There was a loud tap on the door, a murmur of voices.

"Quick! for the love of God, Jessy!" came the hoarse, panting cry.

He stopped short, but his wild eyes finished the sentence has ashen lips could not frame into words.

"You will make me your wife if—if I save you?" she whispered.

"Yes—yes; I promise, I swear it!" he cried. "Tell them that it was all a mistake—that what you thought was the figure of a man in the negative you were developing proved to be only a shadow, which, in its vague, shadowy outlines, took a form resembling a man. Remember, your father will not live a fortnight, while I, your wretched, unhappy lover, have, alas, so many years. Keep that thought before you, Jessy, in all that you say and do."

There was another tap at the door more imperative than the first.

"Jessy," he cried, catching in agony at her hands, "is your answer life or death, and will you marry me?"

With a sob, endeavoring by a mighty effort to still the warring cries of conscience, she hid her face in her hands, and in the moment of time that followed never did the angels above nor the demons below ever wage such a desperate war for mastery over a weak, fluttering human heart.

"Your duty is to free your poor father, if but for a week, a day, or an hour, and prove his innocence before the world," cried a voice from heaven.

Another voice whispered:

"You love the man kneeling for mercy at your feet. Save him and marry him. No one will ever know your father has suffered from false imprisonment many months. A week more or less will avail nothing. Save the man you love, for if he dies life will be nothing to you in all the years that might come and go."

Some one tried the knob of the door. The action recalled her scattered senses. Through the terrible stillness of the room she heard him whisper again: "The last second of time is up. Answer me, Jessy."

"I will save you, and—and—marry you!" she sobbed.

Struggling from his knees, with unsteady steps he crossed the floor and flung open the door. Instead of the army of excited, curious reporters which he had expected to find there, he saw a telegraph messenger. Tekla and Tim, who had just come up the stairs, were behind him.

"There's an answer, miss," said the boy, handing Jessy Carr the yellow envelope.

She tried to tear it open, but her fingers were too nervous to do her bidding.

"Let me help you," said Tekla, taking it gently but firmly from her hand.

"It's from the prison officials, I feel sure," said Jessy, sinking into the nearest chair. "Read it to me Tekla. The—words would dance before my eyes. I—I could not see them clearly."

"Yes; it is from the prison officials," cried Tekla; "and it says, 'Come to your father at once; we think the end is near.'"

With a bitter cry Jessy sprung to her feet, striking her white, clinched hands together in agony of soul words are unable to describe.

"You will have just about time to make the next train," said Tim, with deep sympathy. "Shall I call a cab for you, Miss Jessy? In a time like this every moment is valuable."

"Yes, go call a cab, please." Then turning to Tekla, she said: "Will you get me my hat and sacque?"

The girl was no sooner beyond ear-shot than her lover, who had been standing by her side, bent down, and whispered:

"I shall accompany you there, Jessy."

"No, no!" cried the girl. "You must not; you shall not go there with me. Your presence, above all others, at the bedside of the poor dying father whom I am deceiving for your sake would unnerve me. I could not bear it."

"Nevertheless, I shall accompany you, to see that you do not betray me," he reiterated, determinedly.

Her white lips moved, but no sound came from them.

At that instant Tekla returned with her cloak and hat. She put them upon Jessy, for the girl was trembling so violently she could not don them herself, and by that time Tim hurriedly reappeared, announcing the cab was at the door.

Both Tekla and he were surprised to see the man who had such a short time ago deserted Jessy so cruelly, drive off with her, upon evidently such friendly terms.

"I don't like that man," said Tekla.

"I believe he's sailing under false colors," said Tekla.

"I have long since thought the same," declared Tim.

"There's a letter 'H,' worked in silk on his handkerchief; did you notice that? And the letter 'H' is stamped on the inside of his hat. Jessy Carr isn't as suspicious as most women, or she would have noticed that."

Meanwhile, like one dazed, Jessy Carr entered the coach with her companion, and was rapidly driven off to the Grand Central Depot. She never afterward remembered scarcely an incident of that short railway journey, or the ride up the steep, narrow road that brought her at length to the prison gates; but during that time her companion never for an instant took his concentrated gaze from her face, and his eyes seemed to scorch their way down to the very depths of her soul. She seemed like a trembling, frightened bird under the hypnotic influence of a deadly cobra.

The warden of the prison came forward to meet her. He had known Andrew Carr in his boyhood, and, despite the evidence and the result, he had never in his own mind believed him guilty. But it was not for him to express his opinion; he felt sorry for Andrew Carr, and great compassion for his beautiful, hapless daughter.

"You are just in time, my poor child," he said, assisting her from the vehicle. "Your father is in the hospital ward. Step this way. Do you wish your companion to accompany you to your father's bedside?"

The girl turned her frightened eyes toward the man who stood beside her, but before she could frame a reply, he answered for her in the affirmative.

Those who witnessed the scene never forgot the bitter cry of agony that fell from Jessy Carr's lips as she was led up to her father's couch and her eyes fell upon his white, emaciated face, or how she fell upon her knees by his bedside, weeping as though her heart would rend itself in twain, while her companion stood by, with white, compressed lips and hard, set features, watching the daughter's agony.

Andrew Carr did not seem to see him. All that his dim eyes beheld was his poor Jessy. He put out his hand gropingly—ah, what a thin hand it was—and laid it on the girl's bowed head.

"Don't cry, Jessy, little one," he said, in a weak, tremulous voice. "I—I can bear it. Your tears weaken me—unman me, Jessy."

She raised her head and looked at him through her tears, struggling bravely for something like composure.

"Jessy," he murmured, brokenly, "I never thought this would be your last remembrance of me, a felon within the walls of a prison—I, who dreamed such glorious dreams, and who had such a noble ambition in my early youth. It was not my fault that it crumbled into dust. Ambition dies out in us as we grow old; we give up the struggle and fall faint and spent by the wayside, beaten back and crushed by the human tide that comes after youth, and fire, and strength. I meant to make a grand and noble life of it, but fate seemed to be against me. It was through no fault of mine that every effort fell through, every pain met with failure, and every undertaking ended in disaster. Don't weep when I say I am glad to give up the struggle and go. That is the feeling that comes to those who are old and have been wounded too cruelly in life's battles. Some men fall because they will not concentrate neither their time nor their earnings on the occupation they have laid out for themselves. It was not so with me. I worked early and late over mine, yet it availed me nothing; still, I did not quite lose all hope until near the last. From year to year I said to myself, 'There must be a turning-point even to ill-fortune.'

"In the great rush of life a man must make his fortune before he is forty. There is little to be expected if he commences to carve his fortune after that, for he grows weaker with the conflict, and younger men crowd him out in the race, and he sees before him as the price of his spent years dependence upon his children, or the work-house, and the choice is not much between the two. Some men are born to be leaders of men, and some are born to be followers. No matter how we struggle against, we fall into the niche fate intends for us, whether it be on the high-road that leads to the mountain-top, or the path that leads down to the lowly valley.

"I was poor, but Heaven knows I was always honest. I never owed a human being a dollar. I am dying, Jessy, and I swear to you that I am innocent of the crime for which I have been placed behind prison bars—I, who never did any living thing the slightest injury, and not being able to prove my innocence to the world has crushed my very soul within me. Ah, Jessy, if I could but have died without this stain on my name, humble though it is!"

Jessy Carr struggled from her knees, and tried to speak; but her tongue cleaved to the roof of her mouth; her lips opened, but no sound came from them; the power of speech seemed to have left her.

By the mightiest of efforts the poor girl tried to break the awful spell which was binding her senses fast. It was like attempting to beat back the waters of the ocean with a frail bird's broken wing. The very blood in her veins chilled, and her throbbing heart seemed to stand still.

"Die in peace, father. I have discovered the proof of your innocence, and ere the sun sets, the whole city shall know of it."

Mean.

"He's marrying you for your money," she sneered. "Possibly," she retorted. "If you only had a million or two somebody might propose to you some day."

Dietary Advice.

"You'd better eat it slow," said Willie to the clergyman who was dining with the family. "Mamma never gives more'n one piece of pie."

HISTORY READ IN MEDALS

FAITHFUL RECORD OF THE PROGRESS OF ART.

Differences in Casting From Time of Caesar Augustus to Queen Victoria.

Both from an artistic and historical point of view, the study of medals is a fascinating one. For medals, being struck to commemorate some notable event or to perpetuate the name of a national hero, throw much light upon history in addition to furnishing faithful records of the progress of art, from its rise, almost to its apogee, and through the various phases of decline and renaissance to its modern state, says the London Globe.

Romans Cast Medallions.

Medals are made in most of the precious metals, as well as in iron, copper, lead and alloys. Large medals are known as medallions, and the earliest examples proper are medallions of ancient Rome, which for the most part are of bronze, though some are of silver and of gold. These Roman medallions usually have a diameter of about one and a half inches, but in weight they vary very much. Medallions of earlier date than 117 A.D. are extremely rare and consequently very valuable. A well-known example, of great beauty, is the gold medallion of Caesar Augustus. The medallions which are generally admitted to be the finest and most perfectly executed that have ever been struck, belong to the best period of Greek art, 400-336 B.C. On their faces they bear an ideal head, magnificent in its swinging sculpturesque lines, and upon the reverse the representation of a victorious quadrigae, portrayed with a vigor of action worthy of those old Greek masters.

Medallic Art Revived.

Many of the finest medieval medals were cast by a special process, others are in repousse work. The earliest days of the Renaissance brought about a revival in the medallic art, and, between 1430 and 1456, Vittore Pisano, the Veronese painter, produced some of the finest medals ever struck since Grecian times. Pisano's medallions, which usually bore the inscription Opus Pisani Pictoris, are notable for the fidelity and broadly effective technique of their portraiture. It was not until early in the sixteenth century that medals were struck from engraved dies, in the manner of coins.

In Germany Albert Durer was an early exponent of the art who won great fame; and the Dutch jettons, or medalets, which were issued in the sixteenth and the early years of the seventeenth centuries, afford a practically imperishable record of the stirring events, which during that time, centred the whole attention of Europe upon Holland. The English medallic art goes back no further than Henry VIII.; but onward from the reign of Edward VI. we find a continuous series of coronation medals.

To-day, of course, medals are issued principally as rewards for naval and military service. The first of such war medals struck in England was the "Ark in Flood" medal of Queen Elizabeth, designed as a reward for naval valor; while the first English military medal was designed by order of Charles I. in 1643. Probably, however, the earliest instance in England of a medal struck to commemorate a particular military action was the "Dunbar" medal issued by the Parliament. Later (from 1793) it became customary to distribute medals among the troops engaged in any successful action or campaign.

Crosses Conferring Honor.

Although, strictly, the word medal is the same as metal, through the Low Latin medalla, it is not, perhaps, consistent with the principles of numismatics to include under that head crosses and Maltese crosses. But as "medals" we know the three great orders of France, England and Germany: the Legion of Honor, the Victoria Cross and the Iron Cross. The first-named was designed by Napoleon in 1802 as a recompense for services, either military or civil; while the famous Prussian order was instituted on March 10, 1813, by Frederick William III., to do honor to Blucher, and to be conferred for distinguished services in war. The badge of the Legion of Honor consists of a five-rayed white enamelled cross, that of the Prussian order of a Maltese cross. The latter, appropriately, was made of iron (surrounded by golden rays and edged with silver) to commemorate the grim period at which it was created.

Whole City Produces Naphtha.

The petroleum industry in Russia has for its chief centre the city of Baku, on the Caspian Sea. In the production of naphtha there 200,000 persons are employed; in fact, the whole population, which is made up of Russians, Tartars and Persians, is wholly dependent on this industry for a livelihood.

Barley and Oats Show This Peculiarity.

Do you know that there are right-handed and left-handed plants? An English investigator, R. H. Compton, has thought the matter curious and interesting enough to make it the subject of extended investigation and has reported on it to the Cambridge Philosophical Society. He observed eight varieties of two-rowed barley to determine the ratio of rights to different varieties and of the various kernels from the same individual spikes, and found that among 12,401 seedlings 7,237, or 58.36 per cent., had the first leaf twisted to the left. A variety of millet showed an excess of left-handed seedlings, as was also the case with oats. In the case of corn the ratio was almost unity, and there was apparently "no inheritance of right and left-handedness as such."

A Detachable Feature.

"You have your father's eyes, girlie." "Aw, go on." "And your mother's hair." "Ssh! If mother hears you she'll make me take it off."

Cats Were Sacred in Egypt.

Black cats for luck. That is an old and an equally modern superstition. A superstitious belief in cats, black and otherwise, is of great antiquity. Among the Egyptians the animals were regarded with the utmost reverence, and their mummified remains are frequently found in the same tombs as their worshippers. In witchcraft and soothsaying cats have always played no unimportant part.

Scent-Drinkers.

"People who drink and inhale perfumes are very common to-day," says a well-known London (England) chemist. "Instead of using morphia, cocaine, or caffeine, ultra-smart Parisian women in search of a new sensation now employ as a stimulant hypodermic injections of otto of roses, violet, and cherry blossom perfume. There are scores of women in London who drink eau-de-Cologne. Several society women are known to make large purchases of this perfume, and the sellers never for a moment imagine that their fashionable customers buy it for drinking instead of perfuming purposes. It is possible to become quite intoxicated by taking eau-de-Cologne. This scent is really alcohol, and many women drink it neat! Essence of lavender is also drunk by women of England and America, and it has much the same effect upon the system as eau-de-Cologne, ruining the lining of the stomach, and undermining the health.

Permutation of Twelve.

It is estimated that if twelve persons were to agree to dine together every day, but never sit exactly in the same order around the table, it would take them 13,000,000 years at the rate of one dinner a day, and they would have to eat more than 479,000,000 dinners before they could get through all the possible arrangements in which they could place themselves.

ARE GROWING IN FAVOR EVERY DAY

Quebec Man Tells How They Helped Him and Cured His Nephew of Kidney Disease.

South Ham, Wolfe Co., Que., April 7 (Special).—There is fresh proof every day that as a family medicine Dodd's Kidney Pills are growing in favor with the people of Quebec. Just to quote an example, Amable Pinard of this place says, in an interview:

"Dodd's Kidney Pills helped my rheumatism, backache, gravel, and heart disease, from which I suffered for twenty years.

"They have not yet cured me completely, but they did completely cure my nephew, who suffered from kidney disease."

Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure kidney disease. They will complete Amable Pinard's cure, because all the diseases mentioned are the results of kidney disease. They cured the young man's kidney disease quickly, because it was taken in its early stages. Amable Pinard's troubles are of twenty years' standing, and take a longer treatment.

The moral is, that if you cure your kidney disease early with Dodd's Kidney Pills, you will never be troubled with rheumatism, gravel, and other diseases that are caused by sick kidneys failing to do their work.

When to Wed.

January brides are likely to become widows early. February brides will never have very happy married lives. March brides will probably make their homes abroad. April brides will have lives of change, and experience many ups and downs. May brides will entertain many strangers. June brides will find life a long honeymoon. July brides have bitter-sweet memories. August brides are lucky in finding a real friend in their husbands. September brings a smooth and serene future to its brides. October only gives a future of toil and hardship. November brides will be happy, and those who, according to the rhyme, marry "in December's cheer," will find that "Love's star burns brighter from year to year."

Remarks About Nourishing Food.

"A physician's wife gave me a package of Grape-Nuts one day, with the remark that she was sure I would find the food very beneficial, both for my own use and for my patients. I was particularly attracted to the food, as at that time the weather was very hot and I appreciated the fact that Grape-Nuts requires no cooking.

"The food was deliciously crisp, and most inviting to the appetite. After making use of it twice a day for three or four weeks, I discovered that it was a most wonderful invigorator. I used to suffer greatly from exhaustion, headaches and depression of spirits. My work had been very trying at times and indigestion had set in.

"Now I am always well and ready for any amount of work, have an abundance of active energy, cheerfulness and mental poise. I have proved to my entire satisfaction that this change has been brought about by Grape-Nuts food.

"The fact that it is predigested is a very desirable feature. I have had many remarkable results in feeding Grape-Nuts to my patients, and I cannot speak too highly of the food. My friends constantly comment on the change in my appearance. I have gained 9 pounds since beginning the use of this food."

"There's a reason." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Find New Silk Worm.

A worm has been found in East Africa, which produces in the wild state quantities of silk, and factories are being put up to utilize this silk. The worm in question is the larva of the anaphe moth. From a dozen to a hundred of them make a nest in common and thus the cocoons are produced on a wholesale scale, says the "Pathfinder." When the butterfly is hatched it secretes a liquid which unseals the cocoon and it then escapes without injuring the silk. Thus the amount of human labor involved is much less than with the Asiatic silkworm.

WHEN APPETITE FAILS AND INDIGESTION IS BAD

There Is Danger Ahead For the Man That Neglects Nature's Warning.

Dyspepsia Tendencies are Serious and Should be Treated Accordingly.

There is a strong moral in the statement of James Schrum, of Pleasant street, Dartmouth, N. S. Like thousands of people, he was failing in health because his stomach and digestive organs were out of repair. His vitality was slipping away; he was losing ground every day.

"I could not have held on much longer. I was wasting away simply because no remedy I used gave tone and strength to my stomach. The vital forces of my system were dead. I was advised to try Dr. Hamilton's Pills. What hidden weakness they searched out I don't know, but in a miraculous way they have made a new man of me. My stomach troubles are cured, rich blood now runs through my veins—clear skin and unmistakable evidences of health and vigor I feel every day. Dr. Hamilton's Pills have certainly mastered the secret of curing the sickly enervated man and I strongly urge everyone in failing or lost health to use this grand remedy."

PRINCE MAY VISIT BERLIN.

His German Is Less Serviceable Than His French.

The Prince of Wales's present visit to Germany is to be the first of two visits, the second to take place during the long vacation, when it is probable that he will visit Berlin as well as Mecklenburg-Strelitz. The Prince's German is fairly serviceable, but it is less so than his French.

This is natural enough, for despite his ancestry the Queen has never carried his German education very far, the reason probably being that her German governess proved antipathetic, while her French lectrice, Mme. Bricka, became an intimate friend and is still the most frequent guest at the small private dinners at the palace, when the conversation is carried on in French.

The King's French, as is well known, is not very good, nor is his German remarkable. It is understood that King George determined that the Prince of Wales, when his time came, should be trained in languages so that he could follow King Edward in the round of European visits.

Thoroughly Ventilated.

"What you need most," said the physician after he had examined the patient, "is plenty of ventilation."

"Gee, doctor," the sick man replied, "you must be mistaken. I've been operated on three times in the past year and a half."

VILLAGE WITHOUT SUNLIGHT

From November Until Feb. 14 No Ray Penetrates the Valley.

In the valley of the Lyn near Lynmouth, North Devon, England, there is a quiet little hamlet called Middleham, where for three months in the year the sun is not seen.

The cluster of houses forming the hamlet is surrounded on all sides by hills so steep and high that from November until February the sun does not rise high enough to be seen over their tops.

The first appearance of the sun is eagerly looked for, and as it is first seen on Feb. 14, the inhabitants call it their valentine.

If the day should be foggy or cloudy, so that it cannot be seen, there is great disappointment, especially among the children.

For the first few days after the 14th the sun is seen only for a very short time, but as the sun rises higher in the heavens the time it is in sight increases daily until its height is reached, when it gradually begins to fade from view until in November it entirely vanishes from sight for another three months.

EMIGRATION FROM BRITAIN.

Increasing Tendency to Move to British Countries.

The annual report on the Emigrants' Information Office states that 28,156 letters were received in 1912, a decrease of 6.9 per cent. Enquiries leading to the United States decreased by 14.8 per cent. and were only 1.4 per cent. of the total number of enquiries received. There was a net movement from the United Kingdom for places out of Europe of 288,486 passengers of British origin in 1912, as compared with 261,809 in 1911. The net movements to the various countries were as follows:—

Australia	68,688	56,337
New Zealand ..	11,054	9,432
United States .	45,847	49,732
South Africa ..	4,233	7,527

There is an increasing tendency, the report says, on the part of British emigrants to proceed to other ports of the Empire rather than to foreign countries.

The number of immigrants entering Canada increased from 350,374 in 1911 to 395,804 in 1912. Of the latter 145,859 were of British origin, 140,143 were Americans, and 109,802 were of other nationalities. Thirty-four per cent. of the American settlers were of the farming class, and the actual wealth brought into Canada by American immigrants exceeded £4,800,000 during 1912.

HE SENT HIS "BEST" REMEDY

The young daughter of Mrs. T. S. Dougall, 523 Flora Avenue, Winnipeg, was arranging some of her doll's washing on a clothes rack, beside the stove, when she fell, and her hand came in contact with the hot stove. She sustained a serious burn, and her screams brought her mother quickly to the spot.

"I sent to the druggist for the best remedy he had for burns," she says, "and he sent back a box of Zam-Buk. He said that there was nothing to equal it. I applied this, and it soothed the pain so quickly that the child laughed through her tears. I bound up the hand in Zam-Buk, and each day applied Zam-Buk frequently and liberally, until the burn was quite cured.

"The little one was soon able to go on with her play, and we had no trouble with her during the time the burn was being healed."

All druggists and stores sell Zam-Buk at fifty cents box; and Soap at 25c. tablet. Post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Refuse harmful imitations.

A woman visiting a butcher shop called for a piece of beef. The butcher, in weighing it, had his hand on the scales. The lady, picking up a sharp knife and handing it to the butcher, remarked: "I haven't any use for it, but you may cut it off, and I'll take it along, anyhow." "Cut it off? Cut what off?" asked the butcher. "Your hand; you weighed it."

BURIED TREASURE FOUND.

Five Jars of Gold Dug Up In Surrey Is Reported.

A Surbiton resident, writing in a Surrey newspaper, is responsible for the details.

"Certain information," he writes, "regarding some private property in the vicinity of Haslemere has recently come into my possession which I think should be made public.

"Some years ago my informant, while working on some land, unearthed a large earthenware jar, securely sealed. On account of the great weight and curious design he at once took it to his employer, the owner of the property. Together they opened it, and found it to be full of gold coins.

"The owner, realizing that the great value of this find to him depended on secrecy, promised my friend a third of this and any other treasure they might find.

"A fence was put up, and excavations have been quietly carried on during the night until recently, resulting in the discovery of five more jars of gold and two containing ancient jewellery of immense value. In one of the jars a document was found written in Latin giving an account of the treasure, and stating that fifty jars altogether of jewels and gold were hidden, being buried in the form of a circle."

New Treatment Now Advocated For Bronchitis

Is Having Wonderful Success, and is Making Most Remarkable Cures.

For bronchitis a different form of treatment is now advocated. It consists of a scientifically devised vapor that penetrates to the uttermost recesses of the lungs and bronchial tubes. Every spot that is sore, every surface that is irritated is at once bathed with soothing balsams and healing essences that make chronic bronchitis an impossibility.

This treatment now so universally employed in bronchitis, throat troubles, colds, etc., is called CATARRHOZONE. It acts just as air of the pine woods acts, as a healing antiseptic remedy for all diseases of the breathing organs.

Just think of it—a remedy that can be carried with the very air you breathe to the seat of bronchial or catarrhal inflammation. A remedy powerful enough to kill germ life and yet so healing that disease flees before it. Catarrhozone is truly a wonderful remedy. In many lands it has won its way, and is affording grand results to sufferers from colds, catarrh, throat weakness, asthma and bronchitis. There is no sufferer from a grippy cold or any winter ill, that won't find a cure in Catarrhozone, which is employed by physicians, ministers, lawyers and public men throughout many foreign lands. Large size lasts two months and costs $1.00 and is guaranteed; small size 50c.; sample size 25c., all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

LEATHER BEING INVENTED.

German Substitute Is Fungus Growth on Gelatine.

One of the latest German patents protects a method of preparing a substance which it is asserted can be used as a substitute for leather.

This "all leather" substance is prepared from a special mildew or fungus grown on gelatine or a similar substance. Various kinds of fungi can be grown by planting their spores on the gelatine surface and then keeping the surface wet. Some of the growths are colorless, others have red, brown, gray or even bluish tints, and all the lighter shades seem capable of taking dye. The leather produced up to now has been thin, very soft and rather weak.

The inventors are, however, now working to get a stronger material by the addition of white of egg or glue, by means of which it is hoped that several thin layers of the new product may be tanned together and that there will be no limit to the thickness of the new material.

Man Who Had 100 Pipes.

A wife who obtained a judicial separation from her husband told a curious story at the South-western (London, England,) police court. She was Annie Traves, of 15 Farlow Road, Putney, and she stated that her husband, a master carpenter, would only allow her twopence a day to get dinner, though he had about £160 at the bank. "What does he do with his money?" inquired the Magistrate. "He spends it in clothes, pipes and other things," was the reply. "He has 100 pipes, between fifty and sixty walking sticks and innumerable pairs of boots."

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—

Have all your shoes the last year been perfectly comfortable?

PROFIT SHARING BONDS.

Attractive Form of Investment.

A folder which fully describes an attractive 7 per cent. investment, carrying a profit-sharing feature as well, may be obtained by writing to The National Securities Corporation, Limited, Confederation Life Building, Toronto, Ont.

The investment described is in the form of profit-sharing bonds, which are amply secured. In this instance, the National Securities Corporation, Ltd., acts as a holding company for two manufacturing companies whose combined capitalization is $1,300,000. Both of these companies have been particularly successful ever since their formation, and for the last few years have operated under the handicap of only being able to take care of about 60 per cent. of the business available, although working at full capacity.

The present bond issue is for the purpose of enlarging these plants so that they may handle all orders, and to enable them to acquire timber limits now under option, and which will doubtless largely increase in value in the next few years.

VALUE OF SELF-CONFIDENCE.

Not Much Chance for the Man Whose Courage Fails.

Thousands of men go down, after several consecutive reverses, because they lose heart. They decide that luck or fate is against them, and that it is no use to try further. You will notice that the man who does not lose his courage or his determination when he loses his property gets on his feet again infinitely quicker than the man who loses heart; in fact, there is not much chance for the man whose courage fails. When he loses his grip, as a rule, he loses his climbing qualities, and simply drifts. A dead fish will float with the stream, but it takes a very lively one to swim against a strong current. If we could analyse the cause of all the failures in the world we should find that loss of confidence had more to do with these failures than the loss of property. Outside of character itself, there is no loss so great as that of self-confidence; for, when this is gone, there is nothing to build upon. It is impossible for a man to stand erect without a backbone, especially when he has much weight to carry. Nothing can keep a man down when he has grit and determination. It is as impossible to imprison energies as it would be to bottle up steam. Self-confidence makes men gods, whose wills must be obeyed.

THE CURSE OF MAR.

Every Part of It Was Fulfilled in Course of 300 Years.

Curses do sometimes come home to roost. One of the best known is "the Curse of Mar." The Earl of Mar was cursed prior to 1571, when he was elevated to the position of Regent of Scotland. "Thy lands shall be given to the stranger and thy titles shall lie among the dead. The branch that springs from thee shall see his dwelling burnt in which a King was nursed—his wife a sacrifice to that same flame, his children numerous, but of little honor, and three born and grown who shall never see the light. Horses shall be stabled in thy hall and a weaver shall throw his shuttle in the chamber of state. Thine ancient tower shall be a ruin and a beacon until an ash sapling shall spring from its topmost stone. Then shall thine honors be restored; the kiss of peace shall be given to the countess though she seek it not, and the days of peace shall return to thy line."

In the course of 300 years every part of the curse was fulfilled. Then in 1820 the ash sapling duly appeared. Two years later George IV. restored the earldom and later Queen Victoria kissed the countess.

The annual distribution of prizes to the children of intermediate and secondary schools in Dublin, was held in the Synod Hall, Christ Church Place.

James Treacy, Dublin, was seriously injured when the fly-wheel of a gas-engine at the London and N. W. Ry. Co.'s premises, Dublin, gave way.

Thomas Rossiter, a porter on the Great Southern and Western Railway, was crushed to death at Tralee station. He had only been married 12 months.

The death occurred at his residence, Faithlegg House, Co. Waterford, of Mr. Patrick Joseph Mahon Power, the richest commoner in Ireland, in his eighty-seventh year.

There were exciting scenes at a public meeting of the ratepayers of Ballinlough for the purpose of protesting against public charges under the Roscommon County Council.

CEYLON'S NEW SEA PORT.

Will Be Ranked Among Greatest in the World.

A deep-sea port has recently been laid out at Colombo, Ceylon, and it is to be ranked among the great ports of the world. The work started in 1895, and the area included within the projecting jetties is no less than 685 acres, which is somewhat more than for the port of Dover, England. A vast area had to be filled in so as to obtain ground for erecting the storehouses, quays, repair basins and coal docks. The jetties which protect the port in an almost continuous belt represent a total of two miles in length. Good provision for the future is seen in the great size of the repair basin, this having a length of about seven hundred feet. The port has a depth corresponding to that of the Suez Canal, but it is planned to deepen it to thirty-six feet upon the three-quarters of the area. As to the cost, it is counted that the work involved an expense of $15,000,000, which is not high considering the scope of the enterprise. The present tonnage of the Colombo port is 10,000,000.—Scientific American.

FRIENDS HELP.

St. Paul Park Incident.

"After drinking coffee for breakfast I always felt languid and dull, having no ambition to get to my morning duties. Then in about an hour or so a weak, nervous derangement of the heart and stomach would come over me with such force I would frequently have to lie down."

Tea is just as harmful, because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.

"At other times I had severe headaches; stomach finally became affected and digestion so impaired that I had serious chronic dyspepsia and constipation. A lady, for many years State President of the W. C. T. U., told me she had been greatly benefited by quitting coffee and using Postum; she was troubled for years with asthma. She said it was no cross to quit coffee when she found she could have as delicious an article as Postum.

"Another lady, who had been troubled with chronic dyspepsia for years, found immediate relief on ceasing coffee and using Postum. Still another friend told me that Postum was a Godsend, her heart trouble having been relieved after leaving off coffee and taking on Postum.

"So many such cases came to my notice that I concluded coffee was the cause of my trouble and I quit and took up Postum. I am more than pleased to say that my days of trouble have disappeared. I am well and happy."

OUR LETTER FROM TORONTO

WHAT IS INTERESTING THE PEOPLE OF THE CITY AT THE PRESENT TIME.

The Suffragettes are Disappointed—A Real Militant—Quiet in the Legislature—The Wall Street of Canada.

Local suffragettes are frankly disappointed at the results of their efforts to obtain concessions from the Provincial Legislature at this session. They had hoped at least that the franchise now granted in municipal affairs would be extended to a wider sphere of politics, and on more than one occasion, when there was a possibility of a discussion on the subject in the Legislature, they have attended the House in full force, filling the public galleries and overflowing into the more private parts of the Legislative Chamber.

Most of the leaders of the Canadian suffrage movement profess to be in absolute sympathy with the tactics of the militant leaders in England, even when they go to the length of bomb throwing and other serious destruction of property. Almost unanimously, however, Canadian suffragettes declare that militant methods are not required in Canada. Pressed as to where the distinction comes in between Canada and Britain, they are not always clear in their answers. The supreme contention of Mrs. Pankhurst and the other suffrage leaders is that the vote is a right of citizenship for a woman as much as it is for a man. On this statement the suffragettes are content to base their plea for what they describe as justice. And the fact is that Canadian women are just as much without the franchise as are women in Britain.

Canadian Women Have Advantages.

There are, however, reasons why militant methods have not been introduced into Canada. Canadian laws are in several instances much more favorable to women than are the laws of Great Britain. For example, in the matter of divorce, Canadian women are on equal footing with men, that is, a reason which will entitle a man to a divorce is sufficient for a woman. This is not the case in England. Furthermore, certain laws with regard to property are in Canada more favorable to women than in England.

But yet the fact is that the suffrage is denied to Canadian women as resolutely as it is to English women. And the situation seems to be that the Canadian suffrage leaders have an antipathy to publicity and going to jail, which their English sisters have overcome.

Canada's Militant Suffragette.

Toronto has one real militant suffragette in the person of Miss Olivia Smith. She is an English woman, who, until quite recently was foremost in all the agitation there. She has spent three terms in jail, once for smashing windows, once for taking hold of the reins of a policeman's horse to prevent him riding down women, and thus interfering with an officer of the law on duty, and the third time for chaining herself to the railing in front of Premier Asquith's office.

Miss Smith is a mild-mannered lady of about 45 or 50 years of age. She is grey-haired and not at all Amazonian in type. By profession she is a trained nurse. Since living in Toronto she has been assisting in one of the local tea rooms.

Canadian Men Less Brutal.

She has been active in the local suffrage organizations. As one reason why militant methods have not been introduced into Canada she gives a very curious illustration. She says that Canadian men are much less brutal to their wives and sisters and daughters than are English men. This is a somewhat radical statement, which is sure to create controversy, at least wherever it is put up to an English man.

Rumors in Legislature.

The Legislature is pursuing the even tenor of its way to the end of a session which has not been particularly eventful. While there have been plenty of debates on various subjects closely affecting the lives of the people, there have been few occasions when the parties have really come to grips in any spectacular manner which would command the attention of the country.

Just before the close of the session there were rumors of sensations circulating on both sides. Liberals heard a report that the Government had something to conceal in the Public Accounts Committee or elsewhere, and that they were therefore about to attempt to close up the session in a hurry. Government supporters, on the other hand, heard that the Liberals were concocting some deep plot for the purpose of prolonging the session beyond what seemed to be reasonable.

Once again Allan Studholme, the labor member, or third party, as he likes to call himself, has taken more than his share of the time of the House. He presents a unique figure. Talking with him comes easy. He has had a long training in the labor movement and has apparently acquired the habit of thinking aloud, which enables him to deliver a speech of several hours with a minimum of preparation.

When Studholme Speaks.

To drop into the House on an afternoon when Mr. Studholme is on the floor reveals an unusual and interesting sight. Perhaps one-third of the members will be in their seats. Those who are will be reading newspapers and writing letters for the most part. Here and there a member will be doing nothing but listening to the speaker, but not doing that very attentively. This apparent inattention does not bother Mr. Studholme in the least. He moves the chairs in the immediate vicinity of his desk out of the way and then proceeds to walk up and down the space provided, talking as he moves. Some of the members of the Cabinet, anxious to get along with business, used to show impatience at Mr. Studholme's loquacity, but now they know what to expect, and as in any case it is useless to try to head him off they have to let him have his say with as good grace as possible.

Mr. Studholme's specialties are, of course, labor subjects, and on many of these he has views to which, in theory, little exception can be taken.

$5,000 To Buy Five Feet Square.

Another high figure has been recorded for down-town real estate. The Canadian Bank of Commerce has purchased the property on which the McConkey restaurant, long a land mark on King St., is situated. The price paid was $11,060 a foot frontage. While this is the second highest price ever paid for property in Toronto, as far as frontage is concerned, there has really been several transfers where the price per square foot was higher. The McConkey property runs clear through from King to Melinda St. and has, therefore, a depth above the average.

The record for high figures in Toronto is held by the Michie property at 5 King street west, which was sold to the Dominion Bank at the tremendous price of $205 per square foot.

In many parts of Ontario a hundred acre farm may be bought for $5,000. In the vicinity of the corner of King and Yonge streets it would buy a plot of land five feet square.

The price of $255 per square foot is about $1.50 per square inch. And it can be easily seen that the job of surveyors who have to verify lot measurements is to be done with the nicety of a draftsman.

The Wall Street of Canada.

Other high prices which have been recorded include the north-west corner of King and Yonge, which was recently sold to the Dominion Bond Co. at a rate of $148.15 per square foot. The north-east corner of King and Yonge, which was recently sold to interests supposed to be affiliated with the Royal Bank, brought a figure of $126.70 per square foot. On a square foot basis the recent purchase by the Bank of Commerce figures out at $65.20.

The removal of such landmarks as McConkey's restaurant and Michie's grocery store from King street marks the death knell of this section of that thoroughfare as a retail district, in which capacity it formerly excelled. Here are now congregating banks and other financial institutions, and Toronto likes to have it described as the Wall Street of Canada.

IN GETHSEMANE GARDEN.

Its Olive Oil Considered Sacred by Franciscan Monks.

One of the most interesting spots in the environs of Jerusalem is the Garden of Gethsemane, on the southern slopes of the Mount of Olives, says a writer in the Christian Herald. It is an enclosed space of about one-third of an acre surrounded by a high wall, and belongs to the Franciscan monks. One cannot say with the exact precision demanded by the scientific explorer whether this is the actual spot where our Lord was betrayed, but at all events it is hallowed with a continuous tradition of some sixteen centuries.

As you enter you pass the traditional spot of the betrayal and the place where the disciples slept while Christ was at prayer. There are well-arranged flower beds, and around the inside of the walls are representations done in relief in colors of the fourteen stations of the cross.

An object of interest in the garden is an old olive tree. This, with some other trees is said to date from the time of Christ, and is known from historical records to be of great age—at least nine hundred years. Rosaries are made from the olive stones and the oil yielded by the berries is considered sacred and is sold at a high price.

Your Bad Taste In The Morning Is Due To Catarrh

Destroy This Poisonous Disease Before Your Health Is Seriously Injured.

Perhaps you haven't thought of calling those unpleasant symptoms that affected your nose and throat by any particular name—but it's Catarrh just the same.

When the attack is severe, your eyes are watery and look weak. Your breath is offensive, due to inflammation in the nose and throat.

At last science has discovered a real remedy, a new scientific marvel which acts like no other Catarrh remedy on earth. "Catarrhozone" operates on a new plan; it is a direct remedy, goes instantly to the source of the trouble. Its rich, fragrant essences and healing balsams are breathed in vapor form through a special inhaler and give instant relief.

Catarrhozone doesn't stop at the relief stage—it goes further—keeps on going till a cure is effected. Bad cases are cured, as you can judge from the following letter:—"Every morning for six months last winter I awoke with a bad taste, and awful breath and stuffed up feeling in my nostrils," writes Rob E. Rutland, of Regina. "It was simply an awful case of chronic Catarrh. Relief first came from Catarrhozone. I used that inhaler twenty times a day and took it to bed with me at night. I am cured, and by the use of Catarrhozone stay well. Now I am free from irritable throat trouble, coughs, colds, headache, or catarrh."

No medicine on earth is so certain to cure every form of Catarrh or throat trouble as "Catarrhozone." Get the large $1.00 size, lasts two months and is guaranteed; medium size 50c; sample size 25c.; all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

BIRD MIGRATION.

Some Extraordinary Instances of Their Travels.

The ornithologists tell us that birds are not so invariable in their migratory habits as most persons suppose. If, for instance, the season is warm, or there is sufficient food for them in the north, the birds are late in starting south.

Nevertheless, the month of October is a sort of "starting-point" in the records of the ornithological societies. But it is not infrequently the case that birds that migrate in large numbers on October 31st one year, have either not arrived, or have passed south earlier on the corresponding date of previous years.

"The Accidental Visitors' List," kept by the London Zoological Society, is a record of all birds observed in Great Britain and on the British coasts that are not indigenous to the British Isles, but have flown thither from the Continent. In England, naturalists, ornithologists, lighthouse-keepers, masters of vessels, coast-guardsmen, farmers, and country gentlemen gladly report strange birds which they may observe, and give the date and circumstances of the observation. An examination of "The Accidental Visitors' List" reveals many curious happenings.

Birds native to eastern Siberia and China, North Africa and the arctic regions have thus been observed inn Great Britain, but, of course, at rare intervals. There are, however, a good many recorded instances of American birds crossing the Atlantic, and being seen or shot in Great Britain. An extraordinary instance was that of a Canada owl that alighted in an exhausted condition on board a vessel off the coast of Cornwall in 1830. The bird was so fatigued with its long flight across the Atlantic that it offered not the slightest resistance when handled by the sailors. A Carolina cuckoo was shot in Wales in February, 1833, by Lord Cawdor. In 1831 an American wood-duck was killed at Dorking, England. In 1872 three specimens of Cassin's snow-goose, a native of Labrador, were seen on the west coast of Ireland. The American societies have also a record of five individuals of this species shot in Chesapeake Bay in 1871. The London Zoological Society also maintains an accidental visitors' list of fishes, as well as of birds, and the same thing is done at the Fish Commission laboratory at Woods Hole, Massachusetts.

These curious wanderers into another continent are doubtless the young of some migratory flock. Such a flock is led by an old and experienced bird, which knows the route north and south. Occasionally birds that have never before been over the aerial road may get separated from the flock. They become bewildered, and fly about, quite at a loss until they reach land; where that may be is entirely a matter of chance.

Now and then birds that are not strictly migratory gather in enormous flocks, and sweep over several hundred miles of country. The cause that impels them to such action is still a mystery. Many years ago Turkey and Bulgaria were invaded by enormous flocks of the rose-colored pastor. These birds proved destructive to vineyards and growing crops, and the peasants had to turn out in force and kill them by the hundreds. A flock of these birds would strip a tree of fruit in less time than it takes to tell of it, and there were public rejoicings in places after the vast flocks had passed. So little is known of the cause of such migration that the bird societies everywhere are constantly on the alert to note any unusual happenings of this sort.

Superstition and Children

In the study of superstition there is nothing more interesting than that pertaining to children. The faculties and instincts of man are subject to only slow and gradual changes. The mental state of the child, in whom the restraining force as yet imperfectly operates, constantly reminds us of primitive conditions. To his lively fancy the world of imagination is as real as that of actual existence. Many children have imaginary playmates, whose actions and feelings are to them as veritable as those of the companions by whom they are surrounded. The ideas which they derive from books, or from the older people about them, readily become visions.

All children, as is known, believe in Santa Claus, and seldom find difficulties in his flight over the housetops and down the chimneys. It would be interesting to ascertain at what period, if left to themselves, their own observations would convince them of the unreality of their benefactor.

The fairies in whom many children now have faith and without fear expect to see are very different from those whom our forefathers believed to exist. They were regarded with a mixture of feelings in which dread and aversion predominated; they belonged to the realm of darkness, they were stealers of children, they kept in custody beautiful youths and maidens, their arrows produced disease and death; it was with a view of modifying their vindictive jealousy that they were called "good people."

Superstition finds a ready welcome among children, and to collect the notions entertained by them would fill volumes. It is, therefore, possible to give only a few beliefs Especially Childish.

Boys believe, for instance, that they can prevent the stitch in the side, which is likely to be induced by running, by means of holding a pebble under the tongue. As a superstitious boy would put it: "I believe that I could run all day and not get tired if I could hold a pebble under my tongue."

For two persons, in walking together, to pass on different sides of a post or tree divides friendship. For this reason children are careful not to do this, even if they have to fall back in order to pass in single file. The habit is so strong that many grown persons instinctively avoid separating in this way.

It deserves attention that children do not believe each other on simple assertions, but require the truth of the statements made by their comrades to be attested by some species of oath. A child to whom is told any story which he considers remarkable will usually reply by an expression of scepticism such as "Really and truly?" "Honestly?" "Earnest, now?" or "You are fooling." The first speaker answers by some formula of asseveration as "Honor bright," or "Deed, deed and double deed."

It is not infrequently that a child will say "cross my heart," accompanied by the sign of the cross, when they want the person to whom they have told something to believe fully in its truth. On inquiry, the idea, it is found, has nothing to do with the gesture. The meaning is explained by the form of the custom in which are used the words, "Hope to die if I don't," at the same time the speaker drawing the forefinger across the throat from ear to ear, which is a gesture, perhaps, symbolical of beheading.

There is another form of childish attestation which is universally in use, and unaccompanied by a significant gesture, but it seems to be only a variety of the foregoing. Little girls, without any idea of the meaning of the words, employ the asseveration:

Certain true,
Black and blue,

Honest and true,
Black and blue,
I'll cut my head through and through,

If He Violates His Faith.

It is obvious that these childish customs are the survival of ancient forms of compact. Among the Chinese in America, at the present day, it is said that the only form of oath respected is that enforced by the sacrifice of a chicken. The symbol is regarded as an indication of the consequences awaiting the perjurer, which, it is supposed, that the sacrifice insures. The original idea of the children's usage does not differ from that of the Chinese superstition, except that in the latter the penalty of treachery is made visible through the medium of a victim.

The following are some of the best known among the nature superstitions of the children of America: When you see a shooting star, if you can make a wish before the star disappears, the wish will come true, and again when the first star appears in the evening it is necessary to say:

Star-light, star-bright,
First star seen to-night:
Wish I may, wish I might,
Have the wish I wish to-night.

Wishing has much to do with the superstition of children, for as a usual thing their wishes seem never to be gratified. In the rural districts whenever a child sees a load of hay he may make a wish, believing that if he does so whatever he asks for will be acquired.

It is not an unusual sight to see children in the spring and summer search for the four-leaf clover, for they are sure, if they find one, it will bring them good luck. And where is the boy, who is in any way superstitious, who will not always turn his money when he sees the new moon, believing that by so doing the money will be doubled before the month is out. It used to be a general belief among the little farmer lads and lassies, when they were out at play, that the dandelion was their clock, and if they were not sure if it was time to cease playing and go home, they would blow out the seeds of a dandelion, and if all the seeds flew away at one breath, they were sure

Their Mother Sought Them.

There are equally as many superstitions regarding children as there are in the fancy of the child. One of the most common of all beliefs regarding a child is that it should never be carried downstairs first, but always up a few flights, if luck is to follow it. A practice that was formerly very common was to put a silver spoon within a child's hand and then carry the child to the attic. This must be done before the ninth day has passed. In some sections the Bible is used instead of a spoon, and some persons believe it of sufficient value to the child merely to mount a chair with it, or anything higher than the floor of the room in which it was born.

A belief that is pretty general is that a child's nails should never be pared, for if such is done the baby is likely to become a thief. One of the greatest troubles a mother has with her child is to cure it of whooping cough, and the mother of the rural district is more fortunate than her city sister, for she believes that if she steals and administers milk from a neighbor's cow, there will be almost an instant change.

The country mother also believes that if her children are afflicted with the mumps, if the swollen parts are rubbed against such portions of a hog trough as have been worn smooth by that animal, relief is speedily forthcoming.

The mother will be horrified if anyone should rock the empty cradle of her child, for she is sure such an act will bring misfortune to the baby, nor will she allow a teething child to look at itself in a mirror, feeling sure it will make the cutting of teeth unusually hard. To step over an infant as it lies on the floor will render it puny and delicate, and if beaten with a broom it will be good for nothing all its life.

In Turkey if a child reports at breakfast that he or she had a nightmare, remedies for lung trouble are at once applied. Each nation possesses its own particular superstitions regarding

The Curing of Diseases.

But the Polish people are especially strong in their belief in this respect. A sure cure for measles in Polish country towns is to carry the little sufferers through their parishes, no matter what the weather may be. As by this dangerous custom the disease is likely to spread over considerable territory, the authorities interfere and the records of prosecution show that not a single offender had any notion whatever of the why and wherefore of the superstition.

In the same country, rickets are cured, not by changing the child's food and adopting other reasonable measures, but by putting it out to board with "a woman who married a man with the same name as her own." The Polish people believe that whooping cough may be cured by letting a piebald horse breathe on the child. According to Irish folklore, a piebald horse is one possessed by evil spirits. The Polish superstition referred to indicates that these poor mothers try to drive out one evil by another.

Yet it will not do to look upon all superstitions as mere claptrap. For instance, a cure for consumption in a child is supposed to be effected by carrying it every day through a flock of sheep. As sheep are kept in the open and usually a distance from town or village, the remedy prescribed is almost equivalent to an open-air cure. Therefore, it should not be wholly despised.

A great majority of the superstitions regarding children are brought on by motherly love. There is not an ache or a pain that the child may complain of for which the fond mother does not search out a remedy, and she is willing to try everything suggested. Many of the odd ideas in the minds of children they have acquired from their mothers, who tell them all kinds of fanciful things to satisfy their curiosity, and naturally their minds conjure up others which are passed from child to child until a large volume on child superstition could be written.

BEAUTIFUL WIFE OF GERMAN AMBASSADOR.

No German ambassador's wife has ever made her mark in English society so quickly as has Princess Lichnowsky. It is, of course, a long time since there has been such a smart representative of the Fatherland in our midst, and then, too, the princess is far less stolidly Teuton than her predecessors, being, in fact, of Polish descent, like her husband, says a London paper.

Her distinguished appearance and her originality earmarked her at once, and before she had been in England very long, an admittance to No. 9 Carlton House Terrace gave a cachet in society to those lucky enough to get it. Besides her comely looks and her wonderfully good style of dress she is extremely clever and a brilliant conversationalist. She belongs already to the artistic and intellectual set in London society—by far the most exclusive and difficult set to get into. She has the prettiest and most simple manners in the world, and yet is possessed of a dignity which enables her to fill her high position to perfection.

CANNIBALS AND MURDERERS

EXPERIENCES AMONG THE HUDSON BAY ESKIMOS.

Missionary Tells of Lawless People Among Whom He Worked.

A great work is being done far up on the north-east shores of Hudson Bay in converting the wandering Indians and Eskimos who inhabit that desolate region to Christianity. A devoted little band of three or four Christian pioneers is stationed there, and a member of that "Arctic mission," who is in England for a short "leave," gave some of his experiences of the country and people.

"I am stationed at a tiny settlement on Great Whale River," said the Rev. W. G. Walton, "and the 'town' consists of two houses and a 'store.' I live at one of the houses with a Hudson Bay trader. We get two mails a year out there, but the newspapers only visit us once, so that you can imagine our expectation when newspaper day comes round. At the end of August every year a ship calls, and we have to be very careful to remember to order everything we want, because if we forgot anything we should have to wait another year. The Eskimos never wash themselves.

"Washing" Children.

"I have often seen an Eskimo woman washing her young children like a cat does a kitten—by licking them all over. Their only means of livelihood lies in catching seals. They are always on the lookout for seal holes in the ice. They eat the blubber, that is, the fat of the seal, and clothe themselves or at any rate make their trousers out of sealskin. It is very cold—45 degrees below zero as a rule—and we Europeans have to keep roaring fires going in every room of our house.

"The people don't live in villages, but separately in families, so as to have as wide a field for hunting as possible. They are a very revengeful people. A short while ago an Eskimo was out hunting and saw a black dot in the distance on the ice. On approaching he made certain that it was a seal just protruding from a seal hole.

Bloody Feud.

He fired and hit it, but when he got up to it he found that he had accidentally shot a man. He called on the widow, said how sorry he was, and, promising to help the woman, asked for forgiveness. The son of the dead man entered, and, when he heard, rushed off and killed all the unfortunate hunter's family in revenge. In retaliation the hunter killed all the dead man's family, and so the feud began. When we were informed of this and came to investigate we found that there was only one man surviving out of two families of about 17 persons. We could do nothing but lecture the survivor.

"They were terribly lawless until we came, and even now when in the grip of starvation commit the most awful deeds. Lately a mother, ravaged terribly by hunger, went to the length of eating her two children. Another killed his wife and lived on her, and when she had been eaten up tried to murder three other men's children. Luckily he was prevented. There are no native laws. They don't steal, but think nothing of murder. When they are 'put out,' as the saying goes, they must take a life. They don't mind whom they kill when they are angry as long as they kill some one. There is no sort of punishment for the crime. They are very fond of singing, and their favorite or only game is connected therewith. A piece of seal bone, with a little hole in it, is suspended from the 'roof.' They all sit round the 'room,' and each tries to throw an arrow into the hole. He who succeeds has to sing a song, but he who sings most songs wins the game. They get enormously enthusiastic over this pastime. They have large families, and the race would increase tremendously were it not for accidents and murders. They are, however, very impressed by the Christian creed, and we are gradually getting them to change their ways."

SCHOOLS IN CHINA.

Students Boss the Teachers and Study as They Please.

Some years have elapsed since the Manchu Government announced a programme of educational reform for China, having for its object the introduction of a national system of education approximating as closely as possible to that adopted by the western nations. This programme has made some headway, but has not yet been carried out in its entirety, and its ultimate success must remain doubtful until a genuine attempt is made to introduce and enforce strict discipline in all state schools and colleges. The laxity of the present cannot be better described than in the words of a Chinese professor who, in the course of an address to the students of Foochow College, in October, 1910, said:—

"The lawless idea of liberty was encouraged under the management of directors who themselves have never had discipline. The students found the best place to experiment in regard to equality of which they had learned in Japanese books, was either with their parents at home or with their teachers at school. While in school the teachers are considered by the students to be their equals, if not inferiors; for, in fact, they have often been styled public servants. Cases of friction between the teachers and the students, ending in strikes on the part of the latter, are very often reported in the newspapers. With the unions formed in schools the students become absolutely lawless. The positions of the teachers as well as those of the directors lie in the hands of the students, who, in fact, form the moving spirit of the whole institution. With the presumptuous power acquired from the union which they have formed, the students, through the medium of the directors (the president of the college), instruct the teachers on the best methods of teaching and formulating examination questions."

Ambition very often dies for lack of courage.

Words cannot express the contempt a small boy has for a girl, or the admiration he can generate for her after a few years.

Dainty Dishes.

Rice Croquettes.—Wash the rice, boil and strain it. Use one cup rice, one-half cup sweet milk, one tablespoon sugar, one teaspoon butter. Simmer gently in a saucepan over the fire, stirring until the rice has absorbed the milk. When slightly cooled flavor with one-half teaspoon of lemon or vanilla extract. Add the white of one egg (unbeaten); fry in hot grease, dropping in a spoonful at a time. Drain on cheesecloth and roll in pulverized sugar.

Tomato Bisque.—Make a tomato soup from two cups celery stock, two cups of cooked tomato, one teaspoon of sugar. Simmer an hour and run through a sieve. Cook together one tablespoon of butter, two tablespoons of flour. Add the strained tomato; simmer five minutes. Add one cup of sweet cream and a pinch of soda. Serve at once.

Lemon Jelly.—To one-third box gelatin add one cup cold water. Soak one hour. Add one cup hot water, one-half cup lemon juice, one teaspoon lemon extract, two cups sugar. Stir till dissolved. Set on ice till jellied and cold.

Scalloped Fish.—Cut fish in small pieces free from skin and bones. Use cold cooked fish. Chop cold boiled eggs and potatoes in alternate layers. Fill a buttered baking dish three-quarters full of this material, alternating fish, potato and egg. Cover with white sauce, sprinkle with breadcrumbs and bake twenty or twenty-five minutes in moderate oven.

White Sauce.—Cook together and mix well one tablespoon butter, one teaspoon flour. Add one cup sweet cream, simmer five minutes and season.

Salads.

Onion and Tomato Salad.—Take half a dozen firm ripe tomatoes of medium size, wipe them with a wet towel and cut them into slices a quarter of an inch thick. Peel a medium sized onion (Spanish or Bermuda) and slice very thin. Arrange the sliced onion and tomato in layers in the salad bowl and pour over them a plain salad dressing made by mixing together one teacupful of salad oil, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, a half teaspoonful of salt, and a half saltspoonful of pepper. Use this salad as soon as made. We should have said that young green onions may be used for this salad as well as the others.

Cold Meat and Potato Salad.—Cut a pound of cold cooked meat into thin slices and then into small squares, and mix with a pint of cold, chopped potatoes. Put a layer of this at the bottom of the salad bowl, cover with chopped parsley and salad dressing, put in another layer of the meat mixture and again the dressing, and continue till all the material is used. Place the bowl in the refrigerator for two hours or so, and the salad is ready for use.

Salad, Rouge et Blanc.—Take a close, firm red cabbage, trim off the outside leaves and cut into four pieces, wash in plenty of water, and drain. Break the leaves apart, remove the stalks and ribs and cut the rest into shreds. Now cut the heart and white sticks of two heads of celery into pieces and mix them with the cabbage in a salad bowl, garnish with young green tops of celery and serve with a dressing poured over all, prepared as follows: Beat one egg and fix in gradually a teaspoonful of salad oil, a tablespoonful of vinegar and a half teaspoonful each of sugar and dry mustard. Season with a little salt and serve.

Hints for the Home.

Potato balls which are salted in butter after being boiled are delicious. They should be served with a generous sprinkling of minced parsley.

To clean a frying pan after fish or onion, boil out the pan with soda water, washing clean, then put it on the fire and shake a little oatmeal in.

Tartaric acid removes almost any iron rust blemishes, and is an excellent article for removing yellow marks.

When gilt frames or molding of rooms have specks of dirt from flies and other causes upon them they may be cleaned with white of egg applied with a camel's hair brush.

Bran is much better to use for cleaning matting than soap and water. Tie the bran in a bag, dip the bag into clean warm water and rub the matting briskly with this; then wash it off with a cloth wrung out of warm salt water. This method freshens it up wonderfully.

Should the knob come off a pan or kettle, a screw can be slipped through the hole with the head inside the lid. Screw a cork onto the protruding end. This knob will not get hot and can be replaced.

A little ammonia in a few spoonfuls of alcohol is excellent to sponge silk dresses that have grown "shiny" or rusty, as well as to take out spots. A silk, particularly a black, becomes almost like new when so sponged.

Silver spoons or forks may be cleaned and brightened by leaving for several hours in strong borax water; the water should be boiling hot when the silver is put in. Silverware which is frequently washed with ammonia water will need cleaning much less often and much work be saved.

Carpets if well sprinkled with salt and then wiped with cloth squeezed out of warm water containing a spoonful of spirits of turpentine to every quart will look bright and new and will not be troubled with moths and buffalo bugs.

Cranberries can be kept fresh for any length of time if placed in a jar of cold water changing the water often.

When washing any garment made of silk add a teaspoonful of methylated spirit to the water and iron while damp. The silk will look just like new.

Coddled eggs are so good the recipe will bear being repeated. Fill a pitcher with boiling water, drop the egg into it, and let it stand five minutes or more. The egg will be clear like jelly and extremely digestible.

Postage stamps carried in a purse or handbag will often be found stuck together. Never attempt to separate them by pulling them, but simply lay them flat and press with a hot iron. They will then separate quite easily.

To remove coffee stains from silk, satin, or any other material, soak in glycerine; then rub gently with a soft cloth. Rinse with warm water, cover with a dry cloth, and iron the wet portion until dry.

Dates stuffed with peanut butter and then rolled in sugar are a pleasing change from dates stuffed with nuts.

If a curtain pole or portiere is rubbed with hard soap before being put up the draperies will slip on easily.

Cheese may be kept soft and good for a long time if wrapped in a cloth wrung out in vinegar and then wrapped again in dry cloth.

Bread can be well toasted in a corn popper. For English afternoon tea there is nothing better than a fork with a handle about four feet long to hold over the embers of an open fire.

A wardrobe to fit under the bed is a great comfort when bedroom space is limited. A neat box can be made to fit the space, and it should have handles and rollers.

In baking beans for a small family it is a good scheme to divide a batch so as to nearly fill several empty pound coffee cans. The cans can be kept in the refrigerator for a week and heated when desired.

TEARS ARE OUT OF STYLE.

Emotion Must Now be Expressed in a More Subtle Way.

One of the most conspicuous features of modern life is the change in the expression of emotion. There seems to be no doubt that the time will come when all the crude methods—the tears, the downcast eyes, the outbursts of passionate anger, the broken voice—will disappear entirely.

Though women are still inclined to cling to the old methods, men have already learned to express feeling more subtly. Something of the progress can be judged from a comparison between the present day and, say, the sixteenth century.

We know, for example, that Henry VIII. constantly burst into tears; that when the Duke of Anjou was being pressed to marry Elizabeth he "retired to his cabinet and bestowed half a day in shedding tears"; that when the funeral sermon was being preached on the Regent Murray of Scotland "there was not a man in all that iron crowd but was in tears," and that when James I. was angry he "wept like a fresh-beaten babe." If kings and princes could show their feelings so crudely, it is quite certain that the people had no more subtlety.

What a change to-day! Emotion must be subtle now or nothing. Women may still weep a little, but men must do nothing more obvious than light a cigarette or go out for a game of golf. In the old days a man in tears was an ordinary thing, but now he is looked at askance, and blamed, as an actor is blamed for forgetting his part.

Watch a man at a theatre when a woman on the stage bursts into tears. He is uncomfortable, and looks away—not because he resents so clumsy an expression of feeling. He wants to have his emotions touched, but these tears and these sobs do nothing for him. Even the gallery feels more inclined to laugh than to weep in sympathy. But every one knows how a subtle suggestion of grief by a clever actress will give the whole audience a lump in the throat.

Novels, too, are no longer wet with the tears of their heroines. Authors recognize that the old symptoms of emotion are no use. Their heroine must be dry-eyed and bewildering. She must not show her feelings in the old obvious, elementary way. She must not blush. She must not swoon. Above all, she must not burst into tears.

Words cannot express the contempt a small boy has for a little girl, or the admiration he can generate for her after a few years

GOES BACK ON ITS RECIPROCITY ARGUEMENT.—SAYS OPENING OF WHEAT MARKET TO THE SOUTH MEANS LITTLE TO CANADA.

Prices for Wheat Higher In Canada.

MOREOVER THE UNITED STATES NOW HAS MILLIONS OF BUSHELS FOR EXPORT AND WILL INCREASE PRESENT PRODUCTION.

The new Democratic tariff proposed in the United States involves a reduction of fifteen cents per bushel in the duty on wheat. The duty is now twenty-five cents; it is to be cut down toten.

When the reciprocity agreement was before the country, one of the main arguments advanced by the Liberals supporting reciprocity was that it would open the United States market for Canadian wheat. This was repeated from end to end of Canada. It was worked for all it was worth among the grain-growers of western Canada. The Canadian grain-growers was to sell his wheat in the market of ninety millions and at prices higher than those to be obtained in Canada. Ingenious comparisons of Canadian and American prices were made in support of the reciprocity prospectus.

CONSERVATIVE ARGUMENT.

The Conservative party refused to believe that the reduction of the United States duty on wheat would mean anything to the Canadian exporter, because United States prices were not in fact higher than Canadian prices, and because the United States was not a wheat importing but a wheat exporting nation, exporting millions of bushels of wheat even into Canada.

GLOBE AMONG THE LOUDEST.

The Toronto Globe was amongst the loudest shouters for reciprocity, including the promised boon to the Canadian wheat grower. That was when the Globe was playing a part in a political campaign as the chief organ of the Liberal party. The attempt was made to convince the wheat exporter in Canada for the benefit of the Laurier government.

That was two years ago. The opponents of reciprocity urged that the incoming Democrats would reduce the United States tariff without exacting from Canada the enormous price involved in the reciprocity agreement. That prediction has come true. But what about the Globe?

NO MOTIVE NOW.

There is nothing in it now for the Globe and its Liberal friends. It is no longer worth while misrepresenting the real situation. So the Globe frankly admits that the reduction in the United States wheat duty as now proposed means very little to the Canadian wheat producer.

WHAT IT SAYS NOW.

Here are the words of the Globe, April 25, 1913, discussing the effect of the new duties on the Canadian grain and flour trade. Speaking of wheat:—"The reduction proposed in the duty on wheat will affect the Canadian producer very little now. The United States is producing too much surplus wheat in these days to afford us a profitable market there. With reserves on March 31 amounting to about 156,000,000 bushels and a new winter crop coming in about the 1st of July which promises to greatly exceed that of a year ago, the United States is a huge exporter yet. With her new irrigation methods there are large wheat areas yet untouched. There is promise that she will be a large exporter for many years to come.

CANADIAN PRICES HIGHER.

"Prevailing prices in America markets reflect the relative position of the two countries. The present period is a good time to compare prices, as the export season on this side of the water is progressing towards its close. In Winnipeg yesterday, futures were selling as follows: May, 93⅛ July, 94⅜; October, 89¾. In Minneapolis they were selling; May at 88½, July 90½, September 91⅜. In Kansas City May at 86½, July 85¾' September 85¾. Except for some weeks in December last, cash and future prices in the United States markets have been below Winnipeg.

"Britain is the great consuming market of both Canada and the United States. In 1912 60,343 bushels of wheat went from Canada to Britain. The past year Liverpool has largely controlled the future market in both countries."

—:o:—

There was a disposition on the part of several Liberal members, notably E. W. Nesbitt, of North Oxford, and Dr. Michael Clark, of Red Deer, to criticize the government measure brought forward by Hon Martin Burrell to spend $10,000,000 in assisting the agricultural interests of Canada. These self-appointed "friends of the farmer" have proved by their utterances in the House that they care little or nothing for "the lonely figure in the furrow." The present government by bringing forward this legislation have shown that they have the welfare of the farmer at heart. During the sixteen years of Liberal administration all the farmers received was a little polite instruction from Sydney Fisher as to the proper way to fatten chickens.

Hugh Guthrie, the Liberal member for South Wellington, is complaining that it cost $3,000,000 in salaries and expenses of customs officers to collect the princely customs revenue of $115,000,000 for the fiscal year which ended March 31 last. Customs officers throughout the Dominion, the majority of whom perform most responsible duties for very moderate and in some cases very low salaries, will appreciate the action of this Liberal member who complains of their already small remuneration. Mr. Guthrie is a prominent member of the party which, when in office, did little or nothing to increase the salaries of customs officials. Now Mr. Guthrie is in opposition he peevishly complains because Hon. Dr. Reid, the Minister of Customs, is taking steps to see that these hardworking public servants are paid in an adequate and just manner.

Orchards Threatened.

Apple orchards throughout the province are threatened with an invasion of the apple tree tent caterpillar, according to information contained in a bulletin just issued by the Pomological and fruit-growing society of the province. The large number of egg masses found on the trees in every section indicate that the damage will be much more serious than that done in former years, unless thorough measures are adopted to control the pest. The serious losses caused by this pest in years past, and more especially last year, have led to the publication of a special circular by the society with the hope that the attention of fruit growers will be attracted to the danger and that all interested parties will avail themselves of the methods by which the pest may be controlled.

The adult of this insect is a moth which makes its appearance about the last week in July. The months are reddish brown in color with two dark brown stripes across the fore wings. The spread of the wings is about one and one-half inches in the female and a little less in the male. On fine evenings just before dark they may be seen flitting about amongst the branches of the trees. They are attracted by lights and are often found fluttering about lamps and lighted windows.

The eggs are deposited on small twigs usually within a few inches of the tip, in compact, ring-like masses of from 200 to 300 each. The moth secretes a resinous substance with which the whole egg mass is covered to protect it from the weather during the winter. The moths after depositing the eggs soon die. In the following spring, as soon as the leaf buds burst, the young caterpillars hatch out and begin to feed on the opening leaves. Later they begin to build a silken tent-like nest.

One of the quickest ways to control the pest is to pick off the egg masses during the winter and spring. The most effective way of controlling the tent caterpiliar is by spraying the trees with some form of stomach poison such as lead arsenate or paris green when the insects are small. These poisons may be used by themselves or they can be mixed with bordeaux mixture or the arsenate of lead may be mixed with lime sulphur.

Where regular spraying is done with bordeaux mixture or lime sulphur, to control the apple scab, the addition of two and one-half pounds of lead arsenate to 40 gallons of the fungicide, or ½ lb. of paris green to 40 gallons of bordeaux mixture (paris green is never used with lime sulphur) will be effective in keeping the caterpillars in check. After the young caterpillars begin to construct their tents, every colony in the orchard may be located and destroyed. It should be remembered that the nest is used only as a shelter at night or when the caterpillars are not feeding. It is necessary, therefore, to destroy it early in the morning or just before sunset or on rainy days.

Two more English manufacturing companies are establishing important branches in Canada, Henry Hope and Sons, Limited, of Birmingham, makers of steel window sashes, etc., and Marshall, Sons and Company, Limited, of Gainsborough, engineers and boilermakers. These are two additions to a small list of English houses with branches here, as compared with hundreds of United States companies with sales offices, warehouses, or factories in the Dominion. Both firms are incorporating Canadian companies to handle their business in this country. Messrs. Henry Hope and Sons, of Canada, Limited, with capital of $240,000 and head office in Toronto, has been incorporated with a Dominion charter. Messrs. Marshall, Sons and Company are obtaining a Canadian charter, and will establish a branch in Saskatchewan. The capital of this subsidiary company will be about $200,000. This company will seek to obtain a larger share of the market in Western Canada for tractors, which it manufactures largely. The company manufactures horizontal engines up to 2,000 horsepower; Cornish, Lancashire, locomotive, vertical boilers, etc.; undertype engines, simple and compound; vertical engines, simple and compound; portable and semi-portable engines; traction engines, road rollers; steam and oil tractors; threshing machinery for all countries; grinding mills; sawing machinery; oil engines.

CANADIAN DEVELOPMENT IN MANUFACTURING WAY

An English Publication Has an Article Setting Forth Some Facts Tersely

"I think there are very few people in England who have any conception of what Canada's development in a manufacturing way amounts to, or what an important part it plays in our national life. Let me give you some figures. In 1900, when the previous census was taken, the value of the output of Canadian factories for the year was $481,000,000. For the year 1910 when the last census was taken the value had jumped to $1,162,000,000 for the year, a percentage of increase which I do not believe has ever been equalled by any other country in the world in the same length of time. During the ten-year period from 1900 to 1910 we added 4,552 new factories to those already established in Canada, or an average of 450 per year, or three new factories established for every two working days in the year.

Canadian Employes

The employes in our factories numbered, according to the census, 511,844, which means that one in every fourteen of the entire population of Canada is actually working in a factory. When to these you add, first those who are directly dependent upon those, such as wives, mothers and children, and others indirectly dependent upon them, such as the butcher, the baker, the doctor, the lawyer, or whoever it may be, I think you will recognize what a tremendous portion of the population are dependent upon the industries for maintenance and support. And that industrial activity and development owes its being almost entirely to the policy of protection which we have adopted. We in Canada think it is a good thing for that part of the empire, whatever centre it may be, Toronto, Montreal or Winnipeg, if it is being built up and developed, rather than Pittsburg, Buffalo, or Chicago, and we are able to keep our people at home rather than send them by hundreds of thousands to the United States to look for industrial employment which we could not give them in Canada. It is estimated there are 3,000,000 Canadians living in the United States. There are whole cities in New England populated by Canadians, getting employment in factories which they could not find in their own country, but, that condition of affairs is changed, and to-day the tide is flowing the other way.

Built up Canada

"Moderate protection has rendered possible in the last few years the immense industrial development which has checked the outflow of population to the United States and built up industrial centres all over Canada. Moreover, our tariff has made it possible to pay our workmen decent wages (which English workmen do not receive under Free Trade). A prosperous industrial population in turn means that farmers obtain remunerative prices for their produce."

The Northwest Brass Foundry Company, Limited, operating at present thirteen factories in the United States and two in Canada, will establish a plant in Calgary, costing $300,000, and employing 500 men.

GENERAL DECREASE IN THE LAND VALUES

The Globe's Correspondent Indicates What is Taking Place in Free Trade England

"It is learned that among the farms ranging from 2,000 to 10,000 acres less than 5 per cent. have shown an annual profit in the last ten years. One writer in The Daily Mail goes into details in regard to a Midland farm of 2,109 acres, valued at £19,772 under the Finance Act, but which ten years ago could have been sold for three times that amount. The receipts from this farm amounted in 1912 to £1,322 7s 10d, and the expenditure to £22 8s 5d, plus that amount.

Owing to the general fall in the value of land the landlord has lost a large capital sum since he came into possession. It is calculated that in England the capital value of land fell by over £100,000,000 or $500,000,000 within a generation, and his due proportion of the national loss has fallen on this landlord. If put into the open market the estate would probably not fetch nearly £20,000, but if it sold at half this price the landlord would be richer than he now is by several hundreds of pounds a year.

"One need not go into his reasons for holding, but it is clear that at present he acts as a sort of agricultural credit bank to the estate. Whatever requires capital to be done he does. When the farmers were in a bad way he reduced the rents to a minimum. In the eyes of both farmers and laborers, schoolmaster and parson, who complete the population, he is regarded as the pivot of the organization. Without his capital there would be chaos, and without his personality much less confidence, which is the moral side of credit."

BETWEEN LOVE AND DUTY;

Ah, how valiantly she endeavored to speak the words that would have purchased such a world of happiness in this his last hour; but if her very life had depended upon it, she could not have uttered one sound.

Her lover saw the struggle so plainly depicted on the girl's countenance, and quaked with fear.

"Remember, it means but an hour to him, Jessy," he whispered; "but to me it means a life-time of misery. Your silence saves me; one word would betray me."

Oh, pitying God! was ever a girl's soul so tortured between love and duty! The excruciating pain of the rack could have been more easily endured.

"You have sworn that you will not betray me. You dare not break your vow!" were the words whispered over and over again in her shrinking ear.

"Are you there, Jessy?" he murmured. "It is growing so dark I can not see you. What a strange hush there is in the room, and how chill the air grows!"

A great sob broke from Jessy's agonized lips, but he did not seem to heed it.

"You weep now, but after a little while your grief will mellow down into memory," he murmured, softly. "And it is better so. You will learn sooner or later the great lesson the world teaches every one, that you must live on, though all that you love on earth are taken from you. You must live and learn to forget. You weep for me, Jessy. That is not right. You do not know how my soul longs to be free from this old, pain-racked body, and find sweet, eternal rest. I never had rest on earth, Jessy, and I need it so. I am so glad to go. I shall not go alone, for every hour there is an army of eager souls making the same last pilgrimage. My father and my dear old mother are there awaiting their boy. To them I am not an old, worn, world-weary man, but a boy still. And there is my wife, your angel mother, Jessy, with my boys around her, and all the friends of my early youth — all there, waiting so joyously to greet me. Your mother's face seems to smile at me through the darkness. Life and the world never seemed the same to me after she left me."

The last word ended in a sob; the effort to recall the words had been too much for him. Jessy clasped him in her arms with a great, despairing cry. She saw his lips grow white and the color fade from his face. She heard him murmur: "No—no!" There was a strange rustle as of angels' wings; something passed through the clear air and the sunshine, and the worn spirit of Andrew Carr was at rest forever.

CHAPTER XXI.

Jessy Carr did not faint, nor cry out, nor utter any moan as they gently unclasped her arms from the rigid form.

Like one dazed, she allowed them to lead her from the hospital ward. She stood quite still, utterly bewildered, while her companion said some words to the warden in an undertone, and pressed a roll of bills in his hand.

Then she was placed in the carriage, the same steep, winding road was traversed to the depot, the train boarded; but not until it was under headway, rushing back through space to the great metropolis, did the full realization of the calamity that had fallen upon her sweep over the bruised heart of Jessy Carr.

"You are drawing the attention of every one in the car to us!" he hissed below his breath, ending the sentence with a fierce burst of imprecations that terrified the poor girl into silence.

"Be kind to me now, if ever, Frederick," she wailed. "Show me whatever love and tenderness there are in your nature, for I need them now more than I shall ever need them again in this life, and remember what I have done for you this day."

"There! stop right there!" exclaimed her lover. "Do not continually throw up in my face what you have done for me. I'd never stand that, you know; you would drive me to desperation."

Jessy Carr cows back among the cushions of the seat, drawing her thick veil down closer over her ashen face.

In an instant he saw his mistake. It would never do to be harsh with the girl, or he would never be able to coax her into destroying that telltale negative when they got back to town. The sword, hanging by a single hair, would be over his head until that negative was destroyed; he would never know a moment's peace until that was accomplished. Then, and not until then, could he breathe freely.

"Forgive me, Jessy. I spoke too hastily," he murmured. "Seeing you shrink from me like that recalls me to my senses. Forgive me, my dear girl, and remember only how I love you, and that I would sooner cut my tongue out than that it should ever utter one unkind word to you to whom I owe that which is sweeter than life itself. So that you forgive me, Jessy."

The girl leaned her head on his shoulder and wept silently. He was all she had to cling to now—all she had left in the great, wide, cruel world.

"You will destroy that negative, will you not, when we return to town, Jessy?" he whispered, persuasively.

"Not until after we are wedded," replied the girl, hesitatingly.

"Do you mean that you are afraid to trust me? Do you think I would fail to carry out my part of the pledge if the negative was destroyed beforehand? Ah, Jessy, Jessy, have you so little faith in the man who loves you so devotedly?"

Not another word was spoken until they reached the city. As they were about to step into a cab, Tim rushed breathlessly up to them.

"Oh, Miss Jessy!" he cried, brokenly, "how can I ever tell you what has happened, and you just returning from the death-bed of your poor dear father. They do say that sorrow never travels singly. Oh, oh! Why did Tekla send me here to tell you the awful news?"

Jessy Carr had thrown back the heavy veil from her marble-white face.

"I—I can bear anything after what I have just passed through," she said. "Nothing will seem terrible to me after that. Speak out, Tim, without fear."

"I'd rather not say it, Miss Jessy," he faltered. "It's all in that extra," handing her a paper. "I'd advise the gentleman to put you in a cab—you can not stand here—and drive somewhere while he reads to you the column I have marked."

The guilty conscience in the heart of Jessy's companion quaked with awful fear. He scarcely knew how he handed Jessy into the vehicle and took a seat beside her.

"Drive around Central Park," he said to the driver. And it was not until the cab was well under headway that he succeeded in opening the paper and finding the place Tim had indicated; but as soon as his eyes fell upon the marked column a great cry of surprise broke from him lips, and he read aloud:

"'Early this afternoon a disastrous fire broke out upon lower Broadway. For an hour or so it threatened to become a terrible conflagration, but by the brave efforts of the firemen, they succeeded in confining it to one building, a five-story structure, the main floor and basement of which were occupied as a wholesale boot and shoe house, the second and third floors were mainly offices, while the fourth and fifth floors were occupied as a photograph gallery kept by the daughter of Andrew Carr, the convict. The entire building was completely gutted by the flames. Nothing was saved, the people who were in the building at the time barely escaping with their lives. Everything was fully covered by insurance, save the photograph gallery, which is a total loss.'"

A cry broke from Jessy's pale lips.

"Ah, dear Heaven! my earnings for months were in a little tin box on the mantel of my room. Everything gone—everything! Ah, Heaven help me! But, oh, how grateful I am that in this hour I have you to cling to, Frederick—I have you to go to."

"Everything is destroyed!" he cried, with a wild ring of joy in his tone that sounded strangely out of place. "That negative—everything is lost! Are you sure there is no mistake?"

"The report is, alas! too true. All I had in this world has been swept from me."

"We won't have to destroy that negative now; the flames have done that for us!" he cried, triumphantly; and she wondered at the ring of triumph in his voice. "The negative is destroyed," he repeated, ending the words in a decided chuckle, and rubbing his hands gleefully together.

"Where are we driving to, Frederick?" asked the girl, wonderingly, as he sat back in his seat, evidently lost in thought and not speaking for full half an hour.

"I don't know," he answered, abruptly. "Suppose we drive down past the scene of the conflagration, which, by the way, was such a lucky one for me. I'll always believe in old adages after this, especially the one which says, 'It's an ill wind which blows nobody good.'"

Giving the order to the driver, he settled back in his seat again, lost in his own reflections, until Jessy interrupted him with the timidly uttered remark:

"If the gallery has burned down, I—I shall have no place to go. You seem to have forgotten that, Frederick."

"You must have friends near about," he answered, carelessly, and somewhat coldly, she thought.

For a moment she hesitated, but the situation forced her to speak out:

"Frederick," she murmured, faintly. "I thought that perhaps it would be better, under the circumstances, to accept the proposition you made me—before—before — we went up to see poor papa, and that was—to—to marry you—to-day—now—if you would care to have me do so."

A harsh laugh that made the blood fairly curdle in her veins answered her.

"Well, I declare!" he exclaimed. "That is pretty good. We might as well understand each other first as last, my dear Jessy. I have changed my mind with regard to marrying; that's all there is about it."

Jessy Carr sprung forward in her seat and faced him, white as death, clutching at his arm.

"There, there! Don't go into hysterics or scream, cry out, or call attention to us. If you do, I shall step out of the cab and permit you to finish the rest of your ride alone," he said, coolly, taking from his pocket a cigar and lighting it, without so much as paying, "by your leave," and puffing away unconcernedly as though he had forgotten her presence there the very next moment after he had uttered those cruel words whose poisoned shaft had struck down to the depths of her soul.

SIGNALLING AT 70 MILES.

And the Distance at Which Objects Can Be Seen By the Eye.

The heliograph, which is used so largely by armies in the field for signalling purposes, is nothing more than a mirror, by which the sun's rays are caught and reflected.

The flashes can be thrown in any desired direction, the ordinary Morse code being usually employed. The distance to which these flashes can be thrown and read is almost incredible. During one of our little Indian wars, when an expedition was sent to punish the rebellious Waziri, outposts communicated with the main force when seventy miles away, says London Answers.

Apart from signalling, the distance at which objects can be discerned by the eye depends on two things—their height, and the clearness of the air.

In Mexico the air is said to be clearer than anywhere else in the world. At any rate, it is the only country where a view extending to two hundred miles can be obtained. By climbing ot the top of the Sierra Mountains the lonely peak of Mount Sparta can be seen. It would take four hours by express train to reach it, the distance being about the same as that between Torquay, in Devonshire, and London.

Mount Everest, in the Himalayas, is the tallest mountain in the world. From Darjeeling the gigantic cone of Everest is seen rising in snowy grandeur among its mighty neighbors, and any stranger would vow that it was not more than thirty or forty miles away. As a matter of fact, the distance is one hundred and seven miles as the crow flies.

KING OF NORWAY.

Parliament is Taking Away From Him all Royal Prerogatives.

The most sat-on man in all Europe is hapless King Haakon. Even Sultan Mohammed V. is relatively blessed, for Mohammed emerged out of Abdul Hamid's prison, whereas Haakon, formerly Charles of Denmark, gave up a pleasant post as popular younger son to take a kingship at $140,000 a year. Even puppet Mohammed gets $2,000,000. And ever since hapless Haakon became Norway's King, adoring subjects have been pilfering from him what little of the glitter and reality of royalty they gave him at first.

Haakon's trouble is that the Radical-Republican majority now on top is depriving him of every amenity of kingship, and has got to the stage of robbing of an indefeasible right which even the mildest monarch has; that is the right of granting decorations and orders to distinguished—and undistinguished—men. The Radicals have introduced a bill into the Storthing taking this right away. This is hard on Haakon, because the constitution specifically declares that he may grant what decorations he likes. Haakon has stuck faithfully to his constitution, and expects it to stick to him. The constitution further declares that only a two-thirds majority can amend it, but as, at least, 90 out of 123 Storthing members are against King Haakon, it follows that the right to decorate and confer orders will go.

Villain in this democratising tragedy is politician Gunnar Knudsen who came out victor of the general election of last August. Gunnar is easily Norway's greatest man. For twenty years he has been stoutly combatting Kings. Gunnar was Finance Minister in the 1905 Cabinet which enforced separation from Sweden; he demanded then a Republic, and sooner than acquiesce in the choice of Charles of Denmark he threw up his job. Three years later he formed a Radical-Republican ministry of his own, which did its best to flout and sit on King Haakon; and now that he is boss again he vows that he will flout King Haakon still more.

King Haakon of Norway.

Not only Gunnar Knudsen bullies the King. The newspapers and the Strothing do the same. Newspapers lecture Haakon on his extraordinary good fortune in being King at all. They remind him that he is neither useful nor ornamental and hint that so far from resenting the filching of his rights, he ought to rejoice that he is tolerated at all. They wind up by reminding him that he is popular—which is true—and that they are opposed only to monarchical anachronisms and by no means to himself. The Storthing's spirit is the same.

"Cutting down the King's power," said a speaker recently, "we do not admit that the King has any power. We like him—three cheers for Haakon VII!—but this is a free country, and he can't expect us to take him seriously as a King."

Hapless King Haakon's first bad blow was the abolition of coronations. By a narrow shave he got modestly crowned in 1906; but the thrifty Norsemen were so shocked at his seventh-rate extravagance that they swore his coronation would be the last. And almost by unanimous vote the Storthing abolished the coronation ceremony for ever. After this, several minor measures were passed which had the effect of keeping King Haakon in his place. But next followed anti-royal measures which caused dispute, because some Norwegians thought that others were going a bit too fast and would soon have no King Haakon left.

The greatest dispute has raged over the plan to deprive King Haakon of his right to veto changes in the constitution. In July, 1910, this veto resolution was lost by only a few votes; and it was revived a year later. Being beaten in this matter, the Rads-Reds set out to deprive King Haakon of his merely ornamental right to open and close the Storthing. Every monarch in Europe, without exception, has this right, but King Haakon must not have it.

Ostriches Not Long Lived.

In proportion to their size, ostriches are not long lived birds, and even under the most favorable conditions it is seldom that individuals reach the age of from thirty to forty years, an age frequently exceeded by crows, cranes, parrots, and birds of prey. The source of weakness in their constitutions appears to be the digestive system. The proverbial phrase "digestion of an ostrich" is a popular misinterpretation of the observation that these birds, like many others, pick up stones, coins, keys and other miscellaneous hard objects, which are retained in the gizzard and no doubt assist in the trituration of food.

The average girl treats a new acquaintance far better than she does an old friend—so the old friend thinks.

SPOHN'S DISTEMPER CURE

STALLIONS DISEASED

In the stud they often become so devitalised that they must be given a long rest from such service. This is due to the absorption into their systems of poisonous Bacteria or Germs, both contagious and sexual, in serving mares of all degrees of Health and Disease. There are many of these germs very injurious to the stallion. To counteract the growth of such germs in his system, and keep him in normal condition there is but one Germicide in prepared form known and fit for internal use. Spohn's Liquid Distemper Cure is safe, simple and sure. It acts on the whole glandular system, regulates the vital forces, leaves the blood rich and red. It will enable any stallion to go through a long stud season, keeping him vigorous and not the least danger from any form of distemper. Give him a dose of "Spohn's" every other day on his tongue or with his bran or oats. All Druggists.

TUBERCULOSIS CATTLE.

An Expert Says It Is the Most Common Disease of Cattle.

In a paper read before the British National Association for the Prevention of Consumption, Dr. Sheridan Delepine emphasized the need of a systematic inspection of dairy cattle. He said he believed that infection from cattle caused fully a quarter of the cases of tuberculosis among children under five years of age. The Lancet, which prints extracts from Doctor Delepine's paper, also quotes a recent report of the veterinary surgeon of the city of Glasgow, who said that tuberculosis was the most common disease that affected cattle. Out of 71,745 British cattle slaughtered, no less than 8,932, or more than twelve per cent., proved to be tuberculous. The prevalence of tuberculosis in milch-cattle is further shown by the fact that the veterinary surgeon rejected no less than forty out of ninety-eight cows that he tested with tuberculin before admitting them to the herds that supply milk to the fever hospitals. "An alarming proportion," says the report, "when we consider that these were all good-looking beasts that had received the critical attention of the dairy-owner beforehand, in the full knowledge that they were to be tested."

BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Baby's Own Tablets are the best medicine a mother can give her little one. They act as a gentle laxative, sweeten the stomach, break up colds and make teething easy. Concerning them Mrs. Alphonse Landry, Upper Caraquet, N. The Tablets are sold at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Lost Shipmate.

Somewhere he failed me, somewhere he slipped away—
Youth, in his ignorant faith and his bright array.
Still the old years die and the new begin;
But Youth!—
Somewhere we lost each other, last year or yesterday.

I waited for him a little, where the anchored argosies ride
I thought he came—the steady "trade" blew free—
I thought he came; 'twas but the shawod of me!
And Youth!—
Somewhere he turned and left me, about the turn of the tide.

Perhaps I shall find him. It may be he waits for me,
Sipping those wines we knew, beside some tropic sea.
The tides still serve, and I am out and away
To search the spicy harbors of yesterday,
For Youth,
Where the lamps of the town are yellow beyond the lamps of the quay.

Somewhere he failed me, somewhere he slipped away—
Youth, with his ignorant heart and his bright array.
Was it in Bados? God, I would pay to know!
Was it on Spanish Hill, where the roses blow?
Ah, Youth!
Shall I hear your laughter to-morrow, in painted Olivio?

Somewhere I failed him. Somewhere I let him depart—
Ah, Youth!
Shall I find you south of the Gulf? —or are you dead in my heart?

It Will Stop Your Aching Back, Stop Your Suffering, Keep You Well.

Back Sufferers, Read Below.

"I am just so delighted with the comfort Nerviline brought me that I want to talk about it all the time," writes J. C. Caughlan, of Saskatoon. "For ages I have been subject to an aching, dragging feeling at the base of the spine. When attacks came on it made my whole body ache. It appeared as if I had taken cold and a soreness developed all through my muscular system. When in Winnipeg one day a friend spoke to me of Nerviline, and I bought a 50c. bottle. That was the best half-dollar I ever spent, it did so much for me. It is hard to convince some people of what a really good medicine can do, but there will be no sceptics after they try out Nerviline. I use it for everything now. It's fine for Rheumatism and Neuralgia and all sorts of muscular pain it cures quickly. But internally, if possible, Nerviline is even better. It cures a cramp in ten seconds, and, as for gas and upset or sour stomach, nothing could excel Nerviline. I think it should be kept in every home as a protection against sudden ills, and also to cure ills that resist other treatments."

Thibet's Legend of Eden.

The followers of the Dalai Lama, in Thibet, have a legend that in the first great Garden a sweet-tasting plant grew out of the ground. One man tasted of this plant, and the other did likewise, when all virtue and good fortune ceased. Ages passed, and this plant grew no more. Mankind fed upon a kind of red butter, then upon grass, and at last they had to cultivate the soil. Virtue had departed from the earth, violence, murder and faithlessness increased.

When women vote and the election doesn't go to suit him a man can blame it on his wife.

Popular Young Farmer Talks

TELLS WHAT DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS DID FOR HIM.

He's Back at Work Again, After Suffering from the Pains, Nervousness and Depression that Only Kidney Disease Can Bring.

Point Alexander, Ont., April 14 (Special).—Mr. D. A. Froncare, a well-known and popular young farmer, living near here, who has been a sufferer from kidney disease for some time past, is back at work again, and he says, without hesitation, that his cure is due to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I was always tired and nervous," Mr. Froncaire says, in speaking of his illness. "I suffered from backache and neuralgia, and my sleep was broken and unrefreshing. My eyes were puffed and there were dark red circles around them.

"My muscles would cramp. I felt heavy and sleepy afterwards, and I was depressed and low-spirited, while shortness of breath and dizzy spells served to make life yet more miserable for me.

"I was always thirsty; my limbs were heavy; and I had a dragging sensation across the loins.

"My symptoms led me to believe I had kidney disease, and I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills. I have taken eight boxes in all, and I am very grateful for the benefit I have received from them."

To Improve Hanging.

Suggesting that our method of hanging is not the most painless and humane, the London Lancet urgest the adoption of the submental (under the chin) knot in place of the subaural (below the ear) knot. "It is admitted that there is a tendency for a knot to slip from the point of the chin, and to obviate this Lieutenant-Colonel Marshall has invented a 'chin trough,' which holds the rope in position. The question which should now present itself to the authorities is, granting that the submental knot is the most humane, what is the best method of ensuring the rope being retained at the point of the chin?"

Whole Hymn on Her Arm.

Some time ago a woman entered a well-known London (England) hospital, and the nurses discovered that the upper part of the right arm was entirely occupied with a pictorial representation of "The Rock of Ages," while on the lower part of the arm was the scene of the Crucifixion.

A WOMAN'S SELF-CONTROL.

How She Kept Her Head Under Trying Circumstances.

An Englishman travelling through Ceylon describes in the London Telegraph a startling experience that befell his hostess at a dinner in Trincomalee.

The dinner was excellent, but when it was about half-over I was startled by hearing my hostess tell the native servant to place a bowl of milk on a deerskin near her chair.

Although she spoke as calmly as if giving an ordinary order, I knew at once that there was a snake somewhere in the room, for these creatures prefer milk to anything else. As a hasty movement might have meant certain death, we all sat like statues; but for all that, our eyes were inspecting every nook and corner of the room. However, it was not until the milk was placed on the deerskin that the snake appeared. And then, to our amazement, a large cobra uncoiled itself from my hostess's ankle, and glided toward the bowl, where, of course, it was immediately killed.

Imagine the nerve of the woman, although she fainted when the snake lay dead on the floor. How many could have remained motionless under such circumstances?

VARICOSE VEINS ABOVE ANKLE

Broke Into Sore. Itched and Burned So Badly Could Scarcely Sleep. Red and Inflamed. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Entirely Cured.

217 Greenwood Ave., Toronto, Ontario.—"My trouble was varicose veins above my ankle. It broke into a sore which was painful. The sore itched and burned so badly that I could scarcely sleep. The skin around it was red and inflamed. I could not wear a shoe for eight weeks. I tried several ointments but they didn't seem to do it any good. Then I was recommended to use Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I bathed with the Cuticura Soap and put a little Cuticura Ointment on and they gave the greatest relief. In a few weeks the sore was entirely cured." (Signed) Mrs. MacGregor, Feb. 21, 1912.

SALT RHEUM ON BABY'S HEAD

Woodstock, Yarmouth Co., N. S.—"My baby was about three weeks old when he had salt rheum on his head and forehead. It began in a little fine rash, which came on his head and down over his forehead and formed a hard, brown crust. It looked terrible, and it must have bothered him quite a lot, as he would not sleep. I used to wash him with the Cuticura Soap and hot water and put the Cuticura Ointment on, and in three weeks his head and forehead were clear. I can't speak too highly of the Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Soap." (Signed) Mrs. George B. Allen, Nov. 18, 1911.

Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere. A single set is often sufficient. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post card Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Dept. 54D, Boston, U. S. A.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

How the Farmers Renew Their Exhausted Land.

The little Province of Prince Edward Island which lies in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and close to the shores of both Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, has many features wholly, or almost wholly, peculiar to herself. The smallest Province in the Dominion, yet she is unique in that she possesses the densest population, is the only Canadian island having a provincial status, and the only one with a uniform and unaltered geological formation. The soil of Prince Edward Island, however, while naturally fertile, is somewhat deficient in lime, and the crops soon exhaust the scant supply of nature. But a remedy is provided by the deposits of dead oysters from one end of the island to the other. This deposit is the most superior lime fertilizer extant, and a valuable dressing for some soils, especially for hay and grain crops. Moreover, it requires no treatment of any kind before being applied to the land. These shell mines are considered to be public property, and any man is free to select the best location he can. He receives no official recognition of his claim, and only holds it while his machine is over the spot. The depth of some of these old shell beds is extraordinary. Thirty feet of solid oyster shells is said to have existed in certain places. The size of the shells in some cases is fully 15 inches long, 4 inches wide, and an inch thick at tahe butt end. It will thus be seen that shells of this description must contain a large amount of pure lime.

TOMATO CULTURE.

Almost anyone with a garden or farm in a temperate climate can grow tomatoes with greater or less success, but there is a great difference between the extent and quality of the crops grown by different persons in the same locality. These differences are due to several causes among which the varieties grown and methods of cultivation practised are perhaps the chief.

According to experiments carried on for years at the Experimental Farm at Ottawa, Earliana, of which there are several strains, is the best early sort, but Bonny Best, Chalks' Early Jewel are also good early kinds. Of later varieties Matchless Trophy, Livingston's Globe and Plentiful rank high.

It is the early fruit that makes the profit. In growing plants what should be aimed at is the production of a stock, sturdy plant which will have some fruit set upon it when set in the field. After planting the chief work is cultivation, which should be done both ways in the plantation.

In order to protect tomato plants from diseases, of which there are several, they should be repeatedly sprayed, even when quite young, with Bordeaux mixture. These and many other points, which cover practically the whole field of tomato culture in the green house as well as in the garden and field, are fully treated in pamphlet No. 10 of the Central Experimental Farm prepared by the Dominion Horticulturist, Mr. W. T. Macoun. This work is for free distribution to all who apply for it to the Publications Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa.

Gained in Weight, Digestion Restored, Health Renewed

More Praise for Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

"For a period last summer the thought of food excited feelings of nausea," writes Mrs. C. A. Dodge, of Bloomsbury. "The heat had made me listless and the distaste for food reduced me to a condition of semi-starvation and brought me to the verge of nervous collapse. Tonics were useless to restore an active desire for food. The doctors told me my liver and kidneys were both at fault, but the medicines they gave me were too severe and reduced my strength so that I had to abandon them. At the suggestion of a friend who had been cured of blood and skin trouble, I began the use of Dr. Hamilton's Pills. The difference I first noticed was, that while they cleansed the system, instead of feeling weaker I felt better after taking them. Indeed their activity was so mild it was easy to forget I had taken them at all; they seemed to go right to the liver, and in a very brief time not only did all source of nausea disappear, but I began to crave food and I digested it reasonably well. Then I began to put on weight until within three months I was brought to a condition of good health. I urge Dr. Hamilton's Pills for all who are in poor health."

Get this best of all medicines to-day and refuse a substitute for Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut. Sold by all druggists and storekeepers, 25c. per box or five for $1.00. Sent postpaid by The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

Czar Buys Clothes in Russia.

The Czar keeps about 40 suits in wear, and wears each perhaps a dozen times before it is put out of the wardrobes. The Czar buys all his clothes in Russia, and each suit costs him from $40 to $60, while for frock coats and waistcoats he pays $75. On some of the Czar's uniforms the gold ornamentation and braiding are worth alone $1,000. This ornamentation is never used twice, but when a new uniform is ordered the ornamentation is good for about one-third of its original cost.

Mr. and Mrs Hooker, though taken by surprise, expressed their thanks for this kindness. A very pleasant evening was spent, and after dainty refreshments were served, and the singing of Auld Lang Syne, the happy company left for their homes.

New Railway for Lachute.

—: o :—

Mr. O. T. Tomlinson, chief engineer of the North Railway Company, has gone to the Bell River crossing of the Transcontinental Railway and with a party of engineers, will come south along the route of the proposed railway to Montreal. Already the North Railway Company have five location parties in the field and Mr. Clergue stated yesterday that they expected to have their surveys sufficiently advanced to enable them to invite tenders for at least two hundred miles of the section between the Transcontinental and Montreal by the middle of June. They expect in fact to have the southern section under contract by Dominion Day, as the contract will call for the completion of the line, which is to be used by the Grand Trunk Pacific as a branch line into this city, by the end of 1914. The survey parties are now operating from Bell river south, from Manawaki northward and south, and from Lachute in a northwesterly direction. The surveyor's notes indicate so far that a better route will be secured over the Laurentides than they expected and as far as the other sections are concerned construction will be comparatively easy. The difficult work on the whole line from Montreal to the mouth of the river Nottaway will not be over fifteen miles in exsurveys on the west side of the mouth of the Nottaway show a depth of water equalling forty feet.

THE HUMBLE HERRING.

2,900,000,000 Pickled in Europe in a Year.

The humble herring, being one of the most common fish, does not get nearly so much attention as it would otherwise, and people have very little idea of its importance. Some idea of the number of herrings that are yearly caught and eaten in Europe may be gathered from the fact that in 1912 there were 3,623,807 barrels of herrings pickled in Europe alone. To this enormous total Great Britain contributed 2,360,355 barrels, or more than four times the number contributed by any other country.

On an average it is reckoned that eight hundred herrings are pickled in each barrel, so that the number of herrings cured during a year in Europe reaches the enormous rough total of 2,900,000,000. About three parts of an entire year's catch of herrings are put into pickle, though this does not include those which are tinned, kippered, bloatered, or treated in divers other ways.

In spite of the enormous proportions of herring that are pickled in Great Britain, the sale in that country is comparatively small, the chief markets being in Russia and Germany.

CHINA'S VAST TERRITORIES

STORIES OF CONGESTION OPEN TO QUESTION.

The Chinese Newspapers Express Fears That Aggressors Will Step In.

It has been generally assumed that China is so densely populated that millions of its people are unable to find a livelihood on land, and are compelled to live on houseboats on the rivers, and some authorities, in considering China's present problems, have regarded the possesion of her vast territories beyond the Great Wall as being absolutely necessary in order to provide for her surplus population. Inquiries, however, have been made by those in a position to make them, and the results of these have done much to disprove the generally accepted theory that China is over-populated. For instance, Sir Alexander Hoise, while acting as commercial attache to the British legation, wrote in his report on the foreign trade of China in 1906:

"Having visited 15 of the 18 provinces of China proper, as well as the three Manchurian provinces, and seen how scantily many of them are populated, I doubt very much whether the whole of China, Manchuria, and the new dominion contain a population at all approaching the usually accepted 400,000,000."

Figures Exaggerated.

Mr. Rockhill, who travelled very extensively in China, estimated that China proper had not a larger population than 200,000,000. A Chinese newspaper, in referring to the frontier troubles at present existing, stated that "The root of all those troubles is that we have done nothing to populate the vast territories along our borders. A fair land, vast, undefended and unpopulated is sure to attract the attention of aggressors."

Allusion is made in the article to ill-digested schemes which have recently been put forward with a view to encouraging colonization in those frontier regions of the south-west and the north-west, now that the military necessity for so doing has been forced upon public attention, and it has been proposed that disbanded soldiers should be settled there, so that they might serve the double purpose of developing the land and checking any aggression that might be threatened.

Colonization Difficult.

But as the rich have not shown any inclination to leave their comfortable homes to sojourn in this remote land, and as the poor have not the means to enable them to leave their homes and develop this land, it would seem as if China had very little use for these outlying territories at the present time, at least for this purpose. Unless good inducements are offered to remain in this remote land, any plan of attempting to colonize these territories with disbanded soldiers is not likely to meet with success. At any rate the reception which this proposal has met with indicates that the pressure of population is not so great in China as many folks are inclined to believe.

DIPHTHERIA PREVENTIVE.

Prolonged Immunization Announced by German Doctor.

The discovery of a method of prolonged immunization against diphtheria, consisting of an injection of a mixture of diphthertic toxin and anti-toxin, was announced recently by Prof. Emil von Behring, of the University of Marburg, Germany, at the Congress of Internal Medicine.

Adequate tests of the new method in the clinics of Magdeburg and Marburg had, said the professor, shown that the treatment was harmless and effective. The earlier attempts to immunize by means of Behring's original diphtheria serum were unsuccessful, as the immunity was very brief.

Prof. Behring offers to supply clinics with the new prophylactic under proper guarantees of observation and registration.

India's Floating Factories.

Floating factories have become an important part of the development of the forest resources of India. In certain parts of that country the forests are only accessible through the water courses, and the great expense of erecting land plants for the utilization of the lumber resources makes such a course impracticable. Therefore, sawmills and other manufacturing establishments are built on floating platforms and moved up the streams as they are needed. After the lumber is prepared in a sawmill it can be packed in a way that makes transportation much more economical than any system of logging. Plants for the preparation of tanning extracts have also been established in this manner. The plants are built on flat boats, 200 feet long by 27 feet wide, capable of carrying a load of 470 tons.

CHILDREN IN THE HOME

When there are children in the home it requires constant attention to keep them free from the many childhood ailments which come so quickly—some of them proving fatal while others leave the little one cross, restless and weak. To keep little ones well Baby's Own Tablets must be kept in the house. These Tablets regulate the stomach and bowels, break up colds and fevers; expel worms and make teething easy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Some Mediaeval Kitchens.

There is a mediaeval kitchen at Westminster Abbey, although little remains by which to identify it aside from the rubble flooring, the buttery hatch and an adjoining cellar. Hampton Court Palace shows its great kitchen, with vaulted roof and sets of antlers on its walls. Englishmen of other days fully recognize the advantages of a large kitchen. There is extant an order, dated April 19, 1206, wherein Hugh de Nevill is commanded to have the King's kitchen at Clarendon roofed with shingles and to cause two new kitchens to be erected, one at Marlborough and the other at Ludgershall, in which "to dress" the royal dinners.

The Size of the British Empire.

"It is 53 times the size of France, 52 times that of Germany, 3½ times that of the United States of America, thrice the size of Europe, with treble the population of all the Russias. It extends over 11,000,000 square miles, occupies one-fifth of the globe, contains one-fifth of the human race, or 350,000,000 people, embraces four continents, 10,009 islands, 500 promontories, and 2,000 rivers." The above is a little inventory of the British Empire, and the writer who is responsible for it jotted down his figures before the annexation of the South African Republics.

If Bad Water Causes Diarrhoea Use Some 'Nerviline'

Prompt Relief is Instantly Assured, and Thousands Use Nerviline on This Account.

A Traveler's Experience Related.

The experience of Mr. Norman P. Hendricks is not an unusual one. Writing from Prince Albert he says: "My business calls me from one place to another, and I am frequently up against the bad water problem of the Canadian North-West. In so many places the water disagrees with me, and I used to be kept very miserable on that account. An old settler told me one day that nothing is so useful to newcomers as Nerviline, and he explained to me how valuable it proved to him under similar circumstances twenty-five years ago. You would hardly believe how happy and comfortable my tripe are since I learned of Nerviline. I look upon 'Nerviline' as my trusty friend, and give it a place of honor in my hand bag. In fact, I wouldn't think of being without it in a country like this. It cures any little stomach trouble or digestive disturbances and relieves a cramp in ten seconds. To cure Neuralgia, Earache, Toothache, or pain in your muscles like Rheumatism, you simply can't beat Nerviline."

To cure little ills before they grow big and to relieve the aches and pains of the whole family get Nerviline to-day. Family size, 50c.; trial size, 25c.; at all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Curious Pew This.

One of the largest churches in Europe—the Frauenkirche, Dresden, which contains sitting accommodation for 6,000 people and standing room for 2,500 more, has an extraordinary pew reserved for the city magnates and their families. It is built in the form of a Greek cross and surmounted by a spacious dome. The ground floor is partly occupied by benches, all numbered, and three of the arms are fitted up with galleries in seven or eight tiers, the lowermost projecting forward as in the dress circle of a theatre. There are besides many minor openings, like windows, the recesses round which bear all the appearance of private boxes.

ZAM-BUK FOR THE CHILDREN.

Mrs. J. Quiding, of Ninette, Man., says. "My little boy was suffering very badly from a form of skin disease over his eye. I applied Zam-Buk to the affected part, and in a very short time the sores were healed."

Mrs. F. Miners, of 311 Suffolk St., Guelph, Ont., says: "My little daughter Lorinda (6), contracted a skin disease. This first broke out like tiny water blisters, afterwards taking the form of dry scabs. These would disappear for a short time, and then reappear worse than ever. We tried Zam-Buk, and perseverance with its use resulted in a cure."

OUR LETTER FROM TORONTO

INTERESTING BITS OF GOSSIP FROM THE QUEEN CITY.

Sir Henry Pellatt's Gift to the Queen's Own Regiment—The City's Food Bill for a Year—Boiling Water Again.

The gift by Sir Henry Pellatt of a large plot of land in a populous section of the city, to be used for drill purposes exclusively by the Queen's Own Regiment, calls attention once more to this worthy Knight, who is in many respects the most spectacular figure in Canadian finance. Sir Henry believes in doing things in a big way when his enthusiasm is aroused. The Queen's Own Regiment, said to be Canada's crank corps, has always had Sir Henry's enthusiasm. He has served in it himself throughout almost his entire life-time and in all ranks from private to colonel. The jaunts he took the regiment on are matters of history, first sending the bugle band to England and afterwards arranging the transportation of the entire regiment to take part in the manoeuvres at Aldershot. His present gift of drill grounds is estimated in cash value at something like $120,000.

Sir Henry has some other enthusiasms. He has been a generous patron of Trinity College and of Grace Hospital.

His House on the Hill.

But perhaps his outstanding enthusiasm is the residence he is building for himself on the hill overlooking Toronto, at the head of Spadina and Walmer Roads. No description can convey an adequate idea of the size and solidity of this mansion. It has been under construction for two years. Years previous to that, the lodge and stables were erected, stables which in themselves resemble a baronial castle.

When complete the residence will undoubtedly be the most expensive and elaborate to be found in the Dominion of Canada, and will vie with those to be found at least anywhere on the American continent. What the cost will be no one knows, but it will probably be no less than $1,000,000.

The house has become one of the show places of the city, and sight-seers are not considered to have completed their rounds until they visit what is sometimes carpingly referred to as "Pellatt's Folly." Despite these and similar slighting remarks, one cannot but feel an admiration for the conception and execution of the idea.

Where the Money Comes From.

Sir Henry Pellatt's career on the sea of Canadian finance has been marked by ups and downs, but chiefly ups. The buoyancy of Canadian business during the past few years has carried him well forward. While he has not yet been regarded as one of the most wealthy men in the country it is known that he has acquired a very large fortune, and that a number of his ventures have been attended with remarkable success. This is a fact which is not fully appreciated by Canadians, who regard his present venture in the castle building line as a piece of erratic extravagance.

As an example of his success, it may be noted that in purchasing the site of his residence he made a remarkable coup. That was some years ago, when land even as close to the city as the site is was selling, not at so much a foot, but in block by the acre. Sir Henry purchased the entire block from Spadina Avenue west to Bathurst street and from the face of the hill north to St. Clair Avenue, retaining what amounts to two or three city squares for the site of his residence, but sub-dividing the rest and selling it under restrictions as a high class residential district. It is stated that he was able to acquire the land at what figured out at about $3 a foot frontage and that what he sold netted him about $45 a foot frontage. It is now selling much higher than that, some of it perhaps as high as $100 a foot, but in this instance, at least, Sir Henry was willing to let somebody else get some of the profit. It is probable that this single land transaction netted him enough to pay the entire cost of his mansion. And this is not the only real estate deal that Sir Henry has participated in during the last five years.

A Hydro-Electric Opponent.

At the time of his absorption by the Mackenzie-Mann interests, Sir Henry held a controlling interest in the stock of the Toronto Electric Light Co. He had always been very optimistic about the future of this company, and on every recession of the stock had bought large blocks of it. Rumor has it that in the transaction by which the Company was sold to the Toronto Street Railway and allied interests, Sir Henry Pellatt secured a cool million in cash. He was one of the original promoters of the Electric Development Company, and was exceedingly annoyed because the certainty of tremendous profits in this venture was modified by the competition of the Ontario Government with its Hydro-Electric policy.

It is frequently stated that Sir Henry's lack of tact had much to do with the antagonism which developed between Sir James Whitney and the Electric capitalists.

Another financial transaction which illustrates Sir Henry's tactics is said to have occurred in connection with the stock of a salmon-packing industry in British Columbia, known on the stock exchange as B. C. Packers. At a period of dull times, shortly after its organization, the stock of this company fell on evil days. Sir Henry did not know anything about salmon packing himself, but he engaged two experts at a price of $5,000 to visit British Columbia and go into the possibilities of the industry. They reported that the Company was all right. Sir Henry immediately began buying the stock, which was selling around $30 or $40 a share, and before anyone realized what had happened he had a controlling interest in the company. The views of his experts proved well founded, and the stock is now worth several times what Sir Henry paid for it. In this was another mint of money for the venturesome capitalist.

Sir Henry is on the boards of a score or more leading financial companies, and has more or less substantial interests in them all.

Toronto's Food Bill.

Some person with a taste for figures has been working out how much food Toronto consumes in a year. He has arrived at the result that no less than 450,000,000 pounds of food-stuffs are required annually to keep the wolf from the door in Toronto. In this it is figured that no less than 14,257,811 dozen of eggs are included.

While the figure may look large, when it is divided up among the approximately half million citizens, it does not look out of the way. It provides for about 900 pounds per person per year, which is at the rate of about only 2 1-2 pounds a day, which does not seem exorbitant.

It is figured that the value of a year's supply of food for Toronto is no less than $65,000,000.

On the "Boiled Water Waggon."

Toronto has just been having another week on the "boiled water waggon," and, as it turns out, all to no avail. Two years ago, when the intake pipe broke, a large quantity of sand was drawn into the tunnel under the bay. The presence of this sand was demonstrated by the occasional sediment in the water and by a serious amount of damage being caused to machinery. It was suspected, also, that it contained impurities. Finally the Waterworks Department decided that the tunnel would have to be cleaned, and to this end shut off the supply coming through it and asked the citizens to get along on the amount of water that could be pumped through two old pipes lying on the bottom of the sewage-polluted bay, and which have been in disuse for a great many years. One of them is the historic pipe that on one occasion rose to the top of the bay, thereby causing the greatest water famine in the city's history. Though these two pipes have a capacity of 35,000,000 gallons of water a day, they were found to be insufficient, and before the tunnel could be pumped empty of water, to say nothing of getting the sand cleaned out, half the city was without a supply of water of any kind. Naturally, there was a great outburst of indignation. The waterworks officials threw up their hands and resumed pumping through the tunnel, leaving the problem of getting the sand out of it to a more propitious occasion, if that ever arrives. The chief result of the incident was to bring a harvest to the private companies which supply spring water, as a good many citizens through long usage have acquired a distaste for the boiled and chlorinated variety.

Baseball on Again.

The opening of the baseball season finds the fans not any too hopeful. For the first time in history they have been told by the press correspondent at the front that the team is not in shape. Perhaps an explanation of this lies in the fact that there has not been competition among the newspapers in fulsome adulation of the heroes of the diamond. Instead of each newspaper sending a correspondent with the team on its training trip this year, as in former years, only one correspondent, representing all the papers, accompanied the team. On paper the organization does not seem to be as strong as last year. It contains a number of unknown quantities, but under the direction of the popular Manager Joe Kelly may develop into a good fighting machine.

King George Dislikes "Fits."

The King has an intense dislike to trying on clothes and rarely or never does so. Exact models of His Majesty's figure are kept at Buckingham Palace in charge of the chief valet, and on those the King's clothes are fitted.

I.

Dusk had come early in the hill town. The lights in the courtroom were lit, but their radiance was rather dim, so that the shadows were heavy in parts of the room. From the door on the right came a burly officer of the court; behind him shuffled a stooped figure, whose bent head was lifted only for a moment. His name was Waite, and he was to be sentenced for manslaughter. The deputy led him to the enclosure, where he told him to stand. The clerk read in a hurried monotone the formula used.

Judge Stephen, gray with years, keen eyed with long service on the battle-grounds of wits, rose from his seat. He read from the data in his hand, then turned to the prisoner. Slowly his deep voice intoned the facts of the prisoner's trial and conviction, then he passed on to the sentence, and his even voice spoke the closing, sinister words.

As the sentence was given, condemning the prisoner to twenty years in the state prison, the limp figure straightened in the enclosure as if a current of electricity had shocked it into action; the lips parted in a gasp, then, quivering with hate, the sharp voice cut through the silence of the courtroom.

"Curse you! I'll—I'll—I'll get you for that—I——"

The hissing words were choked off by the strong hand of the officer, and, struggling and gasping under the hand that stayed his speech, the condemned man was rushed from the room.

Without a word of comment, serenely the judge named the adjournment of court. With a rush the few spectators left, in sharp whispers, until the hall was reached, discussing the sudden dramatic ending of the long day.

II.

It was twilight when Waite, wrinkled and bent, but fired with new strength by the thoughts of what he had in mind to do, dropped behind the thick hedge near the house of Judge Stephen, now long retired from the bench. Night after night since his release from prison, Waite had scurried out from the city, and watched for the chance he had never forgotten he would have. But Judge Stephen was old, and he seldom walked in the evening, and, too, someone seemed to be always in the house. To-night the chance came, as it always does to those whose ends are good or evil. A carriage rolled down the long driveway, and in the shelter of the hedge Waite listened. The voices were all the voices of women; the judge must be alone.

Silently as the shadows that played about him he slid toward the house, with the great caution of one who knew how much depended on the care with which he played the game, he drew up close to the house. Rising slowly from the rose bushes, he looked in. Through the window he could see an open room, not lighted, beyond that a bright room. As he watched, a figure passed in sight and disappeared.

Waite gasped a little. He had not stopped to think as the years had changed him so they would change the strong, erect form that he remembered standing powerfully above him in the dusky courtroom. In the glimpse he had he saw now a slowly-moving figure, white haired and slightly stooping—he was old. The same thought chilled Waite—he was old. But the thought went quickly. Back came the memory of the bitter hours he had spent in the great prison; the old anger warmed in his heart.

With the skill he had gained through long practice not yet failing, he worked up the window. The warm air met his face, but there was no draught; for that he was thankful. Slowly he wormed himself in, dropping into the room onto the soft carpet without a sound. He could hear the scratch of a pen that did not cease. The judge was writing. Waite smiled a thin, watery smile.

From his hip he pulled out a dark, large calibred revolver. Poising it lightly in his hand, he drew toward the short passageway into the brightly lighted room. Nearing it, he dropped on his knees. Cautiously he moved forward, little by little, and, peering a little outward, he saw the back of the judge. Waite smiled again. Everything was working out for him. A little more to the right, and his revenge would be complete.

He edged over, and raised the revolver in his hand. As he did so, the judge moved, and Waite slid back, ready for the next move of the judge. But the latter did not get up, he reached for the telephone at his side, and called a number. When he began to talk, Waite shivered, then stiffened, then trembled.

The judge's voice went on: "Hello? This the prison? Will you give me the warden's office? Thank you. This is Judge Stephen, Mr. Langley. I have been glancing over some of my old trial notes, and I see that one of the men tried before me and sentenced—Waite is his name—was released on Thursday. While there was no doubt of the man's guilt, I rather sympathized with him, and I would be glad if you could put me on his track. I think I could give him assistance, either with work or financially. He was about 40 at the time of the trial, and I imagine he must be in a bad position. What can you tell me about him? No information? Well, that's too bad. If you do get a line on him, send him to me. Good-bye."

Waite crouched in a trance, heard the judge clear his throat and go on with his writing. In Waite's ears were still vibrating the voice of the man he had just been in the act of killing. The judge was willing to help him, and God knew, he needed the help.

Silently, as a shadow, again he withdrew, worked himself into the soft dirt of the rose bed, and slid out into the night. He pinched himself to make sure he was not dreaming, but he knew he had heard aright. He started down the street aimlessly, his mind revolving over and over the situation in which he had found himself.

A sudden gust of chill wind made him realize the fact that he was hungry, and cold, and lonely, and —old. That was the bitter thought; his old cronies were dead or scattered, or in jail. He was old, and in the busy rush of life, its keen competition, he was useless. Still in the galleries of the detective office his face was hanging, and men who never forget a face, even if changed by the moulding fingers of age, would not forget his.

He had not thought of the next move, but it suddenly dawned upon him that he could get up some excuse to go to the prison, get the message, and go back to the judge.

No more had it entered his mind than he had decided it. He boarded the first car, changed once, and landed at the door of the warden's house. There the stern-faced but kindly-eyed Langley welcomed him into the warm, cozy office. Cautiously Waite led up to his scheme, which was to ask the warden if he could not give him a chance at some work, something he could do to earn enough to live on.

The warned smiled, and went on to tell him what Waite already knew. Waite simulated surprise and wonder, but Langley, pleased at the way the judge's wish would be answered, did not see anything in Waite's attitude that was suspicious.

Back again on the next car Waite went, planning in his mind just what he would say, just how he would act before the man he had been scheming to kill for twenty years.

His courage failed him, almost, as he neared the judge's house, but the creeping cold of the advancing night drove him on; the lights from the house seemed to beckon, and he went up the walk, rang the bell, and waited.

The girl who answered the door screamed a little, and Waite knew why—he wasn't a pretty picture; it made him dread the meeting with the judge. But he had gone so far he could not turn back.

The girl led him in, eyeing him narrowly, and called to the judge. The voice he had heard before answered heartily: "Show him in, Madge, right in!"

Waite followed the swift figure of the girl into the room, and found himself shaking hands with the judge. He did not look up until the heartiness of the voice encouraged him, and then he started as he saw the changes of years. He managed to murmur that the warden had sent him.

The judge pulled up a chair for him. "Yes, I want to give you some little aid if I can," the judge began quickly, and he went on unfolding the plan he had in mind.

As he talked, Waite felt the slow warmth of gratitude begin to thaw the ice in his heart; it was a new sensation to him. The judge's scheme promised him comfort and pleasure until his days were done. As Waite thought of the future that might have been his he shuddered.

When the judge ceased to speak, saying at the close: "Now, how does my plan appeal to you?" Waite could not phrase his thought; he mumbled a few words, and the judge, understanding, stepped over and put a comforting hand on his bent shoulder.

"We've grown old, you and I, Waite, and we want to travel the way that's left us in peace and comfort. You made a great mistake once, but that is past. The years are many ahead yet; we'll live them well."

III.

It was twilight again, but in the judge's study, the night that looked in through the windows was driven back by the cheery open fire. They had become close friends; the criminal found in the lawyer's experience phases of life he had not touched; the judge found in the criminal's life the things he had not reached. In the slow process of the years since the judge had offered Waite assistance in that room, the two men had come to companionship.

Only one thing Waite had kept hidden; the night he had come to kill. Many times, as under the influence of the judge and his friendly surroundings he came to learn of the better things of life, he had felt himself impelled to tell the story. The secret worried him, and annoyed him, but he could never bring himself to the act of relating it.

He was thinking about it as the two sat in silence; the judge smoking and watching the fire. Suddenly, he determined to make a clean breast of it, kill once for all the last feeling that made him dread to look in the face of the man who had befriended him. He pressed his fingers into a knot.

"Judge, five years ago I was in this house and you didn't know it," he said, staring into the fire, waiting with fear for the query that would bring from him the rest.

"On the contrary, John, I did know it," came the answer, and in a tone that was strangely gentle.

"Why,—how——" Waite stopped at a loss.

The judge laid down his pipe. "John, everything was buried long ago between us; yet you and I have known this thing. Let's clear it up. Remember, what took place in the past is past. You and I are old friends, and will be, God grant, here and beyond. Now."

He snapped on the study light, and sat down at the desk, then looked up with a smile. "John, when you were in that other room, looking in here with that revolver in your hand, I saw you. You could have shot me dead and I was helpless. I knew you were a dead shot. I thought of the only way—I called up Langley, and told him what you heard. You went, but I sat here in a chill until I got courage to get up to see if you were gone. And the way I saw you was this—over there on that wall is a mirror. I happened to be looking up, while in thought, and I saw your face come into view."

The judge stepped over to him quickly. "Remember, John, that is past. Even if I did not intend to help you at first, I've been thankful every day since that I did. Sit down, and I'll have the girl bring in something. We'll drink a toast—'To the future — may ours be bright!'"

KUKUHUHUS, CURIOUS RACE.

Little Known of These Inhabitants of New Guinea.

Dr. Bruno Beheim gives the following description of the mysterious and little-known race of the Kukuhuhus of New Guinea: The Kukuhuhus live in a part of English territory through which runs the River Lugehamu and which is situated near the German boundary. This territory is looked upon by the said race as their inalienable birthright, and every usurper is regarded with hostile eyes. No European has been able to meet the Kukuhuhus in their dwelling places. Prospectors and English officials have made repeated attempts to approach them, but their camps were invariably found empty, often with the camp fires still burning.

Many a time have Europeans left presents highly prized by other natives, such as corals, red cloth, looking-glasses, axes, etc., in the deserted camps, in the hope of establishing friendly relations with these people. But on returning to the same places a few days or a few weeks later, although the camp showed recent traces of occupation, such as live cinders and fresh footprints, the goods intended for presents remained untouched where they had been placed.

Other races of New Guinea fear the Kukuhuhus as poison. They have learned to their cost what it means to cross the boundary. Some disappear for all time, while others are found dead, thrust through with spear wounds. The Kukuhuhus, however, do a bartering trade with other natives in the following way: The latter bring salt, earthenware, dried fish, etc., and deposit them in a certain indicated place. They then retire for a few hours, being notified to do so by a curious cry from the distance. The timid mountain dwellers then descend to view the goods offered for sale. If they want them they put down other goods, such as skins, feathers and other jungle produce next to those articles wanted by them. They then retire in turn, and when the way seems clear the coast dwellers approach again. If the latter are satisfied with what is offered in exchange they take the goods put down by the mountain people and go away; if not satisfied they retire again as before with empty hands. These business transactions between wild races show a sense of honor that resembles careful thought.

Dr. Beheim regards the Kukuhuhus as the most remarkable of the ethnological wonders of New Guinea, and he was not successful in discovering the secret of their origin.

Flattery Defined.

Tommy—"Pop, what is flattery?"

Tommy's Pop — "Flattery, my son, is having someone else tell us the nice things we have always thought about ourselves."

Canadian M. P.'s and Their Slips.

Queer slips in pronunciation and quotation are sometimes made by members of Canada's Parliament. The French members, of course, can be easily forgiven their slips with regard to the English language. Sir Wilfrid Laurier says innerent for inherent; Jacques Bureau accents the second syllable of efficacy, and Postmaster-General Pelletier performs the more difficult task of pronouncing mechanism with the accent on the "chan." These mistakes were all noted within a few days, and during the same period there were recorded a large number of equally peculiar pronunciations from the English-speaking members. Carvell, of Carleton, called chaos "shaos." The Speaker perpetrated "rye-gidity," a truly alarming word to issue from the mouth of one who has barred liquors from his table. Wilcox, of Essex, spoke of a "grievyance," and the Hon. Dr. Reid pronounced lacquer "lacure." These are just a few of the howlers.

They serve as an introduction to the best joke of the session, which was the attributing of certain poetry to sacred writ by Carroll, of Cape Breton. It was during the interminable navy debate, and the incident is reported in Hansard as follows:

Mr. Carroll: From the time hon. gentlemen opposite were ten or twelve years of age, from the time they were reading the shorter catechism and some of them eating oatmeal, they must have been familiar with this quotation: 'To thine own self be true, and it must follow as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man.' That is from the Bible."

Some hon. members—"What part of the Bible?"

Mr. Carroll—"Some hon. members have never read the Bible, and never will read it."

Mr. W. F. Carroll, M. P.

the other day, when he referred to the time "when I was Prime Minister." He meant "Postmaster-General," but the House shouted with delight. Almost equally funny was Mr. Carvell's description of a certain large family, to which he attributed one baby of twelve and another of fifteen months. Unfortunately Hansard did not undertake to embalm either his remarks or the uproarious joy with which his colleagues greeted the statement.

Porcelain Heels for Shoes.

Porcelain heels for silk and satin evening shoes are among the eccentricities of fashion which are expected before long. They will be made of Sevres ware. Another novel and none too lovely French fashion is the wearing of strings of pearls somewhat after the manner of the guardsman's chin-strap. The necklace passes under the chin of the wearer from ear to ear. It is sometimes fastened around the ear, but more frequently secured to the hair by a jeweled pin on either side.

Often the Case.

When a girl begins to worry herself sick because she's too tall it's because of some man who's too short.

Mother—No, dear, you mustn't eat any candy to-day. Don't you know it is bad for your complexion? Daughter—Well, I know it makes my complecshun awful sticky, but it washes off.

A man who lisped had bought some pigs, and he asked a neighbor for the use of a pen a few days. "I have juth been purchasthing thome thwine—two thowth and pigth. I want to put them in your pen till I can fikth a plaith for them." "Two thousand pigs!" exclaimed the astonished neighbor. "Why, my pen will hardly hold a dozen." "You don't underthtand me, Mither Bent. I don't thay two thouthand pigth, but two thowth and pigth." "I hear you," said Mr. Bent. "Two thousand pigs! Why, you must be crazy!" And then the lisper gave it up.

How to Broil.

Broiling means to burn or sear, and is applied to the hottest form of cooking known, in which the food is brought into direct contact with the fire, burning being avoided by frequent turning. This quick cooking in the air, which circulates freely about it, gives a delicious flavor unlike that obtained by any other method.

Only those parts of meat which are tender as well as juicy are suitable for rapid cooking. They are found in the loin and round of beef and the loin and ribs of lamb and mutton. Young poultry, fish, small game and birds may be broiled whole because thin in comparison with the size, but meat should be cut in slices not over about an inch and a half in thickness, that the interior may be cooked before the outside has become dry and burned.

In broiling the fire should be the first consideration; it should be almost bright red, and should be near the top of the fire box. A bed of hard wood coals, charcoal or coke is better than coal, as there is less flame, therefore less danger of smoking the meat; a shovelful of either of the latter may be added to a coal fire with the desired result.

Broiled meat may be smoked from two causes—the coal flame condensing on the cooler surface of the meat will deposit a film of coal tar, while the fat flame will cover the meat with a thin layer of burned fat.

In turning or lifting the meat if a fork is stuck into it the juices will flow out and be wasted; if necessary to use the fork it should be stuck in the fat. When sufficiently cooked the meat will be slightly puffy in the centre, and if pressed with the blade of a knife it will feel firm but not hard. When cut it should be pink and juicy; if purple it is still raw; if dry and brown it is over-cooked. In winter, or when the meat has been taken from the ice immediately before cooking, a little longer time must be allowed in which to attain the proper temperature.

Broiled Steak.—Trim off any excess of fat and wipe with a damp cloth. Rub the broiler with a bit of fat. Arrange the thickest part of the steak toward the back of the broiler. At first hold close to the coals. Turn every 10 seconds until both sides are well seared, then turn each half minute. A steak one inch thick will broil in from four to six minutes if liked rare; a little longer if preferred well done. When half done season both sides with salt and pepper. Let a spoonful of butter melt on the hot platter. Hold the steak for a half minute over paper to let sooty fat drip off. Lay on the platter and turn once that both sides may be buttered.

Broiled Chicken.—Singe, split down the back, clean and wipe with a damp cloth. Rub inside and out with a little butter, then sprinkle with salt and pepper. Arrange on a greased wire broiler. Cook with flesh side toward the fire at first. When seared hold a little farther away from the fire. Turn occasionally on the skin side, but be careful, as it readily scorches. A chicken weighing two pounds and a half will take from 15 to 20 minutes; if not well done it will be tough. Transfer to a hot butter and rub again with butter.

Good Recipes.

Chocolate Pie.—One and one-half cups sugar, four tablespoonfuls flour, one tablespoonful grated chocolate, flavor with lemon. Mix well together, then put on stove and thicken with two cups boiling water. Boil for a few minutes. Be sure to keep stirring while boiling. Bake crust and then add chocolate filling. A nice frosting may be made with the whites of two eggs if desired.

Mayonnaise Dressing.—One cup of vinegar, two scant teaspoonfuls mustard, two tablespoonfuls sugar, one-half teaspoonful salt, two teaspoonfuls butter, four tablespoonfuls water, yolks of four eggs well beaten. Stir all together with egg-beater, then put on the stove and cook a few minutes, stirring until thick. When ready to use, thin with sour or sweet cream and pour over salad.

Apple and Nut Salad.—Pare and slice five or six medium-sized apples. Add about one-half pound English walnuts, and a stalk of celery chopped together. Mix with apples and pour over salad dressing given above.

Caramel Filling.—One cup of sugar, one-half cup of milk, a small piece of butter, boil till thick, and stir till cool.

Mock Lemon Pie.—One tablespoonful of cornstarch, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, one tablespoonful of lemon extract, two-thirds cup of sugar, yolk of one egg, two-thirds cup of boiling water, butter size of a walnut, boil till thick and frost with the whites of the eggs. This makes one pie.

Home Hints.

It is said cockroaches will disappear if their happy hunting grounds are flooded with a strong solution of alum in boiling water.

To remove match marks from paint, rub first with a slice of lemon, then with whiting and wash with soap and water.

Wood alcohol will take vaseline stains from wash goods. Soak them a few minutes in the alcohol.

If you have a jabot which is troublecome to iron, baste the plaits before it is washed, then iron and remove the threads. Use fine thread.

After thoroughly washing white potatoes, boil them and put through the "ricer" without peeling. The skins will remain on the ricer, the potato coming through white and mealy.

Place some pieces of glue in a granite cup. Keep this cup in a convenient place in a cupboard or pantry. When you find any article needs a little glue, get your glue cup, add a little hot water and it is ready for use.

When sealing fruit butters or preserves, place a circle of thin cloth on top and sprinkle this with grown cinnamon. The spice prevents mold from accumulating on the fruit.

If you rinse a plate with cold water before breaking the eggs on it, add to them a pinch of salt and then stand where there is a current of air, you will have no difficulty in beating them to a froth.

Hands that are constantly moist need a tonic and should be bathed frequently in salt water or rubbed with a lemon. Some people find relief by dusting the gloves inside with powdered alum before putting on.

Rubber gloves worn for dish-washing and housework should be thoroughly washed before being taken off the hands. In this way they are kept free from impurities and wear longer.

When you want to sew buttons on your boys waistcoats, trousers, coats or underwear follow these directions and you will never have to resew those buttons:—Place your button, take a hairpin (a strong one) and lay across the button, then sew over hairpin. When you have put as much thread through the eyes as they will hold withdraw the hairpin; push the needle through near the button, pull the button up, and wrap the thread several times round between the button and goods; fasten on underside, and your button will stay on until the garment is worn out.

VOUNTEER FIREMEN.

Keewatin Indians Pledged to Help Protect Forests.

Volunteer firemen have on innumerable occasions done yeoman service in protecting life and property endangered by fire in the towns and villages, and even the cities, of the settled part of Canada. In the re-awakening of the public to the danger and loss caused by forest fires volunteer firemen have again been brought into service.

The volunteers in this case are Indians living in the district between Lake Winnipeg and the Hudson Bay, in the area traversed by the Nelson River through, or near, which the Hudson Bay Railway will run.

In the summer of 1911 Mr. J. T. Blackford, chief fire-ranger of the Northern Manitoba fire-ranging district, spoke to the Indians of several bands and induced them to promise to help to prevent fires. In some cases he got them to sign the following pledge:—

"We Indians appreciate the work the Government is doing to prevent forest fires in our district. We pledge ourselves to do all we can to help. We promise to put out our own camp-fires every time before leaving camp. We accept the badges given by the Government as a pledge."

The badges referred to are small maple leaves of metal which can be pinned on the clothing, and the account given by Mr. Blackford of the way in which the Indians received them is interesting. He writes:—"One and all were very much pleased with the badges given them. They pinned them in all sorts of places on their clothing, where each one's fancy thought the most conspicuous place. One man would not take his badge until he had first washed himself and changed his shirt, and then the badge was used as a collar-button or brooch. Hats and shirts were the favorite spots for adornment, but not a few, after carefully polishing them, would fold them in cloth to keep them for some special occasion. A great percentage of them feel that they are thus, after receiving the badge from the Government, constituted minor chiefs and guardians of the forest."

Protect The Immigrant. From Employment Sharks.

A most important move has been made by Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labour, which will result in practical benefits to the thousands of immigrants who land yearly on Canadian shores. For years the immigrants have too often been the prey of unscrupulous employment agencies.

Mr. Crothers received complaints of these conditions and make a thorough investigation. His inquiry showed a shocking state of affairs and although it did not fall under his purview as Minister of Labour he has succeeded in having reforms instituted.

NEW REGULATIONS.

When the Immigration Act was passed by Parliament no specific provision was made to protect immigrants. A section in the act however gives the Governor-in-Council power to make regulations to protect them from employment agencies. Making use of this provision Mr. Crothers in his capacity as acting Minister of Interior has had promulgated new regulations which it is believed will give the newcomer to Canadian shores thorough protection in every respect. The regulations have had the concurrence of the cabinet and will go into force at once. The new rules place all employment agencies having dealings with immigrants under the direct supervision of the immigration branch.

MUST BE LICENSED.

1. That every employment agent must secure and keep posted in a conspicuous place on his premises a license from the Superintendent of Immigration authorizing him to place immigrants in positions. This license is revocable if the holder is convicted of any indictable offence or violation of any of the Immigration Laws or regulations.

2. Every holder of a license must keep a register of all immigrants placed showing rate of wages promised, nature of works to be performed, price for board and all other terms of engagement and this register is open at all times to inspection by immigration officials

3. No holder of a license shall send any immigrant to a position without having a written order from the prospective employer stating the nature of the work, wages to be paid, etc., etc.

No such order shall be filled if over two months old and all such orders shall at all times be open to the inspection of any immigration official.

CHARGE RESTRICTED.

4. No holder of a license shall charge an immigrant more than $1.00 for securing him a position nor for transportation to where work is available any sum in excess of actual cost of same.

5. For violation of any of the regulations above mentioned the holder of a license is subject on summary convicted to a fine not exceeding $100 and in default of payment to a term of imprisonment not exceeding three months.

Mr. Crothers has already arranged for a systematic inspection of the licensed agencies, has assigned the district which each official is to cover the looks forward to an instant and marked improvement in the manner in which employment agencies will be conducted.

DOZENS DISHONEST.

Officials at the Immigration Branch state that in most of the cities there are some reliable agencies who have dealt honestly by newcomers in the past and whose business will not be all adversely affected by the new regulations. They admit at the same time that there are dozens of agencies whose actions have been positively dishonest and which will, unless they radically change, be forced out of business by an enforcement of the new regulations.

Mr. Crothers deserves congratulations from all quarters for the interest he has evinced in affording protection to the newcomers to our country.

PROTECTING JUTE

A Canadian Industry Which Requires Adequate Protection

United States manufacturers of jute yarns, bagging and twine fear that the new Democratic administration will reduce the protection which they have enjoyed. Jute is a long vegetable fibre, the cheapest commercial fibre in the world, grown exclusively in India. It is used to manufacture bags, sacks, twine, carpets, etc., the chief centres of the industry being Calcutta, Dundee, Dunkirk, Hamburg, Vienna, Turin, Brooklyn and Ludlow.

The weaving of jute fabric has not yet been established as an industry in Canada, but jute yarn and fabrics are further manufactured here to such an extent that Canadian concerns supply the greater part of the home market. In the United States, the spinners and weavers of jute are protected by a tariff of 45 per cent. In Canada there is practically no duty on jute yarn and plain jute cloth.

Why should not adequate protection be given to spinners and weavers of jute by Canada, so that large industries, similar to those enjoying protection of 45 per cent. or more in the United States, might be established in this country?—Industrial Canada.

Orchards Threatened.

Apple orchards throughout the province are threatened with an invasion of the apple tree tent caterpillar, according to information contained in a bulletin just issued by the Pomological and fruit-growing Society of the province. The large number of egg masses found on the trees in every section indicate that the damage will be much more serious than that done in former years, unless thorough measures are adopted to control the pest. The serious losses caused by this pest in years past, and more especially last year, have led to the publication of a special circular by the society with the hope that the attention of fruit growers will be attracted to the danger and that all interested parties will avail themselves of the methods by which the pest may be controlled

The adult of this insect is a moth which makes its appearance about the last week in July. The moths are reddish brown in color with two dark brown stripes across the fore wings. The spread of the wings is about one and one-half inches in the female and a little less in the male. On fine evenings just before dark they may be seen flitting about amongst the branches of the trees. They are attracted by lights and are often found fluttering about lamps and lighted windows.

The eggs are deposited on small twigs usually within a few inches of the tip, in compact, ring-like masses of from 200 to 300 each. The moth secretes a resinous substance with which the whole egg mass is covered to protect it from the weather during the winter. The moths after depositing the eggs soon die. In the following spring, as soon as the leaf buds burst, the young caterpillars hatch out and begin to feed on the opening leaves. Later they begin to build a silken tent-like nest.

One of the quickest ways to control the pest is to pick off the egg masses during the winter and spring. The most effective way of controlling the tent caterpillar is by spraying the trees with some form of stomach poison such as lead arsenate or paris green when the insects are small. These poisons may be used by themselves or they can be mixed with bordeaux mixture or the arsenate of lead may be mixed with lime sulphur.

Where regular spraying is done with bordeaux mixture or lime sulphur, to control the apple scab, the addition of two and one-half pounds of lead arsenate to 40 gallons of the fungicide, or ¼ lb. of paris green to 40 gallons of bordeaux mixture (paris green is never used with lime sulphur) will be effective in keeping the caterpillars in check. After the young caterpillars begin to construct their tents, every colony in the orchard may be located and destroyed. It should be remembered that the nest is used only as a shelter at night or when the caterpillars are not feeding. It is necessary, therefore, to destroy it early in the morning or just before sunset or on rainy days.

OUR WATERWAYS

Their Development of Great Interest to all Parts of Canada

The development of Canada's inland waterways should be proceeded with. A pamphlet lately issued by the Great Waterways Union deals with the problem in a comprehensive and convincing manner. Transportation, we are reminded, is the most important material and economic question before the people to-day. Transportation by water on a firstclass highway is not only cheaper than by rail but often much quicker. According to the United States Interstate Commerce Commission, the average cost of moving freight by rail in a recent year was 7.48 mills per ton per mile. For the same year the cost of moving freight by the Sault Ste. Marie Canal route was .84 of one mill per ton per mill, or one-ninth of the average rail rate. The average cost of handling freight by the various water ways of the United States is one-sixth of what it is by the railways. All money spent on the improvement of American waterways has returned to the people of the United States dividends of 100 to 200 per cent. annually in reduced freight rates.

From Lake Superior Westward

In European countries where the people own and operate the railways, the most is made of natural water transportation for the benefit of trade and the general public. In countries, however, where railways are operated chiefly by private corporations, natural advantages are more likely to be neglected. The result of this neglect in Canada is to be seen not only in the inadequate development of water connection from Montreal to the Upper Lakes. It is quite as noticeable in the failure to provide water transportation from Lake Superior to the Western Provinces via the Lake of the-Woods, Lake Winnipeg, the Saskatchewan and other rivers. Were this route developed, not only would it provide for an enormously increased volume of traffic, especially of grain and coal, but it would result in a great lowering of the freight charges by the railways.

Through the Prairies

As to the feasibility of water transportation across the Canadian prairies, Sir Robert W. Perks, of London, England, writes: "Whenever I have been out West I have been struck with the fact that no organized and effective effort has hitherto been made to use those magnificent waterways. I do not know whether you have ever been down the Danube as I have been, and watched the huge flat barges carrying very often 3,000 tons, half a dozen of them in tow of a small tug, and all laden with grain. The cost of carrying grain by this method is infinitesimal; and were a system of this sort adopted in the West, the value to the vast grain-growing Prairie Provinces would be incalculable. Professor A. B. Wilmott believes that a barge canal may easily be built at small expence from Edmonton to Winnipeg, and adds that a similar waterway from Winnipeg to the head of Lake Superior would, if constructed at reasonable cost, indefinitely lower freight charges.

REVIVE FARMING

The Need of Getting In Touch With the Most Progressive Farmers

Mr. Roosevelt has summed up the need for a "revival" of farming in the following words: "The English-speaking peoples, not only in America but of Great Britain and the colonies, must wake up to the fact that for over half a century every wise advance in the line of proper development of farming life has taken place in certain progressive States of Continental Europe. . . . I hope a very full study will be made of the Irish rural situation, because in that country most progressive farmers are reorganizing their business upon lines laid down after a study of the continental agricultural systems I have mentioned." That Canada is in the same position as the United States so far as the need for reform is concerned may be accepted without question. During ten months of last year this agricultural country, which hopes to be "the bread basket of the Empire," imported eleven million dozen of eggs, and millions of pounds of butter. Something is radically wrong when a rich farming country cannot feed itself. Saskatchewan appointed two delegates to accompany an American Commission of Inquiry which sailed for Europe this spring. Every other Province of Canada should be represented as well. The expense is not heavy, and the opportunities for investigation will be exceptionally great.

TOUGH FLOUR

"I wish to complain," said the bride haughtily, "about that flour you sold me. It was tough."

"Tough, madam?" asked the grocer.

"Yes, tough. I made a pie with it, and my husband could hardly cut it."

"Robbed of his good name."

DEAF INDEED

A story of extraordinary deafness was recently related at a meeting of a medical society in Philadelphia. An elderly lady, exceedingly hard of hearing, lived near the river. One afternoon a warship fired a salute of ten guns.

The woman, alone in her little house, waited until the booming ceased. Then she smoothed her dress, brushed back her hair, and said sweetly:

"Come in."

She did not cry out, but the face turned to him was as white as it would ever be in death.

"I see it all now," she said, in a voice that sounded like nothing human. "While that negative, which was proof positive of your guilt, was in existence, fearful lest I should tell my wonderful story to the world, you were willing to make any terms with me to seal my lips. You worked upon my sympathies and my love for you to make me withhold the truth from my poor old father, which would have changed the passing of his dying moments from misery to joy, and I—I trusted in you so blindly. My eyes are open now, and I see how you have tricked, betrayed, fooled me; but it is a just punishment for the folly I stooped to—ay, my sin in betraying my suffering old father for you!" she wailed out sharply, wringing her hands together in an agony of woe.

"Well, my dear, I see you understand the situation perfectly; there is no need of my denying the truth;" and he puffed away lazily at his Havana, adding, with a mellow laugh: "Your father is dead, my dear; it would do no good to tell your little story to the community at large. In the first place, you would not be believed; and, in the second place, you have no proof to substantiate such an improbable tale of my guilt and your father's innocence. You held the winning cards in your hands this morning, but in the end the game is mine; fate has simply euchered you. I am not a marrying man, fair Jessy. I prefer being a free lance. Some one has somewhere said: 'Shall a man who has been free to chase his fancies over the wide world without hindrance tie himself down to marriage without much deliberation? Shall he who has been but a mere observer of other men's cares who are married, moving off where they annoyed him, and approaching whenever and wherever they made him gleeful? Shall he undertake just such cares without a qualm?'"

"Stop!" cried Jessy Carr. "You are adding insult to injury. Stop the vehicle, and permit me to alight!"

He was only too delighted at this turn of affairs. He stopped the cab promptly, noticing that they were within less than half a block of the burned gallery.

He held out his hand to assist her to alight, but she spurned his proffer of assistance as though his aristocratic white hand had been a scorpion.

"Au revoir, Jessy," he cried, raising his hat with a low, profound bow as she stepped to the pavement; but she deigned him no reply, and he heard her mutter below her breath a cry to Heaven to forgive her for her folly—ay, her sin, for believing in him.

He paid the cabby his fee, turned on his heel, and walked away, telling himself that he was well out of the miserable affair, and that it was certainly quite true that the devil never forsook his own, and, last of all, but by no means least, it was lucky for him that he gave Jessy Carr the assumed name of Frederick Lancaster, for it she had known him to be Richard Hamilton, the son of a millionaire, there was no end to the trouble she might have caused him.

"I will marry some pretty little heiress and go to Europe within a fortnight," he soliloquized, lighting a fresh cigar as he sauntered along. "I will remain abroad for some years, returning after this affair has blown over and been forgotten. It was certainly a nicely laid out plan, but—ah, well,

"'The best laid plans of mice and men Gang aft aglee.'"

CHAPTER XXII.

As Jessy Carr walked down the street, half blinded by the bitterest sorrow that ever filled a remorseful soul, she ran suddenly into the arms of Tekla.

"I see you have seen Tim, and know all about the unfortunate fire," she said, pointing to the marked paper Jessy still held clutched in her hand; "but don't worry about it, dear," she added, impulsively, throwing her arms about Jessy. "Tim and I have saved most of the negatives and finished pictures, and all of the cameras—every one of them. I even saved that negative you were just developing—the one your poor father was engaged in taking on—on—that fatal night."

Jessy Carr gasped and reeled suddenly backward, and would have fallen to the pavement had not Tekla's strong, young arm supported her trembling form.

"Where is that negative, Tekla?" she asked, hoarsely.

"I knew that would be the first question you would ask," declared the girl. "Well, the reporter whom you sent out to give broadcast to the world the wonderful news that you had discovered in the negative of the picture your father had taken the form of a man leaping from the window, came back for the picture; as you told him to, and knowing it would please you to give it to him for his paper, I did so, and he took it away with him. He says it will be all in an extra which will be out by three o'clock, and it is nearly that time now, and I saved your tin box full of money, and poor old Polly."

She wondered why Jessy Carr gasped for breath, why her lips fell apart; but no word came from them as though the power of speech had suddenly left her; she could not understand the look of terror in the girl's eyes.

"That is by no means all the news," went on Tekla, breathlessly. "Ever so many people have come to the place inquiring for you, and expressing their sympathy. Why, the very district attorney, Mr. James Van Driscoll, whom you always thought was your cruelest enemy, came here to say that he would be glad to advance you money to start up business again and to relieve the difficulties of the present. I told him you were called away, but would be back by three o'clock. I am to take you to the bakery across the way. The baker and his wife say that you are to stay with them until you decide what to do. The district attorney is coming to see you there at three o'clock. He had no sooner gone than the president of the insurance company came across the way to see if he could do anything for you; he will be at the bakery at three o'clock; and last, but by no means least, a wealthy old gentleman and his proud daughter drove up in their carriage to see if they could be of assistance to you. They left their cards; they are also coming to the bakery at three o'clock. Their names are Mr. and Miss Gertrude Hamilton."

Jessy Carr was too dazed with the shock through which she had just passed to pay any heed to the names.

"Come," said Tekla.

The baker's wife, a kind, motherly woman, received Jessy warmly.

"Come right in, poor child," she said, "and make yourself at home, and remain as long as you like, if it be for days or weeks or months. We shall be glad to have you here; our home is so lonely since we lost our own fair young daughter."

"Do stay, Jessy," pleaded Tekla, in a whisper, as she saw the uncertain expression on Jessy's face. "Do not worry about mamma and Tim or me. Tim and I are going to—to— Well, the truth is, Tim and I are going to be married today, and we will start up a photograph gallery of our own in another part of the town, and mamma is coming to live with us until you want her for a housekeeper again. Now, don't give us your blessing, but give us the parrot instead;" and she quoted the following verse:

"'Oh, parrot, I would cling to thee,
Blessing or curse, whichever thou be,
Forever and forever.'"

"No, no, Jessy!" cried the shrill, cracked voice of poor Poll from an interior room, "she'd better take the blessing."

Just then the sound of prancing horses and clanking chains were heard outside; they had stopped before the door.

"It's the beautiful, proud young lady and her father who were here this forenoon to see you, Jessy," said Tekla.

The next moment they were ushered into the baker's cozy little parlor.

"I have heard of your double misfortune," said the old gentleman, stepping forward. "I have come to you, at my daughter Gertrude's suggestion, to offer you my sympathy in a substantial way."

"Yes," said Miss Hamilton, coming nearer to Jessy and taking the girl's hand in hers, "we wish to help you in this your darkest hour of sorrow and greatest need. We all have need of each other in this world when calamity overtakes us. Take this purse and make its contents your own. It shall be a gift or a loan, whichever you like," she added, as she saw Jessy Carr draw back, her face growing very white.

"You are very good to me. I thank you from the depths of my heart, kind lady," returned the girl, "but I cannot accept it."

"I know why," said Gertrude Hamilton, huskily. "You recognize in me the—the—person whom report said was to marry Mr. James Van Driscoll, the district attorney who conducted the case against your father. Is it not so?"

"Yes," returned Jessy Carr, with emotion.

Gertrude, glancing toward her father, saw that he was looking from the window, therefore not observing them or listening to what was passing between them, and she took a step nearer Jessy Carr.

"Do not refuse my offer of friendship on that account," she said, "for I am no longer betrothed to Mr. Van Driscoll. The marriage has been broken off. I feel strangely drawn to you in your sorrow, Jessy Carr, for I, too, have a heavy heart in my bosom; but mine is caused by the deepest anguish a woman's heart can know—parting from the man I love and was to have wedded. Beneath the cold hauteur you see me assume, my heart is breaking. I never knew how dearly I loved him—and him alone—until we drifted apart."

Woman-like, all in an instant Jessy Carr forgot her own sorrow in listening to her companion's woe. Some subtle instinct which she could not even comprehend herself seemed to compel her to open out the innermost secrets of her heart to this girl.

"It was a difference of religion which parted us," she went on, with a great, deep, troubled sigh. "How strange it seems that the worshipping of the one God in different ways should part two hearts that were born to love each other. It is cruel; it is unjust. Both should give up their religion and live for each other, and live such good, true, beautiful, Christian lives they would be sure of heaven in the end. I would be willing to do so. We have only one life to live; we can not afford to fling away the few blessings that flit like sunbeams across our path."

OCEAN TRAVEL IS SAFER NOW

TITANIC LESSONS HAVE BEEN HEEDED.

Changes Which Have Been Made Following Great Marine Disaster.

Carelessness, negligence and unpreparedness were contributory causes to the loss of the Titanic a year ago.

No longer do passengers aboard ships take risks which might be avoided by a man. No longer do the wireless waves beat in vain on an aerial, the operator of which sleeps. The wireless shall never rest, laws have decreed, while the ship is at sea. No more will a California lie a few miles away, uncertain of the meaning of the flash of a rocket. While one operator sleeps another must take his place.

Lessons Taught.

Lifeboats! There are storms when a navy of lifeboats would be useless. There are seas which steamships must encounter in which no boat could be launched.

But there have been wrecks in calm seas when boats could be launched; when every soul on board the ship might have been saved. Such a wreck was that of the Titanic. Sufficient lifeboats must now be carried to provide places for every person on board.

Rules have been revised, drills have been stricter, and methods of construction changed. In the case of the Olympic, sister ship to the lost Titanic, a new skin has been built in at a cost of $1,500,000.

The ice? Will the giant berg be able to deal death unheralded? Five days ago a United States revenue cutter reached her station in the ice fields to report these dangers. From across the ocean there steamed another vessel bent on a similar errand. The drift of the ice is to be studied carefully. Ocean currents are to be mapped and data is to be gathered on the effects of the ice on the elements.

"The Truth."

One of the survivors was Col. Archibald Gracie, of the U. S. Army, who died last December as the result of exposure. He left a book, "The Truth About the Titanic," which has just been published. The author died before finishing the final chapter.

Colonel Gracie, in collecting the data for his book, interviewed nearly all of his fellow survivors of the disaster. As the result of his research the story told by some of the passengers that the ship's band played "Nearer, My God, to Thee" while the vessel was sinking has been given little credence by the author.

"I did not recognize any of the tunes," Colonel Gracie says, "but I know they were cheerful and not hymns. If, as has been reported, 'Nearer, My God, to Thee' was one of the selections, I assuredly would have noticed it and regarded it as a tactless warning of immediate death to us all, and one likely to create a panic that our special efforts were directed toward avoiding and which we accomplished to the fullest extent."

Negligence Doomed Them.

Dwelling on the proximity of the California to the Titanic when she struck, the author makes this statement:—"The fate of thousands of lives hung in the balance many times that ill-omened night, but the circumstances in connection with the S. S. California furnish the evidence corroborating that of the American investigation—viz., that it was not chance, but the grossest negligence alone, which sealed the fate of all the noble lives, men and women, that were lost."

THE HUMBLE HERRING.

2,900,000,000 Pickled in Europe in a Year.

The humble herring, being one of the most common fish, does not get nearly so much attention as it would otherwise, and people have very little idea of its importance. Some idea of the number of herrings that are yearly caught and eaten in Europe may be gathered from the fact that in 1912 there were 3,623,807 barrels of herrings pickled in Europe alone. To this enormous total Great Britain contributed 2,360,355 barrels, or more than four times the number contributed by any other country.

On an average it is reckoned that eight hundred herrings are pickled in each barrel, so that the number of herrings cured during a year in Europe reaches the enormous rough total of 2,900,000,000. About three parts of an entire year's catch of herrings are put into pickle, though this does not include those which are tinned, kippered, bloatered, or treated in divers other ways.

In spite of the enormous proportions of herring that are pickled in Great Britain, the sale in that country is comparatively small, the chief markets being in Russia and Germany.

Things should not be done by halves. If it is right do it boldly; if it is wrong leave it undone. Every day is a little life, and our whole life is but a day repeated.

SPRING IMPURITIES IN THE BLOOD

A Tonic Medicine is a Necessity at This Season

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are an all year round tonic, blood-builder and nerve-restorer. But they are especially valuable in the spring when the system is loaded with impurities as a result of the indoor life of the winter months. There is no other season when the blood is so much in need of purifying and enriching, and every dose of these pills helps to make new, rich, red blood. In the spring one feels weak and tired—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills give strength. In the spring the appetite is often poor—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills develop the appetite, tone the stomach and aid weak digestion. It is in the spring that poisons in the blood find an outlet in disfiguring pimples, eruptions and boils—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills speedily clear the skin because they go to the root of the trouble in the blood. In the spring anaemia, rheumatism, indigestion, neuralgia, erysipelas and many other troubles are most persistent because of poor, weak blood, and it is at this time when all nature takes on new life that the blood most seriously needs attention. Some people dose themselves with purgatives at this season, but these only further weaken themselves. A purgative merely gallops through the system, emptying the bowels, but it does not cure anything. On the other hand Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new blood, which reaches every nerve and organ in the body, bringing new strength, new health and vigor to weak, easily tired men, women and children. Try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills this spring—they will not disappoint you.

Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

NEW COMPASS FOR WIRELESS

Clever Contrivance Tells Sender Direction of Distant Station.

With the new Telefunken wireless compass the direction of a distant wireless station may be found. To carry this out, the sending post is provided with a certain number of antenna, each of which sends out waves in a certain direction on the horizon, so that by connecting the apparatus on to Antenna No. 1 the waves travel north, No. 2 to northeast, and so one. In reality there are used as many as 16 different points of the compass.

To connect in each antenna in turn there is used a contact drum rotated by an electric motor. A separate antenna sends out a time signal in tall directions. Just after the time signal is sent the drum rotates so as to connect on one antenna after the other. At the distant station the operator has a watch device with a hand rotating around a dial at exactly the same rate as the drum. When he hears the time signal he presses the watch button and the hand commences to rotate. At a given time one of the signals comes in his direction, and here the sound is loudest, so that he stops the watch, and now the hand points to the direction of the other station.

The time of each rotation is one-half minute, and he can repeat the observations so as to arrive at an accurate result. It is said that the method is accurate to within three or four degrees.

Are You Droopy, Tired, Worn Out?

Here Is Good Advice to All Who Feel as If Their Vigor and Life Had All Oozed Away.

This Condition Can be Quickly Cured by a Good Cleansing Medicine.

Your experience is probably somewhat similar to that described by Mr. J. T. Fleming in the following letter from his home in Lebanon: "I think I must have the most sluggish sort of a liver. In the morning my mouth was bitter, and that foul, soft feeling that tells you 'No breakfast needed here this morning.' A cup of coffee would sort of brace me up, but in two hours I was disposed to quit work, all energy having oozed out of me. Supper was my only good meal, but I guess I didn't digest very well, for I dreamt to beat the band. A friend of mine put me wise to Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I think they must have taken hold of my liver, perhaps my stomach, too, because at the very start they made things go right. Look at me now—not sleepy in the daytime, but hustling for the mighty dollar and getting fun out of life every minute. That's what Dr. Hamilton's Pills have done for me—they have rebuilt and rejuvenated my entire system."

To keep free from headaches, to feel young and bright, to enjoy your meals, to sleep sound and look your best, nothing can help like Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c. per box, five for $1.00 at all druggists and storekeepers or postpaid from The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

CURE FOR HEADACHE.

Slight Operation Removes Cause of Disturbance.

Those suffering from violent headaches will be interested to hear that, according to a communication just made to the French Academy of Medicine by Dr. Guisez, the well known Paris physician, a cure has now been found for a large number of cases of this disorder, hitherto declared to be incurable.

Dr. Guisez finds that the frequent and annoying variety of migraine, which starts from above the eyes and spreads, often accompanied by nausea and vomiting, is caused by a malformation of the upper part of the nose, known as hypertrophy of the middle horn, which, under the least provocation, causes congestion and a disturbance of circulation at the base of the brain.

The doctor says he has cured more than seventy cases by a slight operation, the details of which he gave to the academy. He recommends all persons suffering from frequent headaches to have the interior of the nose examined. This communication is considered by the academy to be of great importance.

The Origin of the Heel.

It is said that the heels now worn on shoes had their origin in Persia, where they took the form of flat wood on sandals to raise the feet and protect them from the hot sands. It was many years afterward that this fashion was introduced into Venice, but the reason for its adoption in this case is said to have been quite different. Here the originators of the fashion were jealous husbands, who reasoned that their ladies thus equipped would not venture far outside the precincts of their dwelling. These heels were called "clogs," and in order to satisfy the vanity of the wearers and perhaps to sweeten the pill—that is, the discomfort of appearing in them—they were elaborately adorned, sometimes being encrusted with gold and silver. The height of the clogs determined the rank of the wearer.

DR. TALKS OF FOOD.

Pres. of Board of Health.

"What shall I eat?" is the daily inquiry the physician is met with. I do not hesitate to say that in my judgment a large percentage of disease is caused by poorly selected and improperly prepared food. My personal experience with the fully-cooked food, known as Grape-Nuts, enables me to speak freely of its merits.

"From overwork, I suffered several years with malnutrition, palpitation of the heart, and loss of sleep. Last summer I was led to experiment personally with the new food, which I used in conjunction with good rich cow's milk. In a short time after I commenced its use, the disagreeable symptoms disappeared, my heart's action became steady and normal, the functions of the stomach were properly carried out and I again slept as soundly and as well as in my youth.

"I look upon Grape-Nuts as a perfect food, and no one can gainsay but that it has a most prominent place in a rational, scientific system of feeding. Any one who uses this food will soon be convinced of the soundness of the principle upon which it is manufactured and may thereby know the facts as to its true worth." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

MANY MINISTERS DISAPPEAR.

Nervous Breakdown and Overwork Account for Some.

No fewer than 30 clergymen of the Church of England have been missed since March of last year, with no explanation of their disappearance, according to the experts now engaged in the preparation of the new edition of "Crockford," says the London Chronicle.

An the other hand, 10 incumbents and curates who had been missing from their parishes before they have been discovered by this many-eyed semi-official directory, so that the church has lost in all twenty of its ordained members in the last twelve months.

The compilers of "Crockford" express the opinion that nervous breakdown of hard-worked clerics and disappearances while travelling abroad account for some of the mysteries, while the solution of others has been found afterwards in the transfer of clergymen to the world of business without any intimation having been made.

The list has grown so large, comprising now some 400 missing clergymen, that the edition to make its appearance next month all those who disappeared more than ten years ago are to be taken out.

Were Tried and Stood the Test

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS MAKING A REPUTATION IN THE WEST.

Saskatchewan Man Tells How They Cured Him, After Four Months' Suffering from Backache and Other Forms of Kidney Disease.

St. Phillips, Sask., April 21 (Special).—In a new country, where changes of climate and impure water are among the difficulties to be surmounted, kidney trouble is prevalent. It is the kidneys, the organs that strain the impurities out of the blood, that first feel any undue strain on the body. Consequently, Dodd's Kidney Pills have been well tried and tested in this neighborhood.

They have stood the test. Many settlers tell of backache, rheumatism and urinary troubles cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills. Mr. Otto Olshewski is one of these. In speaking of his cure he says:

"I suffered from kidney disease for four months. My back ached, I had heart flutterings, and was always tired and nervous. My skin had a harsh, dry feeling; my limbs were heavy; and I had a dragging sensation across the loins.

"I consulted a doctor, but, as I did not appear to improve, I decided to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I used six boxes, and now I am all right."

Placed in Front of Counter, Automatically Imprisons Thief.

An ingenious device is the invention of Mr. William Norreys, of Yattendon Road, Horley, England. It consists of a false floor, which may be constructed in front of the counter or whatever other part of the shop or office a thief might be expected to stand upon. This floor, which covers a pit, is supported by projecting pins, which can be withdrawn into their sockets by means of a lever worked by a brass rail on the shopman's side of the counter and running along the whole length of it. The floor being set free to fall, the thief upon it sinks quickly into the pit, alighting upon spring or pneumatic shock-absorbers, that he may not be injured. His weight works another lever, which causes a sliding door to close over the mouth of th epit. The device can be set at night for burglars or safe-breakers, the retaining pins being so adjusted that the false floor will fall under the added weights of a burglar.

ITCHY BURNING ECZEMA ON FACE

Very Bad Case. Little Blisters Broke and Formed Scabs. Thought Would Be Disfigured for Life. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment a Month. Completely Cured.

Cold Brook, St. John, N. B.—"Cuticura Soap and Ointment certainly cured my little girl of a very bad case of eczema. She had eczema on her face for almost two years. First little white blisters covered her face, then those would break and form scabs, and they were very itchy and burning. I used to have great trouble in getting her to sleep at night. She scratched so I had to do all I could to prevent her, for sometimes she would scratch the scabs off and then it would be very sore and burning. She was certainly a great care. I treated her for it and also used different kinds of blood medicine, and ointment but got no cure. I thought she would be disfigured for life.

"It had lasted about two years when one day I saw an advertisement for Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment in the paper so decided to give them a trial. I had not used them for more than a month when she was completely cured. I cannot praise Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment enough. Of course I continue to use Cuticura Soap as I find it the best soap on the market for children." (Signed) Mrs. John Newman, Dec. 30, 1911.

TO GET GREAT HORSEPOWER.

Lay Trial Tidal Plant at Schleswig-Holstein.

Millions of horsepower are going to waste which the sea could furnish us if only some practical way of running a tidal plant could be found, says the Polytechnical Review. The idea is in the air at present and there are several projects in hand which are likely to be taken up before long. One of these is brought out by Engineer Pein, of Hamburg, and he proposes to lay out two large basins on the sea coast in Schleswig-Holstein. Two tidal basins are used and the water takes a swift flow between the basins on somewhat the same plan as has been used on a modern scale and for running as large a plant as the 5,000-horsepower one which he is now designing. Part of the work is already done by a 1½-mile jetty in the sea connecting with Nordstrand island. The basins will have 2,500 and 1,000 acres surface and the height of the waterfall between them is four or five feet, so that with a great volume of water it is possible to run a set of 500-horsepower turbines, ten in number, so as to have 5,000-horsepower. This is only a trial plant, and should it succeed a much greater amount of power can be obtained in this way by using larger basins and in greater number, as the sea will give an unlimited amount of power.

It was never meant that lazy people should reach the top of the ladder—there would be no place for them to sit down.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S PALACE.

Priceless Treasures Lie Buried Everywhere.

From the engineer's camp I followed the course of the old river of Babylon down to the famous City of Nebuchadnezzar, where the German Oriental Society is digging up the records of 4,000 years ago, writes a correspondent. I saw the famous stone lion; the bas-relief of Nebuchadnezzar himself, with his quaint curly beard; the stone goose which was the standard measure of weight in Babylonian grocery stores; the odd tribe of kinky-tailed cats; the thousands of queer dishes, urns, vases, utensils, figures of men and beasts, bath-tubs, bowl-shaped coffins and cuneiform tablets which have been unearthed by the careful Germans. They showed me the magic name of Nebuchadnezzar stamped on numerous bricks, and I walked through the very banquet hall where, peradventure, the handwriting came on the wall at the feast of Belshazzar and "a thousand of his lords." On the perfectly preserved walls of the palace I beheld the strange figures of mythological beasts and the everlasting bull, which held a high place in Babylonion worship. Under German guidance a host of Arabs have toiled—toiled for a quarter of a century—digging carefully, as they dig at Pompeii, not to crack or ruin the priceless treasures which lie buried everywhere. And each day brings some new surprise.

If Breathing is Difficult, If Nostrils are Plugged, You Have Catarrh

At Last a Remedy That Already Has Permanently Cured Thousands.

Perhaps you haven't heard of the new remedy—it's so pleasant to use—fills the nose, throat and lungs with a healing balsamic vapor like the air of the pine woods. It's really a wonderful remedy—utilizes that marvelous antiseptic only found in the Blue Gum tree of Australia.

The name of this grand specific is Catarrhozone, and you can't find its equal on earth for coughs, colds, catarrh or throat trouble. You see it's no longer necessary to drug the stomach—that spoils digestion—just simply inhale the balsamic essences of Catarrhozone, which are so rich in healing that they drive out every trace of Catarrh in no time.

"I look upon Catarrhozone as the most valuable medical discovery of recent years," writes R. V. Potter, of Prince Albert. "As a long sufferer from nasal and throat catarrh I was obliged to take considerable medicine, and, although it helped me, my digestion was always disturbed and the catarrh didn't go away. With Catarrhozone it was different. It cleaned my nose and throat of all phlegm and discharges, enabled me to breathe freely, relieved a stuffy feeling in my nose and frontal headaches. To-day I am entirely free from catarrh, and I use my Catarrhozone Inhaler a little every day in order to prevent the disease from returning."

With Catarrhozone experimenting ends. A permanent curative action begins. Lasting relief from Catarrh results. The large size costs $1.00, last two months and is guaranteed. Small size 50c.; sample size 25c. All storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

GERMAN AIRSHIPS CAN HIDE.

Produce a Vapor Which Renders Them Invisible.

Capt. Faber, M.P., at a recent meeting of the British Navy League in London made some remarkable statements as to the capabilities of German airships. A German officer who had made the voyage, said Capt. Faber, had told him that the vessel had travelled 1,600 miles, remaining aloft twenty-nine hours with a crew of twenty-eight men. This airship could, in case of emergency, produce a vapor which would prevent it being seen and was also provided with a covering which rendered it invisible.

By the side of the helmsman was a map of the country beneath which automatically unrolled as the airship went forward. Moreover, the airship was provided with a camera with a special Goerz lens which, when turned down enabled an accurate view of the country to be taken. Germany has now thirty-eight airships and thirty more on order.

Effective Remedy.

A prominent physician was recently called to his telephone by a colored woman formerly in the service of his wife. In great agitation the woman told the physician that her youngest child was in a bad way. "What seems to be the trouble?" asked the doctor. "Doc, she swallowed a bottle of ink!" "I'll be over there in a short while to see her," said the doctor. "Have you done anything for her?" "I gave her three pieces o' blottin paper, Doc," said the colored woman doubtfully.

The members of the C. Squadron, D. Y. R. C Hussars, (Argenteuil Rangers) will meet for instruction, at the Lachute Armoury every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evening at 7.30 o'clock, commencing on Monday, May 26th, and continuing until the opening of camp June 16th. Sergt.-Major Dee, will be present after the 1st of June. Major S. E. Smith urges members to attend and bring as many recruits as possible.

Quite a furore of excitement prevailed around the C. P. R. Station on Monday last, when the milk shippers refused to comply with the new change of timetable that came into effect, on the 18th. The Calumet Montreal train has during the winter been running at 9.30 a.m. but the new schedule alters the time to 7.40. The shipment of milk from Lachute is very heavy and almost warrants the railway company running a milk train for the accommodation of the shippers. An average of 300 cans is handled here which means a business of $1200 per month, and the farmers rightly feel that they are entitled to consideration. The Montreal Board of Health demand that the mornings milk must be shipped into the city and when it is considered that many of the shippers live a distance of 5, 6 and 8 miles, it is readily understood that, on the part of some it would be almost impossible to cool their milk to meet the requirements of the Board of Health and drive it in for the early train

The result was that on Monday, and Tuesday the men refused to ship by the first train and their milk was taken into the city in box cars. On Tuesday evening, however, Messrs G Curran, A. Amiott and G. Ellison, from Montreal, held a conference with the men with a view to readjusting the schedule, which resulted in an amicable settlement, Mr. Curran promising to try and arrange the train to depart about 8.30 instead of 7.40. The men in the meantime were quite agreeable to ship on the present service until the readjustment was effected, which, it is expected, will be in the course of a few days.

OBITUARY

THE LATE PETER CRUISE.

—: o: —

Death came as a happy release to Mr. Peter Cruise in the early hours of Tuesday morning. The first indication of his illness was noticed about a year ago, and in November last he went to Montreal to undergo an operation for cancer. In spite of the best medical skill, no hope was entertained of his recovery, and it was only owing to his strong physique that he survived so long.

Deceased was a young man in the prime of life, having been born 40 years ago in the house in which he died. A nature, somewhat rough in exterior, but with a heart that was kindly and affectionate, aptly describes the deceased. He leaves to mourn his loss a loving wife and six children, five sisters and two brothers.

The funeral took place yesterday afternoon and was presided over by the Baptist Minister, the Rev. J. F. Forsythe, afterwards being taken over by the Masonic Order, of whom he was an esteemed member. Deceased also belonged to the Foresters, Orangemen and the Oddfellows, which societies were all largely represented. Mr. Cruise was a true patriot and took a lively interest in military life, having been one of the sturdy members of the Argenteuil Rangers and last year serving as Squadron Sergt-Major, in the Duke of Yorks Royal Canadian Hussars, a number of whom were in attendance, as a Military Escort consisting of 20 Rank and File under the command of Sergt. Major H. R. Blair. The gun carriage was drawn by four horses riden by two drivers of Montreal Field Battery. The horse which our late Sergt. Major rode followed the gun which bore its late Master. At the grave a volley was fired by the firing party, in rememberance of his faithfulness and his service to his country.

The floral tributes were many and of great beauty being sent by the different Societies, his squadron, and sympathizing friends.

CHAPTER XXII.—(Cont'd)

Mr. Hamilton had quitted the room abruptly. Some one had called him out into the corridor, and another had entered, standing motionless on the threshold, listening like one fairly spell-bound, rooted to the spot at the sight of Gertrude Hamilton and the impassioned, sobbing words that fell from her lips. Suddenly, as if impelled by some subtle instinct, Miss Hamilton turned slightly, and beheld James Van Driscoll, the district attorney, standing before her.

A cry of consternation fell from her lips. Before she could utter a word, James Van Driscoll said:

"Forgive me, but I could not help but hear all you said, Gertrude."

He looked around—Jessy Carr had silently stepped into an adjoining room—and he was alone with the woman he had loved. For a moment the beautiful head dropped, and a flush suffused her face.

"It is better to admit the truth than to —to suffer a whole life-time from a mistaken sence of pride and duty, James," she murmured, timidly advancing toward him with fluttering, extended hand.

To her great surprise and mortification, he did not accept the hand she extended. His head fell on his breast, and his arms hung listlessly by his side.

"I am not worthy to breathe the same air with you, Gertrude, nor to touch your hand," he said, brokenly. "I did not dream that I should have met you here to-day, or I would have kept out of your way. I—I had written a letter which I intended mailing you to-night. I have it in my breast-pocket; will you take it and read it now, silently, to yourself, in my presence? If, after you have finished it, you will say, 'Good-bye; Heaven comfort you; you have my pity and my sympathy,' I will carry the memory of those words with me until I die. If you have nothing to say, not even one kind word, I will turn from your dear presence and go out into the darkness of my future as bravely as I can."

He handed her the letter, crossed over to the mantel, and stood there with his head still bowed low on his breast, watching her in wonder as she broke the seal, his heart in his eyes.

He saw her gasp as her quick glance traversed the closely written lines of the first page. He saw her face blanch and her eyes distend with horror, and he wished that God in His mercy would strike him dead then and there.

Quickly she turned page after page, reading in unbroken silence the story of his life, which was surely the saddest of any man on earth—read the true story of his parentage, his ancestors, and who and what the woman was to him who had taken from her the diamond pendant —and as she read, her face grew whiter and her hands trembled more pitifully.

Van Driscoll's eyes drooped until they rested upon the carpet, and he kept them there. He knew by the awful stillness that she had finished; he saw the paper flutter to her feet. By a mighty effort he raised his sorrowful eyes and looked at her.

CHAPTER XXIII.

"Gertrude," murmured James Van Driscoll, brokenly, "have you nothing to say to me—not a word?"

Ere she could reply, they heard a great commotion on the street below. Newsboys were screaming "Extra! extra!" at the top of their voices. "Extra! All about the great insurance robbery! Startling capture of the criminal. A well-known millionaire's son and a society man! Andrew Carr's innocence proved at last! Extra! Extra!"

"God have mercy! It is my son Richard—my only son! Where is Gertrude? I must take her away quickly!"

He would have put her gently back when he saw the surging mass of people below, and saw that they were pursuing some man who looked more like a hunted animal than a human being. One glance at his face and he saw that it was Gertrude's brother, even before old Mr. Hamilton had wailed out so sharply that it was his son Richard, his only boy.

By main force James Van Driscoll drew Gertrude, who was half fainting with terror, back from the open window, and gave her in charge of Jessy Carr, who came hurriedly into the room at that moment with one of the extras in her hand. The great, black, glaring head-lines and the picture, which occupied full half of the page, told Van Driscoll the awful truth at a single glance without taking the paper in his hand. Gertrude saw it, too, and her perception was as quick as his own.

"Oh tell me," she cried, springing to Van Driscoll's side and clutching his arm wildly, "is it my brother whom they are accusing of this awful crime?"

How could he find words to answer her? He only clasped her hands in mute sorrow too pitiful for words.

The flying man saw the open door-way, and darted into it and up the stairs, with the mob at his heels, the officers in the lead, and soon found himself, panting and breathless, in the room where Van Driscoll and Gertrude were, and beside them Jessy Carr.

"The game is up, officers," he said. "I have gone the length of my rope, and now I feel the halter tightening about my throat! But you shall never take me to a prison cell!"

In an instant of time, ere they could prevent his purpose, he had plunged his hand into his breast-pocket, drew forth a vial, and swallowed half its contents at a single draught.

Those who gazed were too horrified to utter a word of expostulation. The cry on Gertrude's lips died away in a low gasp; even her poor old father, whom some one had led into the room a moment before, did not cry out, but they heard him mutter:

"Better death by his own hand than a prison cell."

"In a few moments all will be over with me," said Richard Hamilton, "and I suppose I may as well make what you will give to the world as 'my confession' here and now. My time is short. Don't interrupt me, any one of you; wait until I have finished.

"I am very sorry to disgrace my sister, poor Gertie. She was always the best friend I had on earth. I can not say as much for you, father," he added, bitterly, turning and facing the pallid-faced, heart-broken old gentleman who was attempting to comfort his heart-broken daughter. "It is you, sir, to whom I owe my present unhappy predicament. You brought me up in luxury and idleness because you were a rich man, when you should have instilled principles of industry and thrift in my nature. The pocket-money you allowed me in early youth paved the way to my ruin. You should have made me earn what I spent —to know the value of a dollar. You should not have kept a wine-cellar in your house, with wine as free as water on your table, when you discovered my weakness for it.

"You should never have permitted me to lose my self-respect and manhood sufficiently to live upon an allowance furnished by you to keep me from earning my own livelihood, and after you had given me a liberal allowance for years, you should not have shut down upon me so suddenly, leaving me without a cent, harassed by debts and debtors until I turned to crime as the only open door I could see leading out of it.

"But my sin found me out when, after learning from my intimate friend, the president of the insurance company, that they had a safe full of money which they were to pay out the next day, I conceived and executed the daring robbery which the world has just discovered to-day through the photographic invention of old Andrew Carr. But it did me little good, for I did not get away with the money, but in my second attempt of yesterday I was more fortunate.

"This is not the only crime laid at my door. I shot a man who hounded me for a gambling debt one night, and bribed my father's spy, who was following me and saw it, to leave the country. Last, and by no means least, I won the love of pretty Jessy Carr, standing over there, under the fictitious name of Frederick Lancaster, and then, when I had tired of her, broke her heart in throwing her over, instead of marrying her and settling down to a peaceful life of it. But she'll get over her love for a ne'er-do-well like me shortly; women always do. I shall save the district attorney over there the trouble of prosecuting me. It seems to me like the irony of fate, that I, a criminal, came so near to being the brother-in-law of the district attorney who so fiercely hunts poor wretches down to prison cells."

"Come!" exclaimed the officers, gruffly —"come!"

He did not take a step forward, but sunk into the nearest chair, and by force they hustled him rudely from the room. But they might have spared his weeping sister and poor old father this cruel sight, for as they raised him from the chair, they might have noticed, by the awful pallor on his face, that the contents of the vial had done its work but too well. Richard Hamilton had passed away, his soul was before a Higher Tribunal than that of man, to have judgment passed upon it.

The crowd made way for Mr. Hamilton's coach as it drew up quickly before the door.

"Oh, if I might but help you, comfort you in some way!" murmured James Van Driscoll, sadly, as he bent over weeping Gertrude.

For answer she turned and placed her hand in his.

"What am I that I should hold myself better than you?" she answered, with quivering lip—"I, the sister of a self-confessed criminal? My pride has died a violent death; I am humbled to the very dust. We have one and the same sorrow, James. Let us comfort each other as best we can."

"And—and about our religion, Gertrude?" he whispered, anxiously. "In the excitement of the moment you have forgotten that."

"I am willing to give up all religion for your sake, James," she said, slowly. "Would you care to do that for me?"

"Yes," he answered, fervently. "Your love will be paradise on earth to me. We will be sure to get to heaven, no matter what road we travel."

James Van Driscoll drove home with Gertrude and her father, and they took weeping Jessy Carr with them, loving her deeply for the hapless love she had borne Richard.

The same extra which had contained the picture of Gertrude's unfortunate brother contained also an item of great interest to James Van Driscoll. It was but a short paragraph, noting the death of Ann Roundtree on the Island, and giving in full the contents of a short note which was found pinned on her breast, with a note begging the keeper to see that it was printed in all the papers. It ran as follows:

"To My Darling Only Son,—I know the end is coming, and by the time this meets your eyes I shall be free. My one command to you—ay, my last prayer is, not to come and claim me. I can sleep as calmly in a pauper's grave as in a marble tomb; and secondly, never to betray your identity, for your secret will die with me. Keep your wealth and the position which the Lord intended you to do good with, as you value my earnest wish. When you think of your mother, do not remember her weakness or her sins, but only her great love for you, her only son. If you ever come to the spot where they bury me, kneel upon the mound of earth, and whisper, 'Mother, I forgive all,' and though they bury me fathoms deep, I shall hear the voice of my boy—my only boy; a few raindrops will fall from the heavens above, and you will know that they are my tears, that I hear and understand. Good-bye, my noble boy, good-bye."

Van Driscoll bowed his head and wept like a child as he read the printed words, his mother's last message to the son who, by her own command, dared not claim her; and Gertrude mingled her tears with his and comforted him.

Society, with its froth, its glitter, and its gossips, never saw Gertrude Hamilton again after that fateful day. Some few months after she married James Van Driscoll, the district attorney. Neither minister nor priest joined them together; the ceremony was performed by the mayor at the mansion house of the bride, Mr. Hamilton giving his daughter away.

A few weeks later the fashionable world was startled with the marriage notice of Stuart Aldrich, the banker's son, with fair, sweet Jessy Carr.

Gertrude and Jessy became life-long friends. Gertrude and her father, and Jessy and her husband, were the only four who ever knew the sad story of James Van Driscoll's life. The world never knew it, they guarded his secret so faithfully.

The name of James Van Driscoll became a power in the land. He became famous as a statesman; he gave great sums of money to the poor and needy, and founded great shops to give employment to reformed convicts who wished to lead honest lives and find work.

Every one admired his beautiful wife, proud and haughty no longer, but a sweet-faced ministering angel among the suffering and the lowly—a meek and gentle lady, whom the wealthy reverenced and the poor idolized, whose earthly heaven was her husband's love and the beautiful, soul satisfying assurance that he loved her.

No children blessed their union, and Van Driscoll would often say to his wife: "Perhaps it is better so. God is wise, and knows best."

They love to watch Jessy's little daughter, who is named after Gertrude, and they often laughingly warn her against fostering in the beautiful child too much pride.

"There are worse and graver faults," murmurs Jessy, with tearful eyes. "I shall teach her that love must never blind her eyes to duty and justice. I shall tell her the story of my eventful life and of my great temptation at my dying father's bedside.

Charles Max,

Prince Lichnowsky, the new German Ambassador to Great Britain, who recently entertained the King and Queen to dinner, is fifty-three, and the head of an old Silesian family. He is the son of the late Prince Charles Lichnowsky and Marie, Princess of Croy-Dulmen. Some seven-and-twenty years ago he was an attache at the German Embassy in Great Britain.

CONQUERED IN LOVE.

How William the Conqueror Won His Bride.

A modern lover who resorted to brute force to win his lady would soon find himself in the street, if not in the police-station. But fashions in proposals have changed in a thousand years, and when William the Conqueror set out to make Matilda, daughter of the Count of Flanders, the happiest of maidens, he adopted measures that were forcible, to say the least.

The suitor Matilda had she did not want, and the man she wished to woo her, she could not get. The man she did not want happened to be William, Duke of Normandy, and he decided to go to Bruges and conquer Matilda.

There were no national roads through France in those days, and William doubtless had a hard trip. Perhaps Matilda noticed the mud on his clothes when she came out of church and found him waiting for her.

At any rate, William descended from his horse, and taking Matilda firmly by the back of the neck, rolled her over and over in the mire of Bruges, planting well-directed blows upon her royal face and body with his other hand. Life was elemental a thousand years ago.

This strenuous love-making somehow appealed to Matilda. Perhaps it was what she would have liked to do to Brihtric, the gentleman she could not get, who was only the English ambassador at her father's court, and not at all a proper person to be snubbing a princess. So Matilda sent word to her father that, "sick in health and dolorous in body," she had firmly resolved to marry no man but Duke William.

Later, after William had conquered England, he offered his queen the estates of any English nobleman she might name. Matilda did not have to think twice. She not only chose Brihtric's estates, but she put him in prison, and kept him there all the rest of his life—an excellent argument for the wise custom of restricting woman's choice to one year in four.

Egg Shells Are Strong.

Most people are aware of the power of egg shells to resist external pressure on the ends, but not many would credit the results of tests recently made. Eight ordinary hens' eggs were submitted to pressure applied externally all over the surface of the shell, and the breaking pressures varied between 40 lbs. and 75 lbs. per square inch. The average thickness of the shells was 18-1000 inch.

MUSIC TO CURE BALD HEADS

THE PIANO IS SAID TO BE SUREST INSTRUMENT.

Will Put Wig Makers Out of Business—Barbers Are Jubilant.

A European physician has brought joy to the hairless with the announcement that frequent applications of music will convert their heads into luxuriant hair gardens. His announcement carried with it the assurance that if they take up the torture of the piano, fiddle, harp and certain other instruments they will soon be in a position to lend hair to the Sutherland sisters.

Cites Famous Instance.

In support of his discovery the doctor offers the names of Paderewski, De Pachmann, Ysaye, and other noted musicians who are as famous for their hirsute achievements as for their musical ability. It is intimated that famous musicians have been aware of the beneficial effects of music upon the hair for centuries and have jealously withheld the secret from the general public for fear of impairing their trademark. Some go as far as to accuse the original old music masters of taking up their musical vocations for the sole purpose of keeping out of the hard-boiled egg class.

Piano Has First Place.

In crediting the various instruments for the part they have played in accelerating human hair the piano wins first place without a struggle.

That champion piano players have more hair than they can manage will be conceded without further argument. It is impossible to mention any of the famous ivory ticklers without conjuring up pictures of hanging gardens, hay mows and the like. But the piano's claim to distinction as a hair restorer does not rest entirely on the heads of the more famous artists.

On second thought the writer cannot recall ever having seen a bald piano player, piano tuner or even a piano mover. There may be such, but their brightly burnished belfries have never thrown a ray of light across the writer's path. The most careful mental search fails to recall anyone connected with the piano industry who did not require a hair cut.

How Other Instruments Rank.

The flute, clarinet and harmonica are recommended to those who are desirous of acquiring an ordinary crop of hair, the flute being credited with producing floss of the silkiest kind. Instruments that require a great deal of lung power, cornets, trombones and tubas are to be avoided if the owner of a bald head wishes to retain the few remaining wisps of evidence that his face once stopped at the hat band. Wind instruments are fatal to hair, according to the doctor. He points out that the average brass band cannot muster enough hair to stuff a pin-cushion.

The author is conducting experiments with the bass drum to ascertain whether it will be of any use in his hair raising campaign. Experiments conducted thus far convince him that the best that can be expected from close application to the bass drum is a crop of bristles. Not as welcome as hair, perhaps, but preferable to complete baldness any day. It is likely that men who can afford the expense will practice on all the instruments in order that no guilty hair may escape.

Barbers Anticipate Harvest.

Barbers are jubilant over the doctor's announcement. They are behaving like human beings for the first time since the safety razor made its appearance. More hair means more work for them. In order to force the demand for their services many barbers are installing orchestras and graphophones in their shops. Some barbers have announced their intention of giving away harmonicas with every hair-cut.

Mother-Wit.

Walking about the streets of Paris, a Scotch tourist found he had taken a wrong turning, and lost his way. To make matters worse, he could not command enough French to make his trouble known.

Then a happy thought struck him. By dint of signs, he made a bargain with a fruit-hawker for a basketful of gooseberries, and to the amazement of all who heard him, went about shouting:

"Fine Scottish grossets! A penny a pun'!"

This went on for a while, until a fellow countryman rushed forward and asked:

"Man, d'ye think ye're in the streets of Glesca, that ye gang about like a madman, crying grossets?"

"Ech!" replied the hawker, with a sigh of relief. "Ye're just the man I was looking for. D'ye ken the way to the ——Hotel?"

WOMEN FOR FRENCH ARMY.

War Heroine Proposes That They Volunteer as Noncombatants.

Madame Jane Dieulafoy, author, explorer, chevalier of the legion of honor, and possessor of the unique privilege accorded by the French government of wearing male apparel, has conceived the idea of forming battalions of women to aid in the work of re-organizing the French army.

The women are not to fight, so Madame Dieulafoy's scheme offers no opening to the humorist. On the contrary, it is regarded as eminently practical. It is based on her own personal observations, for Madame Dieulafoy fought in the Franco-Prussian war, disguised in a uniform, by her husband's side, and knows what she is talking about.

Briefly, she proposes that volunteer corps of women should be formed to work in the commissary department, the clothing department and other non-combatant sections, releasing the men now employed by these services and sending them to swell the number of fighters.

There are many women, widows, etc., points out Mme. Dieulafoy, whose life is practically over at 40; many young and old maids who have "no object in life." All these would welcome the idea of aiding in the useful work of defending their native land.

The French minister of war, to whom the scheme was submitted, was most encouraging, and a number of women have already signified their willingness to co-operate. Mme. Djeulafoy is now engaged in working out the main lines of her plan, taking the Red Cross Association as a model organization. She will ask that designated women be instructed by commissary officers, and that women be given the opportunity of actual service in this department.

NERVOUS DISEASES IN THE SPRING

It is the opinion of the best medical authorities, after long observation, that nervous diseases are more common and more serious in the spring than at any other time of the year. Vital changes in the system, after long winter months, may cause more trouble than the familiar spring weakness and weariness from which most people suffer as the result of indoor life, in poorly ventilated and often overheated buildings. Official records prove that in April and May neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy and other forms of nerve troubles are at their worst, and that then, more than any other time, a blood-making, nerve-restoring tonic is needed.

The antiquated custom of taking purgatives in the spring is useless, for the system really needs strengthening, while purgatives only gallop through the bowels, leaving you weaker. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the best medicine, for they actually make the new, rich, red blood that feeds the starved nerves, and thus cure the many forms of nervous disorders. They cure also such other forms of spring troubles as headaches, poor appetite, weakness in the limbs, as well as remove unsightly pimples and eruptions. In fact they unfailingly bring new health and strength to weak, tired and depressed men, women and children.

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

INDIA'S MARBLE GATEWAY.

Structure to Mark Spot of King George's Landing.

Lord Sydenham, the Governor, recently laid the foundation stone of the building, the symbolical gateway of India, which is to mark the spot where King George landed on Indian soil on his way to the Delhi Durbar.

The structure will be of shining white marble, and the style of architecture chosen is mixed Hindu and Moslem. The total cost of the building will be about $300,000, of which the Government of India is contributing two lakhs of rupees, the Bombay Government three lakhs, Sir Jacob Sassoon three lakhs, and the Bombay Corporation one lakh.

Referring to the happy combination of the Hindu and the Moslem sty[illegible] Lord Sydenham said he earnestly hoped that this would be of good augury for the advance of the great Indian communities hand in hand towards nationhood under the guidance of British rule.

Old Winter Coughs Now Easily Cured

A New Remedy Now Cures Without the Use of Cough Syrups or Drugs.

Just think of it—you can clear away that hard, racking cough, drive it completely out of the system, make yourself perfectly well by the new breathing cure that employs no medicine at all.

You wonder how; very simple, indeed; you simply breathe in through a Catarrhozone Inhaler rich balsamic essences that heal and soothe away the cough in a few hours' time.

In using Catarrhozone you bathe the lining of the nose and throat with that powerful antiseptic of the Blue Gum Tree of Australia, which is probably the surest cold and cough cure in the world today.

Clarence E. Cromwell, writing from Medicine Hat, says: "To cure a sneezing cold in about ten minutes the one thing I know of to do it is Catarrhozone. To relieve an irritated throat quickly, nothing can excel Catarrhozone. It simply eats up a cough or cold of any kind. I know of colds that have hung on for months that Catarrhozone cured quickly. Nearly every man I know carries a Catarrhozone Inhaler with him day and night, and in this country it makes a wonderful protection against all winter ills."

BABY'S OWN TABLETS USED FOR TEN YEARS

When one medicine is used in a home for a number of years it is the strongest testimony as to the value of that particular remedy. Thousands of mothers have been using no other medicine but Baby's Own Tablets for years—in fact many of them say they would have no other medicine in the house. Concerning them Mrs. Jas. H. THE KAISER'S MAXIM.

Always Do Your Best, Even Though Not Thanked.

In a golden frame on the German Emperor's desk in his study is to be found the following code of ethics:

"Be strong in pain; don't long for what is unattainable or worthless; be satisfied with the day as it comes; look for good in all things; be satisfied with one hour of happiness for a thousand bitter ones; always do your best even though you may not be thanked.

"He who learns to do these things will be a happy man. We must consider every one an equal or superior till the contrary is clear. The world is so great and we men so small; thus everything cannot be happening about us. When we suffer an injury or are harmed, who knows but that it is for the good of creation In everything on earth, dead or alive, lives the great white will of the Creator, only we little beings don't realize it. Everything is for the best in the eyes of the Creator."

Anyway, a man need not fear competition when he is in love with himself.

"So you've been to France, again, Mrs. Comeup?" "Yes; seems like we can't keep away from dear Paris. Indeed, my daughter says we're regular Parasites."

Buildings of Asbestos.

Asbestos plaster, used in the same manner as concrete at the present time, will, so a western construction concern believes, solve several problems. It is claimed not only that buildings constructed of such material would be absolutely fireproof, no matter how hot a fire might be raging on either side, but that the use of such plaster, which is a poor conductor of heat, would save fuel in winter and keep interiors cool in summer. Asbestos is also sound-proof, which is an additional feature of importance, particularly in the construction of hotels, factories and the like.

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS QUICKLY CURED HIS KIDNEY DISEASE.

Marchbank, King's County, N.B., April 28 (Special).—After suffering for five years from kidney disease, brought on by a strain, Hudson Marchbank, Esq., the well-known farmer of this place, is again a strong, healthy man, and another grand cure for Dodd's Kidney Pills has been put on record. In an interview, Mr. Marchbank says:

"About five years ago I hurt my back from lifting, and it developed into kidney disease. My back pained me all the time, and I was very much troubled with headaches. My appetite was fitful: I had a bitter taste in my mouth in the mornings; I perspired freely, and my perspiration had a disagreeable odor.

"I used liniments and plasters, but they did not do me any good, and as there were other symptoms that my kidneys were affected, I decided to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. After using two boxes, my back was completely cured, and my kidneys have not troubled me since."

When Mr. Marchbank decided that his kidneys were the cause of his troubles the rest was easy. Almost any of his neighbors could tell him that Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure diseased kidneys.

Saved Old Boxes for Hobby.

The death has occurred at Surbiton, England, of Thomas Sutton, aged 84, who had made thousands of children happy by converting discarded match boxes, cigar and cigarette boxes, chocolate boxes and tobacco tins into attractive receptacles for sweets and giving them away every Christmas to children of public institutions. Last Christmas Mr. Sutton broke his previous best record for a year with more than 8,000 boxes. Since taking up his hobby he had covered and lined nearly 40,000 boxes, all of which he had given away.

TOMB OF JONAH.

Sacred Place That Visitors Must View From a Distance.

The site of Nineveh is almost perfectly level. But adjoining the western wall are two huge mounds concealing the palaces of the greatest kings of Assyria. The lower or southern mound is occupied by a mosque and a village of considerable size.

Its name is Nebi Yumus, or the Prophet Jonah, for in the mosque is the tomb in which Jonah is said to have been buried. The age of the tomb is uncertain, yet probably it dates from long after the Hebrew prophet's time. However, the place is now sacred, so sacred that pilgrims visit it from afar.

I rode up the steep, narrow streets of the village to the mosque, writes a correspondent of the Christian Herald, and to the amazement of the natives I dismounted and entered the mosque yard. A crowd of excited men quickly surrounded me. To a priest I explained that I had come to see the grave of Jonah, and with a motion of the hand I made it understood that he would be rewarded. Removing my shoes, I followed the priest through a dark passageway.

There he pointed to a wall and said that the tomb was just beyond. I wished to enter the prayer room from which the tomb itself might be seen, but the place was considered far too sacred for my profane feet. However, the few Christians who have been permitted to see the tomb may look only through a small window into a dark chamber in which a cloth covered mound is scarcely discernible. It is said that no Moslem even will enter the inner shrine.

Ever Have Cramps, Nausea, Vomiting?

THEN USE NERVILINE.

A Westerner's Experience Related.

"It's in an unsettled part of the country like our far West that proves how valuable Nerviline is in the home," writes Mr. Patrick M. Dehaney, from Fort Saskatchewan. "Chills are frequent—a hot drink of Nerviline sends life circulating through the body in three minutes. Cramps or sudden illness at night is one of our terrors. No druggist or doctor is near, but if Nerviline is handy you can get relief. The worst cramps Nerviline has cured in my children in half a minute. I don't think any farmer's wife has any right to be without the protection of Nerviline. In our family we use it for a hundred ills, and it cures them all. One night one of my kiddies had earache and another toothache. Without Nerviline no one could have slept—I applied it as directed, and the childrens' pains disappeared. My husband uses Nerviline for lame back, rheumatism, aching joints and all sorts of muscular pains. It is as good inside as outside, and is as much a part of my home as my kitchen stove."

FRANCE LEADS IN AIRSHIPS

Has 48 Different Makes to 47 of Other Nations Combined.

An analysis of the existing makes of aeroplanes and hydro-aeroplanes made by a French newspaper shows that France alone possesses forty-eight compared with forty-seven credited to all other nations combined. Numbers alone, it is pointed out, do not prove much, but the chief records give France also the first place.

The non-stop record has been beaten twenty-three times, three times by foreign machines, twenty times by French. The speed record has been held twice by foreign machines and eighteen times by French. The height record has been beaten twenty-five times, four times by foreign machines, the rest by French.

In the list drawn up America is credited with two makes of biplanes (Wright and Curtiss) and three of hydro-aeroplanes (Burgers-Wright, Wright and Benoist); Great Britain with nine makes of biplanes, eleven of monoplanes and one hydro-aeroplane; Germany with six makes of biplanes, seventeen of monoplanes and two hydro-aeroplanes; France with twenty makes of biplanes, twenty-four of monoplanes and twenty-four of hydro-aeroplanes. The remaining countries do not reach double figures. Italy has nine, Austria, three, Japan, Russia and Switzerland one each.

Bright, Ruddy Cheeks For Pale Girls

No Longer Any Need to be Pale, Weak or Anaemic.

By Following the Advice of Miss McEwen You Can Quickly Become Strong Again.

At night she is restless, she dozes, but doesn't sleep soundly.

Vital force must be increased, new blood must be supplied and a general rebuilding take place before she will feel like she ought.

Dr. Hamilton has invaluable experience in these cases and found nothing so prompt in building up young women as his vegetable pills of Mandrake and Butternut.

Dr. Hamilton's Pills begin by cleansing the system and purifying the blood; they also improve digestion and render food ready for absorption. Additional nourishment is quickly supplied and the patient is fast strengthened and invigorated.

"In using Dr. Hamilton's Pills I find my system is wonderfully built up. It is certainly the most effective remedy I ever used. I have now a good appetite, sleep more soundly, and awaken in the morning feeling quite refreshed.

"Formerly I felt tired and depressed. I looked as if a severe illness were hanging over my head.

All dealers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c. per box or five boxes for $1.00, by mail from The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Ont.

KNEW BIBLE BY HEART.

Wonderful Memory of Presbyterian Minister.

Of the many examples of prodigious memories which have been recorded from time to time none, perhaps, have been so remarkable as the case of Rev. Thomas Threlkeld, who was Presbyterian minister at Rochdale, England, for 28 years and died there in April, 1806, at the age of 67. Threlkeld's memory first attracted attention when he attended the Grammar School at Daventry, where he began to make a close study of the Bible. When a passage was recited to him he could immediately give it, chapter and verse, and, on the other hand, if a chapter and verse were given he could at once repeat the passage.

Both at Daventry and Warrington, where he went to finish his education, his fellow-students delighted in putting his memory to the test, and never once was it known to be at fault.

"In later years," says Mr. Frank Hird, in "Lancashire Stories," "Threlkeld was looked upon as a living concordance to the Bible in Rochdale and the neighborhood, and he was constantly asked the most puzzling questions by his brother ministers, sometimes actually for information, but generally for mere amusement. He was never known to be wrong."

Threlkeld's powers of memory, however, were not solely concerned with theology. He was also a linguist, and knew nine or ten languages, while dates were a passion with him, no matter how unimportant. His knowledge of historic dates, of chronology, heraldry and genealogy was encyclopaedic, and one of his favorite amusements was to go through the succession in the Episcopal Sees and trace the pedigrees of families.

The Senate and Naval Policy.

When the Laurier Navy Bill was before the Senate three years ago, the Liberal majority there brushed aside the objection that the people had not been consulted about it. Its transit through that chamber was therefore smooth and speedy. Senator Lougheed's motion that action be deferred until the bill should be submitted to the judgement of the country was voted down. If in 1910 the Liberal Senators did not feel it to be their duty to hold up the Laurier Navy Bill until the approval of the people should be stamped upon it, they must feel bound to keep their hands off the Borden Naval Aid Bill now. There was no popular mandate for the Laurier Navy Bill. In the general election campaign of 1908 no naval policy or thoughts of naval policy was hinted at by the Laurier Government. Hence in bringing forward his bill Sir Wilfrid proceeded on his own responsibility, and without instruction from the electors. The Liberal Senators did not need to be told that this was so. They were so well aware as everybody else that there was no antecedent pronouncement of the people either for or against the measure. That being so, it must be taken for granted that the majority in the Senate considered it not to be the business of their chamber to raise questions as to the popular will in such matters. The bill having been passed by the House that is answerable to the people, the majority in the Senate evidently felt that it was not its office to interfere. How, then, could the Liberal Senators presume to interfere with the Borden Naval Aid Bill? That measure is in pursuance of a promise expressly, repeatedly, and publicly made by Mr. Borden before the last general elections It cannot be pretended that his Goverament has not the people's sanction for doing exactly what is proposed to be done under the authority provided for in this bill. But even if there were any ground for denying that there is a mandate for the measure, the Senators who voted for the Laurier Navy Bill could not, without shameless disregard for principle, vote against the Borden Naval Aid Bill. They voted for the Laurier Bill, notwithstanding that there was no mandate for it. Hence they cannot but vote for the Borden Bill, even though they feign to believe that there is no mandate for it. In 1910 they acted upon the view that this matter of Government policy was not for them to meddle with. They must surely act on the same view now.

An Inspiring Budget.

Mr. White's budget speech is worth a great deal to Canada. It is not a long deliverance, stuffed with irrelevant or far-fetched matter or with fine-spun argument. We have had many overloaded, over-elaborated didactic budget speeches in the past. The public want brevity and clearness. Mr. White has presented the facts in their proper connection and in the fullest light. He has not troubled the public with his own ratiocinations or vaticinations. But what could be more eloquent than the facts he submitted? The people will dwell upon them with satisfaction and with national pride. Investors in the United Kingdom, in the United States and other countries will regard them with deep interest and with renewed faith in this great Dominion. At the present time, when money stringency is uncomfortably felt everywhere, and when financial houses are revising their lists and marking down credit, it is a grand thing for this country that its Finance Minister is able to announce to the world that Canada is in a state of high prosperity, that her external trade in the last fiscal year exceeded a million dollars in value, that the increment upon the year's trade immediately preceding was almost equal to our whole external trade of 1893, that from the last year's revenue we have $23,000,000 that can be appropriated to debt reduction, and that our total debt is not more than the sum of the revenue received last year and estimated for this year. The effect of such a showing cannot fail to enhance the Dominion's credit rating and make its outstanding issues more valued by their holders. It cannot fail to give to Canadian securities and investment opportunities generally a fresh uplift in the estimation of all who have capital to place.

The Business Outlook.

The business world will find much satisfaction in the reports of considerable increases in the acreage being put under crop in the West. The returns of the 1913 harvest will be of more than ordinary value and interest to the country. It seems probable, in view of the existing money, conditions and the excess of Western real estate speculation in the last two or three years, that the crop money this year will be much more largely devoted to liquidating obligations. The commercial house will be set in order. There has been nothing seriously wrong at any time, but collections, since the stringency forced the banks to tighten their purse-strings, have been somewhat slow. Speculation has been discouraged quite effectively, and it seems rather safe to predict a return this Fall to the policy of husbanding assets rather than a new splurge of speculative enterprise. A height of prosperity and a rate of progress like that Canada has enjoyed, and which last year put Canada's external trade in the billion dollar class, may tempt business men very strongly to crowd on every stitch of canvas. A year ago the banks were complaining that even conservative business houses were asking special credits because of real estate investments —something entirely apart from their business path. Profits from such speculation were much greater than those from regular business. Perhaps it was fortunate for Canada that the Balkan War occurred in time to call a halt to much of such hazardous enterprise. A slight slow-up was the best thing for business all round that could have happened. The Canadian position throughout is sound and prosperous, more so, probably, than the position of any other of the new world countries. It is made so by the growth of the population, and the development of production to supply the new markets thus created. The increase in crop acreage in the West is coincident with a marked growth of mixed farming, and these are the sheet-anchors of business stability.

A very pretty wedding took place at the residence of the parish priest here last Friday morning at 7 a.m. when Miss Lily Hopkins, late of Birmingham, England, was united in marriage to Mr. K. Leipec. The bride's dress being of blue silk. Mr. and Mrs. K. Leipec left for Montreal on Friday morning and returned Monday night.

The Dominion Cartridge Company Gun Club held its regular weekly Practice at the Picnic Grounds on Saturday May 17th and a large attendance of members and spectators watched the shooting. The Club is certainly offering every inducement to its members to become crack shots, the novices being especially well catered for. There were no less than four prizes up for competition at this practice, Mr. Golphin's Prize which is to be awarded to the shooter returning the best score of fifty targets the best ten from each of five practices during May and June to count Mrs. Pasco's Prize for Novices and shot for under similar conditions while the Club put up a handsome silver spoon, Novices being allowed to count each "Dead" bird as two.

A fourth Prize is also put up by the Club for the shooter who makes the longest run without missing over three practice shoots.

The winner of the silver spoon on Saturday was Mr. Wm. Riley who was entered as a novice and with this handicap returned a possible, Mr. A. M. Campbell being Runner Up. Mr. Campbell also returned a possible but fell down in the shoot off.

The Club have now installed a new Western Automatic Trap which is giving every satisfaction and they hope to start shortly with the erection of their Club House, when they will be in a position to entertain visiting teams from Montreal.

Our trapper. Master Leslie Gallery is already quite an expert at the job and there is great joy among the shooters as they have not to wait several minutes after calling "Pull" for the bird to rise.

TOMATO CULTURE.

—:o:—

Almost anyone with a garden or farm in a temperate climate can grow tomatoes with greater or less success but there is a great difference between the extent and quality of the crops grown by different persons in the same locality. These difference are due to several causes among which the varities grown and methods of cultivation practised are perhaps the chief.

According to experiments carried on for years at the Experimental Farm at Ottawa, Earliana, of which there are several strains, is the best early sort but Bonny Best, Chalks' Early Jewel are also good early kinds Of later varities Matchless Trophy, Livingston's Globe and Plentiful rank higher.

It is the early fruit that makes the profit. In growing plants what should be aimed at is the production of a stocky, sturdy plant which will have some fruit set upon it when set in the field. After planting the chief work is cultivation which should be done both ways in the plantation.

In order to protect tomato plants from diseases of which there are several, they should be repeatedly sprayed, even when quite young, with Bordeaux mixture. These and many other points, which cover practically the whole field of tomato culture in the green house as well as in the garden and field, are fully treated in pamphlet No. 10 of the Central Experimental Farm prepared by the Dominion Horticulturist, Mr. W. T. Macoun. This work is for free distribution to all who apply for it to the Publications Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa.

CHINA MAY ATTRACT OUR WESTERN FLOUR

Another Reason Why Our Wheat Should be Milled in Canadian Mills

Men who have spent from ten to twenty-five years in the Orient are now saying that the long-awaited awakening of China is at last at hand. The change that has taken place in the country and people since the revolution is regarded as the greatest that has ever occurred in any nation during so brief a period. Wages are increasing, and if the projected foreign loans go through, there will be further improvement in this resepct. The money will be used largely in the construction of railways, and a higher standard of living will follow.

This will mean a heavy increase in the Chinese consumption of flour, much of which must be supplied by Western Canada. The grain will be ground in this country and the by-products fed to cattle here, there being comparatively little live stock in the Orient. It looks as if the development of Asiatic markets and the opening of the Panama Canal must immensely encourage agricultural and industrial expansion in the Western Canadian Provinces and furnish plenty of traffic for our railways, new and old, which link up the plains via the mountains with Vancouver, Prince Rupert and other Pacific Coast ports.

MAXIMS

No matter how witty the sarcastic girl may be, she never seems to have a lot of friends.

The reason most people are ready to give so much advice is that they are too ready to get rid of it.

She who borrows money borrows trouble, as she will find when the time comes to pay it back.

"Yes, plenty," answered the prisoner hopefully. "$10,000 nearly."

"$10,000!" exclaimed the lawyer delightfully. "Why, you have one of the best cases I've ever come across. My dear sir, I'll see you don't go to prison with all that money."

And he kept his word. The prisoner went there broke.

GETTING READY.

Bocker: Yes; they are bracing up to discharge the cook.

BIG OPPORTUNITIES AT WESTERN DOORS

Winnipeg's Food Supplies Now Chiefly Imported, Could All Be Produced in Manitoba Province

Winnipeg's rapidly increasing population yearly demands more fresh vegetables, more milk, butter, cream, more poultry and eggs; more beef, mutton and pork and other animal and agricultural products. Indeed, so great has the demand become that a remarkable state of affairs exists at the capital of Manitoba, at the present time. Situated in a district—the Red River Valley—which has probably the most fertile soil outdoors, Winnipeg annually imports from the United States and ships from Eastern points, thousands of dollars' worth of these comestibles. The butter receipts at Winnipeg from Eastern Canada and the United States, for 1912 were 68 cars, or approximately 2,000,000 pounds, valued at $560,000. Dressed poultry received in Winnipeg during the same year required for shipment 54 cars, and weighed 1,620,000 pounds, valued at about $243,000. Local creamery companies in 1912 paid $120,000 for milk and cream from St. Paul and Mineapolis alone. Customs returns show that during the fiscal year ending March, 1912, Manitoba imported 1,596,480 dozen eggs valued at $314,121; bacon and hams, 4,988,859 pounds, worth $573,569; 696,788 pounds of fresh meat, not including another 192,939 pounds of mutton and lamb; and 92,709 pounds of salted meats. The figures for live stock show 15,666 sheep and 239 head of cattle imported during the same period. Over 3,500 horses were imported by the province in the same fiscal year. The figures for vegetables imported during the same period are equally remarkable, as follows: Tomatoes, etc., in cans, 238,292 pounds; 18,722 bushels of potatoes, valued at $28,092, and fresh vegetables of other kinds to the value of $76,233. The possibilities in mixed farming and market gardening in the Winnipeg district are almost unlimited, representing an extremely profitable industry in which comparatively few are engaged. Winnipeg for many years will continue to grow faster than the supply of these products, and forms an ideal and easily accessible market, situated in a district of surpassing richness.

The same is true in lesser degree of scores of cities and towns scattered over the prairie. The western Canadian farmer has at his door an undeveloped gold mine, to the appropriation of which the Dominion and Provincial Governments can assist him. The needs of the situation are cheaper money for agricultural purposes, and an increased supply of farm labor.

Maple Cream.—Two cups brown sugar, one-half cup milk (or water and a little butter), boil to cracking point; take from fire and cool a little, then add one teaspoonful vanilla. Beat well and pour into tins, adding chopped walnuts. One cup of maple sugar added to the brown sugar, when making, is delicious, but the brown sugar flavored with vanilla makes a good substitute. This cream is nice formed into balls and used as a filling for dates, or with halved walnuts and figs, cut in two.

Caramel Cream.—Mix four ounces icing sugar, two ounces ground almonds, white of one egg to a stiff paste, form into balls and press half a walnut on each side. Let harden. Make ready a syrup of two cups granulated sugar, one-half cup water, one teaspoonful cream of tartar. Boil until a light brown color, then dip the caramels in it, coating them well. Let harden again.

RECLAIMS A COUNTRY.

A Dane Planted the Marshes and Moors With Trees.

Denmark has made a national hero of Capt. Enrico Mylius Dalgas, the man who saved and remade the country by watering the desert and by planting the marshes and moors with trees. How it was done, Mr. Henry Goddard Leach has told in McClure's Magazine.

In the disastrous war of 1864, Prussia wrested from Denmark much valuable territory. The soldiers of Jutland, trudging over the black and barren heath, home to their untilled farms, encountered a thick-set figure in riding-boots that stalked across the moors with a spade over his shoulder. On nearer approach, it proved to be young Captain Dalgas of the engineers, already a veteran of two wars.

When his late comrades in arms had returned his greeting with the discouraged complaint, "It is a bad, bad day for Denmark!" Captain Dalgas replied, "It is. But what has been lost without can be won within!" and he pointed earnestly toward the desolate heath that stretched to the horizon as unbroken as a desert. "In your time and in mine," he said, "we can turn that waste into forest and farms, and win back more than we ever lost to the Prussians."

The enthusiastic dreams of the young engineer has been made to come true. Failing to get government aid, he formed the Danish Society; he pumped water from distant rivers, and let it run over the heath; he introduced fertilizers, burned off the heather, persuaded farmers to convert the heath into plowland and pasturage, planted timber-producing trees, and went up and down the country addressing mass-meetings and schools. At last the government lent its aid.

The result of the work of Captain Dalgas is that a new Denmark greets the traveller to-day. These forty years have doubled and tripled the wealth of the Danish nation. Railroads and highways are cutting the heath; new buildings and towns are rising everywhere. Tree-planting gives work for the destitute; the moor is peopled by families; the valuation of certain townships has risen one thousand and five hundred per cent. And it is not the reclaimed land only that has been improved by the planting of forests, for the woods have softened the climate and increased the fertility of the whole peninsula of Jutland.

OUR LETTER FROM TORONTO

WHAT IS ENGAGING THE ATTENTION OF THE CITIZENS JUST NOW.

Will Mayor Hocken's Proposal Bear Fruit?

—Wants City to Buy the Railway and Electric Light.

Mayor Hocken took the people's breath away by his bold proposal to buy out the Toronto Street Railway and the Toronto Electric Light Company. As he put it in his first announcement, it might have been supposed that the Companies had come forward with an offer, but there is little reason to doubt that his Worship himself took the initiative. The plan is still a long way from completion. At best, the negotiations will be long drawn out; there will be misunderstandings, criticisms and suspicions, and altogether the proposal has a rocky road to travel before it can reach the goal aimed at. But the incident, as far as it has gone, serves to show the Mayor at his best. He has large ideas and courage. If in such an important juncture as the present one, he exhibits also patience, shrewdness and sustained driving force, he will take rank as one of Toronto's best mayors.

Nearly everyone admits, as far as the Toronto Railway Company is concerned, that it would be a splendid thing for the city to purchase it if, and the "if" is a pretty large one, it can be secured on proper terms. As for the Toronto Electric Light Co., there is less unanimity, for the reason that the Toronto Electric Light Co. is in competition with the Hydro Electric scheme and has a contract with the Electrical Development Co., which complicates the situation. The purchase of the Electric Light Co., however, would free the local Hydro Electric Commission of a serious competitor and bring to the city a great quantity of new electrical business. In fact, well-informed persons say that the business retained by the Toronto Electric Light Co., is the most profitable part of the electric business in Toronto.

Dangers of Monopoly.

To offset this, however, customers are not altogether delighted at the prospect of the electric business of the city passing again into a monopoly, even if that monopoly is the city itself. Competition between the Hydro and the Toronto Electric Light Co., from the customers' standpoint, has been entirely satisfactory so far. It has cut his rates in two and resulted in an immense increase in efficiency. Whether these tendencies would continue under a municipal monopoly would require to be demonstrated. Certainly the monopoly ought to be able to reduce costs by the prevention of duplication.

Up to date the question of terms has scarcely been discussed. The prices which have been mentioned are purely tentative and will doubtless be the subject of long consideration if negotiations proceed. It may be said that if the city pays $160 a share for the stock of the Toronto Railway Company, which has recently been selling at less than $140 a share on the market, it will not be getting any bargain, particularly if at that price it does not secure the entire assets of the company.

Toronto's Traffic Troubles.

However, the traffic situation has, year by year, become more intolerable. Great new suburbs are being flung out on all sides of the city, caused by the rapid increase of population, amounting to 30,000 or 35,000 souls a year. These suburbs the Toronto Railway Co. refuses to serve with cars. Apparently, they figure that the people have to use the cars anyway, and that even if they have to walk half a mile or a mile to reach them, the railway will get its fare anyway, and it may as well get the fare for a short run as a long one. As a result the city has been obliged to build short spur lines in various outlying sections for local traffic. These stub lines cannot immediately be made profitable, but the worst feature about them is that persons who use them have to pay two fares to get to the centre of the city. The Street Railway Co. is also scientifically and systematically starving its service on existing lines. It uses no more cars than it can possibly get along with, with the result that there is overcrowding at almost any hour of the day, and every day of the week, including Sundays. Of course the Railway Co. is entitled to run its service as economically as it can for the purpose of making as much money as it can while its franchise lasts. That franchise will expire in eight years, eight years which the Mayor describes as years of perspective misery, which he wants to avoid.

Mayor Hocken was the originator of the scheme of "tubes." This was voted on some three years ago, but the ratepayers thought the time was not yet ripe for such an ambitious enterprise. Even yet the Chicago traffic experts who were recently engaged to make a report on the transportation system, declare that underground railways are unnecessary if only the surface system could be made efficient.

The Telegram's Opposition.

The most violent opponent of the proposal to secure even permissive legislation so that negotiations may be carried on has developed in the Telegram newspaper. The announcement of the scheme not only took the Telegram's breath away, but it has been gasping ever since. The ostensible reason for the Telegram's violent opposition is that the scheme does not contemplate playing fair with the Hydro Electric, but Mayor Hocken and the others who are trying to get somewhere ought to be the last to display any enmity toward that scheme. The Telegram, for many years, has had the reputation of running things at the City Hall, and no doubt has a wide influence with the electors. As an illustration of its manner of warfare, it attacks the schemes as a plot to enrich the Grey Nuns of Montreal, who are supposed to hold some shares of Toronto Railway. Or, again, it shows William Mackenzie holding the gagged and bound Adam Beck against a circular saw in what it calls "The Great Sawmill Scene."

The Hydro "Mutiny."

Dividing interest with the Mayor's big scheme of municipal ownership has been the mutiny in the local offices of the Hydro Electric Commission. The acting General Manager, Mr. Sweany, with ten of his department heads, addressed Council in a remarkable letter, asking that the head of the Commission, Mr. P. W. Ellis, should not be re-appointed. The result of this communication was that Mr. Sweany was immediately discharged. The ten department heads then wrote another letter, declaring that they had acted on their own volition and not because of any intimidation on Mr. Sweany's part. The result was that they also were discharged. Afterwards, however, a number of them apologized and were re-employed.

It has not been made very plain on the surface what the trouble has been all about. Mr. Ellis is a respected citizen of undoubted ability, and the worst that is said about him is that he is inclined to be fussy and exacting. This may have made it uncomfortable for the employes of the department at certain times, but the consensus of opinion is that Mr. Ellis has given the city good service.

On the other hand, those who have had business relations with Mr. Sweany speak very highly of him and regard him as a very capable man. They were surprised when they heard that the Commission had two months ago declined to appoint Mr. Sweany, who is an American to the permanent General Managership, but had appointed an engineer from England to take the place. Neither in this case nor in the controversy over the purchase of the railway and electric light corporations has the discussion taken any politically partisan form.

Nine-Year-Old Fire Ruins.

The ninth anniversary of Toronto's great fire has passed and still the ruins are not all cleared up yet. The viaduct and Union Station delay are responsible. Toronto lives in hope that before many more years have passed these enterprises will take form. With the new Union Station and the new Customs House and perhaps a new $3,000,000 hotel, the Front street ruins will be entirely obliterated.

J. L. Hughes Resigns Again.

After many years of attempted resignations it seems that Chief Inspector of Schools, James L. Hughes, is at last to retire from municipal service. He is one of Toronto's most picturesque figures and his departure from the school system will leave a gap. His successor, Mr. R. H. Cowley, is very little known here, though he has had a wide experience in educational matters throughout the Province. Mr. Hughes says he is the best man in the country for the position. He knows because he trained him himself, and what Mr. Hughes says in Toronto generally goes.

THE 13 SUPERSTITIONS.

Traced Back to Biblical History or to Man's Calculation.

What is the foundation of the "thirteen" superstition? Why is it, now that we are fully started in the year 1913, that the superstitious are becoming more and more weighted down with the burden of their inexplicable fears? For they are unexplainable—no one can tell you just why they are in such dread of the number if you press them for a reason.

Neither is it in English-speaking countries that the date is a fateful one. You can trace it in France, where the Minister postpones the publication of the names of a new Cabinet, that the list may not appear on the 13th of the month.

You meet with it in Germany, too, where even Bismarck would rather sacrifice a dinner than make one of thirteen at a table. Again, you can come across the same superstitious terror in Switzerland, in Italy and in the Scandinavian countries. You find it on the Stock Exchange, and even in gay, cynical Paris it creeps out when a holiday starts on the 13th and half the people stay shame-facedly at home.

An English expert along statistical lines, says the Chicago Tribune, has recently compiled some valuable information on this queer but interesting subject. The superstition, traced back to antiquity, is thought to have its foundation in all Scandinavian countries in mythology. Their ancient gods and goddesses apparently loathed the number, but back of that none can go.

As for the reason in England, two explanations are offered, though probably not one person in a thousand who cherishes the delusion can really tell them. One authority ascribes the whole tradition to the ill-luck thought to be associated from the fact that 13 sat down to the Last Supper.

But why any blighting or pernicious influence should result in mankind from that solemn gathering no man or woman of any sane mind has ever been able to say. Though there are scholars who explain the terror by pointing out that since Judas, who was the first to quit the table, hanged himself, the superstition has come down through the ages since then.

But there is another and more definite reason for its origin, which was only reached after a long and laborious search on the part of a number of learned men. "The superstition," they say, "that where a company of persons amounts to thirteen one of them will die within the twelvemonth afterward seems to be founded on the calculations adhered to by the insurance offices, which presume that out of thirteen persons taken indiscriminately one will die within the year."

Apparently, the superstition comes from a ridiculous deduction from Biblical history, or from the chance calculations of some forgotten insurance man's computation, whose theory would probably be upset in five minutes by a modern authority upon life averages of healthy individuals

Policeman's Fifty-Year Job.

An inquisitive member of the British House of Commons was struck one day by the presence of a policeman in one of the lobbies. He wondered why this particular lobby should always have a guardian strolling up and down, and made inquiries. The records of the House were searched, and it was found that 50 years previously, when the lobby was being decorated, a policeman had been stationed there to keep members from soiling their clothes. The order never having been countermanded, the constable had kept his beat for half a century.—London Chronicle.

Cut Rates.

"The wisest man may change his mind," said the ready-made philosopher.

"Yes," replied the undesirable, "but there isn't as much in it as there used to be. I can remember the time a voter could get $2 every time he changed his mind."

WHY NOT LIVE 200 YEARS?

Man Only Animal Not Living Eight Times Period of Maturity.

Nearly all specimens of animal life on this globe, except man, live, under normal conditions, about eight times the period of their maturity, or that time it takes them to attain full growth.

A horse, dog or cow, that will obtain its growth in four years, will live about 32 years. This rule applies especially to all anthropodial and quadruped specimens.

Man matures or gets his growth at about 24 years of age. Measured, therefore, by the scale of all other animals, he ought to live eight times 24, or about 200 years; but reckoning from the age of 6, man dies at a fraction over 40, which, on this reckoning, is about one-fifth his natural period of longevity; while, if we take into our calculations children under 6, including the infant class, it brings man's period of longevity in all civilized countries down to about 37 years.

Man drinks the same water and lives under the same sunshine as his brother animals. He differs from them mainly in his food, quantity of fresh air and exercise, which are the three fundamental laws governing all forms of life. It is fair to assume that man is no exception to the general rule governing all other animals, and that if he did not commit some very grave error in maintaining life he would live his normal period of years, as probably did his very ancient ancestors.

INTERESTING STORY OF CANADIAN COMPANY'S DEVELOPMENT.

The Russell Motor Car Company has had long experience in the selling and manufacture of cars. Starting as agents for other makes of cars, this company proceeded to build up a plant in Canada, manufacturing cars in this country. Some of the parts were purchased abroad; others were designed and manufactured at home. The amount of home manufacturing steadily increased. In 1910 the adoption of the Knight Motor gave a further stimulus to the business and the company found it necessary to provide in a strong manner for future developments of the industry. Developments in mind were the further adoption of the sliding sleeve in opposition to the poppet valve motor; the adoption of left-hand steering and centre gear and control; the adoption of electric lighting and self-starting.

Early in 1911 a corps of engineers was set to work to develop a car that would be worthy of "Russell" reputation. In September of that year they were ready for a preliminary report, and taking advantage of the unusual opportunity, engineering co-operation and advice, a conference of engineers passed upon the preliminary plans. These were then worked out in further detail. In January, 1912, this conference met a second time, there being present representatives of three of the foremost manufacturing firms in the United States and two engineers from Europe, from factories operating under the Knight license. After the designs had passed this stage, experimental cars were built and submitted to exacting tests, upon the bench in the factory and upon the road. Following this, a small number of demonstrating cars were put through, to discover any further points of difficulty.

Then came the careful preparation of exact tools for manufacture so that each piece would be an exact duplicate of a similar piece in any other car. These provisions, one after the other, have been carried through. To-day the Russell Company is delivering cars designed under the most advantageous conditions of engineering and manufactured with a view to the requirements not only of 1913 but 1914 as well.

The Russell car of this year is a model on which there will be no important change for two seasons at least.

Sheep Carry Packs for Months.

All sorts of animals are pressed into service as beasts of burden in various parts of the world. In Tibet, for instance, sheep and goats are used as pack-animals, and a flock of these animals, well loaded, journey from there to the Rampur Fair, in India. The hardy little beasts take over a month on the long and arduous journey, traversing on the way several high passes. Once in India and their loads delivered, they are kept in the plains during the winter and then sent back with a stock of grain for Tibet and regions on the border where foodstuffs are scarce.

Made of Matches.

A French artist, M. Amiot, has lately exhibited a collection of articles made entirely from the ends of matches picked up in the streets of Paris. He weaves his material in a design, spreads the backs of the matches with gum, and presses the whole firmly together. M. Amiot has made several vases in this way, and an excellent model of a violin. In the latter, which, says the Strand, has movable pegs and strings, there are no fewer than fifteen hundred matches.

Mrs. Welford's Secret

The photograph had been passed round. Mr. Welford had simply grunted, and Flora had murmured a disparaging remark which made her brother redden. It was left to Mrs. Welford to examine the girl's portrait with kindly interest.

"And who is she, Harry? A new friend of yours?"

"Oh, I've known Miss Field quite a long time now."

"You must tell us some more about her next Sunday. You've only just time to catch your train."

"Next Sunday," he announced jerkily, "you'll be able to see her for yourself. I thought of bringing her over. In fact, Dorothy and I—we're engaged."

"Good gracious!" exclaimed his sister amusedly.

Mr. Welford dropped his book, and sat upright.

"Hey! What nonsense is this? Why, you're not making nearly enough for two to live on."

"I hope to do better, father, very soon. If you can see your way to put that extra money into my business, I'll be able to carry out much bigger jobs."

"Engaged—you! It's ridiculous. Not a word about consulting me, either, I notice. You seem to have taken everything for granted!"

"Surely it's a matter, father, which chiefly affects me?"

"That's right; tell me to mind my own affairs! So that's your attitude, Henry. Well, you can try and borrow the cash somewhere else. You don't get a penny more of mine."

Mrs. Welford laid a restraining hand on her son's shoulder. He suppressed the angry retort on his lips.

"But it's quite safe, father; and you get good interest."

"Very likely; but let me hear any more of this rubbish about being engaged and I'll trouble you for that fifty pounds I lent you last year."

"George, you surely wouldn't—"

He swung round to his wife.

"Mother would naturally find excuses for him," commented Flora, with a faint sneer.

It was his father's unreasonable demands and overbearing ways that had led Harry Welford to leave home and live in lodgings. He had long regretted, too, his mother's position in the household. She was considered of no account whatever. A quiet, uncomplaining little woman, she was bullied mercilessly by her husband and daughter, but bore it all in meek acquiescence.

"What does Miss Field do for a living, dear?" she asked, leading her son into the hall.

She's a school-teacher."

"Ah, well, nobody can say anything against——"

Mrs. Welford broke off rather confusedly.

"Bring her," she whispered, with a backward glance, "bring her to see me. You needn't mind what other people think, Harry."

"I don't," he responded, bending over her. "If you like Dorothy that's all that matters. And you're sure to!"

On the following Sunday afternoon, his fiancee would have created a favorable impression upon anyone not already biased against her. Mrs. Welford awaited them anxiously; but, the moment Dorothy Field entered, she approved her son's choice.

Flora, however, offered an icy greeting; she was evidently jealous of the visitor's looks. Mr. Welford grumbling that he had been disturbed from his usual after-dinner rest, made no efforts at civility.

"So you're the girl who's silly enough to think you're going to marry Henry! I suppose you're aware how much he earns a week?"

"I'm ready to wait for him, though. He knows that."

"Wait! Yes; and a precious long wait it'll be!"

"I'm sorry you don't approve," Miss Field stammered.

Harry Welford was standing, with clenched hands, in the background. His father laughed at sight of his indignant face.

"Well, I'm a plain man, and always speak my mind. If my wife chooses to make a fuss of you, that's her look out. Perhaps you wouldn't be quite so friendly with her if you knew that once upon a time she——"

Tea-time drew near. It proved an uncomfortable meal. The visitor was evidently hurt at the coldness of her reception. Her natural cheerfulness vanished. She was soon dispirited. Once her lips trembled ominously but Mrs. Welford pressed her hand under the table just in time.

As soon as possible the engaged couple left the house for a walk.

"Do you wonder, Dolly," Harry Welford asked resentfully, "that I couldn't stand that sort of thing any longer!"

When they had come to a seat on the common he turned to her impulsively.

"My father seems determined to make things as difficult for me as possible. It'll be a hard job to repay him his fifty pounds, but I'll manage it somehow."

"Yes; that'll be best, I'm sure."

"Still, I'll have to give up my idea of enlarging the business; and that means my income can't get much bigger."

Dorothy Field began to comfort him.

"All my plans upset, though! I'd hoped in a year's time, if things went well, that we could choose a nice house, and furnish it."

"It's you I want, not the house," she reminded him.

"Would you actually marry me now, and live in two or three rooms somewhere?"

"If—if you'd ask me," assented Miss Field, from his shoulder.

Before the end of the evening everything was arranged. At her gate they parted.

"I only hope you won't be sorry, later on, Dolly."

"That depends upon you, sir."

"I'll let my mother know," he whispered. "She'll always be on our side."

Mrs. Welford, indeed, encouraged him in taking the all-important step.

"I feel certain you'll never regret it, my boy. If hard times come, you can face them together. And I'll come and see you both—not too often. Oh, I know you wouldn't like that! But——"

"As often as ever you can! How have they been treating you at home lately?"

"It's difficult," explained the little woman carefully, "when I take your part."

The date of the wedding was fixed at last. Her husband and Flora invented various excuses for not attending the ceremony.

"And I—I simply daren't!" confessed Mrs. Welford regretfully. "I'd never hear the last of it. But there, you mustn't talk about missing me! You'll be far too busy and excited."

With considerable difficulty, Harry had already returned his father's fifty pounds; but the payment left him very short of money, and their honeymoon could only consist of three or four days at the seaside.

"If you think I mind, you're greatly mistaken," Miss Field assured him. "Very likely we'd only have spent more than we could really afford."

"Mother!"

"Saw it all, Harry," declared Mrs. Welford breathlessly. "Yes; you see I decided to come, in the end. And I don't care what your father and sister say! Somehow, I couldn't lose the chance of wishing you happiness and—and luck, my dears. When your boy gets married, it doesn't seem fair, does it, to have to stop away!"

"You can just imagine how glad we are to see you."

"But don't let me keep you now. There are other people wanting to talk to you. I'll just look on, and—" She had to raise her handkerchief. "Bless you both! That's all."

She drew aside and waited. It was Dorothy who turned towards her at the church door. She was waving good-bye to them, and trying to smile.

"You must drive back with the others. Oh, yes, please!"

Just before they left for their short journey, her daughter-in-law took her apart.

"You know I haven't any parents of my own; and I've often wanted a mother very badly. Harry and I—we've talked about you a lot; and I know you aren't a bit comfortable at home. Well, what I want to propose is——"

The bride conquered her nervousness, and laid a hand on the elder woman's arm.

"Need you stop with them? Can't you come and live with us? We've only this first floor as yet; but there's plenty of room for you."

It was some time before Mrs. Welford could speak. Even then she hesitated.

"Did Harry suggest it? Your own idea, really? Then," she said shakily, "that—that makes all the difference! I quite believe Harry would have me, but you might have objected, Dorothy, and very naturally, too."

"You'll accept, won't you? If you don't, I'll be awfully disappointed."

"Oh! I—I wondered if you'd possibly ask me! I did so hope you would!"

"That's settled, then. You're going to stay."

"The fact is," admitted Mrs. Welford pitifully, "I dreaded having to go back. I had a few words with them both before I came out to-day. I contradicted—argued. I disobeyed my husband—for the very first time. I've never dreamed of doing such a thing before."

She glanced up apprehensively; but the girl patted her shoulder.

"They've always been selfish and unkind, haven't they?—although, perhaps, you won't admit it. They don't want you, anyhow; and we do. Tell them that! Bring your things along here; and when we get home on Friday we'll expect you to me here and welcome us."

The elder woman nodded, with shining eyes.

* * * * *

It was Mrs. Welford's invariable habit to read the "Personal" column of the morning paper; and thus she saw the message which both her son and daughter-in-law failed to notice. She gave no explanation before her trip to town; but after her return from the solicitor's office she made an announcement which caused great excitement in the little household.

"Money left to you, mother? Well, fancy that! It's the first time I knew you had any rich friends. Who is this Mrs. Sturtevant? You've never spoken of her, so far as I remember."

"She wasn't exactly a friend, Harry," explained the little woman hesitatingly. "This is my secret—the secret I have kept for years. Your father knew, of course; and he has often taunted me with it. Not that he'd have let it out. He's always said he would soon anything happened than that people should know, and look down on him because his wife was once a—a servant."

They waited while she composed herself to continue.

"I was Mrs. Sturtevant's maid for twelve years—till your father married me. Once I nursed her through a terrible illness. Now, it seems, she hasn't forgotten. You don't mind very much, do you? You aren't ashamed because I——"

At their laughter she was reassured, and gave a hand to each.

"I was half afraid you might be. It's quite a lot that she's left me in her will. I'll put it into your business, Harry. I'll be a partner in the firm, if you've no objection."

"Why, mother, that'll be a tremendous help! I'll be able to go ahead now, and we'll soon be coining money. Dolly, that house of our own isn't so far off, after all."

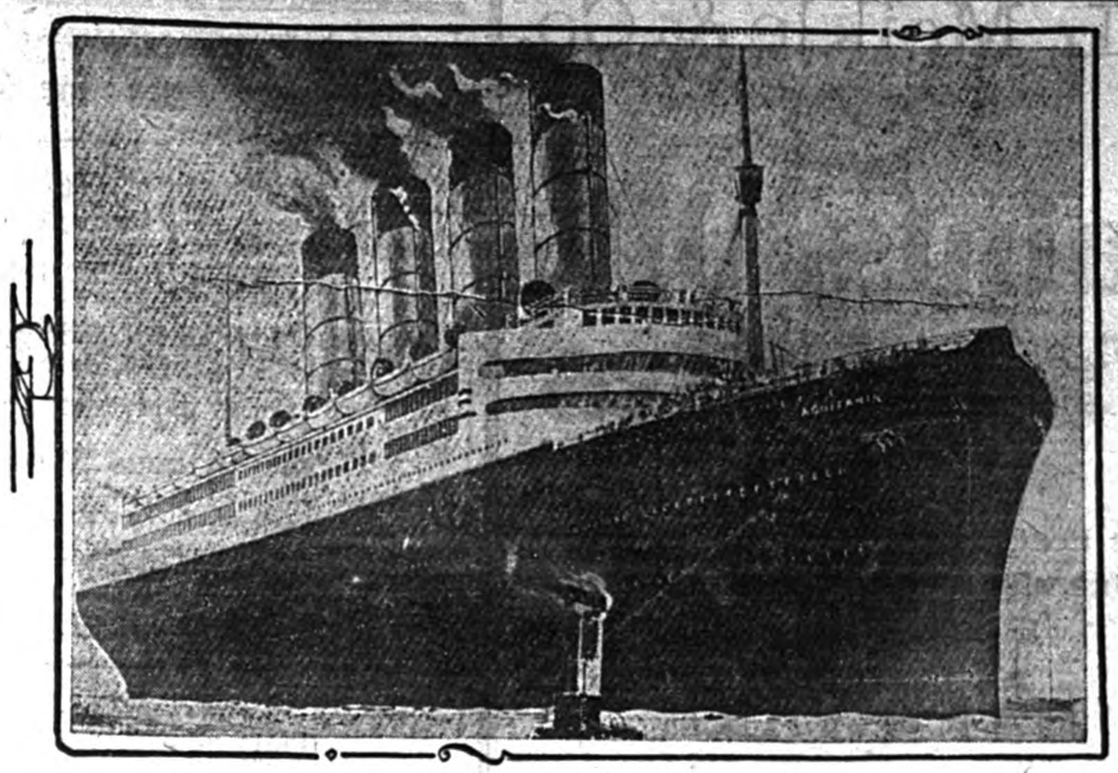

"I'm glad," returned his mother softly.

Nowadays her husband and daughter are greatly annoyed; they think Fate has treated them very badly, because no share of Mrs. Sturtevant's money has reached them, as it might have done.

But above all they are jealous by reason of another fact altogether. There is a certain atmosphere in Harry Welford's home, especially now, since he has become a proud father, which is entirely lacking in their own.

Old Mrs. Welford has made her grandson her heir; and there is one statement which she is never tired of relating:

"I've never been so happy in all my life!"—London Answers.

INTEREST PAID IN DATES.

Land Mortgage Recorded in Time of Artaxerxes I. of Babylon.

A farm mortgage is probably the oldest of all human transactions which could be called investments—that is, the putting away of sums of money more or less permanently for the purpose of deriving from them fixed rates of interest with adequate security says the Financial World. Mortgages are known to have existed very generally among the ancients back even of Greek and Roman times. Mr. Hilprecht, the Assyriologist, found some years ago in the ruins of the Babylonian city of Nippur a brick tablet on which in cuneiform was recorded a land mortgage. The land in the soil of which this tablet was found is known to have been occupied in ancient times by a banking house which made loans of all kinds, including mortgages.

A translation follows:—

"Thirty bushels of dates are due to Bel Nadin Shun, son of Marashu, by Bel Bullitsu and Sha Nabu Shu, sons of Kirebti, and their tenants. In the month of Tisri (month of harvest) of the 34th year of King Artaxerxes I., they shall pay the dates, thirty bushels, according to the measure of Bel Nadin Shun, in the Town of Bit Balatsu. Their field, cultivated and uncultivated, their fief estate, is held as a pledge for the dates, namely, thirty bushels, by Bel Nadin Shun. Another creditor shall not have power over it."

It will be noted that this document, which is trust deed and note in one, is a first mortgage, as shown by the final sentence. Another creditor shall not have power over it. A specific place, as well as time, for payment of the debt, is provided, just as our modern mortgages or mortgage bonds state that principal and interest are "payable at the bankers" or some other house. Marashu Sons, of Nippur, lived in the reign of Artaxerxes I., in the year 464—424 B.C., and Darius II., 423—405 B.C. Many of the cuneiforms examined showed that the firm executed leases with terms and conditions as to security differing little from the modern instruments now used by mortgage bankers.

One wonders, in speculating on these revelations, whether the ancient Babylonians also had their money-trust problems, Pujo Committees, Rockefellers, Carnegies, Morgans, and other billionaires on the one hand and political critics of the Roosevelt type on the other, who went gunning for the throne of Artaxerxes or Darius, much after the same fashion of to-day. Such reflections lead one to project his astral imagination into the distant future and look to see whether, a few thousand years hence, say about the year 5013, some genius of that day may be seen going poking about the ruins of our civilization and digging up a mortgage or two, showing that a Morgan or a Rockefeller, or their successors, had just made a loan on the last piece of property in the world left unencumbered. Who knows?"

Beasts Spread Diphtheria.

Forms of diphtheria are known to exist in many animals. Calves suffer from a form of it which infects human beings. They have a habit of licking those who pet them and spread the disease that way. Chickens, too, are often attacked by the disease, patches appearing in their mouths similar to those in the throat of a child. Children are always ready to pet sick animals of all kinds, and this is a source of great danger.

Seasonable Recipes.

Asparagus Rolls.—Cook half bundle of green asparagus tips or finely sliced sprue (asparagus) in salted water, and drain on a sieve. Put them in a stew-pan with a few mushrooms and two slices of ham or tongue, also cut into fine shreds. Blend well and mix with bechamel or veloute sauce, season with salt, pepper and a grate of nutmeg and keep hot. Cut three-fourths very small dinner rolls in half, scoop out the crumbly part of each half and dry them crisp in the oven. Fill each roll with the above mixture, coat the top with white sauce, besprinkle with bread crumbs and grated cheese. Place a small piece of butter in the centre, and put in a hot oven long enough to brown the surface. Dish up on a folded napkin, and send to table hot.

Asparagus Pudding. — Scrape, clean, wash and drain a bundle of green asparagus, tie it up and cook in salted water until tender. When cooked drain the asparagus and rub the tender parts through a fine sieve. Melt about two ounces of butter in a stewpan, stir in three ounces of flour (sifted), cook a little without browning, and add by degrees about three-fourths of a pint of hot milk, in which a bay leaf and a piece of mace have been boiled. Stir over the fire for several minutes, then let cool a little and work in one by one four yolks of eggs, season with salt and pepper and a pinch of red pepper. Whisk the whites of eggs to a stiff froth, and incorporate lightly with the mixture alternately with the asparagus puree. Three parts fill one or two well-buttered pudding molds, cover well with buttered paper, and put them in a saute-pan containing a little hot water. Steam thus in a fairly hot oven for about an hour. Unmold the pudding onto a hot dish, pour over a well prepared lemon sauce made partly from the asparagus water, and serve.

Tomatoes a la Chasseur. — Take six large, ripe but firm, even-sized tomatoes, six or eight preserved mushrooms, chopped parsley, a little cream, six small eggs, six tartlet crusts (baked) to serve tomatoes on. Wipe the tomatoes, remove the stems, make an incision on the stem side by means of a plain one and three-fourths inch paste cutter, and carefully remove the pulp without breaking the skins of the tomatoes. Chop the mushrooms and sprinkle these with chopped parsley at the bottom of each hollowed out tomato. Place them into the tartlet crusts, which should be made to well fit the tomatoes. Break a small fresh egg into each tomato; upon this put a dessertspoonful of cream and tomato pulp (the batter being rubbed through a sieve, mixed with the cream and suitably seasoned with salt and pepper). Sprinkle a few drops of dissolved butter in top of each tomato and bake in a gentle oven from five to six minutes, just long enough to poach or set the eggs. Serve hot as a supper dish or vegetable savory.

Green Peas a la Paysanne.—Shell and cook one quart of green peas in salted water and drain them. Peel and chop finely half a small onion, fry it in an ounce of butter a pale golden color; to this add two ounces of cooked lean ham, cut into dice. Dredge with a little flour (say a teaspoonful), stir over the fire for a few seconds, and add a quart of cooked green peas. Season with a pinch of sugar, grated nutmeg, salt and pepper; moisten with two tablespoonfuls of good stock, simmer gently for ten minutes, stirring occasionally. Dish up and serve hot.

Stuffed Tomatoes in Aspic—Take six even-sized, ripe and firm tomatoes, four filleted Gorgona anchovies, one hard-cooked yolk of egg, about one pint of aspic jelly, one dessertspoonful capers, mayonnaise, two cabbage lettuces. Wipe the tomatoes, carefully scoop out the centre by means of a vegetable cutter or a teaspoon. Chop the capers, yolk of egg and anchovy fillets, mix with a gill of mayonnaise and a gill of aspic, stir over the ice until nearly set, then fill the cavities of the tomatoes, cover with a spring of parsley, and put on the ice to set thoroughly. Coat each tomato several times with half-set aspic, or line some little molds with aspic and set the tomatoes in the same. Have ready the lettuces, washed and divided into small pieces, season with salt and pepper, dress with mayonnaise, and put in the centre of a dish. Arrange the prepared tomatoes round the salad, garnish with sprigs of parsley and blocks of aspic jelly. Some lobster or any other kind of cooked fish may be used for the stuffing in place of the anchovies.

Green Peas with Ham.—Boil and drain a quart of young peas; shred finely two rashers of raw ham, and fry them for a few minutes with a small piece of butter. Add two small, green onions, finely chopped, and the peas; moisten with three tablespoonfuls of bechamel sauce, two of cream and season with salt, pepper and a pinch of sugar. Let all simmer for a few minutes longer, turn out on to a hot dish, garnish with fried bread croutons, and serve hot.

Useful Hints.

Potato parings, baked in an oven, will light more quickly than wood when used to kindle a fire.

To keep the light of oil lamps clear, the burners should be boiled every month in water with a lump of soda in it.

The white of an egg, whipped stiff, with a ripe banana makes a delicious cream to be eaten on a simple gelatine pudding.

Apples can be stewed with a little left-over canned fruit, such as blackberries, and the result will be a pleasant change.

Sash curtains of Swiss muslin hemmed by hand are less likely to pucker when washed than when hung up on the machine.

It pays the housekeeper to get the best bedsprings and mattresses in the market, even if she has to economize somewhere else.

Test potatoes by cutting in two and rubbing the cut surfaces together. Then press the two parts together. If they stick the potatoes are good.

When nailing down a carpet after the floor has been washed be certain that the floor is quite dry, or the nails will rust and injure the carpet.

Any one troubled with rats or mice can get rid of them very quickly if they will sprinkle pepper on a cloth and stuff this into the hole where they appear.

Large patterns in tablecloths are less economical than small ones, for the simple reason that the long threads break sooner than the short ones.

To preserve the appearance of wooden utensils wash them directly after they are used, because if grease and dirt are allowed to soak in it may be impossible to remove them.

In pressing silk or satin, do not use a very hot iron nor dampen them. Lay some clean, dry muslin over the seams and press with a warm iron.

To overcome the odor of mould, which sometimes rises in a library in damp weather in spite of the best of care, scatter a few drops of oil of lavender on the shelves, and the odor will disappear.

Eating too quickly is a common fault among children who are hungry, and the habit should be checked from the first, as indigestion will result from "bolting" the food, and when once the seeds of this miserable ailment are sown there is scarcely ever a complete cure. Even at the expense of a little inconvenience and trouble it is well to watch the children at meal times, and to teach them to eat slowly.

Sometimes during the spring cleaning operations a good piece of furniture is bruised. If the injury is severe a cabinetmaker should be consulted, but where the wood is only dented, and not broken, the mark can generally be removed by home treatment. First wet that part with warm water, then double a piece of brown paper several times and place it over the bruise; now press with a heavy warm iron, leaving it on the paper until the moisture has evaporated. If one application is not successful it must be repeated.

HOW HE LIVED TO BE 102.

England's Oldest Barrister Recommends Physical Exercise.

The oldest barrister in England, Mr. W. A. Gordon Hake, of Brighton, who is a cousin of the famous General Gordon, celebrated his 102nd birthday recently. For fifty years Mr. Hake has lived at No. 3, Old Steine, Brighton, one of the four houses built in the reign of George III., which, with its cobblestone front and old-fashioned windows, is an object of much interest in the town. Furnished in the early Victorian style, it never reveals after sunset a light of any sort.

Such is Mr. Hake's vitality that he has recovered from a serious attack of bronchitis. He is the second resident of Brighton within a few years to attain the great age of 102. He attributes his long life to plenty of physical exercise and abstemious habits.

Here is a little sidelight on Mr. Hake's fondness for long walks:—

"I was a great stickler for the etiquette of my profession," he says, "It was the law of existence. By the rules of our profession we were not allowed to ride in a public conveyance. Not being able to afford a postchaise unless three or four joined me, I have often walked thirty miles rather than break through the rules."

CHAPTER I.

Mr. Bousfield was a bachelor, and had arrived at the somewhat mature age of sixty-five without having ventured into the toils or pleasures of matrimony. In early youth, his extreme shyness had prevented him from mixing much with the fair sex, or deriving any great enjoyment from their society. Later on, however, came a desperate love-affair, which set flame to his virgin heart with a vengeance. He adored a fair-haired, blue-eyed deceiver, who, after promising to be his wife, eloped with a dashing Guard's-man, exactly a week before the time appointed for the wedding to take place.

This behavior disgusted Mr. Bousfield with womenkind. He never would look at another woman all his days, and, although he admitted that there were a few good ones about, he declined to run the risk of putting in to a lottery, where prizes, in his estimation, were decidedly the exception.

His father died when he was comparatively a young man, and at the age of eight-and-twenty Mr. Bousfield found himself possessed of an income not far short of six thousand a year. One of his first acts was to purchase the house in Bryanston Square, in which he had ever since continued to reside.

He was a man of simple tastes, and for sport he cared nothing whatever. He saw no pleasure in galloping after a little red fox, and breaking one's bones; or in dangling a fly to coax salmon that never rose, or even in bringing down a real good rocketer. They had no fascination for him. Indeed, he went further, and almost pitied those for whom they offered an attraction. But he thoroughly enjoyed a game of whist, and his love for that pastime was all the more remarkable, because, in spite of the practice he had, he was a very indifferent player, and invariably got sworn at, for ignoring his partner's lead.

Each morning at half-past nine, punctually to a minute, the grey-haired butler sounded the gong for breakfast. At two o'clock he thumped it for luncheon, at half-past seven for dinner. His duties were performed with the precision of an automaton. What he did one day, that he did the next. Every action was methodical and regular. He had a certain hour for laying the cloth, another for taking it away, one for bringing the coal-scuttle, another for removing it. In short, an excellent servant who knew what he had to do, and who did it. But if the slightest extra call were made upon him, that entailed any deviation from the usual routine, then he lost his head completely, and collapsed into a state of hopeless muddle, pitiful to behold.

As with him, so with the cook, the housemaid, and the coachman.

They had been so many years in Mr. Bousfield's service, and had grown so accustomed to his ways, that nothing less than an earthquake or a miracle could have shaken them out of their own particular little narrow groove.

Mr. Bousfield had but one fault in the eyes of his domestics. He was neither a bad-tempered master, nor yet an arbitrary, or, worse still, a stingy one; but he was excessively precise, not to say fidgety. If he came downstairs of a morning and found a single chair out of its usual place, or a cresse in the tablecloth, it made him quite miserable, and offended his eye in the most grievous manner. The culprit received a reprimand on the spot, and was requested to be more careful in future.

It is not exaggerating the case to say that Mr. Bousfield's love of order was remarkable. A pin, a bit of paper, or a piece of white thread on the floor, were to him like red rags to a bull. He was bound to go at them. Some impulse forced him to bend his by no means pliant back, and seize the pin with his fore-finger and thumb, and stick it in the little pocket-pincushion he always carried for the purpose; and to roll up the paper or thread into a neat ball, which he carefully deposited at the back of the grate.

Number 115 was not exactly what might be called a cheerful mansion. Its owner did not approve of innovations, and the modern style of decoration. His furniture was all solid, the dining-room mahogany, the drawing-room rosewood, upholstered in red damask. Heavy velvet hangings depended from the windows. There were no flowers or white curtains, no frills and ribbons and draperies to be seen. Everything was plain, severe, substantial, and dark to a degree. As might have been expected, the general effect was very gloomy. Respectable, no doubt, but then is it wise or even judicious to sacrifice grace, beauty, art, to an ugly and depressing respectability? Could not respectability be made attractive, and don brighter colors?

Such was the inward query of the only young creature in that dull, methodical household. He had lived three-and-twenty years in the world, and was full of suppressed wishes, vague longings, and desires that seemed never destined to be satisfied.

And the odd part was, all the other inmates of the house, saving only himself, appeared perfectly contented with the grooves, which to him was so intolerably narrow, small and confining.

His uncle, Smith the butler, Mrs. Bridget the cook, all of them got up of a morning, ate their three hearty meals, went through the accustomed round day after day, and as far as he could judge, were quite happy. Why was not he happy too? What was wrong in his composition to make him so deadly tired of the same eternal routine? The tete-a-tete breakfasts, the good advice, the daily discussion of the newspaper and political arguments, followed by the hateful toddle down to the club, and the equally hateful one back again (for his uncle insisted on his playing whist, though he loathed it). And to crown all, the solemn dinners, and the awful three hours of double dummy that succeeded them, and which in themselves were enough to addle any few wits it had pleased the Almighty to bless him with.

It was stagnation, not life. He longed for the society of his fellow-creatures, and to indulge in those amusements natural to youth.

Instead of which, almost ever since he could remember, he had been the sole companion of an elderly gentleman, possessing many excellent qualities, no doubt, and who was neither aggressively selfish, nor yet actively disagreeable, but who, nevertheless, was foolish enough to expect him, in all things, to have the same tastes, views and ideas as himself.

It was ridiculous, simply ridiculous, and ran counter to the laws by which human nature is governed. The bud is not the leaf. It must be allowed to imbibe the rain and the sun shine before it can expand and come to maturity.

The gulf between twenty-three and sixty-five was too great to be bridged over merely by word of command, and this fact his uncle either could not or would not realize.

What cared he, Harry Hopperton, about pins and bits of thread on the carpet? They were nothing to him. They did not throw him into a fever of agitation. On the contrary, the sight of them failed to make his heart beat one stroke the faster, and, as far as he was concerned, he would have let them lie there till Doomsday, or until the housemaid chose to brush them away.

And yet, because Mr. Bousfield always made a point of picking the wretched things up, he was expected to do likewise, and to have inherited the same remarkable love of order. But he had not inherited it: quite the reverse, and there were times when poor Harry felt a terrible hypocrite, and despised himself for the part he played. Yet he dared not offend Mr. Bousfield, or refuse to conform to his wishes.

He had not a farthing of his own, and might have starved long ago had it not been for his uncle's bounty. Mrs. Hopperton, Mr. Bousfield's only sister, lived to regret her imprudent, runaway marriage with Harry's father. He turned out a worthless spendthrift, with nothing but his good looks to recommend him, and soon ran through a fortune, which at best was only small. Bailiffs seized his belongings, and what was left of the wreck had to be given up to creditors. Then came want, discontent, misery, debt, and finally death.

Two years later Mrs. Hopperton died also, broken both in health and in spirits. She left behind her one only child—our hero—Harry, who had no means whatever of support.

At this juncture Mr. Bousfield came to the rescue. The old saying that "blood is thicker than water" held good.

Although at that period he was forty-two years of age and detested the very sight of anything noisy, destructive and juvenile, he did violence to his bachelor feelings, and introduced Harry, then a boy of seven, to the orderly establishment in Bryanston Square.

And though Harry hated the life he led, though he detested its dreary monotony, and the various restrictions laid upon him, it can easily be understood how many and excellent were the reasons which prevented him from rebelling too openly, or displeasing his uncle by any overt act of disobedience.

To do him justice he had concealed his sentiments so well that, up to the time when this story commences, the elder man had no suspicion of the glowing volcano that smouldered within his nephew's breast, and that daily, since he had reached years of discretion, threatened to break out into active flame. The forces were there at work, and none the less fierce because they were suppressed.

Perhaps Harry would have done better had he broken loose from the chains that bound him. It might have been a manlier and an honester part to defy Fate, and to seek to gain his own livelihood, regardless of consequence. But he could never quite summon up sufficient moral courage to strike out a new path. He was fond of his uncle after a fashion. He had no other living relative, and they clung together insensibly. Besides it is a very difficult thing—maybe, an unwise one—to sacrifice all one's prospects to a state of feeling which, however natural, does not meet with your entire approval. Many and many a time Harry felt annoyed with himself for being annoyed at Mrs. Bousfield's ways. He argued that he was to blame, that his temper was unduly irritable, and though this belief was, at best, but a partial one, it yet prevented him from taking any definite action with a view to entering upon a new life. Added to which, his uncle's will was the stronger. Whenever a difference of opinion arose, he—Harry—invariably yielded. Some are formed to command, some to obey. He belonged, by temperament and habit, to the latter class. It was easier for him to give in than to fight; but, all the same, he was unable to submit without many bitter thoughts arising in his mind. He would dearly have liked liberty if only he could have gained it amicably.

It is wonderful how unobservant of character people are, even when they live in the same house together, and have every opportunity of studying each other's nature. It requires a very quick, sympathetic faculty to absorb the griefs and joys of one's fellow creatures.

Mr. Bousfield, good, worthy man as he was, did not possess this quality, which, after all, is exceedingly rare. He firmly believed that Harry was perfectly content to pick up pins and paper, read the newspapers, eat three substantial meals a day, take a little gentle exercise and play a rubber at whist. It was an existence eminently suited to an elderly gentleman devoid of country tastes and all love of field sports. He could not conceive of his nephew wishing for any other. For had not Harry every material comfort at No. 115? Plenty of good, plain food to eat, and sound, old wine to drink, a soft bed to lie upon, and servants to attend to his wants. What more could he possibly require? So reasoned Mr. Bousfield, and his mind was at rest. He felt, with a proud and approving conscience, that he had thoroughly fulfilled his duty towards his youth.

It would have made him open his eyes very wide had he but known that Harry would gladly have sacrificed all these things for the sake of a little young and cheerful society. He pined for the company of girls—some people of his own age—people who were not quite so wise, and sensible, and demure, but who occasionally perpetrated a joke, or even told a naughty story. Who had some fun and "go" about them. He wanted to mix with men and women whose lives did not resemble a geometrical pattern, made up of nothing but straight lines.

In short, Harry's soul hankered after frivolity. He had been good and orderly so long that he yearned to go out into the world on his own account, and indulge in a few of its dissipations. Although the hero of this story, he was no hero in reality, only an ordinary human being full of frailties and infirmities, and, in common with so many of us, far from satisfied with his lot in life.

Harry, unlike his uncle, was fond of young ladies, and once or twice had thrown out hints to the effect that the house would be decidedly pleasanter if their acquaintance were cultivated more than it was. But at the mere introduction of such a subject, Mr. Bousfield turned up the whites of his eyes in holy horror.

"Women, my dear boy," he exclaimed sententiously, "are the bane of a man's existence. They destroy his commonsense, and turn him into a fool. Take my advice, Harry, and don't have anything to do with them, for they can bring you nothing but harm."

"You didn't always think so," returned Harry, who had heard of his senior's unfortunate attachment, and took a delight in alluding to it.

"Tut, tut, lad. What does that signify? Surely you are wise enough to profit by my experience when you have the chance. Getting singed is not a pleasant process, by any manner of means, as I can tell you."

Harry did not venture to respond, but he thought that he would very much like to get singed.

He had arrived at an age when bright eyes and sweet smiles seemed to him worth all the sage advice in the world. If only the opportunity had been granted, he would have been extremely susceptible to the fair sex. But Mr. Bousfield took care to exclude all dangerous feminine elements. He did not intend Harry to marry until he was thirty, and then not unless he himself had previously chosen the lady, and made sure of her being able to take part in a quiet rubber of whist. An uncongenial person would not do at all.

As for Harry's falling in love, the worthy man never seemed to consider such a contingency possible, any more than it occurred to him that his nephew was leading a dull, unnatural life, calculated to stunt the growth of his finer qualities.

An excellent person was Mr. Bousfield, but narrow in his views.

What he thought, others must think. He could not tolerate any difference of opinion, or make allowances for diversity of tastes, and innate dissimilarity of character.

A plentiful dinner, a substantial house over his head, a comfortable arm-chair and warm fireside satisfied him. He had no ambition, and never conceived that Harry had aspirations of a far more romantic and less humdrum nature.

Harry was a good lad. When with Mr. Bousfield he endeavored to stifle his secret yearnings after change and variety. He did his best to please the old man, and to fall in with his various whims, although it was up-hill work.

But when he was alone—when the four sheltering walls of his own room gave him a few moments' precious solitude, during which all restraining influences were removed, then his spirit broke loose from the bondage in which it was held, and clamored despairingly for a wider and more extended sphere of action.

"It cannot go on for ever. It cannot surely go on for ever," said the still, small voice within him. But the same cry was re-echoed year after year, and yet no change took place. He began to give up hope, and to feel a dull apathy steal over him.

Oh! If something would only happen! But nothing ever did.

CHAPTER II.

Of all the depressing things in this world, few can compare with a genuine London fog. When the atmosphere is heavy and oppressive, dirty yellow in color, and charged with impure matter that irritates nose, throat, and lungs, producing a sensation of slow suffocation, not one man in a hundred can feel cheerful.

Such a fog defies bricks and mortar. It penetrates everywhere, creeps insidiously into the human brain, and wraps the mental faculties in darkness. It robs the sun of its warmth and hides it completely from vision. The streets are impassable, or next door to it, and traffic is suspended. Omnibuses ply with difficulty, cabs all of a sudden become scarce.

Neither is getting up by gaslight, and eating your breakfast by gaslight, a good beginning to the day. You feel as if things were topsy-turvy, and the natural order of the world inverted. Shaving, from a delicate and hazardous operation, gets to be simply an impossible one, and the consciousness of a stubbly chin still further detracts from your serenity.

When Mr. Bousfield and Harry Hopperton quitted their bed-rooms on Thursday morning December 13th, 188—, they found the staircase as dark as dark could be. It was the first regular fog of the season, and very unwelcome, too.

"Phew! What a day!" exclaimed the elder gentleman in tones of disgust, as he entered the dining-room, and sniffed the air like an ancient war-horse. "It's enough to poison one, Smith," turning to the butler, who at that moment appeared, bearing a couple of hot dishes, "light the gas. The place is as black as night."

"Yes, sir," answered Smith. "Most certainly, sir."

His instructions were never to illumine the room on these occasions without first being told to do so by his master. Mr. Bousfield disapproved of servants taking too much on themselves. When the gas was lit, he took a critical look round the apartment to see if all was in order. He had not been able to do so before. Suddenly his brow contracted in a frown.

"Smith," he exclaimed, testily, "how often is it necessary for me to tell you the same thing? It seems to me that you have no eyes—no eyes whatever. Look at that blind."

"Yes, sir," responded the impassive menial, with an absolutely unmoved countenance. "I sees it."

"Then, perhaps, you can tell me what's wrong with it?"

"I was not aware, sir, as 'ow there was anything wrong with it."

JAP STORIES OF ANIMALS

SUPERNATURAL IS THEIR PROPER SPHERE.

The Fox, Badger, Cat and Toad Are Constantly at Work There.

The animal stories of the Far East do not constitute a record of attempts, infantile and a little pathetic, to copy human intelligence, says a writer in the London Spectator. Japanese animals realize that the supernatural is their proper sphere, and in this region, whither man cannot follow them, the fox, badger, cat and toad are constantly at work.

The cat and toad are distinctly malevolent; they usually take the forms of beautiful women and work men's undoing in that way. In fact, a man can never be certain whether it is a cat or a woman he has married; at any moment his wife may develop a tail.

The badger plays a sort of general utility part; his roles are inexhaustible. To a priest sitting in his lonely hut in the forest a badger may appear as the Goddess Kwannon riding on a white elephant in a cloud of glory—and all this magnificent display for the sake of the bowl of soup that it is hoped the priest will drop in his astonishment. Another mortal hurrying home at night may meet a Daimyo's vast retinue and thereby be compelled to wait for hours with bowed head by the side of the road—all badger work for badger ends.

with a paw. The wary, of course, are not led astray by a curious droning that they may hear in the thicket, but old gentlemen or diners out returning home in a muddled condition often feel compelled to investigate the affair.

The result of the inquiry is always the same. Last night's guest is found in the morning by the side of the road with an absurd story, and without the box of delicacies that he was taking home to his wife. Among the educated to-day stories such as these only raise a laugh, but country people and the older generation, whose traditions go back to the days before the Revolution, still cling to the old beliefs.

In the family the grandmother still acts as the jealous guardian of the spirits, looks after their wants, interprets their various manifestations and while protecting us from malicious influences tries to obtain all the good luck that is going.

Perhaps Buddhism, which insists on the unreality of outward form and material things and the oneness of nature, is responsible for many stories of animals changing into human beings or human beings into animals. Often the change is so chameleon-like that one is left in doubt as to what the organism really is. If a fox chooses to live the greater part of its life as a human being is it fox or man? In short, when is a fox a fox?

In the garden of an old yeoman family called Kondo, in the province of Tosa, is a large bamboo grove. In the middle of the grove is a shrine to the family ancestors, and underneath the shrine is a deep hole. Now, when the grandfather of the present owner of the house was a young man there lived in this hole the famous hermit Yosoji. Every day food was sent out from the house and placed before the hole—unless Yosoji came in to eat with the family.

The curious thing about these occasions was that on sitting down to dinner the hermit assumed exactly the same appearance as the master of the house, and no one, not even the wife, when she filled the cups of wine could tell which was her husband. Yosoji used to say that he had already lived about 800 years. The Tokugawa period—that was nothing; the Ashikaga and Iijo dynasties he clearly remembered.

On summer evenings or in rainy weather the young people used to collect around the shrine and listen to the stories of the old times, and the hermit, delighted, used to tell, for example, of the battle of Sekigahara of what such-and-such wore, and how he looked; of who fought whom, and so forth. Every one loved these stories and treated Yosoji with great respect.

At the same time he loved a joke, and sometimes when any of the young people of the village or the Kondos's servants teased him he would say:

"Oya, I'll Make a Priest of You."

And, sure enough, before one could say knife, there somebody was—bald head, clothes, down to the beads and wooden bowl!

However, if the unfortunate one apologized he was forgiven and changed back into his true shape.

When in the house he always appeared as a human being and no one ever saw him in any other guise, but before getting into the bath he used to call out, "Now mind, no one must look." As we were afraid of being turned into something dreadful, nobody ever did.

He wrote a remarkable hand, so much so, that the Daimyo of the province asked for a specimen of his penmanship, and it is kept among his household treasures to this day.

However, about the year 1872 Yosoji went up to court to be decorated. No news was heard of him for some time and the family were getting anxious, when at last a letter arrived. In it was written the sad news that he had been caught in a fox's trap near a village in the province of Koshu, an event which unfortunately he had no power to foresee. "Since I am thus caught in a hole and likely to die, I take the opportunity of thanking the family for their kindness in the past," etc. The letter, which the family still preserves, is the last that was heard of their guest.

PLANS TO HARNESS TIDES.

Engineer Says Power Can Be Derived From the Ocean.

C. A. Battiscombe will read a paper at the meeting of the Institution for British Electrical Engineers shortly wherein he will declare that the harnessing of the tides, an age-long dream of scientific men, is about to be realized.

"After a close study of the subject for years," says Battiscombe, "I am of the opinion that the use of the tides for power of all sorts may now be placed on a strictly commercial basis, and that the Board of Trade electrical unit may be obtained by this means at a cost of only about one-eighth of a penny.

"The tidal proposal is not so revolutionary, after all, and I wonder how many people realize the use to which tidal powers could be put every day in the year in propelling ships, and, in the case of tidal basins, in raising vessels of enormous tonnage. The installation would not be complicated and would follow the lines of three practical patents taken out by Germans for combined reservoirs and supply chambers. The main difficulty today turns on the question of whether embankment walls can be formed sufficiently economically to make such installations practical. The use of a ferro-concrete skin for the inner parts, which will be made of cheaper materials, in my opinion, solves this difficulty."

FIVE ARE 110 YEARS OF AGE.

Figures From Irish Census Show Many Centenarians.

The general report of the Irish Registrar General on the census of Ireland in 1911 contains much interesting matter. Thus it shows that the number of Irish-speaking persons was 582,446, or 13.3 per cent. of the total population. Of these 16,873 could speak Irish only and 565,573 could speak Irish and English. In 1901 the number who spoke Irish only was 20,953 and the number of those who spoke both languages was 620,189.

Centenarians also are diminishing. There were in 1901 no fewer than 497. In 1911 there includes one person of 114, while four are returned as 113 and upwards, one of 11 and five of 110.

Only 1 per cent. of the people declined to state their religious belief, and the resultant figures show the following proportions—Roman Catholics, 73.9 per cent.; Protestant Episcopalians, 13.1 per cent.; Presbyterians, 10 per cent.; Methodists, 1.4 per cent.; all other denominations, 1.5 per cent. A proportion of 87.6 per cent. of the population could both read and write; 115,054, or 3.2 per cent., could read only; and 331,317, or 9.2 per cent., were illiterate.

One in every 57 persons was a pauper, and on the night of the census one in every 125 was returned as sick.

Since Taking Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets"

Mrs. J. Merkhuger, Waterloo, Ont., enthusiastically recommends Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets. Her experience with them, as she outlines it, explains why.

"I was greatly troubled with my stomach", she writes. "I had taken so much medicine that I might say to take any more would only be making it worse. My stomach just felt raw. I read of Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets, and a lady friend told me they were very easy to take, so I thought I would give them a trial and really they worked wonders. Anyone having anything wrong with his stomach should give Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets a trial, they will do the rest. My stomach is fine now and I can eat any food."

One of the many good features of Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets is that they are so pleasant and easy to take. The relief they give from heartburn, flatulence, biliousness and dyspepsia is prompt and permanent. Try one after each meal—they'll make you feel like a new person.

BANISH PIMPLES AND ERUPTIONS

In the Spring Most People Need a Tonic Medicine

One of the surest signs that the blood is out of order is the pimples, unsightly eruptions and eczema that come frequently with the change from winter to spring. These prove that the long indoor life of winter has had its affect upon the blood, and that a tonic medicine is needed to put it right. Indeed, there are few people who do not need a tonic at this season. Bad blood does not merely show itself in disfiguring eruptions. To this same condition is due attacks of rheumatism and lumbago; the sharp stabbing pains of sciatica and neuralgia; poor appetite and a desire to avoid exertion. You cannot cure these troubles by the use of purgative medicines—you need a tonic, and a tonic only, and among all medicines there is none can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for their tonic, life-giving, nerve-restoring powers. Every dose of this medicine makes new, rich blood, which drives out impurities, stimulates every organ and brings a feeling of new health and energy to weak, tired, ailing men, women and children. If you are out of sorts give this medicine a trial and see how quickly it will restore the appetite, revive drooping spirits, and fill your veins with new, health-giving blood.

You can get these pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WHY MORE WOMEN THAN MEN

A Woman's Power of Endurance Is More Robust.

The fact that in almost all civilized countries women outnumber men has been ascribed to the higher birthrate of girl babies; yet statistics show that 105 boys are born to every 100 girls. According to figures compiled by a European statistician, the girl has a better chance than the boy of attaining maturity.

He finds that from the third to the fifteenth year the mortality for both sexes is the same; from the fifteenth to the nineteenth year, the critical age for girls, the girl's chances are slightly better than the boy's; from the thirtieth year to the thirty-fifth the mortality among women is smaller than among men, and it continues smaller until the seventieth year. Then, for a decade and a half, the sexes once more have the same chance of survival, but above eighty-five years of age woman again stands a much better chance than man.

To account for this difference the statistician points out that woman has greater resilience in shaking off diseases than man. It is true that the physical strength of man is greater than woman's, but a woman's power of endurance is more robust.

One reason for this is that woman possesses a finer perception of her power of endurance than a man, and when her perception warns her of fatigue, she stops. A man does not stop until his power is exhausted. His nervous system is not as finely organized as a woman's, and as Mosso, the Italian physiologist has pointed out, men and women are entirely dependent upon their nerves for caution not to over-exert. While it is true that women more easily contract many diseases, particularly nervous and mental diseases, than men, they overcome them more easily.

The Great Ocean Depths.

The greatest known ocean depth is approximately the same as the greatest land height, but the average depth of the ocean bed is about 12,000 feet, as against the average land height above sea level of 2,300 feet. The oceans, including the inland seas connected with them, cover about 144,500,000 square miles, or 73.39 per cent. of the total surface of the earth, and the volume of water estimated to be contained in them is 323,800,000 cubic miles.

Aching Lumbago Backs Are Quickly Helped And Permanently Cured

YOU CAN EASILY PROVE THIS.

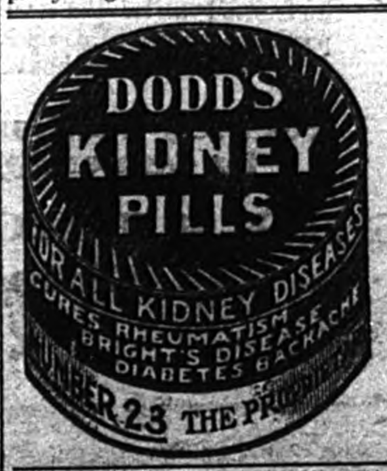

To cure Lumbago—surely it's a good thing to know how. This information meant to Jno. E. Neave the difference between invalidism and robust health. Writing from his home near Cornwall, he says:—"A severe and prolonged attack of Lumbago in my youth rendered me at all times liable to aches in the back and loins. So established became the predisposition, and so frequent the attacks, I confess I accepted the condition as my particular weakness to be borne with as much composure as any evil circumstance might permit. One day an unusually bad attack developed, and unfortunately there was no medicine of any kind in the house. I sent to a neighbor for help and received with a strong recommendation a bottle of Nerviline. My friend was surprised we didn't use Nerviline, saying that they found use for it in their family almost every day. So quickly did Nerviline check the attack, and so grateful was the relief, that I was in a day on the high road to recovery. I have cured my tendency to Lumbago with Nerviline, and consider it the most powerful pain-subduing liniment ever made."

For curing colds, hoarseness, tight chest and winter ills Nerviline is a marvel; as for Lumbago, Sciatica and Rheumatism, Nerviline is considered to be without a peer. In the home it is especially valuable, because it cures cramps in half a minute, stops nausea, controls vomiting and upset stomach. For internal or external use, wherever there is pain, apply Nerviline. Get the 50c. family size bottle; trial size 25c., at all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Weird Wedding Ceremony.

When two Negritos, a people of the Philippine Islands, are united, the whole tribe is assembled, and the affianced pair climb two trees growing near each other. An Old Settler Finds Quick Relief

CHAS. MARSHALL CURED BY DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Mrs. Marshall Tells How Her Husband Suffered, and of His Speedy Recovery When He Used the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy.

Parkinson, Algoma, Ont., May 5 (Special)—Living far from towns and with doctors not within easy reach, many of the settlers have found Dodd's Kidney Pills an inestimable blessing. One of those is Mr. Charles Marshall, Sr., whose recovery from a severe case of kidney disease has recently been the cause of much satisfaction to his family and friends.

"My husband was suffering very much with his back and legs," Mrs. Marshall says, speaking of her husband's cure. "He went to see the doctor, and he told him he had urinary trouble, but he did not seem to get any better.

"Then I sent for some Dodd's Kidney Pills. Since taking them, he has no more pain in his back and legs, and his other troubles are all gone.

"I am indeed thankful for what Dodd's Kidney Pills did for my husband, and I hope other sufferers from Kidney disease will benefit by his experience, and use Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Urinary troubles are caused by diseased kidneys. So are backache, rheumatism, lumbago, and heart disease. The natural remedy is to cure the kidneys by using Dodd's Kidney Pills.

ECZEMA FROM HEAD TO ANKLES

Tortured With Terrible Itching and Burning. Scratched Until Tore Flesh. Lay Awake for Nights at a Time. Used Cuticura Remedies and Found a Cure.

St. Ola, Ontario.—"When I was ten years old I began to be tortured with a terrible itching and burning of the skin, and was told it was eczema. I have had it right along for seven years steady, it getting worse every year. I was affected from head to ankles. It seemed to appear like hives at first, then I would begin to scratch until I tore my flesh. It would always be at its worst at night. I have waked myself up at nights scratching and my fingers would be just stiff and cramped from scratching, so that I would be hardly able to straighten them out. My, how I have suffered! My face and whole body would be just a mass of blotches red as fire and after having soap and water on my face then I would begin to burn. I have lain awake for nights at a time when my eczema was at its worst.

"I would be tortured for months at a time. I was getting not only disheartened, for nothing helped, but completely disfigured also, but dame fortune smiled upon me one day in the summer of 1910 and laid before my eyes an advertisement of Cuticura Remedies. I used them according to directions and after a few applications I began to feel and see relief ahead. It is nearly six months since I first began and I can truthfully say I've found a cure." EUROPE'S TINIEST STATE.

When the Ambassadors of Europe recently met, and agreed that the peninsular of Athos, in Macedonia, should be regarded as an independent State, many people thought that they had at least discovered the smallest State in the whole world.

Athos, however, has an area of 180 square miles, roughly. It is a huge country compared with Moresnet, a tiny neutral State on the borders of Belgium and Prussia. Its area is reckoned in acres, not square miles! Its size, in fact, is fourteen hundred acres, just a good-sized farm!

Moresnet was made a separate State in 1815, after Napoleon had been finally crushed at Waterloo. The reason that the little country has remained independent is rather curious.

As has been said, the tiny State is on the borders of Germany and Belgium. It possesses what was once the most important and valuable zinc-mine in the whole world. Belgium wanted that zinc, and so did Germany. As they couldn't agree on the amount of compensation to the other, Moresnet remained independent.

The tiniest country in the world lies four miles away from Aix-la-Chapelle, and possesses one village. There's not room for two! The total number of inhabitants is under three thousand. Recently Germany began negotiations with Belgium to acquire her tiny neighbor, though the Moresnetians say they prefer to be under Belgium rule, if they can't be independent.

A Household Remedy

SAVED THE KING.

But Man Was Discharged for Touching His Sacred Person.

Alfonso of Spain was born a king, but he nearly lost his august life before he had grown up to take the throne from his mother, the Queen Regent. The young king's foot slipped one day as he was descending a staircase in the royal palace at Madrid, and down tumbled Alfonso head first.

Momentarily there appeared every possibility of a broken monarchical neck; but, in the nick of time, a Court footman leaped forward with marvellous agility, seized his sovereign, and was fortunately able to effectually break the force of the royal fall.

The saving of the King was, of course, recognized as a good and happy thing, but the grandees of the Court had to put on the appearance of much wrath at the violation of a fine old crusty piece of etiquette. For had not a mere menial—no matter how gorgeous and commendably self-possessed — actually touched unbidden the sacred person of his King!

It was insisted that the servant should be dismissed, and so he had to be. But the Queen Regent recognized the absurd unfairness of bowing down before an ancient tradition, and the footman who saved King Alfonso was handsomely provided for. He still lives happily outside the precincts of the palace, and keeps a grateful guardian eye on the King, Queen Ena, and the Royal children.

Couldn't Breathe Through His Nose Stuffed With Catarrh

Catarrhozone Inhaler the One Means of Relief, and It Cured Quickly.

The extraordinary efficacy of Catarrhozone is without a parallel. A sneezing cold is cured in ten minutes, a harsh cough is eased in an hour, the most offensive catarrh is thoroughly drawn from the system. In case of asthma and bronchitis the relief and certain cure that comes from the healing balsamic extracts in Catarrhozone is simply wonderful.

"For more than twenty years I suffered with a cough, bronchitis, asthma, and nasal catarrh," writes J. F. Fenwick, of Staunton P. O. "Every attack I had seemed to grow worse, and I could hardly breathe on account of an accumulation of phlegm in the nose and throat. One day I tried Catarrhozone, and in ten minutes was wonderfully relieved. I could breathe freely and naturally through the nose, and blood spitting was stopped—the phlegm was cleared away and my regular breathing restored. No remedy can do more than Catarrhozone."

There is no remedy so certain and safe as Catarrhozone, but being a good remedy it is imitated. Beware of the substitutor. Large Catarrhozone lasts two months, price $1.00. Smaller sizes—25c. and 50c. At all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

ON THE PLANET MARS.

Strange Conditions to Be Found On Far-Off Planet.

Mars is more distant than we are from the sun—150,000,000 miles on the average instead of 100,000,000. It is, therefore, a little colder; the more so as its central heat is less, because the diameter of the planet is only 4,500 miles instead of 8,500. Martian days have almost the same duration as ours; but the axis of the planet being more inclined on the plane of the orbit by about four degrees, the polar regions where the sun remains more than one day on or below the horizon are more extended, as is also the torrid zone. The inequality of days and nights at the same latitude is greater on Mars than on the earth; at the latitude of forty-five degrees our shortest day is eight hours forty-three minutes, and the longest fifteen hours thirty-eight minutes; these are on Mars respectively seven hours fifty-six minutes and seventeen hours fifty-eight minutes long.

On the planet Mars, therefore, there are extreme variations of climate and temperature. Protected by the slowness of the variations of temperature of water, marine animals, fish, especially, differ, doubtless, very little from ours; but it is quite otherwise with aerial animals. Those with constant internal temperature have been infinitely more favored on the earth. They must have appeared sooner and have more quickly crushed the great reptiles, which have long been extinct. On the contrary, the plumage of birds and the skin of mammals, which protect these animals against the extreme variations of temperature, must have developed in a luxurious manner, both attaining a splendid variety, changing and being modified profoundly every year with the seasons.

Paragraphs.

That Borden meeting in Toronto ought to convince the Liberal blockers that if they had got a general election, even the help of Mackenzie King could not have saved the few seats now held by the Liberals in Ontario.

The large appropriation in the estimates for the construction of interior terminal elevators in western Canada provides for the grain-handling facilities for which the western farmers asked in vain from the Liberal Government.

The parcel post system, which the Liberal Postmasters-General were afraid to establish, will soon be in operation under the progressive administration of Hon. L. P. Pelletier. Money is now being voted for the purpose of starting the scheme.

The appropriation this year for the construction and improvement of highways in the various provinces, is half as big again as was provided last year. The Senate prevented the expenditure last year. The Government has raised the "ante."

The main and supplementary estimates for the year, now before Parliament, show that the Borden Government is alive to the great development needs of Canada, and will provide for those needs as the record-breaking revenue enables them to do.

Two proposals have been before Parliament. The Government proposal was that Canada should do her duty in aiding in the naval defence of the Empire. The Liberal proposal was that Hon. Sydney Fisher, Hon. Mac-Kenzie King and one or two other seat-hungry ex-ministers, be given a chance to get back into the House of Commons.

The latter proposal doesn't seem to measure up.

The Borden Government is carrying out the Conservative policy of developing the great ocean and lake ports of Canada. The harbors of Halifax and St. John in the east and of Vancouver on the west are to be greatly improved and the ports of Port Arthur and Toronto are to be placed in shape for handling their share of the increasing traffic of the Great Lakes. These are national works, which were, in most cases, neglected by the late administration.

The bill appropriating ten millions for the advancement of agriculture in the provinces, has been passed, although the Senate Liberals did earnestly yearn to kill it. This bill carries out the promise made by the Conservative leader during the campaign of 1911. It is one of the most important and progressive measures ever enacted for the benefit of the great agricultural industry in Canada, the appropriation being large enough to ensure the permanency which is essential to the success of the movement.

The Caterpillar Invasion.

It should be of interest to this community to realize that concented action now althoug it will not ease the trees or restore the blossoms for this year, yet may prevent a recurrence of the caterpillar plague in the future. If at this stage the worms are destroyed there will be no formation of cocoons and no hatching of moths. It is the moths which deposit the eggs that are the greatest future menace, for they flit from tree to tree and during late June and July deposit the eggs on twigs mostly in macessable places and these eggs remain domant until the following spring when they batch out into the caterpillars that too late we realize are a nuisence not only to the fruit trees but also to the maples seriously in pairing their beauty and productiveness. Spraying at once with arsenate of lead will destroy them, and when they come down from the trees these warm days. If the trees have been gridled with tar or any sticky substance the worms cannot return to their forage ground. Last year I carefully destroyed worms and all the cocoons I could hunt out, but my neighbours neglected their's and the moths deposited their eggs and, I suppose from the neglect of others.

Concented prompt action means much to the orchard and sugar bushes of this County. Neglect must be paid for in the future.

OUR LETTER FROM TORONTO

The Teachings of Professor Jackson—Gives Offense to Some—Sir James Whitney's Present.

Professor George Jackson, whose opinions have been again creating controversy, has been the stormy petrel of theology in Canada ever since his arrival some six or seven years ago. Meeting Professor Jackson, one would never for a moment suspect that there was anything stormy about him. He is a mild-mannered gentleman of the scholarly type, almost different in manner and apparently shrinking from the publicity which his opinions inevitably bring him. There is no doubt, however, that he is a man of great mental force and Canada will lose intellectual color by reason of his departure, which is to take place almost immediately.

In Sherbourne Street Church.

Professor Jackson came to Toronto from the British Wesleyan Conference as a loan for a three-year-term as pastor of Sherbourne St. Methodist Church, probably the most artistocratic congregation in the Methodist denomination in Toronto. Immediately his sermons, and particularly his addresses to his Sunday afternoon Bible Class began to attract attention. Rumors reached the ears of the strict disciplinarians, who decided that action should be taken. Though Professor Jackson has maintained that his addresses were semi-private and not intended for publication, excepting in book form, steps were taken to secure shorthand reports. The publication of one of these in the local press aroused a storm of controversy. The matter finally went before the Toronto Conference, where, after a discussion lasting several days, in which the most heated arguments and statements were used, Dr. Jackson's friends came out on top, thus averting any direct discussion in the larger arena of the general Methodist Conference of Canada.

At the conclusion of his pastorate at Sherbourne Street, a place was made for him at Victoria College, his appointment being to the chair of the English Bible. Now, after four years' service there, he is returning to England.

A Lovable Man.

By those who know him best, Professor Jackson is described as a most lovable man. The teaching which is most strongly assailed is that concerning the historical and scientific value of the description of the creation of the world in the first chapters of Genesis and of some of the other incidents of the Old Testament. There has also been some question as to his teaching concerning the fallibility of Christ. Naturally, his discussion of these points gave offense to those who accept the literal inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. His critics have not hesitated to describe him as a "destroyer of faith and hope." His friends bitterly resent any such comment. He has shown the capacity of arousing the warmest loyalty, both by reason of his intellectual powers and his personal qualities.

The latest controversy arose from a newspaper report of one of his addresses. This, Dr. Jackson maintains, was absolutely unfair, misleading and inaccurate. His general attitude is that it is only in book form that such discussions as he has to offer should be given broadcast to the public. This gives ample opportunity to make his meaning clear and ensures perusal under circumstances where readers will not get false impressions through hasty understanding. His publications now run up towards a dozen volumes.

Sir James Gets a Motor Car.

For many years Sir James Whitney's chief recreation has been riding a bicycle. Every day when the weather was fine he has been accustomed to take his iron steed and go for a half-an-hour or an hour's ride through the well paved residential district of Toronto. It always impressed visitors with the democracy of Ontario's first Minister when they were fortunate enough to get a glimpse of him riding sedately and slowly along. No more, however, will this sensation be vouchsafed, for, as an exceedingly graceful contribution on the part of his followers in the Legislature, a splendid new automobile was the other day presented to the Premier. Sir James, and also his family, will no doubt find the automobile a great convenience and comfort, but some folks have their suspicion that when he has time and opportunity Sir James will continue occasionally to take a spin on his old bicycle.

When Toronto Was Captured.

Toronto has so little history of a romantic sort that considerable attention is being paid to the events of 100 years ago this month, when, for a short time, the town was in the possession of the Americans. The chief incidents of that memorable action were the landing of the American forces at a point just west of the present Exhibition Grounds, about where the new Sunnyside Station stands, the blowing up of a powder magazine at the old fort, with the consequent destruction of a large number of Americans and the burning of many public buildings, including the parliament house of that day, which stood on the Bay front near the foot of the present Parliament street. The Canadians were overpowered by numbers, there being something like 500 British regulars and Canadian militia, while the American forces numbered about 2,400 strong. The smallness of these figures shows us how our ideas of warfare have changed in the past century. Historically, there has always been controversy as to whether the magazines were blown up by accident or by design of the Canadians. In the second explosion, General Pike, who was in command of the invading forces, was among the number blown up.

IN AID OF THE DEAF.

Invention Will Make Electrical Hearing Apparatus Cheaper.

It is an electrical contrivance for the use of doctors and aurists. By the operation of a series of levers the aurist can tell almost immediately the class of mechanical aid needed for a particular case. The instrument, according to the association's description, "raises the level of supplying aural aids and their adjustment to the level of supplying eye-glasses and their adjustment."

It was declared that one effect of the invention will be to bring about a substantial reduction in the cost of electrical hearing apparatus, a cost which is said to be excessively high on account of the time occupied in testing the extent of the defect in would-be customers.

The Bigot.

NAPOLEON AS A SMOKER.

Asserted Now He Was Tobacco Hater—Did He Take Snuff?

It has long been accepted as a historical fact that the First Consul was a great smoker, but in the Journal des Debats reference is made by M. Augustin Filon to some memoirs of Napoleon compiled by Gen. Bertrand which are as yet unpublished, whence it seems equally certain that Napoleon was not only not a smoker but a tobacco hater.

The memoirs of Bertrand, Napoleon's secretary, were transcribed by his daughter Hortense, afterward Mme. Amadee Shayer, and from these, as reported by word of mouth by the Abbe Saliuet, comes M. Filon's story that Napoleon hated tobacco. Once only he tried to smoke, but scarcely had he put the amber mouthpiece of a hookah in his mouth than he thrust it away in horror and disgust with the words: "Take away that filth." Napoleon then taxed tobacco.

Nor did, if we may believe the same source, Napoleon ever take snuff, although we find it categorically asserted in most histories. He did worse, however, for he pretended to. He used to take, in order to alleviate a disorder of the stomach, a mixture of licorice and black sugar. This he kept in his waistcoat pocket, whence he would take a piece and lift it to his nose with the gesture of the ordinary snuff-taker and then quickly put it into his mouth.

This, says the Westminster Gazette, is a somewhat startling variation from our customary pictures of Napoleon, who is generally portrayed as a habitual snuff-taker; and M. Filon himself deposes to having seen on the margins of an "Orlando Furioso," which was in the library at Longwood in St. Helena, and is now at Farnborough, the yellow marks of the imperial thumb, a thumb yellowed by incessant smoking.

But even this, as he pointed out, is not conclusive against the non-smoking evidence, for the thumb might as well have been stained by the mixture of licorice. Whatever be their ultimate truth, the non-smoking and non-snuff taking theories are delightful.

MORE THAN EVER.

Increased Capacity for Mental Labor.

Many former tea and coffee drinkers who have mental work to perform, day after day, have found a better capacity and greater endurance by using Postum instead of tea and coffee. A Western woman writes:

"I had drank coffee for about twenty years, and finally had what the doctor called "coffee heart." I was nervous and extremely despondent; had little mental or physical strength left, had kidney trouble and constipation." (Tea is just as harmful because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.)

"The first noticeable benefit derived from the change from coffee to Postum was the natural action of the kidneys and bowels. In two weeks my heart action was greatly improved and my nerves steady.

"Then I became despondent, and the desire to be active again showed proof of renewed physical and mental strength.

"I am steadily gaining in physical strength and brain power. I formerly did mental work and had to give it up on account of coffee, but since using Postum I am doing hard mental labor with less fatigue than ever before."

Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

Postum now comes in new, concentrated form called Instant Postum. It is regular Postum so processed at the factory that only the soluble portions are retained.

New Electric Blanket.

Even the most enthusiastic believer in porch sleeping cannot deny that at least some discomfort attaches to the habit when the temperature is around zero. By using an electric blanket, however, the weight of the covering may be decreased materially. The electric blanket should be covered with a light-weight woollen blanket to keep in the heat. The bed may be warmed in advance by turning on the current 15 or 30 minutes before the bed is to be occupied.

Over-Conscientious.

Von Blumer—Yes.

How does she like it?

Fairly well; but she complains that she has no time to study."

It's on View.

"Have you seen Mamie's engagement ring?"

"Of course. Did you have an idea that she was making an effort to hide it?"

"I Sleep Soundly, Feel Like New"

All Who Lack Vigor, Those Who are Dispirited and Worn Out, Should Read This Carefully.

Proof That Health and Renewed Vitality Quickly Return When Right Remedy is Used.

"I am only thirty years old, yet for almost two years I have felt more like seventy-five. I have found it difficult to sleep at night, and in the morning felt so depressed and heavy that effort was difficult. My hands were always clammy and perspiration on slight effort would break out all over me. It was not unnatural that I should begin to brood over the chance that I should be unfit to do my work, and this dread made my sleepless nights perfect misery. After repeated trials of medicines and mixtures, Dr. Hamilton's Pills gave me the first gleam of hope. From the very first I could see they were different in action from other pills. They didn't gripe and acted as naturally as if nature and not the pills were cleansing my clogged-up system. My spirits rose. I felt much better. The sluggish action of the system gave way to normal activity. Dizziness and headaches ceased, appetite, good color and ambition to work returned, and have remained. I am like a new man, and I thank Dr. Hamilton's Pills for it all."

This was the experience of J. E. Parkhurst, a well known grocery dealer in Jefferson. Follow his advice, use Dr. Hamilton's Pills for your stomach, kidneys and liver, and you'll enjoy long life and robust good health. All druggists and storekeepers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c per box, 5 boxes for $1.00 or postpaid from the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

MANY HOMELESS PARISIANS.

Six Hundred Families Are Looking for Abodes.

A soldier on guard at the Court of Honor, in the Ministry of Finance, Paris, France, relaxed his vigilance for a moment when a man entered, pushing before him a cart laden with the humblest of household furniture. He was followed by a woman and three children in rags. Looking about him, the man espied the Ministerial garage, which happened to be empty. In a trice the handcart was in the garage and the furniture was being unloaded. The soldier, waking up, hurried to the spot and asked what the man was doing there.

"Oh, it is all right, my boy," was the reply; "it is the Minister's orders. Don't you worry. I am in command of operations."

The soldier, only half satisfied, reported to his lieutenant, who informed the police commissary of the quarter. This functionary hastened to the garage and demanded an explanation.

"My name is Mathard Gustave," said the man, "and I am the secretary of the Outer Tenants' Syndicate. This poor woman, with her three children, aged 6 years, 4 years, and 18 months, has just been ejected by her landlord. Her husband has deserted her, she is starving, and I considered it my duty to look for a shelter for her. I found one here. It is quite simple."

The commissary of police ordered the furniture to be taken to a shed belonging to the Customs authorities, and gave the woman a small sum of money to enable her to put up at a lodging-house until she could find someone to take her in.

This is only one of many scenes which have been witnessed in the streets of Paris during the past few weeks. The uestion of the homeless poor is a burning scandal in the 18th and 20th arrondissements. Six hundred families have been looking for lodgings since term day—the 5th of April. The chief difficulty is that landlords object to let to families with numerous children—and this at a time when, through depopulation, there is such a shortage of recruits that the Government wants to restore the three-year' service system.

In the last few years the increase alone in the consumption of "SALADA" Tea amounted to 2,314,026 pounds, or 200 carloads of Tea.

Even after this enormous increase "SALADA" has had a further increase in the first 14 weeks of this year of a little over a quarter of a million pounds, equal to 21 carloads.

Then He Knew.

Second Broker (loftily)—That is my business, sir. Say, can you direct me to a five-cent lunch counter?"

SENT SIXTY MILES FOR GIN PILLS

Mr. Sid. Castleman of Larder Lake, Ont. needed Gin Pills badly. He says: "I had been suffering some time with my Kidneys and Urine. The pain was something awful, and no rest at night. I heard of your Gin Pills and sent my chum 60 miles to get them, and in less than six hours I felt relief. In two days the pain had left me entirely—and to-day I feel as well as ever".

A Versatile Peer.

Lord Aberconway, who moved the address in the British House of Lords after the opening of Parliament by the King, is better known to the general public as Sir Charles Maclaren. For twenty-three years he sat in the House of Commons, and was known as a Radical of Radicals. This was in accordance with the fitness of things, for he is a nephew of John Bright.

Lord Aberconway has had a most varied career. He studied metaphysics at Edinburgh University, and completed his education at Bonn and Heidelberg. He has dabbled in journalism and practiced at the Bar; he has big commercial interests in railways, collieries, and shipbuilding; he is chairman of the Metropolitan Railway Company, and derives a considerable revenue from granite quarries and Welsh slates.

Lord Aberconway.

His career has indeed been one of prolific achievement. He left a large law practice in order to devote himself to the development of the various companies in which he is interested as a shareholder.

Lord Aberconway's wife had the unique honor at one time of being the owner of a completely equipped gasworks, which the local authority at Prestatyn subsequently acquired.

MAPLE SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Farmers Are Beginning to Realize the Situation.

Coaxing sugar from the maples, one of the oldest and most romantic industries of Canada, is at the present time attracting unusual attention owing to the fact that this pioneer industry is undergoing an alarming shrinkage, and if this shrinkage continues the distinctive occupation of syrup making will pass away. Authorities say the old industry will be treated by the writers of the next generation as a quaint pastime of their ancestors; it will be pictured in glowing terms by writers of rural life and scenes, instead of each year increasing in supply and quality as a valuable asset to the food supply.

However, the warning has not been unheeded. Farmers in every sap-bearing district of the Dominion have awakened to the realization that the industry must be protected. In this regard an organization has been formed, known as the Pure Maple Sugar and Syrup Co-operative Agricultural Association for the purpose of encouraging the cultivation and the preservation of of maple orchards. One of the objects of the organization is to ask the various governments to instruct the agricultural classes in the way of improving the quality of their output of maple products, and to have yearly exhibitions of the products to show the consumers the difference in the goods, from the ways of producing, and giving prizes to competitors and exhibitors.

"From 1850 to 1860 there was produced 135,000,000 pounds; from 1860 to 1870, it had risen to 175,000,000 pounds; from 1870 to 1900 to 212,000,000 pounds, and from 1900 to 1910 it showed a decrease of 16,000,000," says Mr. J. M. Grimm.

"This decrease is wholly due to adulteration. The sugar industry is no get-rich-quick scheme. There are 55,000 producers of maple products in Canada, and this great industry is threatened with extinction because farmers fail to protect the maple products adequately, from adulteration. The receipts from the maple industry provided money for the farmers at a time when there was no other source of revenue. Consequently, the far-seeing Canadian farmer realized that some measure must be adopted in regard to adulteration in order to secure the profit on genuine products."

THE HAUNTED FORT

George threw himself indolently into a lounge chair on the veranda and lit a cigar. The night breeze, wafted across the lagoon, was deliciously cool.

George and I had spent a strenuous day upon the lagoon after duck. Unaccustomed as we were to the heat of the tropics, we had returned to our host's bungalow in a state of limpness which demanded much cooling drink to alleviate. Franklyn was the best of hosts. Bachelor though he was, his menage was run upon such generous lines by his native butler that by the time we had finished dinner we would, despite our weariness, have exchanged our domicile for no other in the universe.

"You two ought to inspect the fort by moonlight," said Franklyn, presently. "It is by no means uninteresting by daylight, but on a night like this if one walks upon the ramparts and looks out across the lagoon and the eerie stillness of the moat there is an element of romance abroad to which even you, George, could not be insensible."

Glancing across an expanse of green sward to where the gray battlements of the fortress, not a quarter of a mile away, rose grimly above the glassy moat surrounding it, I could well imagine that within its walls there had been many a love scene, probably many a tragedy. George and I had arrived in Ceylon only a few days previously, but I had already read the history of the fort, and could fill in the gaps. It had first been the home of the Portuguese, and later of their supplanters, the Dutch, until at last it had fallen into the hands of the British. No garrison now inhabited it, but from the time of its construction—probably by Prince Maurice of Nassau—down through the years of the seventeenth century, one could easily picture the picturesque details of its history.

"What about the usual ghosts?" asked I. "There must be ghosts, surely?"

Franklyn laughed softly and relit his cigar.

"Yes," answered he, presently, "there are the usual ghosts, as you call them. In the old stone quarry quarters inside the fort where the senior Dutch officers lived there remains plenty of material for ghost-lore."

"Do you believe in ghosts, Geo[illegible]?" asked I.

"Ghosts! No. All rot."

"Humph!" murmured Franklyn. "I suppose they are really. If, however, you should come across old Abdul in the fort and ask him to show you round by night you might find your beliefs strangely shaken."

"Who is Abdul?" asked George.

"The weirdest specimen of dwarfed Mohammedan humanity that I have ever seen. He is generally not far off when visitors are about, and is a self-appointed guide," replied our host.

"Come!" cried I, enthusiastically.

"I am afraid that I cannot possibly go to-night," groaned Franklyn. "I have those beastly reports of mine to finish. I am not a lucky globe-trotter with nothing to do."

"Well, I, for one, intend to walk upon those ramparts in this glorious moonlight before I am ten minutes' older," exclaimed I. "You must come, George."

"All right," mumbled George, climbing out of his chair. "I suppose it has to be done some time. It certainly is a ripping night."

A few minutes later we had passed the native-police guard at the entrance to the fort, crossed the drawbridge, and lazily mounted a flight of stone steps to the ramparts.

A light footfall upon the steps behind us caused us both to turn on the instant. We turned and saw a startling apparition. A man, not more than three feet in height, stood before us. He wore a beard reaching to his waist, and his head was surmounted by an enormous turban.

"If the sahibs would care to see the fort," said he in excellent English, "I can show all things."

"Righto," cried George, facetiously. "Guaranteed no danger, lead on!"

With a peculiar shuffling gait the little man moved off at once along the ramparts. The dismounted cannon, the many bastions, the Dutch church, each received his descriptive attention in turn. His voice, of a deep bass, coming from such a body, and the piercing black eyes, watching our faces from beneath the mountainous turban, created—certainly upon myself—a most uncanny impression.

"Has the sahib heard the story of the commandant's house?" asked our guide, halting before a long, low building near the church.

"Not a word," intervened George.

"Hah, sahib! Then it is for me to show you. Each month, on this very day, at about an hour before midnight, the spirit of a Dutch officer fights a duel with another. A lady rushes between them. One of them is wounded and falls. The other then stands with drawn sword in the antechamber watching the door. Should anyone dare to cross the threshold he would be pierced to the heart."

"Rot!" exclaimed George.

"If the sahib will wait with me until the clock strikes 11 he will see for himself."

"What clothes does this warrior wear?" inquired I, smiling.

The old man turned his beady eyes upon me, instilling me with an indescribable fear of I knew not what.

"The clothes, sahib, that they all wore in those days, but richer than most. A purple velvet jacket, with skin-tight trousers of white. It is the ghost of an officer who killed another officer after dinner in a duel. The lady in white was the dead man's wife. Each month the officer still stands alone, challenging anybody to meet him in single combat."

"I shall be there," cried George, decidedly. "Some moonlight effect, I suppose. It is within a few minutes of the hour now."

"Yes, it is time. Come, sahibs, and you shall see and believe," muttered the dwarf.

Turning to the left, he led us down a narrow passage at the side of the building, emerging into a courtyard. Here, beneath the shadows of the wall of the fort it was almost dark, and all was deadly still. The dwarf opened a little door and entered the house. We followed, to find ourselves in a stone-paved bathroom. The moon, shining brightly through the latticed shutters, disclosed a spacious chamber beyond. Our guide hurried us across this room, and through a door leading to a smaller room, evidently the dining-room. Suddenly he came to a halt, just across the threshold, and gripped us each by an arm.

There was a tremble in the old man's voice, and the hand upon my arm quivered as with ague.

"Do not speak and you shall see."

The gong at the guardroom resounded from the battlements. It was the first stroke of eleven. Despite my incredulity, my pulse began to throb. The tropical heat of the night seemed to have suddenly deserted us. A cold shiver caught me in its grip. With a half-laugh I started to speak.

"Hush!" hissed he.

Looking upwards with a sudden jerk of his head he peered into my eyes with a curious, fascinating gaze that filled me with a weird sensation of dreamland.

"Listen!" came his voice, as if from afar. "The door will open in one moment."

My eyes instinctively riveted themselves upon the door opening on to the veranda. The gong was still striking. The eleventh stroke had hardly ceased echoing when, as if by magic, this door flew noiselessly open. I heard George, on my left, gasp. Abdul was between us. He still held my hand, and in those strangely far-off tones, began to whisper.

"See! Here they come—the two of them, as always."

And come they did. I did not pause to reason. My mind was overpowered by what my eyes saw as distinctly as if I had been watching a play upon the stage. There were two men, one in purple and white, as Abdul had described him. They crossed the threshold together.

"See," whispered Abdul, "they draw their swords. They are very angry. The fight now begins."

It was not until later that I remembered that I could hear no sound. What I saw, however, was so totally inexplicable to my modern views of the other world, that I could but stand spellbound, feverishly watching each movement of the combatants. At my elbow the dwarf never ceased to whisper, explaining, as if we were children, each move, each gesture of the actors. I could hear George breathing heavily. Otherwise, there was a stillness of death.

Without palaver of any kind, the duelists drew their swords and set to with a will. I could hear my own heart beating riotously. For a few moments the contest appeared fairly equal. Then the man in the purple doublet gave way, and his foot slipped. The other, who was dressed entirely in white, pressed hardly upon him. It seemed as if in another second the latter must conquer. But no; the purple one recovered his footing. He pressed his antagonist in a perfect frenzy of tempestuous thrusts. It was now the turn of the one in white to give way. The combat became again so equal, so rapid, in its changing conditions, that, with tense muscles and hardly breathing, I strained my eyes to lose no move in the game.

"Oh!" Ejaculated the dwarf. "There! There! The lady in white!"

Through the door from the veranda a young woman had suddenly entered. With hands outstretched, just as Abdul had explained, she rushed across the room.

I needed no reminding voice to hold my attention. Before the woman could reach them, the man in white, pressed to the wall, fell upon one knee. With a triumphant smile of hate upon his dark face, his antagonist thrust forward with all his strength. An instant later, the woman, upon her knees, hung over the prostrate man, whilst the one in purple had turned and stood, his sword point lowered, watching the doorway.

What happened in the next few seconds I cannot even now recall in detail. I heard the dwarf cry out in some foreign tongue. Then, in English, the words, "Beware, sahib. He will kill you," followed. I saw the man in purple raise his sword. He seemed to lunge forward directly at George. Instantly George flung up his arms and fell, prone at the feet of the woman.

Then all, certainly as far as I myself was concerned, became oblivion.

When I came to myself, I was sitting upon the floor, and George was slowly climbing to his feet beside me. With dazed senses I looked about me. The room was empty. The dwarf was gone. Of the combatants and woman there was no sign. The veranda doors were tightly closed. All was still. A moment later the guardroom gong struck the half hour after eleven.

George.

"Where is Abdul?" gasped

"Heaven knows. Come home!" whispered George. "I need a large drink—quickly."

Ten minutes later we both found ourselves once again in our long chairs on the veranda Franklyn, his work finished, smoked and patiently listened to our disjointed narrative.

"Well," said he, presently, "I will admit that I was taken in by old Abdul when I first came here in exactly the same way. He is a remarkably clever little man. He has read the history of the fort and studied the portraits of the time in the books as well. When I say that, in addition to his ordinary knowledge, he is gifted—or cursed, as you may like to put it—with the most wonderful powers of hypnotism of which I have ever heard, even in the east, you will begin to understand the situation."

"What?" cried I. "Hypnotism?"

"Even so. Nothing more nor less. Abdul suggested the whole scene to you both. He completely subjected your wills to his. You saw only what he told you to see. George fell, wounded by suggestion. When he had quite finished his little game Abdul brought you both back to your senses and fled."

"I am for bed," said George, after a pause.

Curiosities of Seed-Sowing.

There are very few people who could say how many grains of wheat are required to sow an acre of land—or, indeed, how many grains there are in a pound of wheat. As a matter of fact, there are, on an average, ten thousand grains in a pound of wheat, and about a million grains are required to sow an acre. In a pound of barley the average number of grains is fifteen thousand, and it takes about two and a half million grains to sow an acre of barley. As regards oats, a pound represents eighteen thousand grains, and to cover an acre of ground some three millions of grains have to be sown. But it takes still more grains to make a pound of rye, the approximate number being twenty thousand, while as many as three and a half millions of grains are used in sowing an acre of rye. It will thus be seen that three times as many grains of oats are required to sow an acre as are necessary to sow it with wheat.

Asparagus Recipes.

Creamed Asparagus.—Take only the heads of the asparagus, as much as required, and put them into boiling water, with a little salt. Boil for about fifteen minutes. Meanwhile prepare some square bits of bread, without the crust, by scraping out the centre of each piece, putting in a bit of butter and frying or baking until the bread turns a yellow or light brown. After draining the asparagus, place it in the holes in the toasted bread taking care to keep all hot; then take half a pint of cream and heat to boiling point, to which add the yolks of four eggs, and stir until thick. Take it off the fire and add a little sprinkling of salt and pepper. Pour over the asparagus and bread and serve hot.

Olandese Sauce.—A sauce which the clever cook may use in many other ways, as well as in serving asparagus is made as follows: Rub four ounces of butter to a cream in a saucepan or bowl. Add four yolks of eggs and beat well together; then add one teaspoonful of salt and juice of half a lemon, a pinch of cayenne and one cupful of hot water poured in by degrees. Mix well and put in a double boiler (or set saucepan in pot of boiling water). Stir until the sauce becomes of the consistency of thick cream, being careful not to let it boil. Take off the fire and continue to stir for some minutes. "Olandese" sauce ought to be quite smooth and creamy.

Asparagus (Italian fashion) — Break some asparagus into pieces; boil soft, and drain the water, take a little oil, water and vinegar and let it boil, then season with pepper and salt. Pour in the asparagus and thicken with the whites of eggs. Green peas, cooked as above, are also very good; but lettuce, cut small, may be added and two or three onions, according to taste, omitting the eggs.

Asparagus on Toast.—Cut off the bottom of the stalks of a bunch of asparagus to make them even, and put in a pan of cold water till near dinner time. Put the bunch in boiling water, in which a pinch of soda has been dissolved. Boil a quarter of an hour, then drain and serve on buttered toast, placing the white ends of the asparagus on the toast. Pour one tablespoonful of melted butter over the green heads in the dish.

Plain Asparagus.—Many people prefer asparagus served plain. For this, it is only necessary to put the heads and softer parts of the stalk, either the whole or cut in inch long pieces, into boiling water, in which salt has been dissolved. Boil until soft, as previously stated, and serve with butter.

Years ago I discovered it was a spiritual as well as a physical necessity to have intervals of rest throughout the day—rest even from the companionship of those I loved the most dearly, writes a mother. My body so often became overtired from pressure of work that falls to the lot of every mother; my nerves sympathized as every good neighbor should, and my spirits ran at low ebb. But that ambitious brain—not always as wise a neighbor as my nerves—said: "Go on! Go on! There are a dozen things to be done yet!" and I obeyed my poor, foolish brain until my whole body and nerves became slaves to an imperious master. At last they revolted. They made my brain understand that its servants were not doing as good work, nor as much, under the whiplash of injustice, and it wisely changed its method. "Rest every little while," it now said. "You will work with new zeal. You will do more, and you will love your work. Your children will catch your happy mood just as before they caught your weary fretfulness."

Since then I make it a part of my religion to lie down on my back in a quiet room when I began to feel tired, and to relax every muscle and close my eyes (and my mind if possible) to all outward things. It is a wonderful tonic! It never fails to give me a new spiritual unlift. My loved ones seem more lovely to me, my home more attractive, and I am always glad of life and the blessed privilege of work. Until I began this practice I had never realized how closely related our spiritual and our physical bodies are, or that tired-out muscles and nerves are poor neighbors for the spirit.

Home Hints.

All dry cheese should be saved and kept for grating.

Poultry fat is excellent shortening for ginger cookies and spice cakes.

Fowl for chicken salad should be cooked the day before it is to be used.

Tubing makes the best pillow slips, and it may be had in two widths.

Wash green vegetables in warm water to remove the insects, and finish quickly in cold.

Dates and figs are both much improved if thoroughly washed and then allowed to drain.

Never throw a good tailored coat down carelessly if you wish it to preserve its shape.

In making meringues, the rule is a quarter of a cupful of powdered sugar to the white of an egg.

The perfect kitchen utensils are those of aluminum—easy to keep clean and very light to handle.

To cut thick silk satisfactorily, lay it between two pieces of tissue paper and cut with very sharp scissors.

Two big eyelets worked in the opposite corners of the kitchen towel are better than loops to hang it up by.

The torture of an ill-fitting shoe will bring about a state of irritability often resembling nervous prostration. This condition soon becomes habitual.

If there is occasion to wet cocoa, flour or cornstarch with water, use a fork for the process, instead of a spoon; the blending of the ingredients will be much more rapidly accomplished.

For the King's Use.

No other race of animals can show such a history as the black oxen that draw the funeral cars of dead Japanese emperors. They are a special breed, and for centuries have been kept for the sole use of the imperial family. The cream-colored Hanoverian horses, reserved for the British royal family, are nearly as famous, but some of these animals once wore the yoke of an alien and an enemy. When Napoleon occupied Hanover, in 1804, he seized all the cream-colored horses in the royal stables, and took them to Paris. The state carriage at his coronation was drawn by eight of these animals. This insult, as he regarded it, made George III. so angry that he would not use the others of the breed that were stabled in London. Until the fall of Napoleon, the state coach was always drawn by black horses when the king or his son, the prince regent, opened Parliament.

Eats 600 Pounds Daily.

Since the elephant's digestive functions are very rapid, it requires a large amount of fodder daily—about 600 pounds in most cases. In its wild state the elephant feeds heartily but wastefully. It is careful in selecting the few forest trees that it likes for their bark or foliage, but it will tear down branches and leave half of them untouched. It will strip off the bark from other trees and throw away a large portion.

ART ON EGG SHELLS.

Expert Puts From 4,000 to 5,000 Cuts on Brittle Surface.

It does not seem possible that the humble hen's egg can play any part in art. The fact, however, that it is the most fragile substance obtainable and the most difficult thing imaginable to handle induced Henry C. Mahoney, of Brighton, England, to set about carving the surface of a hen's egg. His first experiments were complete failures, and the only one to benefit was the tradesman who supplied him with the eggs.

"The first I managed to do successfully" he said, "was sent to King Edward VII. It was, I believe, the first one of its kind in existence.

"When I have selected an egg I hold it up to a very strong light to make sure it is free from straw, and then I draw the intended design on paper.

"This I repeat until I have committed it to memory, because it is not practicable to sketch the whole design on the shell, as it is necessary to wash it a good many times during the progress of the work.

"If it were held in the hand in the ordinary way the heat of the blood would have a detrimental effect on the shell, so I keep a cold cloth round it.

"The only tool I use is an engraver's square, specially tempered and sharpened, with a long V-shaped end. This I have to sharpen after every few strokes, because the edge is quickly dulled by the brittle surface of the shell."

A beautiful example of his art, to which he was giving the final touches, contained the monogram and cypher of King George V. surmounted by the Royal Crown, and bore the words: "Long Live the King. Crowned June, 1911," in a scroll.

The jewels cut in the crown required very great care. They were so close to each other that a breath of wind through a tube would have shivered the whole shell into a thousand fragments.

It was a remarkable piece of work, similar to this, and bearing the Prince of Wale's feathers and the motto "Ich Dien" that Mr. Mahoney sent to King George V. before he succeeded to the throne. There was an interesting sequel:

Mr. Mahoney was surprised one day by a visit from an emissary, who had obviously called with the purpose of testing the genuineness of the carving on the eggshell that had reached Marlborough House.

He inspected everything in the workshop, especially the chisel used in the delicate work. The caller was apparently more than satisfied, and the end of it was that the Prince of Wales purchased the carved shell.

SOME RULES FOR SUCCESS.

The man who would succeed must be full of grit. The faint-hearted and easily downed has no place in modern business competition.

He must give better service than his competitor gives, and failing in this must spare no effort until the cause of such failure be uprooted.

He must not be self-satisfied. The minute a man rests content with what he has done is his rival's opportunity.

He need not be a tyrant; he must not be "soft." It may be kind-hearted to keep on the inefficient, but it is not conducive to big business.

He must build well from the foundation. A big organization full of rotten timber will crash when the need to stand firm is strongest.

He must be honest. The day has passed when trickery pays. If you run your business to "do" your patrons be sure those patrons will soon go elsewhere. Give good service, the best that can be had for the money, and trade will flock your way.

He must be physically strong. Invalids there are aplenty who have made good, but the modern struggle for existence, to say nothing of business success, calls for robust health. Having good health, do not squander it.

He must be alert, progressive, quick to grasp opportunities, determined, ambitious and persevering. The quality of stick-to-itiveness counts more than brilliancy when making good is in order.

He must be able to make friends, and keep them, even when his interests clash with theirs. It takes a big man to be popular and successful at the same time. It is a despicable nature that works his friends; a weak one that allows friends to work him.

He must live within his means—well within. "If," as Franklin tells us, "you know how to spend less than you get, you have the philosopher's stone." You have far more—you have the key to success in life.
