PRESBYTERIANS HOLD CONGREGATIONAL SUPPER.

A very successful and enjoyable evening was spent in the Presbyterian Church, on Friday evening last when the members, adherents and friends of the congregation attended the Annual Congregational Supper. Many were unable to attend owing to the very bad condition of the roads, but in spite of these conditions many residents in the outlying portions of the parish were present. This was most encouraging to those in charge of the supper, as they felt it would be impossible for so many to get over the very bad stretches of road that some had to travel. The tables were laden as usual with an abundance of viands and pastries, which everyone present enjoyed.

After the supper the crowd assembled in the church where a social time was spent, and a short program of songs, recitations, readings and speeches was rendered.

ODDFELLOWS ATTEND ANNUAL CHURCH PARADE

Despite the inclement weather there was a goodly turn out of the membership of Laurenton Lodge, No. 14, of the Independent Order of Oddfellows, who attended Divine Service in the Presbyterian Church on Sunday morning last. A pleasing feature of the occasion was the visit of one of the oldest members in the Order Bro. Wm. Perry, of Montreal, who before the issue of The Watchman will have reached his 91st birthday. In full enjoyment of all his faculties, Mr. Perry took his place in the front rank and marched with springy step at the head of the procession. He is the oldest Oddfellow in the Province of Quebec, both in point of years and of membership in the order, having joined the fraternity fifty-five years ago. He is justly proud of his fifty year jewel, which he wore on this occasion.

An inspiring address was delivered by the Rev. Henry Cousens, the theme of his discourse being taken from the text "Let brotherly love continue" as found in Hebrews 13, vs. 1, from which he enlarged on the exemplification of the cardinal principles of the order "Friendship, Love and Truth." The value and necessity of love in the early Christian Church was shown, also that the early Church was a growing fraternity where "Friendship, Love and Truth" were valued and practiced. This admonition of the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, was then urged to meet present needs of society in a series of answers given to the question, "Why should we let brotherly love continue?" and "How can we let it continue?"

It's an old saying that "Money Makes Money" and Mr. H. M. Lavigne is ready to prove the truth of that statement by the very special values he is offering at his "Big Reduction Sale" which takes place on May 4th., and lasting until the 14th. Here you will find some wonderful bargains, so don't miss coming to Magasin Henri, Lachute Mills.

The Lachute Fire Brigade were called out on Friday last to the farm of Charles Morrison, on Bethany St., who had been clearing up around his premises and set fire to some grass. A strong wind was blowing at the time and the fire got beyond control, reaching a mow of hay, which it speedily consumed. The firemen got busy and soon had it under control, but Saturday they were recalled as the wind veered around and fanned some smouldering embers so that the barn was threatened. The pump was brought into play and succeeded in overcoming the blaze without further loss.

While everybody seems to be more or less discouraged about the weather, it is some consolation to note that other places are worse off than here. Last week, for instance, the State of Maine, reported fourteen inches of snow, the papers speaking of midwinter conditions and "impassable highways." Down in New York too they have been treated to ice and snow. So, although we talk of far away fields looking green, there is no use to grumble, but take things as they come, for seed time and harvest will furnish the necessary in its own good time.

MEMORIAL SERVICE OF LATE REV. ALBERT MATHEWS

A large gathering of sympathizing friends assembled in the United Church, on Sunday afternoon to pay their respects to the memory of the late Rev. Albert Mathews, whose death occurred on January 29th. 1928.

Owing to sickness in the home at time of his death the usual service was unable to be held and the Memorial Service which took place on Sunday gave the opportunity for public expression of sympathy to the bereaved family. The Rev. Mr. Mick and Rev. Mr. Cassidy both paid loving and affectionate tribute to the life of deceased and the deep appreciation of his labors.

LITERARY AND DRAMATIC SOCIETY.

The Literary-Dramatic Society held their closing meeting for the season, on Thursday, April 26, in the Academy. An investigation Committee brought forward schemes which would benefit the community, and finally, by a process of elimination, it was decided to donate a hospital bed and a stretcher for the use of the town, while the rest of the projects could be discussed further during the next season.

The stretcher which is badly needed, will be available for transporting patients to Montreal; and the bed will be rented to those needing it at a very small cost.

The officers for the following year were elected as follows:

Hon. President, Mr. H. M. Gall, President, Mr. Clarence Rodgers, Vice-President, Mrs. Geo. Leggett, Literary Chairman, Miss M. Jones, Literary Secretary, Miss G. Rosser, Dramatic Chairman, Mrs. George Leggett.

Treasurer, Mr. C. L. Duncan.

Librarian, Miss Marian Slater.

In closing, the Society expressed their deep regret because of Mr. Brunt's departure from Lachute. During the past two years Mr. Brunt has made very keen efforts to further the success of the society, and much praise and gratitude are heartily extended to him.

WEDDING BELLS. BARNES-STANFORTH.

The LAND OF FORGOTTEN MEN

by Edison Marshall

CHAPTER XX. REUNITED.

The simple words, so moving and mysterious in the half-light, lifted Dorothy to the skies, out of the storm and the night, the despair and the terror never to descend again; yet she knew no particular sense of amazement other than that of her own blindness in failing to guess Peter's identity long since.

There was not one fraction of an instant's doubt or question of the simple declaration. Before the undulation of the deep tone was dead in the air, she knew, as well as she knew the fact of her own life, that the man spoke true. For all his face and form were utterly different, his hands and voice and carriage wholly changed, this was Peter Newhall, her husband, in the flesh.

There was no time to dwell upon the wonder of it. She saw a swift shadow at the edge of the fire's glow—something that moved like a stalking wolf toward Peter—and she cried sharply in warning. At the same instant she sprang from her own place in an instinctive effort to protect her husband from that stealthy, murderous assault.

Her cry reached Peter not an instant too soon. Because his nerves were sound, and the ravages of his youthful dissipation wholly repaired, he was able to act upon that warning in the twinkling of an eye. There was no time for thought; as if by instinct he leaped aside, his quick eye caught sight of the figure that was even now poised to strike, and his powerful muscles made swift and tremendous response. Pavlov, faithful to the last to his demigod, had drawn a knife that flashed in a shining arc and started to save the situation in his own way; but Peter's rifle swung in his arms and the heavy barrel struck the leaping figure with shattering force. He crumpled in the moss, for the time being impotent and unconscious.

It seemed to Peter that the Russian's hand moved toward his hip, and he wisely decided to take the offensive. The rifle leaped to his shoulder, and the long, strong finger curled about the trigger, ready to exert the little deadly ounce of pressure at the needed instant. Whatever murderous instincts had been awakened in Ivan were speedily repressed. Once before he had seen that rifle at that same shoulder—the day his life had been menaced by the charging she-bear—and he remembered the sureness of aim, the lightning swiftness of fire. That deadly combination could not fail at this close range.

"I don't trust this bunch," Peter said roughly. "Put up your hands, Ivan. I'm not going to take a chance." Ivan obeyed promptly; Peter was in a deadly mood. The Mongol was a brave man and a sportsman, yet he did not even attempt his old, grim smile of bravado. "You seem to hold the cards," he said simply.

"I'm going to continue to hold them, too," Peter gave a quick glance in search of Sarichef, finding him, appalled and terrified, in the shadows beside the dugout. The latter had left his rifle and supplies in the dugout; and no shadow of opportunity remained in which to seize it and use it in his master's behalf. He threw up his hands at Peter's command.

Next Peter located Fortune Joe, also obscured in the shadows, and called him to his side. "Search all these fellows for weapons," he ordered simply, "and pile 'em up in front of me. Get Ivan's pistol first."

Joe obeyed promptly, and at Peter's command carried down the sacks of supplies that had been prepared for to-morrow's journey and loaded them in the dory. The weapons were similarly disposed of. Then, shielding Dorothy behind him, he backed down to the water's edge.

He helped the girl into the bow seat; then, while he stood guard, Joe shoved off. As the boat was lifted on the first, little wave he himself sprang in. Joe grasped his oars.

"Can we make it out?" Peter asked quietly of his oarsmen. There was a tremor in his voice now; but it was nothing to cost Joe his confidence in him, or Dorothy her faith. The native knew him as a strong leader, a worthy representative of a great race. To Dorothy came the certain knowledge that as long as her hand lay in his, no rough seas need appall her, no moaning darkness fill her with fear. With such companionship as they had, as existed everywhere between well-mated men and women of their race, what heathen border could conquer them, what lesser breeds despoil them of their dominance!

Joe dipped his oars. "It's a strong wind, but fair," he said laconically. It was a strong wind, but fair, that blew them down the Peninsula. Many the time they were menaced by reefs and up-jutting sea crags; often they were harassed by storms and obliged to seek shelter in the deep-cut bays, and more than once it seemed beyond belief that they would not be instantly overwhelmed. But always Fortune Joe's good seamanship, assisted by Peter's good nerve and strong muscles, brought them safely through.

It was a long, difficult, dangerous journey; but these were voyagers not to be despised. Dorothy, the daughter of a strong breed, had always had a potential strength with which to meet such tests as this, and with Peter beside her, the old curse of fear was largely lifted. Even if they had to go the whole long way to the nearest settlement they would have overcome the dangers, won their race with winter, and come through. As it happened, the sea gods were favorable to their venture, and halfway out they encountered a sturdy launch sent from Unalakleet to their rescue.

The Warrior had not gone down, after all. She had broken her wheel on the way to shelter that first day and, helpless against the storm, had been blown through the chain of islands and far out into the Pacific. Ultimately she had encountered a ship, had been helped into port, and had arranged by wireless for a rescue party to go in search of her passengers marooned on the mainland.

Ivan and his two followers had already vanished into the interior, probably on their way to some of the Eskimo villages beyond the bays, when the rescue ship touched at the scene of the late camp. Peter's return home, his wife beside him, was accomplished in good time, and here both are hidden in the maze of human events. The straw that the guide Pete had cut for the wilderness beds was blown away on the winds, the cooking rack grew weather-beaten and was at last blown down, and the alder thickets spread and encompassed the camp. Soon there was little sign that human beings had ever passed that way. The caribou fed at the very mouth of the dugout, only occasionally stopping to sniff, in wonder, at the man-beat ashes of the fire; the wolverine hunted with unabated ferocity along the creek bed; and sometimes the great, surly Alaskan grizzly wandered through the camp, wondering, no doubt, what manner of his brethren had once had their lair on this lonely beach and why they had gone away. The waves still broke and rolled on the shore, but no one looked across them for a returning ship; and the wind blew, but no one was appalled by its raving. Only the white cross, seemingly spared by the forces of the elements, still endured—a white emblem of eternity, perhaps a landmark for natives heading down the coast in their skin boats.

Again the elements ruled supreme; the snow, lay untracked by human footprints from sea to sea, the wind swept unchecked by any human habitation. Yet their victory would be short-lived. As Peter had prophesied, in time even this storm-swept, savage land would be drawn into man's dominions. Peter himself would return some time. There was one duty still unperformed.

The matter was called to his attention the second night after they had boarded the rescue ship from Unalakleet. He had stood on the deck with Dorothy, watching the eerie trail where the churning propeller set the sea alight; and the girl seemed wandering in a dream-world of her own. "There's just one thing that isn't clear," she told him, in the low voice that haunted him throughout the years of his exile. "You remember the seance—I asked to speak to you. The message that came through was what made me decide to marry Ivan. It was 'Change the name'—just that: 'Change the name.' What do you make of it, Peter?"

He turned to her, and she saw that he was smiling cryptically. "The message was logical enough, Dorothy," he said, "if you want to believe."

"But you were there, in the circle—"

"You didn't ask so many words to speak to me. If you did, Fortune Joe didn't get it straight. Surely you remember how bewildered he was, how he seemed at a loss. He didn't get any results until you told him that you wanted to speak to the man who lay in that grave. And if you want to, you can believe the message came from him!"

He knew by the touch of her hand and the lustre in her eyes that she was deeply moved. "To change the name on the cross!" she exclaimed.

"Of course. But perhaps it was just something telepathic, coming from me. Sometimes we've got to go back and do it; it's only decent. Besides we want to visit again the land that brought us our happiness—cruel and savage place though it is. Dorothy, what matters and what doesn't no one really knows; and who can say but that false inscription on the cross matters more than nations or worlds to the man who lies beneath? We'll rub out the name Peter Newhall, and write in Big Chris Larson. Then maybe he can sleep in peace."

(The End.)

American Prosperity

Vancouver Province (Ind. Cons.): (Rumors persist that everything is not well with American economic conditions.) If it could happen without injury to the welfare of Canada, there are many people in this country who could cheerfully contemplate hard times in the United States. They argue that it would be good for the soul of America that her people should know something of the anxiety which the rest of the world has known through the demoralization and the depression of the Great War. They say it would be mighty good for the peace of the world that the people of the United States should cease to think themselves the economic supermen of the universe. But there is no comfort and little validity in this theory. It is hard to see how Canada could escape the contagion of hard times in the United States.

Many Changes In Advertising

Club Hears of Conditions Which Prevailed 150 Years Ago

Print used in newspaper advertising 150 years ago was much smaller than is generally used to-day, said Louis Carrier, French-Canadian writer and publisher, in describing newspaper advertising of former days to the members of the Advertising Club, of Montreal.

Advertising of the 18th century, the small amount that was carried in the newspapers, had no display lines and no large type. Advertisers contented themselves with stating the facts with little ostentation to catch the eye. As space in newspapers became more plentiful advertisers accustomed themselves to using more and more of it. At one time notices cost so much for each one regardless of the amount of the space they used, unless they were considered quite large, when the advertiser was asked to pay double the amount.

The scarcity of space in the early newspapers was mentioned by the speaker who said that it was often for this reason that news from Europe was at times printed 13 months late. If an event in Europe of ordinary importance was printed five months after it happened, it was then considered to be speedy work in chronicling.

During his talk, Mr. Carrier traced the beginnings of newspapers on this continent. The first newspaper was established in Boston, and it was really from that city that journalism spread to Canada. The speaker made special reference to Benjamin Franklin, whom he styled as the patron saint of printing in North America. Dr. Franklin did much to influence public opinion in North America, and Mr. Carrier considered that Dr. Franklin, rather than Washington, should have been called the "Father of his country."

The speaker gave a short history of newspapers in Canada, mentioning the Halifax Gazette as the first to be established in 1752. The Quebec Gazette was begun in 1763, followed by the Montreal Gazette in 1778.

In these days a murderer is crazy if he doesn't plead insanity.

THERE is nothing quite equal to Aspirin for all sorts of aches and pains, but be sure it is Aspirin. The name Bayer should appear on every tablet. Bayer is genuine, and the word genuine—in red—is on every box. You can't go wrong if you will just look at the box when you buy it:

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada) of Bayer Manufacturing. While it is well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to assure the public against imitations, the tablets will be stamped with their "Bayer Cross" trade mark.

Equipping with Gum-Dipped Tires is an investment in extra safety, speed, comfort and economy. That is why thousands of motorists throughout the country use these tires.

On wet, slippery streets and highways—around sharp turns—maneuvering in and out of traffic—stopping suddenly—you can always depend on the powerful Firestone non-skid tread to hold without slip or skid.

Supporting this safety tread is the special Gum-Dipped carcass, built of cords dipped in a rubber solution which saturates and insulates every fibre of every cord with rubber. This minimizes the friction and heat of high speed service, and strengthens the whole structure of the tire to withstand heavy strains.

Sailing Vessels on a Long Voyage

Windjammers to Compete in Run From the Golden Gate to Alaska as in Old Glamorous Days of Sail

BY TOM WHITE

One more deep sea classic will be staged this spring when two veteran square-riggers of the West coast clear from the Golden Gate and lay a course for the Alaskan coast, an 1,800 mile voyage. Generous wagers are being laid by shipping men in San Francisco and each skipper has staked a month's pay on his ship, which adds zest to the event.

The ship Alaska and the bark England, both flying the Stars and Stripes, are the contenders for speed honors. Both are scheduled to clear from San Francisco on the ebb tide Tuesday. Both vessels are now being groomed for their long run. Sails are being sent aloft and bent, running gear is being carefully over-hauled and both ships shortly will go into dry dock for scraping and painting. Stowing away a light cargo—just enough for ample ballast requirements—will take but a few days, when they will be ready to go.

A DIFFICULT TEST.

With the almost complete disappearance of the old windjammers from the open waters of the seven seas, the coming contest is drawing the eyes of the nautical world to that stretch of waters that extends from the Golden Gate to the Aleutian Archipelago, where winds and seas are troublesome and ships often become temperamental.

Not only does the course itself present sporting possibilities, but the sailing qualities of the two ships and the experience and ability of their respective masters are nearly identical. Opinions of old-time sailing masters, however, are found to differ widely. This difference is based largely on the matter of rig and rests on the age-old question of the relative merits of a bark and a ship—how much closer one can sail to the wind and how much easier she handles when running before it, offset by the greater spread of canvas carried by the other. This moot question will be settled only with the passing of the last of the old sailing ship masters.

Captain Martin Mortensen is skipper of the Alaska, while Captain Charles Wiese commands the bark England. Both have sailed the waters of the North Pacific for years. They know the prevailing winds and where they can be found; and the tides that eddy and swirl through the islands of the northern seas are likewise an open book to these tried navigators.

The prevailing winds off the California coast are out of the west. The common practice, then, for north-bound captains is to first make a long reach, or "tack" as they call it, far out to sea, braced sharp up, until they pick up a fair wind. By the time they are well clear of the land they alter their course, come about and strike north.

It so happens that the destinations of the two racing windjammers are but twelve miles apart; they both have to pass Chirikof Island. To the skipper who first "raises" Chirikof will go the honors of this picturesque blue water classic.

THE ALASKA'S RECORD.

Although the bark England may turn out to be a dark horse, the popular favorite is the ship Alaska. Upholding her record as a fleet sailer three years ago, she pared down the run to Chignik, whence she is bound this spring, to twelve days. Will the England better this record? If not, will she sight Chirikof ahead of her comely rival?

Like their majestic sisters of the clipper-ship era the tall masts of these vessels rake the blue nearly two hundred feet above the whitecaps; their eager bows are slim and their tapering bowsprits reach gracefully over the heaving seas. And, like their famed ancestors, their decks resound to the tramp of hurrying feet and creaking blocks as sail is shortened in the dark mid-watch. But in one respect, at least, they are different—vastly different—from the ships of the clipper days, for their lofty masts carry the familiar spreaders and antennae of the radio.

THE OLD SPIRIT LINGERS.

Through the air, then, will come the name of the winning ship. Call it incongruous if you will, but the spirit of the old-time windjammers is still abroad. Even yet it reeks with salt and tar and fresh paint. Along careening decks still comes the musical tinkle of the ship's bell; and the glory of piled-up canvas and high-dunged bows is still as much a part of the picture as ever.

The race might well be considered as a farewell gesture on the part of the old windjammers. These two craft, out of a mere handful of their noble kind that still roam the seas, are fighting a losing battle against the steamer and the motorship; and while they are expected to take every possible fair advantage of each other in the struggle for a new speed record, when the race is run they will reunite and, with their few remaining sisters, offer a last, feeble resistance against the overpowering odds of steam and Diesel engines.

actually does is pretty sure to be a compromise. He usually desires a car that costs more than the amount of money at his disposal, so he compromises and buys a less expensive car than he really would like. On the other hand, he may compromise with the amount of money in his pocket and decide to borrow a little more, adding to it that already in hand so that he can buy a little better car than he had first thought possible. This is another form of compromise. It may, however, be a wise thing to do, since the larger initial investment may give him more satisfaction over a longer period of years with no extra financial outlay.

When it comes to the matter of equipment, compromise again comes to the front. Perhaps the man's wife would like to have a closed car, whereas the man prefers an open one. In a case of this kind the compromise can be calculated to result in his buying the closed model. However, if there is some argument over the number of flower vases and vanity cases to be installed in the interior of the car it may be that here the man will more vigorously assert himself and that the compromise will be more largely on the part of the woman of the household. When it comes to considering various accessories, such as bumpers, windshield wipers, stop signals, dashboard clocks, etc., a large majority will compromise by securing those things which seem essential and make for real comfort in operating the car, passing up a number of features which, while adding certain refinements, are not by any means essential.

An Essential Factor.

One of the most essential factors in satisfactory motoring is, of course, the automobile engine. There is a tendency to produce engines which have rather high compression. If the compression, however, is much higher than the average now on the market the increase in power and in number of miles per gallon of gasoline are not likely to be obtained unless just the exact grade of gasoline can be secured which will provide the best performance. If a person gets a low compression engine he can use almost any kind of ordinary gasoline and get by without the inconvenience of engine knocking. However, he will have less power and use more gasoline for travelling a given number of miles. As a rule a man in such circumstances will compromise by securing an engine having as high compression as can be driven with fairly good results with the fuel available.

Take the matter of the amount of inflation in automobile tires. With the introduction of the balloon type of tire, which has now become practice-

Empire Singers Enthrall Canada

Singing a repertoire that includes over one hundred pieces of part-music, ranging through practically every style and taking in folk-songs of England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales and America, with both sacred and secular music, the Westminster Glee Singers are now engaged in a tour of Canada that will be a delight to music-lovers. They are singing in the Dominion under the patronage of His Excellency the Governor-General of Canada and have recently completed tours of Australia, New Zealand, the Straits Settlements, India and Ceylon, a record unequalled by any other musical organization.

The singers are composed of male altos, tenors, basses and a number of boy sopranos who like the men are taken from the finest Cathedral choirs of Great Britain. They will give concerts in most of the cities of Canada from Halifax to Victoria and return. They are travelling for the most part on Canadian air-line lines during their tour of the Dominion.

Uses X-Ray to Find Break in Radio Set

London.—George Cilasold uses an X-ray to discover breaks in his radio set.

He owns a receiver guaranteed for a certain length of time so long as the panel seal is not broken. His instrument developed a fault. Although quite sure that the receiver was at fault, he was loth to investigate further because of the seal.

A friend is an X-ray photograph, and he decided to have an X-ray photograph of the receiver taken. The picture disclosed that one wire was loose, being just held by the insulation.

On returning the receiver to the makers he informed them that if they broke the seal they would find a certain wire disconnected, but he omitted to mention how he knew. His reputation as a radio expert went up when repairs found that his diagnosis was correct.

have rather high compression. If the compression, however, is much higher than the average now on the market the increase in power and in number of miles per gallon of gasoline are not likely to be obtained unless just the exact grade of gasoline can be secured which will provide the best performance. If a person gets a low compression engine he can use almost any kind of ordinary gasoline and get by without the inconvenience of engine knocking. However, he will have less power and use more gasoline for travelling a given number of miles. As a rule a man in such circumstances will compromise by securing an engine having as high compression as can be driven with fairly good results with the fuel available.

Take the matter of the amount of inflation in automobile tires. With the introduction of the balloon type of tire, which has now become practice-ally universal in use, a person can follow one of three procedures. He can secure greater riding comfort and greater wear and tear on his tires by having them somewhat underinflated. In the second place, he can perhaps get a greater amount of mileage out of his tires and less comfort in riding by having them inflated above the number of pounds pressure recommended by the manufacturer. The third possibility is one of compromise whereby the motorist follows the instructions of the manufacturers and get an inflation which gives more comfort than the old style tires gave and at the same time does it without too great a sacrifice in the matter of wear and tear.

Possibly there is one place in a motorist's experience where compromise is not advisable. This is in reference to matters pertaining to safety. For instance, the operator of an automobile may be tempted to compromise in the matter of his braking facilities. He may feel that if he can bring his car to a stop within a reasonable distance he is fairly well protected. In a case of this kind he cannot afford to compromise. He should be sure that his brakes and all other parts of his automobile which are largely related to safe operation should be so adjusted as to insure such safe procedure beyond reasonable doubt. A motorist may compromise on the color of his car, upon the upholstery used in the interior, upon the design of the radiator cap or the make of the carburetor, but he cannot afford to compromise on any part of the automobile which may be the means of saving human life.

French Frigate Shoal is Deadliest Spot in Pacific

Story of Provisionless Bark That Mistook It For a Brig and Was Drawn to Doom

Sable Island is the graveyard of the North Atlantic, but French Frigate Shoal is the deadliest spot for sailing craft in the Pacific Ocean. This shoal, 500 miles northwest of Honolulu, received its name from the loss of a French frigate there more than a hundred years ago. Since then it has been piling up wrecks to its credit like an old-time bad man making notches on his gun.

The thrilling story of the shipwrecked crew of the French bark Connetable de Richemont reveals the tragic lure of the reef that has been called the Siren of the Pacific.

The Connetable left Hong Kong for a nitrate port on the coast of Chili. Contrary winds delayed her and, facing starvation, Captain Rault changed his course for Honolulu. He was still hopeful of meeting a ship that could furnish him food enough to enable him to return to his course to Chili, and when the lookout early one morning sang out, "Sail ho! Off the weather bow," the watch officer seized his glasses and saw what he thought was a big brig. He ordered the bark steered to cross the stranger's bows.

When dawn revealed objects clearly it was too late to correct the error; the bark was in swift current and was being carried rapidly to her doom. She struck with great force on the reef. Though she did not go to pieces at once, no efforts could dislodge her. Finally Captain Rault gave the order to abandon ship. Three boats were launched, the sea being calm, the weather fine.

Captain Rault's boat landed in Nihau, Island of Kauai, two weeks later after fourteen days of semi-starvation and many battles with the elements. The second boat, in charge of the boatswain, reached Kailua four days later. The third boat, under command of Chief Officer Laine, was missing. The French Consul at Honolulu dispatched two steamers for it, and the United States naval commandant was about to send an American warship on the same errand when it was reported by wireless as having arrived at Lihua.

Occupy Huts in Day, Seek Trees At Night to Escape Beasts

Valleys of Brahmaputra and Surma in Northeast India Homes of Tribes Studied

There is probably no part of the British Empire which contains so much of interest and of which so little is generally known as Assam. It is situated at the northeast corner of India and consists of the valleys of the Brahmaputra and the Surma, with the intervening range of hills.

The range of mountains between the two valleys is the home of tribes which are of the greatest interest to the ethnologist. In the west are the Garos, who live in tiny hamlets in jungle-covered hills, where elephants and man-eating tigers are so numerous that men have taken to sleeping like birds in trees. They have huts on the ground which they occupy during the day, but at night they mount into little houses of bamboo built in the branches of a tree stout enough to resist the attacks of a wild elephant.

In the centre come the Khaas, who still adhere to the matriarchal system. A mere male has no independent economic existence. Before his marriage he earns for his mother; after marriage he earns for his wife; and if, as sometimes happens, she divorces him, she keeps all the property acquired during their union. Inheritance goes through the female, and, though men rule the little communities into which the tribe is divided, they are succeeded by their sisters' sons. It is as their mother's and not as their father's representative that they have reached the headship of the state, and their own sons have no claim to succeed, since they are members of their mother's family and are in no way affected by the position of their father.

In one section of the tribe husbands and wives continue to live each in the old home, even after marriage; there is no common married life and the husband is simply an instrument for the transmission of life to the next generation. But though their family customs are the exact opposite of those which prevail in other parts of the world, the women are not harsh viragos nor the men poor, weakly parasites. On the contrary, both men and women are a cheery, independent lot, and the children are almost as attractive as the children of Japan.

A combination of circumstances has converted the province into a second Tower of Babel. The tribes are derived from different racial stocks, and the difficulties of communication in the hills and the unfriendly habits of the Nagas led to the growth and perpetuation of different languages. As a result 101 different languages are spoken among a population of a little over 8,000,000 persons.

Says African Game Are Growing Blase

Veil of Mystery Rising

Paris.—Darkest Africa is becoming altogether too much overrun by tourists in search of thrills, in the opinion of Daniel W. Streeter, author and explorer, who has just returned to Paris on his way home from another expedition which he described as "seven Babbitts after an elephant."

Furthermore, Mr. Streeter has returned convinced that the fauna of Africa must at once be given a seat on the Disarmament Commission of the League of Nations, for they really need disarmament to suppress the Corde rifle and armored car with which they now are so expensively hunted. "Ours," said Mr. Streeter, "was really a scientific expedition. No member of it knew anything about Africa, so we all were able to speak of the subject without prejudice. We wanted to discover whether the veil was being lifted from the Dark Continent as rapidly as was reported. Incidentally we shot a few elephants."

"Our discoveries were startling. Science ought to thank us. It probably won't, but it ought to. Here are some of our results."

"Don't go big game hunting in Africa unless you have saved some money; then if you want to keep it, don't go big game hunting in Africa. Financial hazards have been added to the many others, for darkest Africa is teeming with explorers, naturalists and ordinary organized rubber-neck tourists."

"We who go big game hunting are the playboys of Africa. We may have other reasons but primarily we go there to get scared. If we get scared half to death our trip is a success. Our trip was a success."

"It seems a long, expensive journey for simple pleasure and a couple of good scares. They might be got nearer home, in Chicago politics, for instance. But the difference lies in the fact that even today Africa is able to offer pliancy and unrivaled mystery with her thrills."

"However, her days are numbered. Her mystery is being unraveled very rapidly and soon will be thoroughly trampled. Her flora and fauna are becoming sophisticated, almost hard-boiled. They are acquainted with armored cars which spit fire at them, with airplanes, with cameras in all their aspects and with the sound of the megaphones of professional guides. The flora has been exhaustively microscopied and the fauna is getting tired of providing thrills for other people at the expense of their lives."

"The League of Nations, which is considering setting aside large stretches of the ocean in which the

Stone Theatre to Be Built For Oberammergau Play

Berlin.—A theatre built of stone and with a seating capacity of 4,500 will soon displace the present wooden structure at Oberammergau, Bavaria, where the Passion Play is held every decade. Whether the next series of performances will be held in 1930 or 1932 is not definitely settled, but the new structure will be opened whenever they are held.

A new building for dressing rooms for the 700 players in the drama will also be erected.

The total cost is estimated at $72,000. A loan will be necessary to get funds for the construction of the two buildings.

Whether the tradition of having the stage in the open will be abandoned in the new plans has not been decided.

whale may frolic unmolested, must soon do so also for the lion and the elephant. For Africa is becoming Americanized—that is to say, its animals are going the way of the buffalo. Big tracts are already reserved and they certainly are needed. For things are moving fast and the curtain will soon descend on the last act of the African drama. Beasts of fang and claw, the fragile gazelle and the lusty antelope are awaiting their fate. "With them will pass the playboys of the cordite rifle."

Many Factors Come to Front In Buying Car

Important Questions Involved in Buying Often Lead into Compromises

Certain Standards Set

Safety Should Be Consideration in Equipment

The automobile often reminds one as having certain characteristics of a human being. One of these resemblances seems to be that both the automobile and a human being represent a series of compromises. From the beginning to the end of the average motorist's experience his motoring career appears to consist of one compromise after another.

Probably the first compromise an individual makes is when, either as a novice in the automobile world or as a man having had previous experience, he contemplates the purchase of a new car. One of the important questions in connection with buying a new machine is how much will it cost? Faced with a problem of this kind the average man will consider about how much money he has available for purchasing a new car, what are the purposes for which he is buying the machine, how long does he expect to use it before turning it in for another new model, how does the automobile look compared to designs owned and operated by his neighbors and others? Doubtless there are other considerations.

TOWN COUNCIL.

The regular meeting of the above Council was held on Wednesday last at which were present Mayor H. M.
Gall and Aldermen T. Dallaire, H.
Lavigne, G. J. Charland, Jos. Speight,
A. Larocque, P. Dobbie, A. Elliott,
C. Miller and Dr. Sauvé.

Minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed and reports of finance committee received and amounts ordered paid.

Clean up days was ordered for Thursday and Friday next, May 10th, and 11th.

On motion of Alderman Dobbie, seconded by Alderman Elliott it was decided that no more pumps or tanks would be allowed on the streets.

A petition was presented to the Council, bearing 173 signatures urging for the establishment of a Government Liquor Store in town and praying the Council for a referendum in which a ballot vote would be called for.

Alderman Charland gave notice of motion that at next meeting he would introduce a by-law covering the same.

The question of day light saving was received and came in for quite a little discussion with the result that it was deemed advisable if a referendum for the liquor store was granted, that a referendum be also taken on the question of daylight saving so that the voting on the two questions could be taken at the same time and this was included in the motion of Alderman Charland.

A communication was received from the Biltmore Shirt Co., who wrote the town for particulars as to what inducements the town were prepared to offer them should they locate their factory in Lachute. They promise employment to 200 girls in the manufacture of Men's and Boys' Shirts.
A committee composed of Mayor H.
M. Gall with Aldermen Lavigne, Charland and Larocque was appointed to interview to secure them for the town.

A number of matters pertaining to the Road Committee were dealt with and the Council adjourned until next week.

Broadcasters Play Old Game With Words Slightly Changed

"Profits, Profits, Who Has the Profits?" Is the Cry of the Studios—The Answer Is, "There Are None, Apparently"

"Button, Button, Who's Got the Button?" Most of us remember the innocent amusement of childhood. No party was complete without it. Along with the pleytable "refreshments" and "Postoffice" it formed the triumvirate of parties. An echo of this old query, changed by the years, is still heard in broadcasting studios. It is not "Button, button," however, but "Profits, profits, who has the profits?"

A glance at the financial statements of broadcasters indicates that if there are profits, in the generally accepted sense of dollars and cents, the radio studio is not getting them. If they are accruing they are replenishing the coffers of others than those who nightly radiate their versions of entertainment over the length and breadth of the land. Broadcasting, according to broadcasters, pays returns, but not monetary returns. Public regard and the place that a radio station wins in the ears of America comprise its profits.

The average receiving set owner, who twirls the dials until his favorite station comes floating into the room, probably never bothers his head about how that station is maintained, what the cost of operations is for one year and why, the station stays on the air. If he thought about these things at all he would in all likelihood ask himself "how the station stays on the air, who pays the deficit each year and why the station is maintained."

Broadcasting has won a place in the homes of the country, but only the station owner knows how and at what a cost. Most of these are wondering how long it can stay. It is sickly and undernourished, and its tenure of life depends on frequent injections of dollars to counteract the deficit fever from which it has been suffering since the first station went on the air, more than seven years ago. Another bit of information that may surprise the general likelihood ask himself how the stations are the ones that suffer the greatest financial losses during the year.

Upkeep Cost Is Large

Apparently, there is a paradox here, but a close examination of the facts removes the seeming contradiction. The most popular stations enjoy their place in the affections of the public through the high type of programs that they radiate day after day and night after night. They have set a standard, and living up to this standard calls for the best in program features. These cost money, and, while many of the stations sell time on the air, few, if any, have enough sponsored programs to fill their broadcasting schedule on any given day. The programs maintained by the studio to fill in the hours between paid programs must compare favorably with the entertainment offered by an advertiser.

This means that the studio must engage under contract reputable entertainers. The profits, then, that should accrue from sponsored programs are spent on studio programs, so that the broadcaster may continue to hold the popularity that it has won. When he station overhead is added to this it is no wonder that the studio's ledgers show a yearly deficit. The station upkeep is no inconsiderable item. Salaries for program directors, announcers and a competent office force more than counterbalance the receipts from companies buying time.

A representative of one broadcasting company said: "From a financial viewpoint, broadcasting is a flop. We sell five out of every ten hours that we are on the air, and we are not operating at a profit. Until we sell at least seven out of every ten hours we will be continually faced with a deficit."

An idea of just what a chain system spends during the year may be obtained from the statement of the National Broadcasting Company. During 1927 this company spent more than $6,000,000 in presenting programs. In addition to this is another $2,000,000 expended for the same purpose by companies buying time over its networks. Where does this money go? A representative of the company said that more than $1,350,000 went for wire charges. One of the sustaining programs put on by the company over WEAJ costs $3,000 a week. This is the National Grand Opera Company hour. When it was first radiated, an official looked at the bill and asked, "What is the response?" He was told that not one letter commenting on the program had been received.

Following his suggestion the hour was cut off the next week and another program was substituted. Within a few minutes after the substitute went on the air the telephone began to ring and people began to ask what had happened to the opera. A total of more than 800 telephone calls of this nature came in during the night. A week later the $3,000 hour was put back on the air. There are many of these sustaining programs put on by the company. WEAJ during 1927 was on the air approximately 4,500 hours, while its sister station, WJZ, had a total in excess of 3,000. Approximately one-fifth of these hours were paid for by commercial programs. The remainder were paid for by the company.

Lindbergh's reception, the President's addresses, football games, world's series games—all these are furnished to the country over the National's system, and the broadcasting company pays the freight! In addition, the company operates two fifty-kilowatt transmitters, WEAJ and WJZ, the former being owned by the company and the latter by the Radio Corporation of America. A radio engineer, in commenting on their upkeep, said that keeping them on the air during the year would cost at least $500,000. This was quoted as a conservative figure.

But the costs do not stop here. There are salaries for program directors, station managers, announcers, clerks, receptionists, salesmen and the large office force that is needed to keep the system functioning smoothly. In addition, there is rent and maintenance charges for studios and offices, and when all the expenses have been met the debit side of the ledger reads like the credit side of a successful stock broker's books.

Profits in broadcasting? There are none, apparently. The little station says the big fellow is getting them. It is the mystery game of childhood played to a new set of words, "Profits, profits, who gets the profits?" You pick your winner and you lose—but nightly the stations go on the air.

Ireland-Free State

The New Ireland Looks Forward to Friendly Treaties With the Rest of the World

By William Thomas Cosgrave
President of the Irish Free State, Who is Now Visiting This Side of the Atlantic

The Irish Free State is a co-equal member of the British Commonwealth of Nations. To understand what her precise status is it is necessary to recall some of the chief distinguishing characteristics of the states that are members of that group.

At the Imperial Conference held in London in November, 1926, it was deemed opportune to make a solemn declaration setting forth the information of the world the status of the commonwealth group of nations as it could be deduced from existing practice. It must be remembered that the Prime Ministers of all the member states, including the Prime Minister of Great Britain, were present at the conference, and its proceedings were therefore sanctioned by the highest authority.

It was declared that the group of self-governing communities composed of Great Britain, the Irish Free State and the overseas dominions were "equal in status, in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs, though united by a common allegiance to the crown, and freely associated as members of the British Commonwealth of Nations."

They are co-equal internally, and externally. The King is the King of all and the King of each. Students of English constitutional development know the exact meaning of that kingship. Every act of the state is deemed to be derived from the King. In former times and even down to the latter decades of Queen Victoria's reign the monarch maintained in some state matters a certain independence of action. With the development of democratic ideas that power completely disappeared.

At the present day in Great Britain the monarch can do no state act whatever except on the advice of his ministers; and as these latter represent the Parliament elected by the people, the King's signature to an act of Parliament becomes simply the manifestation of the people's will in its final form. The King is therefore the embodiment of the people's will. He is the instrument through which the voice of the people speaks.

By such an evolution has the saying: "the prerogatives of the crown have become the privileges of the people," entered into the realm of concrete fact. In the Irish Free State democracy has taken a further step forward. The Dail is elected by universal suffrage. All men and women of twenty-one years of age and over have a vote. In Great Britain the leader of the majority party is summoned by the King as a matter of course to form a government, while in the Irish Free State the President of the Executive Council is elected by the Dail.

The King's place is taken in the Irish Free State by his personal representative, the Governor General, who is now appointed by the King on the sole advice of the Irish ministers. The democratic character of our constitution has thus been pushed to its extreme logical conclusions.

The people have the fullest possible part in the election of the Dail; the Dail elects the President of the Executive Council and approves of the ministers selected by him. The Governor General, on the advice of the President, formally appoints the ministers. The kingship in the Irish Free State, operating through the office of the Governor General, is therefore a still more democratic institution than it is in Great Britain. The Governor General has ceased to be in any sense a servant of the British government as he was formerly in the overseas dominions.

He no longer acts as the channel of communication between the Irish and British governments. He acts solely on the advice of the Irish ministers and in the manner advised by them. His signature to a bill is in a very special manner the manifestation of the people's will.

The government of the Irish Free State is as free in its actions as any government in the world and free from a great many of them.

In external affairs the position is similar. We are free to make treaties. We are just now negotiating a treaty with the French government, and when our commercial system has become more developed we shall make treaties with all those countries with which the volume of trade exchanged warrants such a step.

We possess the right of legation. We already have had the honor to exchange ministers plenipotentiary with the United States, and thus have put ourselves in the best possible position to study the means of developing in every way our century-old friendship and of studying the methods of encouraging commercial intercourse between our two countries.

At international conferences and in the signing of treaties resulting therefrom the plenipotentiaries of the Irish Free State, appointed on the advice of the Irish ministers, have alone the right to enter into obligations on behalf of the Irish Free State. In other words, no plenipotentiary can speak for the Irish Free State who does not derive his powers ultimately from the Irish people through the machinery of the Irish constitution.

In international as well as in national affairs our responsibility is complete and undivided. When the King acts as high contracting party in an international agreement his contracting capacity only extends to those members of the commonwealth on whose advice plenipotentiaries have been appointed and to the extent to which they have been empowered. When he acts for more than one state of the commonwealth he is a several, not a single, contracting party. There is no single constitutional organism covering all the states of the group. There is no unitary government such as exists, for instance, in a federal system, and there is consequently no group of ministers who possess the right to advise the monarch on behalf of the whole group.

In the League of Nations the Irish Free State is on a footing of complete equality with all the other states

Outboard Motors

HULLS TO SUIT

One of the outstanding developments of the last year or two in the motorboating world has been that of the outboard-powered boat as a distinct type, designed and used not as an auxiliary to other yachts, but on its own account.

The outboard motor is not a new thing. Years ago the writer had an outboard motor. It was heavier and far less powerful than the modern could crank it all day and get no further from home than when you started. We gradually gave up using it, finding it easier to row. This experience was probably typical of the use of the earlier outboards. They were great machines—when they worked.

NOWADAYS THEY WORK

All this has changed. When you crank an outboard motor to-day, it runs, provided you use ordinary mechanical sense as you have to with any motor. It is far lighter than the old machines, yet it is also far more powerful and more reliable. The outboard is still used on yacht tenders, on fishing and gunning boats and even on small workboats.

But in the last two years it has opened up fields primarily its own, and the most conspicuous of these is being controlled. Various associations formed among outboard boat owners, have required the use of mufflers on the machines, and this other objectionable feature is being gradually overcome. Meanwhile, many young men and women are having all kinds of fun with the little boats, at very moderate cost, for a motor and a boat built to carry it can be bought now for a couple of hundred dollars and run at negligible expense.

One outboard function last summer attracted especial attention—the race down the Mississippi from Chicago to New Orleans, in which a dozen of the little boats, driven by experts, all made the trip safely and averaged in the neighborhood of twenty miles an hour for the trip of some 1,500 miles.

Speed of the Kickers Demonstrated

"LEAPIN' LENA" OUTLEAPED

A remarkable view of an outboard motor boat doing its stuff at a more than 30-mile-an-hour clip. It is entirely clear of the water. This boat is expected to be one of the sensations of this year's International Motor Boat Show.

outboard machine, but it worked sometimes. When it chose to run—which was usually in good weather—it could be clamped on the stern of a rowboat and used to tow a thirty-foot sloop in and out of the harbors in calm weather. Clamped onto a dory, it would sometimes take a fishing or shooting party where they wanted to go, and even, when very favorably inclined, bring them back again. But we always carried oars.

That motor was one of the greatest exercise machines ever invented, especially in damp weather, when you were racing game. World's records were made and broken in such rapid succession that it was wellnigh impossible to keep up with them and still pay attention to anything else.

ANNOYANCES ELIMINATED.

More outboard boats than any other kind—more than 2,000 of them—started in various speedboat races in 1927 and they made more noise. This noise and the speed with which outboard drivers shot in and out among fleets of anchored yachts were very irritating, but the noise is gradually

It is natural, therefore, that outboard motors and the boats built especially to carry them should be attracting a great deal of attention at the motorboat shows both from those who want to race and from those who would put the machines on larger and slower boats for family use, fishing and hunting. Several small cruising boats intended for use with outboard power have been designed, and one or two are at the show, but whether these will ever take the place of small cruisers with regular engine installations is open to serious doubt.

Sonnet

If you should die, I should live on and Dawn rise and day end, and the weary moon
Climb into heaven; hear the alumbrous tune
Of stealing water; watch the lissome trees
Stoop to the river's brim; look up, and be Aware of strong winds blowing; of the flight
Of cranes, and of the swelling sails of night—
And yet there would be none of these is me.

There would be neither woe nor strife,
but rest;
As dream long ended, glory long for done.
Blossom long spent. For you, whose hands I hold,
Holding light, life, and all—if you were gone,
The tale of all my wonder would be told,
And only earth might take me to her breast.

Chicken Feathers

Dampness, filth and roup occupy the same quarters and are fast friends. A bucket of whitewash is better than a chestful of medicine.

Painted Chickens.

Phil feared chicken thieves, so he took some green paint and spattered it on the feathers of his white fowls. As a result of these tail-tale spatters, Phil was able to locate 17 stolen birds, and the thief and some tail explaining to do. The best he got (the thief—not Phil) was bail, while awaiting trial.

When you want to drive a fowl into a corner and capture it, there is nothing that helps more than a broom. Don't rush after Biddy; just amble slowly toward her, holding the broom by the end of its handle. If you wish the bird to go to the right, hold the broom out to the left. If the fowl runs too far to the right, shift the broom quickly to the right hand. Just as promptly the hen will change her mind and run the other way. It's surprising how quickly a chicken or a whole flock, for that matter, will get the idea.

I put about a peck of alfalfa leaves and chaff in a gunny sack, and immerse the sack in a tub of hot water for a few minutes. The hens relish the warm, plumped-up leaves, for the alfalfa is rich in protein and minerals. It is a great help in filling the egg basket. I gather the leaves when putting up hay in summer. They would be waste if I did not gather them up and put them away for winter.

"Was Mrs. Jones in her new gown when you saw her?" "Partly, my dear—partly."

"Asking a man to trace your bungalow apron is a bit unreasonable even if he is a house detective."

Quebec.—When the 1923 shipping season opened here April 22, the Canadian Pacific St. Lawrence fleet supplied fifty per cent. of the steamers that docked with S.S. Montclair, Montroyal and Melita. The three ships carried in round figures 2300 immigrants aboard mostly of British stock and destined to farms in the West.

International Advertising Convention and Exposition to be held at Detroit, July 9-12, is already attracting wide notice and will consist under one roof everything relating to organized advertising in every phase. Advertising men from overseas will attend and bookings are being made on Canadian Pacific liners from Great Britain and Europe well ahead of time in view of the large demand for travel that will arise.

Sixty-five miles of salmon fishing in the Chais River, New Brunswick, were enjoyed recently by five anglers from Chicago and the U. S. Middle West and by a party of New York newspapermen, including W. McGeehan, internationally known New York Herald-Tribune sports writer. Both parties were staying for about a fortnight in the care of Harry Allen, well known New Brunswick guide. They travelled Canadian Pacific to their fishing destination.

Okanagan.—Word is received from Washington that the Okanagan project, during the last year, had a higher per acre yield of apples and a consequent higher acre return to the grower, than any government irrigation project in the United States. The local project, with 3,567 acres in apples, has a yield of 35,142,750 pounds, or 9,832 pounds to the acre, a yield which brought the grower a return of $1,030,854, or the high record price of $289 an acre. On the Yakima project the average yield was 9,602 pounds to the acre or at the rate of $246.16 per acre. The nearest approach to the Washington record was on the Sun river project in Montana, where the average was $153.33 an acre, followed by the Boise project, with a price of $148.

Ottawa.—The Department of Agriculture has issued a report showing how the Canadian "Moth" plane is combatting wheat rust—how the Canadian Air Force, the Federal Department of Agriculture and the pathological plant of the Manitoba Agricultural College at Winnipeg are uniting to fight the enemy. The report says: "The work consists mainly in the exposure of slides at different altitudes and at different locations. These aeroplane exposures attempt to collect from altitudes of from 1,000 to 5,000 feet the date of the earliest appearance of rust spores, the region over which they first appear, the rate at which the spore content of the air increases over various regions, the visibility of spores caught at these higher altitudes and the relation of certain environmental and climatic factors to the rate of development and spread of rust. Tightly stoppered bottles are used, containing wooden paddles to which are attached microscopic slides lightly smeared with vaseline. These slides are exposed for 15 minutes at varying altitudes; the slides are replaced in the bottles and then returned to the Government laboratory at Winnipeg."

OBITUARY.

THE LATE DONALD McPHAIL.

Word has been received of the death of Donald McPhail, eldest son of the late Daniel McPhail, and only brother of Duncan McPhail, who passed away at his home in Detroit, Mich., on April 22nd, in his 77th year. Deceased was born in Dalesville, but had resided in other parts for the past 36 years. Mr. Isaac Roberts, of Montreal, was one of the many sorrowing relatives who attended his funeral.

THE LATE NELSON WARWICK.

The sad news of the accidental shooting of young Nelson Warwick, has come as a great shock to his many friends and relatives. Deceased who was only 18 years of age, had recently moved with his father to Ashton, Ont., where they had purchased a farm. The body will be brought here on Thursday night's train and the funeral held from the Baptist Church, Lachute, at 3 o'clock, advance time, to the Lachute Cemetery.

THE LATE MRS. WHINTON.

The death occurred on Tuesday evening last, after a long illness of Mrs. Matilda Whinton, widow of the late John Whinton, of Ottawa. Mrs. Whinton had made her home in Lachute for the past 7 years. She was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Boyd and was born in Millie Isle March 3rd, 1858. She leaves to mourn her loss two grand-daughters, children of her only son who died 11 years ago; two sisters, Miss Boyd, of Montreal; and Mrs. Jas. Hammond, of California; and one brother, Mr. Jno. Boyd, of Lachute, besides a large number of nieces and nephews. A short funeral service will be held at the house this evening (Thursday) conducted by Rev. Geo. MacKinnon, after which the remains will be taken to Ottawa for interment.

The Repair Expert speaks his mind

"It isn't what you do today that causes the blowout!"

—it is usually something you have done weeks ago.

Under-inflation—careless parking that pinches the tire walls—hitting rough bumps on high. Balloons deaden the jar. But later—a blowout!

These things can be avoided. To avoid them means dollars off the cost of running your car.

Check up tire pressures every week—We will do it for you. Keep to the exact figures for the size of load of each tire. Ease down when driving over deep ruts and sharp ridges.

Let us inspect your tires once a week. At least twice a season let us take them off the rims and look for inside injuries.

A Dominion Tire will stand a lot of abuse, but a little care will add thousands of miles to its life.

RUSSIAN PEACE GESTURE NOT CONSIDERED SINCERE

A THORNY OLIVE BRANCH

When twenty-four nations meet at a given point to discuss disarmament, and the representative of one of them submits a comprehensive draft of a treaty for world-wide disarmament within four years, only to see the proposal raked fore and aft because of its impracticability, the Canadian reader of newspaper dispatches from Geneva naturally begins to wonder what this disarmament business is all about, why the Russian proposal to outlaw war was not seriously considered at the meeting. Only Germany and Turkey backed the attempt of Maxim Litvinoff, head of the Soviet delegation, to secure consideration of his disarmament proposal, we are told while representatives of Great Britain and the United States riddled the Russian proposal with heavy broadsides of verbal shot and shell, and finally sank it without trace.

What is the answer? The Soviet draft proposed that navies be scrapped entirely; that military establishments be reduced to purely internal police forces; in short, that land, sea, and air forces be abolished. This is the second time that Russia has made this proposal within the last four months, and the chief reason it has been unfavorably received, the majority of English newspaper editors agree, is that Russia's good faith is questioned. To quote M. Litvinoff:

"The Soviet Government does not need either an army or navy for aggressive purposes, as we desire to remain at peace with all countries. The Soviet Government has interested itself in the problem of the establishment of peace and the banishment from international life of that scourge of human society, war, ever since it came into existence.

"Quite independently of the League of Nations, and on its own initiative, the Soviet Government suggested as long ago as 1922, at the first international conference at Genoa, in which bassadon Hugh Gibson, head of the American delegation:

"The American Government believes wholeheartedly that a multilateral treaty outlawing war would be welcomed by the whole world, and believes that such a treaty would be more successful in attaining world peace than any scheme of disarmament. The Russian proposals are totally out of spirit with our work. I see no reason to vary our usual procedure in order to continue the Russian discussion."

Russia, explains the St. Joseph News-Press, "has been doing all in her power to corrupt the armies and navies of other nations; she has done her best to sow disaffection and to promote the world revolution. And now she suggests disarmament. . . . The Soviet olive branch would be more convincing if her neighbors could be sure she did not have a weapon concealed in the other hand." In the opinion of the New York Evening Post, the Litvinoff proposal was "a political gesture, by which Moscow aimed to enhance its prestige as a peace-loving nation." The plan bore upon its face the marks of sincerity, admits the Manchester Union, "but the background from which it came stamped it with hypocrisy, for it is still the plan of Moscow to promote armed insurrection among the nations of the world." To lay armed insurrection to lay down arms when such a drive is being planned, declares the Albany Knickerbocker Press, "would leave the door open to intrigue and disaster." In fact, concludes the Lynchburg News:

"The Soviet proposal is fantastic in the extreme. There is no compulsion back of the plan. All nations agree to disarm, and the honest ones disarm, while the dishonest ones do not. The result would then be that the predatory nations would rule the world. Even if all disarmed, there would be it participated, that the first question discussed be that of general disarmament.

"During its ten years' existence the Soviet Government has never attacked any of its neighbors, has declared no war upon anybody, and has taken no part in the warlike adventures of other States. The fact that the Soviet Government, having no obligations whatsoever toward the League, voluntarily cooperates with this commission, seems additional testimony to its sincerity and good faith.

The Soviet Government declares it is ready to abolish all military forces in accordance with its draft convention as soon as a similar decision is passed and simultaneously carried out by other States."

Count von Bernstorff, head of the German delegation, also remarked during one of the stormy sessions at Geneva:

"I have been a member of this Commission for more than two years, and on no less than twenty occasions have I heard it asserted here that all our work would be futile because Russia was not represented; but now Russia is here, and the Commission decides to do nothing."

It remained for Lord Cushendun, formerly Ronald McNeill, Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, as head of the British delegation, to reply to the Litvinoff proposal. Said the successor of Viscount Cecil, in part:

"In what spirit are these proposals made? Our object is to establish world peace on a firm basis, and I assume the desire of the Soviet is likewise. What kind of peace? There are two kinds of war; also there are two kinds of peace. There is international war and civil war. Civil war is the more horrible.

"For years past the Soviet policy expressed by its leaders has been to produce armed insurrections in every nation where they can exercise influence. We must have assurance given by M. Litvinoff that there is a complete change of policy. Has the Soviet Government decided no longer to interfere in the affairs of other nations?"

As for the United States, said Am-nothing to keep one nation from making its police force large enough to overawe those who scrupulously kept their compact. Where there are no battleships and submarines or cruisers or war-planes, merchant vessels would be as useful in war, if armed, as warships now are, and the nation with the most merchant ships, and unscrupulous enough to manufacture arms in secret, would be the nation that would impose its will upon the world. That being the case, absolute confidence among all the nations is essential to the success of the Soviet program. And where is that confidence? What nation, for instance, would be willing to depend for its existence upon its confidence in a rejuvenated Russia?"

Air Mail Service Will Be Resumed

Connections With Liners at Rimouski to Be Increased This Summer

Ottawa.—With the opening of navigation on the St. Lawrence about the end of this month, the air mail service from Rimouski will be resumed. Last year the service was confined to Montreal—although one trip was made to Ottawa. This year, however, there will be an extension and both Ottawa and Toronto are included in the air mail program.

The first mail liner of the season is expected at Rimouski on the night of April 27 or the morning of the 28th. The mail will be put on board the airplane and brought to Montreal where it will be re-distributed on planes for delivery in Toronto and Ottawa.

Further expansion of Canada's air mail service is contemplated and efforts may shortly be made to reach an agreement with the United States in regard to connecting up with the trans-continental air lines at Albany, N.Y.

With the opening of the St. Lawrence navigation the winter air mail service to Anticosti and the Magdalen Islands will be discontinued.

South Africa's Status Debated In Parliament

House Adopts the Report on the Resolutions of the Imperial Conference

Cape Town.—The South African House of Assembly has unanimously adopted the report on the Imperial Conference resolutions of 1926, which was moved by Premier J. B. M. Hertzog, more than two weeks ago. The feature of the debate was the Premier's declaration that South Africa had a right to be neutral if Great Britain were at war, and the repudiation of this attitude by Gen. Jan Christian Smuts, former Premier, and also by Col. F. H. P. Creswell, Minister of Defense, a Labor member of the Hertzog Government.

General Hertzog's claim to the right of neutrality was based on what he termed the "Dominion's new-found independence" and the right of each dominion to be the sole judge as to the extent of its cooperation within the Empire.

Freedom and Equality.

He asked the House to vote for the motion to adopt the report on the Imperial conference, not on account of what it might mean to any particular person, but because of the unmistakable language in which it said what it meant, and in "which it declared to us "our freedom"—our freedom and equality, our absolute equality in the freedom to exercise every function, every power, every privilege of national life, without owing any subordination to any authority outside of ourselves."

General Smuts, in opposing the Premier's neutrality stand, declared that "the same king could not be both at war and at peace in the same empire." He strongly deprecated the position the Premier had taken on the question, and said it was one that ought to be looked upon as purely academic.

Colonel Creswell could not conceive of South Africa or any other dominion wishing to remain neutral if Great Britain were at war and there had been previous consultations in the matter between the British Government and the governments of the Dominions.

Five to Attempt Atlantic Flights Westward Soon

Tri-Motored Monoplane, Piloted by Maurice Drouhin, Plans Start Early in May

Paris.—Undimmed by the failure which has met all aviators who have attempted to span the north Atlantic, at least five expeditions are or soon will be in preparation to challenge the ocean this spring. In several instances plans are being made by companies and pilots who wished to attempt the flight last year, but were prevented by adverse weather.

Most of the expeditions thus far are in the formative stage. One plane, however, already is completed, has been publicly shown, and soon will begin trial flights. It is a big tri-motored monoplane, designed and built by the twenty-three-year-old engineer, Rene Cousinet.

Maurice Drouhin, who was engaged to pilot Charles Levine last summer when Levine was planning to fly home from Europe, has been selected to pilot the plane. Drouhin, known as one of the most capable of French aviators, lost considerable prestige as a result of his tilt with Levine, and since has been particularly eager for an opportunity to try the flight. Though the crew has not been selected, the plane is constructed to carry, in addition to the pilot, a relief pilot, a navigator, a radio operator and one passenger.

The plane measures twenty-seven meters from wing tip to wing tip. It is powered with three motors, each of 180 horsepower, and each enclosed in a separate engine room easily accessible from the cabin. The aviators plan to carry a load of 9,000 kilos of fuel and equipment. At present they believe it will be necessary to use only two of the three motors after the starting load has been diminished. A reserve motor, they believe, would make their expedition safer and more certain of success than has been the case with any of the other attempted east-to-west flights.

The plane has been christened the Arc-en-Ciel. Trial flights are to begin within two or three weeks, from the field at Orly. The French government already has asked the Weather Bureau at Washington for Atlantic weather reports to be studied in plotting the flight, though it is believed the weather and winds over the ocean will not be suitable for westward flying until after May 1.

Salvagers Using Air to Float Battleship Sunk in Scapa Flow

London.—Salvage work said to be unique in engineering history is being carried on at Scapa Flow by Cox & Shanks, who, having already raised twenty-six destroyers of the German fleet, are now engaged in the gigantic task of floating the battleship Seydlitz.

The Seydlitz lay upon her side. To turn her over and raise her upright it has been estimated would have cost more than $300,000—too much to show a profit on the transaction. The salvage engineers, therefore, have worked out a plan to float the huge ship, weighing 25,000 tons and having a length of 666 feet, on her side and to tow her in this position to the breaking-up depot six miles away. She lay at a depth of more than eighty feet.

Mr. Cox, describing the method of operation, said:

"We work by pumping compressed air into the ship and at the same time filling up with concrete one by one the openings through which the air escapes. The biggest opening we have filled so far measures 44 feet by 6 feet, and required ten tons of concrete."

The raising of the whole German fleet, he said, would "probably be more than a life's work for most of us now engaged on it."

Golden Rule Taken As Motoring Guide

"Drive as You Would Have Others Drive" Is Slogan of Washington Crusade

Washington.—Thousands of Washington motorists have pledged themselves to "drive as you would have others drive" as a result of a Golden Rule crusade for safe driving conducted by the Washington Star. The Golden Rule, the Star points out, "is the one fundamental traffic law."

A gilded automobile cruised quietly through the city during the crusade week exemplifying the merits of careful driving. A feature motion picture starring local children was produced to encourage motorists to drive through residential and school zone districts as though their own children were at play in the vicinity.

Golden pledge cards numbering 50,000 were distributed to school children who took them home for parents to sign. Boy Scouts solicited pledges in all of the Government departments. The crusade was endorsed by prominent federal and District of Columbia officials. Vice-President Davies and Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, were among the first to sign the pledge. The safety division of the Department of Commerce expressed the view that the campaign might well be taken up by other cities.

BRITISH NAVY DISCIPLINE MAINTAINED

Commander Daniel (1) and Captain Dewar (2) were both relieved of their command temporarily due to their action in criticizing Read Admiral Collard in writings. The Admiral was undoubtedly what might be termed a bully of rank. He used his position to unduly abuse Commander Daniel and others. British public opinion, it would appear, has sympathy for the two officers shown above and Admiral Collard will in the end pay the greatest penalty in loss of prestige.

This Mariner's Shark Excels Jonah's Whale

South Sea Captain's Log Tells of Finding Father and Son Alive in Captured Sea Tiger

A Honolulu newspaper reports that a veteran of the Pacific Ocean, Captain Clinton Jones, now living near the Hawaiian capital, is preparing his log books for publication. These cover more than half a century of adventure in the Central and Southern Pacific. In negotiating with publishers the ancient mariner has sent them samples of his sea diaries. A fragment that has reached us reads as follows:

"Here is a half-hitch from the logo of the bark Neptune of which I was master in 1877. This records the strange story of the shark, the man, the grindstone and the child.

"The Neptune was bound from Santiago, to Boston, touching at Cienfuegos. Senior Ricardo Iglesias and his two children were aboard as passengers.

"One morning we were hauling around Cape Cruz when one of the Don's children fell overboard. The ship was making six knots at the time. We tacked ship, leaving the foreyard aback the ship's head. There was much excitement and everybody threw life preservers or any gear they could get their hands on overboard.

"The German carpenter even threw his grindstone over in the excitement. It took about twenty minutes to get a boat out, but all that was rescued was some of the gear that had been thrown out. The child and the grindstone were not recovered.

"After about forty-five minutes the boat returned to the ship. The Don was greatly excited and the little boy's sister was in tears. Breakfast was prepared and we had hardly seated ourselves when there came a cry of 'Man overboard!' It developed that the Don in his grief had jumped over the side. I ordered everything flat aback and a boat was put out, but there was no sign of the Don. The boat was hauled up again, and the ship was put back on her course, but she had hardly gathered way when a shark took a hook that was out.

"I brought the ship into the wind with the mainyard aback and we finally got the shark alongside. A tackle was swung from the mainyard and a bowline was run down and looped over the shark's tail.

"As the shark was hauled on deck he coughed up what was inside of him; first came the Don and then the grindstone, and finally the boy. The Don was grasping a long dagger and said the boy had been turning the grindstone for him while he sharpened the dagger, preparatory to cutting his way out of the shark."

Ontario Market For Alberta Coal

Regina Leader (L.B.): Alberta has the coal; Ontario furnishes a big market. It should be possible to bring the two together. Much is going to depend on the quality of the fuel shipped. In other words, much of the success of the proposed experiment lies with the Alberta producers. They should send forward their best product, and any subsidy of the movement which is represented in the low rate set should not be regarded by them as a subsidy for their own pockets but one for the movement, as a whole, to which they are a party.

"Who gave ye the black eye, Mark?" "Nobody give it to me, I had t' fight for it."

A SPRING TONIC AN AID TO HEALTH

You Can Lay the Foundation of Good Health Now by Building Up Your Blood and Strengthening Your Nerves Through the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

The good old fashion of taking a tonic in the Springtime, like most of the customs of our grandparents, is based upon sound common sense and good medical practice. Winter is always a trying time for those who are not in rugged health. Many men, women and children go through the winter on reserve strength they have stored up during the sunny summer months, and grow increasingly pale and languid as the spring days approach. A tonic for the blood and nerves at this time will do much for such people by putting color in the cheeks and banishing that tired feeling that worries thousands of people at this season of the year.

It is impossible to be energetic if your blood is thin and weak, or if your nerves are frayed or shattered. You cannot compete with others if you do not get refreshing sleep at night, or if your appetite is poor or you are losing weight. You need a tonic at this time to add to your efficiency now, as well as to save you from suffering later on. And in all the realm of medicine, there is no safer or better tonic than Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills tone and enrich the blood which circulates through every portion of the body, strengthening faded nerves and rundown organs, and bringing a feeling of new strength and energy to weak, easily tired, dependent men, women and children.

Mrs. L. Hupman, Summerville Centre, N.S., writes:—"Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been of the greatest benefit to me. A few years ago I was in a badly run down condition. I became so weak and nervous that I could scarcely go about and doing my housework left me completely used up. Everything seemed to worry me, and I was in a very discouraged condition when I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I soon found the pills helping me, and continuing their use I fully regained my health. Since then I always take a few boxes in the Spring to build me up for the hot weather, and always I find the best results. I therefore cheerfully recommend these pills as the best of health builders.

You can get these pills from any medicine dealer, or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"A bride's trousseau may be ever so plain—her family knows who got the trimming."

In consequence of continued frost the waterpipes of a householder were frozen for some time, and at the end of the quarter he refused to pay the full water rate, saying that most of the time he had no water. The matter was taken to Court, where the Water Company said it was not their fault the water was frozen—it was an act of God. Whereupon the defendant jumped up and said: "An act of God to put the pipes so near the surface that they freeze? That's not the act of God, that's the act of a fool! He won his case."

Will Rogers Has a Good Word To Say For The Policeman

Memphis, Tenn.—Right here in Memphis today over twenty-five policemen went to a hospital and volunteered to give blood transfusions to a kid that was near death. In know that I am out of order in speaking of the good things that cops do, but I am one of the old-fashioned people who believe if somebody pounced on me I could holler for one and he would and help me out without me having to pay him anything. The poor fellows can't catch many criminals as our towns have them too busy marking cars that have been parked too long.

Yours,
WILL ROGERS.

Happy Belgium

Philadelphia—Belgium, the little nation which stood up against outstanding odds in the Great War, has "come back."

Prince Albert de Ligne, Belgian Ambassador to the United States, speaking before the American Academy of Political and Social Science, said his home country, "after nearly ten years of strenuous endeavor, has been reconstructed and placed on a firm foundation, physically, economically and financially."

"Our houses have been rebuilt," he asserted, "our factories reconstructed and equipped, our basic industries to-day are producing more than their pre-war output, our people are profitably engaged, and there is no unemployment problem."

Government by the People

Ottawa Journal (Cons.): (The Government refuse to disclose the nature of their correspondence with Washington on the subject of the St. Lawrence Waterway.) Rumor says, . . . Mr. King is trying to use the St. Lawrence question to bargain for better fiscal terms with the Government of the United States. Whether such rumors are true, we do not know. What we do know, and what we feel very strongly, is that when any Canadian Cabinet, be it Liberal or Conservative, begins writing notes to Washington about the disposition of something that is the property of the people of Canada, then the people of Canada have a right to know what is in those notes.

Pipers To Wear Highland Bonnets

Pipers of the Scots Guards are tired of wearing the little Glenlivet Bonnet while their fellow Guardsmen wear the magnificent black bearskins. The twelve pipers expressed a wish to be allowed to wear the great Highland bonnet which is part of the full dress uniform of the Highland regiments.

The King, after a personal inspection, assented to the change, which will take effect next month.

Baby's Own Tablets Declared to be Worth Their Weight in Gold

A mother has only to use Baby's Own Tablets once to be convinced that nothing else can equal them in banishing the ills of her little ones. Once used, always used, as long as there are small children in the home—that is the tribute thousands of mothers pay the Tablets.

Among the many, many mothers who are anxious to tell of their experience with Baby's Own Tablets is Mrs. Griffith, of East Hamilton, Ont., who writes:—"Shortly after coming to Canada I began giving the Tablets to my baby boy who was then six weeks old. The result was so pleasing that since that time I have always kept the Tablets in the house. I have two children now and both of them are the picture of health. Baby's Own Tablets are the only medicine they have ever had and I really believe the Tablets to be worth their weight in gold."

Baby's Own Tablets are free from all injurious drugs and can be given to the youngest babe with absolute safety. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box by The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Pictures of Men Dead 1,700 Years

Scientists Amazed at Discoveries of Explorers in Turkestan

London—Pictures of men who have been dead 1,700 years but had the appearance of having just died, even to long beards intact, were shown on the screen before amazed audiences of the Royal Anthropological Institute recently.

"I feel quite certain that when the explorers got into the centre of the eastern part of Chinese Turkestan we shall find evidence of civilization that will astound us," said Sir Arthur Keith, who gave the lantern lecture. After stating that there is nothing new under the sun, Sir Arthur passed around a skull of the "first flapper" which only the most careful examination showed was that of a woman of 30 rather than that of a young girl. Another revelation of Sir Arthur's was that England is developing an Armenian type without having had any admixture from Armenia.

 In clean, bright Aluminum

Old Almanacs

Almanacs have to some extent lost their old prestige. The supposedly omniscient almanac of other days contained not only the calendar, but many astrological prophecies and long-range weather forecasts. To-day political, statistical and historical information forms the greater part of the contents of almanacs, which are used mostly in business and not in homes.

Almanacs date back to early civilization. It is known that the Greeks and Romans had them. Some of the oldest almanacs in existence were published during the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. Purbach, the astronomer, is said to have published the first printed almanac in 1450.

The Almanach Liegeois was typical in that it contained dire prophecies. This almanac, which became famous by predicting the end of Mme. Du Barry's career, found a great circulation in rural France and provided for those who could not read an easily comprehensible system of symbols. So great was the influence of these almanacs over the superstitious that at one time almanacs were banned in France.

Bradford, in 1687, published the first American almanac, but Franklin's "Poor Richard" was the first of any importance.

The Hagerstown and Country Almanac, published in 1787 by John Gruber, also became famous. It is still issued. Washington first received his name as "The Father of His Country" in 1779 when the Pennsylvania German Almanac so hailed him. The publication appeared with a cover picturing Fame, holding in one hand a medallion of Washington and in the other a trumpet. The medallion was labeled "Washington" and the trumpet blew forth the words "Des Landes Vater—The Father of His Country."

Bring in Newfoundland

Toronto Mail and Empire (Cons.): As long as Newfoundland exists as a separate Dominion, there will always be the danger of the United States getting into treaty relations with it that will enable the latter country to exploit the natural resources of the island and Labrador to its own advantage and to the detriment of this country. Newfoundland will be more favorably disposed to listen to proposals to include it in the Canadian union if the King Government decides to implement to the letter the recommendations of the Duncan Commission in respect to the Maritime Provinces. It should be the study of our Government to make the Maritime Provinces one of the prosperous sections of this Dominion.

Excess acid is the common cause of indigestion. It results in pain and sourness about two hours after eating. The quick corrective is an alkali which neutralizes acid. The best corrective is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It has remained standard with physicians in the 50 years since its invention. One spoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia neutralizes instantly many times its volume in acid. It is harmless and tasteless and its action is quick. You will never rely on crude methods, never continue to suffer, when you learn how quickly, how pleasantly this premier method acts. Please let it show you—now.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. Each bottle contains full directions—any druggist.

These Two Found Relief by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Ayer's Cliff, Quebec.—"I have been teaching for three years, and at the end of the year I always feel tired and have no appetite. I was a wifely sick child month too, having pains in my back until sometimes I was obliged to stop working. A friend recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to me and I heard many women telling how good it was so I thought it would help me. And it did. Now I take six bottles every year and recommend it to others." DONALDA FANTEUX, Ayer's Cliff, Quebec.

Will you, too, be surprised?

"It was a delightful surprise" — writes a Toronto subscriber — "to find that I could talk to my Mother as far away as Sarnia for only 55 cts, by the Evening Rate. I'm sure few people realize how very little it costs to telephone even to points as far distant as Sarnia, by the Evening Rate, and you would do the public a service by emphasizing this point."

This is only one of many instances showing that many people do not know how low the Evening Rate on Long Distance is. Call up our Manager and ask him the Evening Rate to some point you are particularly interested in. You, too, will probably be surprised.

OBITUARY.

THE LATE MRS. JOHN LEMAY.

The death occurred on Tuesday morning after an illness of some seven months of Mrs. John Lemay, of Centreville. Deceased lady who was 49 years of age, was formerly Miss Lalonde, of St. Hermas, and had been married for twenty years practically all of which was spent in Centreville. Besides a loving husband, she leaves to mourn her loss three sisters, one brother and four children, two boys and two girls. The funeral will be held on Friday morning at 10 o'clock advance time, to the Church of St. Anastasie, Lachute, and thence to the R. C. Cemetery.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE

NELSON WARWICK.

The funeral of the late T. Nelson Warwick, who died suddenly at Ashton, Ontario, on Wednesday, May 2nd., from a gunshot wound accidentally received when a rifle which he was handling discharged, took place on Friday last at Lachute, and was very largely attended. Just prior to the removal of the remains from the home of the deceased sister Mrs. S. Goldsworthy, to the Lachute Baptist Church for the funeral service, prayer was offered by Rev. T. C. Cassidy of the Brownsburg United Church. In the regretted absence of Rev. John Ford, pastor of Lachute and Dalesville Baptist Churches, the service was conducted by Rev. A. Penman, pastor of Buckingham, Que. Baptist Church, who brought a message of comfort to the bereaved family, at the same time emphasizing, for all present, the fact of the uncertainty of life and the need of preparation. He referred especially to the popularity of the deceased young man, as indicated by the large number of friends present, and by the many and beautiful floral tributes. Rev. R. J. McLaren participated in the service.

Floral offerings were from:—The Miss Viola Warwick, Philadelphia; Mrs. Fannie Caverhill and Mr. Jack Caverhill; Misses Tapner; Messrs. Mathewson; McLennan & Molson; The Anticosti Corporation; The Port Alfred Pulp & Paper Corporation and The Canada Power & Paper Company all of Montreal; Miss Jeannette MacArthur; Mrs. W. J. Tomalty; Mrs. Austin Morrow; Miss Katie Stephenson; and Messrs. Howard Dixon, Robt. MacArthur; James Mathews, Lawrence Morrow and Lawrence Stephenson, all of Dalesville, and Mr. and Mrs. George Hardie and family, of Brownsburg.

The pall-bearers were four cousins Messrs. Wyman McGibbon, Ross Warwick, Leslie Tomalty and Carson Tomalty, and Robert MacArthur and Robert Roberts.

Besides his sorrowing father, Mr. Archie Warwick, the deceased leaves seven sisters, Mrs. S. Goldsworthy, Lachute; Misses Alice, Beatrice and Gladys Warwick and Mrs. Albert Crompt, all of Montreal and Mrs. N. Thimons and Miss Viola Warwick, of Philadelphia, also three brothers W. D. Warwick, of Regina, Sask.; Russell, of Brownsburg; and George.

Rheumatism and Crippling in Pigs
By Geo. B. Rothwell, B.S.A., Dominion Animal Husbandman.

In the case of rheumatism or crippling in young pigs to which a brief reference is made in our new Circular No. 61 on the Feeding of Swine, the important point on which stress or emphasis should be laid is that these conditions are preventable rather than curable. In other words, with breeding stock, such afflictions can be prevented by housing out doors, feeding with roots and alfalfa hay and a light meal mixture, never over-feeding, giving plenty of exercise, fresh air, dry quarters, and keeping stock generally in a healthy, firm-fleshed, clean condition.

With winter pigs the same thing applies. Possibly the most important factor is that of feeding. According to what we find, rheumatism and kindred maladies may be prevented even under undesirable housing conditions where pigs are properly fed, mainly where they are not forced. Attempting to force a winter fed pig with comparatively strong rations predisposes trouble. Where the situation is complicated by the fact that the pig is housed in a cold, damp building and in a pen which precludes the taking of exercise, stiffness and rheumatism frequently appear. Where this pig is given quarters which approximate a shed open to a yard, where it is cold, but where the pig is supplied with a warm, dry place to sleep, he is enabled to get exercise, fresh air, and automatically dry quarters. Where with this method of housing, the methods of feeding are based upon the use of comparatively light rations containing some bran and made up largely of wheat by-products and oats with a minimum of barley or corn, the use of some roughage in the way of alfalfa hay and succulence in the form of roots, the pig may not fatten to such an extent during the winter months, but it will be thrifty, firm-fleshed, and will grow the frame that is required and on which the required finish may be placed toward the end of the feeding period and without untoward results.

Where evidence of trouble appears, it is, of course, first desirable to restrict and change the ration. Where evidence of trouble appears in feeders, say at around one hundred pounds of weight, the use of Epsom salt is particularly good combined with lessened feed of a lighter character, containing more bran, wheat by-products and oats, and the use of a few roots. The use of Epsom salt, which is the commonest and possibly the most efficacious remedy where trouble is noticed, might be, in so far as quantity is concerned, about two ounces of salt per hundred pounds, plus one teaspoonful of ginger, given in a pint of water. For mature breeding stock, four to six ounces might be used.

As a matter of fact, I might say that we rarely, if ever, make use of any medicinal treatment of this kind at the Experimental Farm for the simple reason that we prevent it by proper housing and feeding methods. Where any trouble is noticed, at the start, we change our ration as suggested, arrange for more exercise, and the medicinal treatment usually applied is that of the administration of salts.

Clean Seed.

Canada's life, her very existence as a nation depends upon her agriculture. Probably the most important phase of this great industry is grain growing, and the crop yield, the harvesting and marketing costs, depend upon the quality of the seed.

Two phases might well be printed and posted in all places where seed grain is bought and sold: "The Best Seed Grain is None Too Good," and "You Never Stop Paying for the Losses Resulting From the Use of Poor Seed."

It seems hardly credible, yet it is a fact, that officers of the Dominion Seed Branch found a farmer sowing with his wheat 495,000 weed seeds to the acre. In another case 472,000 weed seeds to the acre were being sown. In other words they were very carefully sowing a "mother" crop, and much of the labor of cultivation was in reality making for a rapid multiplication of weeds. The use of the fanning mill will correct much of this evil.

Farmers would increase their yields and lower their operating costs by using clean graded seed. The Dominion Department of Agriculture administers through its Seed Branch a "Seed Act" which provides that all seed offered or exposed for sale in Canada must come within minimum standards provided for the removal of small, shrunk, immature or broken kernels or inert matter; that the seed itself be mature, plump, sound, etc.; and that the seed comply with minimum standards for purity and germination test.

The highest grade of seed is termed "registered." Seed growers producing such "registered seed" are under Government inspection and their crops must be 99.99 per cent. pure to variety before they receive recognition. Crop registration is assigned by the Canadian Seed Growers Association. Samples of such seed are subjected to laboratory inspection, and the entire lot from which the sample has been taken is inspected and if found up to standard it is tagged and officially sealed.

Farmers would do well to secure a small quantity of this "registered" seed and the following season with the seed produced from the small quantity seed a larger acreage.

The lower the grade of seed the more weed seeds they contain, and generally speaking the lower the vitality and poorer the quality.

Copies of the Regulations governing the Grading of Seeds may be obtained by applying to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Drainage and Oil for the Mosquito.

During the warm months of the year mosquitoes are often a serious pest not only in rural and forested sections but also in towns and cities. The many species and the life habits of this insect, as well as methods of controlling it, have been given serious study by the Entomological Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, and in Circular No. 62 of the Department, recently issued, there are outlined plans that have been found successful in bringing it under control. The mosquito passes through several stages in its life history and requires water for its development. Control measures therefore call for the drainage of stagnant pools and the emptying or screening of water barrels and other receptacles in which the eggs may be deposited. Where permanent control by drainage is feasible, it becomes necessary to treat water surfaces with oil. A surprisingly small amount of this will spread itself over a considerable surface, destroying such mosquito stages as are present.

In work carried on by the Entomological Branch to control the mosquito in the district of Ottawa and in other parts of Canada, a medium grade of petroleum oil such as furnace fuel oil has given good satisfaction. The circular, which is obtainable from the Publications Branch of the Department at Ottawa, gives explicit instructions for carrying out the oiling process and tells how to organize control campaigns for districts where the mosquito is particularly troublesome.

Canada's Retreat From Prohibition

"Our next-door neighbor, Canada, is an almost ideal proving ground" for a study of the drink problem, according to J. M. Campbell in April Current History Magazine, who says that "outside the Province of Quebec, whose inhabitants are largely French, the people of Canada are very much like ourselves. . . . There are three outstanding factors in Canada's century-old effort to find a workable solution of the liquor problem. One is the racial-climatic factor; another is the religious factor, the third is the geographical factor." Since the Canadian population is largely "of British birth or ancestry" and Britishers are not known particularly for "moderation in the use of liquor," the author says it "is not at all extraordinary" that "a considerable proportion . . . of those who have made home in Canada should have brought with them a highly developed taste for intoxicants—and thereby the problem with which legislation has had to cope. In 1878, eight years after the Canadian Dominion came into existence, the power to prohibit licensed houses locally was introduced by the Canada Temperance Act, a Federal law which was commonly known as the Scott act."

This act, which "appears to have been the first successful effort in Canada on the part of what are now called prohibitionists," "was not widely adopted" outside the Maritime Provinces. "In 1908 it was in force in only twenty-two counties or cities, of which ten were in Nova Scotia, ten in New Brunswick and two in Manitoba." In the first two decades of the twentieth century prohibitory laws were adopted respectively by Nova Scotia, Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario and Saskatchewan, all of which States have subsequently discarded prohibition, starting with Alberta in 1923 and finishing with New Brunswick recently. Thus "Five Provinces which, at one time or another, have had prohibition laws, have changed front; three others are still dry; one is, as it always has been, wet." Turning to the factor of religion, which the author deems of "greater importance in everyday life in Canada than in the United States," we find that "the farmers and small towns people" who are known in Great Britain as "non-conformists" are Liberal and favor prohibition. "The people of the factory towns and cities, the Roman Catholics and, to a considerable extent, the Anglicans, are Conservative and oppose prohibition." After reviewing the history of repealed prohibition acts, the author says "It became increasingly clear that prohibition was not the success its proponents had said it would be and in the end it became a good deal of a joke—the butt of vaudeville actors and small-town story-tellers." Lastly there emerged the principle of "control." "Will control do what license and prohibition failed to do—will it promote temperance? That is a question which time alone can answer."

Disarmament

Quebec Chronicle-Telegraph (Ind.): Canada has whittled down and starved both the militia and the permanent force beyond the limits of prudence. Even Miss MacPhail, we imagine, would hesitate to advocate the disbanding of all Federal, Provincial and municipal police forces; yet that is the logical conclusion of the policy of disarmament and the one is about as sensible as the other.

Dream Ships

The great ships go out to sea
Beyond the lighthouse tall;
I know not when again they'll be Within our harbor wall.

And my high dreams go out to sea
At harbors far to call;
I know not if again to me
They'll ever come at all.

But the great ships, when o'er the sea,
Their anchor chains let fall
In some old port of mystery,
Beneath some city wall.

And my high dreams when o'er the sea,
At God's own Harbor call,
And wait at anchor there for me,
Beneath His City wall.

Reared By Baboons, South African Boy Now Shuns Simians

Restored to Own Race, He Now Is Given Charge of Farmer's Children and Is Noted for His Loyalty

Twenty-five years ago two members of the South African Cape Police encountered a troop of baboons in a particularly barren stretch of country. As the men fired all the beasts scattered, save one, who lagged behind, states "The Living Age." Thinking they had wounded the animal, the two troopers rushed forward—only to find that they were not chasing a monkey but a well grown native boy who hopped along on all fours like his Simian ancestors.

He was captured with some difficulty—for without clothes he proved slippery handling—and was at once turned over to a mental hospital, which cared for him for a year. Gradually, however, he learned to speak a little English, and he finally proved so docile that he was committed to the care of one G. H. Smith, the owner of a large farm.

Wahabi Rising Adds To Near East Unrest

Arabian Peninsular Life, Never Dull, Takes On New Interest as Result of Raids

Jerusalem.—Life in the Near East never becomes dull or monotonous. Hardly does one sensation subside before something new arises to arouse the populace and eventually to cause some change in the political aspect of the territory. The rebellions of the Druses in Damascus are still fresh in the minds of not only the Syrians but all the peoples of the Near East, and now the Arabian Peninsula has become the center of interest because of the raids of the Wahabi tribes and their attacks upon the peoples of Kuwait, Iraq and Transjordan.

Real cause Not Apparent.

A definite reason for these sudden outbreaks is, however, hard to find. It is true that these "sons of the desert," as they are called, are by nature a warlike people, who are constantly out for massacre and pillage in the name of Allah. To justify their frequent attacks on their neighbors they very cleverly spread reports that they are doing these things because of differences with the Iraqi Government on the question of boundaries or between them and Kuwait because of economic problems. The real truth of the matter seems to be that it is in the blood of all Bedouins, and particularly the Wahabi, not to respect any law or order, and to rob their neighbors, and even their compatriots.

There is a diversity of opinion among Arab authorities as to the cause of these latest attacks. Some attribute them to actual hunger on the part of the Bedouins. Their cattle had dwindled, and, being left almost penniless most of them were on the point of starvation. Hitherto their only source of livelihood had been the spoils of their barbarous attacks on one another. When they accept the doctrines of Wahabism, with Ibn Saud as their ruler, it was understood that they were to be allowed to attack those Bedouin Moslems who had refused to become Wahabi. They took part in the conquest of the Hedjaz from the Hashimite family in the expectation that Ibn Saud would allow them to confiscate the estates of the Hedjaz, as had been their custom since the days of the prophet Mohammed. However, much to their surprise, Ibn Saud not only would not allow confiscation of the estates of the Hedjaz, but he would not even compel the conquered people to accept Wahabism. Whereupon the Wahabi became enraged and decided to fall back on their old practice of living by the power of the sword. It seems that

Opportunity Lives in Canadian Wilds

Frederick Phillip Grove, Author of "The Search for America" Tells Ottawa Audience of His Work for the Uplift of Simple Farm Folk

Ottawa.—"Let me tell you a fairy story," and Frederick Phillip Grove, author of "The Search for America," thereupon began, in the presence of the Canadian Club, a recounting of his own unusual career from his early days in Sweden to his arrival in Canada 36 years ago, his 13 years in the bush country of Manitoba and up to the recent discovery of himself by America. The members showed keen appreciation of their guest's high idealism and moral courage throughout all adversity.

After traveling as a boy through most parts of Europe and Asia, Mr. Grove found himself in Canada at the age of 18 and, drifting west, hired out as a farm-hand in the back country of Manitoba. His employer was an Irishman with such a sense of responsibility toward his humble neighbors' children that he was endeavoring to educate them by holding night classes in his log cabin. When he discovered the educational qualifications of his hired man he turned the job over to him, while he himself took over the work of the "help."

This arrangement continued for nearly a score of years. Finally Mr. Grove walked some 200 miles to Winnipeg and got himself appointed a high school inspector on condition that he first secure the necessary qualifications. He was over 40 years of age at this time, and when he finally secured a degree from the University of Manitoba he was past 50.

As a school inspector he found himself in easier circumstances but farther away from his life work—the portrayal of the life of the simple people about him, their visions and aspirations—"and," declared the speaker, "that aim is still mine. How far short I have fallen in the past and no matter how I fail to attain in the future, yet I intend to pursue it."

These people, he continued, stood alone in a world of moneymaking, of seeking after luxury, of pleasure and the satisfaction of the senses. He described how these simple folk were struggling to read and to understand the Bible, impelled by an insistent heart hunger for spiritual truth and "the reflection of the godhead in man."

Mr. Grove has been writing continuously since coming to America, although until his "discovery" a short time ago he never made any attempt to gain recognition. He has 14 volumes stored away in a box, and it is understood that one of these is to appear next fall.

this decision was made in order to compel Ibn Saud to provide a source of livelihood for them.

Wahabi or Non-Believer.

These tribesmen apply the term "nonbelievers" not only to non-Moslems but to all persons who are not Wahabi. They consider themselves the only real Moslems, and so greatly have they gained in power of late that they have come to be feared by all the surrounding countries, especially since Ibn Saud, at the head of his army, entered Mecca. The best example of this fear is the fact that when the name Wahabi is uttered by a Sunni or Shiite Moslem he immediately adds, "May Allah protect me from him."

Another and quite contrary view maintained by some Arab experts is that Ibn Saud seeks to attain more territory, and eventually to become the ruling power of the Moslem world. It is for this purpose that he is behind these raids and is intimidating the surrounding peoples.

Whatever the reason may be, the fact remains that the entire Arabian Peninsula is now in a state of great unrest. The Wahabis seem to be aiming particularly at Kuwait on the Persian Gulf. Kuwait is a "Mashai-chah"—that is, a country governed by sheikhs of the Sabakh family. The present ruler is called Sheikh Ahmad. The country covers 4,000 square miles and has a population of 120,000. Of these, about 80,000 are resident in the port of Kuwait, while the rest are roaming about in the desert. The population of the city consists mostly of Sunni and Shiite Moslems, besides some Persians, Hindus, Christians and Jews. In accordance with a treaty signed in 1913 between Great Britain and the Sheikh of Kuwait, the country is under a British protectorate. During that same year a treaty was also signed between Great Britain and Turkey whereby the latter gave up its rights to the former in many important ports on the Persian Gulf, the chief one of which was Kuwait. Since that time the British Government has taken it upon itself to give full protection to the Persian Gulf. It was, therefore, not at all surprising that as soon as the Wahabi raids began, England immediately hastened to station a large air squadron and attachments of armored cars and warships at the port of Kuwait. They are now there, ready for action, if necessary.

Asquith's Place in World History

"He will certainly be remembered as one of the greatest, if not indeed the greatest, among the parliamentarians of the nineteenth century. A leader whose mastery over the House of Commons was never surpassed and hardly equaled," says H. Wickham Steed, former editor of the "London Times," in his estimate of Asquith in the April "Current History" magazine. "If his cold exterior sometimes repelled the impulsive, if he made fewer friends than more genial statesmen have won, he never betrayed a friend once made and never allowed personal pique or vanity to stand in the way of a colleague. He was trusted as few leaders have been trusted. . . . Officially Asquith was a Liberal. In ideas he was a radical and, by temperament, a Whig. He led the Liberal Party steadily and steadily. He carried through the most radical legislation that had been passed for the better part of a century, but his 'form' had much in common with that of the great Whigs. . . . Thanks mainly to him and to Grey, Great Britain and the British Dominions went into the struggle united, and with the approval of a united country and of all save three Liberal Ministers. Lloyd George forsook the pacifist minority at the last moment. This degree of union was Asquith's outstanding achievement. For him as for Grey, the war was a fearful wrench. . . . Popularity, indeed, he never sought," but he "earned respect," rising steadily as Home Secretary, Chancellor of the Exchequer, Acting Secretary of War and latterly as Prime Minister. "Only when Belgium was actually on the point of being invaded could or did Asquith make his decision, and then he made it as the leader of a united nation. . . . As the years go by Asquith's stature will grow in retrospect. He was a great English gentleman, a statesman of no mean order and a character whose virtues will command admiration as long as respect for integrity in public life shall endure."

New Edmonton Map

Reflects Increasing Demand For Maps in Canada

According to the Topographical Survey, Department of the Interior, our Dominion is becoming more and more a nation of map users. This is reflected in the increasing demand requiring successive editions of some of the more popular map sheets issued by this organization. The Edmonton sheet of the Sectional Map of Canada, for instance, has already gone through ten editions since it was first published thirty-seven years ago.

The latest edition, which has just been issued, shows in seven colors all topographical features, both natural and artificial, possible for the scale employed—three miles to an inch. A study of the successive editions of this map would afford a ready means of tracing the progress of settlement in this district. When the first edition was issued the Calgary and Edmonton branch was the only railroad in Alberta north of the C.P.R. main line. To-day, as the present edition shows, the area is served by a network of main and branch railway lines and is also filled with other features resulting from the works of man, such as towns, villages, farmhouses, schools, churches, elevators, telephone lines, post offices, and so on.

Another interesting feature recorded upon the latest edition is that in the 104 townships covered there are some 280 miles of trunk roads, 493 miles of secondary roads, and 2350 miles of local roads in fair condition. These are shown, respectively, in red, in buff and in black.

The site of old Fort Augustus, shown upon the map as located on the north side of the Saskatchewan below Fort Saskatchewan provides a link with the past. Alexander Henry, the younger, tells in his journal of cutting barley at this place on the 3rd of September in 1810 some time after the fort itself had been abandoned. Edmonton, a city of over 65,000 is built on the site of "New" Fort Augustus, erected in the latter part of the 18th century and sometimes designated Upper Fort des Prairies by early explorers and traders. "New" Fort Augustus was maintained by the North West Company until their fusion with the Hudson's Bay Company in 1821. Later the name was changed to Fort Edmonton.

The Edmonton sheet may be obtained from the Surveyor General, Topographical Survey, Department of the Interior, Ottawa, upon application for the nominal sum of 25 cents in sheet form or 50 cents when linen-backed or in folder form.

When Pain Comes

What many people call indigestion very often means excess acid in the stomach. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated, and food sour. The corrective is an alkali, which neutralizes acids instantly. And the best alkali known to medical science is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It has remained the standard with physicians in the 50 years since its invention. One spoonful of this harmless, taste-

Oil Well Gives Great Returns In England

Owing to Legal Technicalities Its Commercial Working Is Not Feasible

London—Dr. Arthur Wade, speaking at the Institution of Petroleum Technologists, quoted Dr. A. C. Veatch, an American oil expert, as saying that "the petroleum possibilities in the Midlands of England are of the most amazing and striking character." The lecturer referred to the oil well at Hardstoft in Derbyshire.

Few people, he said, realized that between May and December, 1927, the well produced some 2500 tons of oil, an average of six barrels daily, which compares favorably with the official statement of the average yield of producing wells in the United States. He felt certain that accumulations of petroleum, possibly of comparatively large dimensions remain to be discovered in England.

Dr. Wade concluded by saying that although he was sure accumulations of oil did exist in the English Midlands, he was also quite sure that it was not at present commercially feasible to look for them. Owing to the fact that the lands were minutely subdivided, it was a complicated task to block up an area such as a company would require for drilling. Even in the case of coal leases, he had known the average time between the agreement for a lease and the signing of the contract to be eight years.

Woman's Sphere

Manchester Guardian (Lib.): (The Manchester City Council decided that marriage should not be made a reason for the dismissal of women teachers). Efficiency is the only matter that should be taken into account when a woman or a man is employed or dismissed. Any other attitude leads to hopeless confusion, frequent injustice, and sometimes to ludicrous interference with the private lives of individual teachers. . . . Marriage, as such, has no more to do with the matter in the case of a woman than a man. To argue that no woman should be married unless her husband is able to support her is not only to show oneself hopelessly out of touch with modern conditions, but also to introduce considerations which are irrelevant to the general issue and impertinent when discussed in relation to particular cases.

German Clock Announces Midnight by Striking 24

Berlin—When clock strikes as high as thirteen it is ordinarily assumed that there is something wrong with it. This is no longer so in Frelenwalde, Brandenburg. The clock in the tower of St. George's Church there not only has been equipped with a dial running up to twenty-four, but the striking mechanism has been altered so that the clock strikes up to twenty-four—twenty-four times a midnight!

The twenty-four-hour system was introduced for the German railways and post office, but Frelenwalde is the first place to accept all the consequences of it.

We would suggest that, before companionate marriage be tried, the couple experiment with a few sessions of companionate bridge-playing.

Berlin Court Rules Lipsticks Necessities; Orders Month's Pay to Discharged Girl

Berlin—Lipsticks are no longer luxury articles which women may use or not, according to their desire, but recognized components of a lady's toilet, the same as dress, hat and shoes, a Berlin court ruled recently.

Further, the court decreed that employers are not privileged to discharge girls merely because they use office cosmetics for removing excess carmine. The fault lies with the boss if he does not pay large enough salaries to enable the daughters of Eve to buy quality cosmetics which will not rub off, the Judge solemnly stated.

In defense the employer in this case said the red daubs on curline in his office caused his wife to become suspicious of his fidelity, and she accused him of allowing stenographers to kiss his bald head and later removing the marks of his treachery with curtains. He therefore summarily dismissed Fraulein Bibl, who was guilty of making the marks in question, but the Court made him pay her a month's salary, as the girl was not blamable for the inferior quality of her lipsticks.

NEW BLOOD NEEDED IN THE SPRING TIME

Try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as a Blood Improving, Health-Restoring Tonic.

Every man, woman and child needs new, rich, red blood at this time of the year. That is a scientific fact. All doctors know it. The blood grows thin and poor in the winter; there is not enough of it, and spring shows the effect. Take notice and see how many people are pale and sallow at this time of the year. They complain of being easily tired, their appetite is poor, and they are often depressed and low spirited. That is Mother Nature urging them to improve their blood supply; but often their digestion is weakened so that they cannot turn food into blood without help. Here is where modern medical science comes to the rescue. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have a direct action on the blood and enable you to get full use of the blood-making elements in your meals. You soon feel their effect—your appetite improves, your nerves are steadier, color returns to the cheeks and lips, you have more vim and energy, and can work with less fatigue.

The value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to all who are in what is known as a run-down condition of health is proved by the experience of Mr. John A. O'Neill, Port Hood, N.S., who says:—"It is not possible for me to recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills too highly. I had been gradually growing weaker, and found it hard to do my work. I suffered from severe headaches and pains in the back. I was nervous and easily irritated, and altogether my condition was deplorable. A friend urged me to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I got a half dozen boxes. I had only taken them a short time when I found them helping me, and by the time I had taken the supply I got. I was again enjoying good health. Headaches and pains had disappeared, my nerves were strengthened and I had good reason to be thankful that I had followed the advice of my friend."

Whether you are seriously ill or merely feel easily tired and out-of-sorts, you should try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills this spring. They are sold by medicine dealers everywhere, or will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

If I was sad, think only that a thought Brushed me a moment, from the raven wing
Of that dim prince who holds his abode
Where proserpine grows old, remembering:
If I was sad, think that a careless cloud
Trailing companion shadows on the green,
Cooled the clear sun, and for a space allowed
Darkness to be where radiance had been.

It was not sorrow blew; so light a wind
Could not shake down the apples from the trees
Which love, the gardener, planted in my mind
To bear me harvest of Hesperides.
It was not sorrow—but a little pride
That flickered suddenly, before it died.

For Better Programs

Ottawa Citizen (Lib.): Canada has tried the policy of government regulation of private radio enterprise. It has been fairly successful so far, but the problems, such as the question raised by the International Bible Students, are just beginning. An intolerable situation is plainly bound to develop unless government control of broadcasting is extended to government ownership and operation of the broadcasting stations as it is in Great Britain.

An Empire Settlement Board

Toronto Globe (Lib.): All interested parties are agreed that British countries should be peopled by British stock, not only for the sake of the people and the Empire, but for the benefits it would bring to Empire trade. The Empire Marketing Board is bending its efforts in the direction of trade. Its functions are partly of a publicity nature, but it also proposes to assist in Empire development by studying potentialities and by furthering research. If it is worth while to devote money, time and energy to this end for the sake of the Empire, it is even more important that effort should be made and money should be spent to distribute the human intelligence and man-power of the Empire in a way to bring the best results.

GREAT HELP TO YOUNG MOTHERS

Baby's Own Tablets Have Many Uses and Are Absolutely Harmless.

To have in the house a simple, harmless remedy for the minor ills of babies and little children is a great boon to young mothers, and this is exactly why Baby's Own Tablets have been found in thousands of households. The Tablets regulate the stomach and bowels, break up colds and simple fevers, allay the irritation of cutting teeth, yet they have no drug taste and the children like them.

Concerning the Tablets Mrs. Ruthven Crommiller, Ruthven, Ont., writes:—"Kindly send me your little book on the Care of the Baby. I have two children, one four years of age and the other a year and a half. Both are in excellent health and the only medicine they have had is Baby's Own Tablets. I always keep the Tablets in the house and am happy to recommend them to other mothers."

Baby's Own Tablets are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cts. a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Clemenceau Gets New Car But His Money Is Refused

Paris—Georges Clemenceau, "the grand old man of Gaul," who uses an automobile instead of the train for traveling about France, tried to buy a new car the other day and couldn't. The company insisted on giving it to him.

For several years the "Tiger" had traveled about in a big, but old, car. He decided it was about time to get a new model, and went to the sales office to see how much he would be allowed on the old machine.

"Monsieur le President," the sales manager said, "France owes you too much. Let me pay my part of the debt." And he refused to accept a sou from the Tiger.

Clemenceau, on returning to his apartment, sent a check for 10,000 francs—$400—to the automobile plant to be distributed among workmen whose circumstances were the most needy.

India's Reasons For Demanding Independence

"Ever since Lork Birkenhead took the important and extraordinary decision in 1924 to summon Lord Reading, then Viceroy to India, to private conference in Whitehall the demand has been gaining ground that the future of India should be decided upon after consultations between British and Indian statesmen," says D. N. Bannerjee, member of the Committee of Intellectual Co-operation of the League of Nations, in an article in April "Current History" Magazine. "India to-day is no longer content with petty reforms. She asks for self-government as her inalienable right and is prepared during the transition to leave control over the army and relations with foreign powers in the hands of the British Government. India asks for self-government for fundamentally sound reasons. . . . The arrival of the members of the Royal Commission on Indian Constitutional Reforms on Feb 3 was marked by closing of shops and suspension of business in Bombay and by 'dramatic triumphs' in Calcutta. It must not be understood that the boycott applies only to the commission. It will continue until either by Parliamentary pronouncement or by means of a round table conference of plenipotentiaries of England and India the future Constitution of India is determined upon and accepted. Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru proposes the appointment of an Indian commission to tour the country and conduct an investigation into the working of the Constitution. The British Parliament, no doubt, takes longer views and is more sympathetic. . . . The question of Indian self-government finally does not rest on the merits or demerits of the present Government. Campbell-Bannerman decided it long ago by his dictum that good government is no proper substitute for self-government."

Settling the Settler

Toronto Mail and Empire (Cons.): Inducing people to come here is one thing. Making them glad they came here is another. Both are matters for which the government must be responsible. Upon immigration policy the government might vainly spend immense sums every year, for unless a very liberal part of the outlay is applied to the service of getting the people comfortably established on the soil and well introduced into the Canadian way of living, the newcomers must find the struggle a disheartening one.

Ailing Men and Women Need This Tonic

Poets sing of Spring, but practical-minded people, everywhere, turn at this time to the Doctor and the Druggist for help to build up run-down constitutions. And no better remedy can be taken than Buckley's TRU-BLOOD.

TRU-BLOOD, as its name implies, is a true blood tonic and a safe, sure, powerful corrective for all blood disorders, and rheumatic conditions as well.

But "TRU-BLOOD" is more than a blood purifier—its use eradicates the outward evidences of impoverished blood, such as pimples, boils, eczema, blotches and all other skin affections.

Buckley's OINTMENT, used in conjunction with Buckley's TRU-BLOOD, heals magically and leaves the skin smooth and soft.

Especially during the adolescent age, pimples and various forms of skin eruptions are likely to appear. They mar the complexion and cause untold anguish. The combined TRU-BLOOD and Buckley's OINTMENT treatment promptly corrects the condition and leaves the skin clear, smooth and colorless.

Most druggists can supply you with these proven Buckley products.

TO WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Mrs. Wilson's Experience a Guide to Women Passing through the Change of Life

Hamilton, Ontario.—"I have taken several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I cannot speak too highly of it as I was at the Change of Life and was all run-down and had no appetite. I was very weak and sick, and the pains in my back were so bad I could hardly move. I got very sad at times and thought I had not a friend on earth. I did not care if I lived or died. I was very nervous, too, and did not go out very much. A friend advised me to try a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I did. I am a farmer's wife, and always worked hard until lately, and was in bed for two months. I began to feel like a new woman after the first bottle and I recommend it with great success. Also Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills. I am willing to answer letters from women asking about your medicine, as I cannot speak too highly of them."—Mrs. EMMA WILSON, 471 Wilson Street, Hamilton, Ontario.

W. G. Staniforth,

A Letter to Mother.

With the near approach of Mother's Day The Editor of the Watchman is fortunate in being able to reproduce a beautiful letter which was sent to an aged mother in the person of Mrs. Wm. Studer of 23 Arlington Avenue, Westmount, from her son Dr. A. G. Studer, of Detroit, on the anniversary of her 90th birthday, which she recently attained.

The editor numbers among his friends, both Dr. Studer and his mother, and is publishing this letter through the courtesy of Mrs. G. Maxwell Sinn, daughter of grandma with whom Mrs. Studer resides.

The Watchman takes the responsibility of stating and the editor feels certain that in merely mentioning one or two facts about Dr. Studer's life and his love for his mother, is based on her early religious teachings to him and her duties as a mother of the old school. The Dr. left his home in Montreal while still in his teens, and fought his way up from a mere schoolboy to the height of the medical profession. He has served his fellow-men in many ways; and he admitted to the editor of this paper when we had the pleasure of his acquaintance recently, that if he has accomplished some little success in life it is largely due to the remembrance of his early home training and to the fact that not for a day in the 35 years' absence from his native city has he forgotten his mother.

This letter certainly proves that fact and we hope that such a greeting to Mother as the letter contains will be taken to heart by many young men and girls who probably are apt to forget what Dr. Studer has remembered.

In all sincerity the Watchman would urge all young people to remember their dear Mother on Sunday next, "Mother's Day" whether at home or away. If you have forgotten Mother, either with kindly word or loving letter turn over a new leaf on Sunday. If they are alive see that they are remembered; and if they are in eternity, remember them in prayer.

April 16th, 1928.

My Dearest Mother :-

It is hard for me to realize that today you attain your ninetieth birthday. What a wonderful span of years you have covered in your long journey of life. No other 90 years in the world's history has witnessed such progress in every phase of life's activity and I do not believe the same advancement will ever again be made in the same period of time.

You have had many heartaches and disappointments during the years, but there has also been much of comfort and joy and satisfaction. I recall the many happy days of my youth, upon which, as I look back become more dear and more inspiring. The many times we have been privileged to visit with each other, bring memories that are full of brightness and gladness and love. I wish it were possible for me to convey to you all that there is in my heart and how dear you are to us all. I wish I could give you some of my bodily strength, so that you could do some of those things which you are so eager to perform and which would bring you great contentment. However yours has been an active life; you have sent out influences that have been helpful to hundreds of thousands, and your faith and loyalty in and to God has always been a blessing and an inspiration.

Dear Mother, I thank Our Heavenly Father for your good life and your wonderful love throughout the years. I cannot wish you a long life for you already have had that, but I can and do wish and pray that the remaining period of your stay with us, may be full of peace and quietness and love, and that every day you may know and experience increasingly, the care and love of God, which surpasses full knowledge.

I am with you in spirit today with a heart full of affection and goodwill.

Your boy, Adolphe.

The trial of the Rastus chicken stealing case came up at the Town Hall, on Friday evening. Although a verdict of guilty was rendered the sympathy of the audience turned in favor of the defendant, due to the eloquence of his counsel and his neat character sketch of the spotless Mr. Rastus. Doubtless we have misjudged him, and the least we can now say is that he was not as black as he was painted. The sentence was a very light one, the evidence showing that there were extenuating circumstances. The learned judge expounded the law to give us the idea that any tender

THE NEW DURANT FOUR

The Durant Four "Rideau" Sedan
Built in seven models, Rideau Sedan (shown),
Four-door Sedan, Two-door Sedan, Coupe, Roadster, Touring, Special Touring and College Roadster.

When you see the new Durant Four you will realize that this car positively "sets a new standard for automobiles."

You will be impressed by its size, its newly designed radiator and the very modern lines of its Durant Built Hayes-Hunt body.

After you have examined it thoroughly . . . the fine upholstery . . . the comfortable seats . . . ask for a demonstration.

The improved Red Seal Continental Motor will surprise you. You will unconsciously compare its power and speed with that of six cylinder performance. The long wheel-base, the greater flexibility of the motor and the Bendix 4-wheel brakes give you that satisfaction usually associated only with more expensive cars.

Convince yourself that there is no four cylinder car on the market that looks better, rides easier or offers more value per dollar than the new Durant Four . . . Ride in it . . . Drive it . . . Yourself!

Captain John Hewitt—Commissioner of Police at Jemalton—sprang to his feet and extended a welcoming hand to a stout, elderly Chinaman pausing on the threshold.

Monica Viney, delightfully at ease in a cane chair, raised her eyes from her book to observe the newcomer. His attire seemed to be a studied compromise between eastern and western fashions, for he wore a white tunic, baggy trousers of black silk, and black boots with elastic sides. Across his chest stretched a gold watch-chain, the links of which were peculiarly massive, and the third finger of his left hand displayed a ring set with a large green stone.

"You sent for me," he announced with a haughty intonation that, for some reason, struck terror into her soul.

"That's right," agreed the commissioner cordially. "Come in and sit down. This is my sister, Mrs. Viney. Monica, I want to introduce you to the wealthiest and most respected Chinese gentleman on the island—Mr. Chai-Hung."

"How do you do," murmured Monica sweetly. She was about to rise when a movement of the Oriental's hand checked her.

"Please do not move, Miss Viney. I cannot tell you how delighted I am to make your honored acquaintance. I understand you arrived in Borneo only a short time ago."

Monica flushed. "I came from Singapore three days ago—in the Jelatang," she replied. "It was a wonderful trip. I was practically the only passenger in the first-class saloon."

Chai-Hung lowered himself into a chair.

"Practically," he echoed.

"Why yes. There was only myself—and a Mr. Pennington."

Hewitt looked up sharply.

"Of course you'll stop to tea, Mr. Chai-Hung."

The Chinaman shook his head slowly.

"I never take tea, at least, not what you western people term tea. You'll pardon me, I know, if I say that our national beverage suffered considerably when it came into your hands. You diluted it with milk—and spoiled it with sugar!"

The commissioner crossed his legs and held his cigar-case toward his guest.

Chai-Hung helped himself.

Hewitt slapped each of his pockets in turn, accepted the Chinaman's box of matches, lit Chai-Hung's cigar, then turned his attention to his own. With blissful unconcern, he dropped the box into his tunic pocket.

Monica, keenly observant, watched with amused interest the almost pethetic expression with which the Oriental followed the cool annexation of his property. A ripple of laughter escaped her lips.

"Didn't you know that?" she demanded. "I thought everybody did. I don't believe he's ever bought matches in his life! Jack, give Mr. Chai-Hung his matches."

The commissioner started guiltily. "By jove! I'm frightfully sorry. I hadn't the least intention—" He handed them back.

The eyes of Chai-Hung positively twinkled.

"I must remember that," he said.

"I sent for you, Mr. Chai-Hung," Hewitt began, "because I am seriously in need of help. Your amazing insight into affairs that concern your own people has been of great service to me in the past: I am hoping that it will serve to lift the veil from a mystery of which the non-solution may enforce my resignation of my position here."

"As bad as that?"

The commissioner nodded.

"Lord Stornaway and his wife dined here last night and left this morning for Sandakan."

"I wanted their visit to be devoid of unpleasantness. While we were at dinner, her ladyship remembered she had left an unusually valuable diamond pendant on her dressing-table. I suggested that my sister should fetch it. She got there just in time to see Lady Stornaway's diamonds disappearing through the open window."

He paused and glanced at his sister.

Chai-Hung leaped to his feet.

She began speaking very quickly:

"As I opened the door, a current of air met me, sending something fluttering to the floor. I stooped to recover it and a sound from the window attracted my attention. It was open and, through the aperture, I saw a long, brown arm, its fingers passing rapidly along the wooden surface until they closed over the case that held the pendant. A second later and both arm and pendant had disappeared. I believe I screamed for the next moment Jack and Lord Stornaway were both in the room. Lady Stornaway followed. I felt the room going round me. The next thing I remember is finding myself in this chair, still holding the piece of card that I had picked up before I saw the arm."

She shuddered and Chai-Hung rose to his feet.

"A distinctly unpleasant experience," he commented suavely. "And the piece of card—what was it like, Mrs. Viney?"

"It was as long as my index finger," broke in the commissioner, "with rounded corners. On one side it was black, on the other yellow—with seven black dots, four of them above a faint dividing line that ran halfway—and three below."

Monica leaning over the arm of her chair, wrinkled her forehead. She could have sworn that the habitually untroubled Chai-Hung had started violently.

"An ordinary Chinese playing-card," he suggested.

The commissioner shook his head.

"It was possibly intended to look like one, but the coloring was different. The background is, I believe, invariably white. This was yellow. I am inclined to attach a good deal of importance to this card, Mr. Chai-Hung. I fancy this theft was no common theft, the perpetrator no ordinary thief."

Chai-Hung regarded his watch.

"What is your theory, Captain Hewitt, if I may ask?"

"I believe that this affair is not wholly unconnected with the present wave of anti-British feeling that prevails everywhere. I look at it as a carefully calculated plan to cause considerable annoyance to a prominent Englishman; the work, in fact, of a secret society. Be that as it may," he concluded abruptly, "I'm in about the biggest hole I've dropped into during the whole of my official career."

"Has it ever occurred to you," asked the Oriental blandly, "that a secret society in the east is very much the same as a trade union in the west?"

"Then you don't agree with me?"

"Hardly."

"But," cried Monica excitedly, "how do you account for the yellow seven?"

Chai-Hung leaped to his feet and stood glaring at her, his fists clenching and unclenching in his efforts to choke down the fury that consumed him.

"What do you know of the Yellow Seven?" he demanded fiercely.

She regarded him in amazement.

"Why," she retorted innocently, "it was yellow—and there were seven dots."

The Oriental swallowed something in his throat.

"Of course. I was forgetting," he admitted, half to himself. "I'll do everything possible, Captain Hewitt."

At the entrance he turned.

"Good-afternoon, Captain Hewitt. Good-day, Mrs. Viney."

He was off at a rapid pace and the commissioner watched his red paper umbrella until it was out of sight.

He turned to find Pennington at his elbow.

"Good Lord, man! How did you get here?"

The other grinned. The only thing that was remarkable about Peter Pennington was the angle at which his eyes were set on an otherwise youthful countenance. They ran obliquely and were as celestial in appearance as those of the great Chai-Hung.

"Come as far as the sun-blinds," Pennington explained. "Heard the sound of voices—and retreated to the kitchen-entrance. Found your office a damn sight cooler than the outer atmosphere."

The commissioner surveyed him doubtfully.

"I always listen," admitted the newcomer unabashed. "It's my job."

"I suppose you gathered that our Oriental acquaintance is a washout as far as this affair is concerned," said Hewitt gloomily.

The younger man leant against the wall and began rolling a cigarette.

"Afternoon, Mrs. Viney! Hot, isn't it?"

"Frightfully. Mr. Pennington, you don't really think Mr. Chai-Hung will help Jack, do you? I think he's a horrible man!"

"Know anything about Chai-Hung?" asked Pennington suddenly.

Hewitt started.

"He's a prosperous Chinese merchant. He plants rubber as a sort of profitable hobby. Chai-Hung's as white as they make 'em, for all his yellow hide."

"And yet he refuses to help you?"

"Not at all. He promised to do his best. I hardly expected him to send the damned pendant to me by this evening."

Pennington turned and gazed thoughtfully toward a sea of infinite blue.

"Thanks," he murmured drily. "I take it then that you place absolute confidence in our friend?"

"Certainly. I've no reason to do otherwise."

The younger man swung slowly round on his heel. He walked down toward the kitchen quarters, then came back and stood in front of the commissioner's chair.

"If Chai-Hung knows as much of the manners and customs of his people as you are inclined to imagine, he could have told you one thing at least—if he had chosen. He could have explained to you that the recovery of the lost diamonds is every moment becoming more difficult—because it is changing hands with incredible rapidity."

King George Simple Liver

Prince of Wales Also Prefers Plain Meals At All Times

The pervailing simplicity of the meals at Buckingham Palace is due partly to the necessity for economy but perhaps more to King George's digestion, of which he has become extremely careful.

Quite recently the dinner hour at Buckingham Palace was altered from 8 o'clock to 7.45, that King George might finish his last light meal of the day at least a clear three hours before retiring for the night.

- Oysters
- Soup
- Grilled Sole
- Chicken Cutlets
- Ice Pudding

Through the great Afghan banquet with its twenty-four courses King George sat laughing and talking but eating scarcely a morsel more than he does any ordinary night, and just toying with the dainties prepared by M. Cedard, the famous royal chef, who for one night was allowed to exercise his genius regardless of cost.

Prince Dislikes Long Dinners

The Prince of Wales got through it as his father did, by making a pretence of eating and enjoying small portions of the dishes. But perhaps even a greater trial to him was sitting through the elaborate banquet for two hours.

At public dinners attended by the Prince in London and elsewhere it is nowadays understood by those entertaining the Prince that His Royal Highness does not wish a dinner to last more than an hour at the longest.

At York House the Prince's dinner, when he dines by himself, generally consists of a cut from a joint of cold roast beef, a fruit tart, an ice, and a pint of beer. Then a pipe. And when he dines with intimate friends the dinner they give him is much the same.

But the Prince is too well schooled in the art of looking cheerful in circumstances that are disagreeable to him not to have been able to get smilingly through a lengthy banquet.

Duke Leans to Ceremony

The Duke of York more than any of his brothers has a liking for ceremony, and in that respect resembles King Edward more than the Prince of Wales and his two younger brothers. But the Duke of York lives as plainly as his eldest brother, and the meals at 145 Piccadilly are simpler than in many well-off establishments.

A four course dinner served at 7.45 p.m. is the custom at 145, but it is a movable feast. Duty or pleasure may detain the Duke and Duchess long after their regular dinner hour.

And if their dinner is hopelessly spoiled they will cheerfully dine off an omelet, sausage, or anything else that can be quickly prepared.

Tradition and custom compel King George to retain the services of a chef whose salary is eighteen hundred a year, together with a staff of four assistant cooks at an average wage of £500 each. One of these assistant cooks could easily do all the ordinary daily cooking required by King George and Queen Mary, but to get rid of the services of the chef and his assistants would be a measure of economy that even so ardent an economist as Queen Mary would not attempt.

How Much Water Should Baby Get?
A Famous Authority's Rule
By Ruth Brittain

Baby specialists agree nowadays, that during the first six months, babies must have three ounces of fluid per pound of body weight daily. An eight pound baby, for instance, needs twenty-four ounces of fluid. Later on the rule is two ounces of fluid per pound of body weight. The amount of fluid absorbed by a breast fed baby is best determined by weighing him before and after feeding for the whole day; and it is easily calculated for the bottle fed one. Then make up any deficiency with water.

Giving baby sufficient water often relieves his feverish, crying, upset and restless spells. If it doesn't, give him a few drops of Fletcher's Castor Oil. For these and other ills of babies and children such as colic, cholera, diarrhoea, gas on stomach and bowels, constipation, sour stomach, loss of sleep, underweight, etc., leading physicians say there's nothing so effective. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper—and millions of mothers have depended on it in over thirty years of ever increasing use. It regulates baby's bowels, makes him sleep and eat right, enables him to get full nourishment from his food, so he increases in weight as he should. With each package you get a book on Motherhood worth its weight in gold. Just a word of caution. Look for the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher on the package so you'll be sure to get the genuine. The forty cent bottles contain thirty-five doses.

Aspirin is the trade mark registered in Canada. It is indicated by a cross on the wrapper. Well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to ensure the public against imitations, the Tablets will be stamped with Bayer Cross' trade mark.

Jewels Possess Peculiar Powers

Indian Rajahs and Jewel Owners Believe This Implicity

The fabulous crown jewels of Russia have no attractions for the jewel-loving rich and great of India. There was, for example, the wife of a Calcutta dealer in gems who, wearing some $150,000 worth of ornaments, and attended by a servant carrying more, showed her treasures to Michael Pym. In one of the boxes which she opened was an exceptional pair of diamond earrings which, she said proudly, had belonged to the late Czarina. Bystanders cried out that it was no wonder that the jeweler's wife was in ill-health, that she had troubles. Surely, we read in an article by Mr. Pym in the New York "Herald Tribune" Magazine:

Every one in India knew by now that the crown jewels of Russia had a curse on them. And there was another jeweler, equally as great as the Calcutta man, to prove it. He had tried to buy all he could of these jewels. And his fortune was wiped away, clean, like butter off the palm of your hand—for no reason. And there was the ex-Maharajah of Nabha—he had bought some. At once he lost his throne. The lady gazed upon the earrings with growing horror. I know that by nightfall she had them no longer. They were sent away at once to be disposed of, even at a loss.

Jewels Have Personality?

India, in a word, believes in the personality of gems; and to the Indians the emerald is particularly sacred and sought after, we are told. It is the stone of purity, and guards against poison and other ills. To-day the great historic emerald which Akbar wore, and which can be seen in all portraits of Mogul emperors, is on the market. Mr. Pym passes on to tell of some of the famous jewels and jewel collections in India:

The Maharajah of Jodhpur has perhaps the best collection of emeralds in India. His Highness of Palanpur and His Highness of Patiala hold second place in this. The Gaekwar of Baroda also has beauties, but perhaps the most unique thing in his possession is a carpet made solidly of jewels.

The carpet is about four feet long, just big enough for two people to sit on, and every inch is sewn with diamonds, emeralds, rubies, and pearls—an almost incredible sight. But then, Baroda's jewels have been valued by European experts at five million dollars in India—which probably means more elsewhere—and when the Maharajah is fully dressed for the coronation she has to be lifted to her feet, her jewels are so heavy. It was from the Gaekwar of Baroda that the late Queen Alexandra, when she was in India as Princess of Wales, got the pearls that made up her famous necklace.

Here enters, in the person of a Mr. Jacob, a well-known character of fiction. Mr. Jacob was trying to sell a certain diamond to the father of the present Nizam of Hyderabad, whose treasure is famous. Mr. Pym tells the story in this style:

Jacob was the original of Marion Crawford's Mr. Isaac and of Kipling's Healer of Pearls, in "Kim"; he is one of the Indian's semi-legendary figures. Whence he came, or where, at intervals, he disappeared to, nobody knows. He spoke practically every Oriental language perfectly, and would travel across India like some gorgeous meteor, in a private carriage, magnificently appointed, with his servants in a semi-royal livery of a peculiar red.

Finally, luck turned against him. He had agreed to sell for a French syndicate the valuable diamond I have referred to. His Exalted Highness of Hyderabad took it on approval, paying sixty thousand sterling on deposit. Mr. Jacob speculated with the money and when the diamond was returned he could not provide the necessary cash. The French syndicate forced him to sue the Nizam, and he lost after many years of fruitless legalities.

When it had been decided against Jacob, the ruined man had a final interview with the Nizam, when the latter told him that had he only come to him frankly he would have lent him the money unhesitatingly. Once a lawsuit was started, however, his honor obliged him to fight it. That was what killed Jacob. He had no successor.

Enjoy Possession

Another story concerns the present Nizam, and shows that the Indian has aesthetic as well as commercial sense. Mr. Pym tells it:

A visitor of special importance was going round his treasure houses with him, and came to a room in which were tables piled high with golden sovereigns to the tune of 2,000,000 sterling.

"But, your exalted highness," said the visitor, "don't you know that if you invested this it would bring you, at 5 per cent., $50,000 a year?" "Possibly," replied the Nizam. "But what would I have to look at?" The visitor was silent for a few seconds. Then: "Well," he said reflectively, "I guess that's the most expensive picture I've ever seen."

Dream of Jewels

But jewel-owning is not confined to the rich alone, we learn:

Among the lower classes the entire savings of the household are invested in jewelry worn by the women. The Indian does not believe in banks, and even the banya prefers to bury his wealth somewhere in the back garden. That is one of the main reasons why a gold circulation is impossible in India—each bright new sovereign leaving the bank would bid it a last farewell and go almost directly underground.

Fashion has its say in jewelry just as much in the East as in the West. For both men and women the planetary bracelet is very popular. This is made of gold or platinum links set with seven stones, each sacred to its particular planet; the ruby to Brihaspati, or Jupiter; the yellow sapphire to Rahu, or Mercury, and so on. But by stones I mean stones, not something you have to take a microscope to find. The Maharajah of Patiala always wears one, and so do many other people.

Among women the large nose-ring, made of thin gold and adorned with pendant jewels, has gone out except among the peasantry, and those who wear the nose ornament at all prefer a small diamond inserted into the wing of the left nostril. To Westerners this sounds absurd, but it looks very well on the delicately cut noses of the Indians.

Closely Guarded

Many of the finest jewels of all are devoted to religions, we are told by Mr. Pym, who goes on to say that:

Temple treasures are very difficult to see. It is comparatively easy to visit Mohammedan mosques and Buddhist temples, but Hindu temples and Sikh gurdwaras are not always simple matters. Since the Akali troubles of 1919 the great Golden Temple of Amritsar, which is a Sikh combination of St. Peter's and the Vatican all in one, does not admit Westerners with the same freedom as before. And perhaps of all its visitors only a score or so of Europeans at the most have been shown the treasure.

I sat on the floor this one hot morning, together with the leaders of the committee which now manages the temple. The heavy armored door of the inner room was unlocked, a book was signed, great iron-bound chests were similarly unlocked, another book signed, and the smaller chests the first had contained were then brought out.

I must say the treasure was rather impressive. There were massive golden doors, about the size of French windows in a country house—but some four inches thick. They were solid gold all through, and every inch of the surface was intricately engraved. There was a solid gold umbrella, which could not, of course, be folded, about three feet in diameter, set with emeralds, diamonds and rubies, and fringed a foot deep with pearls.—Literary Digest.

Country Hotels

Sherbrooke Tribune (Lib.): The improvement of our country hotels is an essential matter if our picturesque villages are to be well thought of by our friends, the Americans. There is no point in hiding the fact that the average country hotel or inn is not sufficiently well-managed and does not offer all the comfort required to conform with modern conditions. Many of them are totally or almost totally deficient in the comfort which tourists are looking for. Complaints from the latter are in fact by no means rare.

The Classics and the Farmer

Quebec Soleil (Lib.): From the point of view of the agricultural life, our system of public instruction is defective. It is to be blamed, for the last twenty years, for the false mentality which has steered our young people from the farms towards the towns. The formidable array of workers who have not been trained to their jobs, the commercial people, the job-seekers of all kinds, the useless professional men, who come to us from the country, are the products of our primary commercial and academic schools and our classical colleges.

REAL THRILLS

Two hundred elephants charged madly over the log covering of a little pit, in which a man crouched. Continually it seemed that the all-too-fragile roof above him must be caved in, for many of the beasts weighed three tons. Suddenly there was a crash and splintering, and the foot of one of the animals, enough in itself to kill, came through. It was all over, the man decided, but the elephant regained its balance, extricated its foot and plunged on with the herd. The heat and stench in the five-foot square well were almost unendurable, but the man had to stick it out, and wish for the end. So, amid thunder and with the prospect of death at any moment, Ernest B. Schoedsack, in his pit, took motion pictures of an elephant stampede under the feet of the elephants themselves. One of his most difficult tasks, as Katharine Woods explains in Personality, was making more or less tame elephants behave as if wild. As we read:

Animal Peculiarities.

The elephants had all been in contact with men, and some of them had been domesticated and were, therefore, controllable. The famous monkey comedian was also tame—though it happened that the picture-men found the small monkeys hard to photograph, because the noise of the camera frightened them, and the bright sunlight made them sleepy.

The elephants' charge, of course, was just as marvelous an achievement as it looks. It was difficult and dangerous, and just as much an adventure as making snapshots of wild beasts.

First of all the elephants were rounded up, between two and three hundred of them, chased into a kraal as they are in the film. One of these elephants was a well-trained household assistant. Four or five of the others also qualified as farm helpers. These were the leaders in the destruction of the village, and it was very hard for the men to persuade the domesticated animals to destroy what they had been trained to respect! As for the rest, they were gentle enough, accustomed to man, but not so completely trained as to be wholly amenable. There was not much danger of their getting angry—although that was possible—but there was danger from them, because they were big and stupid and so very numerous.

Tigers Can Climb.

When Schoedsack and Merian C. Cooper, who worked with him, went into the Siamese jungles to get a motion-picture of what they called the "natural drama," they already knew more than most men about the life of the beast-ridden wilderness, we are told; but—

They did not know that a tiger could climb a tree.

And it is a literal fact that a tiger can "climb" a tree. . . . Only something happened to Cooper and Schoedsack that offers a poignant illustration of possible differences between literal and "pragmatic" truth. A tiger can not climb a tree, but a four-hundred-pound tiger leapt up eleven feet of tree-trunk in one tremendous bound; and Schoedsack was only two feet away.

It made a magnificent picture. It is one of the most hair-raising moments in the jungle drama, "Chang," when the great snarling beast, coming nearer and nearer, gets so close that his great angry head blots out the camera itself. "How did they do it?" people have been asking with unbroken monotony, since the film was first shown. "How could they make it look that way?"

They made it look that way, because that was the way it was. And when their jungle drama had unrolled itself, and everyone who could find an opportunity was rushing to the producers with "How!" the men who made the picture smiled and remarked that the tiger going up the tree like that was just a kind of fortunate accident. . . .

Cooper, his gun trained on the beast from another tree, near by, was about to shoot, but Schoedsack signaled to him to wait; the tiger was sure to fall back in an instant; meanwhile he was grinding away at his camera, and he knew he was getting pictures that would be unique. What a chance it was! What a chance. Here was this splendid, enormous, ferocious creature, coming right at him. . . . Lucky, too, that his shelter had been built thirteen feet above the ground instead of, say, only ten.

Natives Profit.

It develops that the visit of the camera-men had a decidedly beneficial effect on the death-rate in that part of Siam. Concerning which we learn: They liked the natives immensely, finding these people of the Lao tribes kindly and intelligent. And Major Cooper has explained that they never could have got the pictures at all if they had not first won the absolute confidence of the native folk.

Of course, although they wanted to get the animals alive, they were obliged to kill many, to save themselves. And their habit was to cover the animal they were photographing with Cooper's gun while Schoedsack took the pictures. But the Lao peoples do not kill tigers. Quite simply and literally, they let the tigers kill them instead. It is estimated that in the province of Nan between three hundred and five hundred natives have been killed by tigers in the last five years. Dr. Hugh Taylor, the veteran missionary of Nan, who shot two tigers within a few yards of his own house in the "town," told the picture hunters of one village of one hundred inhabitants where twenty people had been killed by tigers in one year—and he told Cooper and Schoedsack, too, when their work was finished, that their jungle activities had decreased the death-rate from tigers by about two-thirds. In spite of the beasts' terrible destruction of human life, the natives will not kill the tigers, because they believe that the animals are possessed by evil spirits and will visit a horrible vengeance upon any human being who slays one.

In one village where the Americans wanted to set a trap, a tiger was causing a reign of terror, and no native would try to harm a hair of his head! They explained that this tiger was the hunting steed of a particular devil who rode him on his devilish rounds, who rode him on his devilish rounds, straightway turn his slayer into a tiger and ride him about the jungle through time immemorial. And when Major Cooper promised, "On my shoulders be it—" they accepted his assurance as meaning literally that. He would serve as the tiger-devil's horse if he killed the tiger!

Too Close For Fun.

Cooper had an unpleasantly intimate adventure with a tiger after this, we read:

It was on this tiger hunt that a ferocious creature, caught and caged and being borne by boat down the river to Nan, almost succeeded in gnawing his way out of captivity in the night. Cooper and the men with him tried to chloroform him—he had gnawed through two of his log bars and started on a third—but chloroform had no effect whatever. Finally Cooper hit upon the ridiculous-sounding, but effective, expedient of feeding him bamboo sticks. Fortunately there happened to be a great many bamboo sticks on the boat! And after the man-hunter had chewed up a number of these in rapid succession, he went to sleep. That was when Cooper—the boat being small and the tiger occupying most of it—got on top of the cage and went peacefully to sleep himself!

Many pictures, of tigers, leopards, bears, and other beasts, were got by trapping the animals, and then photographing them when they were let loose, we are told; thus:

The picture of the tiger chasing Kru was taken in this way; the tiger ran after the Siamese for thirty yards, covered with guns the while. A fellow explorer had stated that wild animals kept in captivity for a few days, and not fed, become somewhat dazed, and move about slowly when they are released, instead of making a straight rush back to the jungle, and that in this way they become less difficult to photograph. This information does not come from Cooper or Schoedsack or their representatives but it nevertheless bears the likelihood of accuracy.

Many other pictures were simply waited for, at the crossing of trails, and, especially, at water-holes. Schoedsack and his camera in a camouflaged shelter, Cooper near by with his gun, they waited for hours, and the next day they came and waited again. Sooner or later, beasts

English Women Lead Their Sex as Smokers

English women are the most constant women smokers in the world, it is revealed, but the heaviest smokers of all are soldiers and outdoor workers. What will surprise Canadians even more, however, is the habit of British clergymen to puff away very much more than does the average smoker.

Most cigarettes are smoked between 6 and 7 p.m., this survey discloses. Despite "temperance" drives, the number of English women smokers is steadily growing.

would come to the water-hole. The men just waited. In the case of the picture of the tiger drinking, they waited almost a month. Schoedsack has rated patience above courage in the requirements of his job. It was on one of these occasions, however, that the tiger jumped up the tree.

British Secretly Build Craft for Cape Town to Scotland Trip

A potentially record-breaking airplane, designed to remain 80 hours aloft, thereby adding at least 23 hours to the existing world's endurance record and not less than 3,259 miles to the Chamberlain-Levine trans-atlantic non-stop distance record of 3,911 miles, is being constructed secretly by the British Air Ministry for an early attack on these records.

The government undertook the work in the deepest secrecy. Sections of the aircraft are being built in different parts of the country so that no inkling of the Ministry's purpose could leak out.

Now it is disclosed that the Air Ministry intends to sponsor an official flight from Cape Town to Scotland. The pilot, who is yet to be selected, will follow the Great Circle from Cape Town, passing Kenya Colony, Cairo and Central Europe, making the journey approximately 7,000 miles.

The machine will be flown from Scotland to Cape Town in easy stages. There is no airfield in South Africa big enough for the heavily laden aircraft to take off from, and a special runway will have to be constructed. It was the Air Ministry's search for a field that gave the clue to its intentions.

The chief feature of the aircraft will be a high-efficiency engine with lower gasoline consumption than any of the standard types used at present by the Royal Air Force. It is understood that the Napier Company's builders of the power unit used by Flight Lieutenant Webster and Kinkaid in the Schneider Cup air races and by Malcolm Campbell in the world's fastest automobile, are the designers and builders of the engine, and C. R. Fairley has the contract for the aircraft.

Parliamentary Inconveniences

Quebec Evening (Cons.): Sessions of the Federal Parliament take place at a badly-chosen time. Among the members who come from Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia there is a small majority of farmers. These are compelled to remain at their Federal post at the very time in the year when their presence is most needed on their farms. They never get a chance to go back to their agricultural tasks before the end of May, if not before the end of June. It would be easy to remedy this inconvenient state of affairs, if the Federal session were always called in November.

The Language Difficulty in Alsace

Le Devoir (Ind.): The question of principle involved, which is a very grave one, is the following: Can the German language be regarded as a foreign language in Alsace-Lorraine, seeing that it has been for centuries the natural language of the home with the people of these provinces, the population of which is to-day one and a half million? The question is all the more important in a particular sense, as there are other racial minorities in the French State who speak, as their natural language, a different tongue from French—the Flemish of the Department of the North, the Bretons, the Gascons, the Catalans of Roussillon, and the Corsicans.

WALSH-KATRINE MINE

While there has been somewhat of a lull in the mining market during the past few weeks, stock-holders in the Walsh-Katrine Mine will be glad to know that work has been steadily carried on and latest reports from the mine are most favorable.

Two veins have been encountered by Walsh-Katrine in latest development work on the 140 foot level. No. 1 vein is four feet wide where intersected on this level. This vein is exposed for 1500 feet on the surface averaging six feet in width. Diamond drilling has shown No. 4 vein to carry commercial ore values and drifting is now under way to open up this ore body.

A telegram from the mine reports cutting a heavily mineralized vein to the west of No. 4. This might be No. 3 vein or another vein shown on the surface which is between No. 3 and No. 4 veins. No. 3 vein carried values as high as $90.00 on the surface and up to $132.00 on the 250 foot level. There is no free gold visible. Gold bearing tellurides are however visible in this high grade ore.

Cross-cutting and drifting is being carried on to open up all four major veins on the 140 foot level. No. 2 vein on the 250 foot level averages 4 feet in width and has been opened up for a distance of 145 feet with high grade ore still showing in both faces. It is anticipated that on the 140 foot level No. 2 vein when cut will give the same results as on the 250 foot level where values ran as high as $245.00 in gold and $7.00 in silver.

Development work is proceeding at a very satisfactory rate. Four levels have been established to a depth of 515 feet and the work now being pushed forward is expected to add materially to the known ore reserves. In addition to the property in East Kirkland Lake District, the Walsh-Katrine has under option a property adjacent to the Mandy Mine in Manitoba. The Mandy power house is about 300 feet North of the Walsh-Katrine boundary. This property optioned to the Walsh-Katrine was staked in 1917 and has been kept in good standing since that time. This property should prove to be a valuable asset to the Walsh-Katrine as there is about 3000 feet in length on the strike of the Mandy ore body and the dip is across 1500 feet in width. Construction of the railroad to the Flin-Flon Mine has now almost reached as far as the Walsh-Katrine property and as soon as this is complete exploration work will be commenced to discover whether the Mandy high grade ore body continues on to the Walsh-Katrine property.

F. G. & FACTORY

BY traveling 5,000 miles in 4,751 consecutive minutes, the Studebaker Dictator has established a record unequalled by any stock car in the same price class—comparable to the existing world record of 5,000 miles in 4,559 minutes made by the Studebaker Commander last fall.

And not one, but two Dictator Roadsters, fully equipped, each traveled 5,000 miles in less than that number of minutes. The run was made at the Atlantic City Speedway, April 20-23, under the supervision of the Contest Board of the American Automobile Association. Before and after the run, the cars were checked by the Technical Committee and were pronounced strictly stock models.

CLAIMS vs. FACTS

Automobile advertising is full of extravagant claims of performance. But Studebaker offers you definite FACTS supported by the certificate of the highest motoring authority. Under A. A. A. supervision

The Commander has made a record never approached by any other car on earth (25,000 miles in less than 23,000 minutes). The Erskine and The Dictator have made records unequalled by any other stock cars at or near their prices.

The high quality of materials, the precision workmanship, the rigid inspections and the engineering genius in the Studebaker Dictator are proved not only by its ability to travel 5,000 miles in less than 4,800 consecutive minutes, but also by the fact that any Dictator can be driven 40 miles per hour as soon as it leaves the assembly line at the factory.

Backed by Studebaker's 76-year reputation for quality and value, The Dictator offers champion performance at a low One-Price price.

Values in Four Price Fields

President Eight, $2620 to $3415; The Commander, $1950 to $2265; The Dictator, $1755 to $1875; The Erskine Six, $995 to $1205. All prices f. o. b. Walkerville. Government taxes to be added.

The entertainment was high class and gave Professor Taranto ample scope for displaying his genius and skill in the violin selections, of which he proved a master. The vocal numbers of Miss Davies and Mr. Bulley were exceptionally well rendered and highly appreciated. The programme though somewhat short, concluded with a violin duet by Professor Taranto and his talented pupil, Miss Blanche Ayers. The proceeds of the concert were devoted to the St. Julien Church.

June 12th. is the date set by the Town Council for holding the referendum as to the establishment of a liquor store in Lachute. This has been in the wind for a long time and individual efforts have been made but without success. Since the commission temporarily withheld the licenses, because certain hotel-keepers had abused their privileges, the liquor store question was again revived and a petition containing 173 signatures of qualified electors was at the last regular session of council presented, requesting action in the public interest.

Now it is plainly up to the people to decide, in the face of six licenses being granted for sale of beer and wine, whether they wish another license to be issued for the dispensation of hard liquors.

Although the Council adopted daylight saving (and upon which the town is now working), Alderman Charland has sponsored the new by-law, which incorporates asking the citizens to give expression on this vexed question, to establish once for all whether they are in favor of the Council's action in this respect. The Mills and the public generally seem to appreciate the hour which gives the lengthened evening, and the result of the vote will be looked forward to with great interest.

THE LATE MRS. A. MCCREA.

The death of the late Mrs. Atcheson McCrea took place at her home St. Jerusalem, on Thursday morning, May 17th. Death came somewhat unexpectedly as deceased though not of robust health has been going around until two weeks ago.

She leaves to mourn her loss a loving husband and six sons as well as two sisters Mrs. Geo. Bigras of Arundel, Miss Sophie, of Montreal, and her brother Felix Dorion, of East Settlement. The funeral takes place on Friday at 2 o'clock (Standard).

News has been received of the death of Charles E. Hopkins, formerly of Oshawa township, Minnesota, which occurred at his home in Chelonia, Wash., on Sunday, April 22, following an illness with pneumonia and diabetes. Deceased was 68 years of age and spent most of his life in Oshawa, leaving a few years ago to make his home in the west. He was married on December 25, 1900, to Miss Maggie McCuat of Oshawa, and she, besides one son, Ralph Hopkins, is left to mourn his loss. Other relatives in Oshawa are three sisters, Mrs. Coffin of Fairmont, Mrs. Elba McCuat and Georgiana Hopkins of Winnipeg, besides several nieces and nephews. Mrs. Hopkins was a daughter of Thomas McCuat and a grand-daughter of John McCuat, of Hillfoot, Que.

THE LATE MRS. D. BEATTIE

Early Thursday morning, May 10, there passed away peacefully, Mary Dawson, wife of Dawson Beattie. For the past few years she has been in failing health, but it was only the last few days that her illness took a serious turn, bronchitis having set in.

Born near Lakeside, Que., in 1845, her parents were Robert Dawson and Margaret Maxwell. When but a girl she moved with her parents to Elms, Ont. Since her marriage in 1870 she has resided in Winchester township, coming seven years ago to live in the village of Winchester, where she passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Geo. E. Earle.

Mrs. Beattie was a woman of noble character, but retiring disposition. It was in her home that she exerted her influence for good.

Besides her aged husband, she is survived by three sons and two daughters: R. D. Beattie, of Philia; Geo. H., of Chesherville, Ont.; J. W. of Vancouver, B. C.; Mrs. I. E. Smith of Edmonton, Alta; and Mrs. Earle, of Winchester. There are eighteen grand-children also four brothers and two sisters in the United States.

The funeral service was held in Winchester United Church Saturday, May 12th, being conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. A. Waddell assisted by Rev. R. E. Newman, of Chesherville, and Rev. Wm. Hamilton, of Winchester. Mrs. Durant sang, "Shall we gather at the river?"

Flowers were Pillow of roses from the family; Basket from R. D. Beattie and J. R. Dawson of Philia; Sprays from Mr. and Mrs. Robert Beattie and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Flasher of Toronto, and the Winchester W. M. S.

Interment was made in Maple Ridge Cemetery.

INTERFERING WITH NATURE

BY JACK MINER

In glancing over the many articles written on the crow in our Canadian papers, I notice several writers fall back to this old worn-out argument, "interfering with the balance of Nature." Now, dear readers, I would like a full explanation of the meaning. Does it really mean that no person should attempt to assist Nature? If that is what you are trying to tell me, let me kindly say you are wrong, for I have tested it out and know if man will take God at His promise and work in harmony with Him that man can even change the migrating route of the fowls of the air.

Now remember, I only have an A. B. C. Sunday school education, but there are few of His lovable promises I have been privileged to test out and I know they are true. For illustration, I ask you to read Genesis 1:21-26 and 28 when He said let man have dominion over all. Could anything be written plainer. Last summer our Nettie raised sixty bred-to-lay Plymouth Rocks. We killed and ate twenty-two of the twenty-five roosters. The pullets started laying in October. Now, if we had left the twenty-five cockerels with the thirty-five pullets, would we have had eggs all winter? Don't forget the fowls of the air are all ours and they will come to us for our assistance and protection.

Forty-eight years ago this spring our family moved here on the farm that was then all woods, but on our arrival we were terrorized by the rattlesnake stories we heard, and I was expecting to see snakes as large as clothes props that would strike you at a distance of ten or fifteen feet away and then all was over except a brief report in the weekly town paper—"Those who knew him best, loved him most," and so forth. Well, in a few months I got well acquainted with these rattlers, but, believe me, they were only a little larger than our largest garter snakes and could only strike about a foot or eighteen inches. I have killed as high as six on one Sunday. In fact, I would hunt for hours to find a rattler just to tease him and get him striking a stick. But in a few short years the danger was all over, for, where the snakes were, grew the fields of waving wheat and corn, but mind you, in order to do this we had to "interfere with Nature." Which was for the best for humanity—a rattlesnake jungle or a productive grain field?

My esteemed friend, Mr. Thos. Baty of London, Ontario, kindly says: "If Jack ever had a pet crow, he never would kill it." Really this makes me laugh. Say, I wonder if there is a man in America who has gathered up more pets from the woods than I have. Crows, crows, why bless your life, I have had them by the dozens and I will admit they are just as cute as they are black. I once had one that would say "Look out!" so plain and sharp that he would cause you to inch, but I never kept but one to be over a year old. Then he, like the rest, died guilty of murder in the first degree.

In 1898 I enclosed four acres with a wire fence seven feet high. There I raised English and ringneck pheasants for profit. This pheasantry was right alongside of my brick and drain tile manufacturing plant. I could watch my machinery and overlook the pheasantry all from the same spot. In this way I made my hobby more than self-sustaining and gathered stores of knowledge about the enemies of our birds, and let me say to any young man, breeding game birds for profit is a lovable occupation and there is good money in it. The seven-foot fence is not necessary. All that is required is a dog-proof fence, but remember, unless you educate yourself how to destroy their many enemies, you had better give up the job about two weeks before you start, for this little innocent-looking weasel that is no larger than a Northern Ontario chipmunk will kill from twenty to thirty of your baby pheasants in one night and crawl through one-inch-mesh wire netting to do it, but remember, you are "interfering with the balance of Nature" if you kill him.

I believe the indoor naturalist calls him the Mouse Weasel because the majority of his food is mice. Crows must be checked or they will steal every egg laid unless your brood pens are under netting. But, after the young pheasants are hatched, I found the hawks and weasels their worst enemy. Fifty rods due north of this engine room door is an elm tree and morning after morning have I seen a crow perched in the top watching my neighbor's turkey hen come through the line fence just ninety rods east of the tree. Mr. Crow would sit and watch, and the very minute the turkey came out of the fence row and started back toward home, he would fly straight over and get the egg she had laid. This could all be seen with my field glasses. Smart? I should say so. They are the shrewdest thieves of the bird family, but you say to kill one you are "interfering with the balance of Nature" for God put them here. Yes, I say, God also put the bedbug here, but He gave man dominion over them and the present generation wouldn't hardly know one if they saw it. Crows! God did not put them here to control our poultry, nor our song, insectivorous and game birds. He did not even allow them the privilege of controlling themselves. He left all of this for man to do. Please think that over and look up what he says regarding this point. And, as for the grasshoppers the crows eat, this turkey hen's family would condense all them into a Thanksgiving dinner or into twenty-five or fifty cents a pound, just as you choose.

Now I am not contradicting a word which has been said about the crows eating a few wire worms and grubs and so forth, but here is what I know about it. If he can find them, he will rob at least one hundred of our more desirable birds' nests in order to raise his family or four or five, while, if any one of those murdered song and insectivorous birds were left to mature, they would do twice as much good than a crow ever did.

Now if a man wants to make money that man must study money. The prospector is more apt to find earthly gold than the astronomer. In other words, if a man concentrates on one line he is more apt to catch something on that one hook.

My friend, Mr. Baty, says if I had had a pet crow to study their habits I would know more about them. Let me reply to my friend and kindly say, when he has studied them enough to catch them by the thousands he will know more about them. Personally I have studied birds more than I have my financial obligations, and I am glad of it. They have brought me closer to God and man. If my life's study hasn't taught me something about the habits of the crow, how did I catch five hundred and ten of those organized murderers at one catch? Will you please think that over. I do wish there was nothing but good in the ways of all birds for I don't want to kill any of them, but how can I be humane and protect a baby murderer?

In the spring of 1914 I drove to Point Pelee, a distance of about fifteen miles, where my intimate friend, Mr. Forest H. Conover, and I pulled three hundred and sixty little red cedar seedlings out of the sand. There were none of them over a foot in height. I brought them home and planted them in the clay on May 15, 1914. I cultivated them for five years and today fully ninety-five per cent. of the more over twelve foot high and have been bearing fruit for the last three or four years. Now, isn't that "interfering with Nature"? This is where the five robbers that wintered here got their food and, oh say, this winter we have had a Cardinal added to the songsters and there hasn't been a day but what he has sung for me, and he has fairly set me Cardinal crazy or wise and is going to be the cause of more of my "interfering with Nature" for I am going to import some of these winter and summer singers. I am going to put a pair in each cage. Then, in March, I will let the male bird out, but will feed him on the outside of the cage. Here he will stay, just flitting and singing among the trees, but will not go far from his mate who is still in captivity. Then, after he has got well acquainted with the whole outside proposition, I will let her out and in this way I expect to have the whole place Cardinal with song.

Dear readers, don't let me try it first. Jump in ahead of me. It can be done. Yes, if you are privileged to live in the country, you can make your home into a little earthly heaven by "interfering with the balance of Nature," as you call it, but as I term it, "assisting Nature," for you can get seedling trees from our government forestry departments, free of charge. If you will plant five hundred of them in the proper place and formation around your home, by cultivating them the same as you would hills of corn for the first five summers, which will not take you over one day a year, in ten years' time these trees will be from twelve to fifteen feet high and will break the wind off your home and, on a cold wintry day, will reduce your fuel bill and, if you can be big enough to ignore the criticism of men and take God's promise as your guide, your assistance will double and treble the quantity and quality of the birds at your home every year.

Scotch pines I planted on a sticky clay field in the spring of 1914 have now grown into a lovely little forest, but the lower limbs are bent by the weight of from three to five thousand mourning doves that have roosted there during August, September and October of the last few summers.

This beautiful frosty morning that father used to call "the 17th of Ireland," I awoke before the stars had closed their eyes and how could I sleep again and miss such a musical feast, for that Cardinal I had mentioned apparently had his voice focused right on my open window, saying in distinct tones: "Good cheer! Good cheer! Good cheer!" This is mingled with the low notes of the song sparrows and even the robins are trying to join in the chorus. The lovable mourning doves, one of God's chief mourners, in low voices, are saying: "Khoo-coo-coo!"

In spite of all this I will admit I was about to dose back into dreamland again when, all at once, the honking of at least a thousand wild geese seemed to echo from every spot on the premises saying: "Home again!" Really, my thoughts drifted nearly one-half century back to the morning we left Ohio when a dear old Yankee by the name of Calvin Pease said to me: "Good-bye, Jackie." Then, as he gripped father's hand, which I believe was for the last time, he said: "John, do you think you can make a living over in Canada for your big family?" Father apparently gripped his hand tighter and he looked him square in the face and replied: "Calvin, we are going to make more than a living—we are going to make a life," but never did the interpretation of this statement ring louder in my living room than it did this morning, March 17th.

England Makes Americas Bells

A MELODIOUS GIANT

It was cast at Croydon recently for Riverside Church, New York, weighs 19 tons and is the largest bell in the world.

The Crocuses That Wore Nightcaps

You can't blame the crocuses for coming up too soon. It was really Beryl's fault. One day Beryl ran a little errand for Jerry the Gardener, and the next time Jerry passed by, he popped in and left six crocus bulbs for Beryl, and told her exactly what kind of a place to plant them in, and how deep to put them, and what kind of soil they liked, and everything else he could think of.

When Jerry had gone, Beryl walked round the garden three times, and each time she stopped right underneath her bedroom window and said: "This is the best place to plant them, where I can pop my head out every morning and see if they are coming up. This is where I will plant them."

A Snug Corner.

Now it happened that the stone chimney from the open fireplace in the dining-room was right beside the crocus bulbs, so, although it was a very cold winter, the little crocuses were just as snug as could be, with the warm chimney so close to them.

And then, very early in the spring, long before anybody expected it, the weather suddenly became very mild for a few days, and the snow all melted away, and the ice on the pond turned soft and slushy, and the sun shone all day long. And the little drops of melted snow that trickled down past the crocus bulbs seemed to say: "Spring has come! Spring has come! Wake up! Spring has come!"

And the crocus bulbs woke up, and started pushing their little leaves up through the ground to see if it were really true, and a morning or two later a little sparrow in the apple tree nearly fell off his perch with surprise, and had to blink his eyes three times before he could really believe that six little crocuses were peeping up at him.

"Tweet! Tweet-tweet!" he said, "Tweet-tweet-tweet-tweet!" and he tweeted so loudly in his surprise that he woke Beryl, and when Beryl peeped out of the window and saw the six little green specks down below she could hardly wait to get her clothes on to go out and see if they really were the crocuses. Then off she skipped to tell Jerry the Gardener.

Jerry's Advice.

But Jerry shook his head. "They came up too soon!" he said. "The frost will nip them!"

"But I don't want the frost to nip them!" said Beryl.

"Well, then," replied Jerry, after rubbing his chin and thinking seriously for a moment, "Well, then, you must make some nightcaps for them!"

"Nightcaps?" laughed Beryl. "Nightcaps—for crocuses?"

"Certainly," replied Jerry, "to keep them warm at night. See, I'll show you. You get a piece of paper, and twirl it into a cone—"

"Why, that's a dunce's cap!" interrupted Beryl.

"That's a nightcap," said Jerry. "You twirl it into a cone, and you twist the tip tightly so that it won't come undone, and every night you must pop one over each crocus to keep it cosy and warm and keep the frost away, and every morning you must take the nightcaps off, so that the crocuses may get the sun."

And that is just what Beryl did. And soon the tiny flower buds began to come, and they got bigger, and bigger, and bigger, until one morning when Beryl took their nightcaps off, there were six beautiful crocus blooms looking right up at her.

Every night Beryl popped their nightcaps on, and every morning she took the nightcaps off again, and though the weather turned frosty again, the crocus blooms lasted such a long time, for the frost couldn't nip them at all.—Christian Science Monitor.

Dr. Paul R. Heyl, who discovered that the world weighed 8,000,000,000,000,000,000 tons, is said to be attempting a recalculation this year. The skeptical ones are at liberty to weigh it themselves.

Jack Miner And the Swans

Kingsville Naturalist Offers Hints on Wandering Birds

J. R. Williams, Secretary of the Game Protective Association of Niagara Falls, Ont., notified Jack Miner that 400 swans went over Niagara Falls recently, one half being killed outright and the balance being wounded at the foot of the falls between the rapids and the whirlpool.

Jack Miner immediately wired Ottawa officials requesting them to wire authorities at Niagara Falls to catch all wounded and live birds which are in this death-trap, and express same to him and he would doctor their broken wings and legs and place them on his sanctuary at Kingsville.

Came to Kingsville

For the last five years the swans, numbering many thousands, have come to the lake shore at Kingsville instead of to Niagara Falls. But as the ice was slow in leaving the shore at Kingsville and the weather in North Carolina was so warm, they were compelled to leave their winter home early, and the only open water they could find along the Great Lakes was above the falls at Niagara. There they alighted, only to drift down the river with the current, and during the night and heavy fog drifted over the falls, taking several hundred feet of a drop, which killed or crippled them.

Jack has wired the authorities at Niagara suggesting they discharge firearms in the air above the falls and keep the birds from alighting on the river, only to meet their death. There is open water at Kingsville now, and between 500 and 1,000 have arrived there. It is hoped by discharging firearms in the air above the falls that other flocks will head toward Kingsville, where a Mounted Police officer is on duty night and day keeping birds from being molested. This protection is provided for in the Migratory Bird Treaty Act.

No Deaths For Years.

"Fifteen years ago this species of swan was nearly exterminated, but by being given absolute protection, and by Jack Miner attracting them to Kingsville away from this Niagara death-trap, there has been until now for the last five years practically none go over the falls. Last spring it was estimated there were between 4,000 and 5,000 in the vicinity of Kingsville, which were cared for by a Dominion officer and Jack Miner.

German Donkey Notifies Engineer Where to Stop

Berlin.—Railway officials employed at the little station of Cochem in the Rhineland, or on jerk-water trains stopping there, have given up an unequal battle with a donkey.

This donkey is owned by the local milk dealers' association and has the important mission of pulling the cart with the milk intended for shipment to the station. He has taken it into his head, however, to stop at a certain point alongside the track and to insist that the baggage car must come to a halt there. Attempts to get him to move toward the baggage car in case it was carried a bit beyond him proved futile. He was beaten, tickled, the hose was turned on him—in vain. He would not budge.

The engineers have been instructed to humor the beast and bring the milk car exactly where the donkey decrees that it shall stop.

Wall Street's Hold on the Empire

London Referee (Cons.): The rapid financial penetration of Canada (by the United States) has been made possible by reason of the uniformity of United States and Canadian traditions, national necessities, geographical position, and language. And now, when the danger to Empire unity is realized, our Statesmen are falling into the error of believing that these permanent and natural liabilities can be counterbalanced by sentimental rhetoric and preferential markets. . . . They have replied to Wall Street's powerful attacks upon the body and soul of the Empire with such unutterably silly slogans as "Eat Canadian apples." . . . Judgment Refuses Copyright To Advertising Agents' Copy

Mr. Justice Astbury, After Four-Day Hearing, Definitely Decided in Favor of Advertiser Against Agency Which Claimed Ownership

London.—A case of great importance to advertisers, advertising agents, and publishers has just been heard in the chancery division of the High Court of Justice. It concerned the point, which apparently had not been raised before in British law, whether copyright in an advertisement prepared by an advertising agency remained the property of the agency or was the property of its client, the advertiser.

The case in question was complicated and somewhat obscure, but the final decision of Mr. Justice Astbury, after a four-days' hearing, was definitely in favor of the client and against the agent, who had brought the action in the endeavor to obtain an injunction restraining both the advertiser and one of the London newspapers from using an advertisement the agent claimed to have prepared.

The agent had prepared an advertisement which his client had inserted in one of the London dailies and on which the agent received his usual commission. Subsequently, the client caused the advertisement to be inserted in another paper, acting directly and without the services of the agent. At this point the agent applied for an injunction prohibiting the further use of the advertisement, on the ground that it was a literary work and as such came within the Copyright Act, under which title would remain in the author, who appeared as plaintiff.

The decision held that no copyright existed so far as the agent was concerned, and that in employing the agent to prepare the advertisement, the advertiser and the agent had, in

Great "Hopper" Plague Over New South Wales

London.—An "Evening News" dispatch from Sydney says the approach of a great plague of grasshoppers is reported from southern New South Wales. The advance guard of the insects was described as twenty miles wide, behind which are swarms extending ten miles, rapidly consuming what was an abundant grass crop. Fences in the area are draped with thousands of insects, while motorists passing through it reported that their radiators were clogged and their windshields covered.

effect, contracted themselves out of the copyright Act. It further held that the agent's interest in the advertisement in question only existed so long as the advertiser continued to use the agent's services. As no contract existed by which the advertiser was bound to continue to use these services, and no copyright as applying to original literary work existed, the agent's application for an injunction against both his former client and the newspaper must fail.

It is assumed that the points of contention in the case can in future be clearly covered in the written agreement between agencies and clients, but in view of the delicate personal relations existing between such parties and of the fact that many firms frequently change their agents, the prospect is not a very pleasant one for the agencies.

Abd el Krim Passes Long Days As Exile Cultivating Garden

Ex-Sultan of Riff, Who Led Tribesmen in Revolt, Enjoys Placid Existence

Abd el Krim, onetime master of the Riff and the man whose hardy mountaineer tribesmen reached the very gates of Fez before they were hurled back by the French in one of the fiercest series of engagements since the World War, says "The London Daily Mail," is supporting his banishment at Saint Denis, in the island of Reunion, in the Indian Ocean, with true Oriental patience.

"The Sultan of the Riff" took with him only two wives out of his numerous harem. They were his favorites, Fatima and Aicha. His other companions in exile are his brother, Si Mohammed, and his uncle Abdeslem, his mother and his sisters and the families of his brother and his uncle. During the long voyage from Casablanca, the chief port of Morocco, to Reunion, a son was born to him, so that he now has three sons.

Abel el Krim's brother discarded his Moorish attire as soon as the ship reached Marseilles, but Abd el Krim himself did not adopt European clothing until he reached Reunion. He is living in a country house rented specially to lodge him, and which has been somewhat hastily dubbed "the Chateau de Mauraing." In reality the house has nothing of a castle about it, but consists of only a ground floor and a first floor, with a vegetable garden, an orchard and a meadow adjoining.

His first care was to furnish his new home as comfortably as possible and set his wives and his family at their ease. When he left Morocco he knew only the rudiments of the French language, but he has set himself to study it deeply, and to-day he speaks it as fluently as his brother, who is renowned as a good French scholar.

Abd el Krim's two elder children attend the local college every day. They speak the Chieuh dialect at home, but the rest of the time they converse fluently in French with their French playmates.

But though Abd el Krim now dresses in European clothes, he continues to observe the customs of his country, and the fullest freedom is allowed him in this respect. He has made the acquaintance of a large number of people on the island and he often passes long hours with his friends, the most intimate of whom is the lieutenant of gendarmerie.

The former Riff chieftain spends a great deal of his time cultivating his garden, which he is doing with no little success. His two wives, his mother and his two sisters take frequent walks in the country, but always dressed in their native costumes.

Empire Shopping Week in Canada Canada Produced is Empire Produced

New Empire Booster is No New Method to Interest British in the Empire's Products During Week of April 21st to 28th Inclusive

ALL TO TAKE PART

The Executive Committee of Empire Shopping Week in Canada holds strongly to the view that the type of civilization and its promise of development as shown in countries of British Empire, is one that Canadians all desire to encourage for the sake of the present and the future generations. All this, it is conceived, is intimately bound up with the economic and business side of affairs that play so great a part in the daily lives of so many Canadian citizens.

Empire Shopping Weeks are not a novelty. They have been tried with great success in other parts of the Empire, notably in Australia, British West Indies and in Great Britain. These weeks enjoy the cordial approval and co-operation of the Empire Marketing Board, now doing such valuable work in Great Britain and other parts of the Empire. The underlying principle on which the EMPIRE SHOPPING WEEK IN CANADA will operate is the same as that in force in Empire Marketing Board activities. One main thought steadily kept in mind is that a natural first preference be given to goods that are the products of the country in which the week is held, other Empire products receiving the next preference. Produced in Canada is produced in the Empire.

Provincial and local committees are being formed throughout Canada including local representatives of the nine national organizations already interested through the Advisory Council and many other public spirited bodies. The Mayor of each town in Canada has been invited by Hon. James Macdonald, Honorary President of the Council, to take a leading part in the local movement.

The formation of local committees is thus a part of the approved general plan. The method adopted and approved by the Executive Committee to start Canadian Chamber of Commerce, whose President is on the Advisory Council, along with eight other Presidents of national organizations, and which is represented on the Executive Committee and the Finance Committee of Empire Shopping Week in Canada, outline the Shopping Week movement and organization to all Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce in Canada, and mention a few things that have been carried out by local committees in Empire Shopping Weeks elsewhere.

The last meeting of the Executive Committee authorized the Honorary Secretary to get in direct touch with the local Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce with respect to the weight given to activity of local committees and local papers in considering the extent of space to be used in newspapers and other publications for general advertising.

It may, perhaps, be interesting to consider what is being done elsewhere in Canada. Within two weeks of the first notice being sent, the following towns and cities have actually formed local committees, or have definitely taken steps to do so.—Winnipeg, Moose Jaw, Medicine Hat, Amherst, Vancouver, Halifax, Brockville, Hamilton, Trail, B.C., St. Catharines, Prince Rupert, Brampton, North Bay, Grenfell, Sask., Edmonton, Victoria, Belleville, Prince Albert, Fort William, Quebec, Toronto, Calgary and Montreal.

There is much more in this than the effort to sell goods at retail. Many people think there is scarcely time to do all that should be done locally even with the beginning made immediately. The local publicity gained by the organization of a representative local committee would be the most effective means of reminding manufacturers of their obligation to subscribe, which forms an added reason for acting promptly.

Your Mayor or Reeve has an invitation from the Honorary President to take part in your local movement. Half a dozen or more local branches of National organizations, and a number of other local organizations, are ready and waiting the call from your organization to whom was entrusted the leadership in the community effort.

The General Executive Committee is composed of men acting in a representative capacity representing their national organization on the Executive Committee specially selected from the whole group of national organizations whose Presidents form the Advisory Council of the organization.

They have approved of the wording and design of electros for newspaper use, of a broadside to the retailer, telling him the full story, and of show cards and window streamers in liberal quantities for distribution by local committees where they desire to do so.

They will have to consider in the near future the question of the copy that will appear in the newspapers which is an important question demanding the very best thought and most serious consideration. Full consideration with respect to local newspaper space will be given in proportion to the activity and interest displayed locally by the committee and newspapers.

These are simply a few out of the host of national things that the Executive Committee must deal with.

Obviously the General Executive Committee, through the necessity of retaining constantly in their minds the national point of view and national questions, with the best will in the world towards individual localities, cannot undertake definite personal activities on local committees and this outline clearly shows that every dollar from general subscribers will be required for general purposes which are all to help you.

Devolution of duties had to be worked out. For instance, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association undertook the distribution of the booklets to Canadian manufacturers, the Department of Overseas Trade undertook their distribution to other parts of the Empire, the Retail Merchants' Association interested their provincial divisions and local organizations, as did also the Canadian Manufacturers' Association for local purposes. The other national organizations are all doing their part in keeping their members informed and serving the general interest in many other ways.

The development of local committees can fill the very important purpose, in which your locality should be taking a lead to make Empire Shopping Week the most stirring event that has happened since the war.

Local Committee activities take the form of making sure that departmental stores and retail stores are definitely co-operating to put on a show during Empire Shopping Week, 21st to 28th of April, arranging for possible municipal co-operation, welcoming the Mayor who has been invited to participate by the Honorary President, or welcoming any representative delegated by him. There are many other ideas such as brief addresses over the radio, cooperation with motion picture houses and all sorts of other features that will help to interest the general public in the movement and provide the small funds necessary for carrying on local work.

This method gives full scope for the use and development of individual initiative in each place which is of the utmost value in devising plans that suit the particular locality and

Ring Your Bell

"I don't need to advertise. I have been in business in this town for 30 years. Every man, woman and child here knows where I am and what I sell." The advertising salesman looked across the street and saw a church. He asked how long it had been built. The storekeeper replied that it had been there for half a century. "And yet they ring the church bell every Sunday morning," the advertising man remarked.

The General Executive Committee is arranging for the supply of show cards and window streamers, stickers for use on stationery, electros for newspaper publishers use, a considerable supply of posters and the general display advertising along inspirational and economic lines. The Executive Committee will gladly welcome news of your activities, ideas and suggestions that may be distributed for use in other places.

Under these exceptional auspices Empire Shopping Week in Canada is certain to be a tremendous success. It will do a great work in cementing the bonds of Empire anew and will give Canadians a closer and more interesting "close-up" of The Empire as it is—vast, far-reaching and firmly knit within itself, a great power for good in the world to-day.

Canada to Open Ships-to-Cities Air Mail Line

Planes Will Meet Liners on Arrival, Then Speed to Montreal and Toronto

May Link Winnipeg in 1929 Flyers Effective in Opening Northwest Territory

Montreal.—Plans have been completed by the Canadian Post Office Department for an extension of the air mail service connecting large cities, such as Montreal and Toronto, with the first land stop of trans-Atlantic liners. The winter tests have been proceeding for air mail service from St. John's and Halifax to Montreal. Last fall service was successfully maintained from St. John and Halifax to Montreal and between Rimouski and Montreal. The latter service is to be resumed and extended down the north shore of the St. Lawrence to Murray Bay and Anticosti Island.

A more important extension is to be inaugurated with the carriage of mail to and from ocean liners between Rimouski and Montreal and Toronto. The contract for the service to Toronto is to be awarded in the near future. It will give Toronto quick delivery of letter mail to and from Europe. If the Toronto service proves successful, in another year an extension of it as far west as Winnipeg will be made.

This last step, if it can be achieved, will go far toward establishing a regular transcontinental airway, across Canada. The actual need for such an airway at the present time is doubted by some business men who have given their unqualified support to the development of air lines covering territory north and south of the transcontinental railway system.

The airplane has proved an effective instrument in opening up territory in the northwest of Canada. The air operations through this district, which presented many handicaps to the pilot, and where forced landings were extremely dangerous, have been fairly successful.

The Western Canada Airways operates a regular service from Winnipeg into the mining districts to the north. A fleet of Fokker Universal planes, delivered to the Winnipeg base this winter by Berat Balchen, now maintains a regular service into this district.

British Budget Surplus Shown

London, April 1.—The Chancellor of the exchequer Saturday made good the prediction of Winston Churchill on March 23 that the budget would show a surplus for the first time in three years. It announced that for the fiscal year ended today there was a surplus of £4,239,124. Total revenue was £842,824,465, and expenditures were £838,585,341.

FORTY AYRSHIRES IN LATEST IMPORTATION

Forty Ayrshires are included in the latest consignment from Scotland to reach Canada on the S.S. Carmia in its initial trip of the season to Quebec.

They were purchased in Scotland by three Quebec Ayrshire breeders: Messrs. J. H. Black, Lachute, President of the Canadian Ayrshire Breeders' Association; Gilbert MacMillan, of Huntingdon, and W. W. Skinner, of Sennerville. Mr. Black secured 14 animals including a two-year-old heifer whose dam has a record of 10,100 lbs. milk, testing 3.75; a fall calving heifer whose dam has a record of 10,380 lbs. milk, testing 4.08 per cent; a yearling bull and a yearling heifer both sired by Auchenbrair Royal Blood, besides several three year old heifers backed by good milk records. Another yearling heifer, whose dam has a record of 14,490 lbs. milk, testing 3.7 per cent, is a daughter of the bull imported by Mr. Black last year and now used as a herd sire.

CANADA'S WESTERN WONDERS.

No country excels Canada herself for sheer magnificence of scenery, choice gems of which unfold themselves to travellers westward bound. Golden prairies give way to rolling foothills and they in turn to the serried, snow-capped peaks of the mighty Canadian Rocky Mountains.

Here, crag and glacier vie with waterfall and river. Sun-bathed valleys spreading forests, gorges chasms abound. Jasper National Park is a concentration of such scenic wonders. The Triangle Tour of British Columbia offers never ending variety and contrast as you go by rail from Jasper, past mighty Mount Robson and along the Skeena to Prince Rupert and there take the steamer for Vancouver, returning thence by rail to Jasper, through the roaring Fraser and Thompson Rivers Gorges.

Or take steamer to the Land of the Midnight Sun—Mysterious, to-tempoed Alaska.

All these scenic havens are reached by Canadian National Railways and Steamship service and with the new, low tourist rates in effect, may be viewed at surprisingly little cost.

Full details from any Canadian National Agent, or from the City Ticket Office.

British Columbia's Mineral Wealth Revives

1. The colossal smelter at Trail, B.C., the home of the Consolidated Mining & Smelting Company.
2. Mining class in Vancouver. Note the women prospectors.
3. A typical mining scene at the 400 foot level.

The old mining days of British Columbia, that were as rich in output as in romance, are being revived. There is a new record in mineral production in this most highly mineralized area on the North American continent, in which every conceivable mineral is found. In all phases of mining,—prospecting, development and production; lode mining, placer-mining, and coal-mining,—the current year is witnessing a healthy and vigorous activity.

The largest increases recorded are in lead and zinc, and the province possesses the second greatest lead-zinc mine in the world. Copper, too, shows an increased production, while the every day progress of that great company the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company in Trail, B.C., reads more like a wonderful romance than a reality.

A most significant feature of the present activity in mining is the way in which many partially developed properties and also prospects which have been lying dormant, are now being developed. Substantial progress has been made in building main trunk motor roads through the provinces, while material aids are being given in the working of mineral properties by assisting in the construction of branch roads to them. New trails are also continually being built to open up newly discovered mineralized areas for the prospector.

The British Columbia Chamber of Mines has been promoting the welfare of the mining industry for the last thirteen years. The Chamber has on exhibition an interesting collection of the great variety of minerals mined in the province. There is also co-operation with the various prospectors' associations of British Columbia.

Many towns of the province have branch chambers of mines and the classes in mineralogy and geology as well as the mining lectures have been largely attended. It is of interest to learn that there are a few women prospectors attending these lectures as will be seen from the picture. Research work, too, with regard to mineral deposits is carried on continuously by the development branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

An importation of 20 pure bred horses has just arrived in this section from the United States. Gilbert E. Arnold of Grenville, bought the load, consisting of 14 Percherons, four Belgians, and two Standardbreds, late in April from Illinois breeders.

The Percherons, including 11 stallions and three mares, were secured from 10 breeding establishments and are all of quality ancestry. The mares are Brankey, Rose V. and Pergue's Letta. The stallions are: Jasabo, Star, Leo Magnus II, Victor; Idecor; Len S II; Maplegrove Lagos II; Theodore; Colonel Jr.; Cendrot, and Gilbert.

A total of 44 horses have been purchased by Mr. Arnold in the United States during the past 11 months. Most of these are purebred Percherons.

"I am raising a lot of horses now from mares that were imported originally from France and the United States and am selling during the busy season on an average of from five to 10 head each week", Mr. Arnold reports.

Don't let the Martins get away from you!

"I'm sorry the Martins are moving away," said Mrs. Drummond to her husband. "It will mean that we are going to lose track of some very nice people!"

"I don't see why it should. If a good customer of mine moves away we follow him up by Long Distance. Don't let a little thing like distance separate you from the Martins!"

A great change has come over Long Distance telephoning. Now it is almost as rapid as local telephoning. You give Long Distance the distant number and, in a great majority of cases, she is able to make connection while you hold the line. The Long Distance operator will look up the distant number for you, if you don't know it, and tell you what it is.

Still better, give us a list of the friends or customers you are likely to talk with. We will add the numbers and return the list to you.

THE GIRL WHO WAITED

A Short Story of the Dope Traffic in London England

Sally Deane hated Oscar Svensen, the giant Swede, almost as much as she loved and adored her absent sailor-boy, Peter West.

More than all, she was afraid of Chang, the fat, squat Chinaman, who was rich and powerful in Limehouse, and had a shop at the corner of the street where Sally lived, not far from the docks.

Every day, as Sally was either going to her work at the factory in the Commercial-road, or when she was returning home, she would see Chang standing in his shop door.

His almond-shaped eyes would glitter as they looked at her fresh young beauty, and he would crease his yellow face into a horrible leer.

And Sally would feel curiously afraid, though she tried not to show it, and was always polite in her smiling answer.

But this morning, when he spoke to her, she was without fear.

"No more waiting, Chang!" she laughed gaily. "The Ocean Star comes into dock this afternoon. Peter will be home this evening for good!"

"Chang welly glad!" grinned the Chinaman. "Muchee nice boy, Peter West! You like welly well, I see. But Svensen fellow like you welly well also. Plenty talk about you to me."

"Oscar Svensen!" flashed Sally, tossing her golden curls derisively. "He ain't in the same street with my Peter, Chang; and he knows it. Peter is coming home this time for good. Got a land job, and we're being married in a week or so."

"Allee same, my dear, Oscar Svensen he swear he mally you, and not Peter!" chuckled the Chinaman smugly, sending a chill of fear through Sally as she passed on.

It was not by chance that Oscar Svensen was waiting outside the factory at the time when Sally would be making her way back home that night.

He stepped in front of her, a big and uncouth man with fair hair and cruel blue eyes.

Her mind was full of Peter—she would have passed him by, but he gripped her wrist and swung her round so that she was forced to stand beside him in a dark alleyway.

"You're in an almighty hurry, ain't you?" he sneered. "No time for me to-night—eh?"

"Never did have, Oscar!" retorted Sally coldly. "Let go of my wrist. I'm wanted home to get supper ready. Peter'll be back to-night."

"Will he?" snarled the other. "Maybe, and maybe not. Supposing he don't come? Supposing he's been kept out in China?"

"Kept out in China?" laughed Sally. "Don't be so fl! How'd that happen, I'd like to know!"

"It has happened, anyhow. Chang's seen it all right."

"Chang—seen it? What d'yer mean, Oscar?" gasped Sally, startled by the queer certainty with which the Swede spoke.

"You remember, maybe, how the day after the Ocean Star left here this last time for China with your Peter aboard, the police made a raid on Chang's place?"

Sally nodded. The police had expected to find a big haul of cocaine, the drug popularly known as "snow," on Chang's premises. They had received information from someone to that effect.

But the raid had been without effect. Nothing had been found.

Afterwards Chang had talked a good deal about wanting to know who had reported him to the police.

He had mentioned the matter to Sally more than once, now she came to think of it.

"Well," laughed the big Swede harshly. "It was Peter who gave Chang away to the police, only luckily Chang had been cute enough to have the stuff hidden where the police couldn't find it. But Chang didn't forget. Being a Chin, he took care to revenge himself, you can bet. When the Ocean Star got to China this trip, and your Peter went on shore, he was met by some of Chang's friends and—that's the last to be heard of him. So you might as well make up your mind, Sally, that you'll not see him again."

"It's a lie!"

Sally was very near to fainting, so terrible was the fear that gripped at her heart.

She knew enough of Limehouse and Chinamen to understand that if Peter had given Chang away to the police the Chinaman was quite capable of acting as Svensen had said.

Peter, before leaving on this last trip, had been a good deal in Chang's company, and he had let drop in Sally's hearing some angry words about the traffic in "snow" which was going on. Peter had also been very friendly with Detective-Inspector Wade at the Limehouse police station.

Sally, trembling with a sudden dread in the darkness of the alley, tried hard to persuade herself that this story was not true.

"You're trying to frighten me!" she said, wrenching her wrist free from the Swede's hold. "I'm going home, and if Peter ain't there already I'm going to the docks to find out."

But Peter was not at home when Sally reached the house, and, though her mother told her it was early to expect him as yet, fear took her straightway to the dock gates to find the Ocean Star and make sure if he was on board.

She did not tell her mother the story Oscar Svensen had told her, fearing to worry her until the truth was out.

At the dock gates, however, she was unable to gain admission, owing to some trouble with the dockers, who were striking.

But an official on the gate told her he had heard something about the Ocean Star coming back without one of the crew, who had been ashore and never rejoined ship. He believed he had heard the man's name given as West.

Blindly, with tears in her eyes, Sally began to grope her way slowly back homeward.

It seemed impossible that she would never see her Peter any more—Peter, with his brown curly hair and his laughing eyes, his tender but strong mouth, his heart of gold, his great love for her!

Reaching the corner where Chang's lighted shop stood, she saw the Chinaman inside, talking to the Swede.

The shutters had been put up, and he was ready to close the door. But Sally slipped into the shop.

The Chinaman was asking Svensen to step down into the room beyond. Sally followed, determined to confront the Chinaman with his villainy and to bring him to justice.

Through the open door, she heard Chang speaking.

"You gottee new lot of 'snow'?" he was saying.

"You bet!" laughed the Swede softly, showing a large packet in a capacious pocket. "My pal on the Ocean Star dropped it me as they docked. I wasn't able to get a word with him, so I don't know if he's got any more. Look here! That's all right about West, isn't it. Your friends kept him back in China for good?"

"You trustee Chang to see Mister Westee safe and sound?" chuckled the Chinaman greedily. "Now you mally the pretty little Sally, you think?"

"When she's got over the crying business. But meantime I'm off to get rid of the 'snow' up West—"

"No you ain't!" demanded Sally frenziedly, stepping into the room. "So you two are playing that game, are you? And because my Peter knew of it you've tried to get rid of him? But I'm going to the police. I'm going right away to Inspector Wade at the station—"

"You wait!" Chang's squat figure prevented Sally from leaving the room, and she recoiled before his almond-shaped eyes. "What for you go to police, pretty little Sally?"

"To have you both put inside!" blazed Sally, adame with hate and determination to avenge Peter. "To have that beast of a Swede caught with drugs on him!"

"Your Peter tellee police about me last time ship in dock," said the Chinaman. "Mister Svensen know that for fact. Didn't you think if he give Chang away, Chang going to gettee own back? But Chang no murderer. You can't prove that to police. Chang know nothing about what happen in China. Chang nice, kind, simple man. Chang velly fond of you. Likee mally you himself. You go to police if you like. Chang know nothing. By time you go police, Svensen hidee drugs all away. Better wait a minute—"

She could scarcely believe her eyes. It was Inspector Wade himself, with another figure behind him.

"Hullo," he said, as he saw her. "You here, Sally? Hullo, Chang! Has our trap succeeded? Has the Swede another haul on him?"

Svensen, with a sudden cry, flung backwards, one hand held over his capacious pocket with its large packet of cocaine, the other fumbling at his hip. But Inspector Wade had suddenly drawn a gun.

"No, you don't!" said the inspector. "You're trapped, Svensen, and you may as well make the best of it. You've been playing a 'snow' running game for a long while, and we've been waiting to catch you. I've someone here with me who can give evidence against you."

Sally stared in greater amazement than ever.

From behind the inspector there appeared Peter—Peter, whom she had believed to be in China, and lost to her for ever!

In a moment she was enclosed in his arms, kissing him and crying with delight.

"But they told me at the dock gates that a man named West had been left behind in China!" she said, "but Svensen told me—"

"There was another man named West on board," laughed Peter, "and Svensen believed I was to be left behind. But Svensen was wrong. He was told that by Chang."

"But Chang is in with him in this 'snow' business. I heard them talking just now!" urged Sally.

"You're wrong, my dear!" murmured the inspector. "Chang has been hand in glove with me since Svensen tried to put him under suspicion and get us to raid his place. For that is what happened, though he told Chang that your Peter had given him away."

"And Chang never forgives an enemy who stabs him in the back!" smiled the Chinaman insouciantly, rubbing his lean hands together as the handcuffed Svensen was taken off by the inspector.

So the vengeance of Chang ended in a different way from that which Sally, safe in her lover's arms once more, had imagined possible.

Sir Thomas Beecham Explains His Antipathy to Broadcast

He Believes Radio Improves Jazz, But Tones of Great Orchestras Suffer if Wafted into Space as Ether Waves

Sir Thomas Beecham, British orchestral conductor, following his recent debut on the radio as guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra over WOR, explained, in part, his antipathy to the broadcasting of orchestral presentations at which he officiates as conductor.

"The broadcasting of jazz over the wireless," said Sir Thomas, "may actually succeed in making it sound better from the loudspeaker than it would sound if one were present in person at the playing. However, orchestral selections may suffer a great deal by virtue of the very complicated nature of the tones from the many and widely different instruments that go to make up the great modern orchestral organization. When one hundred or more instruments are being played harmoniously the resultant tones are extremely complicated in structure. It follows that if they are taken out of their natural medium, the air, placed on a wire as electrical particles, then broadcast into space, they are bound to suffer in quality."

"It is unfortunate that orchestral music, which I consider the highest type of musical presentation, should so suffer in the transfer."

Sir Thomas likened the tones heard from the loudspeaker to one speaking through an obstructing medium so that the tone and modulation of the voice are rendered unnatural in quality. He likened the tones of complicated musical numbers to a maze of threads, all coming to produce the effect desired by the conductor, which are hopelessly thrown out of order by their transfer from their natural medium, the air.

"If a slight detrimental effect is interposed," he said, "the whole suffers."

"I am yet in doubt whether the effect on radio listeners is good or bad when the higher forms of music are put on the wireless," he said, after his debut with the Philharmonic musicians over WOR. "I shall have to listen to a concert in America when the opportunity presents before making a serious decision. Of course, I cannot decide for every one, but at least I can form my own impression of what one can hear over American wireless stations and compare it with what is heard when one is present in the music hall."

"The average British listener," he said, "is phlegmatic, and therefore in many cases he may be sure a radio receiver which is antiquated and not capable of intercepting and reproducing the radio waves with fidelity. However, I am told that many listeners in England have excellent receiving sets. The Briton is a great home lover. When he arrives in the evening he generally stays home. This makes for the general popularity of wireless receiving sets in England, which are generally found intercepting the lighter musical numbers. When a Londoner wants to hear or chestral or good musical numbers I goes to a music hall."

The Famous Quotation

Sir Thomas's famous quotation regard to broadcast, made less than one year ago, was: "Ever since the beginning of the present century there has been committed against the unfortunate art of music ever imaginable sin of commission or omission, but all the previous crime and stupidities pale before the late attack on its fair name—broadcasting by means of wireless."

Just before his radio debut America he said: "In England I have never played for the radio because I felt that it had a bad effect on the radio audience. I feel that radio receivers are not capable of doing the best for the higher complicated type of music. Possibly radio is more advanced in America and may be capable of reproducing the concert more faithfully. I may have more say after I broadcast."

Sir Thomas stepped out on the stage at Carnegie Hall when he made his radio debut without the slightest hesitancy at being placed, for the first time, within the hearing of the large audience before which he had ever waved his baton. The presence of his avowed enemy, the microphone, apparently did not cause him the least bit of worry, for he conducted with vigor and even grasped the microphone stand between his hands.

During the intermission he made brief address over the announce instrument and thanked the people of America for the wonderful reaction that had been accorded him. "Far as I am concerned—I do not speak for the audience—the concert so far has been a complete success," he said.—(N.Y. Times.)

Britain's Dumb Dora

The shade of Dora (historians may remember her more official name, Defense of the Realm Act) still haunts over England. When the lovely, in first appeared to hold up a forbidden hand against the sale within certain hours of various commodities ranging from tripe to whisky sodas, there was a war. And, although Britons not will be slaves, they bowed to necessity and submitted to the petty annoyances prescribed by Dora with wifely grace they could. But when the war was over Dora remained and England has ever since rebelled.

The matter has just been again submitted to investigation, and the Dora Committee has made its recommendations. It would not sweep away the restrictions still left as war-time relics, but it does suggest certain concessions to British love of liberty. It would allow theatregoers to buy chocolates as late as the third act, permit vendors of spirituous liquors within certain prescribed limits, sell cigarettes, but it would by means permit truly open shops—in merchandizing and not in industry sense of the word. The London Times declares that the recommendations of the Dora Committee will be hailed with general relief, but the Saturday Review wants complete freedom as a no compromise. "The majesty of the sovereign British people," it declares "is indeed reduced to a low state we are to imagine it purring with light at these privileges."

In the campaign being waged against Dora there are certain vague reminders of the reaction to certain laws in this country. It is asserted that it is a restriction upon personal liberty that despite the pettiness of the regulations imposed by the act an important principle is involved and that results in contempt for the law.

We wish the English more power in their struggle for freedom and hope that they may uphold Anglo-Saxon traditions relating to the right to personal liberty with greater success than certain cases we have succeeded doing in this country.—N.Y. Times.

Natural Resources

Manitoba Free Press (Lib.): The Federal Government is to take up the question of the return of the natural resources to the Prairie Province. Action is long overdue on the part of the authorities at Ottawa and in connection with Manitoba the need for early decision is particularly pressing. The Manitoba Government has asked for arbitration. The matter of right is so obviously on the side of the western provinces that the Federal Government would be well advised to get down to business without delay. The people of the West have enough jockeying on this matter.

Memories of old St. Andrews

The story of pioneer life has been the theme of many a poet and historian. The forefathers of St. Andrews endured their share of struggle with primitive conditions. They wore their own home-spun, and they read their books by the lights of their open fires, or the tallow candles of their own make, and their resources were taxed to the uttermost. The garrets of the old homes of St. Andrews could bring to light their make-shift devices for saving labour, which tell the story of early hardships.

They lived and laboured, loved and were loved, and enjoyed a community life that was quite idyllic in its character. Those were the days of early marriages and large families when the marriage tie was very sacred. This tradition is well founded in the tales that have come down to us, the letters that have been preserved, the literature they loved, and the good music they cultivated.

St. Andrews was always famed for its refined musical taste, and for many years boasted of a full orchestra, and a cornet band that was the pride of the Ottawa Valley. The names of the old German band-masters Eilemann and Maynard awaken many delightful memories. The oldest of our old timers, Miss Mary Howard now in her 94th year, gives glowing description of the open air band concerts enjoyed by the Village gatherings, during the early forties. She remembers as a child standing on the green in front of the Church of England, and listening to the mellow strains from the brass instruments playing in front of the old School House across the street. For indoor practice the band members often collected in the one room of the top flat of the brick house now known as "Braeside." This hall was also used for lectures and public meetings.

The foundation of this musical feature of the life of Old St. Andrews was laid in pioneer days, when musicians from the military bands of the armies of the American Revolution became our first pioneers and the first teachers of music.

The present writer cherishes the possession of one of their instruments, an eight-keyed silver mounted flute of London make, bearing the impress of Randall and Rose, 81 Tottenham Road London, which gives as clear a note as ever.

He has also inherited from his great-grand father Peter Benedict, an engraved and silver mounted staff armed with a steel point which served the double purpose of walking stick and weapon of defence.

Benedict was a pensioned officer of the army of the Revolution, and fought under General Montgomery at the capture of St. Johns during 1775.

The Americans brought with them bitter memories of the Revolution, when they or their fathers fought on opposite sides, but in making Canada the country of their adoption, they formed a "Brotherhood of Reconciliation," and lived in perfect harmony.

All this happened before St. Andrews had become the radiant and radiating centre of Ottawa Valley Civilization, and before the days of business competition and denominational rivalry had set in.

The list of pioneers would be incomplete without the addition of the following names, not before mentioned, most of whom belonged to the American group.

Barnet, Beaton, Bristol, Dixon, Doxtater, Foss, Kellog, Liscomb, McArthur, McDole, Mathews, Mears, Peabody, Proctor, Rae, Simmons, Streeter, Volla, names unfamiliar to us for most of them left St. Andrews with the Exodus of later years, but their descendants elsewhere may wish to share in the interest of this history.

Odd Mishaps to Pilots in Which the Elements of Comedy and Tragedy Mingled

Two recent airplane accidents, one here and one in South Africa, bring to mind a number of queer mishaps that have occurred in the short history of aviation, especially during the war period. Many of these have never been explained; some were tragic and others provided a comic relief from the monotony of training embryo aviators or from the nervous tension of flying in wartime.

When Lieutenant R. H. Hicks's plane took off on its own accord from Mitchell Field airport recently it was not the first time that such an event has taken place. Several years ago a pilot landed on a flying field in England to visit a friend. Taxing up to the hangars, he jumped out and left his engine running, intending to return almost immediately. This was a double infraction of the regulations. In the first place, he should not have left his engine running and, in the second instance, he should not have left the control lever unhitched, which he did.

What happened, apparently, was that a sudden puff of wind got under the starboard ailerons, forcing the control stick over to one side, thus sharply striking the throttle lever, which was fixed to the side of the fuselage. The next instant the plane, engine full on, was careering madly down the field. Being stable, it rose of its own accord and was soon lost to view. Eventually it was found, more than a mile away, a complete crash.

The cause of a similar accident is much more mysterious. A line of seven or eight heavy bombers of the pusher type were being loaded on an aerodrome in France, preparatory to a raid. At one side of the line another machine was being wheeled out of the hangar. For some reason or other it was left facing the end of the line of planes, about 100 yards further along the field. A mechanic, so he said afterward, thought the switch was on and promptly threw it out. It appeared that the switch on this particular machine was upside down, and the mechanic, instead of throwing it out, threw it in, but the moment he did so the engine started up in some mysterious way, carrying the plane straight for the line of bombers. With almost meticulous precision the bottom port plane caught each of the rudders of the waiting machines, causing them to fall heavily backward upon their tail booms.

FAINTS IN AIR. Lady Heath's recent experience in fainting in the air from an attack of sunstroke and yet landing safely but unconscious on the African veldt was one that had several parallels in wartime aviation. In the early part of the war some British pilots saw a British plane coming away from the lines in a long, steady glide. It passed low directly over an aerodrome, and yet the pilot made no attempt to circle and land. Suspicious that a German had got hold of a British machine and was attempting a landing on their side of the lines, the officers in question seized a tender that happened to be at hand and drove off at high speed in the direction in which the plane had disappeared.

Investigation showed that the observer had been shot and instantly killed, while the pilot, mortally wounded, had had presence of mind before he lost consciousness to head his plane home and switch off the engine. He probably had died on the way down.

Perhaps one of the queerest accidents that ever happened occurred when a certain young pilot took off at night on a heavy bomber for a raid across the lines. The machine, instead of rising from the ground toward the end of the flare path, ran straight through it, off the flying field proper on to a soft field, at the end, where it gradually slowed down and finally turned on its nose in an easy, gentle motion, at least so it appeared in the uncertain light of dusk. When the machine was reached a minute or so later it was found that the observer had been thrown head first into a mudhole, and was in the comical process of scraping the mud from his face when the rescuers arrived. The pilot, however, was dead with a broken neck, and yet the plane was not in the least damaged and was flown that very night across the lines.

POWERS IN KILTS. More humorous was the case of a pilot who was known as the "Mad Highlander," partly because he always flew in kilts and partly because he was intrepid to the point of idiocy. One day, having flown for about ten hours all told, he took up an Avro to about 5,000 feet, where he put it in a spin and spun down from that height straight into the ground. The engine was buried nearly three feet deep, while the fuselage and wings were reduced almost to splinters—but from the midst of the wreckage the "Mad Highlander" emerged, complaining loudly that he had cut his knee!

Still funnier was the case of a certain squadron commander who never flew except twice a year to qualify for his flying pay. No one, so far as is known, ever encouraged him to go up, for when he did he invariably crashed. On one occasion he discovered that he must immediately or forfeit a not inconsiderable part of his income. A machine was wheeled out for him, the nominal owner looking ruefully on. The wind was blowing across some greenhouses to one side of the field, and there was not a man present who did not feel exactly what form the inevitable disaster would take—so much so, indeed, that the flight commander sent some mechanics to the edge of the field nearest the glass houses.

The gallant major walked breezily out of his office, clad like an Eskimo, though it was a warm summer day. "Nominal Owner" shook his head sadly, threw a parting kiss to his cherished plane and walked hastily away in the direction of the officers' mess. Before taking off the major instructed a mechanic to note his time in the air with a stop watch—it was only necessary for him to fly twice a year; the regulations were delightfully vague concerning the length of each flight.

FARM AND GARDEN FERTILIZERS. Fertilizers are not the doubtful products they were a generation or longer ago, nor are they limited to a few brands and descriptions. Plant food materials and mixtures occupy a considerable place in commerce and industry, and their production involves heavy investment of capital and occupation. In all Canada more than sixty firms are turning out fertilizers of simple or complex form involving almost three hundred brands. These, with the exception of certain standard materials including sulphate of ammonia and superphosphate, have all to be registered with the Dominion Seed Commissioner whose branch of the Dept. of Agriculture administers The Fertilizers Act. In this administration the many brands of commercial fertilizers are inspected and analyzed to see that the buying public are not imposed upon or defrauded when the fertilizer is purchased subject to analysis with manufacturers and importers are required to guarantee in percentage of nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash, the three essential plant foods. The results of these analyses are each year published for the information of those who are interested.

The analyses carried out during the fiscal year 1926-27 are reported in Pamphlet No. 86, distributed by the Publications Branch of the Dept. at Ottawa. These analyses cover 183 complete mixed fertilizers, 92 fertilizers containing only two plant foods, and 18 containing only one of the three recognized essential plant foods. In the entire year's work but twenty-one brands were found by analysis to fall below the guaranteed analysis of the trade. It was found necessary to conduct five prosecutions and to issue warnings for several minor offences. Incorrect labelling was the principal offence other than failure to meet the guaranteed analysis. The report which contains the results of analyses of samples of fertilizers taken by inspectors during the registration year, reports the increasing use of fertilizers in Canada as indicated by an estimated excess of 20,000 tons over the previous year, bringing the amount up to about 180,000 tons used for commercial purposes.

NEOLOGISMS. A couple of new words have recently swam into our ken. Professor Jastrow in a recent article advised mentally tired folk to "Take a relaxative." Entirely new that, we believe. The other word is of the portmanteau variety. It is from the Kalends: "No longer will estimated costs be 'guesstimated.'" Expressive words! Instead of speaking of a "rough estimate" we shall presently be calling it a "guesstimate," thus saving two letters and a syllable.

Free Time For Children

Viola Woodville

No mother ever loved a child better than Mrs. Winter loved Margery nor tried harder to give her every advantage. That was the whole trouble. She tried too hard. "She stood up so straight that she leaned over backwards," as my dear father used to say. Well, Mrs. Winter nearly killed Margery, and I'll tell you about it, just as she told me after Margery had become a rosy-cheeked high school freshman.

"Margery grew so thin and listless," said Mrs. Winter, "though she was faithful to all her work, that I saw the scientific care that I gave her, I could not understand it. One morning she wouldn't get up to do her practising and there was nothing for it but to call the doctor."

"Dr. Stevens was as much like an old-time family physician as exists now-a-days, and I had known him all my life. He scarcely knew Margery, though, because she had always been so well. When he came he merely had a little visit with the child and then talked with me out in the hall."

"Is your daughter usually an active child?" he asked.

"She used to be a little dreamer," I answered, "until I trained her out of it. I wanted her to get the full use of all her time, and now she accomplishes a great deal."

"I meant, what exercise does she get?"

"Her play time is supervised at school, and I see to it that she has a walk very often. I go with her myself, and we study birds and plants. With her extra lessons I want her to have plenty of outdoors."

"Then I told him how much talent Margery had for drawing and music and how I saw to it that she had opportunities that very few children enjoyed. 'She has accepted a very high standard,' I added, 'as the goal she is working towards, and I feel that she will be creative in one or both of these lines.'

"When he questioned about her diet I could tell even to the number of calories she had in her well balanced meals. 'Can you wonder, Doctor,' I asked, 'that I am surprised that with all my care she is now in bed with nothing much the matter?'

"Nothing but nervous prostration!" he burst out, 'a ridiculous condition in a child with a mother as intelligent as I thought you were, Caroline. Poor little thing! Even her walk a study period. No time to herself. A little slave to her mother's ambition.'

"Careful, Doctor!" I had to throw in.

"Now, Caroline, you are going to let your old friend tell you that no good intentions are going to alter the fact that you have put this child to a program that few grown people could stand. Her whole nature has rebelled. No matter how exactly you weigh her food it isn't going to nourish her body if her spirit is in a cage. 'Children need time to dream, time to plan their own games, time to do nothing at all. They may have little duties—should have them—but not the large responsibilities that you have put on your child. Think it over, and you'll know I am right. Give Margery wholesome food, but let her choose for herself what she likes, and how much, for a time. Stop so many extra lessons while school is in session, and above all let the child alone. Because her mother loves her, she'll be all right soon. Let me see her again before long.'

"The good old doctor took himself off, and I brought out a book of fairy stories that I had hidden and gave it to Margery," concluded Mrs. Winter. And I will say for her that she used the same intelligence in relaxing her vigilance that she had used in holding Margery to her system.

Canadian Racing Dates List Fort Erie and Hamilton Tracks

Toronto, Ont.—The schedule of the first series of race meets under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Racing Association as announced by that body shows the Fort Erie and Hamilton tracks listed despite reports that both of these jockey clubs might drop out due to losses last season.

The schedule follows:
May 19 to May 26, Ontario Jockey Club, at Woodbine Park, Toronto.
May 28 to June 4, Thorncliffe Park Racing and Breeding Association, Toronto.
June 6 to June 13, Comnaught Park Jockey Club, Ottawa.
June 16 to June 23, Montreal Jockey Club, Blue Bonnets, Montreal.
June 25 to July 2, Hamilton Jockey Club.
July 4 to July 11, Niagara Racing Association, Fort Erie.
July 14 to July 21, Dorval Jockey Club, Montreal.

A cub reported, frequently republished for prolixity and warned to be brief, turned in the following: "A shocking affair occurred last night. Sir Edward Hopeless, a guest at Lady Panmore's ball, complained of feeling ill, took a highball, his hat, his coat, his departure, no notice of his friends, a taxi, a pistol from his pocket, and finally his life. Nice chap. Regrets and all that."

Husband (on phone)—"So, honey, I'll be awful busy at the office and won't be home till late." Wife—"Can I depend on that?"

Like Fish in Pond, Cat on Land, Is Neither

Eldorado, Kan.—A real curiosity is being displayed here in the business district. A queer creature about one foot long, which was found in a pond near here, appears to be half fish and half animal. The creature's body is that of a fish, having gills, head and tail like a channel cat. Large bunches of tendrils are back of each gill. It has four strong legs with feet similar to a frog's. It moves freely, like a lizard, when on the ground. When in the water occasionally it swims to the top, catching flies and snapping like a dog.

Blackmail Victims Aided

For some time it has been noticed that prosecutors in British blackmailing trials had remained incognito. The reason was divulged to have originated in a plan of the London Judges, made known on March 1 in a case tried at the Old Bailey, when a servant named John Wright was sentenced to three years' penal servitude for attempting to blackmail his master, "Mr. B." and his fiancée, "Miss A."

Wright, it was declared by the prosecuting counsel, Francis Peregrine, had demanded "enough hush money to take him out of the country." "Miss A" was taken into the secret and advised "Mr. B." not to pay, that she herself would handle the blackmail. She made an appointment with him which he failed to keep. Then he came to her house. She left him for a moment and telephoned the police. When, on her return, Wright demanded £100, for some letters and a hotel bill, the police entered and arrested him.

When the counsel for the defendant demanded that the plaintiff should be put on the stand and identified, the Recorder, Sir Ernest Wild, K.C., said that this could not be done, and he explained the agreement entered into by the London courts not to expose the prosecutors in blackmailing cases. He added:

"Blackmail is the only class of crime where there is a consensus of judicial opinion that the names of persons blackmailed should not be published. Otherwise such persons might be afraid to bring an offender to justice. The result has been that a number of persons have lodged complaints who otherwise would never have dared to do so. The procedure, it is believed, will in time measurably reduce the practice of the crime."

Socially Impossible.
Mother — (disappointedly) — "You find the Baron socially impossible?"
Daughter—"Yes, he's so lacking in manners, mother."

Of course we will know more about the virtues of this new marriage idea when we see how many golden weddings are celebrated on the companionate basis.

Farm Notes

SPRING CARE IN MARKETING EGGS.

Why is it that farmers who give the utmost care to their milk, to cool it and keep it clean, who carefully sort the potatoes they send to market, persist in selling dirty eggs? The question is one which puzzles those interested in the egg trade—men who know the depressing effect these dirty eggs have on the market. Farmers will sort their potatoes because they know that consumers do not want a small, scabby, ill-appearing product. They will keep their milk clean because they know that nothing will turn consumers against milk more than dirt. The same consumer preference is exerted in eggs, as is instanced by the success of standardized egg grading, but all farmers do not seem to have realized the necessity of producing and marketing clean eggs.

A very interesting commentary on this matter was provided recently by Mr. E. J. Smith, manager of the Whyte Packing Co. of Brockville, Ontario, when he stated that dirty eggs and their related evil, washed eggs, represented one of the greatest problems and biggest sources of loss in the egg trade, a loss which eventually the producer has to bear.

"Dirty eggs," said Mr. Smith, "are repulsive to the consumer and lessen the demand for all eggs. Washed eggs deteriorate quickly and, if stored, usually come out of storage spoiled and unfit for use. It would be a decided advantage to producers if they would give a little care to keeping nests, poultry houses and yards clean and we are confident that a little attention to sanitary conditions would result in much better prices. It would also add much to the attractiveness and pleasure of doing business."

Mr. H. E. Gray, managing director of Gunn, Langlois & Co. Ltd., Montreal, and president of the Montreal Produce Merchants' Association, in a recent interview goes a little further and explains why nature's covering on the egg should not be removed.

"Dirty eggs," said Mr. Gray, "should never be washed if they are going to be sold and marketed through the regular channels. Every farmer knows that the egg is wet when laid. This moisture, or mucous, dries on the shell and serves the purpose of filling the pores of the shell without sealing them, thus filtering any air that may pass through. The shell itself with its two inner membranes forms the protective wall of the egg, and by washing the egg one will remove the gelatinous coating on the shell which serves as a protection for the contents. When this coating is removed the egg have a tendency to deteriorate faster, especially if they are placed in storage."

"Cleanliness of shell affects the quality of the egg directly, that is, if the egg is clean it will hold up better in storage than a dirty or stained egg. Cleanliness affects the price also. The Canadian Egg Standards require that Fresh Extras be clean and Fresh Firsts reasonably clean, so that if producers market dirty eggs they must be sold either as Seconds or in the class of Cracked and Dirty Eggs."

"If eggs are going to reach the market in good condition the first step must be taken by the farmer in proper care of handling. A poor quality egg will always remain an inferior product. The fundamental thought in handling eggs should be to preserve

Miss Donaldson, Westmount, spent the week-end the guest of Major and Mrs. G. G. Mitchell.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Smith of Montreal, spent the week-end with their grandfather Mr. Matthew Scott.

Mr. George McCoy, of Montreal, was the guest of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. McCoy for the week-end.

—Do you know why you eat hens' eggs? "It Pays To Advertise" will tell you. Don't miss hearing it on June 8th.

Miss Audrey MacIntosh, of Montreal, was the guest of her grandmother, Mrs. R. E. Carkner for the week-end.

Dr. Hooper is now comfortably housed in his fine new offices over Jno. McPaul & Son's store on Main Street.

Mrs. J. C. Wilson and Mrs. Glines, of Montreal, and Miss Gourley, of Ottawa, are guests of Mrs. J. R. McOuat for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Cameron McOuat, of Flint, Mich., are guests of the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. McOuat for a few weeks.

Miss Bertha Stanforth, accompanied by her brother, Mr. Denis Stanforth spent the week-end with their parents at Huberdeau.

Mr. Chas. Valpy, was the guest of his sister, Mrs. Alfred Miller, for the week-end, prior to his return to Cardiff, Wales, in June.

Our Motor Salesmen have had a busy time lately as the number of fine new cars appearing on our streets bear ample testimony.

Messrs. Geoffrey Bedard and Jas. MacKinnon Jr. were in Detroit over the week-end; the former having purchased a new Studebaker Commander.

We are pleased to welcome the return of Mrs. Holland and her son Ivan, who spent the week-end here, opening up their summer camp "Ivan Bower".

The Gatineau Power Co.'y. have installed a fine new sign in front of their store on Main Street and discarded the triangular sign of the Ottawa Power Co.'y.

The week-end guests of Mrs. M. Jones were: Miss Ailsa Woodwork, of Brownsburg; Miss Elsie Paige and Messrs. Donald Fowler and C. Fogarty, of McDonald College Staff.

Miss Hattie Ayers was the hostess at a China Shower, on Monday, in honor of Miss Jeanne Lessard, whose marriage to Mr. G. Le May takes place in June. Miss J. Rodrigue and Miss B. Ayers served tea.

The Annual Meeting of the Lachute Ladies' Golf Club was held at the Club House on Tuesday, May 22nd. Officers were elected for the coming season and it was decided that the Club hold their first tournament on Friday, June 1st., after which tea will be served at the Club House.

It is a matter of great satisfaction that our Fire Brigade are right on their job. Last week they were called out to a fire at Cottingham's Limited and on Sunday morning they responded to another call at Mr. Dumais' residence on Main Street. Neither fires amounted to much, but the brigade were there just the same.

The Ottawa Dairy have recently installed several of the latest refrigeration cabinets in our Ice Cream Parlors for the greater convenience of their patrons. The new cabinets have containers for six five gallon cans and they dispense entirely with the old method of salt and ice, thus proving a great convenience to the vendor and doing away with lots of hard work.

You hardly realize it, do you, but the Lachute Fair will be on in less than a month, so from now on just boost it for all you are worth. Get into the spirit of exhibition time and make it one of the very best in the history of the Agricultural Society. The President and directors are all doing their best in rendering a lot of time and thought to make our Annual Fair successful, so put your shoulder to the wheel and give it a real boost.

In accord with the wishes of the Town Council, the committee appointed to interview the Biltmore Shirt Company with a view to try and secure their location for Lachute found the demands so very unreasonable that there is little hope of their settlement with us. The members of the committee put forward all the advantages our town had to offer, but were keenly disappointed at the excessive requirements laid down by the prospective shirt makers.

OBITUARY.

THE LATE T. B. ANDREWS

While he was tracing a short circuit on the lines of the Bell Telephone Company at Terrebonne, on Wednesday morning, May 16th., at 11 o'clock, T. Bertram Andrews, 21 years of age, 4005 Crawford street, fell from the top of a pole to the road and was instantly killed.

A pulmotor from the company's emergency patrol worked for over two hours but efforts to revive him were fruitless. It was afterwards discovered that a power line carrying electric light current had fallen on the phone wires and the shock of this threw Andrews from the pole. He had been in the employment of the Bell Telephone Co. for the past three months and had been previously employed by Ayers Ltd.

The funeral took place on Saturday the service being conducted by the Rev. T. W. Jones, of Calvary Presbyterian Church; interment taking place in Mount Royal Cemetery.

He is survived by his mother, Mrs. William Evans, Stanley, Ralph, and Charles, brothers, all of Montreal; James V. Andrews, of Saskatoon, brother, and Mrs. Miles Copeland, of Lakefield, a sister.

ST. ANDREWS EAST.

Miss Priscilla MacMartin has returned from Washington and intends to spend the summer with her sister, Miss Charlotte MacMartin.

Mr. Norman McGregor Jr. is expected to take a position in New York soon. We shall miss him here.

The Council of the Young People's Society of the United Church met on Tuesday and made up an attractive program for the summer.

Miss Wickes, of the Upper-Canada Tract Society addressed the children in the school, and also gave an illustrated talk on her work in the Town Hall, on Thursday.

The first anniversary of the dedication of the St. Andrews United Church will be held on Sunday, May 27th. Special music will be given by the choir and other singers. The Rev. J. D. MacLeod, of Montreal, will be the speaker.

Among those in Montreal this week were Miss Brophy, Miss Mary Walsh and Mr. and Mrs. Charman.

Miss Allison and Miss Mary Taylor were at their home here over the week-end.

LAKEFIELD.

The community was greatly shocked to learn of the terribly sudden death of Mr. Bert Andrews, youngest son of Mrs. W. Evans of Lakefield. Mrs. Evans has the sympathy of all who know her at this time of her bereavement.

A very successful meeting of the Women's Auxiliary was held at Mrs. Jas. Arnott's last week, and considerable work was done and plans discussed for the summer.

Mr. Waters, of the Diocesan College, who has been in charge of the services during the winter, is taking his farewell service at Trinity church on Sunday next, May 27th. Service will be at 2.30 p.m. (Standard time); and at Shrewsbury at 10.30 a.m.

On account of the floods between here and Montreal, there have been very few week-end visitors lately.

We are glad to hear of improvement in the condition of Mrs. Geo. Robinson's health; and hope she will soon return to her home in Shrewsbury.

Mrs. Miles Copeland was in Montreal with her mother Mrs. W. Evans, attending the funeral of her brother, the late Bert Andrews on Saturday.

Mr. Percy Richards is visiting his friends in this locality.

BIRTHS.

BRADFORD.—On May 11th., at Lachute, Que., to Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Bradford, a daughter.

BROWN.—At Lachute, on May 16th., to Mr. and Mrs. David Brown, (nee Helen Hutchinson), a son.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Mr. and Mrs. P. De Lessard, announce the engagement of their daughter Jeanne, to Mr. Germain Le May, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Le May. The marriage to take place early in June.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Tremblay, of Ottawa, announce the engagement of their only daughter Janine, to Mr. Fairbanks Monette, only son of the late Philias and Mrs. Monette. Wedding to take place early in June.

The engagement is announced of Lewina Annie, eldest daughter of the late Mr. Paul Martin and Mrs. Martin, of Brownsburg, Que., to Mr. Fred George Hosgoode, only son of Mr. George F. Hosgoode, of Brownsburg. Wedding to take place quietly in June.

DEATH.

ANDREWS.—Accidentally killed at Terrebonne, Que., on May 16th., 1928, Thomas Bertram, aged 21 years, youngest beloved son of the late James Andrews and Mrs. Wm. Evans, of Montreal.

ALL-TO-TAKE PART

activity to the view that the type of contribution and the promise of development as shown by countries of British Empire, is one that Canadians all desire to encourage for the sake of the present and the future generations. Although this conviction is infinitely bound up with the economic and business side of the life that play so great a part in the daily lives of so many Canadian citizens.

Empire Shopping Week is not a novelty. They have been tried with great success in other parts of the Empire, notably in Australia, British West Indies and in Great Britain. These weeks enjoy the cordial approval and co-operation of the Empire Marketing Board, now doing such valuable work in Great Britain and other parts of the Empire. The underlying principle on which the EMPIRE SHOPPING WEEK IN CANADA will operate is the same as that in force in Empire Marketing Board activities. One main thought steadily kept in mind is that a national first preference is given to goods that are the products of the country in which the week is held, other Empire products receiving the next preference. Produced in Canada is produced in the Empire.

Provincial and local committees are being formed throughout Canada, including local representatives of the nine national organizations already interested through the Advisory Council and many other public spirited bodies.

The Mayor of each town in Canada has been invited by Hon. James Malcolm, Honorary President of the Council, to take a leading part in the local movement.

The formation of local committees is one of the approved general principles of the movement.

Accepted and approved by the Committee to start Canadian Chambers of Commerce, now President is on the Advisory Council, along with eight other Presidents of national organization, and which is represented on the Executive Committee and the Finance Committee of Empire Shopping Week in Canada, outline the Shopping Week movement and organization to all Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce, local committees in the Empire Shopping Week elsewhere.

The last meeting of the Executive Committee authorized the Honorary Secretary to keep in direct touch with the local Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce with respect to the week's plan for activity of local committees and local papers in considering the extent of space to be used in newspapers and other publications for general advertising.

It may perhaps be interesting to consider what is being done elsewhere in Canada. Within two weeks of the first notice being sent, the following towns and cities have actually formed local committees who have definitely taken steps to do so: Winnipeg, Moncton, Medicine Hat, Alberta; Vancouver, Halifax, Brockville, Hamilton, York, E.C., St. Catharines, Peterborough, Brampton, North Bay, Gravel, Saginaw, Edmonton, Victoria, Belleville, Prince Albert, Fort William, Quebec, Toronto, Calgary, and Montreal. A brief view of it is given below.

There is much more to be done in the effort to sell goods at retail. Many people think there is secretly time to do that should be done locally even with the beginning made immediately. The local publicity gained by the organization of a representative local committee would be the most effective means of reminding manufacturers of their obligation to subscribe, which forms an added reason for going promptly to work.

For example, Mr. Reeve has an invitation from the Honorary President to take part in your local movement. Has a dozen or more local branches of National organizations, and a number of other local organizations, are ready and waiting the call from your organization to whom was entrusted the leadership in the community effort.

The General Executive Committee is composed of men acting in a representative capacity representing their national organizations on the Advisory Committee, specially selected from the whole group of national organizations whose Presidents form the Advisory Council of the organization.

They have approved of the wording and design of electoral for newspapers use of a broadside to the retailer, tail-

These are simply a few of the most of national representative Committee must.

Obviously the General Committee, through the retaining, constantly in the national point of view questions, with the best world towards, and it cannot understand difficulties on local committee clearly shows from general subscribers required for general purposes all to help you.

Devolution of duties is not out. For instance, Manufacturers' Association, the distribution of the Canadian market, management of Overseas Trade, their distribution to the Empire, the Retail Merchants Association interested their visions and local organizations also the Canadian Association for local purposes, national organizations, their part in keeping it informed and interested in many other ways.

The development of fees can fill the time, in which your local taking a lead to make the week the most successful has happened since the local Committee active form of making sure that all stores and retail actively co-operating to during Empire Shopping to 28th of April, arrangements municipal cooperation, a Mayor who has been in the, by the Honorary, welcoming any representation by him. There is, as such as brief advertisement, cooperation with houses and all sorts of that will help to interest public in the movement the small funds, as well as on local work.

This method of the use and development initiative in each place the utmost value in that suit the particular

"I don't need to advertise. I have been in business in this town for 30 years. Every black woman and child here knows where I am and what I sell." The advertising salesman looked down the street and saw a crowd of people. "A crowd of people," he had been told. The storekeeper replied that it had been there for half a century. "And that's for the church school," he said. "On Sunday morning," the advertising man remarked.

enable "every committee to make an application for advance press publicity."

The General Executive Committee is arranging for the supply of short-cuts and window advertisements, orders for use on stationery, electros for newspaper publishers use, a considerable supply of posters and the general display of advertising along the national and economic lines. The Executive Committee will also welcome news of your efforts and suggestions that may be made in any of our other places.

Under these existing conditions Empire Shopping will be a success is certain to be a national success. It will do a great work in uniting the bonds of Empire and will give Canada the most interesting and profitable Empire day it is—vast, varied and firmly held within itself, a great power for good in the world to-day.

Montreal.—Plans have been commenced by the Canadian Post Office Department for the extension of the air mail service connecting large cities such as Montreal and Toronto with the first land stop of trans-Atlantic liners. The winter tests have been proceeding on the mail route from St. John's and Halifax to Montreal.
Last fall service was successfully maintained from St. John and Halifax to Montreal and between Rimouski and Montreal. The latter service is to be resumed and extended down the north shore of the St. Lawrence to Murray Bay and Anticosti Island.

A more important question is to be inaugurated with the carriage of mail to and from ocean ports between Rimouski and Montreal and Toronto. The contract for the service to Toronto will be awarded in the near future. It will give Toronto quick delivery of letters, mail and express. Europe is the market to be made successful, in another year an extension of it is not west as Winnipeg will be made.

The last step, if it can be achieved will go far toward establishing a regular transcontinental airway, across Canada. The need for such an airway at the present time is doubted by some business men who have given little support to the development of air lines covering territory north and south of the transcontinental railway system.

The airplane has proved an effective instrument in opening up territory in the northwest of Canada. The air operations through this district, which presented many handicaps to the pilot, and where forced landings were extremely dangerous, have been fairly successful.

The Western Canada Airways operates a regular service from Winnipeg into the mining districts to the north. A fleet of Fokker Universal planes, delivered to the Winnipeg base this winter by Bernt Balchen, now maintains a regular service into this district.

EMPIRE DAY

We think of the twenty-fourth of May in Canada as Victoria Day more than as Empire Day. More and more, however, around the British Empire the day is coming to possess an Imperial significance. The association of the name of Queen Victoria with Empire Day is fitting, too. It was the action of Lord Beaconsfield, first of the great Imperialists, in making the beloved Queen Empress of India that first turned the thoughts of the British people Empire-ward. The Queen, whose name is kept fresh in our minds at this time of the year, herself possessed the larger vision. She not only saw a lovely little old England living under her gentle sway but glimpsed the splendid vision of the far-flung Empire we know to-day. It was her Diamond Jubilee celebration that first brought home the fact of Empire, in all its magnificence and potentiality, to the mind and soul of the British people at home in the Motherland.

Here in this oldest of the Dominions of the Empire we shall celebrate the coming Empire Day as loyally and sincerely as in any other part of the Empire. Perhaps we shall do so more fervently in future than ever. The attainment of complete equal status and its Imperial recognition, making Canada a sister nation of the Motherland rather than a daughter nation will give an added and deeper joy to the sense of high Imperial destiny that stirs our pulses at such times. In a very real sense we are still "daughter in our mother's house" though "mistress in our own," but it is more the appreciation of parental self-abnegation that moves us so deeply than the feeling of pride that we have won our nationhood. We are better children because the old folks have so ungrudgingly recognized our growth to man's estate. The ties that bind us to the Motherland are infinitely stronger to-day because they are deeprooted in love and tender affection. "Blest be the tie that binds."

What a wonderful thing this Empire of ours is! There has never been any confederation of peoples like unto it in the world's history. It is a grouping together of nations that have come out from an original stock, homing in a few little islands in the wild North Sea. To these have been added others such as our French Canadian fellow-citizens in Canada and the Dutch in South Africa, who by reason of the larger liberty the British Empire confers on them, and the consequent higher relative position they occupy in the world's life, have become as loyally devoted to the Empire as the blood children of the mother country. Linked with these are Dependencies and Crown Colonies, all of which, it shall yet come to pass are to possess the full freedom within the Empire that the Dominions enjoy.

The secret of our strength is our freedom, of our growth our powers of self-government, of our virility the democracy which characterizes our institutions. Let us all pause as Empire Day rolls around again to pledge in our hearts our loyalty to the Throne, our fealty to the Empire, and our love for Canada, a love that shall inspire us to build a Canada worthy of the Empire and an Empire worthy of Canada.

"PERMITS"

Since the inhuman return of the McConachie Mother with her infant child, which was forbidden entrance to Canada, a real hornet's nest has been stirred up as to the method of issuing permits and the steps that are necessary in order that the immigrants may secure admission into Canada. Certain grave accusations have been made in which it is said that the permits are being bought and trafficked in for $100 each. The evidence brought to light so far has shown that Members of Parliament have secured these special permits in great numbers and in their applications for same the red tapeism is practically done away with because they carry the honored title of M.P., and Mr. Egan seems to assume no further responsibility, but claims the permits are not being issued in a partisan manner.

The probe is now on and we hope it will be carried through to the finish. Let Parliament and the country have an honest statement showing all the permits that have been issued since 1925 and let the statement show on whose behalf they were issued. That we submit, will constitute a check on all parties and tend to insure the issuance of such permits to those legitimately entitled.

Are you superstitious? It Pays To Advertise! will tell you a fact or two about it. Come see it on June 8th.

COUNTY MEETING OF ARGENTEUIL W. I.

The eighth Annual meeting of the Women's Institute of the County of Argenteuil was held in McArthur's Hall, on Thursday, May 17th. A bountiful luncheon was partaken of by 66 members at 12 o'clock D.S.T. After luncheon the meeting was called to order by the President, Mrs. John Boyd, all present repeating the Club Women's Creed. After the reading of the minutes of last meeting, the President expressed her pleasure at the large number of delegates present and welcomed our new branch from Morin Heights.

The branch reports and also the different Convenors' reports were read and commented on. The delegates from the different branches were as follows: Pioneers (formerly Argenteuil) 11, Jerusalem-Bethany 9, Hill Head 3, Upper Lachute 6, Chatham 15, Lakefield 8, Morin Heights 10; also quite a number of visitors were present in the afternoon. We have now a membership of 154 in our County.

The officers for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. John McQuat. 1st. Vice-Pres., Mrs. John Gordon. 2nd. Vice-Pres., Mrs. Douglas Davis; Sec-Treas., Mrs. John Mason.

Convenors—Agriculture, Mrs. Matthew Dey. Child Welfare, Mrs. G. Armstrong. Education and better schools, Mrs. Russell Kennedy. Home Economics, Mrs. Gordon Walker. Immigration, Mrs. Alex. Pollock. Legislation, Mrs. Robert McFaul. National Canadianization, Mrs. Robt. Bradley. Publicity, Mrs. A. Tomalty. Canadian Industries, Mrs. Jas. Armstrong. Auditors, Mrs. John Boyd & Mrs. Alex. Bothwell.

The new president then took the chair and expressed her gratitude to the members. Miss McCain was then called on and expressed her delight to see so many members and visitors present. She referred briefly to the Poultry Progress and C.N.E. also the display that was sent to England last year. The display to be put on this year at the C.N.E. is to be made from flax. A special farm boy's week to be held at MacDonald College, July 2 to 6, for boys 14 to 20 years of age.

The singing of God Save the King brought a very enjoyable and profitable meeting to a close.

Holds there is Reason to Doubt Whether Death Ends Anything

Rev. J. T. Robbins Thinks There Are Few Scientists Equipped to Deal With Such Subjects as Immortality—All That Death Ends is Relationship Between Spirit and Body.

Preaching at St. Augustine's Church, Toronto, on Sunday last, on "Does Death End All?" Rev. J. T. Robbins said that very few scientists are equipped for treatment of such subjects as "Immortality," just as very few theologians are competent to deal with matters such as Evolution. Each belongs to a particular sphere of investigation.

"There is good reason," he continued to doubt whether death ends anything. The body of a departed person is not dead. It ceases to function as a human body because the personality which hitherto controlled it has departed from it. By reason of disease or old age, it was no longer of use. But activity is still going on in it. We call this activity, "dissolution," which is simply the process of reducing the substance of the body to form, in which its energy can again be utilized by the nature. This is the case with all matters. Activity is always in progress. There is no death. All that death ends is the relationship between spirit and body which we call this life."

The Accounting of Man.
"Man cannot be accounted for by analysis of his physical nature, nor by examination of the brain. There is little difference between the human brain and that of certain monkeys though man himself is vastly different. The explanation of this difference can only be found by an examination of that which is behind the brain. The brain is like the keyboard of a musical instrument. By playing upon it the musician forces the instrument to do his will. So the mind, or personality, or spirit operates the body through the brain. Brain and body may be deprived of their functional powers by death. But mind or personality remains."

"Personality is immaterial. Since death applies only to a change in the matter of organisms, in the case of man personality remains untouched by it."

Personality Form of Energy
"It is certain that, whatever else it may be, personality is a form of energy. Science teaches (principle of Conservation of Energy) that energy cannot be destroyed. Therefore personality is incapable of being destroyed—that is, the soul is immortal!"

"Further, justice demands another life for man. Moral living is right. We know this because persistent immortality causes disease and destruction and is therefore against nature. Yet often wickedness achieves success and wealth in this life, while the good man endures misfortune. If there is no life beyond, such a condition involves the failure of justice, and introduces an irrational element. Science maintains that the universe exists on a rational basis."

"This being so, there must be another life in which the wrongs and inequalities of this life will be set right and virtue adequately rewarded. Since the world is based on reason, it is necessary to admit immortality. "The Resurrection of Christ stands out as a fact of history. It is the guarantee of immortality."

Odd Mishaps to Pilots in Which the Elements of Comedy and Tragedy Mingled

Two recent airplane accidents, one here and one in South Africa, bring to mind a number of queer mishaps that have occurred in the short history of aviation, reminding us of the other period. Many of them have been explained, some were caused by others, and others provided a comic relief from the monotony of the flying business.

When Lieutenant R. H. Hicks' plane took off on its own accord from Mitchell Field airport recently it was not the first time that such an event has taken place. Several years ago a pilot landed on a field in England to find the engine dead and up to the house, but he was not able to return his engine and the plane was left in the field. The pilot was a double agent in the regulation. In the first place, he was a pilot and in the second instance, he was a pilot.

When a pilot is in a plane that a sudden change in the engine of the starboard engine, forcing the control stick over to one side, thus sharply striking the engine lever, which was fixed to the side of the engine. The next instant the engine full on, was careering down the field. The plane, which was of its own accord, was not a view. Eventually it was found more than a mile away, a complete crash.

The cause of a similar accident much more mysterious. A seven or eight heavy bombers of the pusher type were flying over the aerodrome in a formation. One of the other machines was flying out of the hangar. For some reason or other it was left facing the end of the line of planes. About 100 yards from the aerodrome, a mechanic was said to have thought the switch was on and he threw it. It appeared that the switch on this particular machine was upside down, and the mechanic, thinking it was on, did so. The engine started up in some mysterious way, carrying the plane straight for the aerodrome. With almost meticulous precision the bottom of the plane caught each of the rods of the waiting machine, causing them to fall heavily backward upon the ground.

PAINTS IN AIR

Left Heath's recent experience in flying in the front of a stack of smoke and the landing safety but unconscious of the African veldt was one that had several parallels in wartime aviation. In the early part of the war some British pilots saw a plane coming away from the line in a long, steady glide. It passed directly over the aerodrome, and the pilot made no attempt to circle and land. Suspicious that a German had got hold of a British machine and was attempting a landing on their side of the line, the officers in position seized a gun that had been pointed at a hand and drove off at high speed in the direction in which the plane had disappeared.

Minutes later they came across the machine in the middle of a large field. Its propeller stopped, and the pilot and observer fell out of their respective cockpits. The officers, stopping the tank, shouted to them, but they did not respond. They caught up with them, approached the silent machine—both pilot and observer were dead. Close investigation showed that the observer had been shot and killed by the pilot.

Farm Notes

SPRING CARE IN MARKETING EGGS

Why is it that farmers who give the utmost care to their milk to cool it and keep it clean, who carefully sort the potatoes they send to market, persist in selling their eggs? The question is one which has been asked many times in the past. Farmers who sort their potatoes because they know that consumers do not want a small, scabby, ill-appearing product. They will keep their milk clean because they know that nothing will turn consumers against milk more than dirt. The same consumer preference is shown in eggs, as is indicated by the success of standardized egg grading, but all farmers do not seem to have realized the necessity of producing and marketing clean eggs.

A very interesting commentary on this matter was provided recently by Mr. E. J. Smith, manager of the Whyte Packing Co. of Brockville, Ontario, when he stated that dirty eggs and their relatives, cracked eggs, represented one of the greatest problems and biggest sources of loss in the egg trade, a loss which eventually the producer has to bear.

"Dirty eggs," said Mr. Smith, "are repulsive to the consumer and depress the demand for all eggs. Washed eggs deteriorate in quality, and are usually consumed, and are not used for use. It would be a decided advantage to producers if they would give a little care to their eggs, poultry houses and yards clean and we are confident that a little attention to sanitary conditions would result in much better prices. It would also add much to the attractiveness and pleasure of doing business."

Mr. E. J. Gray, managing director of Gundy, Langlois & Co. Ltd., Montreal, and president of the Montreal Produce Merchants' Association, in a recent interview goes a little further and explains why nature covering an egg should not be removed.

"Dirty eggs," said Mr. Gray, "should never be washed if they are going to be sold and marketed through the regular channels. Every farmer knows that the egg is not laid in a clean state, but it is covered with a protective film of oil and wax. This film serves the purpose of filling the pores of the shell without sealing them, thus filtering any air that may pass through. The shell itself with its two inner membranes forms the protective wall of the egg, and by washing the egg one will remove the gelatinous coating on the shell which serves as a protection for the contents. When this coating is removed the egg has a tendency to deteriorate faster, especially if they are placed in storage."

The cleanliness of the shell affects the quality of the egg itself, that is, if the egg is clean it will hold up better in storage than a dirty or stained egg. Cleanliness affects the price also. The Canadian Egg Standards require that Fresh Eggs be clean and Free from reasonably clean, so that if producers market dirty eggs they must be sold either as Seconds or in the class of Cracked and Dirty Eggs.

"If a farmer does not clean the market, he is not doing the best step must be taken by the farmer in proper care of handling. A poor quality egg will always remain an inferior product. The fundamental thought in handling eggs should be to preserve

For some time it has been noticed that prosecutors in British blackmailing trials have remained anonymous. The reason was divulged by a barrister in a speech made in the House of Commons on March 11. He stated that the reason for this was that the victims of blackmail were often of high social position and the exposure of their names would be a disgrace to them. He suggested that the government should take steps to protect the identity of these victims.

A WONDERFUL PLANE.

And the plane itself is far from the least remarkable part of the Hinkler flight. It is in fact the primary object of his trip, to test a new under carriage of his own invention. His plane is fitted with a swinging undercarriage and folding wings, enabling the machine to be hoisted in a garage and mounted in a very handy way on a truck. That a substitutive plane of this description will prove capable of flying at a high rate of speed and the Hinkler without mishap and in record time, say we would not another of the aerial ambitions of the twentieth century.

40-Mile speed even when NEW —

THE most advanced engineering of 1928 is combined with Studebaker's 76 years of traditional quality in the new Dictator.

The Dictator's speed of 65 miles per hour is a revelation in smooth, effortless travel. Proved champion of its class by maintaining better than mile-a-minute speed for 24 consecutive hours—a record unequalled by any stock car in its price class.

Studebaker One-Profit manufacturing facilities have made this car an exceptional value at $1555. Drive it and you will be convinced!

VALUES IN FOUR PRICE FIELDS

President Eight, $2620 to $3235; The Commander, $1955 to $2215; The Dictator, $1555 to $1685; The Erskine Six, $995 to $1205. All prices f. o. b. Walkerville, Ont. Government taxes to be added.
