AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY SECURES ADDITIONAL GRANT

It is with pleasing interest that our readers will learn of the substantially increased grant that has been awarded to the Agricultural Society by the Agricultural Department at Quebec. For a long time other Fairs in this Province have been enjoying the privilege of considerable grants, but Argenteuil has had to content itself in the past with a very meagre sum.

It will be remembered that last year, on invitation of Mr. J. T. Ayers, as President of the Society, the Hon. J. L. Perron, Minister of Roads, was one of our distinguished visitors at the Exhibition, and he evinced keen surprise and genuine pleasure, not alone at the splendid display of livestock, but at the general design and lay-out of our extensive grounds and buildings with the enlarged grandstand and picturesque setting. It is through the influence and interest of the Hon. Mr. Perron and the efforts of our local representative Mr. Geo. Danesereau that this additional grant has been secured and the public will duly appreciate this service. It means much to the future success of the Lachute Fair which is yearly growing in popular favor and is destined to be the banner exhibition held in the Province.

Possibly the most pleasing feature of this increased grant lies in the fact that on his visit last year Mr. Perron was surprised to learn upon enquiry that the Society was only receiving a very small amount annually from the Provincial Government. And with his whole-hearted generosity he assures us, at that time, he would see to it that such a splendid organization would receive in the future a grant from the Provincial Government commensurate with the importance of Lachute Fair. Mr. Perron can rest assured that the officers and members of the Agricultural Society as well as the entire community will not readily forget his timely assistance and it surely does give encouragement to know that we have Statesmen whose word is as good as their bond. The people of this county will also be glad to learn that the Hon. Mr. Perron has recently become an elector in this county by acquiring a beautiful lake property a little north of Lachute. We can assure the Minister of Roads that he will always be heartily welcome in our midst and it is to be greatly desired, in the interests of the Province of Quebec, that the guiding hand of this energetic member of the Cabinet will for many years to come be spared to administer the Provincial affairs and carry on the progressive standard of activities that have distinguished Mr. Perron's career as a member of the Government.

Conditions at Noranda Look Very Promising to Mr. Moore

Noranda Mines Limited

Noranda Mines Limited is making steady progress in the direction of large scale production. During the time since the smelter came into operation the mine has been able to keep up with the demand for smelter feed in spite of the limited existing capacity of No. 3 shaft. When the writer made an inspection of Noranda on March 1st, excellent speed was being attained in hoisting ore. The last day of February showed a record of 1,595 tons of ore hoisted in addition to waste rock. The smelter's requirements amount to approximately 1,100 tons daily. It is therefore possible to do a considerable amount of development work through No. 3 shaft and continue to hoist enough ore in six working days to keep the smelter going for the entire week.

No. 4 shaft was at a depth of about 550 feet at the beginning of this month. It will be equipped with a new hoist, which was then on route from the Atlantic seaboard within the next few days. The shaft sinking work is ahead of schedule. The 1,000-foot level will be reached and stations cut at hundred foot intervals by September. A long crosscut is being driven from No. 3 to No. 4 shaft. In all probability the crosscut will reach its objective and the station cut before the shaft is finished. However, a decision may be made to continue the shaft to a depth of 1,500 feet. No. 4 shaft will have a much greater hoisting capacity than No. 3. It will be no great task to handle 3,000 tons of ore daily from the two shafts and to conduct an intensive campaign of mining development. No. 4 shaft is several hundred feet away from any known ore, but the same was said concerning No. 3 shaft when it was at the corresponding depth.

There is fairly definite assurance concerning the extension of important ore of average mine grade, to a depth of 1,500 feet. The unknown factor is the extent and importance of ore occurrences below the 1,500 foot. In a general way diamond drilling results below the 975-foot, which were conducted at one hundred foot intervals along the 440-foot drift in "H" orebody yielded gratifying results. The copper content may be expected to vary at different horizons. Generally speaking, however, the drilling downward from the 500 foot, as well as from the 975 foot level, indicate bigger things for Noranda than are appreciated by the general public.

It is not looking too far ahead now to visualize Noranda's production running from 2200 to 2500 tons daily, with two reverberatory furnaces and three converters. Such a production is quite definitely assured. There is no justification at present in looking beyond that point, but it may be remembered that Noranda's development has been crowded with pleasant surprises, which have far outnumbered the disappointments. The development work of the next eighteen months should tell the major part of the story.

When No. 1 reverberatory furnace was closed down for repairs a few weeks ago the performance of No. 2 furnace was rather disappointing. A few adjustments corrected its shortcomings and everything is now running smoothly. The smelter has reached a state of high efficiency. The refining of No. 1 furnace is proceeding and provision has been made for the erection of a third converter, which will provide enough capacity to take care of the output of both reverberatory units. In other words each reverberatory furnace is capable of handling approximately 1100 to 1300 tons of ore daily without being crowded unduly. Three converters working to capacity can handle the entire output.

Obviously much importance is attached to the refinery plans of Noranda Mines Limited. It is still too early to make detailed announcements of policy in this connection. It may be stated however that Noranda's control and its association with British Metals Corporation and Nichols Copper Company gives assurance of the success of the enterprise. British Metals is without rival in the British Empire, as a marketer of copper and its ores. Nichols Copper Company of New York is one of the most important organizations of its kind in the United States, with abundant technical skill at its command, and a world-wide mining connection. The location of the Noranda refinery at tidewater on the Lower St. Lawrence will place it in a position to handle export business.

The Noranda picture is beginning to be filled out, and the next two years will accomplish much in this regard. We recommend the stock as an outstanding purchase for substantial enhancement, pointing to its probable earnings as justification for much higher prices for the shares than have yet been attained.

reason for believing that the attempt to secure further ore will be quite as earnest as in the summer of 1927 when discoveries followed each other with remarkable rapidity. There is a great deal of new ground to be explored which holds quite as attractive possibilities as the section of No. 4 area which brought in additional ore over a year and a half ago. The year 1928 was really an "off" year so far as significant developments are concerned, although it was by no means negative in its consequences. An effort will be made over the next six months to double the present reserves of around $10,000,000. It is quite within the range of possibility that this will be done. The property may not be very far from the production stage, particularly if coming developments meet the hopes of the management.

The refinery plans which have been advanced, but which are not yet known in detail, may be of much importance to Amulet, especially if it seems likely an electrolytic zinc plant is erected. This would provide a splendid outlet for Amulet's concentrates. The Sterling mine in Cape Breton promises to be an important source of zinc and it should be remembered that this is under the control of British Metals Corporation which is associated with Noranda, and Nichols Copper Company in one of their refinery projects. It should not be overlooked that Amulet possesses a great deal of ground in which ore-making possibilities are attractive. The stock may be considered as fairly attractive at around the current price of $2.30 for a hold of possibly six months.

Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting
Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company directors did not give a great deal of new information to shareholders at the annual meeting held in Woodstock on March 5th. The announcements they did make were decidedly reassuring. The ore reserves were placed conservatively at eighteen million tons. It is thought this could have been increased considerably without undue risk. Profits are estimated to run at around $3.50 per ton without allowing for depreciation and depletion. With a production of three thousand tons a day it is comparatively easy to figure out probable earnings per share per annum on the capitalization of 2,500,000 shares all of which are issued. It is estimated that the profits of the first six years' operations will be sufficient to meet the entire capital outlay. The mine has a long life ahead of it, without counting upon the undoubted additions to ore reserves that will be made as development proceeds.

The power development at Island Falls, Saskatchewan is proceeding. It will provide about 44,000 h.p. and power will be delivered about the end of this year. A temporary plant will deliver two thousand h.p. at the mine within the next few weeks and this will be dismantled when the main construction is finished. The company has current assets of $12,923,103, consisting of conservative investment securities and cash.

The ore content is estimated at 1.71 per cent. copper, 3.45 per cent. zinc, .074 oz. gold and 1.06 oz. silver. Satisfactory arrangements with the C.N.R. have been reached concerning freight rates to apply as soon as the railway is turned over by the construction company. The Whitney and Newmont interests make an exceptionally strong combination. The company is assured of substantial profits and the purchase of its shares at around current prices is considered attractive for a hold of one to two years.

What is a Scot? Still a Puzzle?

British War Office's Unofficial Definition Leaves Old Question Unanswered, for Scotland Changes and Its People Are Scattered Far

London.—The old question, What is a Scotsman? boils up again in a recent War Office decision that recruits for the Scots Guards must in future be Scotsmen. To hopeful reporters hastening in search of an answer to one of the oldest and most difficult of questions, it has been revealed that the War Office has no official idea of what constitutes a Scotsman, but unofficially it holds that a Scotsman is either (a) a man born in Scotland or (b) the son of a Scotsman.

The difficulties with the War Office's formula are obvious. Under it, the Murphys of Glasgow and the Muirvanes of Dundee become Scotsmen despite the fact that they are never seen inside the "bonnie U. P. kirks." Also, the Highland clansmen who have hung their claymores for generations in Hampstead, Wimbledon, Ealing and the other suburbs of London, are denationalized despite the fact that they have made the English New Year's Eve a festival of pipers, haggis, Auld Lang Syne and a' that. Credit is due to the War Office, however, for attempting an answer to one of the most unanswerable of current ethnic questions. The Scotsman wears none of the easier tags of nationality. He carries no Scottish passport to identify himself. Legally, in fact, his nationality does not exist. The Stone of Destiny is in Westminster Abbey.

ENGLISH OF THE SCOTS

Nor, in ordinary usage, does the Scotsman employ a Scottish language to identify himself to foreigners. He talks the purest English, or, alternatively, if his palms are calloused with toil and his tongue with the Lowland burr, he is as likely to come from the English as from the Scottish side of the border. It is true that if he comes from above a line drawn roughly from the Firth of Clyde on the west coast of Balmoral Castle and thence north to the Moray Firth on the east coast, he may be bilingual and speak Gaelic at his own hearthside. There are still about 150,000 bilingual Scotsmen in the Highlands, but Scottish Gaelic is never as evident to the casual foreigner as the Gaelic of Ireland. In all ordinary usage, the Highland Scotsman talks the King's English and so do at least the upper and middle classes in the Lowlands. The Lowland peasantry can usually manage the King's English if it wants to, but left to itself it talks a modern dialect of the old Anglican English of Northumbria, the border burr that made Sir Harry Lauder famous.

In dress, also, the Scotsman tends to be shy in the presence of foreigners. The visitor who expects to find kilts in Princess Street and the tartan trews in Sauchiehall Street is doomed to disappointment. The humbler tweeds are used the world over, but, so far as the average foreigner is concerned, tartan plaids are seen mostly in the shop windows. Scotland, it appears, is neither a continual Highland game, a continual clan gathering, a continual Mod of a Communion Gaidhealach, nor has it been, at least since 1145. Even bagpipes in the Trussachs seem to have some mysterious connection with the charabancs of tourists.

In religion, that other great cement of nationality, the Scotsman is supposed to be more easily recognizable. Time was when he was a man of famous bonhomie, but then the race was trained to spend its Sundays in the four determined decency of an unrelenting meditation on eternal flames. Such at least is the current supposition, and the devastating solemnity of a Glasgow Sunday does much to buttress it. But it should perhaps be added that the rule seems to have its exception. For the writer never happens to have met a Scotsman who could possibly be described as dour or was in the least reluctant to bang saxophones.

The fact is that, aside from porridge, baps, shortbread and "Scotch" mist (the last is an English expression which means steady rain), the essential characteristics of Scotland are elusive. Scotsmen are difficult to contain within the limits of a handy and sufficient definition. Yet, despite his lack of the more obvious tags of nationality no Scotsman ever describes himself as an Englishman. It may be difficult to define his Scottishness, but there is never an instant's doubt that it exists and flourishes. In Scotland itself there are little ways and habits which sometimes betray it. If you stand at the top of the Waverley steps in Edinburgh, you can usually pick out the natives because, even on a calm day, they instinctively grab their hats as they pass what is at times the windiest corner in Europe. As far as it goes, this is not a bad test of a Scotsman. Its only trouble is that it does not go far enough. Not all the Scotsmen in the world pass the Waverley Steps every day, and it is the first essential of a definition that it shall work every day and everywhere.

SCOT SWORSDMEN ABROAD

In fact, it is the Scottish dispersion which makes an adequate definition of the Scotsman so hopeless to attempt. The Scots Guards, as "Les Gendarmes Ecosais" and "La Compagnie Ecosaise de la Garde du Corps du Roi," once wrote in France some of the most vivid chapters in the history of the Scot abroad. From the time of the English conquest, when Scottish noblemen began selling their swords abroad, down to the steady stream of present-day emigration, Scotland has "bled seaward." The Scottish dispersion has strewn this shy race throughout the world. The Scandinavian countries know it well. There is not a city on the Baltic without its old Scottish families. There is certainly no American city without its transplanted Scots. There is hardly a port on all the seas, hardly an inhabited island in the midst of the seas, without its Scot or Scots.

How is this world-wide race to be defined? Perhaps some Scotsman will tell us. All that can be said here is that the War Office's unofficial definition is inadequate. Not all Scotsmen are born in Scotland, and to describe them as the sons of Scotsmen is merely to evade the difficulty. If a Scotsman is defined as the son of a Scotsman, the question still remains: What is a Scotsman? And if a Scotsman is defined as either a man born in Scotland, or the son of a man born in Scotland, the only possible comment is that such a definition would close the Scots Guards to bonny Prince Charlie himself, the most famous Scotsman who ever went over the water.

comment, to which the poet replied, "Do you know, if it was not suicide, I'd like to murder the man who wrote that."

ABOUT YOUR NERVES

Headaches and Other Troubles Follow When the Nerves Give Way

Nerves are delicate fibres running from the brain to all parts of the body. Some of them give us the sense of touch and feeling; others convey the will to our muscles and enable us to move. When we have an "attack of nerves" it means that the body is in some way out of order and the nerves have become over-sensitive, so that we get neuralgia, nervous headache, sciatica, or some other nerve trouble. Sometimes the nerves get too weak to do the will of the brain, and we get trembling hands or limbs, or perhaps St. Vitus dance. The whole nervous system is fed and kept healthy by your blood. If that is thin and poor, nervous weakness follows. In that case a tonic is needed to build up the blood, so that it may in turn feed the nerves, spine and brain. The very best medicine for enriching the blood is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. You cannot take them without feeling the uplift they give. Your appetite improves, your brain is clearer, you gain strength in every way, and you feel full of new life. One sufferer, Miss Margaret R. MacDonald, Catalone Road, N.S., tells what this medicine did for her. She says:—"I suffered for a long time from severe headache and nervous exhaustion. I tried several kinds of medicine but got no relief until I used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and these, before long, gave me complete relief. From my own experience I feel that I can not praise Dr. Williams' Pink Pills too highly, and would advise anyone who is suffering from headaches or nervous exhaustion to give them a fair trial, as I feel sure the results cannot be anything but satisfactory."

Billion Dollars Sold For $100,000

World's Richest 40-Acre Patch is the Mond Extension—Average Grade 7 1/2%

About 25 years ago the Mond-Flood Extension claim, 40 acres, could have been bought for $25,000. It was offered at that.

Mand Nickel Company bought it before the war for $100,000.

It is estimated now that this property contains over $1,000,000,000 worth of ore, averaging $40 or $50 per ton. Extremely high grade enrichments around the 3,000 horizon bring the average of all the known ore to a grade of 7 1/2 per cent. combined copper and nickel, copper predominating.

The story of this claim's wealth is not half way unfolded. It is expected that it will contain almost a solid sheet of ore, in places up to 200 feet in thickness, dipping right across the claim.

There seems every reason to believe that this 40 acres is the world's richest patch.

And it was bought for $100,000 sixteen or seventeen years ago.

St. Lawrence Murk

Winusor Border Cities Star (Lib.): Friends of St. Lawrence development are naturally disappointed by the virtual impasse that now obtains. They are hopeful, however, that out of all the maze of doubt, uncertainty, suspicion and petty politics that exists at present, order will finally come and the great improvement will go forward. Its eventual consummation is certain, of course. The only question is to the length of the delay. All that it requires is official leadership and so far this has not been forthcoming. The St. Lawrence infant is sitting on the doorstep at Ottawa, but both Mr. King and Mr. Bennett hesitate to take it in.

Indian Wedding

The ancient marriage rites of the Stoney People were exemplified when Chief Bear Paw and his minor chiefs united Miss Sylvia Hanishten-Cate of Hilversum, Holland, to Mr. Louis Lantzus of Vancouver. Immediately after the picturesque Indian ceremony which took place on the Bow River at Banff, the couple were again married according to the rites of their own church. Bear Paw is seen placing the eagle feathers, emblem of faithfulness, on the groom's head and bracelet on the wrist of the bride.

TESTING 'EM OUT

The boss called in his secretary. "Put up a sign outside the office," he said, "that no salesmen are allowed to enter."

"But you just advertised for a salesman."

"That's just the reason. If a man can be stopped by a little sign like that, we don't want him."

The church that advertises "No Collection Taken" probably has its idea of what's keepin' folks away.

There's nothing like forestalling trouble. Here is some diplomacy in a nutshell, and it works two ways—on employer and wife alike.

Employer—"Ah, Brown, I've decided to raise your salary $2 a week." Brown—"Will you give me that in writing, sir?"

Employer—"Isn't my word good enough for you?"

Brown—"Oh, yes, sir. But I want evidence to show my wife. She's expecting me to get a $5 raise."

You can't keep the upper hand by dealing from the bottom.

Patient (showing bill)—"What's the extra $5 for?"

Dentist—"For squeezing the arms of my chair out of shape."

"Well, Tommy, did you behave in school to-day?" asked Tommy's father of his young son, who had not been going to school very long.

"Behave?" exclaimed Tommy in a tone of amazement. "Of course I did! Why, the teacher said she never saw a pupil who behaved so."

He—"Well—if you'll let me have enough companions."

"I've swallowed my collar button!" gasped the grocer. "Well," responded the wife, "you know where it is for once!"

BABY'S OWN TABLETS WIN GREAT PRAISE

Many Mothers Always Keep Them in the House.

Thousands of mothers state that they know of no other medicine for little ones to equal Baby's Own Tablets—that they always keep the Tablets in the home as a preventive of childhood ailments, or if sickness does suddenly grip their little ones they feel safe with such a remedy at hand.

Concerning the use of the Tablets Mrs. Donat Plouffe, Lingwick, Que., writes:—"I have nothing but praise for Baby's Own Tablets. They are the only medicine I have ever given my two little ones and I am glad to state that the Tablets have always kept them in perfect health. I feel so safe with the Tablets that I always keep a box in the house."

Baby's Own Tablets are a mild but thoroughly laxative. They regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach and thus banish constipation and indigestion; break up colds and simple fever and make the cutting of teeth painless. The Tablets are absolutely safe, being guaranteed free from all injurious drugs. They are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Liquor Smuggling

Hamilton Spectator (Ind. Cons.): (The Government is urged to refuse clearances to "vessels or vehicles of all kinds carrying a cargo of liquor to the United States contrary to the laws of that country.") It is not a matter of assisting our neighbors to enforce their laws within their own territories. All that Canada is concerned in is that the lawbreakers shall not be permitted to establish bases in this Dominion for the conduct of their shameful business. That such a condition of things should be tolerated is obviously injurious to public morals. Smuggling is smuggling, however else it may be named, and all who help to make it possible are culpable. . . . The whole business fills one with shame and disgust.

Canada, Too, Has a Weapon

Canadian statesmen are noting with ill-concealed anxiety the tendency of the American Congress, if it yields to one-tenth of the demands being made upon it for higher duties, to exclude by prohibitive tariff rates practically all food and raw products of Dominion origin. As a government, Canada is in no position to protest against the imposition of duties especially designed to bar her products, but her farmers are under no such diplomatic restraint, and it is not surprising that, as reported by the New York World, and repeated in our own columns recently, plans are in the making the other side of the line to retaliate in kind. The Canadian administrative system is very flexible, and where in the United States the authorities must await a general tariff revision or a long and tiresome investigation by the tariff commission before any actual changes in the rates can be made, Canada possesses machinery of very swift effectiveness.

Canadian farmers are represented as very much surprised to find American agriculturists in the West hand in glove with the industrialists of the East, instead of stoutly opposing them, as is the Canadian habit. However, this is no new development. A large part of the stock in trade of Western politicians is their abhorrence of the manufacturing East, but when it comes to writing tariff rates, the two Editorial from The Boston Transcript, wings find that neither can get along without the other; that if the rates on raw wool are to be high, those on wools must go up correspondingly, or nothing happens. Now, however, the Western agricultural demand for prohibitive rates all along the line, and should these carry, as they may not, we might find ourselves engaged in a tariff war with Canada to which all its predecessors would seem mere skirmishes.

Nor would the fighting be confined to the rates. Already Canada has flatly turned down the American request for closer co-operation in the enforcement of the prohibition laws, and it is more than hinted, as first suggested by Premier Mackenzie King, that Canada's point of view as to the proposed St. Lawrence canal may be appreciably affected by the prospective increases in the duties on farm products. The threat now comes from Canada that if the new tariff law bear too onerously upon her products, her provincial government, without awaiting parliamentary action, may exclude American fruits and other commodities by a system of inspections which would operate as fatally as a tariff barrier. In fact, it is being said openly in British Columbia that if we place a duty on Canadian lumber, the markets of that country will be virtually closed against the fruits and vegetables of our north-western states.

Here again would the vicious circle continue, for Section 317 of the Administrative Provisions of the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act introduces a new principle, in authorizing the president to liberalize by a 50 per cent. increase in duty, and even to exclude the products of any country which discriminates against American exports. In fact, the possibilities of unfriendly relations with Canada over a too rigid legislative policy on our part would seem to be excellent. This in itself would not deter the American Congress from enacting any tariff bill it might please to write. It might, however, suggest to the tariff-makers at Washington that they have some other considerations to ponder besides the blanket requests for rate increases with which they are being flooded just now; among them, those of the American consumer. New England is vitally interested in as liberal an exchange of American and Canadian products as may be consistent with the revenue necessities of both countries.

Canadian Honey

Sherbrooke Tribune (Lib.): A dispatch from London informs us that England has just sent Canada an order for honey to the value of $50,000. . . . The fact that Great Britain is placing with us so large an order proves that Canadian honey is highly thought of in the European market and that our bee-keepers can easily dispose of their production, so long as it is of first rate quality and well put up for the consumer. . . . Our farmers have, in bee-keeping, an agreeable and profitable side industry. They should devote to it a part of their leisure time left to them after the cultivation of the soil and the care of their cattle.

PARENTS UNDERSTOOD THIS BABY'S LANGUAGE

"We thought we were going to lose our baby, teething," says a Kentucky mother. "He couldn't digest anything and was getting thinner every day. After one of his fretful, crying nights, I thought of Castoria and got some. A few drops made him comfortable, and after a few doses, he seemed like a different baby." Doctors everywhere recommend purely vegetable, harmless Fletcher's Castoria for colds, constipation, colic and other ills of babies and children, and millions of mothers know its gentle influence is best. Avoid imitations. The Fletcher signature is the mark of genuine Castoria.

The slides are loaned without rental charge to agricultural and horticultural organizations, schools, churches, women's institutes, etc., and are obtainable upon application to the Division of Extension and Publicity, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa.

Settlement of the North

Winusor Border Cities Star (Lib.): Not so many years ago there were people who laughed to scorn the idea that the Canadian prairies would ever be of national value. The answer to that doubt has already been given. Canada is the greatest wheat exporting nation in the world today. The grain is grown on those once-despised prairies of the West. The Peace River is a country, that is considered remote by many. But both the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways are planning to bring adequate transportation to the district. Fertile lands and good railways mean wondrous developments. The people are all that is lacking to make the Peace River of as great significance as the other areas of the West. With their arrival big things lie ahead for Canada.

By-Products

Vancouver Province (Ind. Cons.): The country which skins the cream off its natural resources and expects to keep on doing that indefinitely will, of course, have no interest in by-products. But the country which pursues a course so blindly fatuous will, in time, have no interest in anything, for it will presently be bankrupt, if not quite dead.

Beware! Flu May Affect Kidneys!

How often people say, "I never had kidney trouble 'til after the flu!" Wise nature, trying to get rid of poisons, sends them to kidneys and liver. But these organs, weakened by illness, can't stand the strain. The poisons are retained in the system. Then come the pains, aches, swellings, loss of appetite, dizziness, lassitude. What a pity, when a stimulant, diuretic, taken at once, might have helped.

For over 50 years thousands have depended on Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Remedy, a physician's prescription, made of nature's herbs. A gentle stimulant for kidneys and liver, it urges perspiratory glands to action, and thus helps shift the excess load from the kidneys.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Remedy contains no harmful drugs. Costs little. Thousands have written, telling how it helped them. Get your bottle today. Warner's Safe Remedies Co., Toronto, Ontario.

HOTEL AND RESORT OFFICIALS PLAN INCREASED TOURIST TRAFFIC

A representative meeting of hotel and resort managers and owners in the Laurentian Mountains was held during which a new organization was launched, to be known as the Laurentian Resorts and Development Association.

The objects of the newly-formed body include making more widely known the scenic and recreational advantages of the famous Laurentian Mountains; developing winter sports on a more elaborate scale, promoting an increased tourist traffic; more extensive listing and advertising of the Laurentian resorts; the making known of the hunting and fishing privileges; the provision of a central information office, and the general maintenance of an organization which will have for its aim the greater development of the Laurentians for the mutual welfare of resort operators and sections.

UNBEATEN BRITAIN

Vancouver Sun: During the last couple of years there has grown up in Canada a new attitude toward England; a feeling that the British lion has seen his best day and is now well started on a decline that eventually will bring him down from his high place. . . . Yet, before the wreaths are brought out for the dying lion, it might be well to consider one or two facts. In the first place, England has gone through precisely the same sort of thing before and survived it beautifully. Following the Napoleonic wars, England sank into a pit of depression that seemed bottomless. The nation had fought the French for years, at a terrible expense. It had won, just as it won over Germany; but the effort left it little better off than its beaten foe. During the period just after 1915 there were excellent grounds for suspecting that England would never regain her former place. But England did. . . . Don't shed too many tears over the decline of the British nation. The patient is a long, long way from being dead.

REMINISCENT

One of our readers hands us a letter which, although its message is inappropriate at this late season, the general sentiment is quite in keeping with the times. With our friend's permission, we reproduce this letter for the benefit of such folks as may bemoan our present speed of living.

Dear Friend,—
Thirty years ago—You Remember when eggs were 3 dozen for 25cts.; Butter 10 cents per pound; Milk 5 cents a quart; the butcher gave away liver, and treated the kids to Bologna the hired girl received two bucks a week, and did the family washing; women did not powder and paint in public, smoke, vote play poker, drink or shake the shimmy.

Men wore whiskers and boots, chewed tobacco, spit on the sidewalk and cursed; beer was 5 cents and the lunch was free; laborers worked ten hours and never went on a strike. No tips were given to waiters, and the hat check grater was unknown. A Kerosene lamp and stereoscope. No one was ever operated on for appendicitis or bought monkey glands. Microbes were unheard of; folks lived to a good old age and every year walked miles to wish their friends a Merry Christmas.

To-day — You Know

These are the days of Suffragettes, excess taxes, profiteering and prohibition, and so—if you think life is worth living I wish you, a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

THE LATE MRS. ROBT. BOYD.

On Saturday, March 30th., 1929, there passed away at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. Frank Cowan, another of the county's oldest residents in the person of Mrs. Robert Boyd, of Louisa.

Mrs. Boyd has been in failing health for some time, but had spent the past three months with her daughter.

The funeral was held on Monday after, at St. Simeon's Church, Lachute, service being conducted by the Rev. J. A. Lackey. The remains were placed in the vault. Interment will take place later at Louisa Cemetery.

The pall-bearers were Messrs. W. Scott, David and Daniel Brown and Wm. Boyd, nephews; John Boyd, grandson and Reuben Noble. The floral tributes included sprays from Mr. Henry Sutton and daughters, Mr. and Mrs. Robt. MacKenzie and family, and a pillow from her family.

TOWN COUNCIL

The regular meeting of above Council was held on Wednesday evening, April 4th., Mayor C. Tremblay presiding. There were also present Aldermen G. Lacasse, P. Dobbie, A. Elliott, C. Miller, J. Speight, J. B. Raymond, H. Coutu, H. M. Lavigne and Dr. Rodrigue.

Minutes of last meeting were read and approved as also was the report of the Finance Committee.

The Parking By-law came in for pretty heated discussion in which Dr. Rodrigue thought it should be left as it was and that no parking should be allowed on Bethany as it was altogether too narrow around the station and the Main. Aldermen Dobbie and Elliott maintained that it was unfair for the merchants on that thoroughfare to be penalized and the motion being put the by-law passed its first reading, with added amendments.

The early closing by-law then came under fire. Alderman Lavigne contended for majority rule and urged for the continuance and strict observance of the early closing by-law now in effect. Alderman Raymond presented his amendment that as the bone of contention was that some of our small groceries, operating under the guise of restaurant, were accused of selling after closing hours, and in order to effect a remedy for this evil the amount of 50 per cent of the fine imposed would be granted to any informant of those who were contravening the by-law. This was carried on vote of 5 to 4.

Daylight Saving time will become effective on April 28th. to September 29th. This was moved by Alderman H. M. Lavigne, seconded by Alderman A. Coutu.

Recommendations for the keeping of pool rooms and bowling alley were extended to four applicants on motion of Alderman P. Dobbie, seconded by Alderman A. Elliott, providing they closed at 11 o'clock every night and all day Sunday.

Permits were granted to Mrs. Fasio for construction of a new theatre and also to Mr. Laurin for the erection of a new business and residential block on Main and Water Street, providing the building is in line with other buildings on said street. The road committee comprising Aldermen Dobbie, Raymond and Elliott were appointed to confer as to the lines drawn.

Alderman Lavigne brought up the matter of numbering the houses on our streets, but as the hour was late the question was held over until next meeting for further discussion.

The Council then adjourned until next Thursday, April 11th.

Do you know why McLAUGHLIN- BUICK rides so much more comfortably than other cars?

Here are three important reasons

McLAUGHLIN-BUICK'S famous cantilever springs—the most expensive type of springs employed on any car in the world, coupled with the famous McLaughlin-Buick torque tube drive—are designed solely for comfort, not for transmission of power, and provide the maximum degree of riding restfulness.

McLaughlin-Buick's Lovejoy hydraulic shock absorbers . . . front and rear . . . absorb the jars and jolts of the roughest roads, thus adding still further to the buoyancy of McLaughlin-Buick travel.

And McLaughlin-Buick's deep, soft seat-cushions, together with the lounging spaciousness of McLaughlin-Buick interiors, provide unequalled riding luxury for every passenger.

McLaughlin-Buick offers the highest standard of motoring comfort ever attained; and this is one vital reason why more motorists drive McLaughlin-Buicks than any other fine car.

Fresh Water Tiger

35 pound musky captured by G. Clark of Toronto after an hour's fight with a light rod and nine pound test line

Fishermen differ as to the fighting merits of the various species of the finny tribe to be found in North American waters. Some claim that inch for inch and pound for pound, the small mouth black bass is the gamiest fish that swims; others are equally enthusiastic in praise of the speckled brook trout; while still another fraternity claim that the salmon puts up as noble a battle for liberty as any game fish extant. All are agreed, however, that the muskellunge, sometimes called the "fresh water tiger" is one of the greatest fighters known to anglers, and that he will put up a battle royal when attached to the business end of a rod.

One of the productive muskellunge streams in North America is French River, in Ontario, Canada, which connects Lake Nipissing on the East with Georgian Bay on the West. This tangle of waterways is not only the haunt of the fighting muskellunge but it yields small and large mouth black bass, great northern pike of enormous size and pickerel in abundance, as well as pan fish. Not long ago a prominent New York business man landed a 55 pound "muskie" after a battle which will probably satisfy his quest for a thrill for the rest of his life.

French River is two hundred miles north of Toronto on the Sudbury Line. The French River Bungalow Camp, a series of comfortable accommodations for the angler and his family. Jack Strathdee, manager of this angler's retreat, is a genial host who is glad to give the uninitiated fisherman a few tips on how to lure the wily "muskie." French River Bungalow Camp has as its adjunct Pine Rapids Camp, some 20 miles up the river, and located just at the spot where the "whoppers" are likely to lurk.

REAL SERVICE

Away up in the Quebec mining district, 350 miles north of St. Felicien, the manager of a new mine discovered to his horror that he had a fine camp but no cook stove to feed his hungry new crew of miners. An urgent telephone call was put through to General Steel Wares Limited in Montreal, and a sturdy "Algonquin" Camp Cook Stove was promptly packed and rushed to the C. N. R. Express which left Montreal at 6.15 p.m. on March 22nd.

The Express roared into St. Felicien at 7.30 the next morning and the big 745 pound range in its crate was swiftly transferred to a seaplane that lay waiting for its precious cargo.

Two hours later the seaplane with the much expected range landed on a lake near the mine, 350 miles north of St. Felicien. It was promptly unloaded from the plane, set up in the cook-house, and the hungry mining crew had their noonday meal cooked on this range! Eighteen hours from busy Montreal to the remotest part of the Quebec Hinterland!

This is perhaps one of the most remarkable deliveries in the history of aviation and has caused a great deal of interesting speculation throughout the great North country, as to what next the aeroplane will do.

The Red Cross and the Home

In Past Five Years Science of Home Nursing Has Been Taught by Red Cross to Over Fifteen Thousand Canadian Women

By ANNA ANDERSON PERRY

"Just what we would have done in our village this year when the 'flu' prostrated half our citizens, if a number of us had not taken the Red Cross instruction in home nursing, I do not know," said a young married woman from a northern Ontario town recently in writing to a friend. "The doctor was run almost off his feet trying to cover the big district in which he was the only medical man, trained nurses were scarce as they always are in the really rural parts, and some of the folks were very ill indeed with a bad type of influenza. But about twenty of us, of all ages, last year, had taken this useful training and I tell you we had reason to be thankful for our knowledge, this winter. I think that besides being able to help the sick we were even more helpful in advising against getting up too soon. For we all noticed that those who did suffer from relapse or some other serious sequel, and we knew from our instructions that any bad infection with high fever was very weakening to the patient. I think I was able to save my family from dangers I would not even have understood last year, an ail the other women have had the same experience.

Even so does the science of preventive medicine make progress when a major epidemic of influenza has been raging for months in all parts of the country. For while it is admitted that neither medical or nursing science has yet been able to forestall or prevent the spread of influenza, yet is there no disease in which intelligent nursing plays a greater part in ensuring complete recovery or in lightening attacks, which, without it, often prove fatal.

Figures Interesting

Hence the figures and facts just issued by the Canadian Red Cross dealing with their country-wide Home Nursing classes have particular interest. They show that in the past five years in nearly a thousand groups Red Cross instructors or nurses and medical men who have generously co-operated with them, have given Home Nursing training to 15,583 women and girls, a many parts of the Dominion; that the demand for such training is everywhere far greater than can be met, and that home-makers and especially the young girls and young mothers are exhibiting an eagerness for this knowledge which demonstrates to all who read and hear that they realize the lamentable lack of instruction along these lines in all our educational systems for girls in Canada. "I used to think," said one young lass in a group of office girls taking the Home Nursing course in a big city, "that nobody needed any special preparation to marry, take charge of a home and raise a family. But I begin to see, since taking this course that these are pretty hefty jobs and that I'm going to need all the brains I've got and all the specialized knowledge I can acquire if I do decide to marry John and become a competent wife."

Subjects Taught

A glance at the subjects taught in the Home Nursing course reveals why students soon begin to take this point of view as to the need of very special training for their highly specialized tasks as wives and mothers. The twelve lectures and demonstrations deal with personal and home hygiene; the bedroom in health and sickness; signs of illness; care, feeding and treatment of the sick; communicable diseases; emergency and slight ailments; maternity and infant care; feeding the infant or child; and food needs of the adult.

Scope of Work

A course so obviously helpful to women of all classes everywhere that it is scarcely surprising to learn that the hundreds of groups already instructed have been drawn from many departments of life, including private homes in town or country, stores, factories, settlements, institutions for unfortunate or delinquent girls, offices, clubs, hostels for newly arrived girls, colleges, Home and School or Professional and Business Women's Associations, the Y.W.C.A.'s, the Canadian girls in training and day nurseries. In order to provide this service with all the necessary organizations the Red Cross for the past five years has had provincial organizers at work in most of the nine provinces, expert women who, through devoted and highly efficient efforts have performed great tasks. Just what such service has meant in time, toll and sacrifice may be gathered from the individual reports of organizers, both west and east.

In Eastern Provinces

Down in New Brunswick, in a recent year, Miss Sibella Barrington organized no less than 77 home nursing groups with a total of 1,200 women who completed the course. In the carrying out of this remarkable accomplishment Miss Barrington travelled 5,500 miles, 1,100 of which lay over country roads and on these arduous journeys she addressed 99 audiences. As a result of this energetic campaign Home Nursing instruction under Red Cross workers reached in that year every county in New Brunswick. Further extension of the work waits only on the requisite funds and the necessary expert volunteer workers.

Hardships in West

In the prairie provinces, where distances are great and climatic conditions often severe, the adventures of Home Nursing organizers are such as bring out the same heroic qualities displayed by the nurses in the Outpost Hospitals as may be gathered from the report of Miss Taylor of Alberta. "The work is hard," she says, "but I have never enjoyed more satisfying labor in my life," and then states that last year in the month of April she had visited fourteen localities, "in the most terrible weather, for part of the time, with dust, snow and windstorm: taking turns, and with roads almost impassable for man, beast or motor. We have been stuck several times in the snow, have been lost on the roads and unable to reach our classes promptly, and through accidents to our buggy had to walk some miles in drifted snow on one occasion, leading the horse and carrying our precious books, but we usually get there and find the eager women and girls, one hundred per cent. strong, waiting for our instruction." Miss Taylor also records that in the absence of a medical man in her district, the secretary of the municipality frequently asked her to visit this or that sick old lady, to "take a look" at some cases of measles or mumps, or to try to relieve the sufferings of patients with asthma or other chronic disease, "so you see, there is never a time when I have not plenty to do," concluded her report. In that year Miss Taylor organized forty-three Home Nursing groups and nearly five hundred women were instructed, but here, too, more funds and more helpers are needed in order to meet the demand for knowledge which makes so much safer the lives of those who pioneer in our Canadian hinterlands.

Classes in Cities

But even in the cities, Home Nursing organizers find the same "plenty to do." In the city of Toronto, which has carried through a much larger program of Red Cross work along this line than any other centre, Miss Goodman, the organizer, reports that in the past four years 246 groups have been handled by her or her assistants, with a total of 4,210 girls and women taking the course. So insistent indeed has become the demand for Home Nursing instruction that from 50 to 60 new classes are now formed each year with an average of a thousand girls in attendance. Some of these classes present unique and surprising aspects, for in the past two years groups of the deaf, the dumb, the blind as well as of Chinese or other foreign women speaking no English, have been successfully taught by some of Miss Goodman's devoted assistants.

The Blind and Dumb

"One of the most enthusiastic classes ever taught in Toronto," said Miss Goodman, "consisted of eleven deaf and dumb married women who were keen to take the course. Of necessity it was hard for the nurse in charge as all she said had to be translated into sign language but this was so very quickly and cleverly done by another assistant that the whole course of instruction was satisfactorily given, and as many of these women had children—yes, in some cases quite normal children—these young wives received great benefit from knowledge we felt so uselessly every day. The blind students were even more difficult but requested the training and we gave them all that we could. They became expert bed-makers and seemed to enjoy the work. "As for the Chinese women, we have never dealt with a more intelligent group. There were twenty in all, so there was a good representation of the sixty-five wives who have been brought to the city by husbands paying the five hundred dollar head tax. They were of good class and were never allowed on the streets alone so a volunteer brought them all to the group in her motor car, also their children whom we used for the various demonstrations. These women were also very keen and all finished the course very creditably."

Other unique groups organized by Miss Goodman included several consisting of Polish, Ruthenian, Russian and German women, many of whom could speak no English, but all of whom, with the able assistance of interpreters received the full benefit from the instruction.

A Splendid Work

Another group of women who are pitifully anxious to receive Home Nursing knowledge are the hard working mothers who leave their babies in the Nurseries. Although these women come home tired from heavy tasks they will give up an evening a week cheerfully in order to get a real insight into the science which they see in operation in the checks where they leave their children for the day. And seeing is believing. Reports show too, that the large insurance companies have become so persuaded of the usefulness to all women of Home Nursing teaching that numbers of them co-operate with the Red Cross by supplying a light supper and assembly rooms in order that their office girls may go into the classes immediately at the close of their day's work. A significant fact, for it is apparent that these companies which are so vitally concerned with the conservation of life, see in this instruction for women one of the most powerful agencies in that progress of preventive medicine which is their chief business to encourage.

Still other evidences of the increasing demand lie in the fact that no less than fifteen Home and School Clubs in Greater Toronto have asked for Home Nursing classes and that dozens of the churches, particularly in the down town sections, organize classes each year, finding in this day by day knowledge of how to be healthy, one of the most useful allies for their own teaching of right living.

A National Need

The Red Cross Society in attempting to meet in town and country in Canada, this great demand, is filling not only an individual but a national need, the value of which may be reckoned only in terms of increasing health and happiness to our people.

Avis: "Have you heard the story about Alice?" Alice: "Heard it? Why, dear, I started it."

Gladys: "Then we are engaged?" Harry: "Yes, my love." Gladys: "And am I the first girl you have really loved?" Harry: "No, pet, but I am harder to please than I used to be."

Radio to Guide Ships Through Shallow Water

Electrical Engineers Told of New Device—Work for Quiet Motors

New York—Radio direction of ships and elimination of unnecessary noises in electrical household apparatus were among the subjects discussed at the seventh session of the annual meeting of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers here.

The manner in which a narrow or shallow channel might be equipped with radio apparatus, so as to make it possible for a pilot to take his ship through it safely under the most unfavorable visibility conditions was described by Robert H. Marriott, consulting engineer to the Federal Radio Commission. Mr. Marriott said the device had already been tested by the Navy Department and approved.

Cable Laid in Channel

The transmitter used in the process, Mr. Marriott said, consists of a single conductor cable laid in the bottom of the channel, through which an alternating current is conducted to its outer edge, which is grounded. The receiver includes two coils of wire hung on the port and starboard sides of the ship, parallel to its sides and connected to two headphones or other indicators.

"When the keel of the ship is steered directly over the cable," he continued, "The responses from the two coils will be equal. When the ship gets off on the starboard side, the greatest response will come from the port and vice-versa, until the ship is brought back to where it should be."

Elimination of Noise

Efforts to reduce unnecessary noises in such household apparatus as vacuum cleaners and refrigerator motors were discussed by Thomas Spooner and J. P. Foltz, research engineers of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company.

They expressed the opinion that production of a quiet vacuum sweeper is a problem of no little difficulty, due to the high rate of speed at which the motors usually operate and because of other mechanical considerations.

It is expected, however, they said, that close study of the problem of noise reduction in electrical apparatus will gradually result in the elimination of many of the noises now considered unavoidable.

Wayne J. Morrill, engineer of the General Electric Company, of Fort Wayne, Ind., said that a quiet, electrically operated motor had been developed which would be suitable for household refrigerators and oil-burning heating systems.

"Mother, when the light goes out, where does it go?" "I don't know. You might just as well ask me where your father goes when he goes out!"

Fermented Milk Long Consumed in Russia and Balkans

Differences in Preparation and Value Described by Agriculture Department

Differences in the lactic acid bacteria present and in methods of preparation result in fermented or soured milks of different flavor and varying therapeutic usefulness. All the familiar fermented milks are high in food value, wholesome and to many people very palatable and refreshing. Metchnikoff and his associates focussed attention on the fact that many intestinal disorders could be corrected by the use of milk soured by the introduction of certain bacilli, but later investigators have concluded that other bacteria, especially Lactobacillus acidophilus, give more satisfactory results than those used by Metchnikoff, because L. acidophilus is a normal inhabitant of the intestinal tract. It can be successfully implanted to combat undesirable organisms, whereas L. bulgaricus, formerly depended on, was much more difficult to introduce and less reliable in its effects. The United States Department of Agriculture explains the difference between the various fermented milks.

Acidophilus milk is palatable, with an agreeably mild acid flavor, and is easily digested. While it is possible to prepare this milk, as well as other fermented milks, in the home, the product of the commercial laboratory is usually better. Small quantities of lactose, or milk sugar, are usually given with acidophilus milk.

Buttermilk, properly speaking, is the milk remaining after the fat is removed by churning. A large part of the so-called buttermilk sold in cities is simply skim milk, soured with pure cultures of lactic bacteria, which has been churned or stirred to break up the curd. This, however, has all the chemical properties of buttermilk and the same appearance and flavor.

Fermented milks have been extensively used for many centuries by the people of southern Russia, Turkey, the Balkan countries and their neighbors. Kefir is made from the milk of sheep, goats or cows, combined with a dried preparation of grains which produce considerable amounts of alcohol and gas in the milk, giving it a characteristic effervescence. Kumis, a favorite drink in the plains of Russia, is made there from mare's milk. When cow's milk is substituted in making it in this country the product is more correctly kefir.

Yogurt, which is used under various names by the people on the eastern borders of the Mediterranean—the Turks, Balkans, Armenians, Egyptians—an also by East Indians, is quite different from kefir and kumis. It is a very acid, quickly curdled milk, lacking alcohol. The essential organism which causes it is known to science as Lactobacillus bulgaricus.

The choice of one or another of these fermented milks as a therapeutic agent depends on the results desired by the physician who prescribes it. In general it may be said that it is unwise to change the habitual diet to include fermented milk in large quantities without consulting a doctor, as he may consider it desirable to modify the entire diet and to specify a particular milk.

Who had shot and killed the ne'er-do-well Robert Ablett within two minutes after his arrival at The Red House, the country estate of his wealthy bachelor brother, Mark Ablett? Mark was missing and there were mysterious circumstances. The shot was fired a few moments before Antony Gillingham, gentleman adventurer and friend of Bill Beverley, Marks, guest, had entered the hall and found Matt Cayley pounding on the library door and demanding admittance. They force their way into the room and find Robert's body. Antony and Bill discover a secret passage from the bowling green to the house, and are looking for the opening to it in the library.

GO ON WITH THE STORY.

"We shall have to take every blessed book down," Bill said, "before we can be certain that we haven't missed it."

Antony's pipe was now going satisfactorily, and he got up and walked leisurely to the end of the wall opposite the door.

"Well, let's have a look," he said, "and see if they are so very frightful. Hallo, here's your 'Badminton.' You often read that, you say?"

"If I read anything."

"Yes," he looked down and up the shelf. "I like books of travel, don't you?"

"They're pretty dull, as a rule."

"Well, anyhow, some people like them very much," said Antony reproachfully. He moved on to the next row of shelves. "The Drama. The Restoration dramatists. You can have most of them. Still, as you well remark, many people seem to love them. Shaw, Wilde, Robertson—I like reading plays, Bill. There are not many people who do, but those who do are usually very keen. Let us pass on."

NICE WORDS WON'T DYE a dress or coat...

Neither pretty pictures nor colorful adjectives will dye a dress or coat. It takes real dyes to do the work; dyes made from true anilines.

Next time you have dyeing to do, try Diamond Dyes. See how easy it is to use them. Then compare the results. Your dealer will refund your money if you don't agree they are better dyes.

You get none of that re-dyed look from Diamond Dyes; no streaking or spotting. Just fresh, crisp, bright new color. And watch the way they keep their brilliance through wear and washing. They are better dyes because they contain plenty of real anilines—from three to five times more than other dyes. But you pay no more for them than for ordinary dyes.

The white package of Diamond Dyes is the original "all-purpose" dye for any and every kind of material. It will dye or tint silk, wool, cotton, linen, rayon or any mixture of materials. The blue package is a special dye for silk or wool only. With it you can dye your valuable articles of silk or wool with results equal to the finest professional work. Remember this when you buy. Life of Nelson' or 'Three Men in a Boat,' or whatever it was, and by the merest chance discovered the secret. Naturally he felt that everybody else would be taking down 'The Life of Nelson' or 'Three Men in a Boat.' Naturally he felt that the secret would be safer if nobody ever interfered with that shelf at all. When you said that the books had been rearranged a year ago—just about the time the croquet-box came into existence—of course I guessed why. So I looked about for the dustiest books I could find, the books nobody ever read. Obviously the collection of sermon-books of a mid-Victorian clergyman was the shelf we wanted."

"Yes, I see. But why were you so certain of the particular place?"

"Well, he had to mark the particular place by some book. I thought that the joke of putting 'The Narrow Way' just over the entrance to the passage might appeal to him. Apparently it did."

Bill nodded to himself thoughtfully several times. "Yes, that's very neat," he said. "You're a clever devil, Tony."

"Well, come on then," said Bill, and he got up.

"Come on where?"

"To explore the passage, of course."

"Suppose we find Mark?" said Antony quietly.

"I say, do you really think he's there?"

"Suppose he is?"

"Well, then, there we are."

Antony walked over to the fireplace, knocked out the ashes of his pipe, and turned back to Bill. He looked at him gravely without speaking.

"What are you going to say to him?" he said at last.

"How do you mean?"

"Are you going to arrest him, or help him to escape?"

"I—I—well, of course, I—" began Bill, stammering, and then ended lamely, "Well, I don't know."

"Exactly. We've got to make up our minds, haven't we?"

Bill didn't answer.

"You know, you can't just say, 'Oh—er—hallo!' to him," said Antony, breaking rather appropriately into his thoughts.

Bill looked up at him with a start.

"Nor," went on Antony, "can you say, 'This is my friend, Mr. Gillingham, who is staying with you. We were just going to have a game of bowls.'"

"Yes, it's dashed difficult. I don't know what to say. I've been rather forgetting about Mark." He wandered over to the window and then turned back to his friend.

"All the same," he said, "you wanted to find the passage, and now you've found it. Aren't you going into it at all?"

Antony took his arm.

"Let's go outside again," he said. "We can't go into it now, anyhow. It's too risky, with Cayley about. Bill, I feel like you—just a little bit frightened of I don't quite know. Anyway, you want to go on with it, don't you?"

"Yes," said Bill firmly, "we must."

"Then we'll explore the passage this afternoon, if we get the chance. And if we don't get the chance, then we'll try it tonight."

"Do you really think we might find Mark hiding there?" asked Bill.

"It's possible," said Antony. "Either Mark or—" He pulled himself up quickly. "No," he murmured to himself, "I won't let myself think that—not yet, anyway. It's too horrible."

CHAPTER XII.

In the twenty hours or so at his disposal Inspector Birch had been busy.

The discovery of Mark was all that mattered immediately. Dragging the pond might not help toward this, but it would certainly give the impression in court tomorrow that Inspector Birch was handling the case with zeal.

He was feeling well satisfied with himself, therefore, as he walked to the pond, where his men were waiting for him, and quite in the mood for a little pleasant talk with Mr. Gillingham, and his friend, Mr. Beverley.

He gave them a cheerful "Good afternoon," and added with a smile, "Coming to help us?"

"I wish you luck. But I don't think you'll find much at the pond. It's rather out of the way, isn't it, for anybody running away?"

"That's just what I told Mr. Cayley, when he called my attention to the pond. However, we shan't do any harm by looking. It's the unexpected that's the most likely in this sort of case."

"You're quite right, Inspector. Well we mustn't keep you. Good afternoon," and Antony smiled pleasantly at him.

"Good afternoon, sir."

Antony stood looking after the inspector as he strode off, silent for so long that Bill shook him by the arm at last, and asked him rather crossly what was the matter.

Antony shook his head slowly from side to side.

"I don't know; really I don't know. It's too devilish what I keep thinking. He can't be as cold-blooded as that."

"Who?"

Without answering, Antony led the way back to the garden-seat on which they had been sitting. He sat there with his head in his hands.

"Oh, I hope they find something," he murmured. "Oh, I hope they do."

"In the pond?"

"Yes."

"But what?"

"Anything, Bill; anything."

Bill was annoyed.

"I say, Tony, this won't do. You really mustn't be so damn mysterious. What's happened to you suddenly?"

Department of Health

The marvel of Ontario's power development and the application of electricity to illumination and transportation systems of the city, to the machinery of industry, to lighting and cooking in the home, has a parallel even more marvellous in the development of the services now available to the people of Ontario through the Department of Health.

COMMUNITY HEALTH.

Any community, large or small, is free to ask for help under any item of municipal health administration, viz.: control of communicable diseases, the establishment, maintenance or extension of water supply and sewage disposal, garbage collection, milk supply, public health nursing, child health or dental service programs, together with routine or emergency laboratory service.

HEALTH IN INDUSTRY.

Industry has its own health problems and special service is proffered by the Department to further the health of the worker in industry. Any industrial management may request help to meet the health needs of its plant, because the Department realizes that health plays just as important a part in plant operation as the horsepower which makes the wheels go round.

HEALTH IN THE HOME.

In the home the real fight for health is staged, and into the home the Department sends knowledge of every new discovery after it has been carefully tried and tested. The home is using this knowledge in every-day life just as it pushes the electric button to light the floor lamp or heat the electric iron. It is because the mothers of Ontario have used this health knowledge that Ontario's infants are not dying from diseases due to incorrect feeding in such large numbers as formerly; it is due to the splendid co-operation of Ontario parents that 40,000 children were protected against diphtheria last year, and it will be through the efforts made in our homes that preventable diseases—diabetes, tuberculosis and cancer as well as the acute infectious diseases—will be reduced in this Province. Personal health means community health, national health, and personal health depends in the home.

DIVISIONAL ORGANIZATION.

The Department is organized into a series of Divisions, each responsible for its own job:

- Division of Sanitary Engineering.
- Division of Preventable Diseases.
- Division of Child Hygiene.
- Division of Laboratories.
- Division of Industrial Hygiene.
- Division of Dental Services.
- Division of Vital Statistics.
- Division of Nurse Registration.
- Division of Public Health Education.

Liquor Smuggling

Manitoba Free Press (Lib.): There is a point of view fairly common in this country that there is nothing wrong with Canada shipping to the United States all the liquor that the Americans will buy, especially in view of the fact that they appear to be willing purchasers. Officially, however, the United States is under prohibition, and it is a legal offence to import liquor into the country. The Federal Government of the United States (which has in hand the enforcement of the prohibition law, has succeeded in making agreements with practical-all other nations that export liquor whereby these countries refrain from giving port clearance to liquor shipments to the United States. So far Canada has refused to accept the American viewpoint. Liquor is given clearance from Canadian to United States port, although it is known in Canada that the cargo can only be landed at a United States port by breaking the laws of that country.

MISUNDERSTOOD BUSY SPIDER CHECKS MANY INSECT PESTS

He Spins His Web or Trap Instinctively, Without Learning How—Yet He Has the Dawning of a Mind and Captures the Moth as It Flies

By J. ARTHUR THOMSON,
Professor of Natural History, University of Aberdeen.

In the New York Times

Few of us are devoted to snakes, few of us dote on centipedes, and one cannot say that there is a strong prejudice in favor of spiders. Yet spiders are fascinating in their works and ways. We like them almost in spite of themselves.

One of the few unwise things that Emerson did was to describe an improved earth in which there should be no spiders. A little natural history would soon have convinced him that the world without spiders would be unendurable, for it is by means of spiders that the insect scourge is kept in check. There is an old adage with much truth in it:

If you wish to live and thrive,
Let the spider run alive.

Spiders are not insects. They are no nearer to insects than reptiles are to birds. Spiders have no wings, while almost all insects have; yet spiders can make aerial journeys on the wings of the wind, borne by their silken parachutes. Spiders have no feelers or antennae, while all insects have; yet spiders, speak, to one another by vibrations. They have a sense of touch unexcelled in the whole animal kingdom. They have structures that take the place of feelers and are exquisite organs of tactility.

A spider has four pairs of legs, while an insect has three pairs. At the end of the spider's legs are curved toothed claws by which the spider can hold on to anything that has any roughness of surface. A spider often runs along the ceiling holding on to the plaster with these claws—a remarkable acrobatic feat, defying gravity.

A Spider's Equipment

While insects have three pairs of legs, spiders have two pairs, and in their mouths is a part like a half-open penknife, at the base of which is a poison gland. All spiders are poisonous, and they poison their victims by nipping them with this knife-like weapon. A spider has a waist, suggesting the waist of a wasp, a narrow isthmus between head and breast, which are joined in one, and the posterior body. Through that narrow waist, as narrow often as a wasp's, the food canal, the nerves and the blood vessel have to pass. All spiders have spinning glands also, from which comes a multiple jet of liquid silk.

Another peculiarity of spiders is that they hatch out as fully-formed young spiders, whereas most of the insects emerge from the egg as grubs, caterpillars or some other form of larvae. But out of the spider's egg there comes a creature that has simply to grow and moult to become a full-sized spider.

Just as we cannot understand live bees without knowing something about wax, or wasps unless we understand the paper of their beautiful hanging houses, so we cannot understand the spider unless we know something about silk, for all spiders are silk producers. This silk is a liquid. It is exuded from a large number of small glands in the posterior part of the spider's body. It comes out as a liquid jet, which hardens instantaneously on exposure to air. Out of that liquid silk the spider makes all sorts of contrivances. It is always paying out a drag line of silk as it moves on difficult journeys. If a spider is creeping along the ceiling and its footing gives way, instantly it presses its spinning arms against the whitewash and so can sink with dignity to the ground, paying out a rope of silk. Sometimes it changes its mind when half-way down and turns again and climbs up the rope, winding in the silk as it ascends. Every spider has this power of paying out a drag line.

The drag line is of the same material as the nest lining, the snare, the web and the cobweb, which is a low-grade web without any geometrical pattern. We admire the web of a garden spider and wonder how such a beautiful and effective thing could be evolved. When we notice the drag line, the threads about the nest, the tangle of the snare, the untidy cobweb and the simple webs, we see by how long a process of evolution the orb web has become possible. The drag line is the foundation of all.

One use spiders have for their silk is to make a cradle for the young. They wrap up the eggs in a silken bag, a cocoon. The cocoon of an insect is the enclosure that the larval insect makes for the time of the great metamorphosis when the caterpillar changes into a butterfly. But the cocoon of a spider is quite different. It is a silken bag for holding the eggs and by and by the young spiders. Sometimes the threads of silk are used as a parachute by means of which the small spiders are wafted for miles through the air. Darwin records in his "Voyage of the Beagle" that the ship's rigging was covered with little spiders sixty miles off the coasts of South America. These aerobats had been borne on the wind many leagues over the sea before they came to rest on the ship.

Under makes its web by instinct, that is to say, without any experience, without any apprenticeship, without any learning. That is the mystery of instinct. The web is made true to pattern the very first time the spider tries, true to the particular pattern of that particular species. It can be made in the course of an afternoon or in less time. It can be made in the dark.

In making an ordinary web the spider first lays the foundation lines, often four in number; and these are made particularly strong, for they are used over and over again. Next the spider starts from the middle of the top foundation line and drops to the middle of the lower foundation line, paying out a line of silk, and pulls that taut. Then it climbs up that line, pauses for a moment in the middle, begins to pay out another line, walks along the upper foundation line to the right-hand corner and pulls the third ray taut. Then back again to the centre, down the lower half of the central ray, away to the left-hand corner, paying out the lower drag line and tightening it. So it goes on from side to side until the rays of the web are like the spokes of a wheel.

Now the spider goes to the centre of the web and with peculiar strides swings from ray to ray, paying out what is called the primary spiral, which is not viscid, but is just the scaffolding. When it has completed the primary spiral, which binds all the rays together, it starts at the circumference and with a different kind of swinging movement it makes the second spiral, the sticky spiral, the spiral that forms the snare for the insects. Being very economical, as it makes and completes the secondary spiral it eats up the primary spiral, the scaffolding that made the second spiral possible. In the making of an ordinary garden spider's web there are these four chapters: Laying the foundation lines, making the rays, making the primary spiral and making the viscid secondary spiral.

An Architect, by Instinct

There are three things to notice about the web. First, it is made very quickly; often it is made every day, just as a part of the day's routine, though the foundation lines are used over and over again. Second, each kind of spider, it makes a web at all, makes it of a particular pattern. Every species has its own architecture. Third, the web is not the product of intelligence—there is no hope in that theory—but is made instinctively, without learning, without training, though it may be adjusted to difficulties or to situations by a spice of judgment.

In spiders the sexes usually differ greatly in size. Ordinarily the male is a pigmy compared with his mate. The disproportion is almost incredible. It is as if a man six feet high were to marry a woman the height of a church steeple or as if a man weighing 160 pounds were to mate with a woman weighing 200,000 pounds.

In the breeding season these pigmy mates, which have no end of pluck, often meet together in little companies and fight. They fight like those birds that used to breed in Britain, the rams, whose mates are called reeves, that are still visitors to the Norfolk Broads. The combats of the rams have often been described, and similar combats occur among spiders. They fight and fight, hour after hour, but at the end there is no wounded warrior. Their duels are like those of politicians—most vigorous and spirited, but no blood is drawn.

Courting Under Difficulties

The male spider's courting has to be done with care. He may show off his good points of color and agility; he may dance around his desired mate, sometimes a hundred times, at a great rate, or he may in other ways—for instance, by twirling one of the threads leading to the web on which he is sitting—indicate his intentions. But the female has a capricious temper, and what begins playfully and pleasantly often ends in a death when she makes a rush at him.

But, while the female spiders are cross-grained as sweethearts, they are devoted as mothers, unsurpassed in care for the young. The eggs, wrapped up in beautiful silken bags, are hidden under stones or among the twigs of a bush, or under loose bark. Sometimes the mother spider is still more careful and carries her cocoon about with her, holding it firmly and binding it to her body with silken threads. If you take away the silken cocoon, about the size of a pill, from the mother, and put it at a slight distance, you may see her search about. She is very short-sighted; she gropes and feels for the lost cocoon. If you give it to her again, she trundles it under her body and off she goes.

One mother spider makes a trap-door nest, a wonderful contrivance common in the south of France, a deep shaft sunk in the ground, lying smooth, plastered smooth and fitted with a lid with a silken hinge. All that trouble is not for a house for her but for a cradle for the young ones. Another clever mother is the immitable water spider. She makes a web underneath the water and fills it with dry air, and in that diving bell, as in a dome, she lays her eggs and brings up her young.

Familiar Leo Will Soon Be Heard Say "Hello Folks"

HOLD YOUR EARS, LEO IS GOING TO GO INTO THE TALKING PICTURE. Leo, famous trademark of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures, has become a familiar movie figure. His pictures are screened. His well-known roars, hitherto silent, are now being recorded for talking devices, so it will be "See and Hear Leo."

Can one understand anything about the mind of the spider? It is peculiarly difficult for man, who is a creature of intelligence, to get psychologically near a creature whose whole life is dominated by instinct. Spiders make their web, their trap-door, their diving bell instinctively. We know that because they do it perfectly the very first time, and also because of another impressive fact: If we interrupt them when they are in the middle of their building operations they are strangely nonplused, quite unlike a dog or a cat that appreciates intelligently the relations of things. The spider is puzzled and often has to begin again at the beginning, like a child repeating a piece that it has learned by rote and does not very well understand.

Yet the spider has the dawning of mind. If you give it a tempting fly that has been dipped in turpentine it eagerly snatches at the food, but soon rejects it. Give it half an hour to forget and try again with the turpentine fly. The instinct is too strong; the spider rushes forward, seizes the prey and rejects it again. Give it an hour and it will repeat the process. But after three or four times no more turpentine flies for that spider. It has mind to the extent that it can profit by experience. Next day it will have nothing to do with flies that look like the turpentine fly.

It is hard to believe that some of the things that spiders do are not actuated by reason. In Queensland, Australia, lives a fine spider called the Magnificent—the female is like a bit of rainbow. This spider makes no web but still has a way of getting its food. It lowers itself from a twig on the end of a thread about three inches long, then puts out a short thread about an inch long, with a viscid drop at the end. When a moth comes flying past in the dusk the spider casts for it with the viscid globe and draws it in as a fisherman lands a bass. The trick is so wonderful one feels it must have a little intelligence behind it.

Jinks: "If you drop knives and forks it means company's coming." Binks: "If you miss them, it means they're gone."

New Sources of Rubber Located by Exploration in Madagascar

Washington — Twenty-three plants believed to be potential sources of rubber are among botanical specimens which Dr. Charles F. Swingle of the U.S. Department of Agriculture recently brought from Madagascar.

Dr. Swingle is the first American to visit the island on a plant-hunting exploration. His trip was made possible through the co-operation of the bureau of plant industry with the Arnold Arboretum of Boston, the University of Algiers, and by the friendly interest of the French and Madagascar governments.

Ten of the plants are being commercially exploited for rubber at the present time in Madagascar, Dr. Swingle says. Some of them have already been introduced into the United States and are being tested in the department's experimental garden in southern Florida.

Another plant which promises to be of economic importance is the alom-bora, a large leguminous tree which produces "leely," a gum used in varnish manufacture. Numerous ornamental plants, shrubs, vines and trees are included in the collection, among them a number of specimens of elephant's foot, several aloes and a rare hibiscus-like shrub.

A duplicate set of the collection was left at Tananarive as a "nest egg" to serve for replacing in case of loss or injury to the collection during its long journey to the United States. Another duplicate set was sent to the University of Los Angeles.

Although Dr. Swingle was finding new rubber plants that may enable the rest of the world to continue to "ride on rubber," he was not so fortunate at all times in his own mode of travel. In the southern part of the island where most of his time was spent, transportation was extremely difficult. Although some of the trip was made by automobile, at times it was necessary to use the "fianzana," a sort of sedan chair swung on two poles carried by four natives. With the baggage carriers and guides the party on the march consisted of 40 or 50 men and 30 mules was a good average.

Then, as the time approaches for the eruption of the second set, unless the first teeth are sufficiently separated in front to allow one or two thicknesses of blotting paper between them, the arches have not properly expanded and the second set is certain to be crowded and irregular. In such case, the family dentist should always be consulted.

Since Sonny is going to lose these small teeth in good time and get a nice new set, why bother to care for them?

Well, little Sonny does not want a tooth-ache any more than do you—and for several other good reasons, of which more to follow.

The Baby Teeth

A Series of Articles of Interest to all Mothers, Young and Old Particularly Young

How many should there be? "Ten little fingers and ten little toes"—making twenty in all—and there you have their number. Easy to remember, isn't it?

And when should you begin to look for them? About the sixth or seventh month.

And which comes first? As a rule, the lower front tooth, the central incisor.

So after all baby's fretfulness he has a brand new tooth or two—so white and so sound they look that you never give a thought to future tooth troubles.

Then the other eighteen or nineteen white coated little "millers" will follow at somewhat regular intervals until Sonny is two years old, when he should have his first temporary set.

These are the temporary or deciduous teeth—being known also as the "milk teeth," from which you will be aware, of course, that they won't be retained right through adult age. They should all remain in place, however, until about the seventh year, when, through the natural process of shedding, they commence to be lost.

Then, as the time approaches for the eruption of the second set, unless the first teeth are sufficiently separated in front to allow one or two thicknesses of blotting paper between them, the arches have not properly expanded and the second set is certain to be crowded and irregular. In such case, the family dentist should always be consulted.

Since Sonny is going to lose these small teeth in good time and get a nice new set, why bother to care for them?

Well, little Sonny does not want a tooth-ache any more than do you—and for several other good reasons, of which more to follow.

Killing On High Seas Involves 4 Nations

The United States Deports to Brazil Sailor Who Caused Death of Norwegian on Swedish Vessel

A story of manslaughter on the high seas, which started with the quarrel of two sailors over a shaving brush and has caused international complications, has now been brought to an end, through the extradition recently to Brazil of Francesco, alias Manuel De Lima, a nineteen-year-old officer on the Swedish steamer Liguria of the Swedish Lloyd line.

The events date to Aug. 23, last year, when the steamer was thirty-six miles off Ambrose Light, Port of New York, according to statements made by witnesses at the time. Lima was shaving on deck when Olaus Monson, to have a drink of water and saw that his shaving brush was being used. He took the brush from Lima, but there was no quarrel. Later the two men had breakfast together. Afterward, however, they were found fighting, witnesses said, and Lima struck Monson so severely with an iron bar that he died from internal injuries the following day. Before his death Monson gave his version of the row. De Lima, on his part, maintained he had been persecuted by his fellow-sailor, he admitted the blow. A preliminary hearing was held on board the steamer by the Assistant United States Attorney. The Brazilian sailor was arrested and placed in jail in Brooklyn.

Olof H. Lamm, Swedish Consul General in New York, sought immediately to have De Lima sent to Sweden to be tried there, as the crime was committed on board a Swedish steamer on the high seas. At the same time the Swedish Legation in Washington communicated with the Secretary of State and asked for De Lima's extradition.

The case was referred to Extradition Commissioner William J. Wilson of the Federal Court, Eastern District of New York, who decided that the extradition treaty between the United States and Sweden was not applicable. Shortly afterward the Department of Labor deported De Lima to Rio de Janeiro.

It seems likely now that the Swedish and Norwegian authorities will seek to have De Lima tried before a Brazilian court. Manuel de Barros, Consul General for Brazil in New York, has taken charge of the case.

Britain's "Safety Glass"

It is Bullet-Proof and Non-Discolorable, Laboratory Tests Show

In describing the new "safety glass," which is asserted to be "non-spatterable, non-discolorable and non-inflammable," and which was recently patented by an English firm, The London Daily Telegraph notes some of the tests to which it has been subjected and its appearance as follows:

"Tests at Rensselaer House Testing Laboratories have been made of the new glass. Subjected to a powerful mercury vapor lamp for twenty-four hours it showed no discoloration, although the temperature of the glass when under test was about 77°. When service revolver bullets were fired at the glass at distances of ten and twenty-five yards the glass was pulverized to a depth of 1.32 of an inch only.

"In appearance it is almost identical with ordinary glass. It can be made in any shape or size (within the limits imposed by the protective raw materials) and in any thickness, from that of the finest optical glass to that of bullet-proof glass.

"The facts that 'ketal' is not made with the ordinary celluloid (nitrocellulose) which upon exposure to the sun's rays becomes discolored even in temperate zones, and that it is not inflammable, are advantages claimed for it by its manufacturers."

Britain Plans Curb on Forced Labor

Gradual Elimination of Service in Kind in Tropics is Aim of Dominions Secretary

London—The Dominions Secretary, L. C. M. S. Amery, at a League of Nations Union conference on forced labor here, referring to the survival of this institution in Africa, said the question was how gradually to limit and in time eliminate, those forms of customary service in kind. He referred particularly to public roads and drainage works, on which services in kind is still held indispensable in some backward areas.

The Colonial Undersecretary, William A. Ormsby Gore, said forced labor had been eliminated practically everywhere in British territory outside of tropical Africa and its main use to-day, whether for native or protectorate governments, was in connection with roads.

He claimed that conditions under which compulsory labor was resorted to by British administration were comparatively free from abuses.

A move that is causing our council a lot of serious consideration is the question that has been agitating the minds of our people for some time, relative to the betterment of our water-works system. Last Thursday, Mr. Ern Lirnon, Civil Engineer, of Montreal, who had been requested by ex-Mayor Gall last year to make plans and study the situation, met the Council in conference, and submitted a concise statement in which several plans were outlined giving a choice according to the amount the Council might decide upon.

According to word received by the Local Manager of the Bell Telephone Company, a substantial sum is to be expended in Lachute this spring, in the placing of a new aerial wire and in building rural pole lines. There has been within the past year, a decided advance in the demand for telephone service in Lachute and the district around it. The outstanding popularity of the district as a holiday resort, both in winter and summer, has resulted in a splendid telephone development.

It has always been the policy of the Bell Telephone Company to provide in advance adequate facilities to meet future requirements and in this case the company plans to put in sufficient plant to take care of local telephone service for some time. This work, which will be done by the district plant staff, is scheduled for completion about July 1st.

LITERARY and DRAMATIC SOCIETY PRESENTATION

On Tuesday last a very happy evening was spent by the members of the Literary and Dramatic Society at a Taffy Party in MacArthur's Hall. A large number of members gathered together for the social time, during which a presentation in the form of a shower was made to the Misses Margaret Jones and Pauline Fraser, two of the most popular members of the Society, who are shortly to be married.

Through some peculiar yet unsuspecting inquisitiveness, known to woman alone, it was discovered that the prospective brides both intended having their kitchens finished in green. It was therefore arranged that all the kitchen articles, which composed the shower, should be in green to match the rest of the kitchen. Great surprise was sown by the recipients, who between periods of unteasing their many parcels alternately read the cards conveying each personal good wish.

Appreciation was expressed by both the young ladies and after refreshments had been served, dancing was indulged in and a most enjoyable time spent.

Siege of Afghan Palace Depicted by Royal Tutor

Queen's Modern Dress Added to Anger Over Reforms, Frenchwoman Relates

Mullahs Spread Hostility
By SONIA TOMARA
In New York Herald-Tribune

Paris.—The first refugee to arrive in Paris from Kabul, where civil war has been raging for the last two months and where kings have been rising and disappearing, was Mme. J. C. Ott, a Frenchwoman, who since last spring has lived in close touch with King Amanullah, Queen Souriya and their family.

When the Afghan monarchs were in Berlin—during their trip to Europe—Mme. Ott was asked by Queen Souriya to take charge of her nine-year-old daughter, Sultanja, and to teach her French and English and European manners. Mme. Ott became a member of the Queen's household. She traveled with her through Soviet Russia, Turkey, Persia and the wilderness of Afghanistan.

From June to December 31—when she left Kabul as a refugee, on a German Junker plane—she lived in the King's palace, with little Princess Sultanja, meeting the King and Queen many times a day. Amanullah practiced his little knowledge of French talking to Mme. Ott. When the revolt broke out she was surrounded by the rebels in the palace, together with the royal family, and slept in Queen Souriya's room during the eight days of the siege.

King Welcomed by Throne.
"When we first arrived at the Afghan frontier, coming from Persia, I was astonished to see how extremely popular King Amanullah was among his subjects. All the way from the frontier to Kabul we were met with enthusiasm by crowds of simple people, shepherds and peasants. We proceeded in a caravan of fifty motor cars, and behind us came an enormous queue of lorries filled with the luggage—all the gifts the King was bringing from the various European countries and all the purchases made by him and the Queen in Europe. A special road had to be made through the Afghan hills for our journey, and the people themselves built it for their sovereign."

Table Implements Introduced.
From the day we arrived the Queen became busy transforming the former harem into a regular Western palace, with nine reception rooms. A big table was put in the middle of the dining room and chairs replaced the carpets, for the King would no more eat in the Eastern fashion. All his relatives and guests were told to use forks and knives during the meals whereas before they always ate with their fingers.

"Twice a day, for lunch and for dinner, we all assembled in this dining room. King Amanullah took the head of the table, Queen Souriya sitting on his right. There were as a rule about forty people sharing the King's meal—his children, his numerous half-brothers and half-sisters, the Queen's sisters and relatives, the widows of the King's father, who had remained in the palace after their husband was murdered."

"At first it seemed very difficult for the elderly women to get accustomed to Western ways, to eat properly, to sit unveiled among men. But little by little they became modernized and seemed to like the new fashion."

Queen Wore Western Dress.
"In the afternoon the Queen received guests from the diplomatic corps. At these receptions she wore some of the Western frocks she had brought from Europe. She was very fond of dressing in European clothes and passed all her mornings trying on new gowns and having them changed for her by the Rumanian dressmaker. In the evening Queen Souriya wore delicate gowns, and although none but the family's relatives saw her in these clothes, the rumor about the scantiness of her attire soon spread in Kabul and was amplified by the mullahs who saw their prestige diminished by the King's reforms. Some of Amanullah's enemies received from Europe photographs of the Queen in evening dresses and these pictures were reprinted and sent to chiefs of tribes."

"In July he Queen shingled her beautiful hair. She did not want to do it, but Amanullah had insisted on it ever since they came back from Europe."

Princess in New School.
"However, everything remained quiet until the beginning of September, when we went over to Kabul, for my little pupil, Princess Sultanja, was to enter the French school. It was a new mixed school, where girls were to be educated together with boys. King Amanullah ordered all his ministers to send their children to it so that Sultanja should have distinguished company. But there were also sons and daughters of quite simple families."

"All the trouble began when King Amanullah decided that the time had arrived for his country to be Europeanized. On September 15 he went, with his Queen, to a public gathering and there, in front of thousands of people, he took the veil of the Queen's face and made a long speech. He decreed that, like Souriya, all women were to go about unveiled and wear Western clothes, instead of the long trousers and shirt of the national costume. The felt hat and the Western suit were to become obligatory for men."

"The sight of the unveiled Queen made a profound impression upon the King's audience. But in the palace we did not realize what the consequences would be. We continued to live as before, the King being very busy with his reforms. He went out a lot in the car and received ministers and foreign representatives. We often saw the Soviet minister, Stark, drive up to the palace and stay quite a long time in the King's study."

Queen Helped Poor.
"The Queen's time was taken up by receptions, by dressmakers and cabaret. She was extremely kind to anybody who was in need of her help. Frequently poor men or women came to the palace and asked to be received by the Queen. She had them come immediately to her reception room and, whenever it was possible, she helped them."

"However, the King's order to wear Western clothes had caused much discontent in Kabul. Western clothes were expensive and it was often difficult to get them. The Afghans were used to their turbans and baggy trousers. But the King's orders were strict. At first he decreed that men and women clad in the old way would not be allowed to walk in the main street of Kabul or pass through the town park. Guards stood along the main street driving away 'old-fashioned' people. This made the population very angry."

"Soon we noticed that the King was becoming nervous. He spoke of the Shinwari tribe that was revolting against him. But he did not want to take drastic measures against them. 'They are Moslems,' he said, 'and we must spare them.' At the beginning of the rebellion Bachi Sakao, who later crowned himself as King Habibullah, was made prisoner by Amanullah's troops, but Amanullah let him go, as he gave his word never to fight against his King any more."

Palace Under Attack.
"At the beginning of December we all were in the palace—all except the King, who had gone out for a drive—when the servants began to run around the rooms shouting that we were surrounded by the enemy. The rebels had entered the town and raised against the King the lower population of Kabul. The scene outside was terrifying; ragged armed crowds were vociferating and shouting threatening words against Amanullah and Souriya. The Queen was pale with fear, for her husband was out and she did not know what fate he had encountered."

Soon, however, he returned, having dashed in his motor car through the insurgents. He organized the defense of the palace, even his twelve-year-old nephews receiving weapons. Guns were loaded and the siege began. It lasted for over a week. Bullets fell on the upper floors of the palace, so I had to go down with my pupil to the Queen's room. About ten of us slept there on mattresses on the floor."

Royal Family in Flight.
"The rebels' first condition was that the King should repudiate his 'shameful' wife. He refused flatly. After a week's siege the King's Guards ejected the rebels and cleared a part of the town. He decided to put Queen Souriya and his children out of danger. His whole family—about fifteen people, among whom was my little Princess Sultanja, were packed in the huge plane he had received in Germany. I was to go on the same day to the French legation and to be evacuated from there. On the morning I had to

Prisoner Sees Strange World After 30 Years

The world is indeed a strange place, to a man who has been removed from all contact with it for three decades. The things he was used to 30 years ago, have disappeared. Their place is taken by things he knows not of. Such is the fate of Albert Gauthier, aged 49, who has just returned to his native Montreal, after 30 years in a United States prison, served as punishment for a crime regarding which he still disagrees with the verdict of society. Like a former famous prisoner, "his hair is gray, but not with years... his frame is bent, but not with age," and the iron of his chains has entered into his soul.

Civil Flying to Serve Canada

Dominion Takes Steps to Convert it into Emergency Divisions of Royal Air Force

Commercial flying is assuming such proportions in Canada that the authorities are taking steps to control the traffic and to utilize and facilitate the new developments with the purpose of converting them into emergency divisions in the National Defense scheme of the air service.

All matters pertaining to aeronautics are to be administered by the Minister of National Defense. The air services from a part of his department and are to be divided into four branches; the Royal Canadian Air Force, the directorate of civil air operations, the control of civilian aviation and the aeronautical engineering division.

The Royal Canadian Air Force is to be responsible for the air defenses of the Dominion to the chief of the general staff. Its work will include the administration and training of the air force and its reserves, the supplying of training facilities for all government air enterprises, the collection and distribution of air intelligence and the co-operation with the militia and naval services. It will also provide trained personnel to be attached to other branches.

At present the air force has five units: headquarters at Ottawa for the administration, organization and intelligence bureaus; a land training station at Camp Borden; seaplane training station at Vancouver; the stores depot at Ottawa, and the communications flight department at Ottawa.

The Controller of Civil Aviation is to be responsible to the Deputy Minister of National Defense for the administration of air regulations, the survey, location and equipment of airports, airways and aircraft.

A minimum of fifty hours of solo flight is one of the requirements of the applicant for a commercial pilot's license. All except the private pilot's are required to pass written examinations on the construction, maintenance and operation of aircraft and engines.

Red Hot Sun, Kind Cool Moon, India's Amazing Contrast

Cruel Orb of Day Burns from Horizon to Horizon, Until Luna Brings Hours of Rest

Two great discoveries are to be made by those who go to India for the first time, the Indian sun and the Indian moon, writes James Milne in "The London Daily Telegraph". One might say they are India, because they are orbs which govern her day and night in their own way, for nowhere else are there just the same sun and the same moon.

The Indian sun is very cruel—so cruel at its worst that the human body, white or brown, almost melts under its torture. You see in the morning a brazen-looking ball on the edge of the far sky. It is angry and flushed and you know that this brazen bolt in the blue will assuredly have you.

He climbs the sky slowly, getting more and more brazen in the face more a creature of fiery particles burning in a furnace. At noon he is in possession of the earth, as well as the sky, and his savagery is unbearable and unsatisfying. He goes on with the clock, grasping everything with his molten arms; your head, your eyes, your desk, or the pavement from which your feet retreat in pain. He balances an hour or two, at that sweating agony, playing with you, and then, sour of aspect, he condescends to grow less afflictive. But he is still angry and when he retires for the night, a ball of red coal, you can fancy you hear him hiss, "Ah! I return to-morrow."

Meanwhile the Indian moon has crept faintly into the sky, and it is the loveliest thing imaginable. It has a face of almost childish delicacy and innocence, a real baby face, until it grows clear and manly, and strong with the fullness of night.

The Indian moon is all a hero, a lovely friend, and you give him your full confidence, as he gives you his soft radiance. He has no arrogance like the sun, only beneficence and a curious mobile warmth of expression. You want to bask in his light and shadow, loving both, because their interplay with each other tells you that he is romantic. It was Byron who said, possibly some foolish night in St. James's Street, that the devil was in the moon. He is not in the Indian moon, maybe because all the Oriental devils with planetary homes are in the Indian sun.

ABOUT YOUR NERVES

Nerves are delicate fibres running from the brain to all parts of the body. Some of them give us the sense of touch and feeling; others convey the will to our muscles and enable us to move. When we have an "attack of nerves" it means that the body is in some way out of order and the nerves have become over-sensitive, so that we get neuralgia, nervous headache, sciatica, or some other nerve trouble. Sometimes the nerves get too weak to do the will of the brain, and we get trembling hands or limbs, or perhaps St. Vitus dance. The whole nervous system is fed and kept healthy by your blood. If that is thin and poor, nervous weakness follows. In that case a tonic is needed to build up the blood, so that it may in turn feed the nerves, spine and brain. The very best medicine for enriching the blood is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. You cannot take them without feeling the uplift they give. Your appetite improves, your brain is clearer, you gain strength in every way, and you feel full of new life. One sufferer, Miss Margaret R. MacDonald, Catalone Road, N.S., tells what this medicine did for her. She says:—"I suffered for a long time from severe headache and nervous exhaustion. I tried several kinds of medicine but got no relief until I used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and these, before long, gave me complete relief. From my own experience I feel that I can not praise Dr. Williams' Pink Pills too highly, and would advise anyone who is suffering from headaches or nervous exhaustion to give them a fair trial, as I feel sure the results cannot be anything but satisfactory."

Take these pills as a tonic if you are not in the best physical condition and cultivate a resistance that will keep you well and strong. You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A NEW RACE OF BEEF ANIMALS

The yak, a native of the plateau of Tibet, is being used by the Experimental Farms in hybridizing experiment to mingle the blood of the buffalo and ordinary cattle. After many attempts to make direct crosses between cattle and the buffalo, failure was the result owing to reproduction difficulties. The yak has been introduced as an intermediary and hopes are entertained that a hardy beef-producing animal will be evolved for grazing in northern territory. The report of the Dominion Animal Husbandman for 1927, published by the Dept. of Agriculture at Ottawa, contains an account of the work so far accomplished. This breeding work is being carried on at Wainwright, Alberta, in the foothills of the Rockies. The Dominion Animal Husbandman states in his report that the experiment, in so far as it has gone, has been remarkably successful as shown through the numerous excellent individuals combining the blood of the yak and buffalo, the yak and domestic cattle and their offspring now coming combining the blood of buffalo, yak, and domestic cattle.

What most people call indigestion is usually excess acid in the stomach. The food has soured. The instant remedy is an alkali which neutralizes acids. But don't use crude helps. Use what your doctor would advise. The best help is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. For the 50 years since its invention it has remained standard with physicians. You will find nothing else so quick in its effect, so harmless, so efficient.

One tasteless spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in acid. The results are immediate, with no bad after effects. Once you learn this fact, you will never deal with excess acid in the crude ways. Go learn—now—why this method is supreme. Children and World Peace

A Story of What the Junior Red Cross is Doing for Health Service and Good Citizenship the World Over

11 MILLION MEMBERS

By ANNE ANDERSON PERRY

In a day when the attainment of peace among nations and the encouragement of international understanding occupy the attention of masses of our people, the figures recently issued by the Canadian Red Cross Society, showing the amazing growth of the world league of Junior Red Cross school children, came with added significance.

The Junior Red Cross has extended to forty-one countries of Europe, Asia, Africa, Australasia and the Americas, in which its members now number 11,017,358. Organized under the triple slogans of "Health, Service and Good Citizenship" these eleven million school girls and boys are in truth very promising harbingers of peace among the nations, for they are intensely interested in the Juniors of all lands, with whom they continuously exchange correspondence; they work wherever organized toward the same ends in the same ways; they begin to make international understanding something more than a dream. "The front door of any little school which has membership in the Junior Red Cross," says Philip Gibbs in "The People of Destiny," "opens to the wide world, and the spirit of that school is directly in touch with the children of many countries."

Examination of the detailed figures reveals just what this means. It is shown that in 22 European countries there are 2,869,413 Juniors, of whom no less than a million and a half are in the schools of Italy; that Czechoslovakia and the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes adds another half million; that Austria and Hungary have 140,000 and 116,000 respectively—while even Poland has 115,000 Juniors. Other European lands in which this cult has taken firm footing are Belgium—where it is recognized by government and put on the curricula of the national schools. Norway, Britain, France, Lithuania, Latvia, Roumania, Bulgaria, Estonia, Germany and Spain. A remarkable feature of this development of the Junior Red Cross is the very strong hold the order has taken in those middle European states where before the war health knowledge was at its lowest ebb and internecine strife at the highest peak. Another is the amazing growth in Italy where the dictatorship has given the cult its blessing as a valuable means of building good citizens; and a third the small figures for France (20,000), Germany (10,000) and Britain (8,100), where the conservatism of these great stabilizing nations has made progress slow. But in all three the Junior Red Cross has shown its worth and is now being rapidly extended, through the efforts of educationalists themselves.

In the two Americas the Junior Red Cross has attained very impressive proportions, particularly in North America, where there are 157,155 children enrolled in Canada and a yearly increase of twenty thousand; 5,686,407 in the United States and another million in the Philippines, where the Juniors have been organized, as in Middle Europe, in order to raise the standards of health and right living among a backward people.

In Latin countries in South America, where the Junior Red Cross is of very recent growth, there is a total membership of 62,458. In Brazil, Argentine, Ecuador, Panama and Paraguay, all of whom are kept in close touch with the 15,000 Juniors in Spain and with other European lands. In Asia Japan leads with the amazing total of 1,333,640 boys and girls organized as Juniors, while a good beginning has been made in Siam and the Indian Punjab, with 50,000 more in the government schools. In South Africa the Transvaal has been enterprising enough to introduce the Junior Red Cross and some 10,000 children follow the cult in their classrooms, while in Australia proper there are no less than 94,953 Juniors with an additional 12,500 in New Zealand.

Amongst all these millions of Juniors in so many lands there goes on every year, with always increasing volume, a continuous correspondence. This takes the form of bulky portfolios, prepared in classrooms by the children and then forwarded to other classrooms, mayhap across the world. These fascinating compendiums are like nothing so much as glorified scrap books. They contain many delightful letters written by children, say in Czechoslovakia, to those in Canada, or by Japanese Juniors to their brothers and sisters in South America, all of the children concerned being not more than eight to twelve years of age. There is excellent craftsmanship in composition, writing, illustration and explanation. Frequently the fauna and flora, with resources and products of the country of origin are exhibited in attractive manner, while the habits, schools, sports and feelings of the little writers are realistically presented. The arrival or departure of one of these portfolios is an affair of moment in any "Junior" classroom where all the children take the keenest interest in both preparation and reception of these treasures.

During the past year 152 such portfolios from Japan, Britain, Middle Europe, Australia, the Philippines or United States were received in many parts of Canada and 191 carefully prepared volumes were despatched to the ends of the earth for Juniors abroad. So that on personal touch and ever increasing knowledge among the children of many countries there is being laid a foundation for better understanding and international relationships than those of the ignorance, suspicion and prejudice which have too often pertained in the past. It is one of the hopes of the world that there exists such a league of children allied in the cause of health, service, good citizenship and international goodwill. It is indeed hard to over-estimate its importance for as Philip Gibbs says, "the possibilities of better things to come are shown by the work of the Junior Cross and it is in my opinion so inspiring a lesson to the world that it ought to fire the imagination of every civilized people so that there would be a never greater world-wide league of children on this model. Such a league would be a greater promise to use than any League of Nations which may now be formulated."

BABY'S OWN TABLETS WIN GREAT PRAISE

Many Mothers Always Keep Them in the House.

Thousands of mothers state that they know of no other medicine for little ones to equal Baby's Own Tablets—that they always keep the Tablets in the home as a preventive of childhood ailments, or if sickness does suddenly grip their little ones they feel safe with such a remedy at hand.

Concerning the use of the Tablets Mrs. Donat Ploandre, Tingwick, Que., writes:—"I have nothing but praise for Baby's Own Tablets. They are the only medicine I have ever given my two little ones and I am glad to state that the Tablets have always kept them in perfect health. I feel so safe with the Tablets that I always keep a box in the house."

Baby's Own Tablets are a mild but thoroughly laxative. They regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach and thus banish constipation and indigestion; break up colds and simple fever and make the cutting of teeth painless. The Tablets are absolutely safe, being guaranteed free from all injurious drugs. They are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Living Costs

Victoria Times (Lib.): figures just published by the Canadian Department of Labor show that what one dollar would buy in the way of necessities of life in 1913 now demands from $1.55 to $1.58. Canadians need not be unduly alarmed about this condition. The year 1928, compared with the years since 1922, shows very little difference. In comparison with other countries, our advance of 58 per cent over pre-war living costs compares favorably with the 0 per cent increase in the United States and the 65 per cent in the United Kingdom.

DRINKS WITH EASE

"Is he a hard drinker?" "No; he drinks with the greatest ease."

Sherbrooke Tribune (Lib.): Though the maple sugar industry is barely developed in certain parts of Canada, it is very important in Quebec's wide territory, as in certain districts of the Provinces of Ontario, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The number of those who now manufacture maple sugar in Canada is estimated at more than 50,000.

PARENTS UNDERSTOOD THIS BABY'S LANGUAGE

"We thought we were going to lose our baby, teething," says a Kentucky mother. "He couldn't digest anything and was getting thinner every day. After one of his fretful, crying nights, I thought of Castoria and got some. A few drops made him comfortable, and after a few doses, he seemed like a different baby." Doctors everywhere recommend purely vegetable, harmless Fletcher's Castoria for colds, constipation, colic and other ills of babies and children, and millions of mothers know its gentle influence is best. Avoid imitations. The Fletcher signature is the mark of genuine Castoria.

Solace

I have known heartache and weeping, Terror, and pain, and regret. I have known sowing, and reaping, Through all the trials I have met. I have learned this, and this only, Though I plod wearily on, Though I be downcast and lonely, After the darkness comes down. Oh, it is worth all the sorrow, To know when the night is past, There will be coming tomorrow! There will be light at last! —Marjorie F. W. in the Chicago Tribune.

Beware! Flu May Affect Kidneys!

How often people say, "I never had kidney trouble 'til after the flu!" Wise Nature, trying to get rid of poisons, sends them to kidneys and liver. But these organs, weakened by illness, can't stand the strain. The poisons are retained in the system. Then come the pains, aches, swellings, loss of appetite, debility, lassitude. What a pity, when a stimulant diuretic, taken in time, might have helped.

For over 50 years thousands have depended on Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Remedy, a physician's prescription, made of Nature's herbs. A gentle stimulant for kidneys and liver, it urges perspiratory glands to action, and thus helps shift the excess load from the kidneys.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Remedy contains no harmful drugs. Costs little. Thousands have written, telling how it helped them. Get your bottle today. Warner's Safe Remedies Co., Toronto, Ontario.

TOWN BOOSTERS

The Kitchener Daily Record celebrates its expansion with an enlarged edition outlaying the attractions of Kitchener and Waterloo, the two towns to which this paper especially caters. Who says a newspaper is not THE instrument—the invaluable medium—through which to boost a township! For the Daily Record has set forth the salient features of its community in such attractive manner that, in the lack of recent acquaintance with these two towns, we shall feel sorely tempted to go and see them for ourselves when next traveling in that direction.

Kitchener and Waterloo, it seems, have much to inspire a healthy civic pride. Both towns are of considerable proportions; they have grown up together, nurtured by an administrative body whose foresight has been exercised with benefit to all departments. So that today, with the slogan of "Community Beauty a Civic Duty," this thriving district has its horticultural adornments, its social and educational developments, and the finer aspects of community culture, all in keeping with its high industrial and financial standing.

And then—

Says the Daily Record: "No other business enterprise is so closely interwoven with and so dependent on the prosperity and development of the community in which it exists as—the newspaper."

Lachute, the centre of our own particular interests, does not aspire to the proportions of a city. But looking back at the almost incredible growth since the first early settlement, and with an eye on our present gratifying stride of progress, it is reasonable to look ahead with keen optimism to the future of our town.
One thing is certain—though, regrettably, many of our citizens do not appreciate the fact—that every "boost" is a step in the right direction.

And judging by our own reaction to such publicity enterprises as now circulates from Kitchener, in the form of the Daily Record's Expansion Number—the Watchman, in turn feels that the Special Numbers which have issued periodically from its press are fully justified in respect of Results.
Indeed, we need not doubt it; for wide-spread comment as repeatedly proved that our efforts have drawn very favorable attention to Lachute Town and its possibilities.

The Watchman's ventures are less pretentious than those of its daily contemporaries. But such ventures involve a proportionate amount of work, planning, and expense, to the Editor and his staff—who must look, in turn, for the co-operation of progressive merchants, local contributors and advertisers. As we have remarked, Lachute has not yet attained to urban status. Its weekly newspaper, The Watchman, covers its field and fulfills its approved duty to the utmost of its powers. The town, however, is forging ahead; and we are confident in assuring our good readers that, together with the town, The Watchman will expand accordingly to lend its commensurate "boost" and an increasing incentive to civic progress.

Mr. E. Dawson, of Stonefield Hgt.,

Tuesday.

The frogs have been heard tuning up for their annual festival of music which would seem to point to the end of the sugar season. The output of syrup in this locality has been far below that of the past two seasons.

Mr. S. Whelehan accompanied by Mr. Owen Kestley motored up from Montreal on Saturday, returned Sunday. They report travelling conditions on the highway especially between St. Eustache and Lachute as anything but good.

ASTONISHING how many people who formerly paid high prices for the privilege of big car ownership are now turning to Pontiac. But it's not at all surprising when you consider Pontiac as the Big Six it is . . . instead of the low-price class in which its cost places it.

It's a car you can refer to with a sense of pride . . . a car that will more than justify your confidence in its prowess. Just see it and drive it if you'd learn why experienced and exacting motorists choose Pontiac for the Big Six prestige it provides.

On Tuesday, the Rev. J. Macaskill moved into the new Manse, recently purchased by the United Church from Miss Mary Lamb.

Miss Dunlop & sister are at Major Shorey's home on the hill, with the two Van Corlitz boys, while Major and Mrs. Shorey are touring in Italy.

The Women's Guild of the United Church held their meeting in the Church Hall on Thursday, Mrs. B. N. and Mrs. C. S. Wales being the hostesses.

This village was greatly shocked on Monday April 8th, on learning of the sudden death of Miss Lillie A. McMartin, at Montreal. She, with her sister, Miss Jean McMartin, had gone to the city early in March, and was expected back this week. She will be greatly mourned by a large circle of friends. Our sympathy goes out to the bereaved sister and relatives.

New Whippet

FOURS SIXES

SUPERB BEAUTY MUCH Larger Bodies

Never have Fours and light Sixes been distinguished by such beauty and style as are now winning wide-spread praise for the new Whippets.

These smart cars are the style triumph of master designers with grace of line, harmony of color, longer bodies, higher radiators and hoods, sweeping one-piece full-crown fenders and many other quality features.

The larger bodies give more spacious interiors, with broader seats and extra leg room. Other important factors in riding comfort are the over-size balloon tires, snubbers, and longer springs both front and rear.

"FINGER-TIP CONTROL"

The greatest driving convenience since the self-starter. A single button in the center of the steering wheel controls all functions of starting, the motor, operating the lights and sounding the horn.

In performance, the new Whippets are speedier, livelier and more powerful. Yet they retain all the quality features that built up Whippet's unsurpassed reputation for stamina, economy and minimum operating costs.

The new Whippets are unquestionably the outstanding values of the four and light six field.

EASY TO OWN

On our own streets Essex the Challenger, under competent observation, averaged 23 miles per gallon. The average owner in this city can expect 18 to 20 miles and upward. Hundreds of records all over the country during "Challenger Week" prove Essex economy. Commercial users operating large fleets of Essex cars say that service and maintenance costs, covering millions of miles of operation, are lowest of any car they ever tested.

Essex the Challenger sweeps aside the barriers of price class. It challenges the performance, the style, the luxurious roomy comfort of any car at any price, on the basis that no other gives you back so much for every dollar you put in. That is why the big buying swing is to Essex. That is why motorists by thousands are switching from past favorites, and trading in their present cars for the big values Essex the Challenger gives.

CANADIAN INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Bowling League Championship Match Season 1928-1929

The match to decide the Championship of the Canadian Industries Bowling League was bowled on April 3, 1929, on the Dominion Cartridge Social Club Alleys at Brownsburg, P. Q. The 1928-1929 Season had been split into two sections; the winner of the first section was Brownsburg "A" Team, and Brownsburg "B" team was triumphant in the second. While many of the Brownsburg Bowlers would have liked to have seen one of the other teams in the League successful in one of the sections, yet they had considerable pride in the knowledge that Brownsburg had again demonstrated their superiority by winning both sections.

The match was scheduled for 6.30 p.m., and long before this time, quite a number of enthusiastic supporters had taken their seats to witness the event. The Alleys were in first class shape, and everything was looking spic and span.

"B" Team was the first to arrive, and whilst one or two of the members looked a little nervous, yet they all appeared determined to endeavour to wrest the supremacy from "A" Team. The next to arrive was the referee, Mr. J. L. Lamberton, and as usual he was wearing a broad smile and had a cigar of no mean proportions thrust into the cavity thereby exposed. By this time, all available accommodation in the Alleys, was filled, and the crowd was beginning to congregate around the windows of the building.

Rather late, "A" Team commenced to filter in. They all seemed confident, and no member showed any signs of nervousness. The official scorer, Mr. H. W. Butler, now commenced to write the names rapidly, and Mr. T. G. Pasco and Mr. D. Mailhot prepared to meet the heavy demands on the blackboards.

The toss was won by "Long" Jim Hazel, and the ladies on the elevated seats momentarily ceased their twittering when Ernie Lavoie, of "B" team, proved to throw the first ball of the match. It was a strike, and the game was on.

The first string produced no spectacular bowling. Mr. Gardiner, unperturbed, as usual, puffed evenly at his pipe. "B" team commenced rather badly, but "A" could hardly do much better. Jim Kettyle made the first good break for "B" Team. It was rather a poor ball and Jimmy prepared to bowl a second. However the pins, failing to realize that April 1st. had passed, decided to collapse on one another, giving surprised Jimmy a strike. This heartened "B" Team a little but somehow they could not get into their real stride. There was not much difference in the score about halfway through this string, but after the 5th. frame "A" team gradually began to forge ahead. Strikes were few and far between, and apart from Jimmy Reid, the players were not bowling to true form. About the 8th. frame strikes came a little more quickly and a wobbly pin deciding to fall, helped to increase Jimmy Reid's score. He was unfortunate in not reaching the 200 mark. The string closed for the disappointing totals of 708 for "B" and 808 for "A" team.

The ladies now relaxed into a little louder conversation, and Johnny Lamberton discarded his well-chewed cigar.

"B" Team was palpably anxious to do better in the second string, but the "fates" were against it. The "Anchor Man" of "A", Harry Gardiner, very early secured four strikes in succession, and held the key to the situation throughout the string, finishing with 201. "B" team struggled hard, but Jimmy Kettyle, the "anchor" man, had a load on his mind, which did not allow the successful development of his famous curve. "B" Team, however, had a good chance to get ahead, right to the end of the game. An unfortunate split was obtained by the now very disconsolate Jimmy of "B", and the points for the second string again passed into the hands of "A" team, by the very narrow margin of three pins. The actual scores were 799 for "A" and 796 for "B".

With the Championship decided, and the tension relieved, the players broadened out in the third string and bowled in their real style. Wilfred Diotte's wicked swing became more wicked, and the pin boys had to prepare for any eventuality. Poor old "Fred" Brunelle, however, was still sticking to the "hard luck" list. One of the best bowlers on "B" he had the most abominable luck. Phillip Proulx of "A" also fell, from his usual consistent scoring, to 128 for this string. Harry Gardiner was again the key man and scored 204, with Joe Martin running him a close second. Eugene Dagenais, who played a very steady and improving game right along, together with Ernie Lavoie, who was high man, were the backbone of "B" for the match.

Reviewing the game, one would be inclined to feel that "A" and "B" two of the finest teams that Brownsburg has produced, might have put a little better showing. The results were disappointing, but "A" team undoubtedly deserved the honour, of being held for so many years, of being at the top of the C. I. L. League. "B", a younger team, will undoubtedly be stronger from failure to win this year, and it is hoped to see them again in the battle for the title next season. Carry on the good fight "B".

Before giving the detailed results of the match, mention must be made of the notable visitors present. Mr. E. J. Johnson, who unfortunately had to leave before the game finished, and Mr. E. L. Johnson, were present, and were much interested in the proceedings. Mr. Reay, also of Montreal Office, carried on a lively discussion with Mr. Quinn of the Dominion Ammunition Division, as to the merits and demerits of the players. The Village was well represented by a banker, hotel man, and the livery man, Mr. O. Legault was his usual plump and jolly self. Other leading lights of Brownsburg were very much in evidence, and demonstrated their interest by acclaiming good hits.

The following is a detail of the scores obtained:—

Brownsburg "A" vs. Brownsburg "B"
J. Hazel	136	146	178
J. Martin	163	146	191
J. Reid	198	138	164
P. Proulx	166	168	128
H. Gardiner	145	201	204

Brownsburg "B"
E. Lavoie	158	175	178
W. Diotte	154	134	177

She Hated Her Brother's Way of Life—But She Had to Shield Him!

By RUTH ALEXANDER

"There's just one thing more I ought to mention, and that is that I've no intention of marrying again."

Prue Moore finished. She stared at her prospective employer, and her little chin went several inches higher. It was a rounded chin, dimpled, but capable of becoming stubborn when occasion arose. Such an occasion seemed this moment when Mr. Julian Strange, the taciturn, rather tired-looking man standing by the fire in his great neglected studio had the temerity to suggest that the girl he was engaging as his little daughter's governess would naturally set her cap at him.

"I'm going to hate him!" thought Prue. "I shall never stay!"—and longed to end the interview with a chilly: "If that's the sort of idea you have of me, hadn't we better decide I'm quite unsuitable for the job?"

Then she thought of Henry, who was always losing his work, and of Nora, who simply must have another year at school, and swallowed her pride with a gulp.

"That needn't worry either of us," she told him distantly, chin still well in the air. "In fact," she added, on a sudden thought, "I'm engaged."

"Then we shall suit each other admirably, and I shall expect you on Monday, Miss Moore."

Julian Strange took her hand, and his rather stern face lighted up with an unexpectedly sweet and twinkling smile.

"I'm going to like him," she thought. "It won't be so bad, after all."

At first Prue felt somewhat forlorn in the big, silent London house, with just the servants and the housekeeper and little Joan, who had been thoroughly spoiled and was at times a perfect little beast and at others entirely lovable.

There was a garden which was a great delight to Prue; it led out of Mr. Strange's studio, unfortunately, but she soon learned his habits and avoided going through when he was at

NICE WORDS WON'T DYE a dress or coat...

Neither pretty pictures nor colorful adjectives will dye a dress or coat. It takes real dyes to do the work; dyes made from true anilines.

Next time you have dyeing to do, try Diamond Dyes. See how easy it is to use them. Then compare the results. Your dealer will refund your money if you don't agree they are better dyes.

You get none of that re-dyed look from Diamond Dyes; no streaking or spotting. Just fresh, crisp, bright new color. And watch the way they keep their brilliance through wear and washing. They are better dyes because they contain plenty of real anilines—from three to five times more than other dyes. But you pay no more for them than for ordinary dyes.

The white package of Diamond Dyes is the original "all-purpose" dye for any and every kind of material. It will dye or tint silk, wool, cotton, linen, rayon or any mixture of materials. The blue package is a special dye for silk or wool only. With it you can dye your valuable articles of silk or wool with results equal to the finest professional work. Remember this when you buy. The blue package dyes silk or wool only. The white package will dye every kind of goods, including silk and wool. Your dealer has both packages.

seemed a very long one, and there came a day when Prue's little chin took on its stubborn angle.

"I'm sorry, Henry, but you don't seem to be bothering at all, and I really can't afford to lend you any more money! And I don't think we ought to let Mr. Strange supply you with any more lunches and teas!"

"How do you suppose I am going to live, then?" Henry demanded.

"I really don't know," said Prue, at the end of her patience. "I suppose you could get work as a hall-porter, or a dustman, or something."

Henry glared. He seized his hat and fled out. Prue, instantly remorseful, ran after him.

"Henry, I didn't mean it! Of course I'll give you some more—"

But Henry had gone.

She spent two miserable days, alternately worrying over the idea that she might have driven him to suicide and comforting herself with the belief that he would come back. Then on the third morning she returned from a walk to find him on the doorstep.

"Oh, Henry, I'm so glad you're back! Do come into the nursery and have lunch!" She was almost tearful with thankfulness.

Henry magnanimously allowed himself to be fed before making any explanations. Then he said:

"No, I haven't got a job, but I'm on the track of one. I was offered thirty bob a week yesterday."

"I am so glad! It isn't much, but it's something to be going on with!" cried Prue happily.

"What! Thirty bob! Do you think I'd take a job of that sort?"

"You don't mean to say you turned it down?"

"I certainly did."

Prue was thoroughly roused. Her chin went up.

"So you'd rather live on my money and Mr. Strange's food than work at a small salary!" she flashed at him. "Go away from this house, and don't you dare to come again!"

"Look here, Prue. I've got something else in view, but I can't go after it without money."

You turn down an offer, and then expect me to supply you with money! If you don't go, I'll call Mr. Strange!" she stormed at him.

"I'm going!" said Henry furiously, and went out.

Prue stood stock still. Her anger abated as quickly as it had risen. She held her breath and waited for the sound of the front door. She crept to the top of the stairs and listened. Everything was quiet. Perhaps he had actually gone to Mr. Strange for money! She ran noiselessly down.

The studio door was open, and Henry was in there alone. He was standing as if fascinated before the Dresden china group. Suddenly he pulled a silk handkerchief from his pocket, wrapped the ornament in it, tucked it under his coat, then, with a quick glance right and left, made for the garden door. Before he had reached it Prue was at his side.

"Henry, what are you thinking of?" she cried in a distressed whisper. "Give it to me! You can't steal!"

She snatched at the bundle. "Let go, you little fool! You'll break it!"

They struggled. The silk handkerchief fell to the floor. All at once there was a sharp, ominous crack. Henry let go his hold immediately, leaped through the door into the garden, and left Prue staring down at the fragments of the Dresden group.

Dazedly she heard Henry's footsteps running on the gravel path, heard other footsteps at her side. There was a dead silence, broken by the slight scraping sound of Henry's boots as he scaled the wooden fence. Involuntarily she moved swiftly, so as to interpose herself between the fugitive and Mr. Strange's gaze.

"I'm sorry!" she gasped. "I was just admiring it—and I broke it! I did it!" Beneath her quivering mouth her little chin was resolute. "I'll pay for it—if you give me time! I'm dreadfully sorry!"

The storm she expected did not break. Instead, she heard Mr. Strange's voice gentle almost to tenderness:

"You couldn't pay for it, Prue. It's a tragedy—but you didn't do it."

"I did!" she cried hysterically.

"You blessed little white liar! I came in and saw the whole thing! Don't worry; I shan't blame Henry." And she found herself folded in a pair of strong, warm arms.

Somehow the amazing happening didn't seem amazing at all to Prue. She forgot Henry and everything else in the wide world till Julian whispered:

"There's just one thing, Prue—your fiancé!"

"That was another fib?" she confessed chokingly into his coat. "You see, you said you weren't going to marry again!"

Prue caught her breath.

"I wasn't—till I met you!" said Julian Strange, and kissed her.

Street and Highway Trees

The Ontario Horticultural Association have done a good service in issuing recommendations for the guidance of municipalities in planting and caring for street and roadside shade trees. The Association, composed of delegates from all parts of the province, has realized the need of some better policy to take care of this matter. Many miles of highway are without trees of any kind and thousands of trees that once were an ornament to the country have been mutilated for the accommodation of companies stringing wire lines through the country. At the convention held in Toronto recently a strong appeal was made to the delegates to do their utmost to save the shade trees and so help to preserve the scenic beauty of their neighborhoods. To the extent that this is done will the country attract tourists and derive revenue accordingly. Recommendations for the guidance of municipalities were brought in by a tree committee appointed a year ago. These dealt with the varieties that should be planted in towns and country places, and the distances apart they should be planted. For the central and southern parts of the province such trees as White Ash, Hard Maple, Pin Oak, Tulip Tree and Oriental Plane may with advantage be planted and not closer than 40 feet. For wider streets and boulevards the distance should be increased to 55 or 60 feet and on roads 75 feet. The varieties for the country planting should include Elms, Red Oak, Sugar Maple, White Ash, and Walnut, where these are indigenous to the locality. The Soft Maple so commonly planted, was regarded as less suitable than many other varieties except for northern areas where they make a rather slow growth and mature into a more desirable shape. Such unsuitable trees as the Manitoba Maple and Poplars, including Cottonwoods, the committee considered, should not be planted on any street or roadway.

Handsome is as Handsome Does

A Parisian Beauty Doctor, or "cosmetic surgeon," as she prefers to call herself, has been trying to persuade the German people that it is a sin to be ugly. She did not suggest that the Germans, as a race, are less fortunate than other races in those physical gifts which are commonly described as "good looks," but simply that, having them, they neglect to improve upon them by art. To be content to show your features as Heaven meant you to show them she regards as a sin—the "sin of ugliness!" Yet people are not ugly unless they look ugly, and it is within the power of us all not to look ugly. Ugliness has nothing to do with features or hair or coloring or anything else that shows upon the surface. We may have features like the Apollo Belvedere himself and yet be repellent, if our tempers are bad. "Handsome is as handsome does," says the old proverb, which means that if you are courteous and chivalrous you will look happy and others will like you for it. A ready smile wins more hearts than millions, but a scowling face will soon make a Croesus bankrupt of his friends.—Montreal Star.

No Quarter

Halifax Herald (Cons.): The lash for drug peddlers may sound like harsh punishment, but it is possible to conceive of a more unspeakable, a more despicable crime? . . . It is useless to waste soft sentiments over criminals who peddle drugs. There is a deliberate act, a cold mercantile decision to capitalize a habit that grips its victims and drags them down to the depths of physical, mental and moral degradation. No quarter for the drug peddler, is a decision that will meet with the complete approval of the citizenship of the Dominion.

Every day was her birthday to Dora. "Well, here's $50," her escort replied, "and I wish you a happy birthday." "What! On $50?"

Water Noises

When I am playing by myself And all the boys are lost around, Then I can hear the water go; It makes a little talking sound. Along the rocks below the tree, I see it ripple up and wink; And I can hear it saying on, "And do you think? and do you think? A bug shoots by that snaps and ticks, And a bird flies up beside the tree To get into the sky to sing. I hear it say, "Kildee, kildee!" Or else a yellow corn comes odwn To splash a while and have a drink. And when she goes I still can hear The water say, "And do you think?" —Elizabeth Madox Roberts, in "Under the Tree."

Revolvers and the Police

Toronto Star (Ind.): A newspaper in North Carolina says the people of the United States have a good lesson to learn from Canadians in the way of respect for law and order. It is, we think, true. But we should, in Canada, see to it that our police do not forfeit a reputation long earned and deserved, and do not get into the habit of using revolvers too readily, as, of late, they have occasionally done.

The whole world knows Aspirin as an effective antidote for pain. But it's just as important to know that there is only one genuine Aspirin. The name Bayer is on every tablet, and on the box. If the name Bayer appears, it's genuine; and if it doesn't, it is not! Headaches are dispelled by Aspirin. So are colds, and the pain that goes with them; even neuralgia, neuritis, and rheumatism promptly relieved. Get Aspirin—at any drugstore—with proven directions.

Canada's Land of The Midnight Sun

Director of Northwest Territories Describes Vast Section Bordering Mackenzie River

Canada, too, has her "Land of the Midnight Sun," and the little that is known of the Great Valley of the Mackenzie River and the northern coast of Canada, inhabited chiefly by Indians and Eskimos, is vividly described in Natural History, journal of the American Museum of Natural History, by O. S. Finnie, Director of the Northwest Territories and Yukon Branch of the Department of the Interior of Canada. He writes:

"One million three hundred thousand square miles of Canada lying north of 60 are known as the Northwest Territories. They extend easterly from the delta of the Mackenzie River to Baffin Island, a distance of approximately 2,000 miles, and reach more than 1,000 miles from north to south, from Cape Columbia to latitude 60 degrees north, including all the islands in the Canadian sector as far as the Pole.

"Neither the natives, nor the fauna, nor the other resources of so vast a country can be adequately described in a short article. From agricultural lands in the southern areas the country stretches to the world's most northerly headland; the natives include Indians and Eskimos speaking three distinct languages and living under as many sets of conditions. The wild life covers almost every species of land and sea mammal known to Canada, and the other potential resources of the Territories are found under a variety of conditions that differ in climate and accessibility.

DISTRICT OF MACKENZIE.

"The District of Mackenzie, the most important of the three main divisions of the Northwest Territories, can be most readily approached by the route leading north by rail from Edmonton, Alberta, to the southern watershed of the Mackenzie River. Fort Smith, the administrative centre within the district, is situated on the Slave River in latitude 60 degrees north, where a series of rapids forms a barrier to river navigation. At this point we find ourselves in the hands of the Chipewyan Indians.

"Should we listen to the casual conversation of the crowd we would hear English, French, Cree and Chipewyan used impartially for, although the language of the district is Chipewyan, the Cree from the south are well represented, and the traders and missionaries are chiefly of British and French extraction.

"Fort Smith, situated on a high, sandy plateau overlooking the river, is typical of many of the northern posts, its principal features being government offices, a Royal Canadian Mounted Police Post, a wireless telegraph station, a mission church and house with hospital and school, and establishments of the principal fur traders of the North. To these should be added the log homes of the natives and a host of dogs, which constitute the motive power of the country's winter transport. In winter Fort Smith is dark and bleak and windswept, and in summer it is a noted gathering place for all varieties of insect pests known to the northland, while for weeks daylight never fades entirely from the sky.

"Immediately to the west lies a country of alternate swamps and low sand ridges, difficult of access, but valuable because it has given perfect protection to the only remaining herd of American bison that has never known captivity. In 1901 the Dominion Government prohibited the killing of these animals. An estimate made about twenty years later placed their total at approximately 1,500. To these have been added recently 6,000 young buffalo from the Wainwright National Park, and it is confidently hoped that the next decade will see an increase in their numbers great enough to make them an important factor in the food supply of the district and possibly to warrant licensed hunting under the supervision of official game wardens.

FUR RESOURCES.

"The fur resources of the Fort Smith area have been intensively drawn upon for more than 100 years, but still the trapper thrives. Each winter yields pelts of bear, wolves, lynx, colored foxes, fisher, otter, marten, mink, skunk and muskrat—fox, mink and rat predominating. It is possible, however, that the time is not far distant when fur farming will bring to many a better living than is to be secured today from the taking of wild animals.

"From Fort Smith to the Arctic Ocean, a distance by water of 1,400 miles, river transportation is uninterrupted. Large and comfortable steamboats serve the public, and already the excellence of their service, the novelty of the life of the lower river settlements and the river scenery have popularized them among those on the outlook for summer tours in little-known lands.

"Two hundred miles of river, winding slowly through the country of the buffalo and the moose, lead from Fort Smith to Great Slave Lake. One legend of the source of the name 'Great Slave' tells how, even before the advent of the trader, a white child was sold as a slave to an Indian tribe which had its home on the shores of the lake. The child grew to be a man above the ordinary stature, with long fair hair and light blue eyes, who lived a long life among his Indian masters. His presence led to the area being known as the 'land of the great white slave,' eventually abbreviated to Great Slave. The story further states that the child slave was the rightful heir to the throne of France—an interesting echo of the rumors spread by the devotees of Napoleon that the son of Marie Louise had not really died at Vienna, but had been spirited away by the wily Metternich.

"Another legend, quoted by the Geographic Board of Canada, is to the effect that Great and Lesser Slave Lakes and Slave River were named after a tribe of Indians that once dwelt in that region. These Indians called themselves Etchareottine, which means 'the people dwelling in the shelter of the (Rocky) mountains.' In contradistinction to other Northern Indians, who were caribou eaters and traveled widely in pursuit of game, the Etchareottines were fish eaters and kept to the lakes. When the more warlike Crees went on the warpath against the tribes on the Peace River, they came from the south in canoes to Lesser Slave Lake and, leaving their canoes there, proceeded overland. Finding that the lake-dwelling Indians did not possess their own warlike attributes and ideas, the Crees showed their contempt by bestowing on the lake dwellers the epithet of 'awonak' or 'slaves.'

"By way of Great Slave Lake the traveller reached the land of the Slave Indians, and to the babel of tongues is added still another dialect. Revolution, the most important settlement on the southern shore, is the meeting place of the Indian trappers from east and west, north and south. The Southern Indians, the Crees and Chipewyans, are represented chiefly by the imported servants of the traders, this point marking the northern limit of the influence of both these nations. Three highways lead from Resolution—one to the northwest following the waters of the Mackenzie to Beaufort Sea, one due north to the country of the Yellow Knife Indians, and the third east to the lakes and plains of the Arctic prairies and the home of the caribou and musk ox.

FORT RELIANCE.

"To the east a cruise of 200 miles along the shores of Great Slave Lake—one of the great lakes of the world with an approximate area of 11,500 square miles—brings the traveller to Fort Reliance. From this point the trail leads overland until the headwaters of rivers flowing to Hudson Bay are reached. Here are the great Arctic prairies, a country well flowered by nature except with trees.

"From any point of vantage can be seen an apparently endless expanse of grass, moss and Arctic flowers. Sparkling lakes nestle in the valleys, and winding streams disturb the quiet of the scene as they tumble their way down their many rapids to mingle their waters finally with those of far-distant Hudson Bay.

"The rolling country is the home of the caribou, the wolf, the Arctic fox and the remnants of the few remaining herds of musk ox to be found on the mainland. The streams and lakes are plentifully stocked with fish, and their shores are the nesting grounds of many varieties of waterfowl. The potential wealth of this Arctic plains area lies in its undoubted ability to yield liberal supplies of meat and hides from caribou and other hardy animals, fish from its waters and fur from its hills.

"Humanity is but poorly represented on the Arctic prairies. A small band of Indians, who winter along the northern fringe of timber, each Spring follows the caribou in their northern migration, and lives entirely upon caribou meat and fish. Eskimo from the shores of Coronation Gulf to the northwest and coastal points to the eastward move each Spring toward the Helon River to meet the same migration on its way to the Arctic coast. The only permanent residents are three bands of Eskimo who base their operations on the shores of Kasba, Sigolgyjusk and Baker Lakes, from which points they eke out a living from the eastern sections of these northern plains.

WHERE FRANKLIN CAMPED

"Starting again from Resolution, another road leads to Rae, on a northern arm of Great Slave Lake and the land of the Dog Rib Indians. In 1921 Franklin and his party followed their route to the North. A winter camp was built half way between Great Slave and Great Bear Lakes, which was known as Fort Enterprise. From this point a season was spent in exploration of the Coppermine River and the shores of Coronation Gulf. Part of this route was also followed by Hearne of the Hudson's Bay Company, when from 1769 to 1772 he pioneered the valley of the Coppermine River. One of the great tragedies of the North was enacted during this trip, when the Indians who accompanied Hearne massacred more than twenty defenseless Eskimo men, women and children, camped at a point since known as Bloody Fall, on the lower reach of the Coppermine.

"During the past winter a unique event occurred in the vicinity of Fort Enterprise, about 150 miles north of Great Slave Lake, the spot where Sir John Franklin, with Lieutenant Back, spent such a terrible year of hunger and privation in 1821 and 1822. Two years ago, while an official of the Canadian Government was making a patrol from the bottom of Bathurst Inlet, 500 miles over a bleak and desolate territory to Rae, he had with him a young Eskimo youth from Coronation Gulf. They had many adventures on the way, but, on reaching Rae, the young Eskimo was delighted at what appeared to him a veritable metropolis, although it cannot boast of more than half a hundred people.

"So enamored with the place was the youth that he wanted to remain, forgetting entirely the pretty wife he had left in a distant igloo. The official, however, had no intention of permitting the youth to remain, for, had he done so, the lad's tribesmen would have assumed that the white man had killed him, and so would probably have taken his own life in retaliation.

A PEACE MEETING

"When they finally returned to Bathurst Inlet the young native must have told his tribesmen how well they had been treated by the Indians and, as a result, the Eskimo in a body appeared shortly after Christmas at Fort Enterprise. Here, though face to face with their traditional enemies, the Indians, a ten-day powwow of feast and dance took the place of bloody war.

"It was the first occasion on record where groups of Eskimos and Indians from these districts have buried the hatchet, and is in marked contrast to the warlike attitude of the time of Hearne.

"The Dog Rib Indians are one of the larger tribes of the North. Long association with the white trader has advanced them to a life of semi-civilization, but they still depend upon the wild life of the country for an existence. As they wander over a wide country of rocky hills, some of which are timbered, though sparsely, their harvest consists of fur, fish, caribou and moose, with rabbits to fill in periods when larger game is not available. Much of this area has been reserved by the government of Canada as a hunting and trapping ground for the exclusive use of the natives.

"To the west and north of Resolution lies the valley of the Mackenzie River. Hay River, a settlement lying near Great Slave Lake in the broad valley of the river from which the community takes its name, is the home of a well-conducted boarding school, two missions and several trading establishments.

"Providence lies on a level plain on the bank of the Mackenzie. The buildings of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, of the mission with its boarding school for native children, and of the several trading companies are practically the only permanent structures in the settlement. At points further south the Indian and half-breed trappers have built for themselves cabins from which they pursue their activities, but the natives of the Providence district are still the itinerant people of a hundred years ago. Many of them are born, live and die in their native tepees and brush camps.

NAVIGATION UNINTERRUPTED

"Between Providence and Simpson on the way north the river narrows and runs swiftly, but navigation is uninterrupted. Simpson is located on a large island just below the confluence of the Liard and the Mackenzie Rivers. It is one of the larger settlements of the Territories, and was at one time the trade headquarters for the whole valley of the Mackenzie. Originally a typical Hudson's Bay Company fort, dating from the early days of the last century, it has grown to be a prosperous settlement with missions, hospitals, schools, a Royal Canadian Mounted Police post, a government wireless station, a number of trading establishments and a government Indian agency which conducts an experimental farm. The surrounding country, consisting of rolling hills lightly covered with timber, has up to, date produced little but fur, though it is not without promise for the future. The Rocky Mountains are less than 100 miles to the northwest, and far back in the mountain lies a valley about which little is known beyond the fact that in it hot springs are so numerous that its temperature has been materially affected. While the surrounding country suffers from a somewhat rigorous climate, the 'semi-tropical valley,' as it has come to be known, sees but little snow and is the winter home of a great variety of wild life.

"The Liard River is the highway serving the territory to the west. It boasts of a steamboat service, adequate to the needs of the country, which each year carries a wealth of high-grade furs to the markets of the world. The upper reaches of the Liard, penetrating far into the mountain ranges, connect through British Columbia with established routes of travel leading to the Pacific Coast.

"Sixty miles below Simpson the Mackenzie enters a bolder and more rugged country, and for many miles the traveler is regaled with true Western mountain scenery. When the river swings back to the foothills, Wrigley, a fur post active enough in winter but presenting little of interest during the open season, is passed, and the journey is continued to Norman. This settlement stands on the high banks of the Mackenzie at the mouth of Great Bear River. The usual essentials of a northern post are here in evidence. The country, east and west for many miles, is tributary to this post.

"The Great Bear River is the highway to Great Bear Lake and the country beyond as far as Coronation Gulf, while to the west an overland trail follows the valley of the Gravel River to the headwaters of the Stewart River and on to the Yukon. The Great Bear River is shallow and swift, but can be ascended by suitably constructed power boats. Great Bear Lake is the largest lake in the northland, covering an area of something like 12,100 square miles, but its use as a transport route is limited to not more than three months in each season, as it is icebound for the rest of the year.

"Much of interest centres around Norman. Not only is it the trade centre of a large and productive district, but the scenic and mineral resources are also outstanding. A few miles from the settlement lie lignite coal beds of doubtful commercial importance, but spectacular, having burned continuously at least since the first exploration of the river by Mackenzie in 1789. To the north of the post lies a prominent mountain known as Bear Rock, and along the western horizon lie the bold peaks of the Rocky Mountains. The burning of the coal seams and the three peculiar red stains, probably caused by oxide of iron, which show on the face of Bear Rock have given rise to a typical Indian legend.

"Many years ago, according to the story, both the people and the game of this area were giants of their kind. A giant hunter armed with bow and arrows, while standing on Bear Rock, saw a colony of giant beaver in Bear River. With his arrows he secured three of these, but several of his arrows which had missed their mark remained embedded in the river bottom, but one end still showing above the water. As in all the northern rivers sunk trees are to be seen, the story-teller points out the giant arrows without difficulty. The hunter then skinned three to the beaver and spread the skins on the face of Bear Rock to dry; the blood left the three stains in the shape of the three beaver skins. Taking some of the beaver meat to the point where the coal now burns, the hunter made a fire to cook a meal, but the fire burned so fiercely that the ground became ignited and has been burning ever since.

"Fifty miles below Norman there is every evidence of an oil field of economic importance, but the cost of a pipeline or other means of transportation prohibits, for the present, its development on any major scale. It has given promise enough to suggest the establishment of a small refinery for the production of gasoline and oil fuel to supply the local demands.

"Further north the river flows through a canyon known as the Ramaparts, whose white limestone walls rise 150 feet above the water. From the foot of the Ramaparts, Good Hope can be seen crowning a high point on the eastern side of the river. This settlement is sixteen miles south of the Arctic Circle and is a large and prosperous fur-trading centre. It is also the northern limit of the Hare Indian nation, as at the next settlement (Arctic Red River) their language will be understood only with difficulty, that of the Loucheux tribe having taken its place.

"The settlements of Arctic Red River and McPherson are the trading centres of the country entirely apart from the valley of the Mackenzie to the south. McPherson was established early in the last century, and was at one time the gateway to the Yukon Valley. An eighty-mile portage across a comparatively low-lying country leads to the headwaters of the Porcupine River, which joins the Yukon at Fort Yukon. The delta of the Mackenzie marks the north-eastern limits of a group of Indian tribes which spreads south and west to the valley of the Yukon.

"The most northerly post on the Mackenzie is on an island in the river delta that is known as 'Akliavik,' meaning, in the Eskimo language 'Where the bear abounds.' Here the sun in summer is visible throughout each of the twenty-four hours, and here is another important boundary between native races—the meeting point of Indian and Eskimo. Originally this area was controlled entirely by the Eskimo, but the Indians following the white man have extended their hunting grounds to the north, and the Eskimo are gradually retiring to the Arctic coast line.

"Akliavik is also the junction of two transportation routes, one of which follows the Mackenzie Valley, while the other is the ocean route from Pacific Coast ports which leads through Bering Sea and along the northern coast of Alaska. Both routes have their drawbacks. The cost via the river route is excessive, and on the ocean route there is the ever-present danger of loss of both ship and cargo when rounding the northerly capes of Alaska.

"The shores of Beaufort Sea are still the undisputed heritage of the Eskimo. Between the Alaska boundary and the eastern end of the delta of the Mackenzie lie four settlements—Demarcation, Point Herschel, Shingle Point and Kittigazuit—whose inhabitants, living largely on the resources of the country, draw their harvest from both land and sea. The hills produce caribou, which meat both food and winter clothing; from the lakes and streams the natives secure fish, while the ocean supplies more fish and various kinds of seal and white whale, which solve the problem for materials for boats, tents and footwear and add to the food supply. While tree life is no longer in evidence, the heavy drift from the Mackenzie has stored the beaches with fuel adequate for many years to come, placing the Eskimos of this area in a different position from their brothers to the east, who are largely dependent upon sea-mammal oil for heat and light.

"Both the eastern and western groups received their first impression of civilization from the whalers, while those of the central area are only now drawing their first knowledge of the world from the fur traders from the south. The influences prior to the white invasion are still stamped on all, in clothing, accoutrements and home life. These differences are, however, entirely regional; the language throughout the Eskimo world is basically the same; and a study of the folklore proves the common origin of the Eskimo people from Siberia to Greenland.

"The government of Canada is confronted with a complex problem in the administration of the Far North, but, in so far as it is possible, the various situations have been met as they have arisen. Communication is maintained by a well-organized mail service and an efficient system of wireless telegraphy operation stations at Edmonton, in Alberta; at Fort Smith, Resolution, Simpson and Akliavik in the Northwest Territories, and at Herschel Island, Dawson and Mayo in the Yukon. Schools and hospitals are subsidized, relief is given to the sick and destitute, game sanctuaries are maintained while wild life is molested by no one, and many thousands of square miles of territory are set aside as hunting and trapping grounds for the sole use of the native population.

Eiffel Tower at Last Wins Paris by Place in Art and Romances

Paris.—After dominating the sky line of Paris for almost forty years, the Eiffel Tower has become popular with Parisians.

Always intensely partisan wherever the beauty of their city is concerned, the natives of Paris for long after the exposition of 1889 were unanimous in condemning the huge skeleton of steel and cable towering above the Champ-de-Mars.

Artists and writers have changed public opinion. For years the tower has been an integral part of the background of all the innumerable paintings of the quays. Within the last four years at least four romances have been published in which hero and heroine, typically Parisian in every other respect, found the tower a trysting place. Native opinion changed.

The immediate result was tribute, somewhat "stated, to the memory of Gustave Eiffel, the engineer who built the tower. The monument, a bust on a circular dais, will be erected at the base of the tower. It will be in place in time for commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Eiffel. The engineer was born in 1832 at Dijon, on the Cote d'Or.

Turkey to Cease Use of Arabic Letters June 1

Latin Characters Learned at State Schools Under Reform Ordered by Kemal

People Approve Change

Angora, Turkey.—Mustapha Kemal Pasha's major reform in the westernization of Turkey will go into effect officially on June 1. After that date Arabic writing will be entirely forbidden throughout the country and all Turks will be required to use the Latin characters which they have been learning in special government schools.

Although state papers have been written in the Latin alphabet ever since the reform was first inaugurated Arabic letters were permitted in private communications. During this time all citizens between the ages of sixteen and forty have been required to attend the national schools to learn the new characters.

Kemal Teaches Classes

The reform has proved so popular that many men and women more than forty have attended the classes, some of which have been taught by Kemal himself.

The misfortune of King Amanullah of Afghanistan, who lost his throne because of the efforts to force Occidental civilization upon his subjects, has made little impression here. The only concession which the government has made to tradition has been an amendment making Arabic legal for inscriptions in the mosques and for the Koran, and the temporary postponement of the adoption of Sunday as a legal holiday instead of the Islamic Friday.

Young Minister Dies

The death of Nedjati Bey, the young Minister of Public Instruction, who had charge of the reform program, has not brought any relaxation in the government's efforts to teach the new alphabet to the 14,000,000 inhabitants. Nedjati died of appendicitis and it was charged in the Turkish press that the inefficiency of his physicians was responsible.

The Minister of Public Hygiene, replying to a question in the National Assembly, defended the physicians and declared the death was due solely to the gravity of the illness.

Premier Ismet Pasha temporarily took over the portfolio and continued the campaign. It is learned that Wafsi Bey, who has resigned as Ambassador to Moscow and who formerly was Minister of Public Instruction, will succeed Nedjati. He recently was elected Deputy for Smyrna.

Pharaoh's Games Shown at Cairo

New Tut-ankh-Amen Relics on View for First Time

Cairo.—Howard Carter is continuing his work on the Tut-ankh-Amen tomb at Luxor and treasures of antiquity are still being brought to view, much to the delight of tourists. The public is now having its first opportunity of seeing at the museum the new objects from the tomb, which arrived in Cairo recently in 90 cases, heavily guarded. To-day, lovely alabaster vases and inlaid falcons are exposed to view, also figures, finely worked, of the of the sacred ibis and a representation of the Egyptian god "Bes," a form of vase, which is still sealed, probably containing scent, an interesting hand drill for burning holes in wood and making fire, a gold scepter inlaid with multicolored glass, which is a unique find, a lovely silver vase which looks as though made yesterday.

Other exhibits include a large model in alabaster of a boat, this heads forming the prow and stern, a cabin in the form of a shrine, while in the bow is seated a woman, with two bronze swords, of which only one specimen is known—that Khephes sword.

Another remarkable exhibit is a large bed, heavily gold plated, which resembles other types of Tut-ankh-Amen furniture, the fibre springs remaining in an extraordinary state of preservation.

Interesting examples of games played at Pharaoh's court are also shown, including a fine ebony gaming board, still highly polished, marked out in squares on which are pictures which determine the counters' moves. An ivory drawer contains knucklebones and four flat pieces of ivory, which were thrown as an equivalent of dice, and another two miniature ivory gaming boards.

Other lovely new exhibits are now on view, and many smaller, which are still unpacked, and unlikely to be shown before next winter, when it is probable that the Tut-ankh-Amen tomb will have been completely cleared.

Australian Gold Yield Declining

Largely Increased Costs of Production the Cause of Diminution

Melbourne, Vic.—Gold is to be found practically all over Australia, but for various reasons, not the least of them labor troubles and consequently largely increased costs of production, the yield is declining very considerably. In 1928 the total gold obtained was 457,201 ounces fine, which is 47,856 ounces less than in 1927. The decrease applies to all states.

In Victoria the amount won was less by 4,621 ounces than in 1927, and the New South Wales yield fell short by 5,200 ounces. The closing of the rich Mount Morgan mine in Queensland, which also abounds in copper, gave Queensland a very low return, but with the price of copper now at an attractive level, there is a big possibility that capital will be forthcoming to enable work to be resumed there.

Mines in Western Australia, the richest of all the states in gold, maintained a steady output, the yield being not far below that of 1927.

Canada Figures on Immigration

Dominion Looks for Onflux of Nearly 200,000 This Year

Homestead Filings Gain

Immigration to Canada opened up a little brighter and more auspiciously in 1929, and should the increment recorded in January, which is not a month of active movement, be continued throughout the year the aggregate for the twelve months should come much nearer the 200,000 mark, says a recent Canadian Pacific Railway bulletin. The total of new arrivals in January was 4,164, as compared with 3,632 in 1928, an increase of 12.78 per cent. Newcomers from the British Isles totaled 1,133, as compared with 771 in the previous year, an increase of 46.95 per cent. Citizens of the United States totaled 1,573, as against 1,223, an increase of 28.61 per cent. The number of entrants from all other countries was 1,458, against 1,638, a decline of 14.13 per cent.

Swelling the movement from across the international border, "which was the outstanding and most gratifying feature of the immigration situation in 1928," says the bulletin, were 1,767 Canadians who had made permanent homes in the United States and were returning to Canada to live, as compared with 1,683 in January, 1928, an increase of 4.99 per cent.

"The month of January likewise gave indication of an active year of land settlement, with every likelihood of its surpassing in this regard 1928, which was the most outstanding of the post-war period. Canadian farm lands are again coming strongly into the limelight as the cheapest of their kind in the world. New transportation arrangements for the Peace River country of Northern Alberta have induced a flow of settlers into that territory, which doubled its population last year.

"Projected new railway lines in yet unexploited territory in the Northwest is focusing attention upon settlement possibilities there. Vacant lands in developed communities are proving more attractive to newcomers with small capital. Considerable expansion is taking place in the irrigated sections of Southern Alberta. There is every sign that a considerable volume of new colonization will be accomplished in 1929.

"Homestead filings, after recording an increase of nearly 150 per cent. in 1928 over 1927, started off the year with a further increment of 66 per cent. 761 homesteads being filed upon in January, compared with 457 in the corresponding month of the previous year. Alberta showed 356 filings, against 201 in 1928, this being largely due to new acreage taken up in the Peace River country, which section accounted for 33 per cent. of the Province's filings in 1928. Filings in Saskatchewan rose from 194 to 309, both Prince Albert and Moose Jaw offices recording large increases. British Columbia more than doubled its filings, figures rising from eleven to twenty-four. Manitoba was the only Province to register a decline, figures dropping from fifty-one to forty-two.

"The Canada Colonization Association similarly started off the year in an active manner. After settling 667 families in 1928, bringing its record of colonization since inception up to 3,038 families on 715,789 acres of land worth $29,653,958, twenty-five families were placed on 3,227 acres of land worth $53,490 in January of the present year, all with the exception of five families in Ontario being in the Western Provinces. The association has an elaborate program of settlement for the present year, with 400 families definitely ready for settlement at the opening of 1929, in addition to which a reservoir of 500 families is to be created and maintained at that strength. This is being effected through temporary placement, while a cottage scheme is being developed for the benefit of British settlers. Only those families will be immediately settled on the land which have sufficient means of their own or which insist on immediate settlement this to further offset possibility of difficulties arising from inexperience. From these temporary placements the association will draw steadily for its permanent settlement activities.

Land Values Rise

"Canadian farm lands, though still cheaper than others of their class elsewhere, are rising steadily in value. In 1901 the average acre of farm land in Canada, improved and unimproved together with buildings thereon, was $22.13 per acre, whereas in 1911 it had risen to $30.41, and in 1928 was worth $38. Taking the Province of Alberta as typical of Western Canada in 1901, the average acre was worth $6.12; in 1911, $21.71, and in 1928, $28, the rise in the first decade of the century exhibiting the effect of active settlement. Due to their higher productive value in the last few years farm land values in many Provinces have risen lately.

"Also because farm labor is coming to be increasingly regarded as the logical and surest road to farm ownership, the Governments figures on farm wages prevailing last year have interest. The demand for farm workers in Canada at all times is greater than the supply. Last year the Canadian Pacific Railway was able to fill only about half of the applications filed with it for single male workers, much less than half of those for domestics, and only about a quarter of those for families on farms.

"For the whole of Canada the average wages per month of farm help during the summer season of 1928 were for men $40 and for women $24. In addition, the value of the board is placed at $23 for men and $20 for women. The total wages and board thus amounted to $63 for men and $44 for women. In Western Canada wages were higher, being $81 and $41 respectively in Manitoba; $69 and $47 in Saskatchewan; $72 and $49 in Alberta, and $77 and $52 in British Columbia."

Cost of Living

Quebec Evenement (Cons.): There are four immense regions of different character in the United States. The conditions of life vary as much from one region to another as between two widely-separated countries like, for example, Mexico and Spain. In the north-east, the north-centre and the far west certain industries and certain labor unions are formidably organized. Some artisans, such as automobile workers, construction hands and railway workers, receive salaries which seem very large, even in comparison with the salaries paid in Canada. But in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Seattle and San Francisco the cost of living is materially higher than it is with us.

NEW BABY DISTURBS TIRED OFFICE WORKER

"When my oldest boy was just a few weeks old he was badly constipated from my milk," says a Nebraska mother. "He kept us awake so much, my husband almost slept over his desk at the office. Then my doctor got us to give Baby some Castoria and the next day he was much better. His stomach and bowels began acting perfectly and he gave us no more trouble." Avoid imitations of Castoria. The Fletcher signature marks the genuine, purely vegetable, harmless Castoria, doctors everywhere advise for those ill of babies and children, such as colic, constipation, colds, biliousness, etc.

OBITUARY

THE LATE MRS. R. L. ANDERSON

It is with deep regret we record the death of Mrs. R. L. Anderson (May) who passed away at Ste. Agathe, on Friday last, after an illness of about two and a half years, at the early age of 83.

She was the youngest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Anderson, and only and beloved sister of Mrs. Geo. Y. Deacon, of Lachute.

A most impressive service was held in the United Church on Saturday afternoon last, conducted by the Rev. T. C. Cassidy who spoke in loving terms of her cheerfulness and patience during her long illness and comforting the bereaved ones in their hour of sorrow. Many beautiful flowers bore tribute of the sympathy of friends and relatives. After the service, loving and tender hands bore her to Lachute Cemetery.

She leaves to mourn her loss besides her husband, two children, Glenys and Norman and her sister, Mrs. Geo. Y. Deacon.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE MRS. WM. HEATLIE

Lovingly laid to rest in the peaceful little cemetery at Ogdensburg, on Friday last, April 12th., were the remains of Mrs. Elizabeth Heatlie, a noble Christian character who had for many, many years been one of the leading factors for good in that community. The late Mrs. Heatlie and her husband who predeceased her some years ago, were known to every one as "Uncle Bill" and "Aunt Lizzie" and though having no family of their own they expended their loving spirit upon many others whom they adopted and cared for. The funeral service was held in their old home which is now the property of Mr. and Mrs. Robt. McPaul and the service was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Doxie of Grenville and Rev. Mr. Penman, of Dalesville, both of whom most affectionately referred to the faithful spirit of deceased, whose life had been spent in loving service.

Many beautiful floral tokens bore silent tribute to the love and esteem in which she was held and the remains were taken to their last resting place, followed by a large number of sympathizing friends.

The RED HOUSE MYSTERY

by A. MILNE

Antony tried to put himself in Cayley's place—Cayley, when Antony had first discovered him, hammering at the door and crying, "Let me in!" What ever had happened inside the office, whoever had killed Robert, Cayley knew all about it, and knew that Mark was not inside, and had not escaped by the window. But it was necessary to Cayley's plans—to Mark's plans if he were acting in concert—that he should be thought so to have escaped. At some time, then, while he was hammering (the key in his pocket) at the locked door, he must suddenly have remembered—with what a shock!—that a mistake had been made. A window had not been left open!

And then Antony's sudden appearance! Here was a complication. And Antony suggesting that they should try the window! Why, the window was just what he wanted to avoid. No wonder he had seemed dazed at first.

Ah, and here at last was the explanation why they had gone the longest way round—and yet run. It was Cayley's only chance of getting a start on Antony, of getting to the windows first, of working them open somehow before Antony caught him up. Even if that were impossible, he must get there first, just to make sure. So he had run. But Antony had kept up with him. They had broken in the window together, and gone into the office. But Cayley was not done yet. There was the dressing-room window! But quietly, quietly, Antony must not hear.

And Antony didn't hear. Indeed, he had played up to Cayley splendidly. Not only had he called attention to the open window, but he had carefully explained to Cayley why Mark had chosen this particular window in preference to the office window. And Cayley had agreed that probably that was the reason. How he must have chuckled to himself!

They were outside on the lawn again now, Bill and Antony, and Bill was listening open-mouthed to his friend's theory of yesterday's happenings. It only gave them another mystery to solve.

"What's that?" said Antony. "Mark. Where's Mark? If he never went into the office at all, then where is he now?"

"I don't say that he never went into the office. In fact, he must have gone. Elsie heard him." He stopped and repeated slowly, "She heard him—at least she says she did. But if he were there, he came out again by the door."

"Well, but where does that lead you?" "Where it led Mark. The passage." "Do you mean that he's been hiding there all the time?"

Antony was silent until Bill had repeated his question, and then with an effort he came out of his thoughts and answered him.

"We'd better make certain. Could you be a sleuth-hound, Bill—one of those that travel on their stomachs very noisily? I mean, could you get near enough to the pond to make sure that Cayley is still there, without letting him see you?"

"Rather!" He got up eagerly. "You wait."

Antony's head shot up suddenly. "Why, that was what Mark said," he cried.

"Mark?" "Yes. What Elsie heard him say."

"Yes... I suppose she couldn't have made a mistake, Bill? She did hear him?"

"She couldn't have mistaken his voice, if that's what you mean."

"Oh?" "Mark had an extraordinary characteristic voice."

"Oh?" "Rather high-pitched, you know, or even more so if anything." He rattled these words off in Mark's rather monotonous, high-pitched voice, and then laughed, and added in his natural voice, "I say, that was really rather good."

Antony nodded quickly. "That was like it?" he said.

"Exactly." "Yes." He got up and squeezed Bill's arm. "Well, just go and see about Cayley, and then we'll get moving. I shall be in the library."

"Right." Bill nodded and walked off in the direction of the pond. This was glorious fun, this was life. The immediate program could hardly be bettered.

To Antony, who was older and who realized into what deep waters they were getting, it did not seem fun. But it was amazingly interesting. It was like looking at an opal, and discovering with every movement of it some new color, some new gleam of light reflected, and yet never really seeing the opal as a whole. His brain could not get hold of it.

But there were moments when he almost had it... and then turned away from it. He had seen more of life than Bill, but he had never seen murder before, and this which was in his mind now, and to which he was afraid to listen, was not just the hot-blooded killing which any man may come to if he loses control. It was something much more horrible. Too horrible to be true. Then let him look again for the truth. He looked again—but it was all out of focus.

CHAPTER XIV.

Bill had come back, and had reported, rather breathless, that Cayley was still at the pond. They stood in front of the row of rooms. Antony took down the Reverend Theodore Usher's famous volume, and felt for the spring. Bill pulled. The shelves swung open toward them.

"By jove!" said Bill, "it is a narrow way."

There was an opening about a yard square in front of them, which had something the look of a brick fireplace, a fireplace raised about two feet from the ground. But, save for one row of bricks in front, the floor of it was empty. Antony took a torch from his pocket and flashed it down into the blackness.

"Good Lord!" said Bill, turning round with a start, "Cayley!"

"Look," he whispered to the eager Bill. "The steps begin down there. Six feet down."

He flashed his torch up again. There was a handhold of iron, a sort of large iron staple, in the bricks in front of them.

"You swing off from there," said Bill. "At least, I suppose you do. I wonder how Ruth Norris liked doing it."

"Cayley helped her, I should think. ... It's funny."

"Shall I go first?" asked Bill, obviously longing to do so.

Antony shook his head with a smile. "I think I will, if you don't mind very much, Bill."

"Righto," he said. "Go on."

"Well, we'll just make sure we can get back again, first. It really wouldn't be fair on the Inspector if we got stuck down here for the rest of our lives. He's got enough to do trying to find Mark, but if he has to find you and me as well—"

Antony swung down on the ledge of bricks, swung his feet over, and sat there for a moment, his legs dangling. He flashed his torch into the darkness again, so as to make sure where the steps began; then returned it to his pocket, seized the staple in front of him and swung himself down. His feet touched the steps beneath him, and he let go.

"Is it all right?" said Bill anxiously.

"All right. I'll just go down to the bottom of the steps and back. Stay there."

The light shone down by his feet. His head began to disappear. For a little while Bill, craning down the opening, could still see faint splashes of light, and could hear slow uncertain footsteps; for a little longer he could fancy that he saw and heard them; then he was alone. ...

Well, not quite alone. There was a sudden voice in the hall outside. "Good Lord!" said Bill, turning round with a start, "Cayley!"

If he were not so quick in thought as Antony, he was quick enough in action. Thought was not demanded

now. To close the secret door safely but noiselessly, to make sure that the books were in the right places, to move away to another row of shelves—the difficulty was not to decide what to do, but to do all this in five seconds rather than in six.

"Ah, there you are," said Cayley from the doorway.

"Hallo!" said Bill, in surprise, looking up from the fourth volume of "The Life and Works of Samuel Taylor Coleridge." "Have they finished?"

"Finished what?" "The pond," said Bill, wondering why he was reading Coleridge on such a fine afternoon. Desperately he tried to think of a good reason... verifying a quotation—an argument with Antony—that would do. But what quotation?

"Oh, no. They're still at it. Where's Gillingham?" "The Ancient Mariner"—water, water, everywhere—or was that something else? Water, water everywhere—

"Tony? Oh, he's about somewhere. They aren't finding anything at the pond, are they?"

"No. But they like doing it. Something off their minds when they can say they've done it."

Bill, deep in his book, looked up and said "Yes," and went back to it again. He was just getting to the place.

"What's the book?" said Cayley, coming up to him. Out of the corner of his eye he glanced at the shelf of books as he came. Bill saw that glance and wondered. Was there anything there to give away the secret?

"I was just looking up a quotation," he drawled. "Tony and I had a bet about it. You know that thing—about—er—water, water everywhere, and—er—not a drop to drink."

(But what on earth, he wondered to himself, were they betting about?) "Nor any drop to drink," to be accurate."

Bill looked at him in surprise. Then a happy smile came on his face. "Quite sure?" he said.

"Of course." "Then you've saved me a lot of trouble. That's what the bet was about." He closed the book with a slam, but it back in its shelf, and began to feel for his pipe and tobacco.

"I was a fool to bet with Tony," he added. "He always knows that sort of thing."

So far, so good. But here was Cayley still in the library, and here was Antony, all unsuspecting, in the passage. When Antony came back he would not be surprised to find the door closed, because the whole object of his going had been to see if he could open it easily from the inside. At any moment, then, the bookshelf might swing back and show Antony's head in the gap. A nice surprise for Cayley!

Strict Treatment

Venezuela Moves Rebel Students to New Prison in Secret Trip

Caracas.—After the conflict between the government and the university students at Caracas last October the rebellious students were kept under arrest and at work on the highways some thirty miles east of Caracas. They were housed under canvas and guarded by soldiers so as to prevent escape or communication with their families.

Recently, however, in the midst of the night, the easterly quarter of this city was aroused by the rumble of a procession of columns loaded with the students. The rumor of what was about to happen had already spread through the town, and a thousand or more persons, for the most part relatives of the young men, were awaiting their arrival in the neighborhood of the Carabobo plaza.

The government, it was learned, had decided to transfer the students, some 200 in number, to another scene of action. They were brought to the city in sixteen lorries, under a guard of armed soldiers, and in charge of the Governor of the Federal District, General Velasco, and of the prefect of police.

No communication was permitted with them during the journey, and they were speedily transferred to a line of buses and departed from the city by a side route, so as to avoid notice. They took the road for the interior.

Telephonic information that the procession had passed through the City of Valencia about 10 o'clock the next morning, apparently en route for Puerto Cabello, was soon reported. In the fortress of San Carlos at that post the students had been imprisoned at the time of the uprising last fall. Nothing is known concerning the further purpose of the government respecting the prisoners, but uneasiness prevails among their friends.

Tells of Sail Up Yalu River in China

Trustees of American Museum of Natural History Relates Unusual Experience

SAW MILLIONS OF BIRDS

An unusual experience, a voyage on the Yalu River in China in a sailboat in company with natives, is related in a recent issue of Natural History, journal of the American Museum of Natural History, by William Douglas Burden, a trustee of that institution.

"At Peking, where I was to join Mason Sear, for a pursuit of the great Asiatic sheep on the Sino-Mongolian frontier, I heard of conditions on the Yalu River, border of Manchuria, which sent me off at once on a hurried preliminary trip," he says. "I had been given to understand that there were millions and millions of ducks and geese down on the lower reaches of that river in September, and although I could not verify the statement in Peking, the prospect was so inviting that I decided to go. Accordingly, I wrote of my intentions to the American consul at Antung."

"The Yalu River forms the boundary between Manchuria and Korea. The Port of Antung is on the Chinese side of the river, but, to all intents and purposes, the Japanese control the city. They own the silk which is exported in such large quantities, and they own the lumber which comes down the river from the Manchurian forests to the northward."

"The natural beauty of Antung itself is nothing to boast of, and the sight that greets your eyes when you get off the train at 5 o'clock in the morning may well be left undescribed. A rickshaw was at hand, and I proceeded to the Eagle's Nest—the American Consulate—a little hotel situated high above the city, of which we should properly be ashamed. Mr. Langdon, the consul, met me at the gate, and I was delighted to find that all necessary arrangements had been made for a trip to the mouth of the river."

TRAVEL ON A SAMPAN.

"A few hours later we were on our way, Langdon and I sprawled out on the deck of our sampan, while a pair of 'missing links,' who squatted on their haunches in the stern, guided our craft through the maze of junks that lined the bank four and five rods deep. The sampan was ours for three days at approximately 50 cents a day, and the luxury we enjoyed was in proportion to expense. We hoisted sail and the wind and tide helped us on our way."

"The river life was fascinating. Here coolies were unloading lumber, chanting as they worked. Never have I listened to such cadence or swing. It sounded almost like a roundelay, with a soloist to give the cue. Russian boat songs are famous for their sweep and rhythm, but nothing could be more entrancing than this singing on the Yalu River. When a large number of men sing as they work the energy that they put into their work is revealed in the song, and the rise and fall of hundreds of voices coming across the water from a distance is thrilling."

"Other junks, laden to the water's edge, were being towed upstream by means of ropes attached to the bank, and every heave was accompanied with a renewed burst of song. But all this activity I am describing was Chinese. The lazy Korean anchored his boat and sat motionless, pipe in mouth and cagewire hat on head, and waited for the turn of the tide."

"By the middle of the afternoon we had reached the flats, and here we beheld a most extraordinary thing—countless millions of birds. As Langdon said, it was the sort of thing you read about, but seldom see yourself. Sometimes the sky was black with geese, and sometimes black with ducks. Sometimes it was the water that was covered with them in every direction as far as the eye could see, and sometimes the flat mud marshes for miles on end were alive with moving bodies. When all the geese flew up together the noise of their wings filled the air, sounding one moment like an express train and the next like some gigantic waterfall. It was a paradise for the ornithologist; I don't believe that there is anything else in the world like the lower reaches of the Yalu River in late September."

HUNTING WILD FOWL

"We hunted until dark. We had no 'blinds' of any kind, so the hunting consisted largely of wading around knee-deep in the softest kind of mud, staring the birds as we went. It was almost hopeless—a real 'wild goose chase.'"

"With millions of targets dangling before our eyes, it was astonishing how hard it was to score a kill. When there was sufficient cover in the form of long grass and reeds to use as blind, the only geese that flew over were so high out of range. We had to lie down in the soft, wet mud and, while trying to resemble a log, crane our necks in every direction to be ready for any bird that happened to come close enough for a shot. When a bean goose was seen coming over we would wait till the very last moment before making a move. Then we would jump up and shoot as quickly as possible. By the time we could fire, however, the goose would already have turned. Under these conditions the satisfaction of seeing a great gander come tumbling out of the sky with a flop into the mud can well be imagined. It was shooting under difficulties, but before dark we got about eighteen birds—Asiatic duck, mallard, teal and geese—and we had worked hard for every one."

"At sunset tremendous flocks of ducks, stretching out sometimes for a quarter of a mile in the sky, went whirring overhead, always too high, and away into the west. Flock after flock came by in endless succession, teal and then mallard, then Asiatics and more mallard. Away they went, with the speed of the wind, into the sunset. One could keep them in sight for several minutes, a scattering of black dots against the crimson sky, and then they would swing south on their great migration. Thousands upon thousands upon thousands of ducks must have left the marshes that evening. As it grew dark one could no longer see, but one could still hear them, the whistling of millions of wings passing overhead."

A CHEERLESS PROSPECT

"Finally we slopped back in the mud to our sampan, and crawled up on the ridiculous little raft. Most of the mud came with us, and Langdon's setter took care to shake himself over everything. We were soaked through and caked with mud from head to foot. A cold wind came off the marsh. There was absolutely no prospect of our getting clean or warm, or of satisfying a ravenous appetite. When it got too cold on deck we crawled down into a black manhole which in every way resembled a coffin."

"All sampans have these miniature dungeons below decks, and they are cunningly contrived in true Chinese style so that they are too low for one to sit up in and too short to lie down in. Moreover, when the lid is on not a breath of air can get in. Langdon and I found ourselves trying to eat supper by candlelight in this den. I almost lost my appetite when I saw hundreds of shiny-backed cockroaches of all sizes crawling over the place."

"The prospect of spending the night with roaches that were companionably inclined did not seem conducive to sleep, but none the less it was managed. Lao Li (Old Forest) and his assistant boatman could do nothing to make us comfortable, for neither of us could give orders in Chinese, and, needless to say, they were unable to understand a word of English. It pleased them to observe the foreigners shifting for themselves."

"As I dozed off to sleep, I could still hear geese knocking on the mud flats—just a jumble of sounds it was, broken occasionally by the wild cry of some lonely gander flying low overhead in search of a night's resting place."

"At the earliest streaks of dawn we were awakened by a terrific bombardment of firecrackers from a nearby passing junk. The coolies, I was surprised to see, held the explosives in their hands as they went off, and there was much talk and bickering over it all. Langdon felt certain that 'Chinese man catch plenty face' shooting off firecrackers. This craving for face he thought was the cause of the bombardment. After a few minutes' observation, however, I became convinced that the cause was simply an incurable but completely childish passion for noise."

A LONG SHOT.

"We were on our way again long before sunrise. Jumping off the sampan on a cold misty morning into gurgling muck was far from pleasant. The tide came in so fast that before long we were waist-deep in water. Soon it became advisable to retire to the sampan. Moreover, it was just as well that we stopped hunting, for we were losing most of the birds that we killed. One incident of our experience will give an idea of the great quantity of geese. We had a rifle along, and, shortly after reaching the sampan, Langdon put up the 500-yard sight and took just one shot out onto a stretch of water that was black with birds. When we reached the spot, lo and behold, a dead gander was lying on the water, with a bullet through it!

"After a while the tide dropped a little, and we succeeded in bagging several more geese before we started home. Langdon has never hunted the marshes before, but it was easy to see that if one studied them carefully and took pains over equipment and put up blinds, the shooting there could not be equalled anywhere in the world."

"On our way back to Antung night overtook us, and the moon sailed out among billowy clouds. Great lumber rafts came swinging down the river in the gloom. These rafts are of giant size—in scale an acre or so. The Chinese build huts and have open fires on board. We passed an almost endless succession of loaded junks with sails set, slowly making their way up or down the river."

"Sometimes crowds of Chinese were singing roundelays on deck, and as the sound would grow faint in the distance, the elusive beauty of it seemed to slip out of reach on the night wind. We sat listening intently. There was a gentle ripple on the water, and I remember distinctly one junk that sailed right across the path of the reflected moonbeams, with her beautiful square-ribbed sails gracefully swollen in the breeze. The sound of singing came pulsating now faint, now strong, across the water, and it seemed that in that single picture was reflected all the romance of the East."

"We reached Antung at midnight, and with bag and baggage over our heads, wandered up through squalid narrow streets till we secured rickshaws. When we arrived at the Consulate, it was doubly guarded by Chinese soldiers. The bandits (Hung-tutze) or red-beards had been creating a disturbance in the Chinese quarter—the very section through which we had just come with all our goods and chattels on our heads."

Indian Farming in Canada

The total area under field crops on the Indian Reserves in Canada in 1928 according to figures collected by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in co-operation with the Department of Indian Affairs was 201,287 acres.

Dr. Dinsdale T. Young relates an amusing story of an old man in Northumberland, who took the chair at a lecture. He was very nervous, and opened his speech by saying, "Now, friends, I am very shy; this is the first time I have ever stood on my feet." As the people laughed, the chairman tried again thus: "I did not put it rightly; I mean that this is the first time I have ever sat in a chair." The laughter was renewed, and the chairman, at the third attempt, said: "You know what I mean; this is the first time I have ever opened my mouth!"

REAL GOOD ARGUMENT

Find Londoner's Physique Improved

Anatomist Says an Analysis Shows They Are Growing Taller and Fairer

Children in Better Health

In an article contributed to The Westminster Gazette, L. G. Parsons, Professor of Anatomy at London University and lecturer on anatomy at St. Thomas's Hospital, described distinct improvement in the physique of Londoners, according to the London correspondent of The Journal of the American Medical Association.

"It is generally supposed," says the correspondent, "that urban life in England has favored an increase of dark at the expense of fair persons. But Mr. Parsons finds the opposite for Londoners. Following an earlier anthropologist, Dr. Beddoe, he classifies hair tints as fair, red, brown, dark brown and black; but, since it is not always easy to define the boundary line between them, spaces between these divisions are made, into which half-tints and doubtful shades may go and later on be divided equally between colors on either side. When the percentages of these different shades are worked out, those of the dark-brown and black-haired people are added together and make a useful 'hair index.'"

"An example will make this clear. In 1927, 1,485 adult male Londoners had a hair index of 27.4; that is to say, that percentage had either dark brown or black hair; but in 1890, according to the late Dr. Beddoe, 2,400 had an index of 39.7. This looks as if the London men were becoming fairer. In the women the change is more striking still, for their hair index has dropped from 42.7 in 1860 to 23.9 in 1927."

Color of Hair Indexed

"Before jumping to the conclusion that the Londoner has grown fairer in the sixty-eight years since 1860, one must remember that about that time men wore their hair much longer than they do now, that they bathed and washed their heads much less often, and that anatomical studies had to be placed on their chairs to guard against the various fats and oils with which they plastered their locks. It is therefore well to see whether eye color bears out the testimony of the hair."

"In 1927, 1,500 adult male Londoners gave an eye index of 33.2, while 2,565 London boys gave 33.1. Four hundred and eleven adult females had 35.3 per cent of dark eyes, while 1,922 London girls had 34.3 per cent. Sixty-eight years ago the male eye index for London was 35.7, against the 33.2 of last year, while the female one was 40.7 against 35.3. Thus the eyes, too, are growing lighter. This may point either to more healthy surroundings, favoring the survival of Nordic children, or to a larger influx than formerly from the light-colored Northern and Eastern parts of the country."

Mr. Parsons then takes stature. He finds that a morning suburban train discharges crowds of young men and women at a London terminus remarkable for their size, splendid health and fine physique. These are the representatives of the great middle class, Mr. Parsons thinks, and are possibly the finest human specimens in Europe. To this class the London medical students belong. The youths average 5 feet 9 inches in height, while the girls to 5 feet 5 inches during the last twenty years, and show no signs of being content with that."

Healthier Than They Look

"Mr. Parsons next notices the artisans pouring out of the works. Among these are some of the most skillful craftsmen in the world, and yet they seem a different breed from the boys just described. About 5 feet 6 inches in height would be a generous average to give them, while their rounded shoulders and slouching gait make them look shorter and less robust than they really are. Among these men are the survivors of the poor children of twenty or thirty years ago, who were pitiable and ill-clothed, suffering from rickets and enlarged glands in the neck. Only the strongest survived, and the wonder is that they have made so good a fight."

"Mr. Parsons thinks that the question of height depends more on environment and less on heredity than do any of the other racial characteristics, and that, given proper ration of oxygen, food and water, the offspring of these men will surprise us by the quickness with which they will react to their surroundings and reach, in a generation or two, their hereditary racial maximum, which he believes is about 5 feet 9 inches."

"He inspected what the London County Council looks on as its worst school, which is one of the children of these people attend. Although mentally and physically below the average of most of the other schools, they were certainly much healthier, cleaner and better nourished than the children he remembers running about the streets thirty years ago, and he is sure that they will grow into finer men, and, probably, better citizens than their fathers. Rickets has gone; tuberculosis is going; eyes, skins, teeth and throats are treated skillfully and without cost to the sufferer; only the dreadful overcrowding at night still goes on, and must do so until the last areas are broken up."

Game Fishing in Canada

Fishing for sport has its economic side in a country of such famous game fish as the salmon of the Restigouche, the black bass of the Quebec and Ontario highlands, and the trout of the Nipigon. Sport fishing is also an important feature of the wild life of Western Canada. It forms one of the chief attractions of Canada's national parks.

Seed Catalogue Offers Big Help

Plans and Selection of Varieties Should all be Made for the Coming Season

SOME SUGGESTIONS

The safest practical method to employ in deciding on varieties of vegetables is to consult the most successful gardener in the community. What have proved the best with him will generally suit your own location, although it is always advisable and interesting to try one or two new kinds each year. Depend upon standard varieties which have stood the test of several seasons, however, for the main crop. Do not try to grow too many kinds in a small garden, and only grow those for which a taste has been developed. Order plenty of good seed—the seed cost is the cheapest factor in gardening—so that there will be plenty to replant if some accident such as a flood or a frost spoils the first. In the average garden, it will pay to plant a few rows of the hardier sorts very early, even if there is only a fifty-fifty chance of these coming through. The earliest and most quickly grown vegetables are the best, and because they are early they are relished more than those which come later. To hasten growth, provide a supply of nitrate of soda, which should be applied at the rate of about one ounce to a square yard of soil every two weeks for the first month or two after the garden is put in.

Study the Catalogue

While the modern seed catalogue is even more attractively and colorfully illustrated than those issued years ago, which constituted a stock joke for cartoonists and special writers, the book to-day is an up-to-the-minute and accurate fund of information for any gardener. Descriptions can be absolutely depended upon, and illustrations are from actual photographs. Amateur gardeners would be well advised to supply themselves with a catalogue before attempting to commence operations. Many of their questions will be answered and varieties will be fully explained. In most of the catalogues to-day will be found very useful tables in the flower section which will give the height, time of flowering, and the adaptability of the plants to certain conditions. A selection of different types of the same vegetable is listed so that one can have a succession of peas, corn and similar vegetables which will extend his season well beyond the average of a few years ago.

Some Handy Annuals

Even the busy person who cannot afford to spend very much time on the garden can have a garden containing many brilliant annuals. Of course, these must be easy to produce—requiring little care and not much in the way of special location or soil. They must bloom freely, furnishing a good supply of flowers throughout most of the season. They must not be too particular in the way of steady watering, because we are planning now a flower garden for the busy person. Studied from all of these points, the following list seems to come as close to the requirements as one could possibly expect: snapdragons, marigolds, poppies, larkspurs, nasturtiums, scabiosa, zinnias and salpiglossis. For a hot, sunny and sandy spot portulaca is unexcelled. This low-spreading, bright flower will thrive even when neglected. With these annuals and possibly mignonette added for fragrance sake, because only nasturtiums and scabiosa in the above list have any noticeable perfume, the garden will last from mid-June until autumn, and about the only requirement will be the keeping down of the weeds early in the season, and cutting off leading blooms later on. With the exception of the poppy, which does not last well in water, and the portulaca, which is rather too small to clip, all these flowers will furnish an abundance of bloom for the vases indoors. They can be planted in clumps or beds, depending on color and size.

A Glasgow boy named McLeod allowed half-a-crown the other day. Not every McLeod, however, has a silver lining.

Joan: "What's made you so late?" Jim: "I ran into a garage on the way." "Did you need some repairs, then?" "No; but the garage will."

BE FRIENDLY

Be friendly if you wish to have friends. Nobody has friends who spends his time making enemies. When you spend your time making friends, you have friends, and the only way to make friends is to be friendly. Be friendly at home. Some men are the friendliest souls outside their homes. They have pals by the score. Everybody who knows them in business, or at the lodge, or the club, will say, "What a friendly chap he is." But at home they may never have a friendly word for the wife, while the children get sour looks and harsh words if they dare make the least noise to upset his majesty.

Some women are like that, too. Hear them talk on the telephone in honeyed phrases, or accompany them to the Sewing Circle or the Women's Club, and their friendliness attracts other women like sugar draws flies in summertime. But when the man comes home tired and weary with the day's struggle and needs a pal to understand his mood, one who will lavish friendship and love and understanding, often all she feeds him with is complaints and grumbles, toasted. Only it's the man who gets toasted. Not every man or woman is like this, friendly outside snarling at home. But too many of us are that way.

Be friendly. Cultivate friendship. In the garden of life friendship is one of the choicest flowers that blooms. If neglected it will run to waste and become a mere weed. Uncultivated, friendship droops and declines. But nurtured it thrives and grows more beautiful as the days pass.

Be friendly with your employees, if you are an employer. Know them, be interested in them and their families. If they're in trouble, help them out. Think of them as belonging to your family. Invest friendship in them and see the dividends you'll get back. If you are an employee, be friendly to the boss. Don't be hostile to him in thought, or word, or act. He's paying you, anyhow, and while he may be making money out of you still you work for him and should be faithful. Think of yourself as working with him. Perhaps bye and bye, you'll be a real partner; who knows?

Be friendly to animals, to little children, to the unfortunate and lonely. It will all be repaid with interest.

CANADA

Canada makes the proud boast that few countries of its size have so much foreign capital invested within its borders as has the Dominion. This aggregates $5,796,669,000, an amount which on a per capita basis would give the sum of $575 for every man, woman and child in the Dominion. The forms which the investments take are multifarious, the principal, however, being manufactures, farm lands and railways. The increasing popularity of Canada as a land of safe investment is strongly evidenced by the fact that the amount of invested capital has more than doubled in ten years, while during the last two years $10,000,000 has been invested each month.

An outstanding feature of the statistics is that during the last decade Great Britain decreased its holdings from 77 per cent of the total to 39, while the United States increased its holdings from 17 per cent to 57. From the British point of view, however, it is pointed out that the investments from the old land in 1928 were twice as large as in the previous year, while that from the United States was one-third less. Prof. Kenneth W. Taylor of the McMaster University, Toronto, who is the statistician responsible for the figures, points to them as an evidence of the falsity of the oft-repeated statement that "the United States is buying up Canada." It is hardly to be expected, however, that Canada will object very strenuously to this form of British and American competition. As another favorable indication of the stability of the Dominion, it is estimated that the country's wealth amounts to the handsome total of more than $27,000,000,000, most of this sum being owned by the Canadians themselves.

One of the biggest department stores in Canada recently opened a branch in Calgary, Alta. On the morning of the opening, the new arrival's chief competitor devoted his advertising space in the local papers to a hearty welcome to his fresh rival in business. This action would certainly appear to be a very practical application of the Golden Rule.—Christian Science Monitor.

WEDDING BELLS

KENYON — DOWD.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hamilton Dowd, Cypress River, Man., was the scene of a very pretty wedding on March 28th., when the Rev. J. S. Caldwell, pastor of the United Church here, and at one time pastor at Grenville, Que., the former home of the bride's mother, united in the bonds of holy matrimony their eldest daughter Gladys L. to Thomas B. Kenyon, Hilton, Man. The bride looked charming in a gown of emerald green georgette, trimmed with cream lace and carried a bouquet of white carnations and fern. The bride and bridegroom were unattended. The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful gold watch. The bride's gift to the groom a signet ring. Following the ceremony, dinner was served to the guests, consisting of only immediate relatives and a few friends of the contracting parties.

The table was centred by a three tier wedding cake, the room was decorated with wedding bells and streamers of yellow and white. For travelling, the bride chose a brown flat canton crepe trimmed with beige over which she wore a fawn tweed coat, with beige fur and brown broad cloth trimmings. Her hat was monkeyskin taffeta; and shoes and gloves to match. Amid showers of rice and confetti and the good wishes of their friends, the happy couple left for Brandon in which city and other points the honeymoon will be spent.

King of Desert Odd Character

Lowell Thomas Throws More Light on Col. Lawrence

TOPSY-TURVY LIFE

Mother Never Had Any Idea What He Would Do Next

"Probably I shall never marry; I am sure no woman would be willing to put up with me."

The speaker was Colonel T. A. "Lawrence of Arabia," the uncrowned King of the Desert, who is now in Britain hiding his identity under the disguise of "Alcraftman Shaw."

His present movements are as much shrouded in mystery as were his actions during the days when, under the burning sun of Arabia, he frustrated the Turks and came unscathed through a thousand perils.

During the years immediately following the war he led a curious life in London, going without sleep for two or three nights at a time, eating his meals with as much irregularity as any Bedouin in the desert, and never knowing for certain where he would turn up next.

Honors Refused

Many people seem to have the impression that Lawrence has behaved in a strange manner since the war; that he changed his name to T. E. Shaw and went into the Royal Air Force as a private simply because he is disgruntled over the way the Allies treated his Arabs. Many think that he has been putting like a child.

I doubt if there is anything in this, writes Lowell Thomas in the London Daily News. During the time I was with him in Arabia he told me what he thought would happen to the Arabs after the war. He said that French Colonial ambitions in Syria would probably prevent the Arabs from getting control of that country, which they coveted. He also believed the British Government would be unable to keep its promise to the Arabs.

He predicted that things would happen exactly as they have occurred. Furthermore, he said he did not believe the Arabs would ever be able to unite as one nation, because they are much too fond of fighting among themselves.

I have seen him many times after the war, and he does not seem incurably bitter over what had happened. He tells me frankly that his own reason for declining decorations that were offered to him was that he did not wish to accept honors in return for having put through a military campaign based on false promises. His refusal of knighthood and other rewards was not merely an erratic move.

His Mother

No woman, I am sure, could ever understand Lawrence. Even to his mother he is an enigma.

I remember her when she came to tea at our flat in London one afternoon just before she left for the Chinese-Tibetan frontier, where she intended to spend the rest of her days living with another son who is a medical missionary.

She was a typical English lady, a little softer and a little more cultured than many, rather thin, slightly taller than her son. Her hair was grey. She had twinkling, merry, blue eyes, with a touch of sadness in them.

She had lost her husband many years before, and afterwards during the war her two eldest sons had been killed. Col. Lawrence once remarked to me that those two were by far the ablest men in the family. Her face was strong with some of the iron determination that you see in Colonel Lawrence's face. She was just what you would want the mother of such a man to be.

She said that she herself had never been quite able to fathom her son "T. E." or "Ned," as his family and childhood associates called him. He had always led a topsy-turvy life, was something of a Bedouin at heart, and she never had the slightest idea what he was going to do next.

"As a boy he was always climbing to dangerous heights where he should not go. He would go off on long, lonely walking tours without any companion, and without permission. He read ravenously, but usually did his studying at night when others slept. I always looked upon him as something of a genius."

And when she spoke of her son as a genius there was no noticeable trace of pride in her voice. Yet she undoubtedly is proud of him.

Genius though he may be, Lawrence is one of those persons whom you would pass in the street without noticing. At a glance he looks utterly insignificant, whether he be in mufti or in army uniform. Rarely have I seen a man in khaki who looked less like a soldier.

But in the desert he was transformed. In his pure white Arab robes, with a curved gold dagger at his waist, he seemed to be an Oriental prince of Circassian blood, or one of the minor prophets come to life.

But no matter what he wears he is most impressive in personal contact. After you have talked with him for a few minutes you are struck with the unusualness of the man. He has that sort of eye which is often referred to as penetrating.

I first came in contact with him when we were both in the Holy City shortly after Allenby had captured Jerusalem from the Turks. As he sat in a room with a group of officers he always seemed to draw himself into a corner, as though anxious to keep out of the conversation.

There he was, a European, and a fair-haired, pink-cheeked one at that. In Arab costume, the only European in Palestine in such conspicuous regalia. Of course, he knew this. But it didn't bother him in the least.

There were plenty of army officers in Cairo who used to scoff at Lawrence because he was seen frequently on the streets of the Egyptian capital in his resplendent Arab robes. They charged him with strutting. I knew different. He was playing a game.

He knew there were Arabs in Egypt who were watching him. Every move he made was relayed back to Arabia. He wanted the Arabs to know that he was heart and soul with their movement and not afraid to dress as they dressed, even when among his open people. He was an actor, and he played his part magnificently, even in the face of ridicule.

Annoyed G.H.Q.

The World War pulled him out of obscurity against his will. He was sent to Cairo in 1914, and given the job of handling spies. He sent out natives whose duty it was to bring back information regarding the whereabouts of all the units in the Turkish Army. He was highly successful.

Nevertheless, he seemed to irritate his superiors. He showed no enthusiasm for military formalities, and thought nothing of disregarding rules such as wearing a Sam Browne belt, polishing his boots and saluting.

The Arab revolt broke out in Mecca. The Arab defeated the Turks; then ran out of both ammunition and enthusiasm. Lawrence obtained leave to go down the Arabian coast on a little trip. His superiors were not sorry to let him go. They thought him rather trying on the nerves.

When he got to Arabia it was clear to him that it would be fairly easy for the Arabs to win a complete victory over the Turks. He passed his suggestions on to Cairo and they told him to stay in the desert. He did, with the result that all the world now knows.

Medals in a Tin Box

Among the British officers who were associated with the Arab revolt Lawrence came in contact most frequently with Major William E. Marshall, the chief medical officer. They were tent mates, and came as near being pals as Lawrence ever becomes with any man.

After the campaign Major Marshall gathered together his own kit as well as the things in the tent that belonged to Lawrence, and in rummaging through a pile of debris he found several of Lawrence's medals in an empty chocolate tin. That was what the "uncrowned king" of the desert thought of his decorations.

Marshall could never mention his friend without chuckling. Obviously he looked upon Lawrence as a strange freak, a sort of enigmatic wizard, a man equally brilliant as a scholar, military strategist, and leader of men. Several times Marshall remarked to me that Lawrence's one desire now was to get away completely—escape from the eyes of the curious world. He seemed to regard his friend as a combination of philosophy and hermit.

I believe that Marshall understood Lawrence better than any other man, but unfortunately it is now impossible to get more information from him because not long ago he went to the Sudan for further study of tropical disease and died in Khartoum.—Montreal Star.

Rioting in Spain Goes On Unabated

Tablets to Rivera Are Destroyed at Universities—General Strike of Workers is Now Feared

Madrid—Though more than a thousand participants in the recent student manifestations have been arrested, disorders are continuing daily in Madrid and in other university towns of Spain, and there is serious fear that the workers may take occasion to declare a general strike.

As the jails are filled to overflowing, many of the rioters have been temporarily held at police stations and barracks. Among the prisoners are many sons of well-known families. Several journalists and professors also have been detained.

At the University of Salamanca the students have destroyed a tablet commemorative of General Primo de Rivera's being made a doctor honoris causa and a similar tablet to the Minister of the Interior has been effaced at the University of Santiago.

In Madrid show windows in some shops which had displayed Primo de Rivera's picture have been smashed.

Nearly all of the members of the faculty of Madrid University signed a petition of protest in which the government was declared responsible for the outbreak of the disorders.

Public Health in Sister Provinces

Quebec and Saskatchewan Find Public Health Unit Plan of Great Value to Public Well Being

WILL ONTARIO FOLLOW

Leading public health authorities of four Canadian provinces unite, in the following remarkable symposium culled from the current issue of the Canadian Public Health Journal, in telling what is the matter with public health work in rural Canada, and how it can be improved.

J. W. S. McCullough, M.D., C.M., D.P.H., Chief Inspector, Department of Health, Ontario, writes that in 99 per cent. of all Canadian municipalities, the medical health officer is a part-time practising physician, appointed by the local council.

"The part-time medical officer of health has been to a large extent a failure," he adds—thereby condemning the present system. "He is untrained for his work, is paid very little and that grudgingly for his services. His official position brings him into conflict (1) with his fellow-practitioners, who will not report (contagious disease, etc.) to a rival in practice, (2) with possible clientele who fear quarantine if communicable disease is found in the family. This fact and the dissatisfaction of persons who are isolated for the public good, interfere with the doctor's practice and since the practice of his profession is his chief interest it is readily seen that in the endeavor to serve two masters the less remunerative and less attractive one of public health is neglected."

As a rule, this veteran authority states, it is only in large cities with efficient medical health organizations, that any great progress is being made in public health, and to remedy rural conditions he strongly recommends the 'County Health Unit.'

"The county health, or 'combined area' health unit is bound to come; the only question is, how soon?" he writes. As the financing of these full-time, county health departments, the writer's expressed personal opinion is that the cost should be borne by "a joint contribution of the three elements of government, the federal, the provincial and the municipal."

Dr. Alphonse Lessard, director, and Dr. Emile Nadeau, assistant director of the Quebec Provincial Bureau of Health, write as follows:

"What is the 'County Health Unit' system which we are operating in our Province of Quebec? It consists in the establishment, in a county or in two small neighboring counties, of what might be designated as a 'Bureau of Health in miniature,' composed of a full-time medical officer, two or more public health nurses, a sanitary inspector charged with the enforcement of the health regulations and with the education of the municipal officers, together with a secretary to handle the clerical work of the office which is generally located in the principal town of the county. The whole population of the county is thus submitted to constant supervision on the part of this staff."

There are eight of these units now functioning in the Province of Quebec, and four more will soon be in operation shortly.

"In the counties where health units have been in operation for a period of two or three years," the director and his assistant write, "the general death rate has been reduced, and especially the infant mortality rate and the death rate from contagious and infectious diseases, with also a marked reduction in the number of cases, this being largely due to better education of the public, immediate control of epidemics, free distribution of serums and vaccines, and free ambulant clinics for tuberculosis and child welfare."

How one community saved a $6,000 hospital fee, in a single year, through the functioning of a County Health Unit, is vouched for by H. E. Young, M.D., LL.D., Provincial Health Officer, British Columbia.

"In the year previous to the opening of our first medical unit, the district in which it was situated had paid $6,200 to the Isolation Hospital for cases that had been sent into it," he writes.

"The following year, 1928, under exactly the same local conditions, but with a full-time medical health officer in charge with a staff of four nurses and a sanitary inspector, we were able to reduce the Isolation Hospital charge to less than $100. This was an argument that appealed directly to the municipal council.

Touching upon the matter of finance, Dr. Young writes: "I would urge the serious consideration of the resolution passed by the Dominion Council of Health, which is mentioned at the opening of this article, 'Resolved that the Dominion Government be respectfully requested to further the establishment of Full-time Health Units by the voting of an annual grant of money for this purpose.'"

The illusion that the country is a much healthier place to live in than the city is shattered by F. C. Middleton, M.D., D.P.H., Acting Deputy Minister, Department of Public Health, Regina, Saskatchewan, in a complete and able summary of the County Health Unit plan, as functioning in Saskatchewan.

"The vital statistics history in the registration area of the United States would appear to indicate that the rural districts have at present a higher death rate than the cities," he writes. "This, however, did not obtain until the past 10 or 15 years. Previous to 1900 the mortality rate in rural districts was only about three-fourths that of the cities; recently it has been 8 or 10 per cent. higher."

The most probable explanation, he suggests, is that "there is more effective, continuous and organized protection of health in cities than in rural districts."

Characterizing the County Health Unit as "the greatest single medium for the advancement of public health to-day," he writes as follows:

"We are hoping to have at least four of these full-time health districts in operation this year, and our objective will not be reached until there are at least 25 such districts established."

The Canadian Public Health Journal is the official organ of the Canadian Public Health Association—the Dominion-wide organization of public health workers. All Departments of Health in Canada are represented.

Robot Traffic Cop Goes Berserk Answering Toots

Philadelphia Motorists Find "Kidding the Cop" Great Fun

Philadelphia—The "mechanical traffic cop" stationed at Thirty-fourth Street and Powell Avenue has gone "berserk." That may not be exactly the right word but it has a sound that describes the way the mechanical traffic cop has gone.

To the uninformed, let it be said that a mechanical traffic cop is an electrical contrivance that automatically changes the stop and go lights upon hearing the sound of the motorist's horn.

When the announcement came out in the Philadelphia papers that a mechanical cop was to be stationed at Thirty-fourth Street and Powell Avenue a lot of people, having little else to do and wishing to keep up with the world, motored out to see how it worked. They found the mechanical cop was an oblong box with an honest open face fastened to a pole by the roadside.

Certainly not much to look at in the way of a cop. Along came a motorist and blew a clarion blast. The mechanical cop seemed to shiver as the light went from red to green. Right behind came another motorist and he blew in a different key, longer and louder. At the other side of the crossroads more motorists arrived and began to blow.

The light went from green to red, paused on the amber then back to green. More blowing and more changes, until the poor mechanical "cop" began to show signs of getting berserk and berserker.

It was "duck soup" for the motorists. Never before had they seen such a sensitive cop. Why, you can drive down to Broad and Chestnut Streets and blow your horn until your battery gasps for air and it has no more effect on the traffic cop than if you were a couple of love birds twittering away in the spring sunshine.

That's how it is with a traffic cop who is regular at his trade. But the mechanical officer—that's something else again. And so the motorists were having a swell time "kidding it along," well realizing that they seldom got the opportunity to "kid" a traffic cop.

And so the rapid changes from red to amber to green to amber to green to amber to red continued with the chorus of many horns until a fellow came along with one of those sporty little roadsters and a horn that goes ta, ta, ta. That "berserked" the mechanical cop. His lights went out altogether and stayed out.—Christian Science Monitor.

The Congress has shown an inclination to treat a President with the same kind of consideration it extends to our birds and other wild life.—Calvin Coolidge.

This place (Washington) is like a big summer hotel; you make intimate friends and then never see them again.—James A. Reed, ex-Senator from Missouri.

"It is no use," says Sir H. F. Dickens, "being a slow burglar." If he takes too much time he generally gets more time than he wants."

YOUTHFULLY LOVELY.

An interesting example of what can be accomplished by the home seamstress is illustrated in a charming simple dress that is utterly smart and feminine. It rather leans toward the new Princess silhouette with its swathed hips and flaring side that dips the hem. Shirring in bodice at end of V of collarless neckline is a new style detail. This attractive dress chooses black dull silk crepe with trimming pieces of seves and looped bow at left hip of black shir velvet. For the 36-inch bust, 2 1/2 yards of 40-inch material is sufficient with 3/4 yard of 40-inch contrasting. Style No. 400 is designed in sizes 16, 18, 20 years, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust. It is very smart in printed silk crepe, self-trimmed for immediate and all Spring wear. Pattern price 20c in stamps or coin (coin is preferred). Wrap coin carefully.

Great Britain and America Are Compared

Spender Says Relations of Two Nations Complete- mentary, Not Com- petitive

London—J. Alfred Spender, well known English journalist, was the guest of honor at a luncheon of the American Chamber of Commerce recently, speaking on "Britain and America—Contrasts and Similarities." He said that there was one fact of essential importance for people on both sides of the Atlantic to remember if they were to understand each other, namely, that while the United States had a population of only 34 to the square mile, Great Britain had 600. Referring to differences between the old and new countries, he said Great Britain was in duty bound to support the League of Nations in the maintenance of European peace. Despite her war losses, enormous tax burdens and vast unemployment, she had stabilized the pound sterling saved hundreds of thousands of her people from starvation, and was meeting her just obligations, all of which, the speaker declared, was an achievement not without merit.

America, on the other hand, was a world waiting to be explored and developed, where there was no limit to the demand if the supply could be provided. Business, he said, was pre-eminent in the United States, where if one were asked to name the six greatest men would not as in Europe, mention statesmen and politicians, but men like Ford and Edison, great engineers, inventors and merchants. America's vast natural resources and abundance of money had been blessing the whole world; not only had it helped to put the disabled nations upon its feet but had given the American people a great spending capacity, most useful in absorbing the products of other countries able to leap over the United States tariff wall. Great Britain manufactured goods which in some cases American genius did not supply, thus indicating the relationship of the two nations to be complementary rather than competitive.

The American people, said Mr. Spender, were invariably courteous and hospitable to Englishmen. The importance of a good understanding between the two nations lay in the fact that the United States was about to become the universal creditor of the world.

If the Police Department fails, it will be only because I haven't measured up to the task before me, because my hands are absolutely free.—Grover A. Whalen.

"Rex Battle and his Mount Royal Hotel Concert Orchestra": the announcement rings familiar in the ears of our local Radio enthusiasts. But Mr. Rex Battle will be greatly missed by lovers of good music, who have enjoyed his programs broadcast regularly from Montreal. On Sunday morning last, the Lachute troop of Boy Scouts, attended the St. Simeon's Service for their Annual Church parade. The service opened by the singing of the National Anthem, and a very vital and common mistake was first pointed out by the Rev. J. A. Lackey, who said many sang "God Save Our King" instead of "God Save the King." He spoke of the falling of many nations, adding, that "The House of David will Rule Forever." During the offertory, Mr. T. Robson rendered a solo, "Thanks Be To God."

Mining Market Sound for Future

NORANDA STRONG

BY LLOYD J. MOORE
Member Standard Stock and Mining
Exchange

Reversals overtook the entire Canadian mining list during the final week of March. Sharp declines were registered all across the list. There was a fairly substantial recovery before the Easter holiday, but indications were present that the selling movement was not entirely finished. There were some exceptional opportunities for securing stocks at bargain prices. Noranda dipped below $47 and Nickel went to $41.75 on March 26th, when call money commanded 20 per cent. in New York. The liquidation of mining stocks was caused primarily by the disastrous break which took place in New York. International Nickel was one of the principal sufferers, but although the decline in this stock was sharper than in most of the others, it was not greatly out of line. Much distress selling took place. This involved a great many people, since the stock is very widely held in Canada. The New York selling had every appearance of including heavy short sales augmenting the already large New York interest on the short side that has been known to exist.

Nickel recovered vigorously to $52 before the end of the week, but was again subject to further selling on Easter Monday in New York while the Canadian exchanges were closed. The sponsors of Nickel are quite as emphatic concerning its merits for a long hold as they were in more buoyant markets of January and February. Its market course has been more or less in line with the general trend of New York stocks. From the Canadian angle at least, it was vulnerable because of the large amount of stock held on thin margins.

Noranda Meeting

One of the most interesting developments of the week was the annual meeting of Noranda Mines, at which President J. Y. Murdoch gave much data of a favorable character concerning recent operations at the Hornsby property. It was announced that diamond-drilling data shows the continuance of ore to a depth of 1,500 feet. The management is conservatively estimating a production of 2,000 tons from two reverberatory smelting units toward the latter part of the year. It is expected unofficially, however, that the production will be about 2,500 tons a day. Full advantage is being taken of the present high price of copper. The highest quotations available are being obtained for the current production of metal. The results of exploration and development work since the beginning of this year have been highly encouraging. Occurrences of sulphide below the 375-foot level are shown to be of very large dimensions containing much highly profitable ore. Mr. Murdoch was unable to give any further figures of new ore placed in sight beyond saying that the work thus far this year had shown up more ore than would be handled by the smelter during the entire twelve months. Last year's work showed $9 of ore placed in sight for each $1 put through the smelter. In other words—the additions of new ore amounted to $52,000,000 and gross production was approximately $6,000,000. As has been indicated in these columns in previous articles the Hornsby smelter is performing much beyond expectations.

The shareholders were informed that only a small portion of the possibilities of the property has yet been explored and the officials are confident that ore will be found at much greater depth than have been investigated to the present.

The shareholders approved the by-law to issue one new share for each thirty held at $45 per share.

Sherritt-Gordon

Among the other stocks that recovered readily from the selling pressure of the past week, none was more impressive than Sherritt-Gordon. This stock rebounded from its low at $7.10 to a high at $8.75 before the close of the week. On numerous occasions recently Sherritt stock has seemed scarce and remarkably good buying power has been noticed. Upon the completion of construction of the railway line to the property probably by September the development of the mine will enter a new phase. It has been practically decided that the Hudson Bay smelter will be located adjacent to the lime deposits about twenty miles from the Flin Flon and not far distant from Cranberry Portage. This smelter will treat concentrates from both properties according to present indications. It seemed like unnecessary duplication to have two smelters in Northern Manitoba. Both Hudson Bay and Sherritt-Gordon should benefit substantially from the cooperative arrangement. Both properties are developing well. Current prices of copper should swell the probable profits of each and especially of Sherritt-Gordon, which has a higher copper content in its ore. It is difficult to predict the metal markets far ahead. The price of around 21½ cents for copper looks entirely too high-to-be-reasonable. The demand and supply situation points to the continuance of comparatively high prices. An average of around 17 cents a pound over a long period would enable the new Canadian producers to earn very handsome profits. Such an estimated price appears to be very conservative.

BY LLOYD J. MOORE,
Exchange.

Copper Refinery Promised

An announcement of far-reaching importance was made by Premier Ferguson in the Ontario Legislature that a copper refinery would be built by International Nickel-Consolidated Smelters and Ventures, Ltd., in the Sudbury district. The probability is that Sherritt-Gordon and Hudson Bay blister copper will be treated at this refinery. It will have a capacity of 10,000 tons a month and will cost approximately $4,000,000. It will treat Froed blister copper as soon as that mine comes into production. At the same time it is interesting to note that President J. Y. Murdoch has reaffirmed Noranda's intention of building its own refinery at some site to be decided, probably on the Lower St. Lawrence. The Noranda enterprise has British Metals Corporation and Nichols Copper Company associated with it.

General News

Interesting news of the progress of exploration work comes from such prospects as Bobjo and Central Manitoba, both of which are in the district of Patricia. Some changes in the Siscoe mill are being made which should improve the recoveries from this ore. Both Amulet and Abana have receded to quite low prices. Both stocks are now selling at a price from which they should react readily to favorable development news. There has been some talk of re-financing for Conlaurem, but this is not thought to have any foundation facts. The suspension of operation of the Dunkin property in Woman Lake seem to reflect the decision of the management that it is not worth while to continue work.

Don't forget, Mr. Moore answers any questions on mines and mining investments. Address, L. J. Moore & Co., 10 Jordan Street, Toronto.

Unemployment Is Lessened in Great Britain

Baldwin's Policy is Credited With Improvement—Liberal Leader Attacked

London.—Unemployment in Great Britain had decreased by another 86,000 during the past week, thereby wiping off the last of the recent winter's rise total, which is now down to 1,200,000. This announcement in the House of Commons by the Minister of Labor, Sir Arthur Steel-Maitland, on Monday night was loudly cheered by the Conservatives, as it means the Government is now able to claim that Stanley Baldwin's industrial policy, which has been successfully attacked in the recent by-elections by the Liberals and Labor, may after all justify itself.

"It is often said," Sir Arthur added "that unemployment is greater now than when we took office. This is now untrue. It is actually 36,000 less than when we took office, and in addition 550,000 more people have entered into insurable occupations."

The debate was one in which Labor indicted the Government for its failure "to take active measures for stimulating industry by well-considered schemes of national improvement and development." The object of this motion was to show that Labor was not any more backward than the Liberals in proposing schemes for restoring industrial prosperity.

It was thus an occasion not only for the usual interchanges between Labor and the Conservatives, but also for a concentrated attack from both of these parties on Mr. Lloyd George, whose recent dramatic claim that he could reduce unemployment to normal in one year without cost to the taxpayers so caught popular imagination as to have sent up the Liberals' general election prospects by 10 points as measured by London Stock Exchange quotations. Mr. Lloyd George, though given notice of the attack preparing, failed to attend the debate, preferring, it is understood, to give his answer when he addressed a mass meeting at Albert Hall.

Jordan to Give Electric Power for Palestine

Projects on Historic River Will Revolutionize Industries of Holy Land

Tiberias, Palestine.—On the River Jordan, half an hour's journey south of the Sea of Galilee, steady progress is being made in the construction of a great hydro-electric power station which will usher in a new economic era for the Holy Land.

Under the supervising genius of a former Russian revolutionary leader, Pinhas Rutenberg, head of the Odessa police during the Kerensky regime, the storied stream of Bible times is to be made to produce 300,000 horsepower of energy for new Palestine's farms, homes and factories.

HOLY LAND LACKS COAL.

Palestine has no coal of its own, at all events as far as can be judged from superficial geological investigations. Nor can it boast of petroleum deposits worth developing. Its economically exploitable reserves of energy are concentrated in its water resources.

Whoever has the control of these resources can monopolize the driving force of industry and of agriculture, and can influence decisively the economic development of the country. Rutenberg is in that position. Backed by the Zionist organization he obtained the concession for the sole exploitation of these resources and for the supply of electricity for the whole of Palestine, with the exception of Jerusalem, the government having reserved to itself control of the prices for electric current over and above a fixed minimum and a share in the profits.

The scheme which Rutenberg is trying to realize is to use the differences of level to be found along the course of the Jordan from the Lake of Merom to the Dead Sea, starting with the stretch between the Sea of Galilee and Djar. Along this stretch of about ten miles there is a drop of 1150 feet. A little later, in Djar, in the Rutenberg domain proper, down in a rocky hollow, the river comes into view again.

Across the Yarmuk, which coming from an easterly direction here flows into the Jordan, the scaffolding of a dam twenty-five feet high may be seen. This dam, now almost completed, is to force up the waters of the river to a height of fifty feet above the level of the Sea of Galilee in a giant reservoir naturally formed by the hilly character of the region.

TO DIVERT RIVER'S COURSE.

Opposite, across the Jordan, a second dam is being built. This, when completed, is also to force back the waters of the Jordan and to collect them in a reservoir. The picturesque valley bed will then be drained, the Jordan diverted for a short distance from its natural course, and from its reservoir conducted through a canal already partly dug, into the Yarmuk reservoir.

From here a main canal has already been dug under the Haifa-Damascus railway, and after the rainy season will be lined with concrete. The canal then will conduct the waters of the two rivers over the top of the cliff into the turbines of the power station. The foundations of the latter are already laid and the first layer of concrete put down. Gradually machinery from England is arriving. To begin with, three water turbines of 8,000 horsepower each are to be installed.

SIR CHARLES GRANT ROBERTSON

Vice-Chancellor and Principal of the University of Birmingham on his first visit to the Dominion at the invitation of the National Council of Education to be a guest speaker at the conference on "Education and Leisure" to be held at Victoria and Vancouver early in April. He will also address meetings at a number of cities on his way to the coast. His subject will be "Empire Builders" and such names as Drake, Rhodes and Sir Stamford Raffles who became an eastern Rajah will be among the subjects of his lectures. Sir Charles was tutor to the Prince of Wales at Oxford from 1912-1914 and his life has been full of movement and creative work since that time.

Golf and Business

With the rapid approach of warmer weather, the thoughts of the golfer naturally turn towards the links. There was a time not long ago, when it was regarded as bad for business for a business man to play golf. All that has been changed, particularly since the outspoken utterances of the Minister for Overseas Trade in Premier Baldwin's Cabinet, the Hon. D. H. Hacking. "Take your golf clubs with you," he advised the people of Bradford. "Many an order has been obtained through a friendly chat while standing on the fourteenth tee before business has even been mentioned."

Here is a serious-minded man whose business it is to foster business and who bluntly tells the public that it can be effectively fostered on the golf links. There will be those who will challenge his suggestions. Among them may be numbered M. Briand, who, tradition says, once lost the Premiership of France through letting Mr. Lloyd George show him how to swing a golf club at Cannes. But as against the comparatively few protestants, there will be many thousands who will endorse Mr. Hacking's sentiments.

There are, however, one or two qualifications. This reference to a friendly chat "while standing on the fourteenth tee" is not likely to meet with the unqualified approval of those golfers who come up behind such friendly chats and who deplore them just as keenly as they do "four-ball foursomes" of those who persist in replaying missed putts. As a general principle, however, the friendly relations that are so often established during a golf game may well serve as a prelude to closer and more practical associations afterwards. We have been wont to declare for years that "trade follows the flag." Now it is suggested that this must be replaced by the slogan, "Play up to the flag for trade," a slogan which hundreds will approve.—Montreal Star.

LIMERICK CORNER

Joyous Jingles By Gifted Rhymsters

The Contest is closed. For the time being at any rate, the Limerick Contest will be discontinued. There is no question, however, about its popularity with readers as we have been literally swamped with letters. We will be glad, however, to hear from any others who have taken part in the contest, or who have found pleasure in following it in the papers. Let us know what you think of the Limerick Corner and whether or not you would like to see this feature continued.

On the other hand, if you have any ideas for a feature to take the place of Limerick Corner, let us have them. Editor, Limerick Corner, Associated Publishers, 73 Adelaide St. W., Toronto.

Watch your growing children

WATCH the health of your growing children! See that they have the health and energy necessary for their school work and play. For growing children—particularly girls—a rich supply of red blood is essential. Languor, nervousness, depression, fickle appetite or pale, indicate anaemia.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills enrich the blood, prevent anaemia and build healthy bone and tissues. Thousands of mothers have proved this. "My twelve-year-old girl," writes Mrs. Robert Devitt of Brougham, Ontario, "became so pale, so ill and nervous that we had to take her out of school. I tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for her and she gained in weight and strength. She is now the picture of health."

The Waste of Words

Victoria Colonist (Cons.): There is more time lost in the world today by the expenditure of words than in any other way. It is the perennial curse which lies on action. It is the waste of time, of strength and of money. When politicians realize that defensive tactics through the channels of verbiage only denote weakness in themselves, and when they correct that fault they will have made a step on the road to statesmanship. Even in a democratic age men are elected to office for some purpose other than that of quibbling and quarrelling with their political opponents.

New Leprosy Remedy Asserted to Be Sure

Afflicted Natives Rush Joyously for Treatment, Says London Story

London.—A message of hope for the hundreds of thousands suffering from leprosy appears in the annual report of the British Empire Leprosy Relief Association.

The report asserts that leprosy can be cured, and confidently predicts that with adequate public support the association can rid the British Empire of the disease within a generation.

"This wonderful ideal," as the Prince of Wales has called it, is already being worked out, particularly in East and West Africa and India, where the great mass of British lepers exist.

A method of attacking the disease by means of injections has been widely tested with remarkable results, and the association is actively sending out supplies of drugs and chemicals to missionaries and others throughout the affected areas.

Half a million doses have been sent out already.

News of the new treatment and cures has spread far and wide amongst the sufferers.

Instead of hiding themselves and concealing the disease, they are now voluntarily coming forward for treatment. This was unknown ten years ago.

Some of the dispensaries and treatment huts are so overwhelmed with lepers demanding injections that the doctors and their helpers have to turn hundreds away.

A nurse in Northern Tanganyika has written home: The leper clinic up here is in its early stages, but it is very hopeful. We have patients attending from different tribes, and it is the first time up here in this primitive isolated hill district that anyone has come forward for treatment acknowledging himself a leper. It is great to see the hope in their faces now.

The report mentions a recent ruler in India who was a leper for many years. A chief in Uganda now has hope of recovery. Another chief in Nyasaland who has suffered for years is on the way to health.

Buy Empire Goods

Hamilton Spectator (Ind. Cons.): "There are many reasons for increasing our purchases from the United Kingdom," recently declared Mr. H. B. Henwood, of the Bank of Toronto, referring to the work of the Empire Marketing Board and the excessive volume of purchases from the United States; "the very least we can do is to divert most of our possible foreign purchases to British Empire goods." That is a policy which ought to commend itself to all patriotic Canadians, and especially to the governing authorities. "Buy Empire goods" is more than a mere slogan; it would be of no worth if it remained only that. It should be a fixed principle with Canadian shoppers, whether in a large or a small way.

The North-west Passage

Manitoba Free Press (Lib.): As the means of communication between Great Britain and the Far East the Hudson Bay route is incomparably the shortest route. It cuts the distance of 16,000 miles by the Suez, and of 11,000 miles by San Francisco, to 8,000 miles by Prince Rupert. Canadians are not building the Hudson Bay Railway for purposes of war, and hope that it will never be war which will demonstrate its greatest benefits. But they have to yield to Captain Munro when he insists that "the possibilities by this route (as a line of communications) for the British Empire are immense, and are only to be compared with the advent of the Suez and Panama canals, with this exception, that it is all within the British Empire."

Epitaph on a Dog

Here lies at rest, unknown to fame, of dark descent and doubtful name, One "Binks." Here lie his treasures, too.

A ball, a bone, a worried shoe. Nay, stranger, drop no idle tears: He loved one small lad all his years!—Nancy Byrd Turner in "Our Dumb Animal."

We're not going to get snooty about the Einstein theory, because if there's nothing else to be said in its favor, at least no one has written a theme for it.

And the Dog Was Saved

A dog was swimming across the Connecticut River, when one of the Hartford-New York steamboats was bearing down close to the dog who was then about midway of the channel. Had the steamer continued at the speed she was then making it would have been impossible for the dog to have gotten across the channel. Either he would have been struck by the steamer or else he would have been sucked down by the under-tow and, undoubtedly, have met his death in that way, for the channel was extremely narrow there.

I was standing on the upper deck talking with the captain, Captain Bacon. He espied the dog before I did and called my attention to it. He immediately gave orders to slow down the steamer and also to avert her as far as possible, which could be but slightly, away from the dog. And, of course, the dog's life was saved.

This was fifteen or more years ago, but the incident is one that I shall never forget. And I am sure that many others who saw it will never forget it either.

Whenever I see a ruthless, careless automobile driver showing no mercy whatever to a cat, a dog or a chicken that happens to get in his way, this incident comes back to me with special clearness. And what is the checking of the speed of an automobile compared with the slowing down of a large steamer? Would that there could be a Captain Bacon at every automobile wheel!—Ernest Warren Brockway in "Our Dumb Animals"

Old Age Pensions

La Presse (Ind.): The Province of Quebec is not behind in this sphere of philanthropy. Our many charitable and friendly institutions are evidence that this is so. But the Old Age Pensions law which is now occupying public attention assumes a different aspect in the sense that it binds the provinces to a contract, the terms of which are dictated by the federal power and deprive them of their entire liberty of action. We cannot blame the Provincial Government, therefore, for looking twice before it signs the agreement.

Aviators Down in Australian Bush

Plight of Southern Cross Flyers Regarded as Hopeless

Sydney, N.S.W.—Friends of the missing Southern Cross aviators Wednesday hoped and prayed for a fortunate circumstance in the almost certain hopelessness of their plight. Only extreme good fortune, most thought, could result in the rescue of Capt. Charles Kingsford-Smith, his pilot, Charles T. Ulm, and the two with them who Sunday flashed a mysterious message to the world and disappeared somewhere east of Wyndham, Western Australia.

In that message, which they ended with their characteristic "Cherrie," they told of falling motors on their plane and a heavy rainstorm which obscured the ground from their view. They gave their position as "about one hundred miles east of Wyndham"—and then sank into the vastness of the Australian bush, peopled by wild uncivilized savages, some of them cannibalistic pygmies.

The Empire and the Air

United Empire (London): Sir Samuel Hoare, the Minister for Air, says that he gets a little tired of complaints that others are doing so much better in the air than Great Britain. "You might think we had no Air Force at all and that British aviation scarcely existed." Such critics obviously know nothing of the facts. Sir Samuel promises that when the two British airships are flying next year the Empire will see how great has been British progress.

OUR FISH AND GAME A GREAT ATTRACTION FOR TOURISTS

Hunting, fishing and vacationing territories in the province of Quebec are attracting more tourists every year and each season sees a great increase in the number of people coming into the province, by various means, in order to enjoy their holidays, in the magnificent surroundings which this province offers. The hunter who seeks the head of a bull moose as a trophy of his skill, naturally looks toward the north woods of this province as the most likely spot in which to find his quarry, for he knows by the experience of others, if he has not already visited the territory himself, that here is to be found some of the finest hunting territory on the Continent. The fisherman, whether he seeks speckled trout or ouananiche, or the kingly salmon which is found in the Gaspé streams, knows that the waterways of the province of Quebec hold many finny prizes for the man who is skillful and patient. And the person who seeks a delightful vacation territory, whether it be the shores of the Lower St. Lawrence, on the Saguenay or by the side of inland lake or river, finds that territory at his or her command in all parts of the province.

The popularity of automobile touring has by no means diminished the demand for accommodation on trains and steamboats which are bound toward Quebec. As the numbers of automobile tourists reaching the cities of Montreal and Quebec have increased so also have the numbers reaching these centres by other means. A great number of tourists coming into Quebec from other provinces and from the United States travel as far as Montreal in their own automobiles, and then leaving their cars behind, join the greater number who come into the province by train. It is a fact well known to the fisherman that the fishing waters which are within easy reach of automobile highways are soon depleted of fish to a greater or lesser extent, and that the man who desires to find the better fishing grounds must go beyond the reach of the automobile. Therefore many anglers, coming into Quebec for trout fishing, go by train from Montreal and Quebec to points along the lines of the Railways in the northern section of the province, where they are able to find almost virgin trout waters. These lines penetrate almost into the hinterland of Quebec, and it is here that the best of fishing is found. In the waters of the Lake St. John Territory, for instance, some of the best trout fishing may be secured, and these lakes and streams are much more conveniently reached by the person who travels by train than in any other way. The same applies to those of the Gaspé Peninsula and other parts of Quebec, where both good hunting and fishing grounds await the sportsman who would make this province the location of his out-of-doors holiday.

At the same time, it is well to remember that all through the province railway lines radiate, serving all of the summer resort sections, with the result that holiday-seekers are able to reach the spot chosen for their vacation with a minimum of inconvenience and a maximum of comfort, growing rapidly, and there is every ground for believing that there is every evidence that the popularity of this province as a holiday land will increase rather than diminish. A determined effort is being made, by this Association to conserve the resources of the province, in order that the sportsman and tourist of this and other years will find attractive conditions within the province for many years to come. This excellent campaign is bearing results, and with the co-operation of the man and woman who goes out into the woods, will bear still greater results as it develops. Through its areas of forest and lake-land, such as Laurentides National Parks and other great areas where excellent fishing and hunting conditions prevail, there is little likelihood that Quebec will ever cease to have its tourist attractions, and the ever-increasing number of people who come here and find conditions to their liking is in itself an indication of the further growth which may be expected to result from year to year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS ANNOYED BY ROWS OVER DIVORCE BILLS

"Pernickety" member rouses ire of fellow legislators—He wants them all put under scrutiny—Send them to court, the senate, anywhere but here, they retort—
(Special to the Watchman)

Ottawa, Ont., April 24th: Men and women who will not lead a life of domestic felicity, but quarrel like Killenny cats because they happen to be tied together by marriage vows, are becoming an annoyance to the House of Commons.

In the old days, divorce bills came before the Senate. The Senate referred them to a committee, the committee heard the evidence and gave its judgment. It was "O.K." by the Senate and by the House of Commons. The bills would come up more or less in a casual way; the Speaker would mumble over the necessary words and it would go through as smoothly as an eel and as quickly as a streak of chain-lightning. In fact, it hardly needed a quorum in the House, which simply accepted the word of the Senate, that this thing was all right.

Then along came Mr. J. S. Woodsworth, M.P. for Winnipeg North Centre. Mr. Woodsworth would tell you that he was conscientious in regard to the matter. Other gentlemen with a capacity for using Scotch words would say he was "pernickety". He suggested that the House of Commons ought to go into these individual bills, study them over and read up the evidence and generally mull over the whole situation. He was not going to be guilty of passing any act when he did not know what he was doing.

That may be a fairly logical sentiment, but there are those in the House of Commons who feel that they can trust the senatorial committee with this important task and that certain work must be delegated to committees and it is not necessary for a member of parliament to study the individual items. He will accept the verdict of those men who were especially appointed to the Senate divorce committee.

Anyway, the whole thing is creating a row and there is a threat to block the work of the House of Commons, unless divorces are kicked out of the Commons and out of the Senate and sent to a court. There will be more about it. These things are not settled in five minutes. There is likely to be storm and counter-storm and some day, sometime, somehow, provision will be made to settle these difficulties away from the "House on the Hill."

IN SPEED—challenging anything the road offers up to 70 miles an hour. IN FAST GETAWAY—any car regardless of size or price. IN RELIABILITY—60 miles an hour for hour after hour.

EASE OF OWNING

On our own streets Essex the Challenger, under competent observation, averages 23 miles per gallon. The average owner in this city can expect 18 to 20 miles and upward. Commercial users operating large fleets of Essex cars say that service and maintenance costs, covering millions of miles of operation, are lowest of any car ever tested.

Essex offers a completeness of fine car equipment formerly identified only with costly cars, and available, when at all, only as "extras," at extra cost on cars of Essex price.

Check these items when you buy—they represent easily above $100 additional value in Essex.

Wide Choice of Colors at No Extra Cost.

The variety is so great you have almost individual distinction

Standard Equipment Includes: 4 hydraulic shock absorbers—electric gauge for gas and oil—radiator shutters—saddle lamps—windshield wiper—glare proof rear view mirror—electro-lock—controls on steering wheel—all bright parts chromium-plated.

A fine steel piano wire runs now 1254 miles from Newfoundland to the Azores. This is not to provide the mermaids with strings for their harps, but to measure exactly the distance between the two points.
A cable was laid recently and it was impossible to otherwise determine the precise distance travelled by the cable-laying ship.

Travellers aboard the Canadian Pacific Railway's crack summer flyer, the Trans-Canada Limited, will be surprised this year to find colourful upholstery, green tiled bathrooms, sofas, settees, a glassed-in conservatory and other unusual features. Special sleeping, dining, and lounge-solarium cars have been designed and built at the company's Montreal Angus shops for this de luxe transcontinental train, which will be one of the fastest and finest long distance trains in the world.

Construction of the 18-storey Marine Building on the corner of Burrard and Hastings streets, in Vancouver, has begun. When completed this will be the tallest building west of Toronto, where the greatest building, the new Royal York Hotel, of the C. P. R., is 23 storeys in height.

A monument to one of the builders of Canada is planned for Vancouver. Sir William Van Horne, first general manager and second president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, was responsible for the selection of Vancouver as the western terminus for the transcontinental line; a decision that resulted in the growth and prosperity of Canada's second greatest seaport; and the citizens of the city propose to commemorate his foresight.

Every year the Canadian Pacific spends about $2,000,000 in advertising its services and Canada's industrial and tourist attractions throughout the world.

In view of the present prosperity of Canada and of the Canadian Pacific, it is amusing to recall the item published in London Truth over forty-five years ago. "The Canadian Pacific Railway," it runs,
"has begun to launch its bends.
This railway, if it be ever finished, will run through a country frost-bound for seven or eight months of the year, and will connect with the eastern part of the Dominion a province which embraces about as forbidding country as any on the face of the earth. British Columbia is a barren, cold mountain country that is not worth keeping.
It would never have been inhabited at all unless by trappers of the Hudson Bay Company had 'gold fever' not taken a party of adventurers there. Fifty railroads would not galvanize it into prosperity.
The much-tooted Manitoba settlement will not hold out many years.
The people who have gone there cannot stand the coldness of the winters. Men and cattle are frozen to death in numbers that would astound the intending settler if he knew, and those who are not killed outright are often maimed for life by frostbites."

WILL YOU BE MISSED?

Some of these days, you, who are reading this article, are going to die and pass to your reward whatever that reward may be. But will you leave a void behind?

Will you be missed?

The Creator has ordained that man must carve his own career in this world and when he journeys to the great Unknown he leaves behind him a record founded upon his own acts.

You may leave behind you a wife or children, or other dependents. As you deal by them in life, so will their grief be gauged and tempered by your death.

Will you be missed?

In this town you have friends, and business associates and perhaps many acquaintances. They know you as you are, as you have been for these many years, and they will judge you dead.

Will you be missed?

In the banks, and the stores, and offices, and out upon the farms are people who have known you in the past and know you to-day. As you have been so are you known to them now.

Will you be missed?

In the home of darkened windows when sweet-toned music soothes the tired brain and the minister tells of the ways of a better life, are many people who know you for your acts and your deeds, for that which you have performed or have left undone.

Will you be missed?

THE BLESSED

Blessed are the merchants who advertise because they believe in it and in their business; for their prosperity shall increase many fold, sagely remarks an exchange, and adds:

Blessed is the woman who sends in a written account of a party or wedding; for she shall see the details of a function and the names of her guests correctly, reported.

Blessed are all those who do not expect the editor to know everything, but who call up and tell him whenever an interesting event occurs for them; for they shall have a newsy paper in their town.

Blessed are they who get their copy in early; for they shall occupy a warm place in the editor's heart.

Blessed are those who co-operate with his efforts in behalf of the community; for their town shall be known far and wide as a good place in which to live.

THE LAWS OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY

The twentieth century has been marked by a great increase in the number of laws. This does not imply that there are fewer cases of law breaking than there were thirty years ago. On the contrary, the number of infringement has kept pace with the number of legal restrictions.

What would be the impressions of a legal Rip Van Winkle on his awakening from a thirty-year's nap? He would surely find much to learn.

Imagine him rubbing his eyes as he first saw the common warning "35 miles an hour." Yet this would be far easier for him to understand than the parking notices which line the streets. The verb "to park" was unknown when he fell asleep. With the rapidly increasing number of automobiles has come a multitude of laws—traffic rules, rights of pedestrians, lights on vehicles and, always and forever, registration and licences.

And what a maze of licences poor Rip will find to puzzle his brain! Formerly these were only necessary in the more serious crises of life such as marrying, or owning a dog.
But now does one wish to drive a car? or go fishing? or operate a radio? or sell meat. He must first procure a licence.

Thirty years has seen many startling innovations both in dress and in science, and each must have the support of the law. Let us hope the newly awakened one will not have to decide the danger-line in bathing suits. Such a test of our laws call for an alert mind.

The radio, too, has brought new laws with it, many of which will puzzle our friend. We will volunteer to explain the rights of the air, and the question of wave-lengths to one who has never heard of a radio?

Verily the legal profession needs wide awake men to-day.

NOT that its luxury is its chief Big-car attraction. Beauty and performance compete for that distinction.
But such luxury as Pontiac Big Six provides is so unusual in any save the higher priced cars that Pontiac is becoming the favorite with lady drivers.

And "luxury" means more than the inviting interior of Bodies by Fisher.
It includes the effortless steering . .

The New McLAUGHLIN- BUICK is the New Style

THE unprecedented popularity of the 1929 McLaughlin-Buick unquestionably establishes it as the new order of motor-car style.

The new Masterpiece Bodies by Fisher are revolutionary, it is true. Revolutionary in the majestic beauty of their appearance.
Revolutionary in the richness of their contours and colours. Revolutionary in the spaciousness and sheer luxury of their interiors.

Revolutionary, in fact, in ALL the characteristics which make twice as many people choose McLaughlin-Buick as any other car at or above its price.

The Sun-Bath — Shower-Bath Limited

HIGH officials of the Canadian Pacific were much relieved when Dr. Ernest French, the Harley Street specialist, refuted the statement originating in London to the effect that mustard plasters were as beneficial as ultra-violet rays. During a long winter the Company has been engaged in building for use on the Trans-Canada special Solarium-Lounge cars equipped with "vita glass" windows which will admit the most beneficial sun-rays. It almost came to the question of whether the Company would scrap the new equipment and issue plasters to its patrons.

The new cars, designed for the rear end of the limited trains, will be the most magnificent cars ever to be used on a non-premium train on the continent. Given over entirely to the free use of the passenger, the lounge cars, besides the Solarium feature, have the added attraction of bath-rooms for men and women, completely and lavishly equipped, separate lounge and smoking rooms, a buffet and a large observation room with tapestry covered chairs, divans and settees. There are, of course, ample writing facilities and a small library.

The sleeping cars designed for this train are also "different". Finished in brown, a color note which is carried out in the upholstery, curtains and carpets, these cars contain in addition to the usual public space, two compartments, a drawing room and eight sections. Each section, as will be seen from the illustration above, is separated from its neighbour by a permanent head-board, which gives an added degree of privacy to the occupant.

With the locomotive, and complete with every modern comfort and safety appliance and device, the new Trans-Canada trains each represent an investment of well over a million dollars.

ST. ANDREWS EAST

(Too late for last issue.)

Miss Jean McMartin is now at her home in St. Andrews, and Miss Rain-both is visiting her.

Mr. W. Pitcairn, of Montreal, has been visiting his brother, Mr. J. Pitcairn for a few days.

Dr. Ballantyne has returned from Tamworth, Ont., where he had been called owing to the serious illness of Mrs. Ballantyne's mother.

Dr. and Mrs. Aymer, Mr. Willie McMartin, Miss Sarah McCallum, the Misses Parker, and other friends from Montreal, were in St. Andrews last Wednesday to attend the funeral of Miss Lillie McMartin.

The St. Andrews branch of the Society of the League of Nations held its inaugural meeting on Tuesday, April 16th, in the Town Hall, with Mayor Ladouceur in the chair. The speaker of the evening was Sir Geo.

Perley, who very kindly came down from Ottawa for the occasion. He gave us a lucid and enlightening statement as to the purposes of the League and of this Society which has been formed to encourage and support it in its high mission. He touched briefly upon the activities of the League, with which he was familiar from inside experience and association. We are much indebted to him for valuable information imported.

A vote of thanks was moved by Mr. A. Mackay who spoke eloquently in both French and English. The motion was seconded by the Rev. W. Windsor, who made a brief but very interesting speech. Father Dulude contributed some witty remarks, and the Rev. J. Macaskill skope in a happy vein as did Dr. Wales, the Secretary of the Society.

And now if all the big and little nations will take a cue from St. Andrews, there will be place in our fair land.

To-day "the Warmest homes are built like a refrigerator

WHEN you buy, build or remodel your home, take a page from the book of the refrigeration engineer. See to it your walls are insulated... that your home is protected against HEAT and COLD and SOUND by TEN/TEST.

TEN/TEST places an impregnable barrier of insulation between the temperature you want and the temperature you don't want. That's why TEN/TEST, used in place of ordinary wood sheathing, keeps your house warm in winter, cool in summer and QUIET all the time. For TEN/TEST is sound absorbing, too.

Before you build or remodel, or buy, be sure to learn more about TEN/TEST. Many a non-insulated home is paying the price of TEN/TEST... without enjoying its advantages. Ask your architect or contractor. And write for the free booklet, "TEN/TEST and the Most Wonderful Adventure in the World."

Canadian Industries Limited Dominion Ammunition Social Club News

The usual monthly dance was held at the Social Club on Friday, April 19th., 1929. There was a record attendance, which was very gratifying to the Executive Committee, and was such an encouragement to the Band, that they excelled themselves with the dance music. There was a large number of visitors from Lachute, who appeared to greatly enjoy themselves. It is hoped that our Lachute friends will continue to patronize the dances at Brownsburg, thereby helping to accentuate the spirit of harmonious accord that has existed between the young people of both communities for such a long period.

Another dance will take place about the middle of May, and the date will be advertised later through the medium of this paper.

To the Athletically inclined youths of Brownsburg:—

Announcement is made that a new section has been created, under the control of the Social Club Executive. This will be known tentatively as the "Track" Section.

The object is to train boys over the age of fourteen years, along the right lines to produce the athlete. It is known that wrong training may organically injure a lad, and it is hoped that with the correct method, young athletes will be raised to a standard in every way comparable to those produced by the large A.A.A.s. in the cities.

Now boys, here's your opportunity—seize it whilst you have the chance! Complete, expensive equipment is to be provided at once, with the use of which, you will be trained in hurdling, pole jumping, running, putting, the shot, in fact, all phases of athletics will be covered.

You will get your liniment rub after exercises, and it is hoped to provide dressing rooms with shower baths for your use. During the winter months instruction will be given in skiing, snow-shoeing, and the Club will be equipped for indoor sports.

It is necessary that every applicant be a member of the Social Club, and unless you are already a member you will be required to join. Acceptance can only be made of youths and men organically sound enough to stand the rigors of hard training. If you have not already been examined, a medical examination will be necessary.

Any youth or man residing in Brownsburg will be allowed to join, whether they are employed by the Canadian Industries, or not—but they must be members of the Social Club. That is all that is required, apart of course, from enthusiastic interest and loyal support to those in charge.

Those boys who are ambitious to become athletes, are requested to hand their names to one of the following Committee members:—C. H. Oakes, Chairman of Section; E. L. Johnson, Vice-Chairman; J. Martin, Leonard Wilson, or to the Chairman, or Secretary of the Social Club.

There is nothing more than Club Fees to pay, all equipment being provided free. However, the Club will not provide the costumes which may be necessary for training.

Join at once, and make yourself a credit to your parents, your Home Town, and boost your Company.

Coming Events:

The Ladies' Rifle Shooting Section is to be revived this year. It's a long call to get on the Olympic Team, but we mean to put some of you there yet. Ladies! Please prepare to shoot the bull.

Trapshooting will soon be in full swing. There will be plenty of solid silver spoons to be won, and the Annual Picnic will be around soon with many cups for competition. Come on you experts, and those of you who have to start thinking up your excuses to get onto the Picnic Grounds.

Other Brownsburg News:

We are glad to learn that Mr. C. T. (Chick) Wilson has taken up house-keeping at last. It was with great pride that the apartment in Pariseau's mansion was occupied. Copious tears were shed by the inhabitants of the Boarding House on the departure in "State" by Mr. Wilson. Flags were at half mast and ditches dug.

"Johnny" Lambertson and Jimmy Reid had a pleasant trip to Montreal, ostensibly to buy fishing tackle. We are sorry that they had to postpone their fishing trip on account of non-arrival of the bait.

Mr. MacLaren journeyed to Montreal by car, and took with him, for want of better company, Mr. Edward Walmsley.

Miss Grace Moncrieff duly arrived from Smith Falls on Sunday, April 21st., and commenced her duties in the Dominion Ammunition Division's office on Monday morning. With four young ladies now in this office, members of the staff are busy preparing their gardens, and the flower offerings should be many.

Many of the residents of Brownsburg are busy sticking their brushes into paintpots, and believe that by the end of the summer the village will be architecturally improved. It is noted that Mr. William White is busy extending his property.

A sober word should be said about the near serious accident that happened to the young son of Mr. Jos. Minard on the "French" hill. Whilst it is understood that it was the young lad's fault in this instance, and he is lucky that he escaped serious hurt, it should serve as a warning for motorists to be ever on the watch for children. Attention is called to the many crossing roads in Brownsburg, and there are no traffic "cops" in the village. A little extra hurry may cause a long delay. Motorists! Please remember that roads are not built solely for your use. There are no sidewalks in the 'Burg, and pedestrians have the right to live and must use the road. If you think otherwise, get after the right authorities to build sidewalks.

It is nice for radio owners, who have spent a lot of money on good machines, to listen to programmes coming from the air. But isn't it annoying when someone in the near vicinity is using a vibratory charger for his battery. Owners of such chargers would considerably help to keep down tempers, if they would kindly take them off between the hours of 8.00 p.m. and 12.00 midnight. Considerate treatment to your neighbours will bring its own reward. Thank you!

The Results of Modern Education!

Interesting Address given by the Rev. H. Cousens, B.A., B.D.

A most interesting session of the Literary and Dramatic Society was held in the Academy, on Tuesday evening at which the Rev. H. Cousens, gave an address on "The Results of Modern Education." He started out by saying:

The question is often asked, is modern education doing all that it is said to do, or is intended to do or that it should do? The answers are many. Certainly there are numbers of people who believe that a person who has successfully passed through a series of our educational institutions is mentally equipped for some particular vocation in life. Education has become commercialised to the extent that its value is described in terms of increased wage earning capacity. By means of statistics comparing the wages earned by those who have passed through educational institutions and those who have not, many boys are encouraged to continue or further their education.

Without discussing the methods more than is necessary, and to arrive at a conclusion concerning the results it would be best to define education. The possession of a diploma to flare in the face of the world does not necessarily imply an educated person. Education is closely associated with experience, and may be defined as the profit gained from experience.

There are two types of experience, personal and extra personal. When a baby burns itself on the hot stove it learns that it is hot, but if it does not profit from that experience it is not educated concerning the danger of heat. The multiplication table in its present form is the result from experience, likewise, history, geography, and literature. This is extra-personal. A poem that is worthy of the name must at one time have been a part of the poet's experience. He felt or saw something that he has endeavoured to convey in the poem. In the degree that the reader shares this experience he profits and is educated.

Are our educational institutions enabling the scholars to share this past experience of the race? Only in the degree that they are, are they educating. There are two types of mind, theoretical and practical. There are two types of memory, rote and logical. The theoretical mind runs to theories but cannot put them into practice. The practical mind understands the theory and put it into effect. The person with a rote memory can memorise with comparative ease a large amount of material without understanding its content. The person with a logical memory must understand the material before it can be memorised. Retention is dependent upon understanding. Modern educational methods tend to produce the theoretical mind and rote memory rather than the practical mind and logical memory. The scholar must pass the examinations, he does this by cramming and usually forgets as quickly as he learned. A person's ability to learn should not be measured by his ability to memorise, but by his ability to understand. Our educational system should exist for the purpose of teaching the child how to think. One of the weaknesses of the present generation is that it is mentally lazy. People want others to do their thinking for them. They are so accustomed to canned goods they are asking for canned thought. This attitude is reflected in our schools. Some teachers do not thoroughly understand their subjects, hence do not understand the difficulties of the scholar. Too much is expected from our academy teachers, when we expect one person to be competent to teach all subjects in the curriculum and obtain equally high results in each subject.

To remedy the conditions the following recommendations were made:

1. Check up on the teachers. Raise the standards and refuse all permits. The teaching profession will encourage this. Give a living salary to teachers and thus encourage the best to enter the profession.
2. Provide technical schools for carpentry, mechanics, agriculture and household science for the benefit of the large number who are not interested in a university course. Make the standards high and institute vocational guidance to enable boys and girls to choose the department in life for which they are best suited. Stop all home work, as this has done a great deal to discourage children and given them a dislike for school and studies. Have all work supervised outside of the regular hours if it is necessary, by qualified teachers.

"Cayley asked us to bring a letter along," Bill explained to Angela Norbury. "Here you are."

"You will tell him, won't you, how dreadfully sorry I am about—about what has happened? It seems so hopeless to say anything; so hopeless even to believe it. If it is true that we've heard."

Bill repeated the outline of the events of yesterday.

"Yes. . . . And Mr. Ablett hasn't been found yet?"

"No."

She shook her head in distress. "It still seems to have happened to somebody else; somebody we didn't know at all." Then, with a sudden grave smile which included both of them, "But you must some and have some tea."

"It's awfully recent of you," said Bill awkwardly, "but we—er—"

"You will, won't you?" she said to Antony.

"Thank you very much."

Mrs. Norbury was delighted to see them, as she always was to see any man in her house who came up to the necessary standard of eligibility. When her life work was completed, and summed up in those beautiful words: "A marriage has been arranged, and will shortly take place, between Angela, daughter of the late John Norbury, and Mark Ablett of the Red House."

But it was not as "eligibles" that the visitors from the Red House were received with such eagerness today.

YOU CAN'T DYE with Good Intentions

You can get results—after a fashion—with any old dye; but to do work you are proud of takes real aniline. That's why we put them in Diamond Dyes. They contain from three to five times more than other dyes on the market! Cost more to make? Surely. But you get them for the same price as other dyes.

Next time you want to dye, try them. See how easy it is to use them. Then compare the results. Note the absence of that re-dyed look; of streaking or spotting. See that they take none of the life out of the cloth. Observe how the colors keep their brilliance through wear and washing. Your dealer will refund your money if you don't agree Diamond Dyes are better dyes.

The white package of Diamond Dyes is the original "all-purpose" dye for any and every kind of material. It will dye or tint silk, wool, cotton, linen, rayon or any mixture of materials. The blue package is a special dye, for silk or wool only. With it you can dye your valuable articles of silk or wool with results equal to the finest professional work. Remember this when you buy. The blue package dyes silk or wool only. The white package will dye every kind of goods, including silk and wool. Your dealer has both packages.

The Standard of Quality Since 1853

Antony explained that he had not seen Mr. Ablett.

"Of course, yes, I was forgetting. But, believe me, Mr. Gillingham, you can trust a woman's intuition in these matters."

Antony said that he was sure of this.

"Think of my feelings as a mother?"

Antony was thinking of Miss Norbury's feelings as a daughter, and wondering if she guessed that her affairs were now being discussed with a stranger. Mark engaged, or about to be engaged! Had that any bearing on the events of yesterday? What, for instance, would Mrs. Norbury have thought of brother Robert, that family skeleton? Was this another reason for waiting brother Robert out of the way?

"I never liked him, never!"

"Never liked—?" said Antony, bewildered.

"That cousin of his—Mr. Cayley."

"How did Miss Norbury get on with him?" Antony asked cautiously.

"There was nothing in that at all," said Miss Norbury's mother emphatically. "Nothing. I would say so to anybody."

"Oh, I beg your pardon. I never meant—"

"Nothing. I can say that for dear Angela with perfect confidence. Whether he had advances—?" She broke off with a shrug of her plump shoulders.

Antony waited eagerly.

"Naturally they met. Possibly he might have—I don't know. But my duty as a mother was clear, Mr. Gillingham."

Mr. Gillingham made an encouraging noise.

"I told him quite frankly that—how shall I put it?—that he was trespassing. Tactfully, of course. But frankly."

"You mean," said Antony, trying to speak calmly, "that you told him that"

"Think of my feelings as a mother."

"—er—Mr. Ablett and your daughter—?"

Mrs. Norbury nodded several times.

"Exactly, Mr. Gillingham. I had my duty as a mother."

"There must have been a certain awkwardness about the next meeting," suggested Antony.

"Naturally, he has not been here since. No doubt; they would have been bound to meet up at the Red House sooner or later."

"Oh, this was only quite lately?"

"Last week, Mr. Gillingham. I spoke just in time."

"Ah!" said Antony, under his breath. He had been waiting for it.

He would have liked now to have gone away, so that he might have thought over the new situation by himself. But Mrs. Norbury was still talking.

"Girls are so foolish, Mr. Gillingham," she was saying. "It is fortunate that they have mothers to guide them. It was so obvious to me from the beginning that dear Mr. Ablett was just the husband for my little girl. You never knew him?"

Antony said again that he had not seen Mr. Ablett.

"Such a gentleman. So nice-looking in his artistic way. A regular Velasquez—I should say Van Eyck. Angela would have it that she could never marry a man with a beard. As if that mattered, when—"

She broke off, and Antony finished her sentence for her. "The Red House is certainly charming," he said.

"Charming. Quite charming."

She gave a deep sigh. Antony was about to snatch the opportunity of leaving, when Mrs. Norbury began again.

"And then there's this scapegrace brother of his. He was perfectly frank with me, Mr. Gillingham. He told me of his brother, and I told him that I was quite certain it would make no difference to my daughter's feelings for him. . . . After all, the brother was in Australia."

"When was this? Yesterday?" Antony felt that, if Mark had only mentioned it after his brother's announcement of a personal call at the Red House, this perfect frankness had a good deal of wisdom behind it.

"It couldn't have been yesterday, Mr. Gillingham. Yesterday—" she shuddered, and shook her head.

"I thought perhaps he had been down here in the morning."

"Oh, no! There is such a thing, Mr. Gillingham, as being too devoted a lover. Not in the morning, I. We both agreed that dear Angela— Oh, no. No; the day before yesterday, when he happened to drop in about tea-time."

It occurred to Antony that Mrs. Norbury had come a long way from her opening statement that Mark and Miss Norbury were practically engaged. She was now admitting that dear Angela had not to be rushed, that dear Angela had, indeed, no heart for the match at all.

"The day before yesterday. As it happened, dear Angela was out. Not that it mattered. He was driving to Middleton. He hardly had time for a cup of tea, so that even if she had been in—"

Antony nodded absently. This was something new. Why did Mark go to Middleton the day before yesterday? But, after all, why shouldn't he? A hundred reasons unconnected with the death of Robert might have taken him there.

He got up to go. He wanted to be alone—alone, at least, with Bill. Mrs. Norbury had given him many things to think over, but the great outstanding fact which had emerged was this: that Cayley had reason to hate Mark. Mrs. Norbury had given him that reason. To hate? Well to be jealous, anyhow. But that was enough.

"You see," he said to Bill, as they walked back, "we know that Cayley is perishing himself and risking himself over this business, and that must be for one of two reasons. Either to save Mark or to endanger him. That is to say, he is either wholeheartedly for him or wholeheartedly against him. Well, now we know that he is against him, he's nicely against him."

They had come to the gate into the last field which divided them from the road.

"Jolly little place, isn't it?" said Bill.

"Very. But rather mysterious. Isn't there a drive, or a road or anything?"

"Oh, there's a cart-track, but motor-cars can't come any nearer than the road"—he turned round and pointed—"up there. So the week-end millionaire people don't take it. At least, they'd have to build a road and a garage and all the rest of it, if they did."

"I see," said Antony carelessly, and they turned round and continued their walk up the road. But later on he remembered this casual conversation at the gate, and saw the importance of it.

What was it which Cayley was going to hide in that pond that night? Antony thought that he knew now. It was Mark's body.

Ceylon Taking Steps to Stop Child Slavery

Government Introduces Measure to Prevent the Cruelty Existing at Present

Colombo, Ceylon.—H. E. Newnham, Mayor of Colombo, addressing the annual general meeting of the Friend-in-Need Society on Tuesday, referred to the "ghastly cases of cruelty to children in Ceylon and the system of trafficking in children, amounting to slavery," and added that undoubtedly some of these little slaves were well treated but world-wide public opinion had definitely refused to tolerate anything in the nature of slavery.

He cited the abolition of a similar system in Hong Kong a few years ago as the result of public agitation, and "it is time that the remnants of such a system in Ceylon should be abolished by the force of the public conscience."

Mr. Newnham described 13 cases of the grossest cruelty to child-servants in the Ceylon courts last year. The average age of the victims was eight years. He emphasized the slender chances there were of detecting cases of cruelty. The Mayor then gratified his audience by saying that the Colonial Secretary had authorized him to state that the Ceylon Government was taking immediate action in the matter. A bill has already been drafted to regulate the employment of children as domestic servants.

The Mayor concluded by saying: "The country should not rest until it has removed the reproach at present darkening the social system."

The Ceylon Daily News points out that no provision exists for the education of these children. L. Machae, Director of Education, has added a clause to the revised education code withholding grants in whole or in part from schools providing differential treatment for the children of the depressed classes.

Transjordan Smiles to Find Freedom Won

Forgotten Desert Land Steps from Dinginess of Turkish Misrule to Happiness

Capital With Only One Hotel

By CAPT. OWEN TWEEDY

In The Christian Science Monitor
Jerusalem—Transjordan is a country whose name tells the world where it lies—for everyone can place the Jordan—but otherwise most people know little or nothing about it.

Transjordan is a revelation of evolution. In 10 short years it has stepped from the dinginess of Turkish misrule into a jolly, entertaining and hopeful career as an independent Emirate. It is paying its way; its population is shyly appreciative of the new regime where things now happen as they are expected to happen and life has ceased to be a round of unpleasant shocks and extortion; above all it is a happy country and one with a cheerful future—not cast on grand lines; for it can never be rich—but one in which life can be lived easily according to the motto
"Live and let live."

Bowling Down Jericho Road

As the traveler makes his way to the new kingdom from Jerusalem he will enjoy a comfort which, just because it is not luxury, is all the more welcome after the over-organization of Egypt and Palestine. But the traveler must be forewarned, else his journey will be expensive. He does not take a car in Jerusalem to bring him to Amman 80 miles away. He takes a single seat for which he should not pay more than $3.50; and, having done so, he will find himself on whatever day the car starts (which depends on how quickly the other seats fill) early one morning bowling down the twists of the Jericho road with the three Bedouin Arabs, his fellow travelers in the back seat, who have certainly paid not more than $2 each.

Then there is the 10-mile span of the Jordan Valley in a heat which makes the car boil; and as likely as not there will be a puncture. Puncture-mending in the torridity of the Jordan is anything but pleasant. But the East forgets and smiles are radiant as he and his Arab friends—they are friends by now—congratulate the chauffeur on his mending prowess and heap praise hotly into the car.
The ascent from the valley into the mountains of Moab is lovely.

A back view gives glimpses of the Dead Sea, turquoise blue in its hollow of purple hills; an excellent road
—well-engineered and well-surfaced, thanks to the new regime—climbs sleepily and entrancingly along a mountain torrent, pinkly banked with oleanders; and then it is the Transjordanian highlands, one rise after another, sweeping east to the great Syrian Deserts, an unending vista of waving corn and close-cropped pastures.

Paper of Fat Raisins

The chauffeur stops at Es Salt—his native place—and buys a twisted paper full of the fat raisins for which the district is famous; the four travelers pass them round politely, while the car charges one hill, and skids down the next, avoiding careless flocks of goats and sheep wending aimlessly from the day's pasture back to their villages where each animal knows and finds its own way home.
Amman lies in a cup of the hills. The sun is low; half of the clustered town is in deep purple shadow; beyond, in the eastern quarter, the traveler catches his first glimpse of the great Roman amphitheater, still bathed in the pink of the setting sun.

Amman has one hotel, the "Philadelphia"; for in Graeco-Roman days, when the amphitheater was built, the old Hebrew name of Rabbah Ammon was changed to Philadelphia. It is a good hotel—good food and good beds;
but it is small. That night he slept in a four-bedded room and his companions were an Englishman representing a London insurance company, a German selling knives, razors and scissors and a Greek food contractor to the British Air Force depot four miles out in the desert. As he settled himself contentedly between the sheets he recollected with a grin that Philadelphia means the love of brotherhood.

Whirling Round Hairpin Turns

He spent two days in Amman. One was a hectic motor expedition to Gerash and its ruins—a day which left less memory of antiquities than the other was due south past Mount Nebo whence Moses surveyed the Promised Land, which he was not destined to reach, and then on to Madaba, where on the floor of a Crusader Church, he pored fascinated over a mosaic map of Palestine—the oldest in the world. And he traveled in comfort—exciting comfort—and with complete security, meeting Transjordanian friends who were glad to see him, reveling in the beauty of a landscape which far transcends that of Palestine and savoring an interest in antiquity of which he had but read in which his western imagination, primed with reports of Transjordanian uncivilization, had imagined were beyond the scope of all but the most intrepid of explorers.

In 1918 Transjordan emerged out of the wreck of the Ottoman Empire, as an appendage of King Feisal's Syrian Kingdom; but in 1920, with the French Kingship in Syria, it became for two years a sort of no-man's land, without money, without credentials and without boundaries. The overthrow of the Damascus Government displaced not only King Feisal but a large number of Syrian Arabs who had during the war allied themselves to the Arab cause. These Damascus refugees withdrew to the Hejaz, as guests of Feisal's father, King Hussein; and in Mecca under the leadership of Abdullah, the elder brother of King Feisal, hatched a forlorn plan to restore native Arab Government in Syria by invasion.

Heyday for Abdullah

Transjordan was under the British mandate. The so-called army of invasion was financed by yet another war-ally of the French, King Hussein of the Hejaz. It was out of the question that it should be allowed by the British to proceed against the French.
It was a situation such as the British genius for compromise loves. Transjordan was overdue for organized government. Why not intrust its direction to Abdullah? Thus Abdullah emerged from insignificance and penury, as accredited Emir of Transjordan and that with a civil list, paid by the British Government of £130,000 a year.

All the Damascus refugees were included in the new government, and well paid out of the civil list; and in this delightful affluence and security, they spent two years and all the money and credit of the new State, in intriguing with the enemies of the French over the border. Finally the Damascus clique was removed from Amman, the capital of the new Emirate, and the control of the finances placed in the hands of a British resident. At the same time the Emir was invited to negotiate a treaty with Great Britain, which would give Transjordan independence in all matters except finance and war, the final decision in each of which matters was vested in the British High Commissioner for Palestine.

Affairs Begin to Mend

From that moment Transjordanian affairs began to mend. And it was time that they should. For the police and gendarmerie were over a year in arrears of pay. So also the salaries of the judges and tax collectors, with the result that they made both ends meet by wholesale acceptance of bribes.

The new policy stood for retrenchment. The Emir, with public spirit, acquiesced in the reduction of his civil list to £30,000; a budget was produced and properly allocated; the judges and the tax collectors were opened and improved, and, above all law and order, particularly on the French Syrian border, was imposed with Oriental severity.

A Country of Meadows

This is a country of meadows of a noble amplitude, and oak thickets, and sudden, rounded eminences. Southward broods the long dim rampart of the Downs, taking the huge buffet of the westerly gales, keeping the wide and wooded valley in peace.

As the sun falls to the west, garden and field and wood are bathed in a radiance of rose and gold, and the cows wander leisurely, yet with an air of slightly aggrieved dignity, past the shining pond (across which a moorhen flutters to her nest in the sedge) and along the grassy lane, and into the dusty white road, and so home. Beyond the darkling trees the fres of sunset burn with an orange glow. A light shines in the cottage window. Within, a great fire of logs flames and crackles in the wide ingle, rudely touching the oak beams, and casting black shadows in the corners.
Shut door and lattice and draw close about the comfortable blaze. There is no such thing in London.

Without, the wind has gone down;
the air is chill; a great round moon hangs in the profound blue; and an immense silence enfolds the landscape. Early the next morning a noise of tapping sounds in the silent house. What is it? There is no one at the door. Looking from the window one beholds the sky white and clear, the fields glittering with frost and solitary, the garden all sparkling white and empty. Still the tapping.
It is a goldfinch, perched on the ledge of the glazed panel in the door, tapping the glass with his beak. As the door is open, if he wished to enter he could enter; but he is a perfect little gentleman. Presently he flies away and sits in the apple-tree, waiting for breakfast.

Another day of sun. The wood, from which they have cleared the undergrowth, is floored with red leaves and vivid moss, and bright primroses.
A rabbit strolls from his cavern in the bank, and sits very still, and presently remembers an engagement and has-tens away, with his rocking-horse gait, to keep it.—L. Cope Cornford, in

The Dark Croakings of Sir George Paish

The Prophet of Disaster Carries Little Weight in the U.S. or Canada

PROSPERITY AHEAD

"We are threatened with the gravest financial crisis that the world has ever seen." Such is the gloomy prophecy of Sir George Paish, a former editor of the London Statist and financial adviser to the British Chancellor of the Exchequer. Sir George, now a well-known European economist, blames the impending crisis on politicians who have pursued wrong policies since the war. Speaking before the National Free Trade Conference at Manchester, England, on March 19, Sir George is quoted as saying: "We are threatened with this crisis because the governments of the world have followed a policy of trade restriction, thus preventing debtors from paying their debts. We are face to face with this crisis. Nothing can be done now to prevent a financial crash.
Those who have loaned money can not recover it. The question we now have to face is how to get out of the crisis when it comes."

Says Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale University:

"What Sir George is quoted as saying about tariff interference with debt payments is true. Our own tariff is preventing the payment to us of European debts. The French tariff is preventing the payment to her of reparations."

"Ultimately the debts must be paid in commodities. We would not want them to be paid in gold—we have too much gold already. However, if Sir George has been correctly quoted, it seems as if he has been betrayed into exaggerating the suddenness of any injury that is going to be felt. I can not imagine any sharp cracking in the way of a panic or world crisis, and I can not believe that the United States would be seriously affected."

The financial seismograph of The Wall Street Journal has recorded no ramblings such as might be expected to precede a world-wide crisis. This financial daily's interpretation of the Paish prediction, in fact, is that—

"Sir George happens to be an old-fashioned Liberal in politics, and England is face to face with a general election on May 30. Sir George is also an old-fashioned freetrader, holding that view with an almost religious faith which could be paralleled by our old-fashioned protectionists. Sir George has thought ever since the war that the cure for the war burdens is an international cancellation of debts."

"If any sharp crisis is to be anticipated in the near future, the place to look for it is in the field of speculative finance," thinks the neighboring Virginia-Pilot reminds us that the British economist's warning must be heavily discounted as political ammunition. Sir George, says the New York Herald Tribune, "is one of the hardest working prophets of modern days, and it goes on to recall that—

"On July 21, 1919, Sir George declared that a collapse of world credit was not only possible, but imminent.
'I see only one way out,' he said, 'and that is by capital levies, both national and international.'"

"On January 14, 1923, he declared that a 'complete breakdown of the exchanges of commerce an stride is already in sight. He feared that Europe, 'deprived of American food and material,' would 'be destroyed by starvation and anarchy.' As a remedy he proposed that the League of Nations float a $35,000,000,000 rehabilitation loan in the United States."

"Poor Sir George! No one took his advice. So on October 26, 1922, he announced that 'The policy of the statesmen of Europe is fast bringing the strongest nations in Europe to ruin,' and he feared that if the United States did not abandon its protective tariff it would fall into similar ruin."

"For more than two years Sir George watched the world in gloomy silence. On January 20, 1925, he lapsed into momentary cheer and told a Chicago audience that there would never be another war. But he was back to normalcy within a month, and on February 21 warned Brooklyn that the world was hatching a new war.
And in April of that year he predicted that France, Germany and Russia would unite against Great Britain and the United States unless they mended their ways. He commended cancellation of the French debts, credits for Russia, and free trade."

"Again the ungrateful world turned a deaf ear. On November 21, 1927, Sir George broke out with another prediction of 'world-wide credit collapse.' Now Sir George is at it again, and doubtless he will continue. Some day, doubtless, there will be another financial crisis. When it comes, if Sir George is still alive, he will smile and remark, deprecatingly, 'I told you so.'"

In the opinion of the Washington Post, Sir George's predictions "are nothing more than the croakings of an incurable free-trader." Continues this daily:

"Sir George is no doubt making his prediction at this time for the benefit of the extra session of Congress, which will deal with tariff rates. As far as the United States is concerned, his fears are without foundation. While the statement was being made, tax returns were pouring in at the United States Treasury, indicating even greater prosperity than was anticipated.
Commerce with other nations continues to grow in spite of the tariff wall he refers to, and the standard of living is maintained at a higher level than ever before."

So far as Canada is concerned nothing but prosperity is in sight. Wheat crops in the West are increasing year by year; our mines piling profit on profit; our manufacturers prosperous;
our banks outstanding in their solidity; our unemployment at a low figure.
We cannot agree with Sir George.

The Common Garden Toad

Miles L. Peele in The Flower Grower

To most of us the toad is familiar, but I am wondering how much gardeners really know about this homely fellow.

Men have placed him in the same group with frogs and salamanders, but he differs from the frog in several respects. First, his skin is not smooth as is the frog's, but covered with warts or enlarged areas of rough cuticular projections. These bumps add greatly to his reputation, as it has often been said that toads cause warts that suddenly appear on our hands.
This is erroneous, as friendly Mr. Hop Toad harms no one. Second, he is less active than the frog. His powers of jumping are somewhat restricted.
Third, his life history is somewhat different than that of the frog.

Although there are several kinds of toads found in the United States, only one species (Bufo americanus) is at all common. This species inhabits gardens in particular. During the day they remain concealed in some dark corner, or beneath a stone or other object where moisture is plentiful, and at night sallies forth to feed upon snails, slugs, and insects, which they capture with the aid of a sticky tongue as in the case of the frog.
Their tongue is fastened near the outer edge of the lower jaw and the free end lies back in the mouth toward the throat. When an insect comes near the tongue is thrown out and laps around the morsel. The sticky secretion holds the insect until it can be returned to the mouth. Thus he may capture fast-moving objects.
Frogs and toads both have sharp eyesight for moving objects and it is doubtful whether they see till objects very distinctly.

Nearly everyone is acquainted with the tadpoles of frogs, and toads have a similar life history. Early in the spring, toads lay eggs in stagnant water in strings of a jelly-like substance, instead of in clusters as do frogs. After five to ten days the eggs hatch into wriggling tadpoles which swim about in the water. Their food is mainly microscopic plants. Swimming is accomplished by means of a tail. Breathing is carried on by means of outside and inside gills. As the tadpole grows these gills are absorbed by the body, and lungs develop.
The tadpole soon finds difficulty in breathing so he comes to the surface of the water to fill his lungs with air. Slowly he appears, the tail is lost and a tiny toad is seen swimming about.

During July he matures and takes to the banks of the pond or stream.
Many other small toads are already there. After a certain number, usually several dozen or more, have gathered, a general movement or migration begins. Many farmers have seen these migrations. Often the toads will follow a ravine or cross a road, thus exposing themselves to great danger from birds and man. Crows are said to be the chief enemy of the young toad. The few that do finally reach a suitable environment, such as a garden, soon busy themselves in catching their weight in insects.

It has been estimated that one toad alone in a single season is worth $20 to the garden, because of the cutworms it devours. These worms are not the toad's only article of diet, as slugs and insects figure largely. It is indeed a poor gardener that does not value the toad. He is among the ugliest of animals, but one of the most beneficial. Let every gardener protect this friendly fellow; he is worth much.

er.
