Presentation to Mrs. Drew.

A very pleasant evening was spent on Tuesday last when a number of the members of the Presbyterian Church gathered in the Church Hall to present Mrs. Drew with a beautiful fitted Spit Case, as a slight token of appreciation, having been organist during the past five years. The presentation was made by the Rev. Mr. Cousens, who expressed the sincere gratitude of the Church to Mrs. Drew for her loyal and faithful services.

The theatre-going public will be pleased to know that in a few days they will have the opportunity of listening to the "talkies" as the new sound pictures are popularly known. This has been made possible through the enterprise of Mr. and Mrs. Fassio the genial proprietors of the "Rex" who are keenly alive in giving the best possible to their patrons. The installation of the Talking Pictures is a very expensive project and it places our little Theatre in the front ranks of progress for there are no towns of like size to ours that can boast of being really up-to-date in this particular. The "Rex" is pleasantly comfortable with its high ceiling and best of ventilation; it is cozy, neat, scrupulously clean and gives a fine class of pictures. Much of the mechanical arrangements have been put in by Mr. and Mrs. Fassio's son Edward of Montreal, and they hope to make announcement of its formal opening within a few days. Watch for the grand opening.

Mr. Foster, of the Gatineau Power Co., of Ottawa, spent Wednesday in town.

Mrs. Geo. Calder returned home on Sunday from Brantford, Ont., where she has been spending the past few weeks.

Mr. Wm. Finlay and Miss Evelyn Creswell of Montreal, were week-end guests of her parents Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Creswell.

The Misses Nellie and Elizabeth Hay of Montreal, were guests of their parents Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Hay for the week-end.

Mrs. J. C. Hewlett, of Montreal, was in town this week, attending the convention of the Ladies' Provincial Grand Orange Lodge.

SURE THEY ARE ANGRY!

Much resentment is felt in Dalesville over action of the Postal authorities in closing out the post office. This action was the result of the Postal authorities in not complying with the reasonable demand of Mrs. Vary, the Post mistress, who felt that the sum of about $13.00 per month was not commensurate with the services rendered and asked the Postal authorities to raise the sum to $30. There is much work in connection with these small offices and the correspondence, reports and general routine takes considerable of one time which should be generally recognized and appreciated.

We understand Mrs. Vary gave proper notification to the authorities and an inspector was sent out who endeavored to secure someone to carry on, but the remuneration was not enticing enough to lure anyone into the charms of government employment and so the office was closed. This is a case in which the Postal authorities will doubtless point with pride as they plume themselves with jealousy guarding the public trust, but it would be infinitely better were they to rid themselves of so much officialdom and pay the employees an amount more in keeping with the responsibility of office. Both the mail drivers and the rural post-offices have a good reason to question the equity of the Postal department and the people of Dalesville should lose no time in getting after the government in seeing that the Post office is quickly restored.

ORANGEMEN GATHER TO ATTEND 81st. ANNUAL CONVENTION OF PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE

Lachute was quite active this week by the gathering of Orangemen and members of the Ladies' Benevolent Association who met on Tuesday in goodly number, the men conducting their sessions in the Oddfellow's Hall and the Ladies in the United Church Hall. The meetings were brimful of interest and all reports tendered by the different branches of the work spoke of a successful year and substantial increase of membership.

After six years of untiring work on the part of Grand Master, F. C. Thompson, his resignation was finally accepted and Mr. Wm. Roberts, of Montreal, was appointed his successor, with H. Kilpatrick, of Aymer, D.G.M.; Rev. Bro. Lockhead, of Inverness, Jr. D.G.M.; Rev. J. A. Lackey, Grand Chaplain; J. Troughton, Grand Secretary; E. O. Jones, Grand Treasurer.

Canada the Goat

Great Interest is Taken in Our Country as to the Ultimate Solution of Nation Wide Prohibition in the U.S.

The Washington proposal that in the interest of Prohibition enforcement there should be an armed American patrol of 10,000 coastguards along the 3,000 miles of unfortified frontier between Canada and the United States, has resulted in much Canadian editorial comment.

Some Canadian editors are wroth at the idea. Some subject it to mockery. Yet others express great sympathy with the United States in its Prohibition problem.

The latter urge Canadians to do all they can to avoid conflict with the American regulations, and not to condone violation. Their argument is that in the long run profits gleaned from liquor selling can not do Canada any good.

In the matter of the American dry lay, the London (Ont.) Advertiser notes that there seems to be choice between enforcement and obedience on the one hand, and lawlessness bordering on chaos on the other. This daily then remarks:

"President Hoover makes his choice enforcement, and as the Chief Executive of the nation, he can do nothing else without repudiating his duty.

"In this situation it is unfortunate that Canada should seem to be against the Government of the United States and on the side of the lawbreakers. Some say, 'Let the United States enforce their own laws.' It is true that we are not called upon to assist our neighbors in enforcing their laws, but it is equally true that we should not assist those who are breaking the laws, especially when the President and the Government are straining every nerve to make enforcement more effective.

There is no question here between wets and dries in Canada. Canadians will lose no part of their liberty. They will continue to be governed by their own laws, no matter what is done to restrict exports. The question is one of international relations and neighborly conduct.

"The proposal to increase the duties on certain products of Canada when exported to the United States has nothing to do with the case. We are at liberty to make any sort of tariff we please, and to look elsewhere for trade, but not to plead that the tariff of the United States is an excuse for conduct which makes it more difficult for the Government of the United States to enforce the laws of that country."

In a press cable to the London Daily Mail, its New York correspondent points out that if the wishes of the authorities at Washington are fulfilled, the boundary line between Canada and the United States, which for more than a century has required no army for its defence, will be dotted by a force of 10,000 coast guards on the United States side. What is more, this informant tells us:

"The frontier's 100 ports of entry are also to be increased to 600, and in future, it is proposed, no one is to be allowed to cross from one country to the other except through one of these ports.

"These changes, it is explained, are rendered necessary by the exigencies of Prohibition. As the United States custom-houses at each of these ports of entry must have their Canadian counterparts, the new scheme, to be a success, requires the co-operation of the two governments.

"Hitherto Canadians and Americans have crossed the border wherever they pleased, provided they notified the nearest port of entry of their crossing."

Just how big an industry border bootlegging is, we are told, may be gathered from the figures for the export trade of Canadian distillers, brewers, and wine-growers for the year 1929. As cited by the Ottawa Evening Citizen, the record shows that:

"Apart from home consumption, the export of alcoholic beverages—whisky, beer, and wine included—in 1929 was valued at $29,559,929 as compared with $28,448,393 in the calendar year of 1928.

"Of this total quantity, last year, $20,787,100 worth went to the United States and the balance to other countries, but evidently the traffic is declining somewhat, for in 1928 the exports to the States totaled $23,159,498."

A new international aspect of the problem appears in an Ottawa press dispatch to the Vancouver Sun. According to this information the United States may in future wet wrangles have to deal with the Government of France and not with Canada. Such a prediction is based on the figures on liquor export from Canada, of which we read:

"They show a tremendous increase in the whisky exports from Canada to St. Pierre-Miquelon, the French island colony in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

"The same figures also show a remarkable coincidence between this increase and the increase to the United States.

"Whisky exports from Canada to the United States, direct, in November, 1929, were 130,627 gallons, as compared with only 87,771 gallons in the same month in 1928. Whisky exports to St. Pierre in November, 1929, were 188,900 gallons, as compared with only 63,253 gallons in November of the previous year.

"Ale and beer exports to the United States showed a heavy decrease.

"The trading base between Canada and the United States when or if Prohibition of export is legislated at the coming session will be St. Pierre-Miquelon.

"If international difficulties arise over what is bound to be an even more troublesome situation for the United States, that country will have to do business with the Government of France."

The mere suggestion that the United States should arm and patrol its border against the entry of Canadian liquor rouses the ire of the Vancouver Daily Province, which declares:

"It is an unhappy proposal because, if it were carried out, it would inevitably raise a cloud upon the old friendship of the two peoples.

"Canadians would be reminded, every time they crossed the border, that the honest boast of the unfortified frontier and the hundred years of peace had ended in this display of men and vessels and munition of war.

"Americans would be reminded, on their lawful occasions at the border, that this display of force was intended against the people who were to be their hosts. It would make Canada the scapegoat of the domestic liquor issue of the United States. It would exhibit Canada—which supplies only 2 per cent. of the illicit liquor consumed in the United States—as the villain of the Prohibition drama."

Ten thousand rifle and one thousand machine-guns are liable to do a lot of damage anywhere, observes the Ottawa Journal. But, it adds, "when they are in the hands of the sort of people who have been serving as Volstead-enforcement officers, notoriously without discrimination in fingering a trigger, anybody's liable to be shot at any time, whether he is a smuggler, or a bootlegger, or an evangelist." So this daily things "it's no matter to laugh at."

Typhoid Carriers A Health Menace

Unfortunate People Carry Typhoid Germs and Start Epidemics

Several years ago a woman in New York City became known as "Typhoid Mary."

"Typhoid Mary" is one of those people who have become infected with the bacilli of typhoid, and although she is herself, immune to the disease, she has passed on the germs to other people wherever she went. What made her all the more dangerous was the fact that "Typhoid Mary" was a cook, and persisted in pursuing that profession, regardless of the fact that the authorities told her that she was a menace to the health of every community with which she came in contact.

"Typhoid Mary"—whose real name is Mary Mallon—was discovered by Dr. George A. Soper, whose job as a sanitary engineer made him a doctor of sick cities rather than sick individuals. He was called in to investigate a mysterious typhoid epidemic that broke out in a summer home at Oyster Bay. Six people out of a household of eleven were attacked. In order to ascertain the cause, the water supply was tested, the plumbing inspected, the milk supply inspected, even vegetables and fruits were examined but no clue to the cause of the outbreak was found at any of these obvious sources. So, Dr. Soper went to work and followed up the health record of every person who had entered the house that season. He finally lit upon the information that for a time that year the former cook of the household had been away and a new one had been engaged in the interval. The cook, of course, was Mary Mallon.

The doctor started on the trail of the new cook. It led him along the route of the most amazing chain of typhoid epidemics that had been uncovered in years—in view of the fact that not one of the outbreaks had been from a known cause at the time. In one of the households where everyone but Mary, the cook, and the head of the house, had taken ill, Mary's employer thought so highly of the manner in which she had helped around the house during the calamity that he gave her $50 as a present.

It took Dr. Soper some time to locate Mary, and when he did find her, she was very little help to him on his mission, which was to protect the public from further exposure to the germs of which she was a breeding ground. She refused to give him any information, she refused to submit to bacteriological tests. She denied that she could have caused typhoid to anybody, although in the house in which she was working at the time, the daughter of the family had just died of typhoid.

"Typhoid Mary" would not co-operate in any way with the authorities, so that they had no choice but to put her away for three years on North Brother Islands. Examinations proved there, what the doctors suspected, that there would likely be typhoid epidemics wherever she went. Mary sued the city of New York for $50,000 for putting her away, but she lost her case. It was shown that she had caused an indefinitely large number of people to contract typhoid. She even worked in such a fertile field as a maternity hospital—giving twenty-five people the disease there.

There are typhoid carriers like Mary Mallon—thousands of them, who constitute just as great a danger to your health and mine as this woman did to those people with whom she came in contact. Some of them have had typhoid, and the germs are still with them and found in their excretions. Other people, like Mary, have been attacked by the germs and although they are in no danger of getting typhoid themselves, they pass it on to other people. And the worst of it is, that a percentage of the carriers in Canada are in regular contact with our food sources.

Typhoid carriers are apt to disbelieve that they do spread the disease, and they are difficult for the authorities to handle, as in the case of Mary Mallon, for they feel under a great injustice if they are restricted in any way. For that you can hardly blame them. They should be willing and even anxious to have a thorough bacteriological examination made of excretions and blood. If following this, they are proved to be "carriers," they should follow out the instructions given as to the best means of obtaining a cure.

In England some of the known carriers have been pensioned, so that the authorities could keep them where they would do no more harm. But there are carriers all over the world, including Canada, who are not discovered.

As time goes on, undoubtedly medical officers will have more success in inducing carriers not to endanger the health of others any more than can be avoided. But in the meantime we must be careful to protect ourselves from other unfortunate people. Although the health measures of your city or town may be the best, and although you know that typhoid is almost on the list of conquered diseases, it must be borne in mind at all times that typhoid carriers are an ever-present danger.

One of the first lessons from Mary Mallon's case is of course, that people should not employ help for their household, without some investigation of the suggested employee's medical history. This is made doubly true because a large percentage of the carriers are women. So this is one of the first questions you should ask an applicant. "Have you ever had typhoid fever?"

And the help, when engaged should at all times be careful to keep themselves clean. And the kitchen clean too—the cleanest room in the house.

When there is typhoid in the house, it should never be forgotten that the disease is most generally—in fact, almost invariably, transmitted by the hands. For this reason, nurses are attacked by typhoid more than any other class.

Food should be safeguarded. Fruit bought from strangers should not be eaten unless washed or the skin removed. Food in restaurants that has to be handled after the cooking, like sandwiches, might well be avoided if there is any doubt in your mind. No one should eat without washing the hands, even though there may be no apparent dirt there.

Remember typhoid fever is largely a disease of sanitation and personal cleanliness, and you can help yourself a great deal toward the avoidance of this disease by observing a few simple rules.

The Dominions and Britain

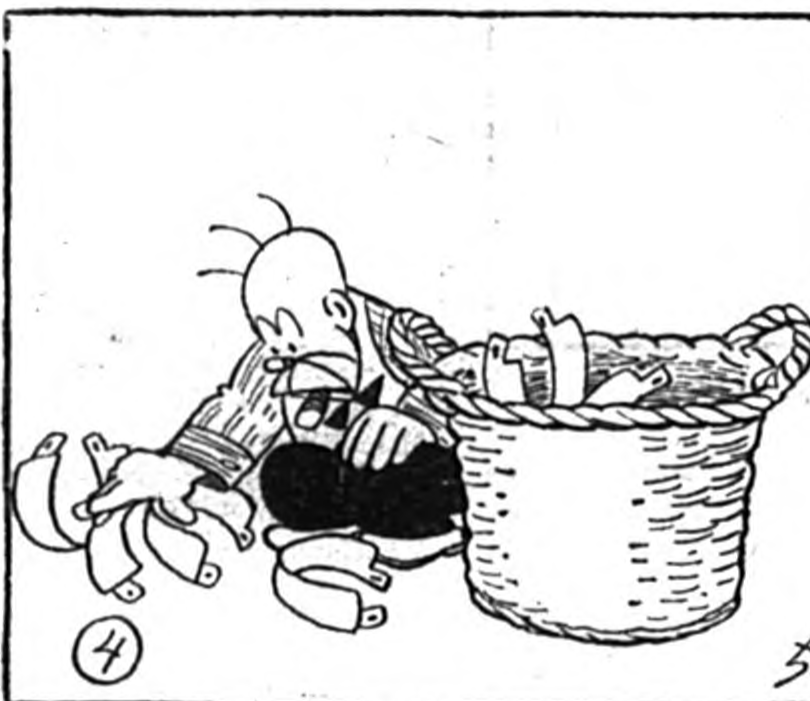

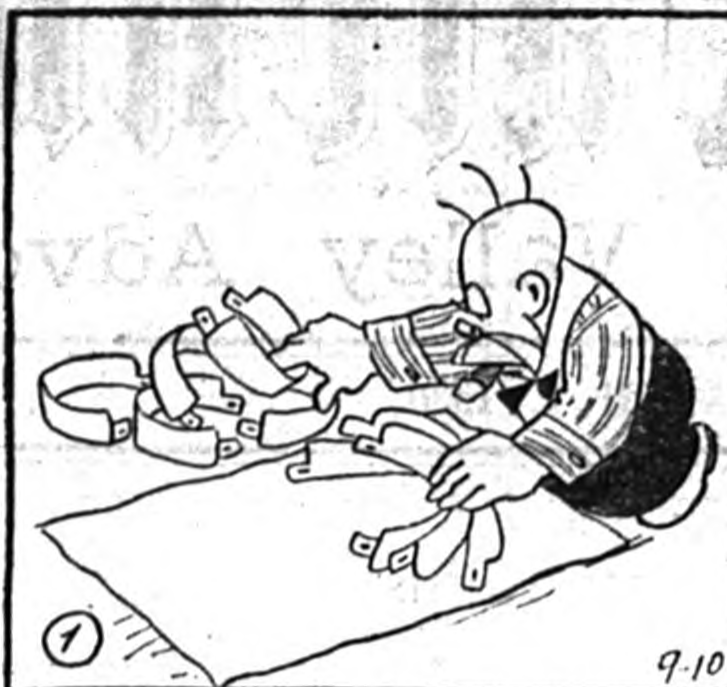

Perth West Australian: Since nothing is more likely to conduce to their own prosperity than a prosperous Britain, their chief customer, they might with advantage take counsel together as to how their own developments may be directed to increase the purchasing power of the British people. An economic unit the Empire is not in the least likely to become, its component parts being in so vastly different stages of industrial development, but the lack of economic unity is not fatal to a very large measure of economic co-operation.

Disorder in Australia

Auckland Weekly News: The readiness to use violence in labor disputes shown in Australia during recent years has become progressively more disquieting as instances have multiplied. . . . It justifies uneasy speculation as to whether Australia is drifting, when disorder can be precipitated so hastily, so rashly and on such a scale.

ADAMSON'S ADVENTURES—By O. Jacobsson

Let's Not Wear 'Em!

FANNIE HURST

Are the fashion mongers going to succeed in reviving the obsolete and ridiculous spectacle of a woman tripping over her train? Let the dictators be careful, lest the "tyranny of fashion" cease to be a half-affectionate phrase and stand suddenly revealed in its true light as an impudent and intolerable obligation.

It has been embarrassingly true of the female to the human species, that you can lead her from one form to another of personal adornment, but you cannot make her celebrate about it. Witness the hoop-skirt, the big sleeve, the corset, the bustle. In times past she has lent herself to the outlandish, the impractical, the cumbersome, the absurd and the risible, for so long, that it seems only natural that the Master Mind behind the dictatorship should feel enormous self-confidence.

During the last ten years, in the ferment of the war, radical changes have occurred in woman's dress. These changes eloquently represent her new psychological, sociological, economic and political status. A peep into the clothes closet of Queen Victoria would have proved that she did not golf, drive a car, or go to business. The utilitarian fashions of the last ten years tell eloquently of woman's new and varied activities.

But slowly, surely, subtly, over a period of three years, forces have been at work to pry from woman those fashions of the past decade which she has found so sane and comfortable. Slyly, Paris has been dropping that hemline, inch by inch. Subtly, woman's eye has been trained toward the skirt of more yardage.

And then, overnight, as it were, fashion, emboldened by signs of success, suddenly trumpets her triumph. Long skirts. Trains. Corsets. Larger hats. Eleven yards to a gown instead of four or five. Long gloves. Long hair.

The woman shopping has not much choice. Not only are the jimple fashions of yesteryear not on view, but if they were, it would be rank impracticability to buy them. It not only takes a crusader's strength of purpose to be "special," but there are two other deterrents. It is expensive to be special. It is conspicuous to be special.

At the moment, the ridiculous spectacle is seen of millions of women about to climb back into corsets, trains, long gloves and coiffures. Here is one of the most important emancipations of woman in the past 12 years, about to go for naught. Organization alone can save her from the predicament. "Down with the corset and up with the hemline!" should be the slogan of every woman who doesn't want to be bullied into doing something as undesirable as it is unwelcome.

Britain Leads The World

The croakings of the pessimists have seldom been heard to such notable advantage when sounding the knell of Britain's existence as a world power as during the past few months. It is, therefore, distinctly heartening to learn that, after all, things are not quite so desperate as the mourners would have us believe.

Shipbuilding is one of Britain's key industries. So long as she maintains her lead in shipbuilding, there is hope for her survival from the dire fate forecast by the disciples of gloom. Lloyd's Registry for 1929 has just been issued, and it shows that in the building of ships Britain still leads the world. During the year just ended she built 54.5 per cent. of all the world's shipping, the total tonnage output of which 2,793,210. The next nearest was Germany, with only 249,077 tons. A particularly bright feature is that Britain showed an increase of 77,000 tons over her total for 1928.

With figures such as these before us, we find it increasingly difficult to realize that Britain is swiftly descending to the bowwows. It looks rather as though things are beginning to pick up, and that the Old Country has a big kick left in her still. It would be foolish optimism, however, to expect the croakers to cease from croaking while they have breath.—Montreal Star.

Business and Civilization

Prof. Harold J. Laski in Harper's Monthly Magazine (New York): If we wish to be civilized, we must transfer the emphasis of business life from the pursuit of money as its guiding principle to a due regard for the things money is to serve. There is room in such a conception for every diversity of type, the great economic explorer to whom risk is the salt of life, the bureaucratic official to whom routine is all, the artist-craftsman who will call no man master. But such a world would have a different scale of values from the present order. . . . It may become a society in which there are few wealthy men. Their disappearance will merely involve the absence of that conspicuous display which has made much of our social life seem crude and vulgar and tawdry.

Smith—"I suppose your landlord asks you a lot for the rent of this house?" Brown—"I should think he does; at least twice a month."

A scientist predicts that the next war will be a wireless one. And sometimes it sounds as if it had started!

IS YOUR APPETITE POOR?

PERHAPS by dieting or other means, you have been treating the symptoms, rather than the cause. Loss of appetite, heartburn, sour stomach, are symptoms that the blood is impure. This explains the successful use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in all such cases. Here is a typical example:—

"I began to feel easily tired," writes Miss Margaret White, of Parry Sound, "and when I sat down to a meal I felt I did not want to eat. A doctor told me I was anemic but I made little progress with his medicine. When I started taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I soon noticed that my appetite was improving, that the headaches came less frequently and that I was not so easily tired. Now my weight has increased, my cheeks are rosy and every ache and pain has vanished."

Start today to improve your appetite. Buy Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from your druggist's or by mail, post-paid, at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ontario. Send for free book—"What to Eat and How to Eat."

The Soviet and India

Bombay Times of India: India and the Far East have always been regarded by the Soviet authorities as a fruitful ground for Communist seed. They were bitterly disappointed in China. . . . Their recent actions show that the Soviet are no better pleased with the result of their efforts to convert India to their creed. The executive of the Communist International in Moscow not long ago turned M. N. Roy out of his charge as director of propaganda in India; he has now been expelled as a renegade. Apparently he did not produce sufficiently fruitful results for the money they copiously voted him. A gentleman of the name of P. Schubin is understood to be Roy's successor.

French Develop African Desert

France Digging Artesian Wells to Make the Great Sahara Bloom

Algiers.—Most people look upon the Sahara as a land open for world tourists, enjoying an ideal winter. This is partly true since the great African desert has been made possible for motoring. Nevertheless, it is not only a show place of never-to-be-forgotten attractions, but also a land of labor. Indeed, this wilderness, owing to the energetic efforts of the French authorities, is becoming a land of ever-green gardens, where the populations live peacefully in the shade of their palm trees amid wives, children, asses and camels.

The Saharan tribes believe their country to be the most beautiful and themselves the happiest of people and, while busy cultivating their gardens, or lazily lying in the sun along their mud-baked houses, bless Allah for pouring so many and generous gifts upon them.

The Algerian Sahara covers an area of about 2,200,000 kilometers and is inhabited by over 300,000 people of Berber or Arab origin, white and black, nomad or sedentary. It has been divided by writers into three sections: A large pasture field, where several million domestic animals (sheep, oxen, asses and camels) feed; a small cereal field, where inter alia, barley and tobacco grow, and lastly, a beautiful garden.

Artesian Wells

France is carrying out a wide hydraulic policy through which many wells have been and are being dug. These are known by the natives as "Friendship Fountains" and have conquered the Saharan tribes far more easily than could have soldiers and guns and turned the deserted region into fruitful lands the products of which are known to the world at large.

The first French artesian well was dug in 1846, and the most famous one in 1924 in the small oasis of Raier on the wa, from Biskra, the famous winter resort to Tuggart and the great desert market lying on the main camel tracks. When opened, it gave an output of 20,000 litres a minute.

The most famous oasis is found at Anargia, a small town inhabited by Arabs and Negroes and lying 850 kilometers south of Algiers. This oasis includes nearly 1,000,000 date trees enclosed in beautiful gardens. Two hundred and eighty kilometers farther south is the small but very beautiful oasis of El Golea, lying in a romantic setting at the foot of a very old Ksar (castle) perched up high on a rock towering above the endless plain.

Cost and Value of Dates

That date trees are valuable resources to their owners is clearly shown by the fact that each tree costs from 800 to 1200 francs, according to the quality of its fruit and is considered by all the Saharan people as a heavenly manna to be used as a daily food. Even camels are so fed when undertaking a journey of several days over the sand plains to the remote and meagre pasture fields.

At the present time, according to recent estimates, the volume of water obtained by artesian wells, both French and native, is about 200,000 litres a minute, irrigating an area of 300,000 hectares covered with palm gardens yielding a yearly crop of dates worth 100,000,000 francs, making the annual export of this fruit to France and foreign countries worth about 130,000 cubic quintals, or 70,000,000 francs.—Christian Science Monitor.

Some One

So one came knocking
At my wee, small door;
Some one came knocking
I'm sure—sure—sure.
I listened, I opened,
I looked to left and right,
But naught there was a stirring
In the still, dark night.
Only the busy beetle
Tap-tapping in the wall,
Only from the forest
The screech-owl's call.
Only the cricket whistling
While the dewdrops fall,
So I know not who came knocking,
At all, at all, at all.
—Walter De La Mare, in "Down-Adown-Derry."

Ontario to Utilize Partly-Burned Wood

Toronto.—Canadian pulpwood manufacturers may utilize the thousands of acres of partly burned timber in New Ontario, according to Ontario Government officials. A successful sale has already been made of a large quantity of such wood in the Hearst area.

In recent years there has been comparatively little use of burnt-over timber in Ontario," stated W. C. Cain, deputy minister of lands and forests. "The department has been asked to sanction the cutting of this wood for export to the United States, but we did not approve of that. But judging by this recent sale Ontario mills may find use for this sort of timber."

Live Crickets

London.—In the columns of the London Times there appeared recently the following advertisement:

Live house crickets wanted for country house; must be healthy, strong and loud chirpers; state price. Write Box Q 1348, the Times E. C. 4.

The advertiser, a doctor, was soon traced, and he stated that the advertisement was inserted in an effort to supply a real want, as he had just bought a country mansion of the old Elizabethan type, which was completely except for crickets on the loath.

"The house," he said, "has fine old, open brick grates that are just aching for crickets. Already I have prepared the homes of my new little friends. The holes are neat and deep. The rugs are before the fire and I will promise that all the delicacies they like shall be showered upon them. Then, and not till then, will my home be like home."

This desire for crickets is no new fad of the doctor's. He had an old house before, and when he first went there no crickets were in occupation.

One day, however, he attended a poor patient who could not pay the fee, but in her house he heard crickets innumerable.

"Send me a few," said the worthy medico, "and I will send you a receipt."

The crickets arrived the next day and after boring holes for them around the fireplace the doctor fed them daily until quite a firm friendship had sprung up.

"At first they would come out only after dark, but as time wore on they seemed to get to know the smell of my pipe, I think, for whenever I was alone in the room they would creep out and, sitting on the hearth at my feet, sing their little song till they could be heard all over the house."

The news that some one was interested in crickets came as a pleasant surprise to an expert at the Natural History Museum. "It is a change to hear some one asking for crickets," he said. "Usually it is the other way round. We have many complaints and requests for the most effective method of getting rid of them."

"Now, personally I like crickets and I would have one or two of them in my house if I knew where to get them. But you see there is no place in this country where you can procure house crickets, except in refuse dumps and I do not like them as much as all that."

Sports of Britain's Royalty Modernize 'The Sport of Kings'

George V and Three Sons Follow Popular Games of Golf, Riding and Fencing

London.—Members of the royal family are ardent sportsmen, but each has his particular sport.

King George V, for many years has been known as an expert shot. A light gun has been made especially for him and he now passes much of his time while at Sandringham shooting. His majesty's physicians have not allowed him to take part in any strenuous riding since his recent illness.

The Prince of Wales has given his attention to riding, hunting, piloting airplanes and playing golf. Almost every day before his departure for Africa he worked to perfect his game. He shoots in the eighties.

Close observers of the Prince's game say that his woods have improved tremendously in the last six months, but that his putting and approach shots still lack the grace and assurance of a Hagen, Compson or Jones. His drives are straight, low shots which carry well and generally keep him out of trouble. He plays a cool, well-timed game in a serious spirit.

The Duke of York enjoys hunting, yachting and target shooting. Prince George is an ardent rider and an enthusiastic golfer, but hasn't developed the technique of his older brother, the Prince of Wales, as yet. Prince Henry, who is following a life of active service in the army, has selected fencing and riding as his favorite sports.

MINARD'S "KING OF PAIN" LINIMENT

Australian Seaside Pleases Americans

Sydney, N.S.W.—When the steamship Malolo was recently in this port, with between 300 and 400 business men from various parts of the United States, on a tour intended to familiarize them with the Pacific and its problems, much interest was taken in the beaches along the ocean front of Sydney.

The opinion was expressed that the beaches are unequalled for their fine white sand and general contour and for the ocean-side sport and pastime they provide.

Within a stretch of about 30 miles—from 15 miles south of Sydney to 15 miles north—there are a dozen beaches. From September to April there are crowds on all, the largest attendance being in November, December, January and February, when the weather is warmest. There are usually more than 100,000 persons on this stretch at the week-end. The customing recalls Deauville. The municipalities which have these beaches within their boundaries spend large sums in bathhouses, promenades and other equipment necessary for the comfort of the visitors.

"For three years I have been troubled with kidney trouble, and could scarcely wait for pain. Last Christmas a friend of mine came to stay with us for a few days, and brought with her a bottle of Kruschen Salts, and gave me a good dose. After about a week, taking a little every morning, I found the trouble leaving me, and I could walk well. I have taken Kruschen nearly every day for a month ago, and then I thought I could manage without them, but last week the old trouble came back again. I immediately got a bottle of Kruschen Salts then and there, and I feel quite a new woman again. I am so grateful that I thought I would write and let you know what I think of your wonderful Salts. Original letter on file for inspection. —(Mrs.) J. H. Kruschen Salts is obtainable at drug and department stores in Canada at 75c a bottle. A bottle contains enough to last for 1 or 2 months—good health for half-a-cent a day."

PARLIAMENTARY DOINGS

Parliament is looking back upon progress which has not only been unique, but highly significant. Within the short space of a few working days the main estimates have been reached, a situation without parallel in recent years. More important, however, and causing corridors and lobbies to hum with speculation as they have not done in the past four years, is the fact that within the same space of time the country has been brought within measurable distance of a general election.

Opinion differs as to whether or not Premier King, in taking up Hon. Mr. Bennett's challenge, was deliberately seeking an issue, or was lured into a situation from which he cannot very well extricate himself without an appeal to the voters. The latter view however, predominates. It is well-known that the government supporters, faced by the wheat situation in the west and depression in the East, have no hankering for an election. The Opposition, on the other hand, has nothing to lose, but is confident that it stands to gain substantially from conditions in the country, even to the point of succeeding to the Treasury benches.

The issue with which Conservative Leader Bennett confronted the Prime Minister in his speech in the debate on the address was the fact that his government was a minority administration, which had never commanded more than 46% of the votes of the people. How could Mr. King presume, he asked, to go to the Imperial Conference and profess to represent Canadian opinion under such a condition.

Mr. King, to judge from the discrepancy between his own attitude and the reluctance of his followers to plunge into any election contest, was momentarily off his guard. He did not attempt to justify the representative character of his government, but bluntly intimated to Mr. Bennett that he might have his election, that the Canadian people might have the opportunity of saying whether the Liberal or the Conservative Party was the more representative of their views. Later in his speech he qualified his statement by suggesting that an issue upon which to appeal was yet to be found. He mentioned the possibility of one being found in the forthcoming tariff situation.

The Liberal caucus during the past week has shared equally with the House in the spotlight of interest. As a rule, caucuses are secret conclaves, but this week's gathering of the government forces was of so vigorous a character that the traditional soft pedal was about as effective as a violin mute on a circus calliope. Before the members had adjourned their stormy session it had become noised abroad that they had agreed to support the government in legislation to prohibit liquor clearances to the United States.

The policy is viewed as another of the violently shaping reeds which indicate the way in which the election wind is blowing. While nominally the legislation is in response to petitions, largely from Western Canada, in reality it is the price which the government is paying for the assurance of influential press support in Manitoba and Ontario.

The government found it difficult to persuade its members that the policy of last session, which was to insist that the United States should look after its own law enforcement problems, should be abandoned. A ban on clearances would cost Canada over $7,000,000 annually in loss of excise duties. Cost of enforcement of the proposed law was also estimated at another million. On the eve of an election, however, strange exigencies are recognized, and the government forces finally agreed to support the legislation, reserving the devout hope that it will meet its fate in the Senate.

Main estimates which the government has placed before the house during the week total $399,358,101. They compare with those for a year ago of something under $392,000,000 and thus represent an approximate increase of $7,000,000. They are almost $5,000,000 lower, however, than the total of last year's main estimates and supplementaries.

Since the estimates make no provision for increased soldier pensions, increased subsidies to Western provinces with the conclusion of the resources agreements, nor higher salaries for technical civil servants, it is expected that this year's supplementaries will be heavy, and that Canada's purse, before the next 12 months are out, will have demands made upon it, heavier than in any year since the war.

The estimates themselves are of routine character. A cut of $600,000 in the immigration appropriation forecast's the government's intention of easing up on its policy of bonusing people to come to the country. An increase of almost $2,000,000 in the vote for civil aviation in a sign of the times, as indicating the place which the aeroplane already holds in modern life. A related item of interest is the jumping of the vote for the surveying of government air mail routes from $190,000 to $700,000.

The House at the present moment is giving almost unanimously favorable consideration to propositions put forward by Dr. Peter McGibbon (Cons., Muskoka-Ontario) and W. G. Ernst (Cons., Lunenburg) for the assistance of ex-service men. The two members have presented a resolution and an amendment, the effect of which would be to shift to the Board of Pension Commissioners the burden of disproving the disability claim of any veteran applicant. So far only one Liberal Speaker (John Millar, Qu'Appelle) has spoken against the suggestion; the other government benches have all been supporters of it. The government intends granting a special committee on soldier's pensions and will introduce the bill which the committee recommends.

PREVENTION OF CRIME

Something unusual is going on in the Old Country during the past few years. There is a decided lessening in the amount of crime, a fact which is proved by the records of the best known prisons and jails. The Old Btley Calendar, an indisputable record proves that the ex-convict with a long record is becoming a thing of the past.

Some people are alarmed at this symptom of change, and are wondering whether the morale of the decent living has been so lowered that crimes are passing unnoticed and unpunished. It appears however, that this is not the real reason, but that what is known as preventive legislation is one of the prime causes of this most welcome effect.

English prisons are not to-day breeding places of crime. Humane treatment of prisoners, segregation of hopeless criminals, discrimination in favor of youthful law-breakers have all had a place in bringing about a less amount of crime.

It will be acknowledged, then, that preventive legislation does help in keeping down the criminal instinct.

The Concert given by the W. A. of the Anglican Church in the Town Hall on Friday evening was a very successful entertainment. All parts were well rendered and highly appreciated by the large audience which filled the Hall. There were six vocal solos by Miss Wisden, Mr. D. Todd, Mrs. Gilbertson, Mr. T. Robson, Mrs. C. S. Wales and O. Todd and a vocal duet by the Messrs. D. and O. Todd—songs by a male quartette and the amusing sketch, "Snowed up with a Duchess."

The last of the St. Andrews Lyceum lectures, under the auspices of the McGill University, was given on Saturday evening by Dr. Maude Abbott in a charming travelogue, "Through Italy and the Near East." It proved to be one of the most successful lectures of this season, both as to the interest of the subject and the size of the audience which filled the United Church. Beautiful views of the Coasts of the Adriatic and of Southern Italy were thrown on the screen in their rich coloring by a projectoscope. A unique feature of this charming lecture was in the form of original verses by Dr. Abbott describing the scenes presented to the audience. The distinction which this talented lady has achieved in her sphere of activity, is a source of pride to the inhabitants of this town, and they on this occasion expressed their high appreciation of the privilege which she afforded them of sharing the charm of this delightful tour.

We are pleased to note that the Rev. Mr. Windsor's ankle has so far improved that he was able to preside at concert and the lecture last week.

Montreal Herald Lauds Agricultural Society.

REFERS TO DONATION MADE BY SIR GEORGE PERLEY

Compliment Lachute and District as a centre for Industrial Development.
Has a good word to say about our Leading Business Men.

A well deserved editorial tribute was paid by the Montreal Herald on February 25th last, to the growth and development of the Agricultural Society and to the donation made to this organization by Sir George H. Perley, our worthy Federal Member, and also took occasion to make kindly reference to the Industrial position of Lachute and to the worthiness of our business leaders.

The Watchman, on behalf of the Society as well as the people of the town and county, heartily thanks the Herald, on account of the fact that it is very seldom that such references are made by the big city dailies, regarding the topic under discussion.

Following is the Herald's editorial in full,—

AT THE CENTRE OF ARGENTEUIL

What a power for good the Argenteuil Agricultural Society is proving is demonstrated to a wide public every year by the annual four day fair held on the Society's own grounds in the thriving town of Lachute. This Society undoubtedly has been the means of promoting in a large way the primary industry of the county and in bringing the two races together in work for the common good.

Initiated and fostered without much official aid or recognition, its operations have grown on such a scale that the Provincial Government has felt impelled to give it a substantial subsidy, and now Sir George H. Perley, who has always been deeply interested in it has endowed it with a sum of $10,000, the interest on which, $500 a year, will be used for extending the Society's work.

Incidentally the Society's fair is a good advertisement for the town of Lachute; indeed the fair is to the County what the National Exhibition is to Toronto. It is very encouraging to note that Lachute like many other of the smaller towns of the Eastern section of the Province, is steadily growing in industrial and commercial importance, and when the proposed development of the Carillon rapids is put into execution, it may be expected to grow still more rapidly. The town is fortunate in having a well-settled population, where the two races work in harmony, and in having as industrial leaders men who take great interest and pride in the community they are building and in the county so abundantly blessed by nature with those natural resources which make for permanency and progress.

PIONEER WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

There were twenty-three members and a large number of friends present at the Annual Meeting of the Pioneer Women's Institute at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. Smith, Beech Ridge, on March 4th.

Reports of the year were read and new officers elected. Mrs. Thompson our faithful president for the past two years, in a few appropriate words thanked the members for their kindness and assistance. Officers elected: President, Mrs. L. M. Hooker; 1st Vice-President, Mrs. G. Smith; 2nd Vice-President, Mrs. MacDonell; Treasurer, Mrs. R. Bradley; Secretary, Mrs. Jas. MacKenzie and various committees formed.

The contest this year was an original and useful article made from the cotton flour sack.

There were twelve entries, every one worthy of a prize. The judges, Miss Wilson, Mrs. P. Burwash, Mrs. A. Maxwell, had a hard task deciding which was best, as there were aprons, children's clothing, a bedspread, quilt, luncheon set, laundry bag, table cover, to choose from there by demonstrating the fact that the cotton flour sack, should not be wasted. Prizes: 1st, Mrs. A. Parker; 2nd, Mrs. G. Smith; 3rd, Mrs. T. Cowan; 4th, Mrs. R. MacVicar.

Refreshments were served, and a pleasant evening closed by singing God Save the King.

BROWNSBURG

The United Church of our village has again celebrated in annual festivity the greatest social event of its church life, when on Thursday evening, February 27th., it held its Tea-Meeting, reaching this year an unusual high standard both in the large number of people who attended, and in the excellent cuisine and service, which quite measured up to, and even went beyond, expectations. Several long tables had been laid in the Sunday School Rooms, and these were arrayed with the choicest of generous donations, in the centre of which were large fruit cakes of the wedding or Christmas variety, decorated with colored frosting and surmounted with a tiny vase and flowers. The arrangements for serving omitted no detail necessary to good service and efficiency, and the unusually large crowd that attended found little delay except the necessary period of waiting, that is always long if you are hungry, incident to the time taken by those already at table, and enjoying the splendid provision of the hour and the happy fellowship of kindred spirits, all of which help one to forget for a while the busy cares and worries of ordinary common living. Great credit is due the Auxiliary for the splendid manner in which the entire event was carried through, and there was not an incident that marred an evening of unusual happiness and merry making. After the supper a program was conducted in the church, and this was quite suited both to the place and hour. The program committee are indebted to Mr. H. W. Butler, baritone, of our village, for two solos in which he was accompanied at the piano by Miss Rhianne Roberts, and to Mr. A. R. Bissell, artist, of Dalesville, who drew sketches and caricatures in free-hand, to the amusement of the crowd. The audience crowded into an overflowing house, enjoyed these numbers of song and sketches, and joined heartily in the jokes and laughter. The Church Choir also rendered two numbers in unusually good spirit and this section of the program was also enjoyed by the audience. The committee had received the services of Mrs. Hamersley, of Montreal, as elocutionist, who delighted the crowd by her excellent art and interpretation of character, all her numbers being in the best of form and setting and quite appropriate to the hour. Her numbers were greatly appreciated, and should Mrs. Hamersley ever again return to Brownsburg it is certain she will be cordially welcomed. The evening closed with a special number in the form of a pantomime, "Nearer, my God, to Thee," acted by seven young ladies of the congregation in costume, as the words were sung by Miss Edna Woods. Under the searching eye of a spot light and in the subdued semi-darkness surrounding the performers, the movements of the players were finely harmonized with the melody and the meaning of each line as sung was clearly illustrated in posture and gesture. Mrs. Thompson accompanied at the piano with sympathy and expression.

The evening closed with a sense of true sacredness and that the entire program was both a pleasure and profit, is the testimony of all who attended.

Clothes seem to be growing more and more luxurious every day. At all fashionable gatherings, the general atmosphere denotes charming femininity, which is really quite a treat, in flattering new silhouettes which rather follow the line of the figure, as in Style No. 161.

It is modified Princess type that is equally suited for miss or matron and is designed in sizes 16, 18, 20 years, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust. The front in panel effect gives the figure the smart vertical line and slimmest so essential to smartness this season. The circular skirt at either side and at the back is shaped snugly through the hips with rippling fulness at hem which dips its sides.

The bodice is beautifully moulded in Princess lines. A softly flaring collar of Vionnet neckline detracts from the breadth and makes this delightful Princess dress suited to larger women. Flaring cuffs of sleeves are ultra-new and flatteringly feminine.

Silk crepe, chiffon, crepe marocain, fishnet, crepe satin and wool crepe smartly appropriate.

PERSISTENCE

Even when work is all planned out, however, failure sometimes follows through lack of persistence. It has been said that "persistence is the key to existence. Success invariably rewards the good fight. Knowing what to do or how to do it won't bring results. The nail is useless without the hammer. Courage is the complement of knowledge."

British Navy Sets Example in Respect

Young Naval Officer Never Fails to Show Respect to Older Men

Some time ago I heard an elderly man rebuke a youngster in a club with the remark: "When I was a young man it was customary to pay respect to one's elders," to which the boy replied: "Oh, well, at any rate, then, we've got one good thing out of the war."

I admit I had to laugh. But my sympathies are entirely with the elderly man. Nothing will convince me that one of the elementary signs of breeding is not deference of youth to age. And that is why the Navy produces the finished article. In the course of a long life I have known very few naval officers who were snobs (though I admit a certain admiral was one of the worst of the type I have ever met); and never have I known a case of a young naval officer failing to show respect to an older man.

Other professions do not carry out the traditions of respect to age to the same extent as the Navy. Neither does a public school and university training produce the same result. I have in my mind three rich boys, all great friends, public school boys, and all of whom have just left Oxford. Two are all they should be; the third is, frankly, a young hog.

And I do not altogether blame the war for this lack of respect to older men. I attribute it to the slackness and slovenliness that are a part of so many youths of the present day. Possibly in my father's day discipline was carried too far. For instance, if a young man seated was accosted in a club by an older man, the former would, as a matter of course, rise from his chair.

But we have gone to the other extreme, and there is much discourtesy shown today by boys to men old enough to be their fathers. I was recently addressed by a boy who had just left his public school by my surname, pure and simple, no prefix at all.

Such a state of things would have been impossible five-and-twenty years ago. Let us be thankful that even today it is an impossible happening in one body of men—I mean the Navy.

WIDE WATERS

by CAPTAIN A.E.DINGLE

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Alden Drake, formerly a sailor, grown soft and flabby through a life of idle ease, ships aboard the clipper Orontes as "boy," under command of Jake Stevens, whose enmity he quickly incurs because of a mutual love for Mary Manning, a passenger, daughter of the owner. At Cape own Stevens is superseded as captain by Drake, whose lawyers have seen to the purchase of the Orontes during her cruise. Stevens runs the ship aground in the Straits off Java and is reduced from first mate to passenger. Drake frees the ship. The accident was due to Jake's carelessness, and now Jake comes before the new captain to "face the music."

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
"Mr. Stevens," Drake began, "I don't want to dig up a lot of old troubles. I think the quickest way is the best. I want to say first, to you and Mary, that I have held an inquiry into the stranding of the Orontes, and have found myself guilty."

"You've what?" gasped Jake. Mary pressed his arm warningly. Drake continued: "I have decided that whatever ill has happened to the ship or her people, has been directly due to my pursuit of a fad. As I see it now, it meant only sport to me, but something very much more serious to others."

Jake stood dumb. He could feel Mary's hand trembling on his arm. Forward, a concertina stopped playing and Bill Gadget bawled, so that all might hear:

"Stand up, y' lubbers! Health to the Captain and his passengers!"

There was silence, then three awkward, embarrassed cheers. The concertina started up again, and a song by a ship master is a brief passage of words. With the least possible delay Captain Alden Talbot Drake pronounced Jake and Mary man and wife. He kissed the bride warmly, and laughed at her blushes. He sat her at the right hand of the table head chair, then stood aside with that sunny, youthful, whimsical smile that naturally belonged to him. Jake Stevens stood by smiling, but as if not sure that he was invited. Drake laid a hand on the back of the head chair.

"Captain Stevens, won't you be seated?" he said.

"Oh, do you mean—is Jake to—What do you mean?" stammered Mary, her face alight with something which convinced Alden Drake forever of the unfathomable happiness to be got out of a decent deed well done.

"If Captain Stevens will take his seat, and let us begin on the wedding supper, perhaps you will not embarrass me with so many questions. Sit down, Twining. I want you to relieve Adams before all the color has gone out of Mrs. Stevens' face."

And Twining relieved young Adams, who was not in the secret.

"Mister Adams, Captain and Mrs. Stevens desire your company for the balance of the supper," said Drake with a twinkle. Many meals had been eaten in that saloon. Drake had seen young Mr. Adams eat a few. But he never saw him eat so little, or look about him so rudely as now. Jake seemed to be still a little uncertain. Drake went off on deck, leaving the bridal pair to recover their balance.

Jake Stevens had always been a good sailor. He stayed but briefly at the table after Drake left. His ship was in Suda Straits, near her port. It was volleyed forth with all the steam of rum-tucked throats. Drake paused while the cheers went up, then went on:

"So to get the gist of this business, Mr. Stevens, I did not enter the stranding in the Log. I am owner, as well as master, and I shall not enter it unless my officers insist."

"Do you mean you won't—" Jake stammered.

Drake cut in: "Let me finish, please. There is another matter. A word will dismiss it. Mary is your woman, Stevens. She always was. I did you a wrong there. But if you had heard what she told me a while ago, you would feel that I had been properly punished."

"Oh!" said Mary. The darkness was kind to her.

"Now I shan't reinstate you as mate, Mister Stevens," Jake's figure stiffened. Here, at last, was the meat. All the rest had been vapor: words. "Because it is not permissible for a sailing ship mate to have his wife aboard."

"Oh!" said Mary.

"So you will remain a passenger," said Drake, and the kindly darkness cloaked his broad grin, "a little longer. You see, if I were to put you back in command of the ship, you couldn't perform your own marriage ceremony, could you? So, if you will both come into the saloon with me, I'll call Mister Twining as a witness, and make of two splendid human beings the perfect pair."

"Just a minute, Captain Drake," said Jake Stevens, just a bit more chokily, "Are you having some more fun with me, or—"

"I'm having fun, certainly. I hope you will see the fun of it, too, Stevens. Come along."

They entered the saloon. Mary's big blue eyes opened like sea pansies. Like had dressed 'Er in a white jacket. They both stood at attention beside a table laid out as if for a feast to royalty. Twining stood outside his cabin door, grinning as if he knew something about it. There was a bouquet of flowers beside one plate. Mary stared hard before she recognized that bouquet as belonging to some of her hats. But she smiled at the joke. Drake was grinning, with a prayer book in his hand; and she could afford to smile.

"Come, children," the skipper grinned. "The feast awaits. Let us tuck this long splice. I never expected to be at your wedding, Jake. Now look at me!"

The marriage service as performed was night. A ship master's place was on deck. Drake stood at the rail, smoking his comfortable old pipe. The sing-song was progressing gloriously. Stevens and Mary came up slowly. In the dim companionway Jake tenderly wrapped a shawl around Mary's shoulders. She gazed up at him shyly. The sweet fragrance of her enveloped him. There was no reason for restraint. He gathered her to him, and crushed her hungrily in his arms.

Drake moved a bit farther forward. For a moment the smoke puffed from his pipe perked. Somewhere in the darkness forward a sailor began to sing "Maimuna."

Stevens came out of the companionway, and placed Mary near Drake at the rail. She held his arm. Jake gently removed her hand.

"I must look after my ship, lass," he said, and walked away aft. Drake chuckled. She turned quickly. Then she, too, laughed, a silvery, happy laugh.

"A ship master's loss is a passenger's gain, Mrs. Stevens," Drake said, drawing her nearer to him.

"You're not to call me that!" she said.

"Very well, Mary," Drake was still enjoying some tremendous piece of humor yet to be given out. He pressed her arm, and put his head down to her ear. He knew the new bridegroom would be looking; he could not resist placing one little tax upon Jake's composure.

"I have a secret for you, Mary," he whispered. "Don't jump like that! It looks guilty. I really ought to have told you both at the table; but you know I never do the expected thing. I think a bride ought to have some secrets, don't you? Of course you do. Listen: I'm going to give you a little wedding present as soon as we get ashore. I shall make over to you a one-quarter share in the Orontes, and—"

"Oh!" gasped Mary. "Oh, Alden!" She pulled his head down further, and kissed him on the lips, right in full view of puzzled and startled hubby.

"—and," Drake laughed, "there will be a one-quarter share for little Jake, and little Mary, and maybe for little Alden."

But Mary had left him. She cared nothing for Captain's orders. Captain Jake Stevens was overwhelmed by a blushing, moist-eyed bride who simply must blab out her secret though all

ENJOYING LIFE

Some people take to it like a duck takes to water. Others—well—

After all, there's no secret about it, yet most of us have been trying to solve the riddle since we began to think.

One of the oddest things about us is that we seem unable to do things simply. We must make them complex. If we think a task is too easy, well, we're not interested in it. In a way, this is a good sign. But if we could hold to the character which makes us feel this way, and still accept and apply to our life the simpler aspects of it, we should come a little nearer to the perfect condition. Seeing that we don't do this, we must face the facts and deal with them as best we can.

The only way to enjoy life is, many people say, to take it as it comes. In a sense, that is perhaps the best way—for some. Anyhow, it's the easiest. But is it the best way? Taking it as it comes is accepting whatever it brings without a protest. In other words—giving in.

Certainly what life brings us can be accepted philosophically. But that is no reason why we should mould its experiences for our development. Not kicking at life—but just meeting it honestly and fairly. Extracting the honey from it. Utilizing even the disappointments in such a manner as to turn them towards our own happiness. Life is full of compensations—if we only see them.

Young Duke of Norfolk Forms Company to Administer Estates

London.—The Duke of Norfolk premier member of the British peerage who came of age last May, has followed the example recently given by so many heads of Britain's ancient landed families. He has formed a limited company for the administration of his estates. The nominal capital is $250,000, and he is permanent governing director and chairman.

The estates are estimated to be worth millions of pounds, though parts have been sold since the former duke died. Norfolk House, the duke's London residence, which served as a club for Canadian women during war work in London, was sold last year. Arundel Castle, the great residence in Sussex, still possessing much of its ancient feudal appearance, has been rented more than once by prominent visitors from the United States.

From this castle the duke takes the oldest of his numerous titles—Earl of Arundel, 1139. The Duchy of Norfolk was not created until 1482. The present duke, who owns about 49,500 acres, succeeded the fifteenth duke in 1917, when he was nine years of age. Between that time and his coming of age last year the estates were administered by his uncle, Viscount Fitzalan.

Little Sisters

Many good women are doing a wonderful work by being "Big Sisters" to girls who are having a struggle. Who are the "Little Sisters" and what are their problems?

They are the girls who come from broken homes, who have no supervision or guidance from parents; or they are girls whose parents are too ignorant to give them wholesome guidance, or too indifferent to observe what is happening to their daughters. Perhaps the father or brother is a degenerate and makes vicious demands upon them. Perhaps the mother or older sister is immoral and the girl cannot look to them for help. The bad name these relatives bear about the poor girl out from good society and she is condemned to the company of those who will lead her astray.

The girl may meet constant friction in her home and attempt to get out of that atmosphere, so leaves home. She may have an overbearing father or an unreasonable mother, who makes life at home unpleasant for her.

Many parents fail to realize that this is a changing world and they try to hold their daughters to the kind of life they lived. "I had to quit school at twelve years of age and go to work. What was good enough for me is good enough for Mary," says one mother. Perhaps the girl's mother dies—these are the pitiful cases, for a mother is the natural protector of a girl. With no mother, she is placed around, in this home and that, and she becomes unstable and irresponsible.

Her father or her mother may be in prison. She may be the victim of an older man. She may have no natural opportunity for recreation or education or to learn a trade. Both parents may work away from home and she be permitted to run the streets. On the other hand, she may be so closely supervised that she has no chance to associate naturally with girls or boys of her own age. This may lead to her immorality when she arrives at the "boy-struck age."

There are many of these underprivileged and harassed "Little Sisters" and the woman who finds such a girl and gives her love and leadership and an opportunity to make good will likely be able to save a soul.

Mixing a Cake

To "cream" the shortening means to mash and beat it with a fork until it has the texture of thick cream. The sugar is then added and you continue creaming the mixture until it is light and fluffy.

A small amount of sifted flour and baking powder should be added to the creamed mixture, before the milk is added. This prevents separation, which would make the cake coarse grained. To insure a fine grained cake, beat the mixture after each addition of flour and milk.

Fresh eggs make the most delicate cake, but an egg will not beat successfully until it is at least three days old. Do not beat the egg whites until ready to use them, or the air will escape from the bubbles. The whites should be beaten until they will hold up in peaks; but not dry. It should be. Fold the egg whites else the cake will not be as moist as into the batter. If the yolks are used, beat them until thick and lemon colored. If a whole egg is used, add it to the creamed shortening and sugar, and beat the mixture well.

Match Your Complexion

With blue eyes, all shades of blue are appropriate, ranging from navy to light blue, and depending on the fairness of the skin. For variety, choose plain navy, plain vivid blue, and checks, figures and stripes of all sorts in which blue appears. Green may usually be worn with blue eyes, especially a blue green.

The brunette, with brown hair and eyes, will choose browns, from the dark seal shade to light tans. These may run into rusts and reds and may be used in plain colors or in combinations.

Medium complexions or mixed types, as those with brown hair and gray-blue-green eyes will prefer blue-green or gray-green shades in their clothing. They will not make a mistake with navy, green or black-and-white outfits. They have a wide range of choices from which to select. They are wiser, however, if they make one color theirs for the season and stick to it, thus giving the outfit the ensemble effect.

Lemon Pie

To make a lemon meringue pie filling, mix a half cup of sifted flour and one and one-fourth cup of sugar in the top of a double boiler and add a cup of boiling water, stirring constantly, then add a half cup of milk. Cook this mixture over hot water until thick and smooth, stirring continually. Add gradually the yolks of three eggs and the white of one, beaten together. Add a half tablespoon of butter, the juice of two lemons and the grated rind of one. When the mixture is cooked until it drops in thick sheets from the spoon, cool it and pour it into the baked pie shell. To make the meringue, add four tablespoons of sugar and a quarter teaspoon of salt to two stiffly beaten egg whites. Beat this mixture and cover the pie. Bake in a slow oven for twelve minutes, or until a delicate brown.

Tartare Sauce

The housewife who serves a salad daily is often at a loss to vary the salad dressing. The family tires of dressings served too frequently. For something extra nice, try this:

Add to one pint of mayonnaise a finely chopped shallot, a quarter cup of each of gherkins, olives and capers, and two tablespoons of finely chopped parsley. Add a cup of whipped cream just before serving.

Window Shades

The too-short window shade is likely to be pulled off the roller from time to time, as some energetic person gives it an extra pull. It is well to have the shade longer than the window. This is a convenience, too, when the window shade becomes worn on the lower end. It should then be taken off the roller, hemmed on the upper end, and reversed and placed back on the roller. Thus a shade will give double service.

Shepherd's Pie

Prepare mashed potatoes for a meal. Line a baking dish with a portion of these, then put into the center, diced meat and leftover gravy. Season with salt and pepper. Cover with another layer of mashed potatoes and bake until brown on top.

Prevent Diphtheria

Diphtheria is a very serious disease, causes great inconvenience in isolation, and leaves bad after effects, such as paralysis, heart and kidney diseases. About one school child in six has it, somewhere along his career. The dread disease may be prevented by a vaccination, which is harmless. It consists of several shots, under the skin, of a substance which builds up a resistance to the disease. If your child has not been immunized, better attend to it at once.

Building Hint

When building a home, remember to have a window in the clothes closets. This will provide ventilation and avoid the musty odor so likely to prevail in a closet, and will air out the clothing which has been worn. The light of such a closet will discourage moths, and incidentally, it will be easier to find what you want, in such a closet, and the closet may be kept in better order.

Winter Sports Keep "Boy Emperor" Busy

Pelting—ice skating has been added to the accomplishments of Henry Pu-yi, who sat for a time on the Dragon throne as the last of the Manchu emperors of China.

The "boy emperor" has had a small ring constructed in his residence at Tientsin and has employed a Japanese teacher to instruct him in plain and fancy skating.

The young man has always been interested in western forms of exercise, even while he was still emperor. His residence in the forbidden city retains the wooden runways which were constructed over the steps of his Chinese-style gateways, to permit him to ride a bicycle and use roller skates in his palace retreat.

In the summer, he amuses himself by playing tennis with Japanese and other foreign friends. His Manchu retainers, however, still regard with disapproval these innovations.

London Fog Rivalled By Delegates' Smoke

London.—The naval conference, which started in "pea soup" fog is proceeding amid clouds of pipe and cigar smoke.

While Ambassador Charles G. Dawes smokes his famous under-slung pipe, the British delegates smoke Virginia cigarettes. The Italians smoke cigarettes of Macedonian tobacco, which approximates Turkish. Andre Tardieu, French Premier, and Foreign Minister Briand smoke the brands that are so popular in the French army.

"Mrs. Proud is tickled to death with the way she fooled the customs inspectors." "How did she do it?" "She didn't buy a thing abroad."

The Higher Vision

"Robbery With Violence," the Police Called it. But the Clergyman Had a Standard of His Own

By LUCE DENNIS

He had been, without knowing it, under observation for the past half-hour. He sat, amiable and alone, on a seat in the Park, not far from the Admiralty Arch, enjoying the mild winter sunshine.

The Reverend James Lacey was a perfect specimen of the prosperous sporting parson up from the country. His suit was well cut, of good cloth, his benign face was ruddy, his stick gold-mounted. He was erect, square-shouldered, a man who would sit a horse well and upbraid his sinners roundly; but there was also a certain vagueness in his light-blue eyes.

Enjoying the mild, winter sunshine, he sat on. He was waiting for his daughter, who was shopping in Regent Street.

A constable passed the seat; and a young man, who had been sitting a few yards farther on, got up, came to Lacey, and sat down beside him.

"I suppose," he said, "that you keep your charity strictly for your own parish, parson?"

Lacey turned towards him, a little startled. He answered, after a pause:

"Not always. I've been known to help a lame dog from another county—layman."

The young man appreciated that. Something resembling a smile made his bitter mouth pleasant for a moment. He said less belligerently:

"Well, anyway, I suppose you're sick and tired of listening to hard-luck stories from down-and-outs?"

"I'm sick and tired of the number of men in this country who can't get work; but at of the men themselves."

The only men who sicken me are the very small army of men who won't work," Lacey said; and waited to hear his companion burst into protestations of his own love of work. He did nothing of the sort.

"I don't know why they should sicken you. Most of them are probably the remains of men like myself, who've looked for work till they're tired of looking. Sick and tired of looking, parson, for the work no one will give them."

"There are such cases, of course," Lacey rested his gloved hands on his gold-mounted stick, one above the other. "But I should like you to show me that you're unemployed, not unemployed. I owe that to my parishioners, who have the first call on my charity."

"I seem to have heard something about the dogs getting the crumbs which fall from the rich man's table," said the young man dourly.

"My dear boy, I'm not rich, but I try never to turn down a man who's genuinely in want of help. I like your voice—and I'm a judge of voices. But you must tell me a little more about yourself."

The story which Lacey heard was only a variant of others he had heard before; yet he seemed to listen carefully, apparently giving it his whole attention. First, there had been a small shop, which failed. No references, of course, no out-of-work pay, and no union.

Odd jobs followed, when they could be picked up—temporary jobs. The young man had no training, and no chance of getting a training at thirty-one, with no money, and no criminal record to interest a police-court missionary.

"All the same, if I don't get some work pretty soon, I will interest a police-court missionary," he said very bitterly. "I'd rather do that than beg. Except for work, that is. That's what I'm begging from you, sir. Work."

He had thawed as Lacey listened, and now he spoke turned emotion. He had begun to hope. Then Lacey turned and looked at him—ruddy of face, but his eyes were utterly uninterested, vague, and cold.

The young man stopped speaking abruptly. He flushed, and then grew white. He was faint with hunger, exhausted from a night without shelter or sleep, and sick with disappointment.

"I think that's my daughter coming to join us," Lacey said, turning away again, towards the girl who was walking towards them.

What else Lacey would have said is unknown, for something in the young man's head suddenly began to revolve at great speed, utterly destroying his reason. This well-fed clergyman, he thought, had drawn him out, merely to turn him down. He felt physically sick. The only things he could see at that moment were the clergyman's averted head and his gold-mounted stick.

"Callous swine!" he said wildly.

There was no one very near them—

Two minutes later, however, Lacey was the centre of a small crowd, while his daughter supported him and held her handkerchief against his bleeding head; and the young man, grasping the gold-mounted stick, was running with the speed of desperation towards the thick traffic of the Strand, where he hoped to be lost.

Lacey, in a comfortable armchair in a comfortable private room in a comfortable London hotel, sat and talked to his daughter. That morning they had received a notification from the London police concerning the young man who had robbed and assaulted him.

"This is going to be a very serious matter for that young fellow, Pauline," he said. "Decidedly serious. They call it robbery with violence."

"Which seems to me a pretty good description, father."

"No. Robbery in despair, because of a mistake. He thought I'd turned him down, whereas I was waiting for you to come back with any money you hadn't spent."

"He needn't have hit you."

"He needn't have done that. But neither need a dog that's been run over bite the man who comes to help; but it often does. And he didn't hit me very hard. Still, it's robbery with violence, Pauline. That means prison at least."

"He was half out of his mind with hunger; he'd come to the end of his tether. And if he goes to prison he'll be finished. It'll stand against him all his life."

"What are we going to do, then, father? He police say they've got him, and—"

"But the police aren't sure—officially, anyway. They've arrested a young man who sold my stick to a tosseconist, but what does that prove? He says he picked it up; and the thief might well have thrown it away as he ran."

"Yes, but—"

"Pauline, try not to interrupt. We're invited to go to the police station to pick out the young man who attacked me from a row of similar men. Can you swear to him again?"

"No. I was too far away."

"So was everyone else, fortunately."

"Still, father, you could identify him, if you wished."

"Yes, that's true—most unhappily true. We talked together for ten minutes. And if there's one thing I detest it's lying. I do it so badly, too. Pauline, this is infernal."

She took his arm and pressed it.

"We'll probably find some way out of the difficulty, dear. We've found the way out of a lot of other difficulties, you know."

She took his arm again next morning when their taxi drew up in front of the police station. They were taken down a long corridor and out into a yard. A hateful place, she thought, drawing close to her father.

There was a yellow brick wall, scarred by ugly, barred windows, and ranged in front of this wall was a row of men.

The men stood still, watching them. Some grinned awkwardly, some were without expression, their faces fixed into a stare like wax figures. And some were bored, and some were uninterested; but the mind of one was tormented. His thoughts ran up and

The Peace Tower

(The Houses of Parliament, Ottawa)
O finger of radiance, touching a star—
Bright column of silver, upreaching afar—

May all the wide world hear the sound of thy bells
And echo the gladness thy carillon tells!

Bells of Ottawa—ringing—singing—
Over the starlit plain—Bells of Ottawa—ringing—bringing—
Joy to the world again!

O grant us thy faith, dispelling our fears—
O grant us thy hope, which has lived through the years—
O grant us thy love. Let thy bells bravely ring.
And grant us their peace—that we, too, may sing!

Bells of Ottawa—ringing—singing—
Over the starlit plain—Bells of Ottawa—ringing—bringing—
Peace to the world again!

O'er mountains, in beauty, thy swift chimerae are heard—
They ring, silver-clear, like the song of a bird.

By the voice of thy chimerae may the nations be drawn.
O grant them to hear the true notes of the dawn

Of peace on the earth—and good will toward men.

O ring it, ye chimerae—again—and again!

"Peace on the earth!"—more precious than gold—

"And good will to men!"—the sweet story of old.

Bells of Ottawa—ringing—bringing—

The glorious story retold—

Bells of Ottawa—ringing—singing—

The same sweet story of old!

OVERCOMING DIFFICULTIES

The real go-getter does not waste time mourning over trouble. Instead he immediately sets about finding a way to overcome it. To the real man trouble is but one of the challenges to his manhood. Trouble is one of the things he is called upon to battle. Happiness and comfort roll up their sleeves and wade in. With this type of man the result is never in doubt.

A successful business man was giving an address on "Commercial Acumen" to a class of students. In speaking of his career, he mentioned a certain company that had been wound up on account of its shady practices. "Of course," he said righteously, "as soon as I realized there were possibilities of dishonest profit being made I got out of it." "How much?" asked a student.

down the wretched chain of his troubles like a frantic animal. The little shop that failed, the temporary jobs, flickers of hope which died, a sudden flare of foolish passion, and then this—waiting to be identified, waiting to be marked for life by prison.

Pauline glanced at the faces of the men, but she avoided their eyes, for she was afraid that the eyes of one of them would betray him.

Her father, erect beside her, held her firmly to him, and walked steadily down the line. He avoided no man's eyes.

"Well, sir?"

"There's no one here whom I've ever seen before," he said.

"Are you sure? Look again, Mr. Lacey, for we're nearly—"

"I have never seen one of these men before. I make no charge against any of these men. Is that clear?" It was unanswerable. "You have my address. The Moreland Hotel, Baker Street. If you find the criminal let me know. Now, good-day to you."

He went with his daughter, and the discomfited police released their prisoner, who walked away stupidly, like a man in a dream.

At first he walked in no particular direction; but after a while he turned and walked towards Baker Street and the Moreland Hotel. He asked for the Reverend Mr. Lacey and presently was sought to that gentleman's private room.

"Well, what can I do for you, Mr.—"

"Ellis. Frank Ellis. As to what you can do for me, you've—done, already, more than I'd ever have asked you to do, sir. I've come to thank you. And to say how—how damned sorry I am—I oughtn't to have used that word to you, sir."

"Never mind. A fighting parson shouldn't be too nice. Mr. Ellis, this is my daughter, by the way. We were hoping you'd come to see us, because she wants a gardener. It's a permanent job, with a cottage thrown in. Do you like gardening?"

Ellis said, after a minute, shakily: "I could learn. I should like to learn. Thank you! Both of you."

"I always feel that a gardener's life's very good. Satisfying. Hard, muscular work, under the open sky, learning the goodness of the sun and the rain and the earth. And then to watch your plants growing strong, to see them flower—I wish I could see the blue of larkspur next summer, or catch those big red poppies throwing off their green sheaths on a June morning. I wish I could see that."

"So you shall, sir."

"No, I never shall. I've been blind since the war."—Answers.

Every Bell Telephone is a Long Distance Station

Sell this new way— by Code Numbers

Many progressive firms today are using long distance telephone service to get sales at lower costs. They divide their territories into "Key Towns" from which different groups of customers can be called conveniently and economically.

We assist in this by compiling Sequence Lists of calls and giving each call a Code Number. The salesman then just tells the Long Distance operator: "I want numbers 2, 6 and 9 on my Sequence List".

The increased facilities for long distance service make Key-town Selling by Code Numbers more efficient than ever. We shall be glad to explain the details and help you organize your lists.

THE SHOW OF SHOWS !

Once again we are going to have the opportunity of seeing what our home-town folk can do on the stage. In past performances, the public have had their money's worth, but on Saturday evening next, in the Lachute Auditorium, the St. Simeon's Club players are presenting the beautiful three act Irish comedy, "Peg O' My Heart," which is easily worth 75c. to see and hear. But that isn't all—come and hear the Gems of Old Ireland, "Mother Machree"; "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling," etc. by the "Crescent" quartette. Special attractive Irish Music.—It is the "Show of Shows", and only 50c. for adults, and 35c. for children. A good time guaranteed!

It was with pleasure and pride that the Lachute citizens heard Mr. Paul Raymond, son of Notary Z.-N. Raymond, over the radio on Saturday last.

Mr. Paul Raymond, who is a law student and President of the Debates Faculty of the University of Montreal, represented his Alma Mater with Mr. Paul Massé, also law student at the same university, in a full-dress debate held at Laval University, Quebec City.

The subject chosen was: "Who will dominate in the future, America or Europe?" America's advocates being Messrs. Raymond and Massé, and Messrs. Roger Ouimet and Paul Bouchard, law students at Laval, standing for Europe.

The foremost political economists are unanimous to say that America, being already the creditor of Europe for the next fifty years, will dominate the world, although its civilization is not expected to surpass that of Europe.

The debate was in part broadcasted through C.K.A.C., from 8.30 to 10.30 p.m. It is the first instance in this Province that an interuniversity debate is diffused among the public by means of the radio.

CUSHING

Mrs. R. Pinkerton returned on Sunday from a fortnight's visit to friends in New Glasgow and Montreal.

Mrs. Usher is removing this week from Point Fortune to her Cushing residence, and her many friends in this locality extend to her a hearty welcome.

Mr. E. and Miss M. Whelehan were guests of their sister Mrs. R. Funcheon at Monaca, last Sunday, as were also Mrs. E. J. Mahoney, Miss K. Whelehan and Miss Tessie Robert, of Montreal.

An event of much interest to the people of Cushing occurred on Wednesday, Feb. 26th., at Hoosier, Sask., when Lydia Mary, eldest daughter of the late Leonard C. and Mrs. Cooke, formerly of this place was united in marriage to William Pettit, of Hoosier. The marriage took place at the home of the bride's mother, at 5 p.m.; the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Wm. Banks, of the United Church. The youthful bride looked very sweet in a dress of white silk flat crepe with veil and carried a bouquet of pink roses, carnations and fern. She was unattended, being given away by her uncle Mr. E. F. Cooke. The wedding music was played by Miss Phyllis Maria. After the ceremony a dainty buffet supper was served, the guests numbering about 25, after which the happy couple left for Calgary, Edmonton and other western points. A number of useful and pretty gifts testified to the popularity of the couple.

Tells of Lindy's Air Circus Days

Details of Famous Flier's Career Revealed by Pal

Only three years before Colonel Lindbergh accomplished his epochal trans-Atlantic flight, the world's premier aviator made a precarious living, in a financial as well as a physical sense, by "barastorming" and putting on one-plane air-circuses in the small towns of the Middle West and Southwest.

Intimate memories of those carefree and romantic days, both thrilling and humorous, are told by Randy En-slow, now also a famous pilot, who was "Slim's" closest pal and business partner during that period, in the October issue of Popular Science Monthly.

"From Iowa we barnstormed down into Missouri and then over into Illinois," he writes, "spending most of a year (1924) at it. Slim was the cleanest fellow I ever knew. He didn't drink or smoke or swear. He had more nerve in the air and could do more with an old crate than any flier I've seen. The greatest exhibition of nerve in the air I can recall was the time Slim came closest to being killed.

"He was testing a new ship for Ben Bell in St. Louis. I stood in front of one of the hangars watching him. At 2,000 feet he tried to put the plane into a right spin so the torque, or twisting force, of the motor would help him get it out. He tried three times, but couldn't get it to spin. So he put it in a left spin, and down it came. For a thousand feet, with the wires screaming so they could be heard a mile away, he struggled to bring the ship out of that spin.
Then he crawled out on the fuselage back of his seat, hanging on like a leech, ready to jump with his parachute. But he didn't jump. He pulled himself back into the cockpit again and came down 1,700 feet more, trying to save the ship. He was only 300 feet above the ground when he jumped, but he wasn't hurt a bit.

"Lindbergh and I always flew into a town with one of us walking on the wing to attract attention. Then we would throw out a couple of hundred handbills, printed on yellow paper.
We had worked out the wording together. It read: 'Come out and get acquainted. This ship is made of wood and wired together. The wings are not covered with tin. It don't back up.'

"Then we would land in a cow pasture, or baseball park, and invite passengers to go up at five dollars a ride.
If nobody went up, we would fly away. Later, we would come back.
When the people saw they couldn't keep us unless somebody went up, they got air-minded and climbed into the cockpit.

"We did everything that would bring in dimes. Sometimes we would race automobiles at country fairs. We got $75 for each race. Above those little half-mile dirt-tracks we would have to bank the plane almost straight up and down and buzz around like a fly in a bottle. As I remember it, we always won. But we used to throttle down the motor until the last lap to give the spectators a run for their money. On that last lap, we would show the boys what the old ship could do.

"Once we flew into a town with Slim on the wing. When we landed, an old lady came up and asked:
'Which one of you young men was that out on the fender?'

"At night we would stake the ship down, or tie its tail to a stump and leave it backed into the wind like a Missouri mule. One time, when we left it tied down like that in a field in Illinois, a tornado came through the country and headed right that way. But just before the twister reached the spot it, gave a jump and came down several miles beyond. The ship wasn't even scratched."

Check Falling Hair with Minard's.

Peter DeWolfe had gone to London after the war for a reason typical of him.

For most Americans a single track success is an inspiration of life; there is a raw meat satisfaction in hewing to the line until some tree falls and also an instinct for playing the latest game. The true sense of play is a rare blossom to find growing on a family tree, rooted, as Peter's was rooted, in a bed of money.

Peter took an interest in living.
The common run of bachelors who are provided amply with millions accept the alternative of going to hell or going to business; DeWolfe's imagination came to his rescue and provided him with a third choice which, in his quiet way, he seized about the time he left college. It was to live for the sake of living.

Dark skin, blue eyes, thin sensitive lips, the appearance of one well bathed in cold water, the flexible lean waist of a good horseman, the long, muscular fingers of a good tennis play-cess. Some dried mummy from the sands of a prehistoric citadel. Bathed in some magic liquid, her limbs expanded to the lovely contour of girlhood, her face warmed with a renewed coursing of spirited blood.

"You've seen her!" exclaimed Benham.

"My dear fellow, I've never seen her; but I confess that as you talk about her I feel a little as if I had known her—long ago."

Benham said, "Perhaps you could lift the cover—"

He stopped suddenly.

"And I'd like to have you meet Muriel, too. She's a very decent sort of sister. I've a mind to give you a letter to my mother and send you over the channel to loaf around in flannels at our place in the country."

Benham told more of the attractive Brena.

"Her father was a banished Greek patriot—a fighting professor of chemistry or something. And her mother was Irish."

A WOMAN WAS STANDING THERE AND PETER BELIEVED SHE HAD BEEN LOOKING STRAIGHT INTO HIS FACE.

er who had not lost the delicacy of touch which made him something less than a distinguished performer upon a 'cello—these were his outward attractions.

Ever since Benham of the R. A. F.
must bear the blame for the months in which DeWolfe found his great adventure. For it was Benham who first steered the young American across the path of Brena Selcoss.

They were talking of women and love.

"What would make you fall in love with a woman?" asked Benham.

"Almost anything," Peter replied.
"But that's not the problem; the problem is what will prevent a man falling out?"

"You should try Brena Selcoss."

"Brena Selcoss is a friend of my sister," said Benham. "I must say she takes the breath out of me. It's that queer combination of beautiful fresh youth with the flavor of the guile and conspiracy of the ages. She's a Saint Cecilia or a Lucrezia Borgia.
But that's not bothering my mother."

"What bothers her?"

"Fanny thing. We don't know who she is. From Texas, I believe. With some money. But why does a girl from the United States come down to Beaconsfield Heath and buy a curate's cottage next to our place and read lying flat on the grass and see nobody and evade all questions? And the look in her eyes! I didn't see it at first because I was in a funk at the eyes themselves."

"What look?" asked DeWolfe.

"Fear!" said Benham. "And besides there is something about her that tells a person that she is waiting—marking time—treading water—staring out over life—just like a watcher on the shore stares out across the empty sea. The ordinary girl has a personality of a pink color. Brena Selcoss is the color of firelight on the walls of an old temple."

"You might go on to say that she gives the impression of an Inca prin-

"Give me a letter to your family," said Peter finally. "I'm off for London to-morrow."

Muriel Benham was savagely a woman. She conceived woman as a species as distinct from males as flora is distinct from fauna.

And being a woman meant that her brown hair must be made attractive for the game which she executed with a good deal of dash, in a costume designed to keep freckles off a milk white skin. The same thought made her appear before Peter in the hedge-walled garden before breakfast clad in a part wispy and part fluffy gown with a basket of roses hung on one elbow.

"You do all things so well," said Peter with a great delight filling his being. "There is a thoroughness in your method which positively upsets me. I looked at the library in your study and as far as I can see you have spent your twenty years collecting, among others, books on how to do things—how to ride a horse, how to play golf, how to knit, how to cast a fly, how to speak Italian, how to grow roses and who knows what else."

The English girl was sincerely grateful to Peter. She said, "But I think it is all as nothing compared to the skill of being a woman—a fit woman—a woman whose one aim is to be a woman."

"You have attained it," said Peter.
The girl tossed a ball up and caught it in her white skirt spread from knee to knee as she sat cross-legged upon the edge of the Benhams' lawn.

"Peter, I saw you before breakfast," she said. "From my window."

"You saw me?" he said. "Why didn't you call to me and say one of your cheery good morning?"

She leaned close. "Because I was waiting to see what you were doing."

"What was I doing?" said Peter.

"The telescope—father's telescope."

very well tell hosts like Muriel and her mother who had treated him as if he were the owner of the estate, that he had come to Beaconsfield not to see them. H was thinking that if they had not chosen to mention an acquaintance (other than the rather stiff and dull and correct persons who had come to tea almost every afternoon and to dinners) he could not very well mention this acquaintance!

Furthermore he had begun to feel that Muriel in some strange manner of her own had created an atmosphere of a proprietress.

"You were standing there under that beech tree," Muriel went on. "I thought—"

"What did you think?"

"That you were looking through the glass across the fields toward the place under the big trees—the place we call 'the Curate's' because one used to live there."

Peter might have spoken then to ask who now occupied the little gabled house, but his characteristic perversity added, at this moment, to his disinclination to disclose one of his reasons for idling under the Benhams' roof, prevented him from speaking.

After a long pause, he said, "I was looking around the country."

"I do not believe you," the girl said, jumping up with startling suddenness.
"Where are you going?" he asked.

"Into the house. I have a—headache."

But at the vine-covered portico she turned and, making a pretty picture with her high color and her lean young body, called out, "Do you want a walk this afternoon—to Besman Wood?"

Muriel began that afternoon walk with great gaiety of spirits. She sang an old hunting song of quaint and engaging melody.

"Let's learn the song together," she said to Peter. "Look over there on the edge of the horizon. That square tower. That's Saint Dunstan's—the very tower in which the fox sought sanctuary in the song, the old song, written six hundred years ago, they say."

Peter, with his usual adaptability, acquired both words and music. He sang. He danced upon the rolling green plain.

And at last seizing Muriel's waist around the belt of her sporting coat, he swung her almost off her feet and together they whirled merrily—two tiny tops spinning upon the vast expanse.

When they stopped, the girl, almost dizzy, and breathless, clung for a moment to his coat and looked up into Peter's eyes. He could feel her warm breath upon his chin.

Peter was not lacking in perception;
he knew at once that his visit at the Benhams' must come to an end.

Peter, as he chatted with Mrs. Benham that night, at dinner, faced the long French windows of the dining-room. Just outside was the blue stone driveway of the house and the path to the side door. Upon this path Peter thought he had seen a flash of white, a mere flick of movement out of the corner of his eye as he put down his gilt coffee cup.

"What did you see?" asked Muriel suddenly.

"I? Why I thought I saw a white spot in the dark out there—like a person's face."

Muriel stiffened. "I don't know who it could be," she said. "Lucy, turn on the light outside the North door."

The electric lamp above the outer door threw down its light like an overturned bucket of yellow liquid. A woman was standing there, and Peter believed that as she had stood in the dark, unseen, she had been looking straight into his face.

She wore no hat and her hair piled up in immense snake-like coils was the color of certain frost-turned leaves of Autumn which are neither red nor gold, but both colors at once.

Needless Pain!

Nowadays, people take Aspirin for many little aches and pains, and as often as they encounter any pain.

Why not? It is a proven antidote for pain. It works!

And Aspirin tablets are absolutely harmless. You have the medical profession's word for that; they do not depress the heart.

So, don't let a cold "run its course." Don't wait for a headache to "wear off." Or regard neuralgia, neuritis, or even rheumatism as something you must endure. Only a physician can cope with the cause of such pain, but you can always turn to an Aspirin tablet for relief.

Aspirin is always available, and it never fails to help. Familiarise yourself with its many uses, and avoid a lot of needless suffering.

Improper Housing As Bad as Disease

Children, Like Plants, Dependent Upon Surroundings

(This is the sixteenth of a series of Health Articles prepared by the Canadian Social Hygiene Council).

Let us consider to-day those people who have not such comfortable homes as the average reader of this paper. The man who works in the mines, and then goes home to a little hovel to sleep; the man who works with his hands in the city and then returns to a tenement house that really isn't a home at all, but merely a roof over his head—that is the type of worker that we have to bear in mind when we take up the housing problem.

It has been definitely proven after long and concentrated study that defective housing is an essential factor in interfering with the proper growth of children, and in the general health of any country.

We can take care of our food supply, and conquer germs, and do everything else necessary to conserve health and prolong life, but we can count some of our time wasted unless we give a great deal of attention to what is not only one of the most important, but one of the hardest problems to handle—housing.

Overcrowding, lack of cleanliness, and improper ventilation are the three big enemies of poor housing. Rickets among children is the most prevalent disease in the slums of all large cities. Sunlight is the almost certain prevention and cure of this disease. Defective housing is equally certain one of the predisposing causes.

It probably does not occur to most people that the kind of house one lives in has much to do with the kind of teeth in one's head. Yet doctors have discovered that invariably when they take several hundred children, who lived under better class conditions and compare them with several hundred children living under slum conditions, the teeth of the badly housed children are much inferior to the others.

In order to show how seriously defective housing arrests the development of what otherwise might be a normal and healthy child, let us trace the developments of a rickety child, always bearing in mind that in the great majority of cases this very prevalent disease is directly attributable to the housing conditions of the victim.

Up to the time when a child is two years of age, the mental condition of the rickety child is painfully subdued. As a rule it is constantly exhausting its energies trying to get enough air into its lungs to live. Its activities are sometimes confined entirely to changes in the nervous system, over which it has no control, such as convulsions. Walking is delayed, speech is slow in coming, and when it does come, sometimes halted and marked by stammering. Mental development is slow.

When a rickety child reaches the school age, it shows backwardness which sometimes lasts for quite a few years. It lacks the power of concentration. In extreme cases the child, finding himself below normal, is apt to become moody, bad-tempered and troublesome.

A peculiarity of the rickety condition is that the backward child of about seven years of age is apt to take a spurt in its mental activities and seem to be brighter and more able to grasp the teachings it receives in school.

This fact puzzled the authorities for some time, particularly when they were being constantly told by mothers that their children who had been delicate the first five years of their lives suddenly took a turn for the better. Finally the doctors reasoned it out, and they came back to the same problem of housing again.

These children had been kept indoors, largely because their mothers were working women. The long winter months had taken their toll helped by the badly ventilated, crowded homes. When the children were allowed to escape from their captivity and sent to school, the change came. The sunlight and fresh air that came into their lives with their new freedom had done the work. The rickety children were getting better, although they seldom reach the standard of children who escaped the disease.

In Australia, where there are great open spaces, the disease of rickets has been found very infrequently. South Africa has had the same experience. Now, as Australia and South Africa become more thickly populated, and the cities more crowded, the disease of rickets is beginning to show its head.

Rickets, however, is not confined entirely to the poorest sections. It is found in wealthy homes too, but when it is, the cause generally lies in the fact that the parents have denied their children the proper amount of sunshine and fresh air. In other words, they have coddled them inside the house. Rickets is the inevitable result, whether the food is good or bad.

With poor housing, rickets, anaemia, defective teeth, are companions. Tuberculosis is also closely associated with the problem. One city investigated the causation of tuberculosis and found that over six times as many cases emerge from homes of one room as in homes of four rooms or over.

An idea of the magnitude of the housing problem that faces us can be found in the statement that about seven million people can be found in the United Kingdom alone who live in houses of three rooms or less.

Our aim as Canadians who are proud of our country and its people should be to endeavor to help and improve conditions for those people who have to live in houses that are detrimental to health. It is a question of broad legislation and requires a great deal of study before it can be handled, but everybody should lend a hand.

Lassoed Mad Bull — Sandgate Beach

Thrilling Five Hour Chase Ends in Execution on Sands

A mad bull, on a recent evening, escaped at Sandgate and was at large for five hours before it was lassoed after an exciting chase, and killed.

After breaking a rope in a slaughter house, the bull ran into the Hythe Canal, into the gardens of the Kent County Constabulary, and along the main road into Sandgate.

Pedestrians fled at its approach. Between Battery Point and the coast guard station the animal narrowly escaped being run down by motor cars. A young cyclist who was in its path saved himself only by leaping from his machine as the bull charged head down.

KNOCKED OVER WOMAN

Leaving the cyclist the bull ran on the pavement and knocked over a woman, who was wheeling a pram. Neither the woman nor the child, however, was hurt.

By this time several hundred people had taken up the chase in the dark, and at Sandgate coastguard station, where the bull sprang on to the beach, a slaughterman named Marshall tried to rope the animal.

But the infuriated bull turned and charged. Marshall fell, and the animal's horns caught him in the back. Another man went to his aid, but the bull again attacked Marshall as he lay on the stones.

Marshall saved himself by rolling over, and the bull's horns became buried in the beach, while Marshall scrambled up and was hauled to safety on the sea-wall.

BEACH "STEEPLECHASE"

Then, bellowing as it went, the bull dashed along the beach, jumping over groyne after a half-mile rush it was stopped by a groyne too high to jump and by a 20-foot wall on the inland side.

When a rope was thrown over the bull's horns the animal charged at the sea-wall and broke the rope. But the bull was lassoed first by a constable and then by people on the sea-wall and slaughtered where captured.

"One can't travel straight as the crow flies—not if it's old crow."

Interval

The dead keep silence. All their stir than strings unjarred is quieter; Not mute but still, as tone to tone For rhythm's enchantment yields its own.

Music an outward form hath found In sweet relationships of sound. But music's self, the soul unseen, Dwells in the intervals between.

A GREAT TRIER

In his last letter to his friend Mr. Rowett, the late Sir Ernest Shackleton wrote these words:

"Never for me the lowered flag, Never for me the lost endeavor." It proves that the explorer was a great trier. He never gave up the hope of conquering the eternal ice; he never gave in. His life is an example to us all, showing that by dogged determination much can be accomplished.

COMMON THINGS

The outward shows of sky and earth, Of hill and valley, he has viewed, And impulses of deeper birth Have come to him in solitude. In common things that round us lie Some random truths he can impart, The harvest of a quiet eye, That broods and sleeps on his own heart.

ADAMSON'S ADVENTURES—By O. Jacobsson

Filling the Gaps

Scholars Who Have a Little Knowledge and a Lot of Imagination

At a recent examination children were set to fill in the gaps left in very well-known quotations and common sayings. The results were in some cases almost startling. Here are a few examples:

"You cannot make a — out of a sow's ear." Answer: "Rasher."

"Caesar's wife is above —." Answer: "Forty."

"There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and —." Answer: "The third round."

"Do unto others as —." Answer: "They do to you."

"What there's a will there's —." Answer: "A row."

"Take everything with a grain of —." Answer: "Sense."

"Sweet are the uses of —." Answer: "Sugar."

"Uneasy lies the head that wears —." Answer: "Curling pins."

"Music hath charms to soothe —." Answer: "Babies."

"A bird in the hand is worth two —." Answer: "And sixpence."

"Men must work and women —." Answer: "Go to the pictures."

Those Lazy Lollards!

History seems to be the happy hunting-ground of the schoolboy howler. Here is a new light on an event of the past:

"Magna Charta was good and kind and everybody liked her. She was strong."

Another child, asked to describe some of the hardships of the Crusaders, said that many of them died of salvation. Another young genius tells us that "In 1620 the Pilgrims crossed the ocean, and this is known as the Pilgrim's Progress."

On similarly original lines are the following historical judgments: The three estates of the realm are Buckingham Palace, Windsor, and Balmoral. Julius Caesar was renowned for his strength; he threw a bridge across the Rhine. Martin Luther did not die a natural death; he was excommunicated by a bull. Lollards were lazy people who always wanted to rest up against something. Wat Tyler led the peasants' revolt; he was himself a peasant. The cause of the Peasants' Revolt was that a shilling poultice should be put on everybody over sixteen. Queen Elizabeth's face was thin and pale, but she was a stout Protestant. John Bright is famous for an incurable disease.

Revising the Bible

Geography probably comes next to history as a prolific parent of howlers. Here are a few new views of the world in general from the small boy's point of view.

In India a man out of a cask can't marry a woman out of another cask. The Sublime Port is a good wine. Latitude tells you how hot you are, and longitude tells you how cold you are. Strling is noted for its fine silver. Glaciers spread a murrain over the land. Isosceles triangles are used on charts to join up places with the same weather. From Australia we get wine made from a bird called emu.

Biblical knowledge is sometimes a bit mixed, and, though revised, it is by no means authorized. One youngster, in his religious knowledge paper, wrote: "Bathsheba was the woman who tied David up with her girdle." Another said: "The words 'Would God I had died for Thee' were uttered by David after he had murdered Uriah and married his widow." A similar youthful theologian observed: "Abner killed himself by falling on his own spear while being chased by Dorcas." Another ventured: "Publius was the son of the man who was cured of Proxy by Paul—a very terrible disease." And lastly: "The Pharisees are people who like to show their goodness by praying in synonyms."

England's Green and Pleasant Land

Horace A. Vachell in the London Morning Post (Cons.): Nearly everybody familiar with the England of five-and-twenty years ago deplores the changes that are taking place even in our more remote rural districts. Very few applaud the almost forgotten speech of a democratic statesman, still living, in which he predicted (and hoped) that our lovely countryside would be "embellished" (his word) by millions of small villas. It is increasingly difficult to find what is called "unspoiled England." Even the famous beauty spots are menaced. Historic houses are being pulled down or turned into public institutions.

The Dangers of the Road

Manchester Guardian (Lib.): To use a motor to-day is just as dangerous as to carry loaded firearms. If most of us were in the habit of keeping revolvers in our hip-pockets, the death-rate would certainly go up, but we should scarcely expect the annual casualty list to equal the motoring total of more than 6,000 killed and more than 160,000 wounded. Even when we consider that total (which includes a high percentage of children) in proportion to the total population, it is enough to constitute motoring as a highly dangerous form of sport—dangerous both to the motorist and to other people.

Unemployment

Ottawa Droit (Ind.): Is unemployment a problem in this country? We must avoid exaggeration, but we have been assured that Canada, per head of population, actually has a greater number of unemployed than have either Great Britain or the United States. Since this assertion has been made in the press on several occasions and nobody has taken the trouble to contradict it, there is considerable likelihood that it falls within the bounds of truth.

No More Rust

New Uses are Being Found for Stainless Steel Every Day

When the British Industries Fair opens at Olympia a good many visitors will be as much interested in the new Empire Hall as in the exhibits. This great building, which nearly doubles the accommodation of the old Olympia, is, indeed, one of the best advertisements that British industry could have.

At the end of March last year a number of houses with gardens were still standing on the site, and some of them were still occupied. The building of the new hall started on April 1st, building and excavation going forward at the same time. All records in construction have been broken, and two of the floors—there are to be four in all—will be used for the fair.

It has been a case of real hustle. The average rate of steel construction work in London is 100 tons a week; in the case of the Empire Hall the rate has been 100 tons a day, and the whole of the steelwork has been erected in seven months.

Towed Round the World

This remarkable feat affords another proof of the way in which the use of steel is revolutionizing building methods. But we are really only at the beginning of the new Age of Steel.

One of the things that will be noticed at the Empire Hall is the fact that polished stainless steel is used for all the interior fittings, including the turnstiles, and for the lettering, "Empire Hall," above the entrance. This stainless steel is of special interest, for the new varieties of stainless steel now being produced are capable of a thousand different uses. It wouldn't be any exaggeration to say that stainless steel can now be turned out which is as different from the old kind used in ordinary stainless cutlery as cheese is from chalk. You can now get steel that is proof against all corrosion in a way never previously known.

A good example of the qualities of the new stainless steel is afforded by the Strand front of the Savoy Hotel. True, the London atmosphere can produce the appearance of rust even on this sort of steel. But it is appearance only—the reality of rust has been banished. For it has been proved that such strains are merely on the surface. They are due to the sulphur in the air, and regular washing with soap and water is all that is needed to preserve the original high polish.

Withstanding the corroding effects of the London atmosphere would seem a supreme test for any building material, but the new stainless steel has been subjected to other tests as well. A specimen of it has been towed round the world in the wake of a liner—a fairly thoroughgoing test.

In industry, stainless steel is proving its worth, and more and more use of it is being made for domestic purposes. One of the latest ideas in this line is the use of stainless steel plates for the side of gas stoves. It is expected that it will prove more satisfactory for this purpose than enamel.

For Whales and Cathedrals

But the uses of stainless steel are innumerable. It has recently been employed for strengthening the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral. Chemical works are now substituting it for porcelain in making the containers for certain acids, with a consequent big saving in maintenance costs. It has proved its worth as the material for the white traffic marks let into our roadways at certain points in order to guide vehicles and diminish the risk of accidents.

Even the biologists are using it. The movements of whales in the world's seas are now being studied, the method adopted to keep track of them being the shooting of metal disks into their hide. These disks are made of stainless steel. All this is of particular interest to Canadians because nickel from Sudbury is necessary for the good action of stainless steel.

CONCRETE EVIDENCE OF MARKET LOSSES IN BANK RETURNS

First concrete evidence of the extent to which Canadians suffered through the series of stock market panics of October and November is furnished by the December statement of chartered banks which has just been issued.

Savings deposits at the close of the year were $85,879,815 lower than they were one year previously. Responsibility for part of the drop must be attached to other causes. A partial crop failure, coupled with the delay in marketing grain, undoubtedly made it necessary for many farmers to withdraw funds for current needs. Development of unemployment on a scale unknown since 1921 was a factor, though not an important one, because most of those who found themselves without work had no bank accounts to draw against.

It is estimated here that much more than half of the total reduction in deposits is directly traceable to stock market losses. And this total is quite in addition to the hundreds of millions in paper profits and in margins which Canadians had lying in brokerage offices prior to the debacle. Dominion-wide developments affecting mining trading since the New Year have not improved the general situation and the forecast is made that unless living standards of many thousands of people are readjusted there will be a further decline in savings deposits during 1930.

LETTERS CANNOT BE RETURNED TO WRITER.

Postmasters in the approximately 12,000 offices in Canada receive upwards of 1,000 requests each day for senders of mail that they be allowed to retrieve it from the post.

In about half the cases an opportunity to correct addresses is sought. In the other half, people, on second thought, decide the letter would be better unsent.

Applicants, however, are doomed to disappointment for when a letter goes into a mail box or a post office the sender loses his rights in it. It automatically becomes the property of the person to whom addressed.

Requests for the return of mail have become so numerous that the Deputy Postmaster-General, L. J. Gaboury, has issued a warning to Postmasters stating that "mail matter once posted must be forwarded to its directions. On no application, however urgent, can it be delivered back to the writer, or to any other person."

Parliament has a new riddle which runs something like this: "When is a closure not a closure?" The answer is: "When it is a motion to commit."

Rt. Hon. Mr. King sprang somewhat of a sensation in the House when he resurrected this old parliamentary device to choke off the debate upon the resolution of Dr. Peter McGibbon and W. G. Ernst which sought to shift to the Board of Pension Commissioners the burden of disproof of any prima facie case for a pension made out by a veteran or his dependants. The resolutions were based by the Conservative members upon the expressed views of responsible officers of the Canadian Legion as to the change in existing regulations which would go furthest to relieve the present disabilities of the veterans. Debate upon them was generally favorable; private members following the government had risen to support the Conservative proposals and had paid them the tribute of going to the heart of the veteran problem.

The general approval which the resolutions were receiving contrasted with the criticism which assailed the government measure for handling the situation, namely the veterans' allowance bill. The claim that this legislation was designed to help only the absolutely unemployable veteran, or the one in needy circumstances, and made no provision for the great army of ex-service men who were suffering handicaps only, or partial disability, exposed it to the criticism of the opposition.

It was in these circumstances that R. Hon. Mr. King introduced the "motion to commit" as an example for checking the swing of the chamber towards the Conservative suggestions. The motion to commit the bill which would have the effect of consigning it forthwith to the house committee on soldier interests, would not be debatable under an archaic but still effective rule of the house. It would, accordingly, effectively achieve a closure without raising the same political hostility amongst the returned men that frank use of the gag would evoke.

One of the interesting developments of the few minutes of vigorous protest which followed the Prime Minister's tactics was the admission by the Speaker of the House that the move, while legitimate under parliamentary rules, savored of closure. "I must admit," Hon. Mr. Lemieux in his ruling, "that it does savor of closure. I do not mean to apply the gag, but there it is under the rules of the house."

The interest of the agriculturist in the session is approaching a climax in the vote which is impending on the resolution of Mark Senn (Conservative, Haldimand) to rescind the order-in-Council governing New Zealand trade arrangements.

The resolution represents the hope of the agriculturist for relief from the competition of $14,987,000 worth of New Zealand farm products which were shipped to Canada last year and proved a major factor in depressing prices, particularly of butter. This total importation represented an increase of 600 percent over the year before the passage of the order-in-council. It has been pointed out to the house in debate that every pound of meat and every pound of butter which comes into the country replaces a similar amount of Canadian products in our home market.

The vote of the Western Liberals, the Liberal-Progressives, and the Progressives upon the issue is being watched particularly. It is no secret amongst these groups that the New Zealand Order-in-Council has been their greatest embarrassment with special indemnities to help them view their constituents, who have not philosophically the disturbance to a base industry which these trade arrangements have caused.

BROWNSBURG

On the evening of Thursday, Mar. 6th., the W. M. S. of the United Church put on in the Auditorium of the Church their long-looked for and widely advertised drama, "The Secret Society of Cabbageville," a playlet written by Mrs. T. W. Pateman, of Toronto, for the use of Church Societies, two of whose other plays had previously been given before Brownsburg audiences. The cast had been carefully selected and had given themselves to vigorous training, which was very evident from the spirited manner in which they entered into the performance of their parts, the accuracy of phrasing, and, last but not least, the spontaneity and volume of the applause that greeted an unexpected rally from an audience that filled the Church to capacity. Listening to the performance without the interruptions of gruelling practices one can truthfully say the evening far exceeded expectations. In the matter of weather and audience alone nothing further could be desired, while the various characters were certainly well suited to their parts, or at least dramatized them with a rest and spiritedness that were quite a revelation to a village where every one was known, and where such truly fine talent ability was probably scarcely even suspected.

The scene was laid in the parlor of a lady, who, with her daughter, is preparing for a Ladies' Aid Meeting to be held that afternoon. To go through the drama, or even to partly expound it, would be quite out of place in a review of this nature but it is enough to say that in the hands of Annabel (Miss Moran) and Mrs. Dean (Miss Nan Hansen), the machinations of an inquisitive Ladies' Aid Society are thoroughly withstood, and the Girls' Secret Society stands amid the storm of hostile criticism impregnable on the rock of a much maligned Happiness Club. would scarcely seem in keeping with fitness, and it is very doubtful if this would itself be then a true criticism. Some parts may have lent themselves more than other parts to witicism and sally, and the roars of laughter with which these were greeted were themselves evidence of their popularity, but all through the play the balance of convention, piety, sombre Pharaism, brooding morbidity, religiosity, and temperamental prejudice, with flashes of wit and cutting sarcasm, both in word and action, were wonderfully well blended and splendidly harmonized. Mrs. Izard, as Mrs. Nibbs; Mrs. King as Mrs. Love; and Mrs. Pasco as Mrs. Pepper, interpreted their parts with a realism and accuracy quite satisfying, decidedly in keeping and congruous; while Mrs. Williams as Mrs. Maloney, an Irish woman with all the ear marks, and the tongue! Mrs. Hagar, as Miss Know-all; Mrs. McGibbon, the Secretary, as Mrs. Black were more than a surprise, perhaps even a revelation, as most of the fun-making had to fall on them. Mrs. Gloomy, Miss M. Stewart, in sombreness and melancholy, added, too, to the mirth of the hour, not only by a very excellent delineation of the character, but by added love and gesture giving expression to life's darker aspects, thus casting radiant gloom over a meeting decidedly suggestive of happy contrasts. Nothing, too, could exceed the grace and sprightliness of Annabel, her coy and veiled innuendoes, or the annoyance and haughtiness of her Mother, Mrs. Nibbs, and the play of mirth and suspicion between them was most amusing and delightful. Mrs. Martin, the widow, burned out of house and home, took her part well, and the scene in the second act with the two Children, Grace (Jane Hardie), and Ruthie (Margaret Kendall) was very pretty and suggestive. Miss Hansen as the minister's wife gave excellent interpretation of the part, and the lovely little lullaby by Isaac Watts, "Hush my babe, lie still and slumber," was delightfully rendered by herself and Annabel, the music and words blending in a very pretty harmony. Parts of the their act were weak in climatic effect, but they were wonderfully enlivened by the deaf old lady (Mrs. Thompson (Miss Woodward), who insisted on misinterpreting and misunderstanding everything, and who played her part with a realism and an innocence most amusing, and Mrs. Topnote (Mrs. Thompson) the singer, who appeared as from the city in very pretty costume and rendered Moore's "Believe Me" very nicely. In this act also the repartee between Mrs. Gloomy, Miss Knowall, Mrs. Black, Mrs. Pepper, with Mrs. Maloney and Mrs. Thompson as mirth makers, was a sardonic tonic, at times even satirical, while the crying spell of Mrs. Black was an effective display of troubled feeling of the hysterical variety that called forth roars of laughter. The fortunate ending was provided by the distribution of presents and everybody was happy. During the evening the children of the Mission Band rendered two pretty numbers between acts, with Mrs. Thompson at the piano.

ONTARIO COW MAKES TWO NEW WORLD'S RECORDS

Mr. J. P. Ellwood, of Smiths Falls, Ontario, is the owner of "Teake Waldorf", the Holstein-Friesian cow which has just broken two world's records.

"Teake Waldorf" calved December 20, 1928, and was started on test for 305 days. During the entire test she was milked twice daily, and completed the 305 days with a production of 15,470 pounds of milk, 615 pounds of fat, test 3.98. On the 305th day of her test this remarkable cow produced 51.5 pounds of milk. She never gave over 55 pounds of milk in any one day.

Her production was so good at the end of the 305 days test that her owner continued her to finish the 365 day record. This she did on December 19, with a production of 17,565 pounds of milk, 710 pounds of fat, with an average test of 4.04.

Eleven days after finishing the test "Teake" gave birth to a heifer calf weighing 100 pounds, and ten days later was producing at the rate of 72 pounds of milk a day on three-time milking.

"Teake Waldorf" is the only cow in the world to break two world's records in one year, qualifying in both, and giving birth to two living calves in 376 days while on test. She made these records under ordinary farm conditions, standing with the rest of the cows through the stable months, being turned out twice daily for water. On the 20th. of May she was turned out with the rest of the cows, day and night, rain or shine, until the 20th. of October.

During the test the cow's ration consisted of home grown grains and purina cow chow. During the last few months of the test Mr. Ellwood also added bulky-las to the ration, a feed particularly intended to keep a cow in good condition and improve her appetite, as well as causing her to drink more water. Mr. Ellwood says:

"Teake Waldorf" finished her two records in condition for the show ring and never refused a meal during her test."

To make such a record three things are necessary:

1. A good cow.
2. A good man to manage her.
3. A good feed.

This record is a tribute not only to the cow and her owner; it is also a tribute to the firm who can manufacture a feed that will maintain such high production for 365 days. It takes a real ration to make a record like this, and then have the cow freshen eleven days after such a record is completed, drop a strong, healthy, one-hundred pound calf, and immediately start producing 72 pounds of milk a day.

COL. BARKER.

Great Canadian Ace Instantly Killed

Col. Barker, who though a young man of 35 years has left an honored name for valor, which should be revered by all Canadians in the years to come, and his untimely death will be deeply mourned.

Machine Wrecked.

The accident occurred at the Government air port at Rockcliffe and the air force officers present rushed to the scene where the flying ace crashed. They found his machine badly wrecked and evidence that the great flyer had been killed instantly. At the air port a call was rushed through to the Ottawa police, and Gauthier's ambulance was soon on the field.

Col. Barker had been in commercial aviation for only a few weeks and was in Ottawa on business with the Government in connection with the purchase of this type of aircraft for Government duty.

Had Great Record.

Col. Barker had one of the best records among the flying men on both sides of the line, with more than 50 enemy machines to his credit. He was repeatedly decorated for gallantry by several of the allied nations.

Nine competitions, including men's and women's handicap events, men's and women's team matches and mixed foursomes will feature the programme of the second annual Empress midwinter golf tournament to be played over the Colwood course at Victoria, February 17-22. The E. W. Beatty trophy is the chief award for the men's and women's handicap competitions.

Miss Connie Wilson, champion fancy skater of North America and Great Britain, will take a star part in the Ice Pageant of the Frontenac Winter Sports Club to be staged at Quebec February 12-13. She will be supported by the best talent of Quebec and a group of stars from Toronto, including the championship four of the Toronto Skating Club. Ottawa will be represented by the Minto Skating Club and 24 lady skaters from Toronto will perform in the "Danse Moderne" number.

The greatest fireworks display of the year, the "Fete de Nuit" exhibition at Quebec, recently, one of the features of the Winter Sports season which lasts until March, consisted of a sham attack by hundreds of snowshoos bearing torches, upon the garrison of the citadel. The heavy explosions of Roman candles, bombs and rockets began the attack, which culminated when the besiegers were driven back by the garrison, who sent volley after volley of blanks crashing into the night. When the bugles sounded the "Cease Fire", the show was generally voted one of the finest in years.

The outstanding contributions that the Canadian Pacific Railway has made to the life of the Dominion in an industrial and cultural way were emphasized by E. W. Beatty, chairman and president of the road, at a recent address before the Canadian Industrial Traffic League at Montreal recently. His company, he said, had in the past five years, spent over $249,000,000 on capital account alone and during the same period had built over 1,000 miles of branch lines. 1929 with its decrease in earnings, he regarded as an exceptional year not likely to be repeated in subsequent years.

A considerable increase in grain shipments from Saint John has already been established since the new year, over the entire month of December, 1929, General Superintendent J. Woodman, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, states. Bushels of grain for December export from Saint John totaled 508,357; from January 1 to January 17, total was 651,438.

The second annual Sea Music Festival of the Pacific Coast passed into history January 19, when once again capacity houses greeted the final offerings. Outstanding among the features were the two ballad operas, "The Order of Good Cheer", incorporating French-Canadian sea chanteys of the 16th century, and "Bound for the Rio Grande", a rousing sea-song playlet by Captain Frederick Wallace. Each of these was repeated by request on three successive days.

The 16th annual winter carnival with the first official Western Canada Ski tournament will be held at Revelstoke, February 4-5. World records have been made on the ski run at Revelstoke, and leading ski jumpers of the continent will attend the carnival.

A FUTILE GATHERING

There was assembled in Ottawa City this week representatives of all the Provinces. They had been summoned by the Minister of Agriculture in an effort to work some miracle which will restore the Canadian farmer to a position where he will enjoy a reasonable return for his very arduous labors.

The Minister of Agriculture, Hon. W. R. Motherwell, was able to offer nothing more attractive than greater production as a solution of the ills of the agriculturist.

What a helpful suggestion! With 200,000,000 bushels of last year's wheat crop lying in the country unmarketed do we need more wheat?

With 35,000,000 pounds of New Zealand butter flooding Canada and battering down prices, with the United States market closed to us, with the dairy farmer losing on his present production, will he help himself by producing more?

With millions of dollars worth of foreign fruit and vegetables being dumped into Canada, where is the incentive to produce more?

With over $300,000,000 worth of agricultural, vegetable and animal products imported in 1929 to destroy the home market, where is the incentive to produce more or lose more?

There is a solution of the farmers' problems but Mr. Motherwell and his Premier will not invoke it. Let them pursue a policy which will enable us to manufacture in Canada the $500,000,000 worth of manufactured goods we now import which could and should be made at home. Let them pursue a policy which will let us manufacture our own raw materials in Canada for Canada and for the world. Let them pursue a policy which will take care of itself. It will not be long then, until we are again a real factor in the great importing markets of the world.

YOU can easily identify General Electric Refrigerators because all mechanism is mounted on top of the cabinet. That is where it should be.

Warm air extracted by the motor from the interior of the cabinet is set free above the cabinet... not around it. That is the secret of the unbelievably low cost for electric current. Within the top unit are the quiet motor the rest of the simple mechanism and a permanent supply of oil. These are all sealed airtight in an all-steel casing. See the new all-steel

The Great White Fleet

Canadian Pacific Empress Liners on both oceans will all be painted white when the Atlantic ships, Empress of Australia, France and Scotland have been metamorphosed to this color. The Pacific fleet—always white and the new giant vessel, Empress of Britain, now building, will be white also. With the opening of the St. Lawrence season of navigation next April, the Canadian Pacific will possess the greatest white fleet in the world. The ships are to retain the familiar buff-yellow funnels and ventilators and will have white upper works and a white hull relieved with a blue streak. Above is the artist's conception of the Empress of Britain when completed, shown on right with Chateau Frontenac, Quebec in background and the Empress of Japan, biggest ship on the Pacific. The ships were depicted by O. F. Pennington, marine artist of note and an officer in the Canadian Pacific service.

THE FIRST COMPANY TO MAKE AUTOMOBILES

Olds Motor Works, the Oldest Son of General Motors, began Operations more than 30 Years Ago

The first company to manufacture automobiles commercially in this country, the first to introduce quantity production methods in the automotive industry and the oldest producer of automobiles in the country, if not in the world: that, in brief, is the history of Olds Motor Works, veteran of the industry and manufacturer of the Oldsmobile Six and Viking Eight.

The little one-story factory building where single cylindered, curved dash Oldsmobiles were first manufactured more than 30 years ago still stands as part of the present mammoth plant of Olds Motor Works. Around it has sprung a giant industry occupying more than 82 acres of ground and using 2,704,495 square feet of floor area. Indicative of the present progress of the company is the fact that more than half this floor area 1,393,250 to be exact—is contained in new buildings constructed during the past two and one-half years.

Early in 1897 two young men, Ransom E. Olds and Frank Clark, endeavored to hitch a one cylinder marine engine to a buggy. Their efforts were so sufficiently successful that in August of that year the Olds Motor Vehicle Company, which later changed its name to Olds Motor Works, was incorporated. At the first directors' meeting Olds was made general manager and instructed "to build" one carriage in as nearly a perfect manner as possible.

Three cars were built the following year. They ran, but it was hard to convince the skeptics of that day and sales were difficult. The company perserved, and by 1900 it produced and sold 306 automobiles. This progress continued and in 1904 nearly 5,000 Oldsmobiles were manufactured.
At that time Olds Motor Works was recognized as the largest automobile company in the world. Among notables who owned these Oldsmobiles were the King of Spain, Sir Thomas Lipton, Chauncey Depew and many others.

At this period there was a difference in opinion among the directors of the company which resulted in a change of management and policy.
The small runabouts which the company had specialized in were relegated to the background and larger and more costly automobiles were introduced. This policy culminated in the introduction of the Oldsmobile Limited in 1910, which was one of the largest cars ever produced.

During 1910 Olds Motor Works was acquired by General Motors, which was then just beginning its career in the automotive industry. The policy of Olds Motor Works, however, remained much the same and in the following decade the company was among the first to introduce six and then eight cylinder automobiles. During this period Oldsmobile gained a wide reputation as a quality automobile.

It was in 1923 when the change of policy was made which has resulted in the present exceptional standing of Oldsmobile. At this time the company concentrated all its efforts and abilities on the manufacture of a six cylinder Oldsmobile. Gradually business increased. Year after year the Oldsmobile Six was improved and year after year production and sales increased.

Soon it became apparent that the factory buildings were nearing their productive capacity, and in the summer of 1927 a building expansion was launched. Construction work has been carried on practically continuously since that time. So far 12 huge buildings which have a total floor area of nearly 1,400,000 square feet have been constructed and occupied. These buildings include a motor plant, axle plant, tool design, engineering laboratories, heat treat, sheet metal factories, an administration building, a parts and service building and two huge warehouses and shipping docks.

In the spring of 1929 another important change was announced. This was the introduction of the Viking the first 90 degree, V-type eight cylinder car ever produced at medium price, as a companion car to the successful Oldsmobile Six. The Viking represented the best thoughts of the Oldsmobile engineering staff and the engineers of General Motors. The entire facilities of the General Motors Research Laboratories and proving ground were used in the development and testing of this new car.

During the year just ended Olds Motor Works registered an increase in cars produced and shipped of 28 per cent. And this gain was made over the record year of 1928 when a 52 per cent increase over the previous year's business was recorded.

Across Canada and Back

A three week tour of Canada by Canadian Pacific train de luxe from Montreal and Toronto to Victoria and return by two routes touching at the major cities and beauty spots of the centre and west of Canada is again being brought to the attention of Canadians and others by an announcement recently issued by Dean Sinclair Laird of Macdonald College, who for the last six years has personally conducted these tours. The outward run takes in the northern shore of Lakes Huron and Superior to Port Arthur and passes thence through Winnipeg, Regina, Moose Jaw, Calgary, Banff, Windermere, Nelson, Penticton, Vancouver and Victoria. A hundred miles of this trip between Banff and Windermere is by automobile through some of the most magnificent scenery in the world. Return trip is also by Canadian Pacific Railway and takes in the famous mountain railway journey to Field, Lake Louise and Banff, thence north to Edmonton and by Saskatoon to Winnipeg and Fort William.
From the latter city by Great Lakes steamship to Port McNicoll which practically ends the transcontinental journey.
Variety of scene and of means of transportation is thus assured. Numerous stops are made for sightseeing in the many noted beauty spots, national parks, experimental farms, forestry stations, larger centres of population and provincial capitals.

BOYS' FARM DRAW WITH MORIN HEIGHTS

Sixty Minutes Battling Fails to Break Tie in Laurentians

The Boys' Farm hockey sextette closed out their hockey season this week-end by playing a two-all draw with Morin Heights where the youngsters from Shawbridge journeyed by sleigh to meet J. A. Fink's hard working aggregation.

The first two periods went all against the Farmers whose defence crumbled under the dazzling attacks and fast combination of the home with the score 2 to 0 against the visitors.

In the last frame, however the Shawbridge boys staged a fine come back beating Goalie Michaud twice after dashing attacks by the forward line. When the final whistle sounded the tie remained unbroken. Fink and Courchesne starred for Morin Heights by each beating Kelly after clever combination work.

After the match the visitors were entertained at supper by the home team and were given a warm welcome by the local hockey fans.

A strong aggregation of supporters journeyed from Shawbridge to back the Farm youngsters and their

We have not learned when the extermination is to begin, but we think it will not be until after the next complaining.

At the Reading Circle on Monday evening, Mr. W. Pitcairn read some biographical sketches from a London Journal in regard to Lord Beaverbrook, Lord Balfour and other notables. Like Nobody's Business

In the winter time, when everybody gets up late and hurries away to school or work and leaves last night's pajamas and yesterday's clothing lying on the floor or hanging in the bathroom; or when they all come home and deposit school books, mittens, galoshes, letters and what-have-you on every table and chair and shelf—then the home looks "like nobody's business," unless Mother makes it her business to be the patient goat and pick up after everybody.

But is it fair—I ask you—to convert Mother into everybody's valet? Is that recognizing her as the "queen of the home?" Queen of hearth she may be, but no use treating her like the dunc.

Wouldn't it be much more fair and square for each member of the family to pick up after himself? Try to teach each one to put away a thing he has used, when he is through using it. Yes, it will be a job, and it may be as much work as picking up after him. But it is the right principle and will help to train the young folks to make somebody's good wife or husband, in the years to come.

Dress Architecture

No woman looks her best by chance. It requires study to acquire the clothes which will bring out one's best points and put the dimmers on one's weak ones. Garments and accessories should not be purchased hit and miss. A systematic plan should be mapped out semi-annually to make one's wardrobe harmonious and such as will enhance one's good appearance. It is just as necessary to ideal dressing as the blue print is to housebuilding.

When the vernal and autumnal equinox rises toward the zenith, consider that the time to take an inventory of your clothes closet and map out what you will need for the next two seasons. Divide the contents of that closet into two groups, the things which will not do and the things which will. Send the first pile to the charity organization and send the second to the dry cleaner or the seamstress to be put in perfect condition. Then make a list of what you need to complete your outfit.

It is a good thing to build your wardrobe around your coat. Hat, dresses, hose, gloves should seem to make a complete costume with it. This may seem rather difficult if the coat is fur or a color to which you do not like to limit yourself—but only in this way can you get the smart ensemble effect. Hose and gloves this season incline to a sunburn shade, even when worn with gray, black or white.

With a navy coat, wear navy dresses, light blue, or bars, checks or figures in which blue predominates. With the black coat, black, white and gray are first choices, but almost any other color may be worn with black. With a brown coat, any shade of brown, tan, rust, or red is good. Green goes well with brown, for variety.

Nuts As Food

Valuable nutrients are nuts. We should include more of them in the diet. They contain the same body building elements as meat, and can serve as substitutes. They are fattening and should be avoided by one who is trying to reduce. Nuts should be eaten as a part of the meal and not between meals. The eating of nuts is good for the teeth, both because they require chewing, and also because they are a bone building food.

To incorporate nuts into the diet, add them to breads, puddings, salads, candies, cakes and cookies, or to all most any other dish, when they will not offend the taste. Peanut butter, and shredded coconut are easily handled foods and should be a fixture on the cupboard shelves and frequently resorted to. One caution: Nuts are subject to spoilage through insect life and becoming rancid so do not stock up too heavily on them at one time.

Carrots in Salad

Raw carrots, grated, are delicious in any salad. The chief objection to eating raw carrots is that it takes so long to chew them but, with the new modern grater, made especially for vegetables, it is easy to prepare them so that they may be eaten with less difficulty. They have a taste like orange when added to a salad and there is nothing so healthful and rich in vitamins as raw carrots.

A salad which is almost a meal may be made by adding chopped nuts or grated cheese to raw carrots. Add enough mayonnaise dressing to hold them together. Serve on a lettuce leaf, with whipped cream, flavored with the mayonnaise, on top. Crisp carrots should be used for the salad. Large ones will do if they are tender. Scraper them and then grate them. Green peppers, chopped, or pickles or olives may be added to this salad for variety.

Baby's Temperature

Most mothers make the mistake of keeping their babies too warm. They think of the infant as such a delicate little creature—and they almost smother it in wool blankets. They forget that Baby has an excellent heating plant just inside of him and his heart pumps red blood through his veins much more rapidly than yours does through yours.

When a baby's skin feels cold as a frog, baby is comfortable. Like a little fish, he likes to be cool and it hardens him and makes his resistance to cold greater. Neither babies nor adults should be subject to sudden changes of temperature nor permitted to lie in a damp room nor in a draft. Given an even temperature and moderately dry air, baby will thrive best if the thermometer hovers around sixty-five degrees.

The result of keeping baby too warm is skin troubles and lung and bronchial diseases, running ears and pneumonia.

Care of Teakettle

If you use hard water, lime is likely to precipitate and form a thick, grayish deposit on the inside of it. This will sometimes chip off and appear in water you are pouring from the teakettle or it may make such a heavy interlining that it will hinder the heating of water. It is better to keep the inside of the kettle free from the coating of lime. To do this, wash the inside of the kettle once a week in hot, soapy water. To clean the kettle when the coating has become heavy, use a flat chip of wood and scrape the inside of the kettle with it. Keeping a clam or oyster shell in the kettle will prevent the deposit on the kettle.

Pancakes

In a hotel, they bring your pancakes covered with a dish with a hole in the top, to keep them from getting cold. A steamer or strainer or sieve makes a good substitute for this cover in the home. Before you begin making pancakes, warm a dish to hold them and also the strainer to cover them. Put the cakes quickly into the dish and cover quickly. The perforated pan-shaped cover will permit enough steam to escape that the cakes will not become soggy, but it will retain enough heat to keep them delicious.

Housecleaning

To avoid the semi-annual upheavals of housecleaning, set aside a regular time each week when you will do some special housecleaning job and thus keep the house clean all the time, or rather in the process of continual cleaning, in homeopathic doses. This method will distribute the work and give you the satisfaction of feeling that the house is more livable from day to day.

Cranberry Jelly

Cook one pound of cranberries in one cup of water until tender. Put through a sieve, add two cups sugar and cook for five minutes, then pour into molds.

Some New Ones

Corn Toast

One-half cup corn, 1 tablespoon butter, 1 small onion and 1 cup milk. Put butter into frying pan and fry onion and stir well. Then add milk and a sprinkle of flour. Cook 5 minutes and pour on thin slices of buttered toast.

Noodle Ring

Two cups cooked noodles, 1½ cups milk, ½ pound American cheese, 1 cup bread crumbs, 1 chopped pimento, 1 tablespoon chopped onion, 3 eggs, salt, pepper. Place half the noodles in buttered ring mold. Heat milk, add cheese, stir till melted. Add rest of ingredients. Pour over in ring and cover with remaining noodles. Place remainder of noodle sauce. Bake in moderate oven. Centre may be filled with cooked cauliflower. Garnish with grated cheese and parsley.

Mother's Cake

Sift flour to fill 2½ cups; add 2 heaping teaspoons baking powder, ½ teaspoon salt and sift several times. Cream ½ cup shortening with 1-1½ cups sugar; add 3 well-beaten eggs. Now add, alternately, the flour, etc., and 2-3 cup milk, 1 teaspoon extract. Bake in moderate oven 30 minutes. Use a large pan, as this makes a big loaf. Nice for a birthday cake. My pan is 9x3x3½ inches.

Hermits

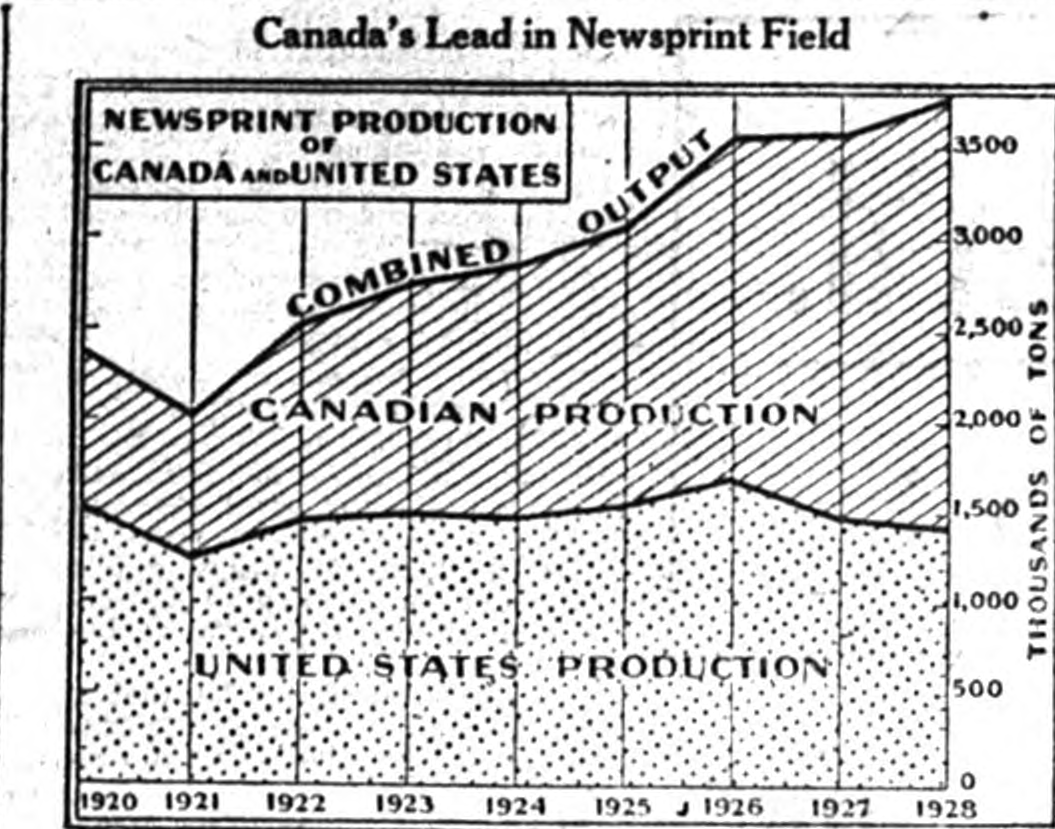

Cream 1-3 cup shortening with 2-3 cup sugar and add 1 beaten egg, 2 tablespoons milk and 1½ cups flour, 2 teaspoons baking powder, pinch of salt, ¼ teaspoon cinnamon, ¼ teaspoon each of mace, nutmeg and cloves, all sifted together. Add 1-3 cup of raisins and mix well. Bake 15 minutes.

Creamed Eggs on Toast

Cut crust from 1½ slices of bread, cut into 1-inch cubes. Toast while preparing egg. Beat 1 egg, stir into 2 tablespoons milk, pour into double boiler, add 1 tablespoon butter, little salt and pepper, stir until like thick boiled custard. Pour over toasted cubes and serve at once.

Cinnamon Rolls

Mix up any quantity of pie crust that you want. Roll very thin on the flour board and cut into pieces about 3x4 inches; spread each piece with

The accompanying diagram, based upon figures published by the News Print Service Bureau, indicates the remarkable change that has taken place during the last decade in the relative status of Canada and the United States as producers of newsprint. In 1920 Canada accounted for barely 37 per cent. of the combined output of the two countries. In 1926 the Canadian output for the first time surpassed that of the United States, and, since then, has steadily increased its margin of leadership. By 1928 Canada's contribution exceeded 60 per cent., and it should closely approach two-thirds of the total for 1929.

butter, sprinkle with sugar and then cinnamon. Roll up and pinch the ends together so that they will not run out. Lay in a biscuit tin a little distance apart, so that they will brown all over.

Electricity in Ireland

Dublin Weekly Irish Times: The Shannon scheme is a national undertaking. Its mere existence is a tribute to the progressive spirit of the Free State Government, and it may be argued that, even if the scheme should be a partial loss, the money has been well spent. In the first place, after years of destruction and wreckage, something really impressive has been built in Ireland. The works on the Shannon probably are the finest of their kind in the world, and their progress during the last few years has been a valuable education to the people. In the next place, electricity has been introduced into many places in the Gaeltacht which previously had not progressed beyond the stage of the oil lamp and the turf fire. The moral value of the change is incalculable.

HAPPINESS

Happiness is an art and not an accident. There is a knack or secret of happiness, and each one has to dig it out for himself. It used to be said: "Be good and you will be happy." But it is not quite as simple as that, seeing that the good are not always happy. Amusement and happiness are different things. We may have the one while lacking the other. The one comes from without, the other from within. The first law of happiness is to be at peace with oneself. The second law is to find perennial interest in the world in which we live, in the people who are our neighbors, and in the work which we have to do.

"Was there anything unusual about the opera?" "Nothing, except we were there before the curtain went up."

Pretty soon Congress ought to launch an investigation of the activities of those who make jokes about the activities of Congress in launching investigations.

"Jix" Calls For Stronger Hand in India

Time Has Come for a Distinct Definition of British Policy

KICKING LONG ENOUGH Endorses Roosevelt's Remark in Regard to India: "Govern or Get Out"

By VISCOUNT BRENTFORD

Recently news which may well startle the people of Great Britain out of their complacency has come over the wires from India.

Those of us who have studied the condition of affairs in India for years past, who have read every book on the subject, and who have been in touch with men who have spent their lives there, are experiencing anxiety beyond measure as to the future.

We have seen an enormous population whose "pathetic contentment"—to use Mr. Montagu's ill-fated expression—has been stirred into hostility by the deliberate efforts of disloyal agitators, and we have seen these same agitators pampered by our representatives in India until they have now gone so far as to fly the flag of rebellion definitely and deliberately.

Let us not mince words. Nowadays treachery and rebellion are considered to be apparently respectable forms of amusement. But I hold no such view. India was conquered by our predecessors; we have kept it and protected it with our Army and our Navy, and we have given it every conceivable benefit—with a resultant prosperity compared with which the thousands of years prior to the British rule were as a miserable desert. Our justice, our laws, our railways, our systems of irrigation, our hospitals, and our missions—everything, in fact, that can make the life of India happier and better has been freely given.

Yet a certain portion of the population has deliberately set itself to work towards rebellion. Tinkering with rebellion leads to successful revolution, and rebellion, if unsuccessful, has always been considered the greatest of crimes and punishable in the most severe manner. Every Indian authority warned England that the meaning of the Congress Party was—that they meant to be independent and would never think of Dominion Home Rule; they would never use the Legislative Councils that we gave them for any other purpose than a disloyal one and they would never work honestly with their British colleagues for the benefit of India.

This was all well known—and yet we held our hand and went on giving them a freedom to plot which they would have had under no other Government in the world.

People seem to think that we are bound to go forward with so-called democratic reforms until India ceases in effect to be a portion of the Empire, or at the very most nothing more than a land in independent alliance with ourselves—a land in which everything we have built up would in the course of a few years go to pieces, in which the life of the ryot, or cultivator, of which class the great mass of the population is composed, would be simply long and hopeless misery.

But let these democrats remember that when we gave reforms they were accompanied by a pledge of reconsideration—not in one direction only, but backwards as well as forwards. And at this moment, while the Simon Commission was considering the question of reforms, the Viceroy and the Government in favor—at some time or other, it is true—of Dominion Home Rule. Remember that the extremists were demanding it immediately, not as a mere pious aspiration but as an immediate, practical policy.

They are angry that it has not come, and that it cannot possibly come in the lifetime of all events of any man now living, and they have first of all attempted to bow up the Viceroy and then passed the most disloyal resolution at their Congress of Lahore. Make no mistake—they will not touch the Viceroy's round-table conference, and they will not listen to talk of Dominion Home Rule in the ultimate future. They are young men in a hurry; they are already reeling. How are we to deal with them? Surely in the way in which Governments all the world over have ever dealt with incipient rebellion. The time has come for a distinct definition of British policy in India.

I know the difficulty which I, as a Conservative, have in criticising the action of my former colleague Lord Irwin. But there is something higher and more important in the governing of a country than the consideration of personal friendship.

If I feel as I do, that his proposals were disastrous, it is my duty to say so.

If I feel as I do, that a definitely stronger hand is needed in India, it is my duty to say so.

The time has come for those of us who believe in the Imperial mission of Great Britain to say so, and to say definitely that we will no longer pander to treachery and rebellion and that we will treat the traitors and the rebels as they would be treated by any other nation.

Whether the present Viceroy is prepared to adopt this policy—I know not—I am satisfied that it is a policy which would appeal to the hearts of the English people. We are not a soft nation, though we are a placid one. It is true that we can be kicked for years with impunity, but when we have decided that the kicking has gone on long enough then we are far from easy to deal with.

The kicking has gone on long enough. These suggestions for establishing separate Governments, the organizing of the general strike, the boycotting of the law courts and the local Administration, and the non-payment of taxes—what are these but acts of open rebellion?

These are my thoughts in the New Year—thoughts of which, as I am no longer in office, I have not the means of putting into practice. But they are thoughts which I submit to my friends of Great Britain, and which I commend to them with a memory of Roosevelt's great and true remark in regard to our position in India and elsewhere: "Govern—or get out!" If you want to get out, say so—and go. But if you want to govern, see that you do it.

If the wets would dry up, the problem of Prohibition enforcement would solve itself.

Will the South Pole Supply Our Heat?

"Highly carbonaceous material"—in other words, coal, of sorts—has been found on Mount Nansen in the Antarctic, by Dr. Lawrence Gould, geologist, of the Byrd expedition.

His report, as given in part over the radio by Admiral Byrd, is thus quoted in the New York Times:

"I have been able to make many glaciological studies, and my geological studies will demonstrate that the great mountain ranges which take their rise far away on the western side of Ross Sea are continued as major features of landscape in fairly unbroken fashion, certainly as far as 140th meridian.

"Capping Mount Nansen I did find sandstone with layer of highly carbonaceous material. Had to climb up 6,000 feet in part over steep, badly crevassed glacier in order to reach these cap rocks.

"No symphonies I have ever heard, no work of art before which I have stood in awe, ever gave me quite the thrill that I had when I reached out, after this strenuous climb, and picked up rock to find it sandstone. Here was what I had come all the way to the Antarctic to find."

Commenting on this report, and on its significance, Prof. Griffith Taylor, of the University of Chicago, who was Senior Geologist of the British Antarctic Expedition of 1910-13, makes the following statement to The Times:

"In 1909 Shackleton brought back the account of seven thin seams of coal which Wild and he had seen at the head of the Boardmore Glacier.

"Sir Edgeworth David, who accompanied Shackleton, is of the opinion that one of the world's largest coal fields may lie under the thousands of feet of the ice on the Ice Plateau.

"It is, of course, impossible to estimate the area of this hypothetical coal-field.

"David thinks this coal-field may cover 100,000 square miles, but all must agree that it is very inaccessible while the coal so far discovered is of poor quality. However, nothing can detract from the interest in these discoveries of coal near the icy poles.

"It is to be hoped that Dr. Gould can find fossils in his interesting carbonaceous material."

Russian Leader Murdered in Paris

Semi-official Temps Calls for Action on Terrorism from Moscow

Paris.—That Gen. Koutieff, leader of Russian Royalists, in Europe, has been murdered and that his body will eventually be found in one of the lakes of the Merchy region, between Mont Argis and Yonne, is the belief expressed by the Paris police. This opinion is based upon preliminary investigation of a clue furnished by M. Chateaufrenard, a hotelkeeper who saw the gray limousine, and red taxicab in which the general was kidnapped the day after the abduction.

Few persons here doubt that the crime was committed by the G.P.U., the Soviet political police. Even the semi-official Temps, which hitherto has abstained from comment, published a strong editorial declaring that all circumstances make it appear certain that the kidnapping was the work of the G.P.U.

That such a crime could be possible must disturb public opinion. Le Temps says, going on to denounce as intolerable the existence under cover of an embassy's diplomatic immunity, of a secret police organization operating as though on conquered territory, and taking orders direct from Moscow, terrorism whose propaganda by acts is not stopped by the moral barriers of civilization.

"It is a question of moral prestige," the newspaper comments, adding the query: "Is it admissible that a band in the pay of this Third Internationale or the Soviet Government operate with impunity in our country, corrupt our workers, organize espionage, perpetrate crimes and then shelter under the fiction of diplomatic immunity?" Le Temps expresses the opinion that action is necessary to end such a state of affairs, declaring that it is impossible to pass a sponge over the abduction and perhaps the murder of Gen. Koutieff.

SECRET OF PROSPERITY

The head of a great business, a fine man and an earnest Christian, known everywhere for his generous philanthropies, recently said to his employees in one of his shop talks:

"Doubtless you all want to double your riches without gambling. This is my advice—share them! Whether they be material or intellectual or social, share them! Their rapid increase will amaze you. If the sun had folded itself up in darkness, it would have gone out long ago. When Jesus said: 'Give, and it shall be given unto you.' He gave the world the wisest recipe for riches it has ever known. Yet men are living the lives of misers, entangling themselves in labyrinths of falsehood, and riding broomsticks of wild theory and speculation with the open road to riches right at their door."

One great difference between the boy and the man is that each thinks he is having the time of his life.

DEATH

STILWELL.—At Brownsburg, Que., on Tuesday, March 11th., Irene Neveu, wife of Sidney H. Stilwell, aged 21 years. Funeral on Thursday at 2.30 p.m. Interment in Lachute Cemetery.

BROWNSBURG

The Brownsburg Junior Hockey Team played their return match against the Westmount High School Intermediate Hockey team, at the Montreal Forum, last Saturday. The winners of the Montreal High Schools Intermediate League, opened their first period with a rush, and within the first five minutes of the play, were successful in getting the first goal. It took the Brownsburg lads a few minutes to find their bearings—playing as they were for the first time on a much larger ice than they were used to. But after a few minutes of play they got nicely into the run of the rink, and the game throughout was like "Greeks meeting the Greeks". Brownsburg's forward line played a smooth working, and effective combination, and until their star left wing Bill Mason got hurt, and had to be carried off the ice at the beginning of the second period, the prospect of winning the game was certainly favorable. Bill got hurt as a result of a heavy body checking. It happened when the Brownsburg forwards were making a beautiful frontal attack, and were well in the Westmounters territory. Tough luck Bill, it looked like a sure goal! The Brownsburg defence, played a very effective defensive game, and their rushes at times, was certainly clever in stick handling and offensive. The goaler, with his eagle eyes and acrobatic movements was right on the job, saved some stinging shots. So far as combination and clean playing was concerned the Brownsburg Juniors were certainly the best but the Westmounters being right at home as they were, on a large rink, played a very good and aggressive game. The game in general was fast and hardly contested. Westmount High winning by 2 goals to 1. Brownsburg Juniors won the first game by 4-2. After the game the Westmount High boys entertained the Brownsburg lads at the Y.M.C.A. It was a wonder that Mr. J. Mason who was in charge of the party gathered all the boys to Mile End Station for the midnight train! Great generalship.

DALESVILLE WITHOUT

POST-OFFICE

We are glad to see by Hansard, that our Federal Member, Sir George Perley, took occasion last week to ask a few pertinent questions of the Postmaster-General regarding the closing of the Post-office at Dalesville and desired to know when it would be re-opened, to which Mr. Veniot made reply that it would be opened as soon as suitable candidate could be found willing to accept post office at regular salary.

From this reply one is left to judge that the sum of $181. which has been the salary paid is the limit to which the Department will go, and if no one cares to undertake the work for this amount then Dalesville must necessarily be deprived the privilege of a post office which has been operative since the 1st of June 1853. It is certainly up to the people of Dalesville to see that proper treatment is accorded them, by the powers that be, or know the reason why!

'Peg O' My Heart'

Splendidly Produced

by the

St. Simeon's Players

Fully maintaining their standard of excellence of entertainment, the Ladies' Guild of St. Simeon's Church held a most successful St. Patrick's Tea on Saturday afternoon and in the evening the Auditorium was filled to capacity with a most appreciative audience, who thoroughly enjoyed the three act Irish Comedy "Peg O' My Heart" as given by the St. Simeon's Club Players.

It was indeed, a most appealing little play in which the members of the past had ample opportunity of displaying their skill in depicting so vividly the characters represented.

Briefly told, the story hinges around the family of Chichester who have just received the news of the falling of the bank in which their wealth had vanished. The son and daughter had been brought up in the lap of luxury and consequently were unacquainted with work. A visit from the solicitor of Mrs. Chichester's brother-in-law who informs her of his death, leaving behind him a large fortune for his sister's child, who was to be the ward of Mrs. Chichester, and to know nothing of her good fortune. In the meantime Peg arrives and owing to her bundles and shabby attire is sent by the daughter (who is interrupted in a love scene with a disgruntled husband) round to the kitchen accompanied by her dog, from whom she refuses to be separated. After some persuasion, and owing to their poverty, Mrs. Chichester consents to take her niece for a month and then follows a great trial for Peg, who is full of Irish humor and wit and knows little of high society life. She is invited to a ball by Jerry and although refused permission by her aunt to go, creeps out at night, and enjoys it to the full. On her return she meets her cousin Ethel, who is planning to elope with Christian Brent and tells Peg she is tired of living on charity. This brings about an explanation between the girls and an alarm of burglars causes Mrs. Chichester, her son and the rest of the house to appear on the scene. Peg at once dons her cousins clothes and takes full blame for the situation, declaring she had been to the ball and had worn her cousins' jewels. The next day Mrs. Chichester plans a marriage between her son Alaric and Peg to which Alaric consents after some persuasion. When he proposes, Peg to his great delight indignantly refuses him and declares her intention of returning to Ireland to her father. Ethel who has at last learned to love her cousin begs her to stay and forgive them for their unkindness. The solicitor arrives with the glad news of the re-opening of the bank also proposes to Peg and is refused, tells her of her riches, which meets with the response from Peg, "If only my poor mother had had it," and the story ends happily with the union of Peg and Jerry.

Mrs. Geo. Leggett was in splendid form and convulsed the audience with laughter as she portrayed the really difficult role of "Peg" which called for spirited action and readiness of wit in which she excelled.

Mrs. G. Y. Deacon as Mrs. Chichester was all that could be desired and excellent work was done by Miss Ruby Rodgers and Charles Henderson as the son and daughter, whose parts were cleverly executed. Messrs. Hobart Greene, J. C. Skuffham and F. Sanford as Christian Brent, Jerry and Solicitor respectively were greatly appreciated and carried off their parts to perfection. Miss Jane Miller and her brother Alfred most creditably filled the parts of Maid and Butler.

The play was interspersed with several selections splendidly rendered by the "Crescent Quartette," who responded to well-merited encores. Musical numbers by Mrs. A. Miller, C. Stou and Ben Maiden were also greatly appreciated.

The stage thanks to Mr. Stansfield and Mr. Ridehalgh, had been very artistically arranged and the effect of illuminations and lighting added much to the general appearance, especially in the scene depicting the thunder and lightning.

The St. Patrick's Tea realized $130. for the Ladies' Guild, and the proceeds of the evening's entertainment amounted to almost $250. which will be devoted to the erection of a new Church Hall.

"Peg O' My Heart" will again be produced, by special request at Brownsburg in the Princess Theatre. Those who were unfortunate in attending the play last week, must make an effort to be present, for this may be their last chance of seeing the beautiful cleverly written Irish comedy, acted by home talent. Mark the date, Friday evening, March 28, at 8:15 p.m.

Meals of the Future

More than half of the working hours of the women of the world are spent in the preparation and serving of food for their families and in cleaning up afterward. We predict that specialization will abolish a good share of this work in the home of the future.

Cafeterias will draw many men and women workers and school children to meals away from home. This will make a big difference and help solve the problem for the housewife who also has a job outside her home.

But the biggest change will be the community kitchens which cook meals to order and deliver them in thermos containers and then come and get the dishes and cart them away to wash. Menus will probably be issued by the week and the housemother can order for her family once a week, just as meals are now ordered for the person at a restaurant.

It is probable that kitchenettes, with their electrical equipment for a cup of tea, or toast or some home made trifles, will continue forever, but the top-heavy kitchen of today is doomed by the fact that women are being so largely employed away from home and by the industrial revolution which is invading the home and doing household tasks commercially and en masse. This innovation will reach the town dwellers first, of course, since it will be more workable when folks live near together—but it will undoubtedly extend to the rural population in time, as butter making, bread making and dressmaking have done.

Musical Enrichment

How lovely it is, in these days of the radio, to occasionally sit down and indulge in a feast of music. But have you noticed that alarming habit they are forming of jazzing up our treasured old opera gems? It is distressing to hear "Martha" syncopated so that you would hardly recognize the majestic melody.

Are you teaching your children the appreciation of music? It can contribute much to the enrichment of life. The ancient Greeks had an idea that music purged the passions. It does go far to keep the mind occupied with clean attitudes. Are you teaching your children to recognize the masters and to name the compositions as they float in to us over the radio? In schools children are learning to play musical instruments and to sing and become musical, as never before. That child who does not give some attention to music as he is growing up is going to miss something very choice which might make a distinct contribution to his culture and enjoyment through life. Almost every child needs to be directed by his mother towards music, or he will carelessly grow up without it.

Cuts of Beef

A less tender cut of beef may, with skillful cooking be made almost as delicious as a choicer piece. There are times, however, when one wishes a special treat of a tender piece of meat.

In general, the tender cuts for steak are sirloin, porterhouse, tenderloin and short cut rib. Tender cuts for roasting are rib and loin.

The less tender, and therefore the less expensive cuts are chuck, shoulder, flank, round, rump, neck, plate, brisket and shank.

The best method of cooking tender cuts is to sear the meat at a high temperature until a brown coating is formed, which will shut in the juices. Then reduce the heat and finish cooking. Do not cover the meat, nor add water. Turn the meat to insure even cooking. Pour off accumulated fat to prevent frying.

For less tender meats, heat, moisture and slow cooking are needed to dissolve the connective tissue. Sear the meat in a small quantity of fat; then reduce the temperature, add a little water, cover lightly and cook slowly until tender. This process makes good gravy as the added water extracts some of the meat juices.

Less tender cuts are used in meat loaf, croquettes and many ways in which ground meat is a foundation. Vegetables are often added to make delicious stews. Flour, added before the meat is seared, absorbs and holds the juice.

Window Shades

The popular colors for shades are now some variations of tan or gray, running from dark brown or gray to ivory, cream, white or gray-white. A few years ago, green was the universal color for window shades. Now one rarely sees green window shades in the shops, though many are left over in houses.

The duplex shade, one color on one side and another on the other, is more expensive than the one color shade, and is not much used, as we have left the inharmonious color, green. Light tan makes a pretty shade, giving a soft yellow light through it. White shades are much used.

The newer shades are washable, will not crack, and are more pliable than the old shades. Whether the bottom of the shade will be fringed or straight is a matter of taste. For kitchens, oil-cloth shades are sometimes used. For bedrooms and sun parlors, cretonnes, lacquered or varnished, to give them stiffness, are an interesting innovation, adding life and color to a room.

The housewife who would change the style of her window shades, but who does not want to buy new ones for the whole house, all at once, may begin with the upstairs or the downstairs, on the front and sides, leaving the rear of the house and the other story to arrive at gradually. The better shades from the windows supplied with new shades, may be used to replace worn shades at the windows left unchanged.

Use More Cheese

Cheese is a very valuable and inexpensive food. It also contains bacteria which destroys other harmful bacteria in the system.

Cheese may be utilized in escalloped dishes, by grating it over salad or soups, by spreading it in sandwiches, or simply by serving it plain. Cheese wafers may be made by grating cheese over crackers and placing them in an oven until the cheese melts. Do you know the deliciousness of cheese toast? Scour your fry-pan clean and put a little butter in it. Put a layer of cheese between two slices of bread and fry the bread first on one side and then on the other, in the hot butter, watching it carefully and turning it to keep it from burning.

Cleaning Windows

There are many ways to wash windows. Every housewife has her own way of doing it and they are all satisfactory, but if you must wash windows in a hurry just wring a chamomile out of water to which a little ammonia has been added.

Rub the glass well with this, then wring the chamomile again, this time as dry as possible and go over the entire window. This will partially dry it and that is all that is required. Your windows will gladden and will not be streaked—provided the sun is not shining on the glass.

Cinnamon Toast

In a sugar shaker, keep a mixture of sugar, well seasoned with cinnamon. This may be sprinkled on toast and makes a delicious variation from ordinary toast. It is acceptable, served to the jaded appetite, with hot tea, and fresh apple, with hot tea, and fresh fruit, and makes a nice supper or luncheon combination.

Last Year and Cancer

"A striking development during 1929 has been the growth of team work in cancer research. For example, at the reconstructed Mount Vernon Hospital, at Northwood, in Middlesex, which is now devoted to the study of malignant diseases and their treatment, the clinical and laboratory staffs work together as a team, and the admission of patients is regulated solely according to the needs of the hospital as a centre of investigation," says the British Medical Journal.

"Perhaps the greatest mass attack that has ever been made on the problem of cancer, however, was organized during the latter part of the year, when the Council of the British Medical Association instituted an inquiry into the incidence of cancer and its history after treatment.

This collective inquiry, which is now proceeding, is limited to cancer of the breast, rectum, cervix, and tongue, and its aim is to gather information about the previous history of patients, the evolution of the disease itself, the nature and results of whatever treatment is undertaken, and the duration of the disease, both when treated and when untreated.

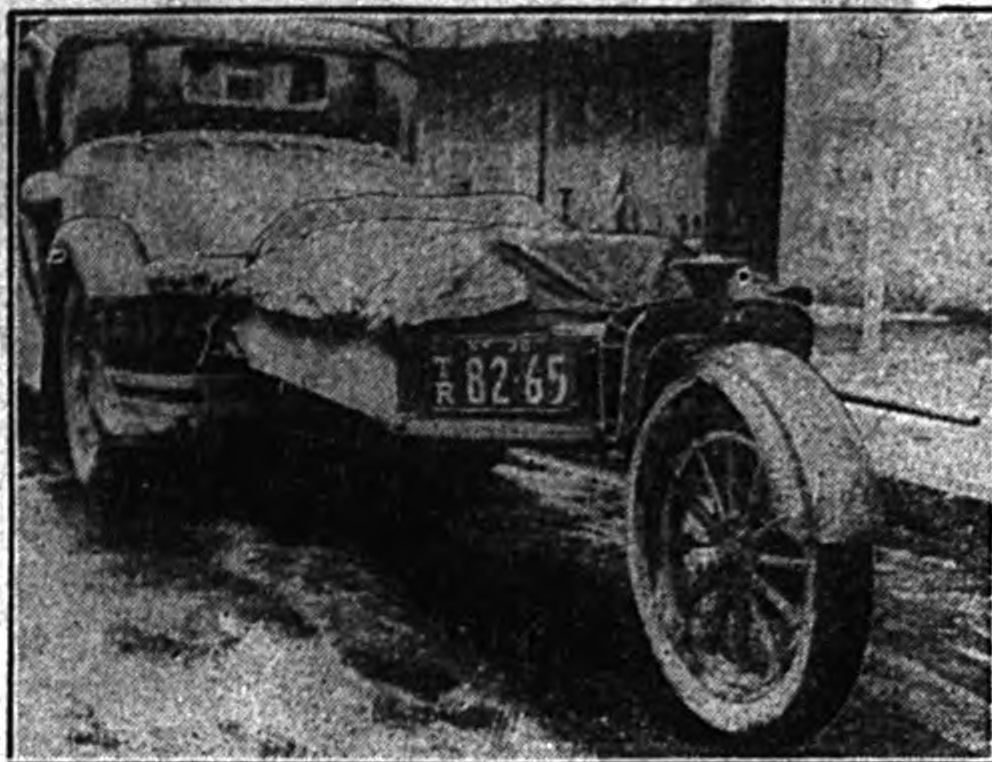

"These are matters about which the general practitioner is better fitted to supply reliable information than anyone else; but we do not pretend that the ultimate solution of the problems of cancer will necessarily come from him, any more than it will from the surgeon, the physicist, or the radiologist.

"The need of the moment is for the closest co-operation between all these workers, and if we may venture on a prophecy we would suggest that the near future will see the formation of more and more teams comprising representatives of all these groups, who will together tackle problems which none of them may ever hope to solve separately.

Love of Country

But what is it to love one's country? Is it to carry a banner in a procession? Is it to fling bunting from the tops of the buildings, and send off sky-rockets in the evenings? Vastly deeper than that is love of country, deeper than any soldier's uniform, deeper than any pictures of battlefields with which we adorn our walls.—W. H. P. Faunce.

"Within ten years' time chemistry and airships should make war impossible."—Lord Dewar.

Detectives - English and French

Contrasting the Procedure of the Law and its Administration

The efficiency of British and French detective procedure is pronounced about equal, by a writer on the subject in "Paris et le Monde" (Paris). Radical differences in law and custom in the two countries favor sometimes one and sometimes the other in this respect. The best-known of these differences is that British law presumes a man innocent until proved guilty, whereas in France a suspected man is treated as guilty until his innocence is established. Says the Paris paper:

British crime detection has a good record for accuracy and efficiency. The history of the British police force reveals that whereas there were 1,000 policemen in London in 1829 for a population of 900,000, and there was one criminal to every twenty-two persons, in 1929 there were 19,300 policemen for a population of 7,800,000, and one criminal to every 500 persons.

Finger-print detection has been brought to a fine art by the Metropolitan Police of London. Records of nearly a million prints are kept carefully classified, available at a moment's notice for identification. Thanks to wireless telegraphy it is possible to send finger-prints to any part of the world in a few minutes, a fact which has led to the arrest and conviction of more than one ingenious criminal who might otherwise have escaped justice.

The French detective, on the other hand, relies far more on an elaborate system of anthropometrical measurements for identification than upon finger-prints. Although the finger-print system, as developed by Bertillon, originated in France, anthropometry is now in great favor. Out of 1,727,000 finger-prints filed in France in 1927 only 923 identifications were made, a figure which does not at all correspond to the identifications made by the police using this and other methods.

Undoubtedly French detectives include among their number men of brilliant scientific attainments, with amazing gifts of intuition and resourcefulness. But though the French detective has greater freedom in the conduct of his inquiries, and may adopt methods which would not be looked upon with favor in England, it is doubtful if, in the long run, his picturesque, and, in many respects, romantic, ways of working secure better results than those obtained by his English confreres.

Results, on the whole, are probably about equal.

Austria, Germany and Switzerland favor the highly trained university ultra-scientific detective, while France has its band of brilliant individualists whose methods seem to combine something of the Scotland Yard efficiency with the scientific systems of the other continental countries.

Crime detection in France—that is, crime of serious character—is the responsibility of the Surete Generale, a national force of super police quite apart from the ordinary guardians of the law.

It is purely a detective force based upon Paris, with local agents or detached posts in the bigger provincial cities. In Paris, at headquarters, are men ready at a moment's notice to proceed to any part of the country to take over investigations into any crime.

There is no question of waiting for the local police authorities (with the consent of a local watch committee) to call in the Surete Generale. It is the latter's job to investigate the crime, and it gets on with it.

This method of detached posts—miniature Scotland Yards coupled with the efficiency of the Brigade Mobile, a national Flying Squad—enables highly trained detectives to begin investigations on the spot of the crime within a comparatively short time—before, as frequently happens in England, the clues have become obliterated and the scent gone cold.

The ordinary police are under the direction of a Prefect solely responsible to the Minister of the Interior.

Although members of the Surete Generale carry out the investigations immediately following a crime, it is the Juge d'Instruction, a powerful figure, who actually conducts the inquiry.

In France a suspect is presumed guilty till his innocence is proved. It is the province of the Juge d'Instruction to interview witnesses, cross-examine friends, relatives, and enemies, and in fact carry out to the full his duties as "Examining Magistrate."

His examination may take weeks, months, or even years, during which time the suspect must remain a prisoner.

There is no law—as in England—which says that a suspect must be charged with an offense within a couple of days, or released.

In France the fate of the suspect lies in the hands of the examining magistrate, and the unfortunate man or woman must remain a prisoner till this particular official pronounces a "non lieu," or commits the person for trial.

Under British law a man is supposed to be innocent until he has been proved to be guilty. No arrest can be carried out except under a warrant which is issued only if sufficiently strong evidence against the suspected person is produced.

Team-work and elaborate organization correspond in Great Britain to the French method of individualism. Rarely is it left to one man to unravel a British mystery. Reports are made and sent to headquarters of the smallest events in every part of the United Kingdom, with the result that it is rare, indeed, for a criminal to escape unnoticed.

The methods of the French detective savor somewhat of the picturesque.

Coupled with the greater freedom of action and his superior powers for dealing with local and public authorities when making inquiries, he has the very powerful weapon denied the British police, that of being allowed to take a suspect to the scene of the crime and reconstruct the outrage in his presence. Such a weapon has an enormous effect on the morale of the suspect.

Again, the French detective has at his command all the resources of wonderfully equipped technical laboratories maintained by the State.

At police headquarters he has at hand a marvelous collection of dossiers, recording life history of every person who has been in the hands of the police, while the Service d'Identite system enables him to trace any movement of any man, at any time.

Ottawa.—Interesting commentaries on Canadian foreign trade are made in a recent Bureau of Statistics bulletin. In the production of printing paper, nickel, asbestos and cobalt this Dominion leads the world; occupies second place in the production of wheat and automobiles; and in output of lead and gold third place. In export trade, it leads the world in exports of wheat, flour, 2nd in automobiles, and third place in exports of wood pulp; as well as occupying a very high position in the exports of many other staple products, such as lumber and timber, fish, copper, barley, cheese, raw furs, whiskey, meats, rubber tires, farm implements, pulpwood, cattle, raw gold, silver, lead, rye, oats, rubber footwear, leather and hides.

Canada's Position

World-wide statistics are not yet available for the calendar year 1929, but for the calendar year 1928, Canada occupied fifth position in import and export trade, as well as in aggregate trade, second place in export and total trade per capita; third position in favorable trade balance, and second place in favorable trade balance per capita. Inasmuch as Canada's total trade for the calendar year 1929, compared with 1928, shows a decrease of $89,213,000, imports an increase of $76,675,000 and exports a decrease of $165,888,000, it is evident that the Dominion will continue to hold fifth position in import and total trade in 1929 among the principal commercial nations of the world, but that in export trade will probably move down to sixth position, yielding fifth place to British India.

Trade Balance

Also in respect to visible trade balance; this was unfavorable on December 31, 1929, to the extent of $90,535,000 in comparison with a favorable trade balance of $151,928,000 on December 31, 1928.

This situation was largely brought about by an increase in imports and a decrease in exports. In the case of imports the increase was mainly due to the movement of capital equipment into the Dominion to meet expansion conditions, while in the case of exports the decrease was mainly accounted for by the falling off in the exports of grains, particularly wheat, to the United Kingdom and Continental Europe, due partly to lower yields, but also reflecting temporary marketing policies as well.

Hard Days For Girl Secretary At Conference

Means Little Free Time, Coping with New and Perplexing Conditions

By a Woman Secretary who has attended many International Conferences.

For the woman secretary a conference means long hours, little free time, coping with new and sometimes perplexing conditions in a foreign country.

I have arrived late at night in a distant capital, after a long and wearisome journey in intense heat, to find that I was expected to start work at eight next morning and be prepared to work until midnight. No time for rest or for adjustment to new conditions! Meals taken at an odd hour, usually in a bedroom serving as an "office," work havoc with the digestion.

All conferences do not involve the same work. A French girl told me of a conference she was at in the United States where the staff were paid overtime. They had a most easy-going administration and as the conference went on for weeks and weeks they did as little work as possible during the day and every night worked overtime. She, for one, had made quite a lot of money out of this arrangement.

When I went to a conference in America I was not under that easy administration. I was two weeks in America before I got out of the hotel in Washington. What days those were—the telephone ringing incessantly, social engagements to be made for the delegates, a never-ending stream of memoranda, reports, figures to be typed!

Do you wonder that meals are skipped until a headache and a void remind one that human beings must have food?

I have had many amusing experiences. I was lunching alone one day at a famous hotel when I heard an American woman say to her friends: "Just watch that girl at the next table. You see how all those men (the delegates) smile at her when they come in. You can easily see the kind of girl she is!"

All eyes were fixed on me, and then one girl remarked: "She looks so quiet looking."

"Ah," said the elder woman, "my dear those are always the worst." Another girl I knew had her resource tested. Her instructions were to give a packet to an official who would meet the train at a certain station.

Unfortunately she missed the train. She found there was a chance of catching it by taking a motor-car. She raced to the next station, beat the train, dismissed the car, and thought all was well. But the train did not stop there.

Not speaking one word of the language, she ran over to the owners of a large private car, pointed to the train, showed her ticket and in some way made them race her to the next station. This time she missed the train by a few minutes.

Then she went to the local authorities and tried to charter an airplane. Only military airplanes were available, so she had to resign herself to following next day by a slow train.

She arrived a day late at the conference, but in my eyes she became a heroine—the girl who was prepared to charter an airplane to get to her work in time.

Baldwin and the Empire Crusade

English Review (London): The problem of Empire Free Trade is likely to give rise to much talk during the next twelve months, and if Mr. Baldwin follows in the ill-omened footsteps of Lord Balfour and Mr. Amery, or those of Joseph Chamberlain, the Conservative Party will break up, this time for good. Quite obviously a loose adherence to a high-sounding formula is Mr. Baldwin's easiest way out of the difficulty. But it will not be effective. The issue is raised and the Conservative Party must declare its policy. At the moment every wriggle of the 1905-07 period is being repeated. The British farmer is to be saved, but food prices are not to be increased; British manufacturers are to be protected, but no manufacturer is to pay more for his raw material; Dominion manufactures are not to be interfered with, but British exports to the Dominions are to be increased. Those quibbles are beneath contempt. Facts have got to be faced, even in a "crusade."

Dreaded anaemia can be banished!

IN middle life, when vitality is not as great as it once was, and the blood stream is naturally thinned and de-vitalized, anaemia easily lays hold on the system. At first, just a tired feeling, it quickly results in bodily weakness that ordinary tonics cannot avail.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills then become a wonderful aid. They supply the necessary oxygen to the blood, increase the blood count and renew waning vigor.

"I was seized with anaemia," writes Mrs. Charles Lambert of Port Hope, Ont., "and was in a very bad state. As a girl I had taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for a run-down condition and decided to take them once more. Again the result was marvellous. In a little while I was fully well again."

You cannot begin too early to check anaemia. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold at your druggist's or by mail, postpaid, 50 cents, from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Look Up

Who art thou that complainest of thy life or toll? Complain not. Look up, my wearied brother; see thy fellow-workmen there, in God's eternity; surviving there, they alone surviving; sacred band of the immortals, celestial body-guard of the empire of mankind. To thee, Heaven, though severe, is as that Spartan mother, saying while she gave her son his shield, "With it, my son, or upon it." Thou too shalt return home in honor; to thy far distant Home, in honor; doubt it not,—if in the battle thou keep thy shield! Thou, in the Eternities, and deepest death-kingdoms, art not an alien; thou everywhere art a denizen. Complain not.—Thomas Carlyle.

STORMY WEATHER HARD ON BABY

The stormy, blustery weather which Canadians experience during February and March is extremely hard on babies and young children. Conditions make it necessary for the mother to keep them confined to the house, whose rooms may be overheated or badly ventilated. The little ones catch cold and their whole system becomes racked. To guard against this a box of Baby's Own Tablets should be kept in the home and an occasional dose given the baby to keep him fit, or if a cold suddenly grips him to restore him to health again and keep him in good condition till the brighter, warmer days come along again.

Baby's Own Tablets are just what the mother needs for her little ones. They are a mild but thorough laxative which regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach; break up colds and simple fevers; banish constipation and indigestion and make the cutting of teeth easy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Canada Escaped This

Edmonton Bulletin (Ind.): Germany has a new problem on hand, as the result of having given asylum to the Mennonite refugees who wanted to come to Canada from Russia. An epidemic has broken out among the children of these unfortunate migrants and is carrying off large numbers of them, largely because their faith-cure mothers refuse to call in doctors when the children get sick. With every sympathy for these distressed wanderers, Canadians will see in this situation a cause for gratitude that the scheme to bring them to Canada was headed off. People who do not believe either in educating their children or in providing them with medical attention when it is needed, may be entitled to hold their peculiar views, but they are better left to practice them somewhere else.

Money Orders

The very strict Army colonel was taking his Sunday walk in the park when a beggar approached and held out his hand.

"Spare a trifle, sir," pleaded the man unhappily. "I'm an old soldier."

"Old soldier, eh!" roared the colonel fiercely. "I'll see if you're an old soldier or not. Now, then, carry out my orders. Attention!"

The beggar's feet came smartly together.

"Eyes right!" barked the old colonel. And followed up with "Stand at Ease!"

"There you are, guv'nor," said the beggar, "that proves it."

"Yes; but what comes next?" asked the colonel.

"Present arms," replied the other.

Vaccination Has Saved Millions

Time and Again, Smallpox Has Slain Scoffers But Not the Vaccinated

This is the seventeenth of a series of weekly health articles sponsored by the Canadian Social Hygiene Council.

People who oppose compulsory vaccination use as one of their main arguments against this protective measure that it interferes with personal liberty. This is rather an empty cry, because the liberty of those who do not want to get smallpox is just as much entitled to consideration as the liberty of those who do not want to be vaccinated. It should never be forgotten that smallpox must pass from one person to another. So the person that is willing to take the risk of getting this disease is taking more than a chance with his own health—he is taking a chance with the health of those with whom he may come in contact.

In 1885, a Pullman porter, who had caught smallpox, landed in Montreal. Because of his dusky skin it was some days before the disease was detected. The authorities estimated that before he was taken in hand by the medical men of the city he had infected from 15,000 to 20,000 people and had killed about 3,000 of them.

There are hundreds of similar cases which might be cited, where to quote the judgment of the United States supreme court, "the liberty of the individual is not in the interests of the welfare of the masses, and therefore the liberty of the individual must yield."

Another case of a single individual causing an enormous loss of life was when Mexico lost 3,500 of its citizens in an epidemic, to which we have referred. In a previous discussion on smallpox, a Spaniard who visited Mexico while suffering from the disease is blamed for starting the scourge on its devastating way.

Those parts of the world which have suffered greatest have learned that vaccination is the best preventive against smallpox. In Quebec Province, where the Pullman porter taught them a terrible lesson, there is wholesale vaccination and the municipality of Gattineau was recently fined for not passing a compulsory vaccination law, after being ordered to do so by the provincial health department.

In the United States, where it is said that one-fifth of the cases of smallpox in the world existed during 1925, the supreme court has found that any state has the right to enforce vaccination in case of an epidemic.

In Europe, where sixty million people died of smallpox during the seventeenth century, most of the nations have compulsory vaccination laws.

So it is with the Philippines, where 40,000 people died every year of smallpox at one time. The whole population is now vaccinated and after the law was passed there wasn't one death from smallpox in seven years.

Sir Gilbert Blanes, who was physician to the King during the eighteenth century, made a memorable address to the British House of Commons, in which he said that "it was difficult to find in the United Kingdom, an adult person who had not had the smallpox." It was during this period in the Empire's history that it was a distinguishing characteristic if they could say, in a circular describing a criminal, "He is un-pock marked."

The experience of the military authorities show, perhaps as clearly as it could be shown, what a great change has come over the world since the medical men have had the vaccination with which to combat the terrible scourge of smallpox. Here were men living under the most deplorable conditions, their vitality at times reduced to an absolute minimum, the facilities for their protection the very worst. One man would have been able to spread the disease among hundreds of thousands, so close were their living quarters. Yet when we look at the war records, we find that because of vaccination, there were only four cases of smallpox in the French Army, and not one man died of the disease. In the whole British Army in France there were only twelve cases of smallpox and only three deaths.

Surely it would have been a terrible situation had the army commanders been too squeamish about the matter of liberty, and not taken the precautions which they did take to protect their men from the disease. It is doubtful which would have taken the most lives, the German army or the "germ army," the latter as represented by smallpox.

The city of Glasgow, Scotland, had an experience with vaccination that was also definite proof of its value. In the year 1901 to 1902 the city had prepared a great exposition at heavy expense, and just as the exposition was about to open, an epidemic of smallpox struck the city. The authorities decided that if they did not act quickly the exposition would be ruined, a financial failure. So they started out on a great vaccination and revaccination crusade. The entire medical profession of the city joined in the work. Of the 675,000 people who had not been vaccinated, the medical men within the next fifteen months vaccinated 404,000 people, leaving only 271,000 people who refused to be vaccinated. The results were remarkable. Not one case developed among those people who were vaccinated. Among those not so protected, there occurred 1853 cases.

There is a feeling among doctors that if they could only have people who oppose vaccination see the wonderful results that are brought about by its application, there would be very little opposition.

In the Philippine Islands, for instance, over 10,000 vaccinations have been made. Not one life or limb lost through vaccination. Before it was done, 40,000 people died every year from smallpox. An occasional death occurs now, but it is always found to be some person in the remote regions who cannot be properly vaccinated because there is no skilled person near enough, and properly equipped to perform a satisfactory vaccination.

When you find your doctor advises vaccination you may rest assured that he and other members of his profession have investigated thoroughly before giving it their support. The co-operation of all intelligent people in the interests of good health will aid greatly in combating the disease of smallpox.

St. Lawrence Waterway

Toronto Star (Lib.): Canada tried throughout a fifty-year period to attract the traffic of the United States' middle west down the St. Lawrence and when the United States finally decided to use that route the Dominion as good as slammed the door in her face. What sense there was in that action, after spending one hundred and fifteen millions in building an approach to that door for the United States in the form of a new Welland Canal, it is hard to say.

AN ANSWER FROM WITHIN

A graphic and convincing exposure of the King Government's vigorous but ineffectual attempt to tell the people of Canada that Canadians are prosperous is supplied from within the family circles at Ottawa.

It is a letter with which the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Mr. J. C. Grisdale, is circulating the farmers of Canada. It reads in part: "You are, I understand, interested in livestock of some kind and are therefore, I have no doubt, interested in Canada's holding her place and even doing a little better than that on the world's markets for various livestock products. Now, as a matter of fact Canada seems unfortunately to be losing ground in this connection. For instance, we no longer export any eggs or butter. We send abroad very little dressed poultry or lambs; our exports of beef cattle are dwindling, our shipments of beef are decreasing, our exports of bacon which, a few years ago, were very large have almost disappeared and our shipments of cheese are rapidly falling off."

"This Department is naturally very much concerned to note this most extraordinary situation in a country such as ours, where so many of our people are farmers where the possibilities of the production of these articles and more besides, are so great."

No wonder Mr. Grisdale's department is alarmed. Every Canadian who realizes the situation is alarmed. Mr. Grisdale might have gone further and pointed out that Canada not only is no longer an exporter of butter, but that in the year just closed she imported over $5,000,000 pounds of it for home consumption. He could have gone further and told the farmers that in the year 1929 we imported into Canada agricultural, vegetable and animal products of the kind he mentions and others, to a value of over $300,000,000.

He has cause for alarm and so have all other people concerned in the well-being and development of this country. Premier King says Canada is a prosperous Canadian will prefer to accept Mr. Grisdale's facts over Mr. King's fiction.

We very much regret to have to report the passing away of Mr. Archibald Watt at about noon on Wednesday the 19th. He died at the home of Mrs. G. Jeffrey, after an illness of about one month. He had reached the age of 83 in January last, having lived for the last three years in St. Andrews, where he had endeared himself to all by his happy and cheerful ways. He will be greatly missed. The funeral will be from Jos. Wray's establishment in Montreal.

BROWNSBURG

The informal tea held in the Sunday School Rooms of the United Church on the afternoon of Saturday, March 16th., by Miss MacPherson and Mrs. McCulloch, was a real success, being patronized by a large number who enjoyed the social rendezvous and the dainty repast provided by the hostesses. As the anniversary of "Auld Ireland" was so close at hand the event was in the nature of a Saint Patrick Tea, the tables being prettily decorated with the emblems of Ireland, with green and white coverings, with ribbons and festoons and various designs to match. It was a very pretty sight that greeted the eye as one entered, and the guests were served with light refreshments of the same color scheme to harmonize with the general appearance of the room. The hostesses were assisted by Mrs. Mason and Mrs. Hazel. A nice sum was realized by this use of Talent Money, and every one expressed pleasure in the event itself and in the financial success that attended it.

OBITUARY

THE LATE MRS. IRENE STILLWELL

Amid many manifestations of sympathy, the funeral of Mrs. Stilwell, (née Irene Neveu,) whose untimely death occurred on March 11th., took place on Thursday the 13th.

There were many beautiful floral tributes and the new Brownsburg Anglican Church was filled to capacity with friends and relatives. The service was conducted by the Rev. J. A. Lackey, whose address was especially appropriate and comforting.

Deceased, who leaves behind two young children, Frank and Doris, was born in Michigan on December 4th., 1908. She was possessed of a very cheerful disposition, and throughout her long illness was brave and uncomplaining.

The principal mourners were her husband, Mr. Sidney Stilwell, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Neveu, parents; and sister, Mrs. Willard Wilson. The remains were interred in Lachute Protestant Cemetery.

THE LATE JAMES B. DAVIS.

Death has again removed a well-known and highly respected citizen of Brownsburg, in the person of James Brackenbury Davis, who passed away on Tuesday evening, Mar. 18th., after ailing in health for the past six months.

Deceased who was 71 years of age came from England in 1906, and after spending seven years in Montreal moved with his family to Brownsburg, still being in the faithful employ of the Canadian Explosives, whom he served until retirement in September last. Of a poetical mind, he was a fond lover of nature and on every possible occasion would be seen starting off with steady stride for a good long hike. Quite often he would accompany the Scouts on their marches, and despite his advancing years was able to keep up with the best of them.

A loving and devoted wife, two daughters, Mrs. E. Werrett and Miss Irene, of Brownsburg; also seven sons, Conrad and George in England; Albert, Edward and Leslie, of Montreal; James & Lawrence, of Brownsburg, are left to mourn the loss of a loving husband and father.

The funeral was conducted at St. George's Anglican Church, by the Rev. Mr. Lackey, and was largely attended by many sympathizing friends who will greatly miss the departed one.

The pall-bearers were Messrs. Albert, Edward, Leslie, James and Lawrence Davis and Mr. Harold Werrett. Interment was made in Lachute.

THE LATE GEORGE TODD

The death occurred at Hawkesbury, on March 15th., 1930, of George H. Todd, formerly of Lachute, and eldest son of the late John W. Todd and Mrs. Todd, of Lachute, Que. The deceased was married in 1909 to Daisy P. Bancroft, of Vankleek Hill, Ont., who survives him.

The funeral was held on Monday afternoon last from his late residence and was largely attended by relatives and friends, the service being conducted by the Rev. W. P. Garrett, Rector of Hawkesbury Anglican Church, and an intimate friend of the deceased, assisted by the Rev. A. J. Back, Minister of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Hawkesbury.

The Hawkesbury Masonic Order, of which deceased was a member, also attended in a body to perform their last rites, after which the remains were taken to the vault at Vankleek Hill for interment later at Cassburn, Ont.

Those left to mourn, are his wife, two daughters, Mrs. B. M. Shields and Hazel M. Todd, both of Hawkesbury; his mother, Mrs. John W. Todd, two brothers, Guy and Gilbert of Lachute, and three sisters, Mrs. A. Buckham, of Edmonton, Alta.; Mrs. G. W. Hardie, of Brownsburg, Que.; and Mrs. H. J. Hammond, Lachute, Que.

THE LATE ALEX. J. MacGIBBON

The death of Mr. Alex. Jas. MacGibbon, of Brownsburg, took place on Wednesday of this week. Deceased had been in poor health for several years, but was not seriously sick, until about a month ago, when he contracted a chill.

Born in Brownsburg 75 years ago, he in his younger days, was engaged with his brother Duncan in farming and milling business, and was also a member of the Board of School Commissioners, doing much toward building up Brownsburg in its earlier days. Later on he spent many years in California and the West, returning home some six years ago.

Besides his wife he leaves one son, S. Wyman MacGibbon, of Brownsburg, and one daughter Miss Katie F. MacGibbon, of Detroit, and one brother John, of Sauk Centre, Minn., to mourn his loss.

WHO'S WHO IN THE STORY:

Peter DeWolfe, wealthy young American, visits the Benhams in England, being attracted by a description of Brena Selcoss, given him by Eversby Benham, a British officer. Muriel Benham, sister of Eversby, grows very fond of Peter. Neither she nor her mother mention Brena, although she lives next door. As they sit at dinner one evening Peter looks out in the yard and sees a woman, who apparently had been looking right into his face.

She stood in the posture (which Peter learned later to know was characteristic)—a posture of one who waits with resignation.

For what? Heaven knows. Perhaps for a reincarnation into a life less troubled, less besmirched with small affairs.

"So she has!" admitted Mrs. Benham.

"I might have known it was Brena Selcoss; I heard a high-powered car," said Muriel. "But she doesn't like to be driven almost into our dining-room, so she stopped on the South Wing. Let's go into father's den, Peter. Bring the cigars in there, Lucy."

No protest appeared possible. DeWolfe could not very graciously say, "Oh, no. I want to stay."

He turned once as he left the dining-room. The woman outside was still waiting at the door for Mrs. Benham to waddle to the latch, still looking in, apparently at Peter, and with a smile and warmth thrown toward him like a message from her great dark eyes.

He could not wipe away the impression of that look. In it there had been a call, an understanding, a password, a magic formula.

"Let's light the fire," suggested Muriel in a trembling voice.

"All right," said Peter, and struck a match.

He did not smoke.

"Why not?" asked the girl.

"I have a headache," he said with a laugh.

"Come here then. Lie down on father's sofa. I don't mind. Be comfortable, Peter."

He stretched out upon the couch and closed his eyes.

Muriel sat down upon a stool, staring into the firelight. There in the study behind the heavy door which she had closed, the two seemed very remote.

"I had a wonderful time—this afternoon," she said in a tense voice.

"Good!" said DeWolfe.

Her hand moved timidly forth and her soft fingers touched his forehead, brushing back the hair.

Peter closed his eyes.

She leaned over quietly and with a little cry hardly audible pressed her lips to his.

He sprang up.

"I never did that before. I never by any one," she said, clenching her hands.

"Oh, I say, I'm sorry—" he began.

"Sorry!" she said.

"Of course," he replied with unnecessary coldness. "Of course I'm sorry. I've allowed you to think—"

Muriel's eyes were wide and blazing. "You needn't say more," she almost screamed. "You needn't say more because I know."

"Know?" said Peter in a low tone.

"Yes—know. It's Brena Selcoss!"

she said. "Eversby told you about her! That's why you came! That's what you've been thinking about. My brother was a fool!"

Peter raised his hand.

"I kissed you and I'm glad," she went on furiously. "Yes, I am. I'm glad. It has brought out the truth. I never did it before. I'm glad. The truth."

The girl leaned toward him.

"For God's sake, Peter, keep away from her! She might like you. Of course she'd like you. And if she liked you—"

"What do you mean?" he said.

"I know, but I can't tell. I wish I didn't know. It is too awful to believe. If she takes you in you will—"

"What?"

"Vanish!" she whispered. "Like the others."

The door closed after her.

Three days later, as Peter sat in his London hotel room the telephone bell rang.

He heard a voice which came out of distance like a voice which comes nearer through a damp grove of dark green trees, like an aroma which comes forward on the wind, until it rose slowly to its full power.

"I must see you," said the voice. Brena Selcoss had come to find him! He did not have to say: "Who is this?" She had come!

Sometimes, however, in that phrase, "I must see you," said with intensity by that extraordinary woman—about whom the Benhams knew so little and perhaps Muriel so much—filled Peter for the moment with an inexplicable dread.

She was at Mulberry's tearoom, she said, and there he found her. She greeted him with a quiet smile and pointed to an empty chair.

He recognized as he looked into this young woman's eyes that if, in worldly terms, were a half a dozen years older than she, in fact, the soul of Brena Selcoss had outlived his in rounds and rounds of ages.

Her eyes were so compelling that it was difficult to give attention to the fact that her countenance had in it a baffling riddle. She had a full rounded chin below lips so flexible and of so warm and rich a moist color that their thinness was scarcely noticeable.

"You are shocked at my behavior," she said. "Perhaps you are pleased."

"The two go together," said Peter.

"You did not ask me who I was. Yet, you had never heard my voice before."

"That struck you forcibly after you left the telephone," Peter told her with authority. "It was not surprising. I had never heard your voice, but I had seen you. It was only necessary to look at each other—"

"Yes, that was memorable," she said solemnly. "I came to London to see you, but I came because of Muriel Benham."

Peter looked up in dismay. "You don't mean that she told you—"

"No one told me," said Brena Selcoss. "I have come down from the country to beg you to go back."

Peter shook his head.

"In some way—some mysterious way—just such a thing as this involves me always."

He interrupted her again by saying, "The whole thing is nonsense, Miss Selcoss. The plain truth is that I do not have the slightest emotion of any kind about Miss Benham. It was an unfortunate misunderstanding."

Brena sat back in her chair with a sigh which appeared to Peter to state, sincerely, relief from a great anxiety.

"I would have liked to stay longer," he said, "to see you."

"You did not know of me."

"I had seen you."

"But I would not care much for that kind of judgment," she said. "It is man's great delusion to base inclinations on a glance."

Suddenly, with a quick tenacity that startled Peter, she looked swiftly about from face to face of the persons, men and women, who sat at the other tables.

He saw in her eyes at that moment the look which Benham had described so vividly—that expression of fear of some unknown peril.

"I think I will stay in London," she said, and Peter thought he heard her murmur under her breath, "God forgive me."

In the ensuing days they wandered about London, enjoying a perfect companionship. But at length Brena gave the first hint that their holiday must end.

"Perhaps I'd better go back to-morrow—back to Beaconsfield," she said.

Both knew that this word must finally be spoken, but Peter had not expected to see quite the quick pallor which came into Brena's face as she forced out the sentence.

DeWolfe felt as one who had been touched suddenly and unexpectedly upon the elbow by the dank, bony fingers of a corpse.

"There is one evil passion which I think does more harm than all the others," he said. "It is fear! It ought to be made a crime."

"You know nothing of fear," she replied. "You have not lived with fear day in and day out—year after year!"

"The world is a fool about fear," Peter drove on. "It makes cowards, but it is also the mother—"

"Of what?"

"Of murderers," he said.

Brena was silent.

In her apartment that night he drew her toward him and, as if indeed he had some ancient deity in his arms, he kissed her lips, he pressed his cheek into her hair, he touched the back of her neck with his fingers.

"I love you," he said. "Can you understand all I mean by those plain words—I love you?"

"I love you, Peter."

"You must never leave me now."

She sprang back.

"Peter, it cannot be."

She seized his hand and, leaning over, pressed her wet cheek upon his wrist.

"It cannot be, Peter. It happened when I was no more myself—the one you know—than I am Muriel Benham. It happened when I was less than eighteen—seven years ago. I am married!"

"Married?" he gasped, putting his other hand lightly upon her cheek. "Where, then, is he? How long ago did he—"

"Go?"

"Yes."

"Three years. I loathed him. I loathed his eternal fright."

"And where is he now?" he asked.

"I do not know."

She shuddered.

"He—"

The high rate of dividends allotted to participating policyholders is continued and the special dividend on maturing policies extended and increased.

EXTRACTS FROM DIRECTORS' REPORT

New policies paid for numbered 161,391 for a net amount of $654,451,143.27, an advance of $213,206,752.36, or more than forty-eight per cent., over the previous year. This marked increase and the fact that the average policy, for the first time, exceeded $4,000, afford impressive evidence of the ever-growing popularity of the Company.

After deducting amounts reassured, the total assurances in force amount to $2,401,237,036.94, an increase of $504,321,102.37. This advance is notable not merely for its magnitude, but because when allowance is made for terminations by death and maturity, it represents a remarkably high rate of continuance, and evidences great satisfaction on the part of our policyholders.

The amount paid to policyholders since organization, together with the amount at present held for their security or benefit, exceeds the total amount received from them in premiums by $139,290,474.03.

The rate of interest earned on the mean invested assets has risen to 7.02 per cent. This figure includes a certain amount from bonuses and stock privileges accruing on many of the Company's holdings; but if these were entirely eliminated the rate would still be 6.60 per cent.

A net profit of $13,077,284.62 was realized from the redemption or sale of securities.

The surplus earned during the year, based on the values entered in the accounts, amounted to $42,863,578.59, but from this sum substantial appropriations have as usual been made to further strengthen the position of the Company.

An additional $10,000,000.00 has been deducted from the market values of our securities as a provision against possible market fluctuations, raising the amount thus set aside for this purpose in the accounts to $30,000,000.00.

A further $1,000,000.00 has been written off the Company's buildings.

$931,000.00 has been appropriated to raise the annuity reserves to the Rutherford table of valuation, with interest at 3½ per cent. This exacting standard requires reserves $2,656,000.00 in excess of those of the Dominion Government standard.

$1,200,000.00 has been set aside as additional provision for claims arising from total disability, death claims as yet unreported, and possible claims under cancelled policies on which a surrender value or reinstatement might be applied for.

$22,606,265.67 has been paid or allotted as profits for the year to policyholders.

The special amount entered as a liability to provide for unforeseen contingencies has been maintained at $12,500,000.00.

After making all these deductions and allocations, $5,868,899.96 has been added to the undivided surplus, bringing the total over liabilities, contingency accounts and capital stock, to $60,307,762.44.

In accordance with our usual conservative practice the securities owned by the Company have again been valued at figures much below the market quotations current at the close of the year. This undervaluation represents an important element of strength to the Company additional to the specific provisions in the statements.

Your Directors are pleased to announce that the high scale of profits at present allotted to participating policyholders will be continued during the ensuing year, while the Special Dividend on maturing policies, introduced last year, has been extended to include policies maturing after having been in force five years or longer and the scale of benefit has been increased.

The business of the Company has always been conducted under the exacting provisions of the Canadian Insurance law and the rigid supervision of the Insurance Department of the Government of Canada. Ever since we entered the United States in 1895, the Company has been under similar supervision there and is now subject to the regulations of thirty-eight States of the Union which require periodical examination of the affairs of all companies licensed in their territory. In the discharge of their regular duties a committee of twenty-two examiners, representing the States of Michigan, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Ohio, Tennessee, Washington, Virginia, West Virginia, Florida and the District of Columbia recently completed an exhaustive examination into every department of the Company's affairs. The report of this committee makes gratifying reference to the liberal treatment accorded to our policyholders, and provides authoritative testimony to the Company's strength. Even adopting the low valuations placed by us on our securities, the committee still reported a surplus at the close of last year $1,333,921.71 in excess of the figure claimed by the Company.

The Mining Exchange

Toronto Star (Ind.): Such a state of affairs has been revealed in Ontario—and more by accident than by good government so far as this province is concerned—as clearly calls for the creation of a Royal Commission to investigate trading on margin as it has been carried on here and entire operations of many firms which have done a huge business using methods which bear the appearance of having been dubious in character.

Victoria Colonist (Cons.): The funded debt of Quebec has risen from $39,457,869 in 1917-1918 to $81,052,695 in 1927-1928. It is significant that, despite the receipts accruing from liquor control, the public debt has gone on increasing, just as it has in British Columbia. The Quebec Government has anticipated that liquor receipts would go a long way towards liquidating the public debt, but this has not worked out at all in practice. Wherever liquor control prevails the proceeds have not meant either reduction in public debt or reduction in taxation. It is full time that such a monopolistic trade were translated into terms of benefit in the way of reduced taxation for the people who made it possible.

The Trek of 3,000 Reindeer in North

Those eight fleet and sturdy steeds, Dasher, Dancer, Prancer, Vixen, Comet, Cupid, Donner and Blitzen, who furnished Santa's motive power on his annual world tour, had better look to their travel laurels. So thinks a New York Sun writer, who tells us how 3,000 Alaska reindeer are being moved on foot to northern Canada.

These sturdy beasts, providers of food, clothing, and transportation, who are almost the sine qua non of life in the Far North, have been bought by the Canadian Government from the Lomen brothers, owners of huge herds of reindeer in Alaska.

The movement, says The Sun, "is unique in the annals of the North. The reindeer are being moved for the purpose of forming the nucleus of reindeer herds in the Arctic and sub-Arctic regions of Canada. Heavy loads made on the wild life of that part of the Dominion by the introduction of high-powered firearms and modern hunting methods among the natives make the establishment of domestic reindeer herds necessary."

The reindeer finds its own food, digging through the snow in winter for the succulent lichens, or reindeer moss, we are reminded by W. E. Playfair in the Boston Evening Transcript. In further praise of the camel of the Arctic:

It provides meat, milk, clothing from its pelt, even transportation. It waxes fat, and multiplies in a wilderness of snow and ice. Its cousin, the wild caribou, once numbered in legions in Arctic America, has dwindled since the introduction of high-powered rifles, and taken to safer haunts in the interior. Without the reindeer the Eskimos live precariously by fishing and trapping fox, tightening their belts often when the luck is poor.

It was this situation that led the United States in 1892 to introduce the first reindeer into Alaska. On the Siberian side of the Bering Straits the natives were living in milk and honey. They had reindeer herds. On the Alaska side the natives were in want. They had none. Between the years 1892 and 1902, 1,280 reindeer were imported from Siberia, and from that nucleus there has been developed an industry now valued at more than $20,000,000.

By 1922 the herd had increased to 200,000; by 1929, to 750,000. In the meantime 200,000 had been slaughtered for meat. Of the total, more than two-thirds are owned by natives, in accordance with the policy of the Government. Cold-storage facilities have been developed; reindeer steak may be purchased at times on the Boston market; Alaska reindeer pemmican is on sale at our sporting-goods shops.

When the Canadian Government turned its attention to reindeer, it found ready at hand two men eminently fitted to cope with the problem. They are A. E. Forslid, biologist and biologist of the Northwest Territories and Yukon branch of the Department of the Interior, and his brother, Robert T. Forslid. They had lived many years north of the Arctic Circle, and could speak the Eskimo dialects. Together they made the preliminary studies of the field, in Alaska, the Mackenzie Delta, and in the vicinity of Great Bear Lake. They have divided responsibility for the actual transfer of the herd. A. E. Forslid made an airplane reconnaissance of the route of the trek, in addition to the journey previously taken, aided in the selection of the animals at the fall round-up of the Buckland Valley, Alaska, herd, and is accompanying the drive to the point where summer quarters are to be selected.

As the herd is to be the basis of Canada's reindeer population of the future, the largest and most vigorous animals were selected when the Lomen deer were rounded up at Elephant Point. Reindeer vary considerably in size because of climatic and other conditions. Those of the Seaward peninsula dress about 150 pounds on the average. Farther north at Point Barrow the average weight of a dressed carcass is 100 pounds; while a herd 200 miles east of Point Barrow showed an average of only seventy-five pounds. Crossing with the wild caribou results in a larger and superior animal, but there is a tendency on the part of the reindeer to run away and join herds of their undomesticated relatives.

The Northland is topsy-turvy. Land, it would seem from this account. For example, the winter is considered the best time for travel. Why? We soon learn:

Then the tundra is frozen hard and snow-covered, permitting sled travel. In summer pack-dogs or deer must replace the sled, frequent marshes make going hard, and multitudes of flies make life a burden. To man the Arctic is a desert of snow in winter, but the reindeer knows better. His sharp hoofs uncover the reindeer moss.

The route finally chosen follows the Nontak River valley to the Arctic watershed, and down the Colville River to the Arctic. Then it skirts the coast-line to the Mackenzie River, Colville asin in time for the fawning season. All next summer the deer will graze in the basin, and at the freeze-up next fall will resume the journey. The trek from Colville basin to the Mackenzie, and over fifty miles of ice to the delta range, will be the program for next winter. Reports as to the progress of the drive will be provided by airplane patrol.

In their report to the Government in 1923 the Forslid brothers said that on the basis of forty acres per head there is pasture for 250,000 reindeer in the coastal area from the Alaskan-Yukon boundary to the west side of Franklin Bay. Speaking of the 16,000 square miles of available pasture land which they estimated in this region, the report said:

"The coastal tundra is of somewhat different type from the Alaska tundra. It is not quite so rich in succulent grasses and sedges, but this deficiency is generously compensated for by the texture of the turf which is rather hard and firm, and not so susceptible to damage by trampling of herds. The hinterland, near the edge of the forest, on which the reindeer depend for winter pasture, is exceptionally rich in reindeer moss."

Junior Finance

A youthful depositor of one of New York's large banks recently appeared at the teller's window with a slip to withdraw 25 cents, which he said was for car fare home. It was explained to him that no transactions were made in amounts of less than one dollar. However, he had not a cent in his pocket, and necessity again was the mother of invention.

Returning to the window in a few minutes he presented a slip to withdraw $1.25, which of course was given him. Thereupon, he immediately redeposited $1 of the withdrawal and proceeded on his way.

We can match this yarn from New York with one from Toronto. A twelve-year student at Upper Canada College received $50 from his father for Christmas, which he put in his bank account near the school. The sum was to last him until Easter but about two weeks after Christmas he found that he had only $2.13 left. He took this sum and went down to the corner of King and Yonge Street, entered the main Toronto office of the Royal Bank of Canada and asked to see the manager. He was ushered into the manager's office and announced that he wished to deposit his $2.13 at that branch. He explained that he wanted to get his bank account as far away as possible from the school. It was too easy to go over to the bank on the corner near the school.—Financial Post.

Mining's Contribution

The mining industry keeps on adding cylinders. Statistics show that the $100,000,000 increase in the country's trade with the United States was largely the result of increased mining activity, resulting in the export of greater quantities of copper, nickel, gold and silver during the past year.

It is cheering to look ahead and see the possibilities of adding still further to mineral production. Anyone even superficially acquainted with mining knows that there are big deposits of metals in the various provinces which are being exploited and which will, within the next year or two, begin to make their economic influence felt. When the Frood, the Flin Flon, the Sherritt Gordon and the other base metal properties add to the already large contribution made by the mines, Canada will begin to stand out as a country rich in mineral resources. The potential wealth concealed under the drift of the Precambrian intrigues the imagination, whilst great deposits already found and partially exploited contribute importantly to the country's foreign trade.

Canada's mineral harvest is one of the national assets which keep the country solvent.—Northern Miner.

A Common Cause

Men will not be content to live every man for himself, nor to die every man for himself. In work, in art, in study, in trade—in all life, indeed, the children of God, called by a Saviour's voice, will wish to live in the common cause. They will live the common wealth—this is the modern phrase. They will bear each others' burdens—this is the phrase of Paul. They will live in the life of love. And it will prove true as it was promised that all things are added to the community which thus seek the Kingdom of God and His Righteousness.—Edward Everett Hale.

RELIGION

"Peace River" Jim Tells of Eskimos

Interesting Information on Our Northern Words Appeared in a Recent Number of the "Northern Miner"

A visit from "Peace River" Jim Cornwall, famous trader, explorer, statesman and apostle of the last great north is an event. He is a wonderful person. There is no other way to describe this big, powerful, keen-minded traveller who survived 30 years of northern life and emerged with a vast fund of knowledge of that great land and a thorough appreciation of its problems.

Jim Cornwall knows the Indians and the Eskimos as few men have come to know them. He knows, too, the traders, the trappers, the missionaries and the police, but the tales he tells of the aborigines, their characteristics and peculiarities provide startling evidence of the penetrating quality of his mind and the closeness of his observation.

This authority confirms the previously-held opinion that the Eskimos would perish, and quickly, if brought into close contact with white civilization. He says they lack resistance to disease, the result of a life of continual hardship from the cradle to the grave. What to a white man would be a simple cold often means death to the native. On the northern coast when the rare ship touches the Eskimos sometimes catch what in their language they call "ship's disease," but which is nothing more than influenza, often fatal to them.

The religion of these aborigines is largely superstition. They have "medicine men" in whose powers they believe. When the MacAlpine party was waiting at Cambridge Bay for the three relief airplanes which the wireless had advised would arrive on a certain day, one of the party suggested to McKinnon the Hudson's Bay factor at the post, that the Eskimo "medicine man" who, with his tribe, was there, be tipped off in advance, so that he could claim credit for bringing the planes. He said that there would be no standing that individual as long as he lived. The Eskimos would believe him, and his fame would travel all over the Arctic. He would never do another tap of work as long as he lived.

Cornwall says that when travelling with the Eskimos it is necessary to establish a complete ascendancy over them. They cannot understand anything else. Food supply has to be carefully watched and in charge of the white man, as the natives would otherwise eat the whole lot, letting tomorrow look after itself. Likewise the white man must eat the same food and the same quantity of food at the same time and place as the Eskimos of his party, or he will get into trouble.

The natives of the Barren Lands and Arctic Coast region do not read or write, nor can they count, this authority states. They have sign writing of a sort and they have a sign language which Cornwall says is about as easily understood as that of a mute. Where the missionaries have touched them, the natives have acquired a slight veneer of Christianity. You can hear the women humming hymn tunes while carefully wearing their own private pagan charms.

An igloo cannot be made comfortable in the white man's sense. The big problem is to keep it heated just enough to prevent it from collapsing. That means it must be just about freezing. Life is a hard proposition, and yet the natives keep cheerful. Cornwall sums up their philosophy in their own words: "It might be worse." They laugh and joke and are merry under the worst circumstances, and they do not like gloom in anyone else.

The mentality of the Eskimo is not great; he is slow mentally and physically, but thorough in his work. He is mechanically minded, and can do wonders with the small resources of his bleak and barren land. Wood is one of his greatest lacks. Food is his constant pre-occupation, and he can eat enormous quantities of it.

Wives, says Cornwall, are absolute necessities to the Eskimos. They must have women to help them, particularly in the matter of maintaining a supply of skin clothing and to do other sewing, which is a never-ending task. The have social customs peculiar to their race, especially in the matter of wives, which may be plural and interchangeable. When there is trouble, resulting in murder sometimes, it can be traced to the women, as in more civilized climes.

Cornwall, who assisted in the MacAlpine search, states positively that the Eskimos heard "Punch" Dickens in his heroic flight down the Coppermine. He says if Dickens had continued on for another score or so miles he would have flown right over him. It would have made a big difference in the rescue work, saving many weeks and heavy anxiety and expense. Dickens was flying above cloud, and the natives heard him turn in a wide circle and fly back to the Mackenzie River.

The Mackenzie River and its watershed is the stamping ground of Jim Cornwall, who has travelled it since the days of the Yukon rush. He says the country is passing through a transition phase and is beset with problems, the greatest of which is the salvation of the Indian population, which is threatened with extinction. The Indian is a tough man, Cornwall says, tough in the sense that he is hard to kill. But he is up against difficult conditions at this time.

"Do you believe in woman's rights?" "Er—y boxing teacher tells me the left is much more effective."

Many Do Not Realize Manitoba is Third in Provincial Power Production

If Mr. Thomas Had Said This to Us

There was at least one very interesting suggestion made during the Empire Free Trade Debate in the British House of Commons. It came from Mr. Wise, the Labor M.P., and Members of all parties were interested in his suggestion to Mr. Thomas. Mr. Wise said:—

"This country is still, and is likely to be for some time, by far the best market in the world for the agricultural produce and the raw material of the Dominions and the great producing agricultural countries."

"A third of their wheat, three-quarters of their meat, most of their butter and a great deal of their other produce must be sold in this market. Can we use that in any way in order to stimulate our export trade with those countries, as compared with the export trade of our competitors? We have heard a great deal from the Lord Privy Seal and others about developing our export trade."

"A few months ago the Lord Privy Seal went, as he said, like a commercial traveller with a packet, or a bag, or, as I understand, a shipful of samples to Canada, in order to see what he could sell. Apparently, he was not very successful. He suffered the fate of many commercial travellers, who go into a shop, but find that they are not very welcome. Suppose that instead of going with a bag full of samples, he had gone with a pocket full of orders."

"Suppose that he had been able to say to the Canadian wheat pool, the Canadian Government, 'I want to buy wheat. I want to buy—shall we say—2,000,000 tons of wheat for each of the next five years. I am prepared to place a definite order. You will know precisely where you are during that period. You can have a steady price, or we can work out the basis of price to suit your convenience and ours. In any case, whatever may happen, you will be under no danger of your great markets being spoiled by German or by American or any other dumping, or by our custom being transferred elsewhere.'"

"Suppose that he had said: 'I want to do the same for your cheese; and we would like to do the same with regard to other produce.' He might also have said: 'As a matter of fact, we already buy from you three or four times as much as you buy from us. Would it not be a reasonable business arrangement that some of those vast orders that you now place in the United States should be switched across the Atlantic to us?'"

"Orders for their State railways, for their municipalities, for their State electric power stations, and orders, so far as the farmers are concerned, for the supply of the consumable goods that are needed in their co-operative stores throughout the West—the co-operative movement is growing in the West—orders for the variety of goods which Canada must buy from abroad and which now she is buying from the United States and elsewhere."

"He might have gone to Australia with the same sort of offer. Australia wants to sell butter, dried fruits, wool, and a variety of other things. All the time that her market is here, her best market is here, and all the time she is buying from America, from Japan, and from other countries, an increasing, a rapidly increasing, quantity of manufactured goods that we used to supply and that we would like to supply."

"I think that is a business proposition, the sort of proposition which the Canadians would listen to; and it has the advantage that there is no question of taxing the food of the people in this country, or of increasing the price of raw materials. The offer we make to them, and it is a perfectly good business offer, is that we should give them a stable market, a secure market, and a guaranteed market, and I think if the offer were made the Dominions would very quickly respond. And even if they did not respond, I am quite sure there are other countries that would."

"In a small way this method has been already tried by Lord D'Abernon in South America. As a matter of fact, I am informed, and I think the information is right, that in the last few months Australia herself has been making this sort of proposal in regard to the export of wool, I think, to Japan; and Japan herself has made a deal on those lines in respect of cotton and cotton goods with some of our East African Protectorates. It has never been tried on a large scale, but I submit that with the increasing centralization of the sale of agricultural goods this is a businesslike way of dealing with the problem."

WHY ENVY THE CAT ?

The cat, any cat, once upon a time was better equipped in some respects than human beings. The cat could see in the dark, while man was dependent on torches, fires, candles, lamps, or lanterns.

In those days sundown meant little to the cat, insofar as its travels were concerned. The cat was quite some animal. After sundown man, however, was handicapped and had to use contrivances that were difficult to handle and required no end of attention.

Now, touch a button and a million slaves are at your command to provide you with a flood of light. In this day and age you don't need eyes that can see in the dark.

"SALADA" TEA

'Fresh from the gardens'

BEGIN HERE TODAY:

Peter DeWolfe visits the Benhams in England, being attracted by a description of Brena Selcoos, an American girl, given him by Eversby Benham. Muriel, Eversby's sister, grows very fond of Peter, and warns him that if Brena takes him in he will vanish like the others. He meets Brena in London and tells her he loves her. She tells him that she was married seven years ago and that her husband has vanished.

Brena Selcoos was born on American soil. Her mother, whose hair was red-gold, was the daughter of the exiles Irish patriot, Thomas Vaughn; her father was Demetrius, a gigantic Greek professor. Brena's mother died in Dallas and her father lost his life, not a great while after, in a railroad accident. The one who brought the news of her father's death told her that he had left this message for her: "That she must not be afraid; something would protect her from danger." Then Brena, left with five hundred dollars which she obtained from her father's insurance policy, went to live with Mrs. Sam Wilkie.

Mrs. Wilkie was an intensely practical woman who often repeated the phrase, "If one looks after pennies, the dollars will take care of themselves."

She would not have been of any particular importance in the life of Brena Selcoos had it not been for two facts. One of them was that, lacking other distinction, she could have that of giving refuge to so much and so much for room and board per week to the most alluring young creature that, for the moment, was known to the male eyes of Dallas as an unsolved riddle.

The other fact was that she was the half-sister of the mother of Jim Hennepin of Virginia.

Jim Hennepin liked to attach to his name the words "of Virginia." Those who knew his escapades in Danville, felt relief when his father, who had himself dissipated a small fortune in speculations, said to Jim, "You can go down to your mother's sister in Texas. She will put you up and I have a job all ready for you with a cotton buying and commission house in Dallas. The only genius you have is for getting into trouble; your only talent is for figures. As time goes on the accountant is playing an ever-growing part in American business, just as the drunkard is playing a lesser part. Do you get my meaning, son?"

This accounted for the presence of Jim Hennepin in Texas. He had been there two years. Compton Parmalee & Co. had found nothing to criticize in his bookkeeping. In fact, it had qualities of genius which sometimes make bookkeeping not only a cold record, but a vitalized inspiration of business. Hennepin drank with moderation and was a popular young man in Dallas. He was tall and graceful, like an oarsman in an English college eight. He was more like the bad son of an earl than a bookkeeper. He was earning forty-three dollars a week and spending fifty-nine when he was over thirty.

The first time he saw Brena Selcoos was when he had come back from a vacation of several weeks at a ranch. His vacations had become a mystery to other young men who were employed; all that appeared necessary was for Jim to go to Compton Parmalee and tell him when he would be back. It was ascribed to his magic quality of persuasion.

Brena was sitting at an early breakfast when Jim came in. He suggested Apollo; he suggested vaguely the sudden appearance of the fairy prince.

"Well," said he at last. "It's spring-time."

He spoke as if he had been a messenger from Destiny, as if Spring were Brena's time and that time had come.

It was like a sentence of a court. He looked down into the dish of cereal on the table beneath her eyes. "Nothing but milk," said he. "No, by heaven, you shan't have milk on your rice! It's an outrage. You are the queen and I am the captain of the palace guards. And I'm off in a borrowed motor car to get you the richest, thickest pint of cream in the city, and the speed laws can't stop me."

He came back with cream. His aunt said, "Jim, you are crazy." But he was not crazy. He had an instinct for creating romance.

He became Brena's knight. He took her everywhere and his aunt scowled. "She is only seventeen," Mrs. Wilkie said.

"She looks twenty-five," Jim answered.

"But it leads nowhere," said the aunt. "Nowhere except to scandal." "Scandal?" replied Hennepin yawning. "Nonsense! Also piffle! A man takes a beautiful girl around for the same reason that you'd wear a diamond tiara if you had one, especially if it had been given you by some broker. It's just a symbol of one's ability to have the right things. It's ego."

"Is that all, Jim?" "Yes," he said, lying glibly. "Because you haven't the money to be married, Jim," she said.

She liked to live near immortality; it gave her vicarious pleasure.

Hennepin was whimsical enough to repeat to Brena, word for word, this conversation.

"It never occurred to her that I might love you," he said.

Brena said nothing.

"Don't you love me a little?" he asked.

"I don't know, Jim—really. I don't know. I don't know what love is."

"Well, you're fond of me?"

"Yes, I am, Jim. I'm fond of you."

He looked around at the yellow horizon in the West and shivered.

"We aren't by ourselves," he exclaimed with irritation. "Not here in Dallas. We ought to take a trip."

"A trip!" said Brena. "How could we take a trip?"

"You mean because of money? Well, I'm going to fix that." He smiled craftily. "I've a strange hold on some money, Brena. I suppose that when I turn up with some real money people will say that I dipped into the till or had a rich uncle die. It will be such a novelty to have a roll. But they'll be wrong. I'll get it my own way. And it's coming."

"Oh, Jim!" "Money or no money, I want you," he said. "Some day I'll make you say you love me."

As the weeks went on Brena found herself asking where the end would be of day after day showing wives of Dallas business men embroidered linens at the store where she worked; of walking home, sometimes with men staring at her.

It was not clear that Jim was not the one man of all, the prince who stepped out of nothing and held out his hands to her in some kind of miraculous tableau. No one reminded her that she was only seventeen.

One day Jim came home at the noon hour and beckoned to Brena mysteriously.

"Look here!" said Jim, with a kind of ferocity in his voice and eyes. "I'm going away. Compton Parmalee won't be in Dallas, and I've an errand to do."

"You're so excited, Jim."

"Yes, I know. But the time has come. I want to know if you love me."

"I think I do, Jim."

"You're willing to take a trip? Brave enough to go to St. Louis alone? To meet me?"

"You mean you want to marry me, Jim?"

"Why yes, if it turns out all right."

"I'll go!"

"Well, then—listen. Here's a hotel. The name is written on that card. Be there on Friday, the twelfth of the month. I'll be there at four o'clock. You better come the day before. Get a room and don't be frightened. Here, take this money. It's plenty, eh? Don't let any one see it."

She put her hand in his.

"Why are you going away, Jim?"

If Brena had known the world better, she would have seen something of the brutality of Jim Hennepin at that moment.

"Tell me, Jim."

"I've had a call," he said craftily. "If I can tell you when I come for you in St. Louis you'll say that it is all the strangest. Well, I've had a call."

Brena went to St. Louis. She had not marked the date on her little calendar on the bureau; it was not necessary because she was not ready to forget, and besides some one might ask her a question. Some one might have asked why she went. And she could not have told.

Brena Selcoos returned from St. Louis on the sixteenth day of the month.

"Well!" said Mrs. Wilkie expressing astonishment, inquiry and disapproval all at once.

"Yes, I came back," Brena replied.

"I thought I was going to lose all my nice young people," Mrs. Wilkie said, turning on the disc record of her false good nature. "Jim went with hardly a thank you. There's been no end of mail for him. I didn't know where he'd gone; he made such a mystery about it, so I sent the letters to his office. They probably know about him—more than I do. He didn't tell you where he went?"

"No," said Brena, "he didn't tell me."

"And you went off yourself without much explanation," Mrs. Wilkie complained, "and without knowing whether or not you was coming back."

She looked over the girl from head to foot.

"Well, I'm here."

Brena went up to her room where upon the bedspread were the dust marks made by her suit case when she had thrown it up to pack six days before.

She put it back on those marks as if a round of life had been completed;

wearily she opened it and the first object she took out was a piece of soap, done up neatly in a wrapper with violets in a wreath around the legend, "Made expressly for this Hotel." Then she got up, crossed the room to the picture of the Acropolis—the last possession of Demetrius Selcoos.

"He said not to be afraid," she told herself. "He said something would come if I were in danger."

Downstairs at about the same moment Mrs. Wilkie was writing in her diary. At one time in her life she had acquired the fancy that the memoirs of women often were important—the original sources of historical facts and the mirror of society of a period.

"Went shopping. Saw Bertha. Said her husband's teeth kept her awake getting hot water bottle."

She poised her fountain pen and wrote:

"Brena Selcoos returned today from St. Louis. Said she had errand there. There is a frightened look in her eyes."

A drop of ink fell and splattered out. She blotted it and left the outline of a little black fiend which danced upon the page.

Needless Pain!

The man who wouldn't drive his motorcar half a mile when it's out of order, will often drive his brain all day with a head that's throbbing.

Such punishment isn't very good for one's nerves! It's unwise, and it's unnecessary. For a tablet or two of Aspirin will relieve a headache every time. So, remember this accepted antidote for pain, and spare yourself a lot of needless suffering. Read the proven directions and you'll discover many valuable uses for these tablets. For headaches; to check colds. To ease a sore throat and reduce the infection. For relieving neuralgia, neuritis, rheumatic pain.

People used to wonder if Aspirin might be harmful. The doctors answered that question years ago.

It is not. Some folks still wonder if it really does relieve pain. That's settled! For millions of men and women have found it does. To cure the cause of any pain you must consult your doctor; but you may always turn to Aspirin for immediate relief.

Showing How an Old Proverb May Point the Way to Happiness o-day

By A. G. GREENWOOD

"Midnight again," said Mrs. Boulton, looking up at Ivy from the sock she was darning. She longed to put her foot down but her niece was twenty-two and earned $25 a week. "We are simply frantically busy," was Ivy's laconic answer.

"Don't tell me you've been in the office till this hour," retorted her aunt. "I—"

The sound of footsteps made her break off.

"Come in, David," she said, at a tap on the door.

Her "ground-floor back," David Christie, a very tall, very lean, hollow-cheeked young man, was clerk to Mr. Marshall, the High Street estate agent.

"I heard voices," he said, coming in. "I was wondering where those grey socks—"

He broke off and smiled, suddenly seeming very young.

"You really are the very kindest person!" he ejaculated. "But—"

"Go along with your 'buts'!" broke in Mrs. Boulton. "Why, I like something to darn."

"I'll leave you two to flirt in peace," said Ivy, stifling a yawn. "I'm for bed. Good-night, Mr. Christie!"

"Good-night! I hardly ever see you these days."

"We are so terrifically busy at the office," said Ivy, smiling.

Mrs. Boulton worked on till Ivy's light footfalls died away, then said in low tones:

"I don't believe in her being kept at the office till the dead o' night. She's keeping something back from me. If her mother had been alive, she would never have allowed it."

"I'm sure," said David, "her mother would have known your niece too well to worry about her."

Yet Mrs. Boulton knew that David was worried. She knew he was hurt. And David knew nothing of Ivy's two new dance-frocks, the pearl necklace—artificial, but excellent of its kind—the new shoes, gloves, hats, the manicuring, the permanent wave; all the extravagances that Ivy had lately indulged in.

Even $25 a week has its limitations.

"She's got no father and no brothers," said Mrs. Boulton. "Mr. Christie, could you find out for me who keeps her out night after night so late?"

"Sp' on her?" he asked. "I couldn't. What right have I? None—none whatever."

"Then I'll do it myself!" exclaimed Mrs. Boulton. "I'll not rest till I've found out what's going on."

So next evening Mrs. Boulton waited in Mincing Lane by the door of the towering building in which Mr. Livingston, Ivy's employer, had his office. A great tide of girls and young men poured out. No Ivy. It began to rain, and Mrs. Boulton drew back into a shadowed doorway where a man stood.

"David!" she ejaculated, peering up. "I've come to—to look after you," he said nervously.

Gradually the street emptied. At length a huge, glittering car swerved to the kerb and stopped. In it sat a good-looking, middle-aged man, his fur coat open, his white shirt-front gleaming.

Almost simultaneously from the door of the block of offices came Ivy, light-foot, expectant, very lovely.

"A new cloak!" muttered lynx-eyed Mrs. Boulton.

Into the car stepped Ivy. On it shot.

"I'll get to the bottom of this," muttered Mrs. Boulton. "Somehow I'll put a stop to it!"

David Christie could not help overhearing the argument that night. Ivy at first had been defiant. The middle-aged man was Mr. Livingston, her employer.

"Don't worry, auntie, everything's all right," she said.

On David's return the following evening he found a car—easily identified as Mr. Livingston's—parked under the lamp-post by the Boulton's house.

He let himself in and went to his bed-room. Presently he heard Ivy singing in her room up-stairs. He peered out his door ajar, as she came down. Radiant she looked in a pale green, shimmering evening dress.

From his window he watched her step into the car and be carried away. A profound silence fell. He longed to question Mrs. Boulton. But he had no pretext. He could not go down and say: "I've loved her ever since I came here to lodge four years ago. I've worked like a galley-slave with one end in view—to be in a position one day to beg her to marry me."

"Mr. Christie!" called Mrs. Boulton. He hurried down.

"Ivy," said Mrs. Boulton, in breathless excitement. "Is engaged! Yes, to Mr. Livingston."

His universe seemed to go to pieces.

"You could have knocked me down with a feather," he heard remote Mrs. Boulton declaiming. "But I don't like it. She's only a child, and look at the age of him! It's him being rich and she so pretty. It can't last. Th. David, I wish it had been you! But marriage isn't in your line, I suppose?"

"That's it," he said, "marriage isn't in my line."

All the following, miserable week,

while radiant Ivy—a single-stone, ruby ring flashing on her left hand—was whirled nightly away in Mr. Livingston's car, David brooded. He should have made old Marshall recognize his work before now—then he should have proposed to Ivy, and this might never have happened.

On Saturday morning, feeling reckless, telling himself he had nothing to lose, he spoke to Mr. Marshall.

"I'll think things over," he said. "I'll tell you what. Drop in about seven and have a bit of supper with me and the wife, and we'll have a chat."

David went. He met Mrs. Marshall. He sat between the two of them later on in the drawing-room. They were childless. Mr. Marshall was "getting on in years." David had worked wonderfully. A partnership!

He walked home under the stars, striving to capture a fraction of the elation which might have been his a short week ago. Too late. A car passed him and stopped at the Boulton's house. Ivy stepped out of it. His pace slackened. She disappeared. The car sped on.

Silently he let himself in, but the door of the front-room stood wide. As he hung up his coat and hat he heard Ivy say:

"It's all over, auntie!"

She was laughing at her aunt's stifled "Ivy!" when a movement of David's made her glance out into the passage.

"Hallo!" she ejaculated evidently displeased. "Unusual hours for Mr. Christie!"

"Most," he said, and felt mysteriously impelled to add—as though she cared a whit. "I've had an unusual evening. I don't suppose I'll ever again be offered a partnership."

"How—how gorgeous!" cried Ivy, clapping her hands. "At Marshall's? Has—"

But Mrs. Boulton broke in:

"What—what's that you're telling me? About your engagement. Broken off? Who broke it off?"

"Both of us did," said Ivy, twirling the ring on her finger before reluctantly drawing it off. "But I'll tell you all about it some other time."

She looked so white, so strung up, that though her news delighted him, he said in sudden anger:

"Has—has he treated you badly? If so, and if you'll let me, I will—"

"It's quite all right, thanks," she said emphatically, and then stared at David before adding: "I—I don't believe you're sorry."

He was taken aback.

"Well, I—" he began.

"Tell me why you're glad," she commanded.

"I think you know," he answered. Ivy drew a deep breath, then exclaimed:

"Pr'aps this is another time, then! Listen, auntie. For years Mr. Livingston's been crazy over some girl—only she's a bit more than a girl now. She never would make up her mind. One evening I saw them together. Next day, after I'd promised not to whisper one word to anybody, he told me all about it. He asked me if I'd help him. He thought a shock might do her good."

Ivy, laughing, sat down.

"It did, too. I've been the shock-administered in daily doses. You see, he got a mutual friend to tell her all about how he was being vamped by a designing little typist!"

"D'you mean it was—all sham?" asked the scandalized Mrs. Boulton.

"I do!" said Ivy. "A fake! And it's worked miracles. She saw us dining and dancing and at theatres and restaurants. She saw this."

Ivy tossed the ring up and caught it.

"Wicked little stone!" she said, laughing. "Last night she gave way. They're to be married by special licence next week."

"But why had I to be told lies?" finally demanded Mrs. Boulton.

"Because," said Ivy, "of—Mr. Christie."

"Me? How? Why?" demanded astonished David.

"A partner!" whispered Ivy, her eyes fixed on his. "Just fancy! A partner!"

"I wish you'd be one," he exclaimed, the words escaping him quite involuntarily. "I wish you'd be mine!"

Ivy laughed. Agast he stared at her.

"Ivy!" remonstrated angry Mrs. Boulton, starting up.

"It's all right, auntie," Ivy exclaimed.

ADAMSON'S ADVENTURES—By O. Jacobsson

ed. "Now at last I can be perfectly frank. When you tackled me last week I almost let you into the secret. Only sometimes one can kill two birds with one stone, and I was thinking of—Mr. Christie."

"Me?" ejaculated David once more.

"You," she said, nodding. "I've thought about you quite often, I'd better tell you. I thought: 'Here we are after four years—a mere couple of stick-in-the-muds. I thought hearing I was engaged to somebody else might stir you up. I thought my little ring might make two people jealous—with its one stone!'"

"How—how could you possibly guess about me?" asked David in amazement.

"A girl can't help knowing," said she. "Auntie, three can be such a crowd! D'you think—Yes? Good-night then, darling, if you simply must go. But do give David just one wee kiss. He's pining for it."

Transfigured, Mrs. Boulton had hardly reached the door before David went to Ivy and whispered, as he put his arms round her:

"Ivy, I'm still pining."

"Then, darling," said she, "I'll tell you when to stop."—Answers.

George said he loved me the minute he saw me.

"How's that?"

Protection and Revenue

London Daily Mail (Ind. Cons.). Simple people sometimes ask how protective duties can bring in revenue, if the duties protect. They do not seem to be aware that the United States collects no less than $120,000,000 a year in customs duties which are mainly protective; or that our safeguarding duties, which do to some extent safeguard, all without exception bring in revenue.

It is necessary to realize that the

The Car Mind

An English View of a Live Topic

The highway authorities of all kinds, from policemen on point duty to the Home Secretary, are becoming seriously concerned about the problem of the motor car. There is every reason for their anxiety: for it seems possible that if any more cars are put on the road none of them will be able to move—unless the skill of the police may extricate the ambulance vans that carry away the dead and the dying. Street accidents are rapidly increasing, and it may soon be as adventurous to take a walk as to go tiger shooting. But the real problem of the car is the effect of its excessive use on the survivors.

The new petrol-driven transport vehicle has not yet found its balanced place in the social system. It is being used in the same reckless, unbalanced way that charwomen used gin in the 18th century, and as over-excited neurotics use cocaine to-day. The motor car is the most fashionable modern drug for restless nerves. Instead of playing early-Victorian croquet on our lawn we now motor a score of miles to play golf in the next county. Instead of strolling in the park on Sunday afternoons we go down to the South Coast for lunch. All these new possibilities may have many advantages. But the point to note is that the price that we must pay for them is a very great consumption of time in travelling to find them. Still worse, a large number of persons are making the process of travelling an end in itself. The mere sensation of movement seems to satisfy many owners of cars. Lunch at a Brighton hotel is not in itself so much better than any other lunch as to recompense travelling 12 miles from London and back to procure it.

Instead of increasing the possibilities of life by extending its range it is probable that the motor car has done the exact opposite. By rushing over a hundred miles of road in a car, instead of more quietly covering ten on foot, one does not see ten times as much. On the contrary one probably sees one tenth. It is only the cruder minds that measure the worth of the world by the number of mile-posts, as it is only the sadder souls that measure the use of wine by the quart. One of the most serious diseases of the "car mind" is that it tends to measure the success of a day by its mileage.

It is necessary to realize that the

motor car is precisely on the same footing as electricity and gas, chloroform, drugs and all the other powerful forces which science has placed in our hands. The roads are maintained at public expense that they can be used for rational purposes. You may use your own car as you please, but it must never endanger the reasonable safety of every other user of the road, from excessive speed, unnecessary noise or dust. In concrete practice these legal principles would, roughly, forbid more than 20 miles an hour or any footing after normal bedtime.

But the most important duty the motorist has to consider is that which he owes to himself. If the motor is to develop on its present lines as the chief hobby of mankind then life will cease to be an affair of the intellect, though it may end by having solved the problem of perpetual motion. Man will always be moving, and rarely doing anything except oiling his wheels and cranks. It has not come to that yet; man still gets out of their cars to play on golf links, and there is still the happy possibility that they may look at the surrounding countryside while a tire is being repaired. But these imperfections of machinery and incalculable physical exercise will not long resist the drug movement; and the ideal man of the engineering future will have a non-stop life on the road. The wit who recently discovered that the Englishman's home is his garage aimed his shaft at too stationary a target. The active minds of to-day now live in each other's dust. This is a dangerous reversal of social traditions. A man of dignity needs a permanent address. If motoring is not to become a national debauchery, in which speed and distance will take the place of the older and more cultured pursuits of wine, women, and song, then the owner of a car must deliberately restrain himself and sternly refuse to use his own time and the public road in traveling without rational excuse.

In the ideal world the policeman on point duty will all be scientists and philosophers of the highest academic distinction. When motorists have become ladies and gentlemen, and not road-hogs, there will, of course, be little necessity for regulating the traffic in the ordinary sense. So when the philosopher on point duty holds up his arresting arm it will be in order that he may ask a profound question: "Have you, sir or madam, any sufficient reason for travelling in your car? If not, my orders are to arrest you as a public nuisance."

Of course there are scores and hundreds of good and sufficient answers

Major James E. Hahn, M.C., D.S.O. Soldier - Industrialist - author, whose book, "The Intelligence Service Within the Canadian Corps," will be published shortly by Macmillan's. It deals in an interesting fashion with the activities of this important department of the C.E.F. in which so many thrilling romances of war were enacted. Major Hahn is now an international figure in the radio industry, being President of De Forest Crosley, Limited, one of the largest radio manufacturers in the British Empire.

that will allow the traveler to pass on his way. It will even be enough to say that the ride is for the simplest relaxation as one smokes a pipe or plays patience without any subsequent intention whatsoever. But the motorist will severely tell himself that this form of relaxation—unlike the pipe or the patience—is a more definite infringement of the rights and pleasures and conveniences of his neighbor, and, therefore, must not be indulged in except with the strictest restraint. There are many better reasons which the motor traveler will be able to give for his excursion. It is clear that if motoring is to become a civilizing factor, and not a universal nuisance, it must be linked up with some form of mental activity in which its great powers of transport will be an advantage. For example, the student of geology might make his journeys into most engaging scientific adventures. There is a sound case for the car owner who uses his car, not as a point to point race at top speed, but rather in a sober survey of the countryside; as, for example, a botanist, an ornithologist, an artist. To prefer a student of some science or art to a follower of foxhounds or a road-hog is not highbrow affectation. It is merely the dislike of being bored.

On the simple ground of health, excessive motoring is obviously an anti-social pastime. It seems an appalling pity if we rescue civilized people from slums and insanitary workshops and factories only to allow them, without protest, to waste their bodily tissues by reclining on motor cushions. The self-starter has taken away the only hope that a car owner will get any exercise out of his own new toy.

By recent legislation in both Italy and Spain motorists are being taught the elementary rules of gentlemanly behavior by the penalty of long years of imprisonment—up to 20—for an accident which would not have happened if they had driven more reasonably. It is said that motorists in Madrid now raise their hats to pedestrians with an "After you, sir." When the motorist also murmurs "After you" to the laws of a well-balanced intellect, then the car will have begun to be the servant of civilization instead of a danger as terrible as the Black Death. It is not the dead and maimed victims of the motor traffic that matter most; the chief tragedies of the Transport Age are the empty-headed creatures who are spending such a great proportion of their lives in rushing about—doing nothing.—London Fortnightly Review.

For Safety's Sake

"Sandy, my son," said the fond father, "you're getting married to-morrow, so I've bocht ye a present ye'll find verra usefu'."

"Thank ye father," murmured Sandy.

But when the old man produced a mouse-trap and laid it on the table, Sandy almost fell backward with amazement.

"What over's that for?" he inquired.

"Weel," his father explained, "if there's one thing a wumman hates waur nor a mouse it's a mouse-trap. Jist ye set it last thing at night, pth your loose money oot o' your pouch under the spring, and it's shair to be there in the morning."

One of his customers had owed him a sum of money for quite a long time, and the grocer decided to call at the house and demand his dues.

"How about the money for the groceries, sir?" he asked. "It's been owing for six months now."

"Isn't that paid yet?" gasped the householder. "I sent my wife over with the money some time ago."

"Sorry, sir," returned the other, "she never came near me."

The householder thought for a moment.

"Well, my man, this isn't all my fault," he replied. "It's partly yours for having your shop next door to a ladies' hat shop."

"SALADA" TEA

'Fresh from the gardens'

BEGIN HERE TODAY:

Peter DeWolfe visits the Benhams in England, being attracted by a description of Brena Selcoss, an American girl, given him by Eversby Benham. Muriel, Eversby's sister, grows very fond of Peter, and warns him that if Brena takes him in he will vanish like the others. He meets Brena in London and tells her he loves her. She tells him that she was married seven years ago and that her husband has vanished.

Brena Selcoss was born on American soil. Her mother, whose hair was red-gold, was the daughter of the exiled Irish patriot, Thomas Vaughn; her father was Demetrius, a gigantic Greek professor. Brena's mother died in Dallas and her father lost his life, not a great while after, in a railroad accident. The one who brought the news of her father's death told her that he had left this message for her: "That she must not be afraid; something would protect her from danger." Then Brena, left with five hundred dollars which she obtained from her father's insurance policy, went to live with Mrs. Sam Wilkie.

Mrs. Wilkie was an intensely practical woman who often repeated the phrase, "If one looks after pennies, the dollars will take care of themselves."

She would not have been of any particular importance in the life of Brena Selcoss had it not been for two facts. One of them was that, lacking other distinction, she could have that of giving refuge at so much and so much for room and board per week to the most alluring young creature that, for the moment, was known to the male eyes of Dallas as an unsolved riddle.

The other fact was that she was the half-sister of the mother of Jim Hennepin of Virginia.

Jim Hennepin liked to attach to his name the words "of Virginia." Those who knew his escapades in Danville, felt relief when his father, who had himself dissipated a small fortune in speculations, said to Jim, "You can go down to your mother's sister in Texas. She will put you up and I have a job all ready for you with a cotton buying and commission house in Dallas. The only genius you have is for getting into trouble; your only talent is for figures. As time goes on the accountant is playing an ever-growing part in American business, just as the drunkard is playing a lesser part. Do you get my meaning, son?"

This accounted for the presence of Jim Hennepin in Texas. He had been there two years. Compton Parmalee & Co. had found nothing to criticize in his bookkeeping. In fact, it had qualities of genius which sometimes make bookkeeping not only a cold record, but a vitalized inspiration of business. Hennepin drank with moderation and was a popular young man in Dallas. He was tall and graceful, like an oarsman in an English college eight. He was more like the bad son of an earl than a bookkeeper. He was earning forty-three dollars a week and spending fifty-nine when he was over thirty.

The first time he saw Brena Selcoss was when he had come back from a vacation of several weeks at a ranch. His vacations had become a mystery to other young men who were employed; all that appeared necessary was for Jim to go to Compton Parmalee and tell him when he would be back. It was ascribed to his magic quality of persuasion.

Brena was sitting at an early breakfast when Jim came in. He suggested Apollo; he suggested vaguely the sudden appearance of the fairy prince.

"Well," said he at last. "It's spring-time."

He spoke as if he had been a messenger from Destiny, as if Spring were Brena's time and that time had come. It was like a sentence of a court. He looked down into the dish of cereal on the table beneath her eyes. "Nothing but milk," said he. "No, by heaven, you shan't have milk on your rice! It's an outrage. You are the queen and I am the captain of the palace guards. And I'm off in a borrowed motor car to get you the richest, thickest pint of cream in the city, and the speed laws can't stop me."

He came back with cream. His aunt said, "Jim, you are crazy." But he was not crazy. He had an instinct for creating romance.

He became Brena's knight. He took her everywhere and his aunt scowled. "She is only seventeen," Mrs. Wilkie said.

"She looks twenty-five," Jim answered.

"But it leads nowhere," said the aunt. "Nowhere except to scandal."

"Scandal?" replied Hennepin yawning. "Nonsense! Also piffel! A man takes a beautiful girl around for the same reason that you'd wear a diamond tiara if you had one, especially if it had been given you by some broker. It's just a symbol of one's ability to have the right things. It's ego."

"Is that all, Jim?"

"Yes," he said, lying glibly.

"Because you haven't the money to be married, Jim," she said.

She liked to live near immortality; it gave her vicarious pleasure.

Hennepin was whimsical enough to repeat to Brena, word for word, this conversation.

"It never occurred to her that I might love you," he said.

Brena said nothing.

"Don't you love me a little?" he asked.

"I don't know, Jim—really. I don't know. I don't know what love is."

"Well, you're fond of me?"

"Yes, I am, Jim. I'm fond of you."

He looked around at the yellow horizon in the West and shivered.

"We aren't by ourselves," he exclaimed with irritation. "Not here in Dallas. We ought to take a trip."

"A trip!" said Brena. "How could we take a trip?"

"You mean because of money? Well, I'm going to fix that." He smiled craftily. "I've a strange hold on some money, Brena. I suppose that when I turn up with some real money people will say that I dipped into the till or had a rich uncle die. It will be such a novelty to have a roll. But they'll be wrong. I'll get it my own way. And it's coming."

"Oh, Jim!"

"Money or no money, I want you," he said. "Some day I'll make you say you love me."

As the weeks went on Brena found herself asking where the end would be of day after day showing wives of Dallas business men embroidered linens at the store where she worked; of walking home, sometimes with men staring at her.

It was not clear that Jim was not the one man of all, the prince who stepped out of nothing and held out his hands to her in some kind of miraculous tableau. No one reminded her that she was only seventeen.

One day Jim came home at the noon hour and beckoned to Brena mysteriously.

"Look here!" said Jim, with a kind of ferocity in his voice and eyes. "I'm going away. Compton Parmalee won't be in Dallas, and I've an errand to do."

"You're so excited, Jim."

"Yes, I know. But the time has come. I want to know if you love me."

"I think I do, Jim."

"You're willing to take a trip? Brave enough to go to St. Louis alone? To meet me?"

"You mean you want to marry me, Jim?"

"Why yes, if it turns out all right."

"I'll go!"

"Well, then—listen. Here's a hotel. The name is written on that card. Be there on Friday, the twelfth of the month. I'll be there at four o'clock. You better come the day before. Get a room and don't be frightened. Here, take this money. It's plenty, eh? Don't let any one see it."

She put her hand in his.

"Why are you going away, Jim?"

If Brena had known the world better, she would have seen something of the brutality of Jim Hennepin at that moment.

"Tell me, Jim."

"I've had a call," he said craftily.

"If I can tell you when I come for you in St. Louis you'll say that it is all the strangest. Well, I've had a call."

Brena went to St. Louis. She had not marked the date on her little calendar on the bureau; it was not necessary because she was not ready to forget, and besides some one might ask her a question. Some one might have asked why she went. And she could not have told.

Brena Selcoss returned from St. Louis on the sixteenth day of the month.

"Well!" said Mrs. Wilkie expressing astonishment, inquiry and disapproval all at once.

"Yes, I came back," Brena replied.

"I thought I was going to lose all my nice young people," Mrs. Wilkie said, turning on the disc record of her false good nature. "Jim went with hardly a thank you. There's been no end of mail for him. I didn't know where he'd gone; he made such a mystery about it, so I sent the letters to his office. They probably know about him—more than I do. He didn't tell you where he went?"

"No," said Brena, "he didn't tell me."

"And you went off yourself without much explanation," Mrs. Wilkie complained, "and without knowing whether or not you was coming back."

She looked over the girl from head to foot.

"Well, I'm here."

Brena went up to her room where upon the bedspread were the dust marks made by her suit case when she had thrown it up to pack six days before.

She put it back on those marks as if a round of life had been completed.

wearily she opened it and the first object she took out was a piece of soap, done up neatly in a wrapper with violets in a wreath around the legend, "Made expressly for this Hotel." Then she got up, crossed the room to the picture of the Acropolis—the last possession of Demetrius Selcoss.

"He said not to be afraid," she told herself. "He said something would come if I were in danger."

Downstairs at about the same moment Mrs. Wilkie was writing in her diary. At one time in her life she had acquired the fancy that the memoirs of women often were important—the original sources of historical facts and the mirror of society of a period.

"Went shopping. Saw Bertha. Said her husband's teeth kept her awake getting hot water bottle."

She poised her fountain pen and wrote:

"Brena Selcoss returned today from St. Louis. Said she had errand there. There is a frightened look in her eyes."

A drop of ink fell and splattered out. She blotted it and left the outline of a little black fiend which danced upon the page.

People used to wonder if Aspirin might be harmful. The doctors answered that question years ago.

It is not. Some folks still wonder if it really does relieve pain. That's settled! For millions of men and women have found it does. To cure the cause of any pain you must consult your doctor; but you may always turn to Aspirin for immediate relief.

Showing How an Old Proverb May Point the Way to Happiness o-day

By A. G. GREENWOOD

"Midnight again," said Mrs. Boulton, looking up at Ivy from the sock she was darned. She longed to put her foot down but her niece was twenty-two and earned $25 a week. "We are simply frantically busy," was Ivy's laconic answer.

"Don't tell me you've been in the office till this hour," retorted her aunt. "I—"

Her "ground-floor back," David Christie, a very tall, very lean, hollow-cheeked young man, was clerk to Mr. Marshall, the High Street estate agent.

"I heard voices," he said, coming in. "I was wondering where those grey socks—"

He broke off and smiled, suddenly seeming very young.

"You really are the very kindest person!" he ejaculated. "But—"

"Go along with your 'buts'!" broke in Mrs. Boulton. "Why, I like something to darn."

"I'll leave you two to flirt in peace," said Ivy, stifling a yawn. "I'm for bed. Goodnight, Mr. Christie!"

"Good-night! I hardly ever see you these days."

"We are so terrifically busy at the office," said Ivy, smiling.

Mrs. Boulton worked on till Ivy's light footfalls died away, then said in low tones:

"I don't believe in her being kept at the office till the dead of night. She's keeping something back from me. If her mother had been alive, she would never have allowed it."

"I'm sure," said David, "her mother would have known your niece too well to worry about her."

Yet Mrs. Boulton knew that David was worried. She knew he was hurt. And David knew nothing of Ivy's two new dance-frocks, the pearl necklace—artificial, but excellent of its kind—the new shoes, gloves, hats, the manicuring, the permanent wave; all the extravagances that Ivy had lately indulged in.

Even $25 a week has its limitations.

"She's got no father and no brothers," said Mrs. Boulton. "Mr. Christie, could you find out for me who keeps her out night after night so late?"

"Spy on her?" he asked. "I couldn't. What right have I? None—none whatever."

"Then I'll do it myself!" exclaimed Mrs. Boulton. "I'll not rest till I've found out what's going on."

So next evening Mrs. Boulton waited in Mincing Lane by the door of the towering building in which Mr. Livingston, Ivy's employer, had his office. A great tide of girls and young men poured out. No Ivy. It began to rain, and Mrs. Boulton drew back into a shadowed doorway where a man stood.

Gradually the street emptied. At length a huge, glittering car swerved to the curb and stopped. In it sat a good-looking, middle-aged man, his fur coat open, his white shirt-front gleaming.

Almost simultaneously from the door of the block of offices came Ivy, light-foot, expectant, very lovely.

"A new cloak!" muttered lynx-eyed Mrs. Boulton.

Into the car stepped Ivy. On it shot.

"I'll get to the bottom of this," muttered Mrs. Boulton. "Somehow I'll put a stop to it!"

David Christie could not help overhearing the argument that night. Ivy at first had been defiant. The middle-aged man was Mr. Livingston, her employer.

"Don't worry, auntie, everything's all right," she said.

On David's return the following evening he found a car—easily identified as Mr. Livingston's—parked under the lamp-post by the Boulton's house.

He let himself in and went to his bedroom. Presently he heard Ivy singing in her room upstairs. He peered over his door ajar, as she came down. Radiant she looked in a pale green, shimmering evening dress.

From his window he watched her step into the car and be carried away. A profound silence fell. He longed to question Mrs. Boulton. But he had no pretext. He could not go down and say: "I've loved her ever since I came here to lodge four years ago. I've worked like a galley-slave with one end in view—to be in a position one day to beg her to marry me."

"Mr. Christie!" called Mrs. Boulton. He hurried down.

"Ivy," said Mrs. Boulton, in breathless excitement, "is engaged! Yes, to Mr. Livingston."

His universe seemed to go to pieces.

"You could have knocked me down with a feather," he heard remote Mrs. Boulton declaiming. "But I don't like it. She's only a child, and look at the age of him! It's him being rich and she so pretty. It can't last. The David, I wish it had been you! But marriage isn't in your line, I suppose?"

All the following, miserable week,

while radiant Ivy—a single-stone, ruby ring flashing on her left hand—was whirled nightly away in Mr. Livingston's car, David brooded. He should have made old Marshall recognize his work before now—then he would have proposed to Ivy, and this might never have happened.

On Saturday morning, feeling reckless, telling himself he had nothing to lose, he spoke to Mr. Marshall.

"I'll think things over," he said. "I'll tell you what. Drop in about seven and have a bit of supper with me and the wife, and we'll have a chat."

David went. He met Mrs. Marshall. He sat between the two of them later on in the drawing-room. They were childless. Mr. Marshall was "getting on in years." David had worked wonderfully. A partnership!

He walked home under the stars, striving to capture a fraction of the elation which might have been his a short week ago. Too late. A car passed him and stopped at the Boulton's house. Ivy stepped out of it. His pace slackened. She disappeared. The car sped on.

Silently he let himself in, but the door of the front-room stood wide. As he hung up his coat and hat he heard Ivy say:

"It's all over, auntie!"

She was laughing at her aunt's stifled "Ivy!" when a movement of David's made her glance out into the passage.

"Hallo!" she ejaculated evidently displeased. "Unusual hours for Mr. Christie!"

"Most," he said, and felt mysteriously impelled to add—as though she cared a whit. "I've had an unusual evening. I don't suppose I'll ever again be offered a partnership."

"How—how gorgeous!" cried Ivy, clapping her hands. "At Marshall's?"

But Mrs. Boulton broke in:

"What—what's that you're telling me? About your engagement. Broken off? Who broke it off?"

"Both of us did," said Ivy, twirling the ring on her finger before reluctantly drawing it off. "But I'll tell you all about it some other time."

She looked so white, so strung up, that though her news delighted him, he said in sudden anger:

"Has—has he treated you badly? If so, and if you'll let me, I will—"

"It's quite all right, thanks," she said emphatically, and then stared at David before adding: "I—I don't believe you're sorry."

He was taken aback.

"Well, I—" he began.

"Tell me why you're glad," she commanded.

"I think you know," he answered. Ivy drew a deep breath, then exclaimed:

"Praps this is another time, then! Listen, auntie. For years Mr. Livingston's been crazy over some girl—only she's a bit more than a girl now. She never would make up her mind. One evening I saw them together. Next day, after I'd promised not to whisper one word to anybody, he told me all about it. He asked me if I'd help him. He thought a shock might do her good."

Ivy, laughing, sat down.

"It did, too. I've been the shock—administered in daily doses. You see, he got a mutual friend to tell her all about how he was being vamped by a designing little tylist!"

"D'you mean it was—all sham?" asked the scandalized Mrs. Boulton.

"I do!" said Ivy. "A fake! And it's worked miracles. She saw us dining and dancing and at theatres and restaurants. She saw this—"

Ivy tossed the ring up and caught it.

"Wicked little stone!" she said, laughing. "Last night she gave away. They're to be married by special licence next week."

"But why had I to be told lies?" finally demanded Mrs. Boulton.

"Because," said Ivy, "of—Mr. Christie."

"Mo? How? Why?" demanded astonished David.

"A partner!" whispered Ivy, her eyes fixed on his. "Just fancy! A partner!"

"I wish you'd be one," he exclaimed, the words escaping him quite involuntarily. "I wish you'd be—mine!"

Ivy laughed. Aghast he stared at her.

"Ivy!" remonstrated angry Mrs. Boulton, starting up.

"It's all right, auntie," Ivy exclaimed.

ADAMSON'S ADVENTURES—By O. Jacobsson

ed. "Now at last I can be perfectly frank. When you tackled me last week I almost let you into the secret. Only sometimes one can kill two birds with one stone, and I was thinking of—Mr. Christie."

"Me?" ejaculated David once more.

"You," she said, nodding. "I've thought about you quite often, I'd better tell you. I thought: 'Here we are after four years—a mere couple of stick-in-the-muds.' I thought hearing I was engaged to somebody else might stir you up. I thought my little ruse might make two people jealous—with one stone!"

"How—how could you possibly guess about me?" asked David in amazement.

"A girl can't help knowing," said she. "Auntie, three can be such a crowd! D'you think—Yes? Good-night then, darling, if you simply must go. But do give David just one wee kiss. He's pining for it."

Transfigured, Mrs. Boulton had hardly reached the door before David went to Ivy and whispered, as he put his arms round her:

"Ivy, I'm still pining."

"Then, darling," said she, "I'll tell you when to stop."—Answers.

"George said he loved me the minute he saw me."

"How's that?"

London Daily Mail (Ind. Cons.)

Simple people sometimes ask how protective duties can bring in revenue, if the duties protect. They do not seem to be aware that the United States collects no less than £120,000,000 a year in customs duties which are mainly protective; or that our safeguarding duties, which do to some extent safeguard, all without exception bring in revenue.

The Car Mind

An English View of a Live Topic

The highway authorities of all kinds, from policemen on point duty to the Home Secretary, are becoming seriously concerned about the problem of the motor car. There is every reason for their anxiety; for it seems possible that if any more cars are put on the road none of them will be able to move—unless the skill of the police may extricate the ambulance vans that carry away the dead and the dying. Street accidents are rapidly increasing; and it may soon be as adventurous to take a walk as to go tiger shooting. But the real problem of the car is the effect of its excessive use on the survivors.

The new petrol-driven transport vehicle has not yet found its balanced place in the social system. It is being used in the same reckless, unbalanced way that charwomen used gin in the 18th century, and as over-excited neurotics use cocaine to-day.

The motor car is the most fashionable modern drug for restless nerves. Instead of playing early-Victorian croquet on our lawn we now motor a score of miles to play golf in the next county. Instead of strolling in the park on Sunday afternoons we go down to the South Coast for lunch. All these new possibilities may have many advantages. But the point to note is that the price that we must pay for them is a very great consumption of time in travelling to find them. Still worse, a large number of persons are making the process of travelling an end in itself. The mere sensation of movement seems to satisfy many owners of cars. Lunch at a Brighton hotel is not in itself so much better than any other lunch as to recompense travelling 12 miles from London and back to procure it.

Instead of increasing the possibilities of life by extending its range it is probable that the motor car has done the exact opposite. By rushing over a hundred miles of road in a car, instead of more quietly covering ten on foot, one does not see ten times as much. On the contrary one probably sees one tenth. It is only the cruder minds that measure the worth of the world by the number of mile-posts, as it is only the sordid souls that measure the use of wine by the quart.

It is necessary to realize that the

motor car is precisely on the same footing as electricity and gas, chloroform, drugs and all the other powerful forces which science has placed in our hands. The roads are maintained at public expense that they can be used for rational purposes. You may use your own car as you please, but it must never endanger the reasonable safety of every other user of the road, from excessive speed, unnecessary noise or dust. In concrete practice these legal principles would, roughly, forbid more than 20 miles an hour or any hooting after normal bedtime.

But the most important duty the motorist has to consider is that which he owes to himself. If the motor is to develop on its present lines as the chief hobby of mankind then life will cease to be an affair of the intellect, though it may end by having solved the problem of perpetual motion. Man will always be moving, and rarely doing anything except oiling his wheels and cranks. It has not come to that yet; men still get out of their cars to play on golf links, and there is still the happy possibility that they may look at the surrounding countryside while a tire is being repaired. But these imperfections of machinery and inclination for physical exercise will not long resist the drug movement; and the ideal man of the engineering future will have a non-stop life on the road. The wit who recently discovered that the Englishman's home is his garage aimed his shaft at too stationary a target. The active minds of to-day now live in each other's dust. This is a dangerous reversal of social traditions. A man of dignity needs a permanent address. If motoring is not to become a national debauchery, in which speed and distance will take the place of the older and more cultured pursuits of wine, women, and song, then the owner of a car must deliberately restrain himself and sternly refuse to use his own time and the public road in traveling without rational excuse.

In the ideal world the policeman on point duty will all be scientists and philosophers of the highest academic distinction. When motorists have become ladies and gentlemen, and not road-hogs, there will, of course, be little necessity for regulating the traffic in the ordinary sense. So when the philosopher on point duty holds up his arresting arm it will be in order that he may ask a profound question: "Have you, sir or madam, any sufficient reason for travelling in your car? If not, my orders are to arrest you as a public nuisance."

Of course there are scores and hundreds of good and sufficient answers

Major James E. Hahn, M.C., D.S.O. Soldier - Industrialist - author, whose book, "The Intelligence Service Within the Canadian Corps," will be published shortly by Macmillan's. It deals in an interesting fashion with the activities of this important department of the C.E.F. in which so many thrilling romances of war were enacted. Major Hahn is now an international figure in the radio industry, being President of De Forest Crosley, Limited, one of the largest radio manufacturers in the British Empire.

that will allow the traveler to pass on his way. It will even be enough to say that the ride is for the simplest relaxation as one smokes a pipe or plays patience without any subsequent intention whatsoever. But the motorist will severely tell himself that this form of relaxation—unlike the pipe or the patience—is a more definite infringement of the rights and pleasures and conveniences of his neighbor, and, therefore, must not be indulged in except with the strictest restraint. There are many better reasons which the motor traveler will be able to give for his excursion. It is clear that if motoring is to become a civilizing factor, and not a universal nuisance, it must be linked up with some form of mental activity, in which its great powers of transport will be an advantage. For example, the student of geology might make his journeys into most engaging scientific adventures. There is a sound case for the car owner who uses his car, not as in a point to point race at top speed, but rather in a sober survey of the countryside; as, for example, a botanist, an ornithologist, an artist. To prefer a student of some science or art to a follower of foxhounds or a road-hog is not highbrow affectation. It is merely the dislike of being bored.

On the simple ground of health, excessive motoring is obviously an anti-social pastime. It seems an appalling pity if we rescue civilized people from slums and insanitary workshops and factories only to allow them, without protest, to waste their bodily tissues by reclining on motor cushions. The self-starter has taken away the only hope that a car owner will get any exercise out of his own new toy.

By recent legislation in both Italy and Spain motorists are being taught the elementary rules of gentlemanly behavior by the penalty of long years of imprisonment—up to 20—for an accident which would not have happened if they had driven more reasonably. It is said that motorists in Madrid now raise their hats to pedestrians with an "After you, sir." When the motorist also murmurs "After you" to the laws of a well-balanced intellect, then the car will have begun to be the servant of civilization instead of a danger as terrible as the Black Death. It is not the dead and maimed victims of the motor traffic that matter most; the chief tragedies of the Transport Age are the empty-headed creatures who are spending such a great proportion of their lives in rushing about—doing nothing.—London Fortnightly Review.

For Safety's Sake

"Sandy, my son," said the fond father, "you're getting married to-morrow, so I have bought you a present you'll find very useful."

"Thank ye father," murmured Sandy.

But when the old man produced a mouse-trap and laid it on the table, Sandy almost fell backward with amazement.

"What ever's that for?" he inquired.

"Well," his father explained, "if there's one thing a woman hates more than a mouse it's a mouse-trap. Just as you set it last night at night, all your loose money out of your pocket under the spring, and it's there to be there in the morning."

Overdue

One of his customers had owed him a sum of money for quite a long time, and the grocer decided to call at the house and demand his dues.

"How about the money for the groceries, sir?" he asked. "It's been owing for six months now."

"Isn't that paid yet?" gasped the householder. "I sent my wife over with the money some time ago."

"Sorry, sir," returned the other, "she never came near me."

The householder thought for a moment.

DOINGS IN PARLIAMENT

Canada is finally going to refuse clearances for the export of liquor to the United States. This is the purpose and effect of a government measure introduced by the Prime Minister, in a two-hour speech before crowded galleries, and which, thought it brought forth stinging criticism of the government from Hon. R. B. Bennett, was in the end adapted within division.

Premier King in introducing the measure declared at the outset that it had nothing to do with prohibition and would impose no restrictions upon Canadians. In detail he recounted the method of operation by which liquor has up to the present been exported from Canada to the land of Volstead, told of the attitude taken on the matter by Lord Curzon, then Secretary for foreign affairs, at the 1926 Imperial Conference and the anxiety of the British government to free itself from the odium and the dangers involved in assisting in a traffic that had for its object the violation of the laws of a friendly neighbor, and declared this was the position in which Canada was placed today. There had been no dictation in the matter by the United States, but representations had been made by the American government, while on two occasions the Canadian parliament had gone on record as favoring such a measure. The government, Mr. King said would have acted last year but for a feeling that the United States was not apparently doing all it might to enforce its own laws. Now that the American government was seriously and in a big way undertaking the enforcement of prohibition Canada should do the decent and fair thing and give the measure of co-operation. The export business today was in the hands of bootleggers, gangsters and racketeers and it was morally wrong for Canada to authorize its officials to assist them in their work, while he personally would not continue to occupy the position of Secretary of External affairs if this menace to the good relations of the two countries was to be permitted to continue. The Premier in concluding issued a ringing challenge to the House to support the bill, declaring that should parliament do otherwise it would be a case of law-makers giving official sanction to the country's co-operation with law-breakers.

Hon. R. B. Bennett, opposition leader, while endorsing the principle of the bill, declared he would strip from the Premier the mantle of virtue he had suddenly assumed, and charged the government with hypocrisy in the attitude, it was taking at this time. He recounted the disclosures of the customs investigation of 1926, claimed that the Liberal party in the last election had received large contributions from the liquor interests, and now, on the eve of an election, the government, in a sudden glow of righteousness, was about to slay those who assisted in placing it in power. Mr. Bennett could find nothing to indicate a menace to the friendly relations between Canada and the United States at the present time and chided the government for allowing four years to pass before implementing the recommendations of the customs committee and of parliament. After a slashing arraignment of the government Mr. Bennett declared he would vote for the bill.

The only member to voice opposition to the measure was C. G. Power (Liberal, Quebec South), while leaders of the other groups gave it their blessing and it was then given second reading.

Canadians in general, no matter what their attitude toward liquor in Canada, will feel a sense of relief that Parliament has taken the course and that we will no longer officially have connection with a business that has caused much concern and annoyance to our nearest neighbors.

CUSHING

Mr. C. F. Kains was in Montreal the early part of the week, where he attended the funeral on Monday afternoon, of the late Mr. Geo. Burton.

Mr. Eddie Wholehan, of Montreal, arrived on Saturday to spend a two week's vacation with his relatives in Cushing.

Miss Wholehan spent Monday at Monaca, visiting her sister, Mrs. R. Funcheon.

Mrs. Usher has gone to Maniwaki, where she will be the guest for some weeks, of her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Watson.

GRENVILLE

In a letter received recently from Miss Melissa E. Morrow, Missionary, under the American Baptist Telugu Mission at Narsaravupet, Guntur District, India, she stated that she would sail from Bombay on March 7th., arriving at Barsa on the 14th., Bagdad 18th.; Damascus 21st., and Jerusalem Y.M.C.A. on March 26th. where she will have her headquarters until April 20th., while travelling in Palestine. She will attend the Passion Play at Abernammargau on May 11th. and should arrive in Montreal about June 1st. Needless to say she will receive a warm and hearty welcome on her arrival in Grenville her old home.

Miss M. E. Morrow has been a Missionary in various parts of India, under the A.B.M.U., since 1906. She attended Gordon Training school in Boston, U. S., and sailed from Boston on her first trip to India, Sept. 19th., 1906. For many years her work has chiefly been in schools but now evangelistic work, touring, when she wrote, in the most distant and needy parts of the field, forty-six villages with only one old pastor and a few teachers. Missionaries are badly needed in that densely settled country and money is required to aid in spreading the Gospel.

We can follow Miss Morrow this week as she journeys through Palestine and visits the places where Jesus lived and died.

WORLD-WIDE SPREAD OF WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

To study the reports of the publicity work of Women's Institutes is to get a picture of the forward march of the whole movement.

In Canada, the land of its birth, it has spread from ocean to ocean every Province having now its Branch, County or District and Provincial organization. In the British Isles it has far out-stripped the land of its birth, both in national organization, and in growth of numbers. In South Africa, in the very place which only thirty years ago the struggling settlers were terrorized and often massacred, to-day a Women's Institute flourishes and among its manifold activities sponsors that most modern touch of the modern life,—a district nurse. In the state of Bengal alone, in India, there are two hundred and fifty Women's Institutes, "Mahila Lamitis," publishing their own official organ, one page in English, where all that pertains to the making of good homes finds space.

In Norway, Sweden, Belgium, Holland and in South America, the movement has taken root and spread, until in very deed a truth, the inhabitants of these places have found shelter in the good homes and in better living conditions which it is the purpose of the Women's Institutes to foster.

It may be said here that the Canadian motto "For Home and Country" has been adopted by Institutes every where, until to-day it encircles the globe.

On Monday evening Dr. Wales entertained the Reading Circle, held at the residence of Mr. W. Pitcairn, with an historical sketch of old St. Andrews under the seigniorship of Sir John Johnson, the last of our seig-nors. The historical background pictured the fateful years of the American revolution in which Sir John figured during his young manhood. His famous home at Johnstown, in the Mohawk Valley, known as the Johnson Hall, was the model from which our one time Manor House was built.
This familiar setting, the strenuous life of Sir John, and the brilliant career of his father, Sir William Johnson filled the hour with interest.
We understand that the sketch will appear later in the Watchman. After the reading of this paper by Dr.
Wales, Current Events were discussed, the most lively subject being in regard to the clearance from Canadian ports of ships laden with intoxicating liquors. If the sense of the meeting has any influence in government quarters Uncle Sam will find it increasingly difficult to get those "bracers" and "chasers" to which he has been accustomed. The next meeting of the Reading Circle will be at Mr. W. Pitcairn's, April 7th, when "An Evening with Bliss Carman" will be enjoyed, with special reading by the Misses Hattie and Tita Wales.

Speaking on Canada's stake in the Pacific before the Montreal Canadian Club recently, Hon. Newton W. Rowell, vice-chairman of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, took occasion to compliment Canadian Pacific Steamships on their work on that ocean. He said: "There are many lines of steamers plying from North America to the Orient and one of the best is still the Canadian Pacific Steamships; there is no other freight and passenger service on the Pacific that to-day is equal to that of the Canadian Pacific Company. We owe a great deal to that institution in developing trade."

Visiting sportsmen coming to New Brunswick for hunting and fishing have almost doubled in the past five years, according to figures given out by Hon. G. H.
Prince, Deputy Minister of Lands and Mines of the province.

Additional air mail service was inaugurated between Winnipeg, Calgary and Edmonton early in March by the Canadian Post Office Department, leaving only the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific Coast and from western Ontario to Winnipeg unserved by air mail. It is expected that at least a portion of this territory will be linked during the coming summer.

Preparations are being made for taking another decennial census in Canada which is due in 1931. The census will give employment to 15,000 persons. It was first taken in 1871 and has been taken every ten years since then.

M. M. Robinson, chairman of the committee of management of the British Empire Games, to be held at Hamilton next August, is already assured of the success of the meeting. Interviewed aboard S.S.
Montcalm recently, he stated that not only was he sure that there would be 200 British athletes at the games, but that the meet would be the biggest of its kind Canada had ever known.

"One of the objects of the visit of the English public school head-masters party, due to arrive at Saint John aboard S.S. Duchess of Bedford, April 5, is to improve the teaching of Canadian history in Great Britain," says Kenneth Lindsay, who is travelling ahead of the party. It will consist of 15 head-masters and they will visit nine Canadian universities from the Maritimes to British Columbia.

Necessary Food Elements

There are three elements which must be present in our diet, if we would be well: mineral salts, roughage and vitamins. These are chiefly to be found in milk, vegetables and fruits. The tendency in most families is to eat too much of protein, sugar and starches. If this habit continues to middle life, we become subject to rheumatism, indigestion, gall bladder and kidney troubles and to overweight, which is not only disfiguring but weakens the vital organs and hastens old-age.

Calcium, phosphorus, iron and iodine are mineral salts we must be sure to include in the diet. Calcium helps to build bone and muscle and blood, and helps regulate the body activities, such as enabling the heart to contract, the nerves to command action of the organs, and the blood to coagulate.

Phosphorus is needed for the growth of new body cells and to keep the blood neutral. Iron is also needed to make the cells grow, and body cells are constantly wearing out and must be replenished. The red blood corpuscles particularly need iron. Iodine is needed to keep the thyroid gland healthy and to encourage normal growth and nutrition. Other minerals will be found in the same foods which furnish them.

The value of roughage is that it helps to push the food through the alimentary canal and thus aids in elimination of body wastes.

The value of vitamins is to regulate the body functions. They are necessary to build teeth, to make wounds heal, to foster growth, to make food digest and change to body tissue, to cause bone material to form. They are very important in building up resistance to disease. Insufficient vitamins is one cause of frequent colds, rickets, rheumatism and sterility. The sick need vitamins in order to get well, and the normal need them to keep healthy.

How shall we get these mineral salts, roughage and vitamins? Build the diet around milk, vegetables and fruits. Eat some of each every day. Have two servings of vegetables, besides potatoes, each day. Eat spinach several times a week. Raw vegetables are richer in mineral salts and vitamins than cooked vegetables, but cooked vegetables are good. Cooking destroys some vitamins.

To preserve the mineral salts, do not soak vegetables in water, for this dissolves out these valuable substances. Do not cook them in much water, for the same reason, and, by all means, do not drain down the sink the water in which vegetables are cooked. To do this throws away the most valuable part of our food, the very elements you must have to be healthy. If only a little water is used to cook vegetables, it may be served with the vegetables. If there is more than can be thus served, use it in soups or as the liquid for gelatin salads.

Begin early teaching children to like vegetables. A four-months-old baby may be given strained vegetable soup. At six or seven months, it may have vegetable pulp put through a fine sieve. This will help the child to develop a strong body and also teach him to like vegetables.

Peace or Possessions

True, you love beauty and crave pretty things in your home, but are they worth it if you worry every minute for fear they will be spoiled? Remember that the children in the home are also beautiful, and there is a beauty of family sweetness and peace, which is more valuable than anything bought in the shops.

If it causes too much anxiety—and it will—to use the fine china set when the children are around; or to have your leather-bound volume lying on the table where their small fingers will not leave it alone; or your most artistic floor lamp sitting out where they will trip over the cord—then put the set in the high cupboard, the book in the bookcase and the lamp back in a corner. The happiness their use will give you does not compensate for the misery to yourself and them if you are constantly worried and surrounded by their don'ts.

Fashions, Fads, Foibles

The goods is biased in favor of the new lines. Bias jabots at neck and sleeves form trimmings and bias ruffles, bounces and godets give fullness to skirts. Hem-lines dip at the sides or in the back. Intricate gathers mark waist lines and furnish decoration.

Prints are leaving their imprint on the styles, the smaller prints being in greater favor. Silk suits are popular, with sleeveless blouses which tuck inside the skirt. Many collars and cuffs are plaited, and detachable for laundering.

All-over lace and net is running strong for afternoon and evening gowns. The season's hats are as close fitting as ever and drape gracefully about the ears and neck.

The Mattress

To prevent the mattress from becoming muggy, see that it is kept well aired. Turn back the covers, or better yet, remove them from the bed and let the whole mattress be exposed to the air. To carry a mattress out into the sunshine puts new life into it and packed felt will become more springy. The mattress should be turned over each week and occasionally turned end for end to distribute the wear. Every mattress should wear a mattress cover of muslin to protect it from rust from the springs and from dust. The cover can be removed once in awhile and laundered.

Screens

To hide the entrance from the kitchen, or to set apart the kitchenette or a bed, or merely for decorative purposes, a screen is a useful device. To make a screen for yourself have the frames made by a carpenter and use as panels beaverboard covered with gay wall paper or cretonnes or some charming fabric. Hold this in place by brass headed tacks. A screen, delightful to the man of household and to the school children, may be covered with maps.

Add a Lamp

If your living room has only one or two reading and sewing centers for the evening, and your family numbers more than two, add other work centers where all the family may be comfortable and enabled most easily to do their tasks. An extra reading lamp and comfy chair may make the difference between an attractive home and somewhere else for the growing boy or girl.

Broken Homes

Fight it out, if you must, but do not fly apart. Broken homes are the greatest cause of children going wrong. The adults may get along all right, but what about the poor little frightened children who do not know what is going to happen to them next? If you love your children, you will stand a whole lot of abuse before you will see them cast into the blighted class—the children of broken homes. In the Reform Schools, about seventy-five per cent. of the children who are sent there for delinquency, come from broken homes. Poor little untrained animals! It is the parents who are delinquent and who should suffer.

Wait For Facts Says MacDonald

Replies to Correspondent, Who Urges Intervention in Soviet Persecutions

MAY HARDEN HEART

London. Prime Minister MacDonald, in a letter made public recently, said the British Government was much concerned about anti-religious activities in the Soviet union but could not say what it could do until it had all the facts.

The letter, an answer to an unnamed correspondent regarding religious affairs in Russia, was made public by the press department of the Labor party. It specified that news from Riga, Latvia, should not be believed until corroborated and added that many statements from that source had been proved false.

"The history of religion in Russia, however," the letter continues, "is unfortunately full of records of persecution. Persecution has never, in one way or another, been absent from Russian religious life, and the revolutionary mentality which generations of oppression have created has all the characteristics of narrowness and violence of purpose."

The prime minister continues that to his colleagues and himself religious persecution is hateful, but he says that isn't the question at issue. It is rather, he says, "Have we considered what we can do?"

Diplomatic recognition of Russia, said the premier, was decided purely on practical and political grounds and without reference to internal beliefs of policies. He added that Russia had been recognized for general good, however intricate and troublesome immediate problems might be.

Might Make Things Worse

"To outlaw a country is not to make it amenable to world opinion but the opposite," he said, "even now you must see that the tone and temper of the agitation are hardening rather than softening the heart of the Russian government and giving it the opportunity of persuading its own people—however erroneously—that this is all a part of the conspiracy of other governments to bring on a war against the Soviet government."

Great Britain, the letter concludes, knows quite well that the government is not indifferent to the situation but that the "only question is what are the facts and what are our opportunities and how can they best be used? It would be the easiest thing in the world to act in such a way as would add to the afflictions which Christians may have to endure. That we shall avoid whatever the agitation may be."

A SMALL RECOMPENSE TO FLOOD HOUSES

Rice Wrinkles

As a Vegetable

Bring to a boil at least 4 quarts of water and 1 teaspoonful of salt, then stir in 1 pound of rice that has been well washed. Boil it "at a gallop" until the grains are tender, then pour it through a strainer. Put the rice back into the kettle, pour over it hot water to cover, and drain again. Turn the rice into the kettle, set the container over a low flame and leave it two or three minutes uncovered to evaporate any water in the pan. Stir occasionally to prevent burning. Serve immediately.

When rice is to be used as a vegetable, with chicken for instance, vary it occasionally by adding, just before turning it into a serving dish, a small lump of butter and 2 hard-boiled eggs, sliced or chopped, for added richness and flavor.

Any plain rice left over at any time may be reheated quickly by pouring over it boiling water, bringing it to a boil and draining and steaming it as before. Or it may be made into any of the following delicious dishes:

Baked Rice

To 2 cupfuls of cold boiled rice add ½ tablespoonful of butter melted, 1 teaspoonful of finely minced onion, and ½ small can of tomato soup to which 2 tablespoonfuls of hot water have been added. Mix together well and bake in a covered dish for half an hour. Serve hot as a vegetable to accompany the meat.

Luncheon Rice

Drain the juice from 1 cupful of canned tomatoes and chop the pulp with 1 green pepper and ½ pound of sharp yellow cheese. Add 3 cupfuls of cold boiled rice and the juice from the tomatoes and bake half an hour in an open dish in a moderate oven. Serve on lettuce leaves, garnished with strips of green pepper and slices of hard-boiled egg.

Peach Condo

Cook in the double boiler 1-3 cupful of rice with a pinch of salt in 3 cupfuls of milk until the rice is thick and creamy. Boil together for 5 minutes 1-3 cupful of water, ½ cupful of sugar and the chilled rind from half a lemon, then lay in 6 or 8 large halves of canned peaches and cook and turn until they are slightly browned and the syrup is thick and a deep straw color; watch carefully to avoid burning. Dish a spoonful of the warm rice, lay half a peach on top and pour some syrup over it. Serve as an entree with hot or cold chicken, game or pork. Or, for dessert with cream, sprinkled with broken nut meats or topped with whipped cream.

Rice in Chicken Stock

To 1 pint of chicken stock add ½ cupful of washed raw rice and ½ teaspoonful of salt. Bake in a moderate oven, stirring frequently, until the rice is tender and thick. Serve sprinkled with chopped parsley. This is especially nice in the center of a dish with baked tomatoes, seasoned with salt, pepper and butter, arranged around the mound.

American Chop Suey

Cut into shreds 1 cupful of celery and 3 onions, then cook them slowly, covered, in 4 tablespoonfuls of butter until they begin to change color. Add ½ pound of mushrooms, washed and broken into pieces, and cook them for three minutes, stirring constantly. Blend in 4 tablespoonfuls of flour, then add 2 cupfuls of milk and cook, stirring constantly, until the mixture is thick and smooth. Season with 1 teaspoonful Worcestershire sauce, salt and pepper to taste. Serve as a sauce for 2 cupfuls of hot boiled rice. Lacking mushrooms, shrimp, tuna fish, chicken, veal, pork or other meat may be used in their stead.

Stuffed Cabbage

Wash thoroughly the large outer leaves from cabbage and leave them in hot water until they are wilted and pliable. Heat 2 tablespoonfuls of cooking oil and brown in it a chopped onion and a clove of garlic, then add ½ cupful of well washed rice; cook slowly, stirring often, until the rice is brown. Add 1 cupful of cold diced mutton, then enough chicken stock to cover the rice, a dash of salt and pepper, and simmer slowly until the rice is tender. Season to taste with salt and pepper and use the mixture for filling the cabbage leaves. Fasten each roll with a toothpick and saute in oil until they are brown, then pack in a casserole, add stock or hot water to half the depth of the rolls, and bake in a quick oven, turning the rolls occasionally until the cabbage is done and the dish attractively browned. Serve with a sauce made by thickening the liquid in which the rolls were cooked.

Peppers Stuffed With Rice

Cut a slice from the tops of 3 large peppers, remove the seeds and cut the peppers into halves lengthwise. Parboil in boiling salted water for five minutes, drain, cool, and arrange in a buttered pan. Make a sauce by blending 1 tablespoonful of flour with 2 tablespoonfuls of melted butter and adding ½ cupful of milk or strained tomato. Cook until thick, add 1 cupful of boiled rice, and salt and pepper to taste. Fill the pepper shells with the mixture, cover with buttered crumbs and brown in a hot oven.

Rice Waffles

To 1 cupful of cold boiled rice add 3 well-beaten eggs, 1 tablespoonful of sugar, 3 cupfuls of flour sifted with 2 teaspoonfuls of baking powder, and milk enough to make a thin batter. Bake in very hot, well-greased waffle irons.

Rice Muffins

To 2 cupfuls of boiled rice add 1 cupful of milk, 3 well-beaten eggs, 1 tablespoonful of butter, melted, and enough flour to make a thick batter. Pour into muffin rings and bake in a hot oven.

Marmalade Rice Pudding

To 1 cupful of milk add 1 cupful of cooked rice and scald in the double boiler. Add the yolk of 1 egg slightly beaten and a pinch of salt, and cook two minutes, stirring constantly. Add ½ cupful of orange marmalade, beat well and pour into a buttered baking dish. Beat stiff the white of the egg, then beat in 1 tablespoonful of marmalade and pile lightly on the rice. Bake in a slow oven until the pudding is delicately browned. Serve hot or cold.

Rice Pudding de Luxe

Bake in a slow oven for two hours 2 tablespoonfuls of rice with 1 quart of milk and sugar to taste; stir occasionally during the first hour. When cold, stir in ½ pint of whipped cream and serve very cold garnished with spoonfuls of red jelly.—Christian Science Monitor.

Not Present

"My firm is sending me to Canada," said the young Scotch commercial traveller, calling on his young lady.

"Oh, Jock," she cried, "does that mean that you want me to go with you?"

"Well, not exactly, dear," he replied. "I called round to ask if you'd kiss me farewell—for the present."

The girl looked mystified for a second or two.

"Of course I'll kiss you, dear," she replied, "but where's the present?"

"Great Scott, Ethel, here's a moth in my overcoat."

"Why, that's nothing, dear. The coat can't possibly fit it."

They Call It a Day!

But There's a Lot of Difference Between One Day's Work and Another, Some People Squeeze a Week's Toll into the Twenty-four Hours

Another record has just been set up by British engineers. Up to a month ago the record day's work in bridge building was held by America. In the construction of the huge Hell Gate Bridge in New York, in 1912, 360 tons of steel girders were put up in a day.

But now comes the news that, on the colossal new bridge now being built over Sydney Harbour, in Australia, all records have been broken, and 571 tons of steel have been erected in a day!

The steel is in the form of huge girders, sixty feet long, and weighing as much as ninety tons apiece. Each girder has to be floated out on a pontoon, from which it is lifted into place with a giant crane. And then long bolts, an inch and a quarter thick, are hammered in to hold the new girder in position until the riveting squad arrives and makes it fast for good.

Bridge-builders often have to work in a hurry, so as not to block the traffic in a river or get caught by floods or tides. When the old Lambeth bridge in London was being pulled down last year to make way for the new one, all the old suspension cables that supported it had to be got away at low tide, so that no shipping would be endangered by the cables falling into the river.

Foreboding of Peril

There were twenty-eight cables in all, each 800 feet long, as thick as a man's arm, and weighing about five tons. And in only two days' work, in the limited time allowed, all were safely thrown off the old towers, cut at the middle, and hauled to either bank. No mean job, considering the danger of the work, and the weight and awkward nature of the long, whippy cables.

Some years ago a famous American engineer, Colonel Grant, was engaged on the construction of a dam in India. Work had finished for the day but suddenly he felt uneasy, some strange foreboding of danger warned him, and he declared that he wanted all the sandbags on the job piled behind the growing walls of the dam before daylight.

The alarm was rung, the natives tumbled out, and all night long thousands of tons of sandbags were piled to strengthen the dam. It was a record night's work, but by morning the last bag was laid in position. A few hours later the waters rose without warning, flooded the channels round the works, and poured against the dam.

Then began a struggle between the forces of Nature and the work of man. For hours it was touch and go, but the dam held firm. The engineer declares that it was only the extra sandbags that saved the day.

When a new Atlantic cable was laid between America and the Azores, in 1928, the cable was of a new design, capable of transmitting ten messages, five in each direction simultaneously. To do this, it had to be of an exact length of 1,314.17 miles. So the cable-ship had to maintain an exact course, despite storm or fog, to lay the cable on the calculated line, and as divergence might seriously alter its length and spoil its efficiency.

For the first four days everything went like clockwork. Then the ship entered the edge of a cyclone. Clouds prevented any observations being taken of the position of the ship, and every roll and pitch of the vessel threatened to snap the cable paid out from the stern.

Beating the Storm

Engineers stood by the brakes on the cable drum, constantly measuring the strain on the cable while the ship's officers estimated the drift due to wind and current. After thirty hours of ceaseless watch there came a break in the clouds, and the course and mileage of the ship were checked and found correct. In seven days the whole cable was laid, the length being accurate to a foot.

As invention increases and machines still further ease the strain of labor, the magnitude of the day's work becomes more and more impressive.

At Chicago recently a huge three-storey building was shifted back forty feet in a day, to make room for a road widening scheme. Fifty men were employed, and 1,400 jacks were used to raise the building on to the rollers and move it along, a feat that would have been unthinkable thirty years ago.

A marvellous new machine was introduced lately on the London & North Eastern Railway. This will relay four miles of track in a night. It picks up the old track in lengths of sixty feet, dumps them on to a truck alongside, carries forward a new section, and lays it in position. In addition to this it is equipped with its own searchlight, generates its own electrical power, and has a circular saw that automatically trims the ends of the sleepers as they are laid.

It Probably Would, If—

A man who bought stock in a company inquired if its value would jump any. He was told it could. And it probably would. Provided the price didn't slump any.

Oxcarts and Aeroplanes

It is a far cry from the slow-moving, primitive, high-wheeled cart, hauled by oxen along the roads of Ceylon, to a speedy aeroplane in the winter sky over Lake Erie, but many of the people on Pelee Island are now drinking tea, carried there by air, that joggled along in an oxcart under a tropical sun in Ceylon only a few weeks ago.

The Salada Tea Company, because of the freezing over of Lake Erie, between Pelee and the mainland, recently shipped several hundred pounds of tea by air, in order to replenish the diminishing stock of a certain grocer on the island.

There is no doubt that the aeroplane is fast taking its place as a freight carrier and it is gratifying to see some of our larger Canadian industries utilizing this means of transportation in the name of service.

When Pain Comes

What many people call indigestion very often means excess acid in the stomach. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated, and food sours. The corrective is an alkali, which neutralizes acids instantly. And the best alkali known to medical science is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It has remained the standard with physicians in the 50 years since its invention.

One spoonful of this harmless, tasteless alkali in water will neutralize instantly many times as much acid, and the symptoms disappear at once. You will never use crude methods when once you learn the efficiency of this. Go get a small bottle to try.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. Each bottle contains full directions—any druggist.

Same as Canada

The Wet Way from Bimini to Florida

The wettest seven miles in the world some one calls Bimini, an island in the Bahamas about forty-five miles from the coast of Florida.

Nevertheless, it is reported this "bootleggers' paradise" has suffered a great decline in business recently. The reason for it, we are told, is that the dangers and difficulties of liquor-running to the United States have become too great.

A West Indian correspondent of the London Observer blames the licensing authorities of Nassau for Bimini's bad name. It is not too much to say, he alleges, that they could smash the bootlegging industry in Bimini if they so wished.

Meanwhile, this informant goes on to describe the island's shape as roughly making the arc of a circle. At its southern end is another small island, we learn, thus forming an ideal harbor with a narrow channel as entrance. The population of the settlement around the harbor is given as 400 odd. On the main front street, Bay Street, it is related, there are five liquor saloons and one licensed club. We read then:

"In the harbor there are two liquor barges, and one anchored schooner, which serves the same purpose. These barges are rectangular in shape, being about fifty by thirty feet. There are two houses in either barge, one at each end. One serves as the sleeping compartments of the bootleggers, and the other as the dining-room and kitchen. The space between the houses is open on either side, and serves as a platform into which the liquor is unloaded from the Nassau schooners, and from which it is loaded on to the Florida boats. Both houses and platform are covered by a common roof, giving the appearance of a neat little cottage.

"Underneath the houses, that is in the hull of the vessel, several thousands of cases of liquor can be stored, so that there may be always a plentiful supply on hand. In short the barges and the schooner serve exactly the same purpose as wholesale buildings on land, only their position in the harbor so facilitates loading and unloading that the one warehouse on land has practically ceased to do business.

"The harbor is also dotted over by some thirty motor-boats, averaging about twenty-five feet in length, possessing powerful engines and capable of carrying four hundred cases.

"Some of these boats are very fast, and can reach the Florida coast in two hours. These belong to the bootleggers in Miami, who employ young men to pilot them and shoot across with loads according to orders. The course of procedure is as follows:

"The owners of the barges live in Nassau, and order the liquor from England to that port. It arrives in cases, and they repack it into sacks, so that it can be handled with lightning speed. Each sack contains six bottles.

"The sacks are then put aboard schooners, which convey the liquor the 116 miles from Nassau to Bimini (of course, there are other centres as well as Bimini, but we are concerned just now only with the latter). The schooners draw up alongside the barges and unload. The American bootleggers now do business with the barges, each of which has a capable man in charge. Thus far everything is plain sailing.

"The greatest risks of all are taken by the men who carry the liquor from the barges to the coast of Florida. 'A' receives a cable from his employer in Miami to bring, say, '400 cases over to-night' (there are two sacks in a case). He loads up from a barge, and at sunset speeds out of the harbor to cross the Gulf.

"He has a certain rendezvous, known to him and his associates at the other side—some point of land or some creek, perhaps ten or twenty miles from Miami. Later on, when the authorities have become suspicious of this place, he will change it to another. He unloads, and is told whether to bring a load the following night or the next, or to wait another cable."

This West Indian correspondent of The Observer goes on to relate that the rum-runner then makes his way back to Bimini, and at sunrise his

Leading Agriculturist

With fifteen years practical experience in agricultural and livestock affairs and having represented Canada on an Imperial committee to study the meat supply of the British Empire, Leonard Christie McOuat has recently been appointed general agricultural agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He was born at St. Andrews East, Quebec, in 1892, and took his degree of Bachelor of Science in Agriculture at McGill University. After returning from military service in the war, Mr. McOuat was called to Ottawa as a bacon specialist of the Dominion Livestock Branch, Department of Agriculture, and, following a special study of the British meat market, was selected to join the first Imperial Economic Committee to investigate and report on British Empire meat supply which met in London in 1925. His wide knowledge and experience are now at the service of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

boat will be riding lazily at anchor, as though it had never left the harbor. Probably he is now asleep on the barge, this writer ventures, happy in the fact that another sum has been placed to his credit. Meanwhile his load, we are told, has been met by a motor-truck or by cars. If the load is to go to Miami, it appears, a truck takes it there. But sometimes, it seems, a consignment is placed in the back of a private car, and driven north to some other city. The destination of every sack is already arranged before the boats arrive, and we read:

"Perhaps half a dozen or more of these boats will cross in one night, all going to separate points along the coast, and all being met as in the case of 'A.' They set out knowing that they may be discovered by coast guards in their patrol boats. If they are discovered, and do not halt they may be shot. If they are captured it means five years' imprisonment and a five-thousand-dollar fine for a first offence (the employer always pays the latter).

"They dare make the attempt only during the dark period of the month. In moonlight all boats lie up. They also have to brave stormy seas. Sometimes boats go out and are never heard of again. Frequently they are captured. The other men only laugh, and wonder when their time will come.

"On the American side the authorities often capture a load as it is going to Miami or elsewhere. Bribery is resorted to however, and the loads are often allowed to pass through. The liquor is stored in secret.

"An innocent-looking building may be the home of some of it, or a harmless-looking restaurant adapted for receiving and disposing of the liquor may be able to provide its clients. The consumer will pay as much as ten dollars a bottle for it.

"It ought to be added that the bootlegging business has diminished greatly in recent days. The dangers and difficulties of smuggling the liquor to America are so great.

"The Licensing Board in Nassau is composed of the Receiver-General, the Stipendiary Magistrate, and three other persons, appointed annually by the Government. Upon them rests the responsibility of granting licenses to the saloons and barges in Bimini, and it is not too much to say that they have the power of smashing the bootlegging business in that quarter.

"Why do they not use their power? Every license is supposed to be granted on its merits. The average number for a settlement the size of Bimini is three, and this was the number there previous to bootlegging days, and even they were only small saloons run by colored natives. At the present time there are nine licenses in Bimini, even though the original three saloons are still sufficient to supply the settlement.

"None of the licensed establishments do a wholesale trade with any surrounding settlements, because there are none for many miles. The only place that the barges can do business with is Florida—hence the bootlegging.

"The Licensing Board appears to close its eyes to the fact that an unlimited quantity of liquor is being conveyed to a settlement for the sole purpose of being smuggled into America and violating the law of a friendly country."

By the way, what's the proposed new thirteenth month to be called? The calendar might end with "October, November, December, Addender."

NO MEDICINE LIKE BABY'S OWN TABLETS

For Either the Newborn Babe or the Growing Child

There is no other medicine to equal Baby's Own Tablets for little ones—whether it be for the newborn babe or the growing child the Tablets always do good. They are absolutely free from opiates or other harmful drugs and the mother can always feel safe in using them.

Concerning the Tablets, Mrs. John Armour, R.R. 1, South Monaghan, Ont., says:—"We have three fine, healthy children, to whom when a medicine is needed, we have given only Baby's Own Tablets. The Tablets are the best medicine you can keep in any home where there are young children."

Baby's Own Tablets are a mild but thorough laxative which regulate the stomach and bowels; banish constipation and indigestion; break up colds and simple fever and make teething easy. They are sold by medicine dealers or direct by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Adult Suffrage

Alfred Zimmern in the Political Quarterly (London): The first general election in which the whole adult population was eligible to vote was also the quietest, the most intellectual that has even taken place in Great Britain. The reduction of the average voting age was accompanied by an increased seriousness. We seem to be succeeding in de-emotionalizing party politics. What more need then to exercise the old precautions to keep this or that serious problem "out of politics?" To inject it into the political arena may soon become a means for ensuring its really serious and effective treatment.

What the Public Wants

Y. Y. in the New Statesman (London): What the public wants and has always wanted is to be taught what to want. The public has a wavering mind, which responds readily to those who have stronger minds than its own. A public that at one time did not want Mr. Ramsay MacDonald as a private Member of Parliament wanted him a few years later as Prime Minister. A public that once wanted Mr. Bernard Shaw so little that the mere mention of his name was exasperating, now wants him to such an extent that he has made a large fortune out of his plays. Yet Mr. Shaw did not set out to give the public the plays it wanted. He set out to compel it to want his plays. There is a phrase for attempting to give the public what it wants—"pot-bolling"—and it is a remarkable fact that the plays which the public most permanently wants to-day are not the "pot-bollers," written exclusively to satisfy the public taste. . . . In literature as in social life, it is often those who set out to please who end by pleasing least.

DADDY CAN NOW EAT ANYTHING

He dearly loved a rich tit-bit. The spirit was willing, but the flesh was weak. Whenever he ate anything rich, his boys used to say, "Poor dad, he will pay the penalty to-morrow." Read the sequel in his own words:—

"Since taking the regular dose of Kruschen Salts it is quite different, and my boys enjoy themselves seeing me eat what I dare not touch before. My eldest son was the same, but since he has taken Kruschen Salts he can eat and enjoy whatever is put in front of him."

Modern artificial conditions, errors of diet, overwork, lack of exercise, and so on, are bound to have injurious effects in the long run providing due precaution is not taken.

Kruschen Salts should be your safeguard. Besides cleansing the body of impurities gently, surely and painlessly, they possess a vital power of giving new life and vitality to the countless millions of cells of which every body is composed. That is why physicians never hesitate to recommend Kruschen Salts.

Smashing all known records for the 120 miles of heavy going that characterized the International Dog Sled Derby run at Quebec recently, Emile St. Goddard galloped in to his fourth victory in that event when he led Leonhard Sennala to the tape by a margin of five minutes flat in eleven hours, one minute and 27 seconds for the whole distance. St. Goddard won $1,000 cash and a gold cup. There were twelve contestants in the race.
