Although Montreal and other large centres have been enjoying the pleasures of the "Talking Pictures" for some time, our town has had to be content with the Movies, but our enterprising proprietors of the Rex Theatre, Mr. and Mrs. Passio, always desirous of giving the best to their patrons, have installed the necessary machinery, at great expense and will make their bow to the public of Lachute and vicinity with the wonderful production of "Sally," featuring Miss Marilyn Miller, Alex. Gray and Jos. Brown. The opening night for this new innovation is Friday, April 11th, and it will also be shown on Saturday. This is one of the cleverest and most entertaining pictures ever shown and it is expected there will be bumper crowds at each performance.

YOUNG PEOPLE OF UNITED CHURCH ENJOY LIVELY DEBATE

The Young People's Club in connection with the United Church held a very interesting session on Monday evening, when Mr. Douglas Todd and Miss Reta Jones for the affirmative and Mr. Stewart Armstrong and Miss Ruby Parsons for the negative, debated the topic of general interest, "Resolved that the World is going to the Dogs." The participants were well versed in the subject and brought out many arguments that carried conviction for general uplift. The negative side were awarded the honors of victory.

The debate was followed by several musical selections from Mrs. Englehart and Messrs. Haldrick and Neilson, and a very interesting paper read by Mr. Geo. Ruttinger, which shows the heart of the stranger within our borders comes to us with the open desire to earn a livelihood in our country that affords the opportunity which their own country is incapable of giving them. The sentiments expressed should tend to make us look upon these new comers in more friendly light and cause us to extend greater kindness than is generally offered.

Among other things Mr. Ruttinger said the reason of their coming to Canada was because masses of human beings in Europe were crowded in too little space with insufficient work to keep them and their families. The war has left wounds that will not heal and revolution has kindled fires that one cannot extinguish entirely.

Europe is like a volcano after an eruption. The real danger is over but the crater is still smoking and smoke, flames and sulphur are bursting out everywhere in different places. A great many nations, religions and classes, yes classes still, even after the revolution; all these and endless, often aimless parties, are quarrelling over trifles without considering the misery of masses of human beings out of work, half starving, insufficiently clothed, in wretched dwelling places which sometimes don't deserve the name of house. What wonder that these poor desolate ones, driven to despair wish for some new catastrophe, some other revolution or that they set their misguided hopes on blowing up parliaments and destroying capitalists.

Nothing of this kind of thing can save Europe. Poor old Europe and all her children so miserable and still trying to relieve the harm, but at the wrong end, and not in the right way.

No war, no revolution can help. No killing or people or robbing them. Co-operation, of all these nations and religions could only help. Doing away with old debt and creditors building up together production and thus creating an international co-operation. That would give work to millions.

But as long as such a thing does not happen you will see every year people come here from the old country in an effort to find peace and work.

Let me ask you dear Canadians, to receive them kindly and believe me they come with the honest intention to do their best and fill their places as true sons of their adopted country.

Most of them have climbed up on a ladder of misery, step by step leading to despair, and then they jump into the ocean of immigration which takes them away to Canada or Brazil. They are after new possibilities, new areas new ideal and generally find them. I was told at home that the new world America-Canada has no ideal, that their only aim is "money." I found this absolutely wrong. Not only has Canada preserved all the old ideals dying out in the old country but she has many new and beautiful ideals worth while following. Poor old Europe resembles a woman with a wrecked and ruined life and a hopeless future, while Canada, young, strong and lovely, greets every morning the rising sun with a smile of welcome, glad to add another day to her existence. Canada is sure of her strength and healthy rooting in Union, federation, love, friendship and truth.

You dear friends who have spent your life here, don't realize perhaps what a blessed country you call your own? You are so used to it. But we poor scattered leaves of a broken tree blow over the ocean to root in a fresh soil, we can't marvel enough at your land and your people. And it is from the depth of my heart that I say, in the name of all the immigrants who found here a home, Thank Thee, Canada, for thy welcome, and God bless and keep thee.

"SALADA" TEA

'Fresh from the gardens'

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Peter DeWolfe, a wealthy young American, becomes interested in Brena Selcoss, and Muriel Benham tells him that if Brena "takes him in" he will vanish like the others. Brena tells DeWolfe that she was married some years ago in Dallas, Texas. A few years before that her mother and father had died, the father leaving her a message "not to be afraid, for if danger threatened her she would be protected." She meets Jim Hennepin in Mrs. Wilkie's boarding house. He tells her he has had a "call." She goes to St. Louis to marry him but he does not show up and has not been heard of since. Brena returns to Mrs. Wilkie's boarding house.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

Mrs. Wilkie often mentioned the journey to St. Louis. She would have given Brena a week's board to know why the girl had gone, but even Mrs. Wilkie sensed some quality in this beautiful child which made her a creature of a different species and she never pressed her questions beyond a point where she found herself looking into the wondering, dark Selcoss eyes.

Brena herself asked twice whether Hennepin had written. She chose moments when the two other women boarders and the accountant of the Southern Pacific were at the table.

"Written!" said Mrs. Wilkie. "Written? Not he!"

"His own father, dying of Bright's, hasn't heard from him—not for three months."

Brena then set her face toward tomorrow. She might have been expected, therefore, to be startled when the past broke in upon her.

It came in the form of Compton Parmalee.

He was the head of the firm which had employed Jim Hennepin.

Parmalee was a small, wiry man, careful of his dress.

He had come to Texas from the desert country of Southern California when he was twenty-six. He knew that country well. In his years in Dallas, acting as a cotton commission man and commodity gambler, he had collected a valuable library about the whole historic Southwest, its Indian tribes, the Pueblos, the strange customs and secrets of savage men carrying some of the traits and traditions of prehistoric Aztecs, and the Jesuit missionaries.

It was said by some persons that his quiet ways were a veneer put on by some studious years in Berkeley at the University, but rumor had it that Parmalee with his rather pale, young face that made him look thirty instead of forty-three, his small, well-shaped hands, his immaculate linen, his soft voice, had once shot a man across a roulette table which he himself owned and operated.

That he was ever a man of violence is very doubtful. He was an unquivering gambler but not with his personal safety; his personal safety was his principal concern. He wore gloves on all occasions—to keep the germs off his hand. He was always fending contagion. He gargled. He snuffed. He sprayed. He read medical journals. He feared cancer above all things.

He loved his life so much that no had loved no woman for many years: the monopoly of this devotion excluded competition. He loved his life with an unending passion: he ruined it by fearing to lose it.

He came to call one night and told Brena that he wanted information about Jim. She answered that he should see Jim's aunt, Mrs. Wilkie, but he was not to be denied.

"You telegraphed to Jim Hennepin from St. Louis," he said. "That telegram was opened in my office. It was just your message, 'I am waiting,' and it was signed, B.' It took a little inquiry for me to know that this telegram was probably sent by you."

"But nearly five months have gone."

"I know."

"And why now do you come to me?"

"You needn't tell me anything you do not wish to tell. I assume that you arranged to meet him in St. Louis."

Brena put her hand up and felt her throat. It was hot—the skin was hot under her cold hand.

"It was a great mistake," she said in a low voice.

"The idea was marriage?"

"It was my idea—if I had any clear idea."

"The dirty dog!" said Parmalee.

Brena shuddered.

"Of course, if he were to meet you," Parmalee said, "he probably told you where he was going, eh—and why?"

"No," she said. "He only spoke of making a great sum of money, of getting it from some place."

"He did not say where?"

"No. He spoke of some call—some message," said Brena.

The broker's eyes widened until they were in a staring distention.

"Ha! What more did he tell you?"

"Nothing."

Parmalee sat down in a chair and stared at the carpet for a long time.

"Do you know where he is, Mr. Parmalee?" asked Brena at length.

"I have heard nothing," he answered.

"Apparently after Jim had decided to take you away from Dallas this thing described as a 'call' came. There is still an unclaimed balance of a considerable sum to his credit in the office. He has gone—like this!"

Parmalee held up his small clenched fist, opened it suddenly and blew an imaginary speck of dust from its palm into oblivion.

Two days after Christmas Compton asked Brena by telephone to come to his office.

"You are sure that all you told me that night was accurate?" he said.

"Of course," she said in a tone of indignation.

"I know," said he. "But there was just one more thing. Did he leave a paper with you?"

"A paper? No, he left no paper. He gave me some money and there was a little scrap of paper in it. It had on it an arrow, drawn with ink, and a lizard drawn beside it and two words underneath, 'This sign.'"

"Well, that was nothing," said Parmalee. "Where is it now?"

"It disappeared. You haven't—"

"No. Not a word. He has gone."

She was silent.

"In fact, it was not because of anything to do with it that I wanted to see you," the man said. "You will say when you know why I sent for you that you have never heard of anything like it in all your life."

Brena said nothing.

"I sent for you to tell you about myself—not about what I have been—but what I am. For I believe there is a sympathy between us that is most extraordinary—more than you know."

"I think I understand."

"It is not love," said he. "Let me make it plain that I am not deluded, that I am not in love with you. I am not old, but the passion and idealism of love have gone. No, I will not make love to you."

"No," said Brena, giving affirmation.

"Ten months ago I scraped together all my money and threw it into a final play," Compton went on. "I am now worth a little over two million dollars, I am through with business, with trading, with speculation, with this office—forever!"

"And now—?" asked Brena.

He laughed. "There is now left to me collecting books, travel, a kindness now and then and taking good care of my health. Can you think of anything else?"

To Brena the problem was now; she did not have a ready answer.

"I have burned out," said Parmalee.

"I am fished. You see I am not a great man," he explained. "It was necessary for me to throw all of myself into the fight—every resource I could summon. I do not smoke, do not drink. I have conserved and guarded all my sensations until—I have none! All my life—my last twenty years of life—I have promised myself indulgences of gigantic and exquisite design, and now that I can have them, this body of mine rejects them all, refuses them all. Fate laughs in my ear and says: 'You're done for. The most sensuous pleasure you shall have will be the flavor of that apple sauce you have eaten—for lunch for fifteen years and will eat for lunch for the rest of your days.' Isn't this a grim joke, Miss Selcoss?"

"I do not know," said Brena uneasily.

He sensed her desire to go.

"Don't leave me," he said, "with a voice which almost broke into a low sob. 'You are the only one who can understand!'"

"All right," she said, astonished that she had become important to any one. "There are so many things you can buy with your money."

"Only one," he replied sharply.

"And that—"

"Is you!"

She pushed her chair back from the desk with both her hands.

"You need not be alarmed," said his calm voice. "I have stated it purposefully at its worst. It is better for you to have this thought presented at first and perhaps we can overcome it later. I put it in the terms of the world will use. Dallas will say, 'He bought her.' But, after all, we will not be in Dallas. We will be in Pekin or in Bombay or in sight of the Pyramids or in the crags of the Norway coast. I am more than twenty years older than you are. But the interesting and important persons with whom we may dine will only say, 'He has a beautiful young wife with a free mind. Her father was a patriot of Greece!'"

Brena's face was white and frightened as if she had seen a ghost. It was enough to tell him that she knew that he spoke truly.

"I do not ask you to give anything to me except your help to make me new again," he said. "I do not ask young love. I have none to give. I cannot take you away or keep you near me without marriage. It would blast us both. But if you marry me you shall be made free whenever the day comes that you wish to go. I ask no promises."

Brena got up and stood looking out the window. To be free! To grow! To range! To know! To be emancipated from the sordid round of days!

"Do not answer now," said Parmalee. "I have said all I can. Write me."

A week later he got her letter; it was on his desk apart from the business envelopes. He tore it open and read her introductory sentences down to the phrase: "I think you are above all honorable."

Parmalee uttered an exclamation of triumph; he alone knew that she was wrong.

"I want to make my life of greater service than it can ever be here," she wrote. "I am impatient for a richer soil in which to grow. I am willing to help you, too, if I can, though it seems a little vague to me how I can do this."

"Therefore I assent to your plans as you stated it. Always yours, Brena Selcoss."

Not fifteen minutes had elapsed after the marriage before there came into the lives of the two a new element.

At the station they were strolling up and down and little by little his conversation fell away; he muttered a few last absent-minded words and it was gone altogether. He walked on; she kept pace with him. He walked on in silence.

Not until she heard a strange whiffling noise as a sudden sucking in of breath of one who has fainted did she turn.

"You are as white as linen," she said trembling.

He wet his lips and looked at her almost snarling.

"What is this fate that follows you?" he asked.

"Fate?"

"Something."

"Why? What do you feel?" she asked in a frightened whisper.

"I feel fear," he said, his upper lip fluttering, "a horrible, unaccountable terror."

Indian Coastal Shipping

Calcutta Englishman: The Indian attack on British shipping has throughout been viewed seriously because it is the spearhead of an attack which, if not smashed, will some day be applied to every form of British industry in India. The attitude of the sponsors of the Coastal Traffic Reservation Bill is typical of the whole-hog Protectionist with whom nationalist or political considerations generally triumph at the expense of economics. The Indian Nationalist of the extreme brand has in fact brought to a fine art the philosophy of "Hence I win; Thine you lose." His ideal is to let men with energy, enterprise, initiative have the honor of carrying through the pioneer stages of industry when all the risks have to be faced; when losses outweigh the profits and the profits are small. Once, however, the enterprise is assured and there are no more risks, but the certainty only of large profits, then is the time for the "sons of the soil" to come in; expropriate the foreign capitalist, or at least make the conditions so onerous that it is not worth while his carrying on.

All-Empire Shops

An All-Empire shop, the first of its kind in Britain, was recently opened in Glasgow.

This is one of the ventures of the Empire Marketing Board, which has done so much to encourage the sale of Empire products. The stock is being changed fortnightly, so that the produce of various Dominions and Colonies will be displayed in turn. Cooking demonstrations and the distribution of Empire recipes are part of the shop's programme.

Another feature is the giving away of free samples of various Empire products, further supplies of which can be obtained from local traders.

If the Glasgow shop is a success, other all-Empire shops may be opened elsewhere, one possibly in London, but at the moment of writing nothing definite has been arranged.

Coastguarding The Detroit River

By Ex-Boatswain Walter S. Casey

Last spring I was ordered to report to Commander Martin V. Rasmussen at Buffalo, and by him was assigned to take over the 236, one of the standard 75-foot patrol boats. When I went aboard the crew informed me that the Coast Guard was not fussy about stopping rummies, and later an officer told me the same thing. "All you have to do," he said, "is burn up gas and then stand by each month for your pay."

The 236 was the first Coast Guard patrol boat to operate in the Detroit River. The customs patrol men were supposed to look after it, but they were almost all green men, and where handicapped by a hard fast rule that they were not to use their guns unless fired upon.

The 236 had been in these waters just one hour when five "luggers"—large skiffs powered with outboard motors—were sighted putting out from the Canadian shore. Through the binoculars we could see hurling sacks full of liquor. But before this flotilla reached the boundary line in mid-channel the 236 appeared, and they put back to shore to await darkness.

When it was dark two of my men, Goebel and "Red" Pickering, went over the side in the pulling boat with orders to stand watch at Slab Island, in American waters, and if firearms were necessary, to shoot into the beach. They shoved off and it was not long before I heard three shots. The putting of an outboard motor suddenly stopped, but we heard the roar of a speedboat's engine. A few minutes later Goebel and "Red" showed up with a skiff loaded with 135 cases of beer and a prisoner, a lad of 19 years.

"The kid was easy," said Goebel. "He was trying to get away from the speedboat. When we got him the speedboat circled close, and the wash almost swamped the skiff. Then they came like hell right for the skiff. 'Red' yelled to them, and when they held for the skiff he let go with his .45. The speedboat then veered off."

"We nabbed the kid and the beer. It wanted to know whether we were hijackers or agents, and was damn glad to learn that the Coast Guard had got him and not the hijackers in the black speedboat."

The second night on the river Goebel and "Red" made another catch. A "Monkey" named Walker, who was whipping a skiff-load of 150 cases of beer across, had to be tapped on the head before he submitted to arrest. The lad of the previous night was small potatoes compared to Mr. Walker. He had a notebook showing the amounts he had received from the head man or "gorilla" of the outfit. The accounts also showed that Mr. Walker, as a sideline, supplied a select Detroit clientele with better grades of liquor than those run by the gang.

We were soon assigned to the section of the river between Ecorse and Wyandotte. That riverfront is not a pleasant place. For several blocks, houses built gave-back up on the water. From the street side they appear to be dwellings and stores. In the rear of each house, however, there is a boat-well in which the speedboats and skiffs of the rum fleet are docked. By lowering the door of the boat-well a rummy is protected by a legal barrier which defies anything but a search warrant.

Ecorse is the domain of the Purple Gang, a subsidiary of the Chicago outfit. Its "gorilla" is George Cordell. There are other gangs which operate along here, and the river as a whole serves as a channel not only for tremendous liquor smuggling operations but also for an extensive traffic in dope and aliens. The smuggling of women to supply resorts in the mining and lumber camps of the northwest is particularly lucrative.

Canadian smugglers make a good thing out of the alien racket. Some of the aliens are not even landed in the United States. A fee is collected from them on the Canadian beach (often as much as $500 for a Chinaman), and then they are taken over to Grasse Ile. Here the smugglers direct them to the bridge which leads to the American mainland, and themselves depart for Canada. When the aliens reach the bridge they are picked up by the Immigration Service and deported.

The 236 was continuing to capture rummies with a good deal of regularity when I received orders to report to Rasmussen at the Base at Buffalo. He seemed to be not at all pleased by the way things were going, but I was allowed to return to the Detroit River. Immediately upon our return we sighted a big gray lugger that we had run in a few days before. They refused to stop at our whistle, and we let go a couple of blank cartridges in the one-pounder. That night the newspapers gave us a front-page razzing for firing directly at the shore-line where hundreds of innocent people were. This seemed a trifle rough on us, inasmuch as we had used blanks. Furthermore, there were no innocent people living in that section of Ecorse.

As we continued to make captures our relations with the rummies became curious. One morning when the 236 was tied up at the foot of Elm street, Herman Richards, reputed to be a "big shot" in the Purple Gang, drove down to the dock. Richards called to Goebel, the only man top-sides, and asked to see me. Goebel told him I was not in the habit of talking with strangers, and Richards then talked to Goebel. He said he had been in the army and was pretty good with an MG (machine gun). He said he had an MG in Ecorse, and that if Casey and the 236 remained in the river he would use it.

Goebel gave him as good as he sent. He told Richards that I had remarked that if any of the Ecorse gang got fresh I'd put a line on their boats and boat-wells and tow "the whole damned business up the river."

Two hours after that, when I was alone in the pilot house, a stranger called to me from the dock. He said he was "Jimmy Schuppe of Chicago." He didn't beat about the bush. "Well, Casey," he said, "I want you to do a job for us. It'll only take two days, and you'll get 15 grand. Another gang's hijacked us out of a brewery up north, and we're gonna take it back again; see?"

It was obvious no such job could be worth $15,000.

"What have I got to do with it?" I said.

"Just take that machine gun and come along. That will scare the other guys out; see?"

"While this flattering offer was being made I kept my eyes on Mr. Schuppe's automobile, parked in the shadows, in which sat three men. I was careful to remain inside the pilot house with the radio cabinet between myself and the car. I had no intention of being 'put on the spot.'"

Mr. Schuppe finally left, followed by my advice to get out of the Detroit River before he became a nuisance.

Several days followed in which we were kept busy boarding boats. The newspapers were full of our activities, and liquor prices in Detroit had gone up.

It was at this time that the rummies tried to make a "connection." It began when Cordell started sending 50-cent cigars wrapped in foil aboard the 236 for the crew. A small boy would come to the dock with them and say, "Mr. Cordell sent them." I always opened the packages in the presence of the crew to show that there were no bills inside.

One evening Cordell circled the 236 in a powerboat until he was hailed and boarded. That was what he wanted.

"You're trying to make a record, aren't you?" he asked me.

"Sure," I replied.

"I'll be willing to help you," the gorilla declared generously.

"How?"

"Well, I'll give you two seizures every night," Cordell said. "You get the boats, but you don't get the men. See? You take the beer, and I'll take the whisky."

Cordell made other attempts at "connections." Once he offered me a Packard roadster. Another time a $75 dress, mysteriously paid for, was delivered to my wife from a store. It went back. Perhaps Cordell got it.

The days passed and the 236 got low on supplies. Because of Government "red tape" we had to run more than 100 miles to our base for new supplies. Not wishing to leave the area uncovered I arranged for a picket boat to patrol the upper end of the area, while I patrolled the shore in my automobile.

A few minutes before midnight I came upon three men near a creek where a lugger had just put in. They stopped in their tracks. Then, seeing the white top on my cap, two of them broke into a run. The third stood his ground until I was within ten feet of him and then ran. I called him to stop or I would shoot. He turned abruptly and fired. The bullet ripped through the flesh of my left arm. I shot at him and he stumbled and then ran again. I saw him rejoin his comrades.

Returning to the Customs base, I learned that my picket boat had knocked off a load of liquor off Point Hennepin just about the time I was having my party.

It was just after this affair that Commander Rasmussen summoned me before him. During an abusive reprimand he accused me of being off my patrol area, and said the area had been left uncovered while the 236 was on its trip for supplies.

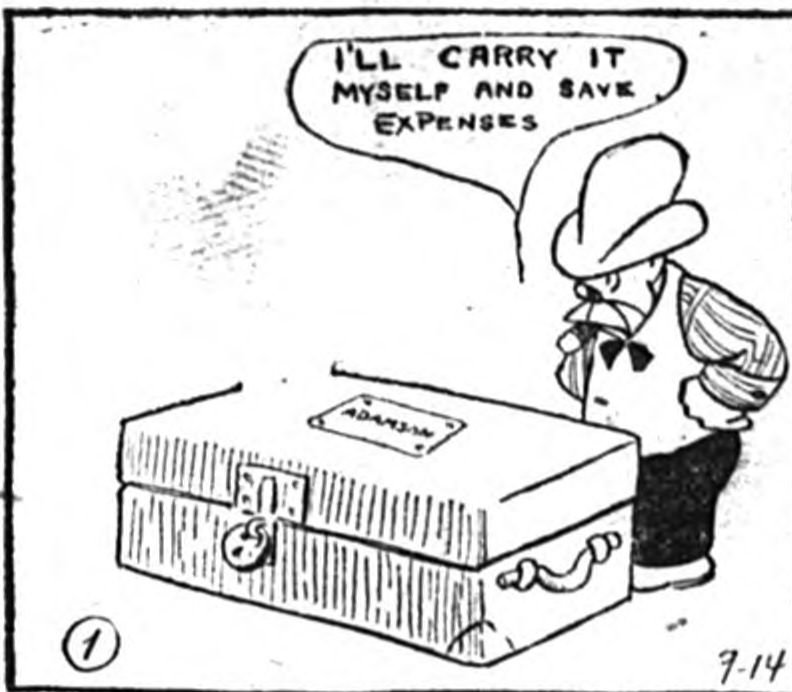

Pointing out to him that I had been shot in my own area during the time he alleged it had been uncovered, and that the picket boat had seized a rummy on the same night, failed to impress him.

I went to Buffalo very much disheartened. While packing my gear on board the boat George Cordell came down to see me. He said, "You are the squarest guy the government ever put in this river. But you raised so much hell we had to get rid of you. It cost us five grand to get you out, but you're gone."—Plain Talk.

The Modiste—"It's all down on my books and figures don't lie." Mr. Booksmith—"The things you've done to my wife's figure have made it very deceiving."

ADAMSON'S ADVENTURES—By O. Jacobsson

The Pearl Standard

A story condensed from "The World Traveler" by J. George Frederick to show what the Japanese have done.

You have heard of the panic which would occur if alchemists should discover how to make gold. The "gold standard" would totter. Something of this situation occurred with regard to the "pearl standard," after the Japanese learned how to make "cultured" pearls which none but experts could distinguish. But French courts have decided that cultured pearls are entitled to the name pearl, and so the "pearl standard" is even now in process of adjustment.

It is difficult indeed to find somebody with any real pearl to sell. Few have a bank roll big enough to buy even one or two, to say nothing of a "rope" of them. The true, natural pearl comes from the Indian Ocean, the Persian Gulf, Central America, West Indies, Australia, and the Japanese Islands. Of these the Australian pearl fisheries are the important source. In fact, pearl divers from the Indian Ocean are coming to Australia, and nearly all the Japanese in Australia are in the pearl business.

Today the Japanese are more or less the decisive factor in the pearl industry, both real and "cultured." They are the most daring, persistent, and scientific divers and the most aggressive merchandisers. The little yellow men, recruited from the seafaring stock of the Japanese shores, have a fatalism mixed up in with their science, which makes an ideal pearl fishing combination. At depths no other divers have attempted they are serene and efficient. They go 30 fathoms deep and more; they call 7 to 20 fathoms "shallow water."

Woman claims equal rights with man in Japan as a pearl diver. Before the Jap girl is 15 she knows all about diving, and the pearl merchant often hires her as an expert before she enters her teens! From February to December she, with the Japanese men, dives 25 to 35 times a day, coming up with as many oysters as she can grab before her breath gives out. She remains at a depth of 20 fathoms for two minutes without ill effects. She brings up about 50 oysters per dive, and there is good-natured competition. A girl of 12 from Shima holds the record with 72 oysters—and they had almost turned away for being too young. The diver has no easy task, for the shell lying on the bottom is generally hard to see, as its back is often covered with various kinds of marine growth and may be in marine grass two or three feet high. The pearl fishers consist of a fleet of "luggers," with a two-masted schooner as a mother ship. The oysters are dumped on the decks, and opened by white men specially appointed for the task.

What is a pearl anyway? The healthy parent oyster lays thousands of eggs a year, but they float on the surface of the sea until they hatch. The tiny bivalve, using a greenish fiber-root sticking out of it, clings to anything it can, and feeds on the microscopic vegetable and animal forms in the water. Shifting about with the tides, it finally clings to the seabed with its byssus root until it grows and anchors itself for life—or until a fierce-looking diver grabs it. Oysters have other enemies, however; turtles crack open their shells, fish attack them and worst of all, borers which gradually, like an auger go through the shell and kill—or if they can't kill, perhaps bring into being a pearl. The parasite borer, or often a worm spewed out by a small fish in the neighborhood of the shell, penetrates to the oyster, irritates the very delicate but hardy oyster substance, and a pearl results! It takes years, of course—years of building layer upon layer of "nacre." Strange enough, these large oysters from the deep sea are not like the delicate bivalve we order in a restaurant—they are coarse in flavor. The gathering of shells under five inches in diameter is illegal. On deck they are opened with a large-handled knife and thrown away when no pearl is found. In 3000 or 4000 shells only one may be found, and then it may not be very valuable.

Before the Christian era the Chinese tried to propagate pearls, and artificial pearls were first made, though not very successfully, in 1680. The Chinese had hit upon the intimate secret of the pearl—that it was the result of an irritant. They introduced bits of wood or mud into the oyster shell, put the oysters in vats for three or four years, and actually achieved pearls. For centuries they carried this on; but the catch to this easy road to high fortune is that the resulting pearls are dull, flat white, the real pearl being lustrous with a very rare luster. Science in modern days has penetrated deeper into this precious secret. The little borer is partly responsible; he bores through the shell; is met by a secretion as a defense, dies, is oxidized, and the pearl remains as a defense. A French writer put it cleverly, "A pearl which milady loves next her delicate skin is the brilliant sarcophagus of a worm."

Here is where the Japs come in with their "cultured" or "nurtured" pearls. They doped it out that a tiny bit of chemically treated mother-of-pearl (the same substance as is on the lining of the shell) introduced into the oyster shell would form the correct nucleus for growing a real pearl. The experiment produced pearls which did have a very fine luster, and the Japs sold them as natural Oriental pearls throughout the world for a considerable time. When the English pearl expert, H. C. Hopkins, together with a staff succeeded in devising a machine which now absolutely determines the difference between true Oriental pearls and the cultured ones. The basis of this power of detection is the fact that the concentric layers of nacre forming the true pearl have a power of reflecting and transmitting light, which is the true distinguishing mark of the gem. The beautiful pearl appearance is due to an optical phenomenon—the interference of rays of light reflected from microscopic corrugations on the surface of the pearl.

Mr. Hopkins says: "The Japanese pearls have the appearance of yellowish lumps of lard, the true pearls remaining perfectly white. I explain this coloring by the presence of the chemical with which the mother-of-pearl nucleus is treated in order to increase the secretion by the oyster. A very simple test is made with a needle provided with a tiny mirror. This being introduced into the hole bored through the pearl the nucleus will at once be apparent if it is a Japanese cultivated pearl."

"Women often ask if it is possible to distinguish upon the wearer's neck, at a distance of two yards, between a collar of Japanese pearls and one of natural pearls. It is impossible thus to tell false pearls from the genuine, just as it is impossible at a glance to tell an original work of art from a copy." Thus science becomes the only true arbiter of the preciousness of stones!

The popularity of pearls has enormously increased in the last ten years, as the limitation or nurtured or artificial pearls have been put upon the market. The long-suppressed desire of women to own pearls was given an opportunity, and to-day strings of "pearls" are sold in great quantity for a couple of dollars—good enough at least to serve as a tribute to the great esteem in which true pearls are held.

"I suppose the boss was annoyed when you told him I was leaving next week?" "Yes, he thought it was this week."

"Undoubtedly there is a lot of luck in every successful career."—Bruce Barton.

Regular Care Helps Car to Retain Value

How much it costs a mile to operate automobiles is an amount which has to be figured for each kind of automobile. In fact, each individual automobile would have to be studied carefully in order to get anything like an exact figure. The amount, however, is probably higher than the average motorist suspects. One person who has a small six-cylinder coach type of car has figured out a cost of 11.73 cents a mile. Of this amount he has estimated 2.4 cents for depreciation. He is a man who takes rather good care of his car and consequently his depreciation is doubtless lower than most. Some car owners are certainly experiencing a depreciation of their machines of from 3 to 5 per cent.

There are certain items in operating an automobile which one cannot well eliminate. For instance, it is necessary to buy a certain amount of gasoline to get over a certain number of miles of highway, and gasoline costs about so much wherever you buy it. Even here a person can cut down the gasoline expense by seeing to it that the engine is working so as to get the most number of miles out of every gallon of gasoline.

Good Care is Repaid
In the item of depreciation, the automobile owner has the greatest opportunity for eliminating useless expense in his automobile experience. By taking unusually good care of his car he can get many additional years of service and consequently greatly reduce the depreciation item.

In a new automobile engine the inside of the cylinder is a perfect circle, but after a few years of service the cylinder most likely will need to be reground. When the automobile engine is built the piston cannot be fitted to form an airtight joint, since the temperature of the engine varies in accordance with the amount of heat generated in the engine, these temperature variations in turn causing the piston and the cylinder to expand and contract, although not to the same degree. In this way a piston which at a certain temperature fitted the cylinder perfectly would expand enough to stick fast in the cylinder at another temperature. It is possible that at yet another degree it would fit the cylinder loosely, causing a great deal of noise and loss of gas through leakage past the piston during the compression period.

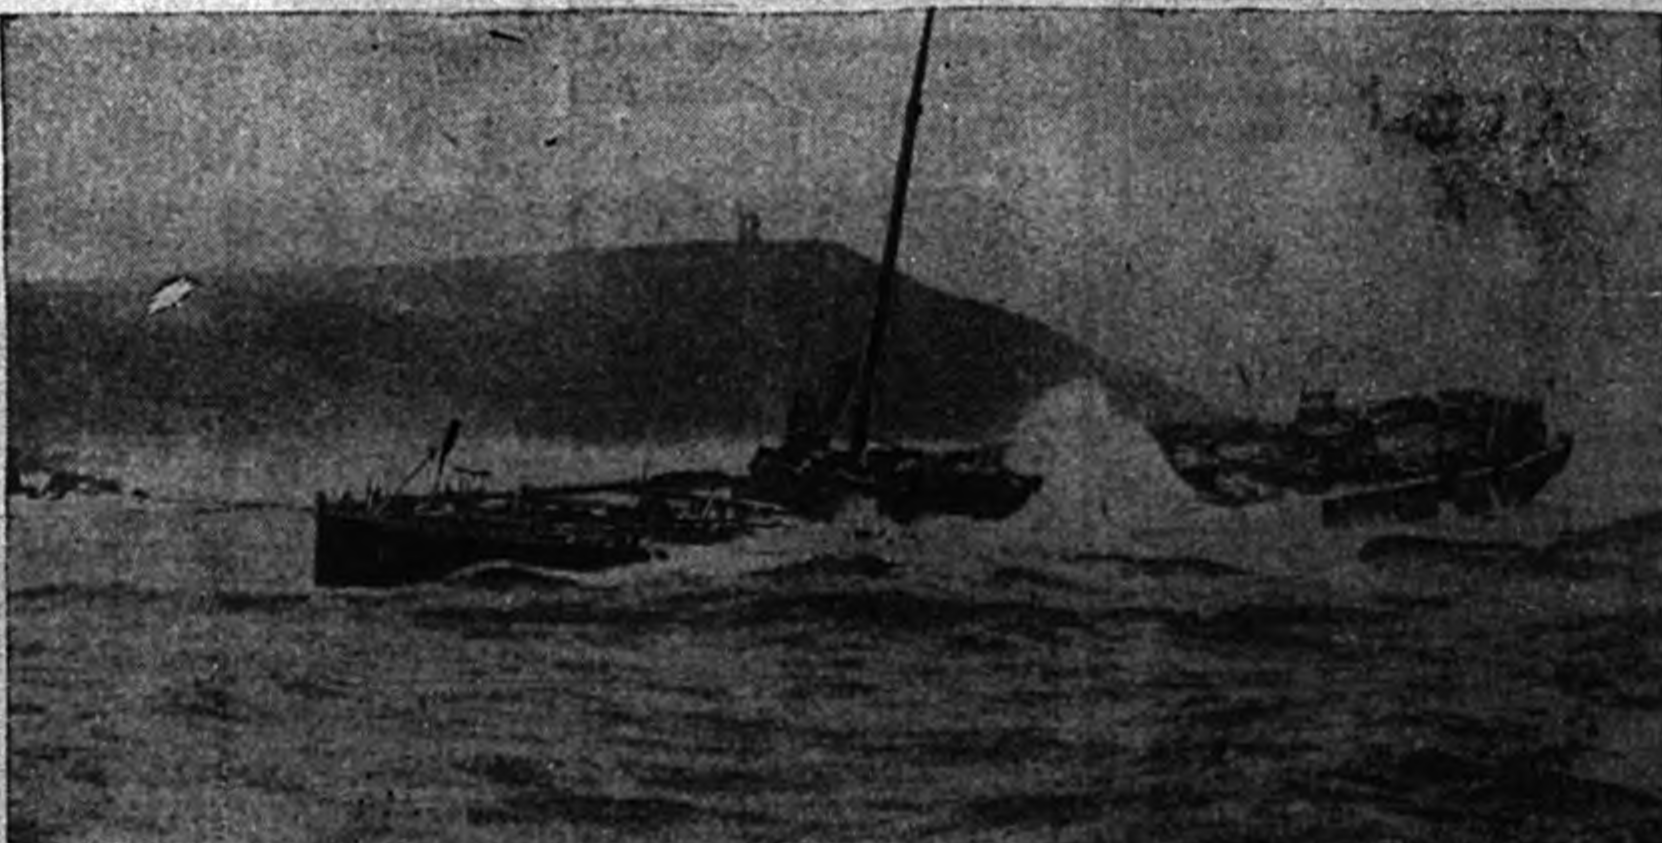

How Contact is Retained
To secure a gas-tight contact with the cylinder wall the piston has several flexible rings which expand outward, forming a perfect contact with the cylinder wall. They have sufficient elasticity to keep this contact, as the cylinder expands and contracts because of the changes in temperature.

The power for operating the engine is produced through the pressure of the expanding gas which forces the piston straight out of the cylinder. Through the resistance of the crankshaft, which is connected to the piston by means of the connecting rod, the piston is forced with considerable pressure against the side of the cylinder, because during the power stroke the crankpin is traveling through an arc at one side of the center of the piston, instead of directly under it. It is this side thrust on the piston which tends to wear away one side of the cylinder wall. How quickly this wear takes place depends upon several factors, probably the most important being "the perfection of the lubricator" of the parts.

As this wear takes place the cylinder loses its original circular shape, becoming oval, and the piston-rings not being flexible enough to fill in the worn space naturally allow leakage of the compressed gas. Due to this leakage, several kinds of trouble follow. The gas which is being compressed passes by the piston, in this way reducing the power generated by the engine, and as the gas condenses in the crankcase the oil is diluted and its lubricating quality somewhat impaired. On the suction stroke too much oil may be drawn past the piston into the combustion chamber, where it burns, causing smoke and forming carbon, which causes knocking of the engine. This carbon gets under the valves, resulting in loss of compression and short-circuits the spark plugs, which makes the engine miss fire.

Restoring the cylinder to its original form of a perfect circle and fitting new pistons and rings to it will relieve these troubles, the best way to accomplish this being by having the cylinder reground. This is done by the use of emery or carborundum wheels on a machine designed particularly for this work, a delicate operation requiring the skilled services of a high-grade mechanic in this line.

One advantage in taking good care of a car is that it will help one to be able to own two cars, which is becoming increasingly desirable. When a car has given several years of service it fit is well taken care of it still has several more years of possible use. By this time the owner is probably able to buy a new car, but by having the old machine still in good shape so that it can be used when road conditions are not so favorable, he will not only get additional service out of the old car but also a much longer and better use of his new automobile.

FAIR PLAY FOR LABOUR

The Conservative party has served the worker in Canada well.

Its fundamental policy is to provide for him a market in Canada for his work, whether it be work on the farm, in the factory, the mine or the forest.

Closely allied with that fundamental has been insistence that he receive fair compensation for his labour. There is no encouragement for the dairy or poultry farmer, for the fruit and vegetable grower or for the grain grower if he be forced to work eighteen hours a day and accept non-profitable prices for his labour. The same holds true of the industrial worker, though for him the situation is perhaps even more discouraging. Where he is not given a fair chance against mass production, or cheap labour of foreign countries, he cannot find employment at any price.

Such encouragement as the worker has received can be traced very largely to Conservative legislation or to Conservative pressure on other Governments. An outstanding illustration of the latter benefit has just been announced. For two years in parliament Conservatives have fought for eight hour day on government works, whether carried out by private contracts or not, and for the eight hour day for the civil service. For two years they have fought to have the government compel those carrying out government contracts to pay fair wages. Less than a month ago it was shown that on public works in Nova Scotia a wage of 20 cents per hour was paid. The same work received 35 to 45 cents per hour in Ottawa and up to 55 cents per hour further west. The workmen in all three cases were Canadians, subject to the same common taxation and the same laws.

The climax came March 31 when the Government bowed to the pressure of criticism and announced that the eight hour day would be made effective on all Government works and services and the Minister of Public Works has promised that fair wages will be paid. This is another and distinct contribution of the Conservative party to the welfare of the Canadian worker.

The debate on the Australian treaty now lies embalmed between the covers of the House of Commons Hansard. It closed with two divisions, which by virtue of the opposing positions into which the Conservative and Progressive oppositions had been placed, resulted in majorities of 52 and 114 for the government.

The two amendments which the government faced on the treaty, one from the Progressives asking for abrogation and another from the Conservatives urging revision, were such that neither party could support the proposal of the other. The vote was taken first on the Conservative proposal for revision. After having taken their stand for abrogation the Progressives could not support it and thus prevent their own amendment from being called. Then when the Progressive amendment was put the Conservatives were similarly situated. There was no sentiment amongst their benches for abrogation since it was recognized that certain Canadian products were finding a market under the treaty and that the present time of industrial depression was not one in which to abandon any outlet for the country's goods. Hence the majorities, which the government received.

The issue will undoubtedly supply campaign material during the forthcoming election. The government's adamant stand of "no abrogation or no revision," taken by Finance Minister Dunning, was thoroughly at variance with the Conservative view, which urged equitable revision of the treaty in the interests of further development of the lumber, newsprint, and fishing industries of British Columbia particularly and Canada generally.

The significant note in the debate was undoubtedly the admission by Progressive members, notable T. W. Bird of Nelson, Manitoba, and E. W. Lucas, of Camrose, Alberta, that protection was gaining ground amongst the farmers on the prairies. Mr. Bird admitted the fact more in sorrow and perturbation, than in speaking as himself a convert. "It is no use running away from the fact that because it is ugly," Mr. Bird said. "We may regret it, but we must face the fact that in recent years there has been a definite trend towards the idea of protection amongst the farmers. The farmers to the South have been protectionists for years, so why not the farmers of Manitoba?" Mr. Lucas was even more significant, admitting himself an advocate of at least one form of protection. "Some Hon. Members in this house representing agriculture," Mr. Lucas said, "have taken the stand that protection does not benefit the farmer. I am free to admit that under the general principle of protection the farmer does not gain the benefit which is afforded industry generally. But on those commodities in which the farmer is not on an export basis I am of the opinion that he does not get a benefit."

The Senate has again resumed its activities. It has one important subject before it, namely the Liquor Clearance Bill, but so far its only action has been to give the measure a formal first reading. Second reading is put down for Tuesday next, but it is doubtful if the bill will be proceeded with then. The expectation is that in any event the bill on second reading stage will be referred to a special committee, with the prospect that witnesses will be summoned to give evidence concerning the general border situation which it purports to remedy.

The other subject of major importance to which the Senate has given consideration has been the request of the Commons for members from it to sit on the committee investigating returned soldier problems. The Senators have taken the attitude that they cannot appoint members to the committee, since such members would be debarred from any say in the final disposition of the bill which the committee will recommend. Senators have intimated their willingness, however to sit with the committee without status and hear the evidence, in order that the Senate may be more fully informed of the problems involved when legislation finally comes from the Commons.

The house is expecting daily the annual report of the C. N. R. lines. The lowered earnings which it is expected to reveal, due to the decreased volume of trade generally and of grain in particular, was forecast in supplementary estimates of $5,638,030, which were brought into the Commons for the road. Of the total approximately $1,900,000 is understood to be required because of deficiency in revenues resulting from a lowered volume of traffic. Another $4,171,000 is for the purpose of purchasing securities from the Grand Trunk Western in the lieu of the usual cash advances which have been made to this subsidiary in the past for capital expenditures. The remaining $627,000 represents an additional amount which the Maritime freight rates have earned during the past year under the subvention provided as a result of the Duncan report.

Boys and Girls Must be Well if to be Well-educated

This is the Practical Moral of Sir George Newman's Report to the Nation on the Authorities Who "Are the Builders of a New World."

"The pretty children in the 'beauty' contests of to-day are well-nurtured and well-cared-for children, just as the classical portraits of the pretty children of the eighteenth century represented the children of the prudent or the rich."

"Yet in the same period that Gainsborough painted 'Rustic Children,' 'The Cottage Door,' 'Lavinia,' and 'The Blue Boy,' the nation's children as a whole were being grossly and wantonly neglected, and the nation paid a terrible price for that neglect."—Sir George Newman, Chief Medical Officer of the Board of Education, in his report for 1928 on "The Health of the School Child."

Twice a year Sir George Newman speaks to the nation, once as Chief Medical Officer to the Ministry of Health and the second time in his capacity as Medical Officer to the Ministry of Education. This week his report in the latter capacity is issued, and Sir George says:—

"There are two main considerations to bear in mind. First, the medical inspection and treatment of school children was placed by Parliament in an Education Act, to be carried out by the local education authorities and under the direction of the Board of Education."

"Its primary purpose was to fit the children to receive the education provided by the State, and that purpose could only be fulfilled if such medical care was organized as an integral part of the education system of the country, to be paid for out of the education rate, to be undertaken at school age, on school premises. In school hours and with the necessary assistance of school officers and in association with the school curriculum (which includes hygiene and physical training) and the 'special' schools for defective children. We must not overlook the fact that these are determining conditions, both as regards purpose and the practical way of fulfilling them."

Must Be Dealt With in the Schools
"The intimate association of medical care, school hygiene and physical training with the educational system is obviously sound and rests on sure foundation. The physique and mentality of the child are complementary to each other. They cannot be separately treated without disadvantage."

"With a compulsory system of elementary education in being, we can no more deal with the school children outside that system than we can deal with an enlisted soldier outside the army."

"The health of the school children is also obviously a part of the health of the community, and therefore the subject of school hygiene and the school medical service is part of the Public Health Service and should not be divorced from it."

"The school medical service has materially affected the direction of the wider movement of the national health. For, in a sense, the health of the infant and the child has become the primary factor of the national health. It has given it a trend and a character different from the old environmental sanitation of the early nineteenth century. The child has become the starting point of the new preventive medicine."

The Builders of a New World
"We see that unless we begin prevention in childhood, and perhaps even in maturity, we do not really prevent at all. This alone should give inspiration to all authorities and persons engaged in this service—for they are the builders of a new world."

"During 1928, 1,912,747 children or 25.4 per cent. of those in average attendance (4,381,101) in the elementary schools were medically examined, an increase of 89,972 on the preceding year. This increase is due to the large number of children in the intermediate age group who were examined, whereas in the entrant and leaver age groups there is a slight decrease."

"In addition, 936,385 children referred for some special reason by parents, school teachers, or school nurses were medically examined. The total number of children subjected to medical inspection was thus 2,849,132, being 57.2 per cent. of the number in average attendance. The volume of reinspection, reflecting the efficiency of the arrangements for keeping children previously found to be subnormal or suffering from specific defects under periodical medical supervision amounted to 1,364,138."

"In London and elsewhere a number of valuable inquiries have been made into different aspects of the incidence and causation of defective vision."

"During 1928 the local returns show that 161,840 spectacles were prescribed, and 146,529 or 90.5 per cent. obtained. There is still some delay and leakage which represents a waste of time and money spent on examination. Close following-up of cases for whom spectacles are prescribed, and satisfactory arrangements for their supply are always necessary. At Bristol, only 5 out of 1,589 children for whom spectacles were prescribed failed to obtain them; and in London upwards of 90 per cent. of 28,000 spectacles prescribed were obtained."

"I cannot escape the conclusion that progress halts," writes Sir George on the problem of physical education, "because the real importance of the subject is not understood or is disregarded by many local education authorities."

"They are all too often deterred by the thralldom of an obsolete tendency to regard physical culture as a sort of trespass or encroachment upon the accepted and stereotyped form of education, what Huxley called the bookishness and 'mass education' of the elementary school system."

"There are still worthy people who, being ignorant of physiology, live in an unreal world, and are even yet unaware that unless and until you cultivate and develop the body and brain of the child all attempts at intellectual instruction will prove futile. They are the witnesses of the triumphant Contributions of the Boy Scout Movement and render it a lip service of praise, but they decline to learn from it."

"Yet its lesson is profoundly true and full of meaning to all educationalists in this generation. It is a lesson of physical discipline, of educational adventure, of youthful training and glad obedience; it is one of the wise interpretations of that service which is perfect freedom; it educates by equipping the body first and drawing out its faculties and senses; it both harnesses and develops the boy and leads him of his own interest and desire into the path of manual work and the arts and crafts; it trains men not for the classroom or the pedagogue but for life. Thus, it has become a vast health education movement, doing for the boy what the education authority all too often fails to do. It is perhaps the greatest demonstration in practical education that the world has seen."

Prior to School Age if Possible
One-quarter to one-third of the children admitted to school at five are in need of medical attention before they can receive the education which the State provides for them."

"If they could be helped before they are five," says Sir George, "we should do something, sensible as well as scientific, to turn off the tap of this great burden of disease and defect which tracks these children into their school life. The age under five is the susceptible age for body and mind. It is the crucial age, psychologically as well as physically."

"Praise of Idleness"

London Daily Chronicle (Lib.): "It is not only uneconomic and unfair, but against the nation's interest for women to work for 'pin-money' and deprive other people of legitimate work."—J. H. Thomas. The advice which Mr. Thomas—we have in a moment of inadvertence—proffered is that of the old discredited doctrine which sought to justify limited output and 'canny' and similar fallacies so ruinous to industry. The Lord Privy Seal's job at the moment is, not to preach idleness, but to encourage every able-bodied man and woman in the country to work as hard as they can for their own prosperity and the prosperity of others."

Shun no toil to make yourself remarkable by some one talent. Yet do not devote yourself to one branch exclusively. Strive to get clear notions about all. Give up no science entirely, for all science is one.—Seneca.

Harold Begbie: A Requiem

Harold Begbie has gone to where, beyond these voices, there is peace. His work in this world is behind him; he is part of that great Future that awaits us all.

For more than a generation he had been writing in papers and books. He was writing poetry for a London newspaper when poems were measured by foot-rules, and he received a cheque for 136 inches of poetry at 2s. 6d. an inch. He must have written as much as any man in the world whose writing was worth reading. He was half through his life when this century began, and in less than thirty years he wrote more than fifty books. He wrote because he must; it was life to him and he could not leave it. He wrote enough to make many reputations, for he wrote novels and poetry, essays, an autobiography, and journalism too.

He had a way with him that took him anywhere. He could knock at any door and be welcome. He knew everybody and everybody liked him. No man had more famous friends. He worked hard because a writer must, but he found time to travel, and he had seen most of the great cities of the world. But he loved most to be at home in the finest little country on the earth. He loved every part of it. He bought or built or rented houses one after the other in Devon, in Surrey, in Dorset, in Sussex, in Suffolk, in Yorkshire, in London, and in Hampshire, houses with the little gardens that he loved, or with the moor about him, or with a great forest seen from his windows, or with the Channel at his garden end. He loved beautiful things and he had them about him always.

A Week of Great Hope
He believed in goodness and in God. He knew that all was well, however dark the hour might be. He was brave and enduring, and nothing could shake his faith that to the good man no evil thing can happen. He had his share of anxieties of these days. He had much suffering, and he lay from summer to autumn knowing that his sun was setting; but the world that came from his bedside was always that his spirit was happy and calm.

There was a week in the middle of his illness when a great hope came. He was brought from his bed in a little study in the New Forest to a nursing home in London, a bright sunny place looking out to the playing fields of Westminster School. The hope that a grave operation might save his life, and that he might pick up his work again and be with his wife and three children, gave him his last visions of the future for this world. It proved a false hope. All that human resource could do was done in vain. The dreaded thing was there, eating this splendid life away.

He insisted on knowing the truth, and his heart stood the test. "Never have I seen anyone more brave," said the doctor who told him. He sent a message to a friend, "Have heard verdict and am well content; but how can I ever be thankful enough for so much love?" Even then he was thinking of others; as for himself, he was free from care and fear for the journey he must take alone.

They took him back to the New Forest to live a few more weeks. It was a glorious sunny day, and it was his last ride through the country he had loved so well. He declared that he enjoyed it all. At home again his longing was to finish some work he had begun on learning that he was to die. His first thought, when the blow first fell, was that he had something to tell which was not yet said, and he dictated 30,000 words expecting that every day might be his last.

But now the word from his bedside was that his beautiful deep voice had gone, though he would lie talking in a whisper, as his daughter wrote, of brave, sweet, lovely things, snatches of poetry and the Bible, and old memories. He talked of a little life that is just unfolding, and asked that it should be brought up in the spirit of the Third Epistle of Saint John. He talked of books and hopeful things, and the Great Adventure on which he was soon to go; and he lay all the time, whether suffering or free from pain, as if he were saying that nothing was there for fears.

The Rainbow
Then he passed away in perfect peace as a new morning broke over the New Forest, and as he passed a rainbow shone over the fields.

He has left his mark on the world. He has entertained and informed and inspired a host of readers of his generation. He wrote one of the most famous books connected with the war and kept its authorship a secret till he died; he wrote it with a touch of adventure which his friends will always remember as an act of great courage, happily well rewarded. He gave the Salvation Army its most famous book in Broken Earthward, and its noble Life of General Booth. He wrote a book in defence of Lord Haldane which will be read when Lord Haldane's detractors are forgotten. When Earl Grey lay dying he asked for Harold Begbie and begged him to write his last message to the world.

He has delighted a wide and famous company of friends in every walk of life; in great houses as well as in cottages there would be tears when the news came. He has left books behind that will live a long, long time, and he has left a name that will endure. Perhaps he wrote too much for the journalist's world is so full of wonder that he cannot stop. But he was a poet too, with something of the crusader in him. He had music in his heart and fire in his soul. He could write on anything at any time with a touch of pure genius, and yet, such a fountain of life and wit was he, it seemed always that the best was yet to come.

He Shall Grow Not Old

He never grew old. He was 58, but years could not dim his vision. His faith was anchored to eternal things, his knowledge was deep-rooted in the past. He knew that the vanities of this world are as nothing.

Now that he is gone there are those to whom the world will never be the same again. It will be a lonely place, a place to remember in, and for them the world will be worth while for the sake of the thought, the certain thought, that life goes on and work goes on. The things that fade in this world shine brightly in the next.—A.M.

Criminals Found In Foreign Legion

Surrender of "Wanted" Man Dispels Idea of Hiding Place

Sidi-Bel-Abbes, Algeria.—By surrendering a murderer to the civilian police to stand trial for a crime committed previous to his enlistment, the French Foreign Legion has caused earnest confabs in the barracks here and the places frequented by the legionnaires. For years the idea has been generally accepted that no matter what crime a man was accused of in civil life, he was safe from persecution so long as he remained in the Foreign Legion.

Civilian detectives have long complained that when they called at headquarters, evasive answers were received concerning alleged criminals whom they sought. Or, by strange coincidences, it appeared that these men had been detailed for service in the lower Sahara or on the fringe of the Hoggar, where the hand of the law, lengthy as it is reputed to be, was too short to reach.

"A man is known in the legion by the name under which he enlisted and that alone," a correspondent was once told at headquarters here. "His former private life does not concern us and we are not concerned with it." This confidence was volunteered at the time of the release of the American, Bennett J. Doty, of Biloxi, Miss. The case had filled the newspapers of both hemispheres for several weeks and the Paris papers for days had reached Sidi-bel-Abbes with long accounts of how, owing to the representations of the visiting American Legion to France—that was in 1927—Bennett J. Doty, sentenced to eight years' prison for desertion, would be released. Yet, the correspondent had noted on the desk of Colonel Rollet, commander of the Legion, a stack of telegrams addressed to Bennett J. Doty, and which had remained undelivered.

"We don't know any Bennett J. Doty here," the colonel volunteered. "We know one Gilbert Clare, of Memphis, Tenn., but I don't suppose you are interested in him." Clare was the name under which Doty had enlisted and been sentenced.

Recently two Paris detectives arrived at Sidi-bel-Abbes and told the colonel: "We have a warrant here for Gaston Froissart, who killed his grandmother with an axe in 1926, robbed her and then enlisted in the legion as Rene Bernard." "Prove to me that Bernard and Froissart are the same man," the colonel asked. Bernard was sent for, Bertillon measurements were produced, establishing the identity of the man as Froissart without the shadow of a doubt. "You can have him," said the colonel.

Froissart is on his way to Paris to go before the Assizes and many of his former companions in the legion are wondering whether this means a radical change in the policy which they had always believed ruled in the dealings of the legion authorities with the plain clothes police. One corporal then summed up the situation:

"It served him right for killing his grandmother with an axe and robbing her. Perhaps if it had been a real stand-up murder between men, it would have made a difference."

Maru Names

By GEORGE GARDNER

"I can tell you why we give our ships Maru names," said Captain Yoshisuke Arakida, "but it will take quite a long time, and it maybe will make you have to think."

When I asked the Japanese sea captain to tell me why the merchant ships of his country are called Asama Maru, Chichibu Maru—always a combination of words ending with Maru—I thought I was asking merely for a translation.

It was a great deal more. In fact the little captain appeared reluctant to undertake the difficult task of putting a complicated Japanese idea into what he considered cumbersome English. But I was very eager, and his typical Oriental courtesy would not permit him to refuse.

"Maru means something round—a ball," he said, moving his hands gently as if to caress a beautiful globe.

"We in Japan like curves and circles. We dislike square things, or anything with angles. Our furniture, even, has no angles—like that," pointing to a square table beside us. "If a man is displeasing to us we will say, maybe, that he is angular."

The Japanese adjective meaning square, "shikaku," as a noun is translated "assassin." With magnificent inconsistency, however, the Japanese admire poets and yet use "shikaku" to mean poet.

"This thing," he continued, "is in our language—our likes and dislikes. The Japanese think and speak like writers, they are—I think you would say 'literary-minded.'"

"So just like they call something that is displeasing angular, something that they like is round, or Maru. Years ago, too, this was true. The Japanese liked round things, and they liked Maru after the name of some one or something they liked. A prince of royal blood, perhaps, would have a Maru name, or a fine sword, and that is true now of many things."

"Hige-kiri Maru" is a name that Japanese sometimes have given to their swords, the first part referring to its brilliance and speed.

"A castle would have a Maru name. It is splendid, it is admired, and it deserves that it has a fine name. You see?"

"Well, then, long ago Japanese people built ships. There were many kinds—some fine, some little and ugly. The Koreans, too, built ships, and the Japanese didn't like the Koreans and didn't like their ships. The fine ships they gave Maru names. The little ugly ones, and the ones that reminded of Korean ships, had only names."

"For many years Japanese people saw only these ships of their own, until our ports were opened and other nations' ships came in. Then we saw their big men-of-war that were not like our fighting ships. The Japanese, too, built these men-of-war, and at the first gave them Maru names."

"Now the men-of-war do not have Maru names—only the merchantmen. Why? They are different. It is the merchantmen that are Maru. She is the floating castle. It doesn't mean all ships except fighting ships. The little fishing boats, no. Only merchantmen, the floating castles."

The fact that a battleship's armament makes it resemble a fortified castle seems not to have impressed the Japanese, unless with the idea that the modern gun-turrets are not Maru, while an ancient castle's bulwarks are. A student of Oriental languages and customs to whom Captain Arakida's explanation was repeated insisted that all Oriental idioms were without consistency, and the Maru tradition, with which he happened not to be entirely familiar, surprised him with its logical following up of a central idea.

Oriental languages are replete with words that are known as indicators. Such a word, for example, may be used in the term for anything with a hole in it, whether a Chinese coin, a doughnut, or an automobile tire, or another may indicate something that has the form of a stick. And many of them are as rich in tradition as is Maru.

Canadian Pacific Railway Friday night broadcasts are now being sent out across the Dominion from coast to coast. Letters are being received from all parts of Canada in appreciation of the programmes and of the radio receptions in all centres. Arrangements have been made with the National Broadcasting Company of the United States to place special C. P. R. programmes on the air, early in April, over WJZ to thickly populated sections of the Eastern United States.

Veteran of 65 years railway service and one of Canada's earliest telegraph operators, William Phillip Martin, formerly assistant superintendent of the Canadian Pacific Railway, died in Vancouver recently. He learned telegraphy from his father when a boy and became a chief despatcher at the age of 18.

Discovery of a new species of whitefish in Clear Lake, Manitoba, is announced by A. Bajkov of Manitoba University. The new species has been named Coregonus Odonoghuei, in honor of Dr. C. H. O'Donoghue, formerly of the faculty of Manitoba University. The newly-discovered fish is common in Clear Lake. It lives at a great depth during the summer, coming to the surface only in the spawning season.

Sixty head of pedigreed cattle and sheep from the Royal estates in England is the object of Professor W. L. Carlyle's trip to the Old Country aboard S.S. Minnedosa recently. They are destined for the Prince of Wales ranch at High River, Alberta, and are a further proof of His Royal Highness' interest in improving Canadian live stock.

"As far as the army is concerned, the horse will be a museum piece within the next 20 years," said Brig.-General W. B. M. King, recent arrival on S.S. Duchesse of York, after a trip during which he inspected regiments of the British Army. General King added that the mechanization of the army was taking rapid strides and, though a costly operation, would pay for itself by decreased maintenance charges within a period of five years.

New Brunswick has an estimated population of 419,000, according to the twelfth annual report of the chief medical officer of the provincial department of health tabled in the Legislature recently. An interesting detail of the report was the statement that during the past year more than 25,000 persons had been permanently immunized against diphtheria.

Surest sign of spring in Eastern Canada is the running of the sap in the maple trees. This annual harvest is now on and last year the total value of maple sugar and maple syrup produced in Canada was $6,113,656. This money accrues mostly to farmers and the province of Quebec is the leader of the industry in Canada.

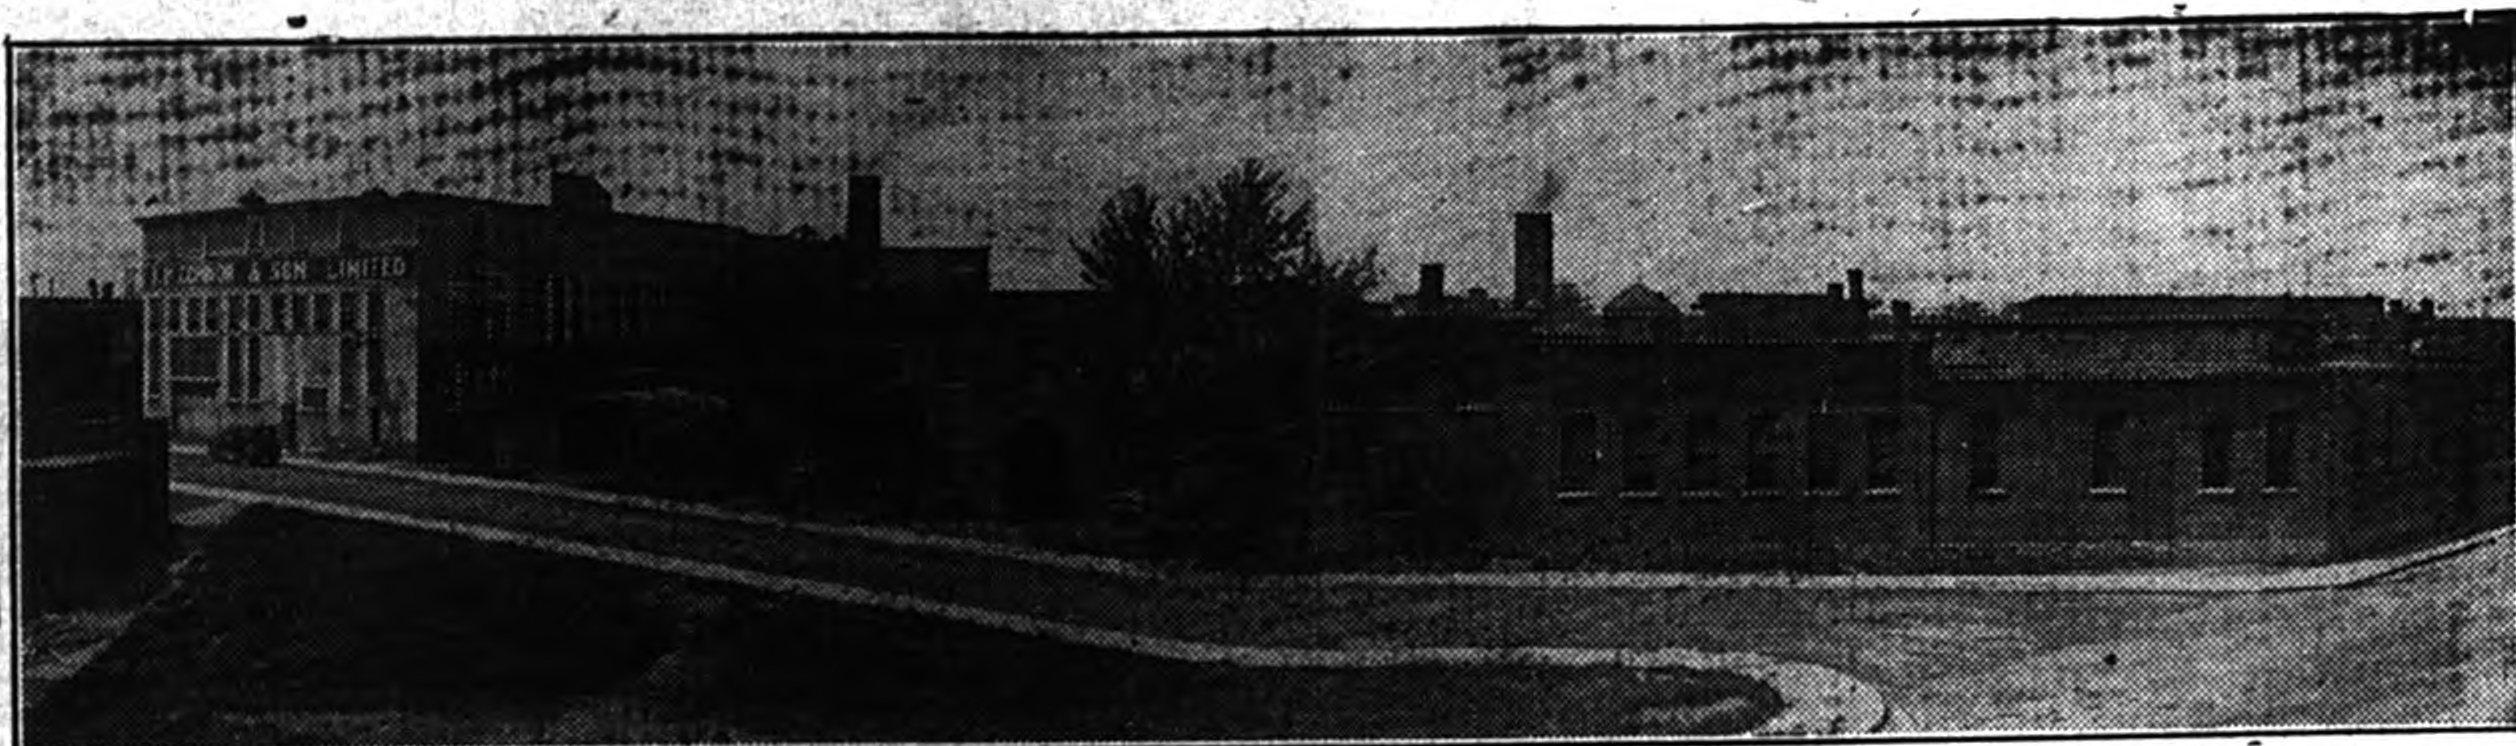

Ten years ago capital investment in electric power in Canada was about $400,000,000. To-day it is over a billion dollars and total power available from present installation is nearly $600,000 h.p. This is about one-fifth of possible development.

DOWNY LITTLE THINGS... not long out of their shells... how much they must depend on you for the things they need to live and get big. They need a feed filled with nourishment. A feed which will build bones quickly... building muscles strong... change fuzz to feathers in a hurry... all this they demand... and yet their little crops can handle only one tiny thimbleful of feed a day! What a job for feed!

Consider Purina Chick Startena (mash) for this job! In every thimbleful are twelve ingredients! Cod-liver oil... dried buttermilk... alfalfa flour... granulated meat... these and eight others are there... each one with a real job to do. Purina Startena is mixed over and over again... 960 times just to be thorough! And you will find the same care taken with Baby Chick Chow (scratch)... to be fed with Startena.

Women Workers

Many women are compelled to work outside their homes to support themselves, their children or some other relative. Working in healthful surroundings may be excellent for any woman and may build up her vigor and stamina and mental acumen. But to work in unwholesome surroundings will certainly break down the strongest of us.

Long hours, night work, wrong seating and posture at work, bad atmospheric conditions, too warm or too cold temperature, too much dampness in the air, overstrain and industrial fatigue are impossible to endure long. These will undermine the health and soon end one's ability to hold a job of any kind. It is seldom that a woman is compelled to accept work under these conditions. The wiser plan would be to look about with energy and discretion and find a work which will not injure the health.

Working with benzol and lead in manufacture is very harmful to women; for they are more susceptible to these poisons than are men. To work with them will not only injure the women but will harm their offspring. Woman, in engaging in work, must think not only of herself, but remember that he is a potential mother. Whatever menaces her health will injure the welfare of the race.

Angel Food Cake

Air is the only leavening in angel food cake and this fact determines every step in the mixing. First, sift flour and measure out one cup of it. Sift this four more times. A cup of egg whites are to be beaten. This will take about eight or ten eggs. The eggs should be fresh, but they must be at least three days old or they will not beat successfully.

Cold storage eggs or eggs preserved in waterglass or brine will not beat light enough. Put the egg whites on a large platter add one-fourth teaspoon salt and beat them with a flat wire whisk until foamy, then add one-fourth teaspoon of cream tartar and continue beating until they are stiff enough to hold up to peaks, but not dry. Underbeaten eggs will make an undersized cake, heavy and coarse. Overbeaten eggs will make a cake which is too dry.

Sift granulated sugar and measure out one and one-fourth cups of it. Fold this carefully into the egg mixture, two tablespoons at a time, until all is used.

Sift a small quantity of flour over the mixture and fold this in carefully; continue until all the flour is used. In combining ingredients use only the folding motion. Add three-fourths teaspoon of vanilla and one-fourth teaspoon of almond extract, and fold it in.

Pour the batter into ungreased angel food pan and bake at least one hour in a slow oven. After thirty minutes, increase the heat of the oven slightly. When the cake is done, remove it from the oven and invert the pan for one hour, or until cold. Angel food cake should really not be cut. It should be broken. Use the yolks of the eggs for custards or salad dressing. A large quantity of boiled salad dressing, put in the ice-box, will keep for a long time.

Chocolate angel food cake may be made from the above recipe, by using three-fourths cup of flour and one fourth cup of cocoa, instead of the full cup of flour. Two extra egg whites are needed to make the chocolate angel food cake light enough. The almond flavoring is omitted and one full teaspoon of vanilla is used. Otherwise the ingredients and the process is the same.

Color and You

Time was when the red haired girl avoided red, the blue eyed one wore white with a blue sash and every woman of a certain, or rather an "uncertain" age, wore black. Now we are studying our types to see exactly what we, as individuals, should wear. We have learned the youth-giving effect of color and are ardent Ponce-de-Leons chasing this new Fountain of Youth.

We have learned that to choose a color which matches our complexion, increases the effect of that color. If our skin is red or yellow, or hair dull gray, we do not want to emphasize the fact. We can tone down the too flamboyant or brighten up the drab by the use of a natural shade or one which reflects a joyous color note.

Black is depressing and very trying to wear, but it is rich and may make the wearer look distinguished, if the lines are good and there is style to it. It is a quiet, refined choice, as well as a practical one.

One does not wish to dress blatantly, and it is wise to select a neutral shade for the costume, with a vivid touch of color as an accessory. Tan with a hint of pink in it, or gray with a bit of enlivening blue or pink, are better for the colorless complexion than dull tan or gray.

In selecting the color of your clothes, do not let them deaden your personality nor outshine it. You, yourself, are center of attraction, and they should be chosen to bring out the best color which you present; but never to engulf you, nor slander you, nor set you before the world in a false light.

Salads

In seasons when you cannot get fresh fruits and vegetables, recourse may be had to canned fruits. These are delicious combined with gelatin. Add diced fruits or vegetables to the gelatin.

Fill halves of canned pears or peaches with cottage cheese. Sprinkle with nuts and serve with French dressing. A good carrot salad may be made by adding to ground, raw carrots, chopped nuts, raisins, and apples.

Salads are valuable in the menu because they supply mineral salts, acids, bulk and flavor.

For Indigestion

There is a form of indigestion which is caused by eating too much starchy food, as potatoes, bread and butter and cereals. Its symptoms are sour stomach, gas, and vague discomfort, especially at night. The best remedy, to overcome this ill, is buttermilk or sour milk. It is wise to keep the diet low in starches and sugars.

Cleaning Hint

The long-handled dish-mop has other virtues than its use for dishes. It may be a house cleaning aid in many ways. It is useful in dusting around the radiators and in crevasses in which the dust mop will not go. Make it dustless, by soaking it for two hours in a hot soap suds to which a little turpentine has been added.

Care of Hands

The housewife's hands are so constantly in soap suds that her skin is made tender and injured by the alkali. This may be remedied in part by rubbing a little vinegar over her hands when the afternoon work is done. This will prevent chapping.

Black and Blue Spots

When a person is bumped, the spot usually becomes black and blue. This discoloration can be prevented by rubbing a saline over the spot as soon as the bump occurs.

Good News

London Daily News (Lib.): We recommend to the attention of Mr. J. H. Thomas, who is at the moment very down in the mouth, and to other pessimists, a number of cheerful items in today's news. The bank rate is reduced; there is an interim Navy cut of £6,500,000; a sum of £12,000,000 is to be spent on the ondon tubes, giving work to at least a few unemployed; a London shipping record is reported; and the price of bread will be down on Monday. As if this were not enough, the quarrel between Mr. Baldwin, Lord Rothermere and Lord Beaverbrook as to the most expensive way of making everybody pay more for everything has now taken so promising a turn that there is a cheerful prospect of all three policies crashing in an orgy of mutual destruction.

"Friendly Relations" With Russia

London Daily Telegraph (Con.): The hypocritical farce of "friendly relations" between the British and the Soviet Governments is kept up on one side only. It was odious from the first to all honest minds in this country. It has become much more odious since the Soviet Government, so far from raising itself to a plane of minimum decency in the eyes of the world, turned to its present task of "exterminating" a whole class of peasant proprietors with ruthless cruelty, and redoubled the energy of the murderous persecution by which it is sought to stamp Christianity out of existence on Russian soil.

A Salvage Problem

Where Can Good Automobiles go When They Die?

You can't drive it, because it isn't safe. You can't desert it along a lonely road, because that's against the law.

You can't drive it into the river, because that's against the law, too. You can't sell it because not even the junk man will give you money for it.

You can't give it away, because no one will have it as a gift.

As white elephants go, the ancient car can sometimes be the whitest of them all, laments William Ullman, writing on the disposal of junk automobiles in a copyrighted article for Ullman Feature Service.

The problem of disposing of the useless automobile is acute. Twenty-five millions of them must be supplied with a last resting place within the next ten years, Mr. Ullman tells us. But no one knows where or how.

George U. Harvey, President of the Borough of Queens, New York City, tried to do something to solve the problem, and wanted Henry Ford to help. He assumed that since Mr. Ford is an expert in making cars appear, he should also be expert in making them disappear. His idea elicited sympathy, but little argument. Said the St. Louis Globe-Democrat: Common justice will not permit general approval of Mr. Harvey's suggestion that the most prolific producer of automotive equipment in the world should bear a part of the responsibility for the removal of the unsightly junk.

This manufacturer is no more responsible, morally, for clearing the countryside of worn out automobiles than the producer of food is responsible for gathering up all the tin cans that clutter up the ash-heaps and vacant lots. The responsibility in both cases rests with the most recent owner. The position of the Borough President would be as logical if he sought to have the peanut growers of the South clean up all the circus grounds and baseball parks and other places of great peanut consumption; or that the makers of ships be compelled to dispose of the wrecks.

But President Harvey has his finger on a problem that needs solution. The processes of rust and other forms of disintegration are not keeping up with automobile manufacture and the millions of new cars that come to the users each year.

We must believe that a considerable number of cars that are worn beyond further use are thoroughly junked, and other use made of the parts and materials, so that they disappear entirely as automobiles or automobile wrecks. But the evidence of sight proves that many thousands are shunted to vacant lots and roadside disposal to remain eyesores to all who pass. The automobile as an institution is not old enough for students of disposal to make a fair computation of how long nature must work to obliterate the old wrecks, for, surely, some of the first still rest on city lots and along the nation's roads.

Returning to the problem of what to do with the 25,000,000 automobiles that will go out of service during the next decade, we find Mr. Ullman writing:

Assuming that each of them takes up on an average of fifty square feet, it would take a cemetery containing 1,250,000,000 square feet to bury them, leaving no space between the "Corpses."

There are 25,000,000 motor-vehicles, and approximately 500,000 miles of surfaced highway in the United States. That means fifty motor-vehicles to the mile. In seven years these cars all will have died. Where will they be buried, along with numerous others that will have met death prematurely in accidents?

"It is something to think about," says one of the most progressive State motor-vehicle officials. The average man must agree.

The part of the junk dealer in the situation is set forth by the Motor Vehicle Commissioner of Connecticut as follows:

"He is responsible for the car cemeteries which are beginning to appear alongside our roads, some of them located in the most beautiful sections of the state. At present the size, extent, and general ugliness of these attest the popularity and probable profit of this kind of business."

"While there does not appear to be any method at the present time whereby the defacement of scenery and loss of attractiveness on the side of highways caused by such spectacles can be met, there should be some way devised by which owners of land are prevented from making it a public nuisance. The argument in favor of this is perhaps idealistic, but it is practical nevertheless."

"The scenery has a real and practical value. People are attracted by the surroundings more than by any other characteristic to purchase real estate, to build homes, and to use land for vacation purposes. Apparently it is perfectly possible under existing laws to restrain other nuisances; for instance, the law may be invoked to prevent the erection of a slaughter house or a soap-factory in an unsuitable place. Why should there not be a law to prevent a man from making a nuisance in an esthetic sense, and thereby preserve for home-builders the practical value of real estate?"

The course of the junk dealer, who might be assumed to be a big factor in solving the problem, obviously is one hedged about with its particular difficulties.

More and more States are compelling the junking of unsafe automobiles, we learn. Massachusetts, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Jersey, and New York are among those which are seeking to get such cars off the highway. But where to put them once they are off the highway is another question, to which Mr. Ullman gives consideration:

Why not dismantle them? Why not drive them out along some country road and leave them? Why not drive them into the river? Or, into some farmer's pasture? Why not literally bury them in holes that are to be filled for building or something similar?

Those engaged in the efforts to dispose of old cars have definite answers for all these proposed solutions.

Take that with reference to dismantling the decrepit car. Thousands are being dismantled all the time. Junk dealers started it. Automobile dealers through their trade bodies later got into the business. Dismantling a car, however, they have found does not remove all traces of it from the face of the earth. Engine and drive mechanism as to certain parts are about all that is worth dismantling. Usually, there is left the body, the chassis, the tireless wheels—as forlorn a sight as any one would care to see. That has to be disposed of after the dismantling. So, the process does not solve the problem.

Dumping old automobiles into holes that are to be filled up for building or other purposes is practised to a limited extent. Only, however, where the cars and the holes are fairly close together. If it is necessary to move the car to the hole, the handling involved makes the move economically unwise.

Many ideas have been tried and are being tried, it is pointed out. Some are successful in some places; others elsewhere. None, however, is completely the answer to the problem.

Freedom for the "Mui-Tsai"

By Leslie R. Aldous

Ten thousand little girl slaves in Hong Kong are promised their freedom as a result of a correspondence which has just passed between Lord Passfield, the Secretary for the Colonies, and the Governor of HongKong. Under the "Mui-tsai" system, these small children, usually between the ages of four and fourteen, have hitherto been sold into domestic servitude. The owners have often claimed that their victims have merely been "adopted," and that it is a kindness to take them away from the homes of their pauper parents. The very title, "Mui-tsai," however, reveals the true nature of the system, for these are the Chinese words for "little slaves."

The British Government, in insisting upon stern action, is carrying out its pledge given to the League of Nations when signing its Slavery Convention of 1926. Public opinion has moved in recent years. The time has passed when a distinguished naval officer could lose his position because he and his wife championed the cause of the "Mui-tsai." It was in 1923 that a half-hearted attempt was made to put an end to the evil. In that year, the Female Domestic Service Ordinance was passed in order to bring freedom to the little girl slaves. After six years, as Lord Passfield, the Colonial Secretary, says, "the most that can be said is that there is no reason to believe that the number of 'mui-tsai' in the Colony has increased."

The provisions of the Domestic Service Ordinance are now to be brought into force forthwith. It is also urged by the Colonial Office that the introduction of "Mui-tsai" into the Colony should be made illegal.

The defenders of the system frequently contend that it is so deeply ingrained into the customs and traditions of Hong Kong that it cannot be abolished. This argument is discounted by the fact that the status of "Mui-tsai" has been abolished by law in China. Also, in other parts of the world, when countries have set their hand to the abolition of slavery, it has been proved that where there is a will there is a way.

When Great Britain accepted the mandate for Tanganyika from the League of Nations, 185,000 slaves were given their freedom. Quite recently, in conformity with the terms of the League's Slavery Convention, about 200,000 slaves were emancipated in Sierra Leone. In Burma, too, the Indian Government has been sending special expeditions among the wild tribes in order to stamp out slavery and slave-owning. According to India's latest report to the League of Nations, 8,000 slaves were set at liberty last year, and the evil is believed to be almost at an end.

40 Leaves Required To Produce Apple

Washington Horticulturists Conduct Experimental Work in Orchards of Pacific Northwest; Find Reserve of Foliage Necessary to Insure Future Crop

How many leaves are required to produce food enough to develop a full-grown apple? This is a question that has attracted the attention of horticulturists in the Department of Agriculture for several years because of its relation to the practice of thinning apples and pears.

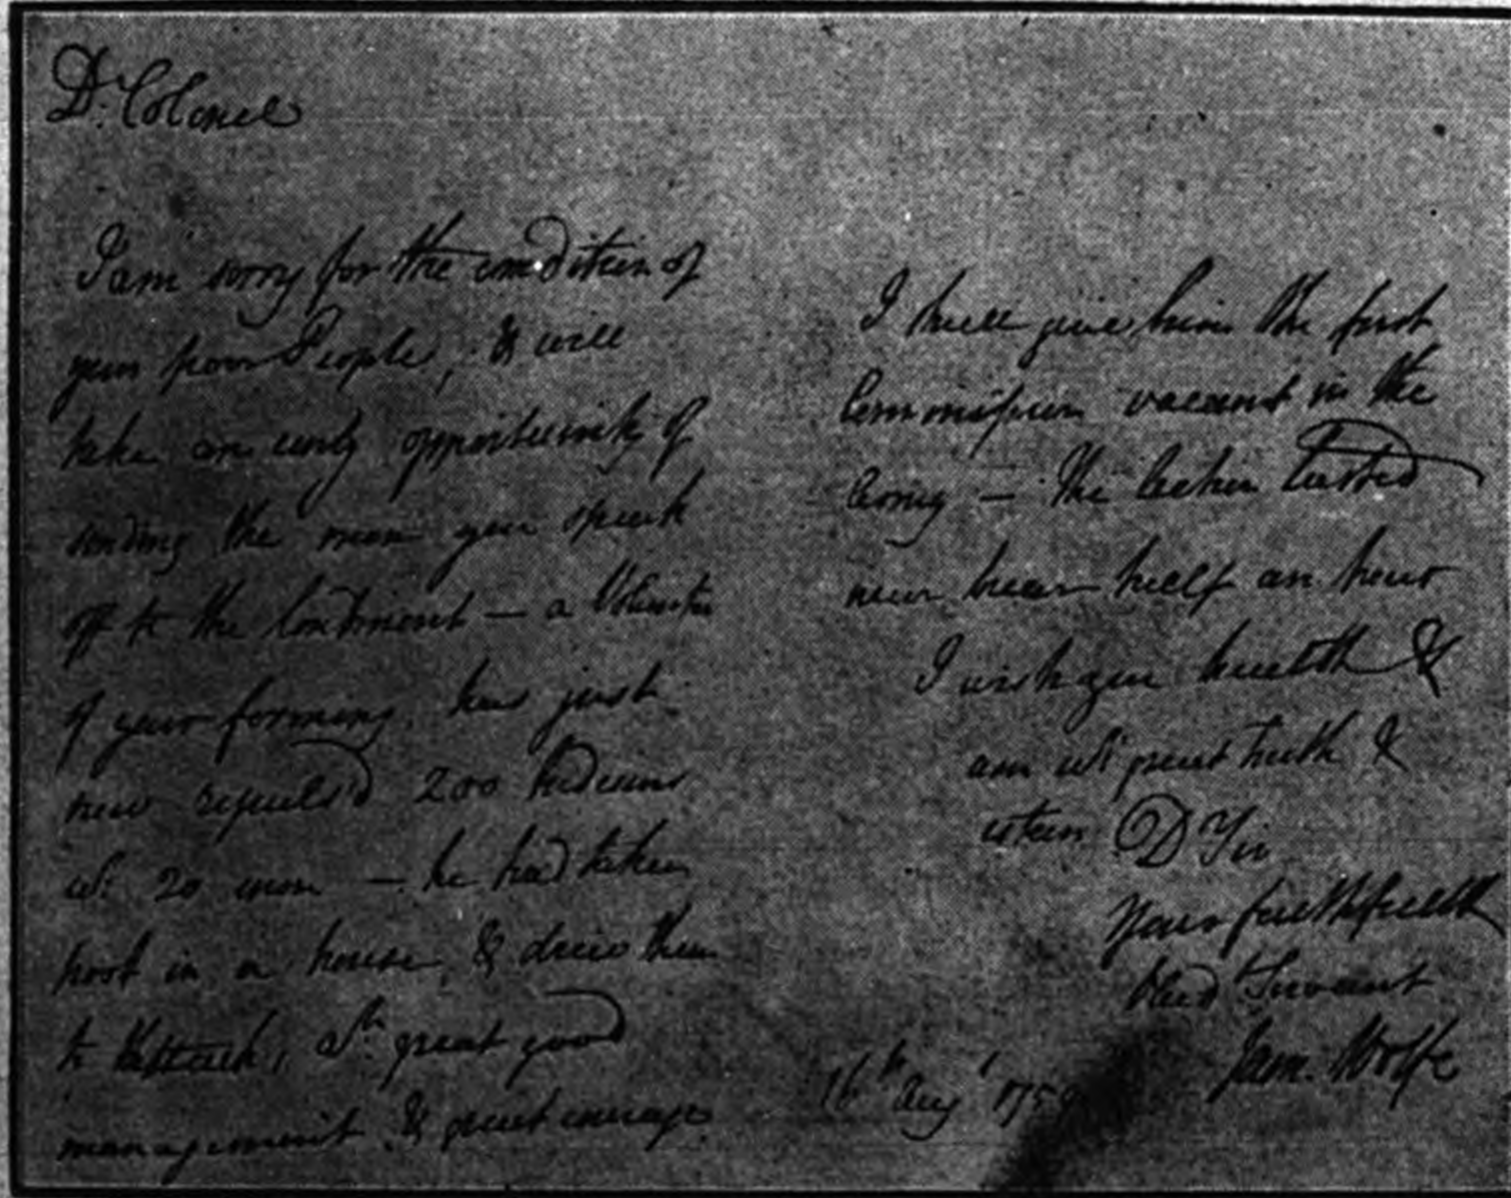

Latest results of experimental work carried on with the Washington Experiment Station, at Wenatchee, Wash., indicate that from forty to fifty well-formed leaves are necessary to develop the fruit and furnish the proper amount of food reserve for the growth of the apple.

In the experiments it was found that a smaller number of leaves per fruit would produce a fairly satisfactory crop for the year in question but would not produce enough fruit buds for a full crop the following year. There is a fairly definite correlation between number of leaves per fruit and the size of fruit until the ratio reaches at least forty to one. While the size of individual fruits increased with greater leaf surface the increase in fruit volume was not proportional. In other words, thinning the fruit increases size but decreases total weight of fruit per tree.

To increase production, the experiments indicate, it will be necessary first of all to increase the amount of foliage per tree or per acre. To obtain regularity of production the quantity of fruit produced per tree must be sufficiently reduced through thinning to allow the development of fruit buds, which results only from an accumulation of food materials after the needs of the fruit have been met. To obtain maximum food development in the leaves a steady supply of moisture must be available throughout the growing season.

The experiments referred to were conducted in irrigated orchards in the Pacific Northwest. Where there is a shortage of water through the latter part of the growing season a larger number of leaves per fruit is required.

Although there is a persistent report that the market will be stronger in the spring, many people are refusing to take any stock in it.

WAS RUN DOWN AND VERY WEAK

Too Little Blood the Trouble and Tonic Treatment Restored Health

"I am writing to tell you," says Mrs. James A. Haughn, Bridgewater, N.S., "the great health benefit I received through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I had become badly run down and very weak; so much so that I could only with difficulty do my housework. I suffered from headaches, and had very little desire for meals. The trouble affected my nerves, and as a result I did not sleep well at night; and would often awake with a choking sensation, and would have to sit up in bed. I was taking treatment, but it did not help me and I was losing courage, when I saw an advertisement of a case which seemed much like my own, which had been relieved by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I decided to give this medicine a trial and got two boxes. Before these were all gone there was an improvement in my appetite, which seemed a hopeful sign. I procured a further supply of the pills and found a steady improvement in my health. I could eat well, sleep soundly at night, and my housework was no longer a task beyond my strength. From my own experience I would advise weak, run-down people to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial, feeling that what they have done for me, they will just as readily do in other similar cases."

If you will send your name and address to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., a little book, "Building Up the Blood," will be mailed you prepaid. This little book contains many useful health hints. You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A Prayer to St. Francis

O saint! who talketh with all the birds
In ancient woodlands dim,
Care for the fledgling sparrow perched
On yonder leafless limb.
When winds are cold, and snows are deep
And dark clouds overhead,
Lead the belated robin where
He finds a bit of bread.

Speak to the hearts of those who sit
In houses snug and warm,
And bid them scatter crumbs about
After a freezing storm;
And when the icy crust is hard,
And bitter northers blow,
See that the snowbird's tail seek grass
Still stands above the snow.

Second—"No, what happened to him?"

First—"He can't stir."

The modern wife doesn't know where her husband goes in the evenings, says a critic. She should try staying at home one evening; she might find him there.

It was necessary for taxation purposes to decide which side of the Canadian and United States border a farm, which an old lady had just purchased, actually lay. Surveyors finally announced that the farm was just on the American side of the border. The old lady smiled with relief. "I'm so glad to know that," she said. "I've heard that winters in Canada are terribly severe."

Cheer up and let the dentists do all the looking down in the mouth.

She's a good mother, confides a friend. She never strikes her children except in self-defense.

Jones—"Well, old man, how are you getting along with your poultry raising? Making Expenses?"

Smith—"Not yet; but my hens have taken to eating their own eggs, so I hope they will soon become self-supporting."

People who can't write their names so anyone can read them, will often complain if they are not spelled right in the newspapers.

Something in a Name
It is said that a young lady by the name of Adeline Moore invented the postscript.

Smile: As unputting as a loan shark.

1st Suburbanite—"We are getting up a league of nations in our suburb. Have you heard about it?"

2nd One—"No, what is it? A straw vote?"

1st One—"No, it's an agreement between those who are planning to make a garden this spring and those who are going to raise chickens."

He is one of those fellows who, if he were a singing celebrity, would spend hours listening to his own phonograph records, said a man of a friend.

"The man who succeeds in his work is the man who can keep quiet and placid when there is very severe pressure."—Charles E. Hughes.

"I am enthusiastically for everything that increases knowledge."—Michael Pupin.

Mamm-th's Graveyard Is Sought Along Yukon

Fort Yukon, Alaska.—Seeking antediluvian monsters with hair and skins intact, two scientist-traders have begun a leisurely journey down the frozen Yukon River in the hope of finding the burial place of mammoths in the high bluffs of the stream unapproachable during the season of open water.

East spring frost forces huge bones out of gravel beds along the river. Many valuable finds of ancient ivory were uncovered in the same manner in recent years and marketed by the two traders.

The last well preserved carcass of a mammoth was found near Dawson in 1904 and sold to an Eastern college museum for a large sum. That there are more such remains still intact in the frozen subsoil along the Yukon, where nature may do the excavating, is the opinion of the searchers. They expect to exchange dog sledges for barges early in the spring near the mouth of the Tanana River's confluence with the Yukon.

Beaverbrook's Proposal

Sydney Bulletin (Criticizing the "traff" conference, which was barren of results, the Bulletin compares it with the "Empire Crusade.") The idea is some relation to newspaper millionaire Beaverbrook's deposed proposition that all the British Dominions shall somehow be tricked into an arrangement for absolute Free Trade within the Empire, so that all the products of the United Kingdom and of some 350,000,000 attached niggers shall enjoy the run of the Australian market, and this Commonwealth shall throw the biggest item of its revenue into the ash-heap, and go broke immediately amid the vituperations of John Bull, its biggest creditor.

KEEP THEM HAPPY BY KEEPING THEM WELL

It is natural for children to be happy, active, and full of fun. When they are fretful, fussy and disinclined to play you may be sure something is wrong. Almost invariably that something lies in the digestive tract.

It is to meet the need for an absolutely safe corrective of childhood ailments that Baby's Own Tablets have been designed. They gently regulate the stomach and bowels and thus drive out constipation and indigestion; break up colds and simple fevers and allay teething pains. Concerning them Mrs. W. E. Forsyth, Dover, N.B., writes: "I would not be without Baby's Own Tablets as I know of nothing to equal them for fretful, fussy babies who are troubled with colds or sour stomach."

Baby's Own Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Opportunity Of a Lifetime

The opportunity of a lifetime is really what is offered in the post-congress tours which have been arranged to follow the closing session of the Fourth World's Poultry Congress, to be held in Old London, July 22nd to 30th, this year.

The tours have been arranged, one following the other. The first starts July 31, and takes one through the historic, storied and scenic wonderlands of the British Isles. The Shakespeare country, North Wales, Dublin, with its Rocky Road; the Irish Free State, youngest of the British Dominions; Cork and the lovely Lakes of Killarney; the Giant's Causeway and, of course, the Blarney Stone will be on the route. Crossing again to Scotland, Glasgow and the Burns country is viewed; the Trossachs, Edinburgh, the English Lake Country, and Liverpool provide days full of wonder and amazement. This part of the tour returns to London August 10.

Then comes the visit to the continent which begins with a twenty-four hour stay at Brussels. From Brussels the quaint Holland country is visited, then the party proceed to the lovely Rhine Valley country, passing on the way up that river the historic cities of Coblenz, with its cathedral, and Bonn with its world-famous universities, both places which were held by troops of the Canadian Expeditionary Force immediately following the armistice. Frankfurt and Munich are also visited, then the party proceed to Oberammergau for Sunday, where they will be privileged to view the famous Passion Play, which exemplifies what is regarded by most of us as the greatest event of all history. Returning the party are the guests at a government reception at Munich before proceeding to Switzerland for a four-day stay, which will include a visit to Geneva, seat of the League of Nations, from Switzerland the party return to Paris, where another four days will be spent.

The Paris visit may be cut in half and those desiring to do so will be afforded an opportunity of a two-day tour of the battlefields of the Great War. To most of the party this visit to the battlefields will be the climax of what all will regard as truly the opportunity of a lifetime.

Economy and Politics

Perth Western Mail: (The Cullin Government in Australia has abolished, on the ground of economy, the Development and Migration Commission). In the interests of that very economy which the new Government would hug to itself for justification, the continued functioning of the Commission would have meant much to Australia. . . . Whatever its methods, it stood for a very necessary principle in Australian public life, preventing the dissipation of public funds in political ventures whose only relation to development was their description. Its executive death is a calamity—a calamity of peculiar concern to Western Australia, whose spaces clamour for people and production, but whose political "pull" against Eastern States' interests is weak.

"The quality of an art is in inverse ratio to the numbers who support it." Channing Pollock.

DO YOU SUFFER FROM CONSTIPATION?

Countless remedies are advertised for constipation. Many relieve for the moment but they are habit forming and must be continued. Others contain calomel and dangerous mineral drugs, which remain in the system, settle in the joints and cause aches and pains. Some are harsh purgatives which cramp and gripe and leave a depressed after effect. Avoid lubricating oils which only grease the intestines and encourage nature's machinery to become lazy.

A purely vegetable laxative such as Carter's Little Liver Pills, gently touches the liver, bile starts to flow, the bowels move gently, the intestines are thoroughly cleansed and constipation poisons pass away. The stomach, liver and bowels are now active and the system enjoys a real tonic effect. All druggists 25c and 75c red pkg.

A Glorious End

Fram, Ship of Polar Explorers, Equipped for Her Last Voyage

Oslo, Norway.—The battered ship Fram, which has carried Norwegian explorers to their conquests during four decades, is being equipped for her last voyage.

The Fram carried Fridtjof Nansen toward the North Pole in 1893 and brought him back two years later when he reported having reached latitude 86 degrees 14 minutes, the northernmost point visited by man up to then.

The same Fram, with a few new accoutrements, carried Roald Amundsen south in 1911 and carried him back in triumph as discoverer of the South Pole, to be acclaimed at home.

Now the Fram is to proceed to Trondheim to take part in an exhibition on the occasion of the 900th anniversary of the introduction of Christianity into Norway. When she returns she will be placed in the Arctic Museum here.

On her final voyage the Fram will be captained by Wisting, the only living man besides Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd who has seen both poles. Wisting was with Amundsen at the South Pole in a dirigible in 1923.

The Fram's crew will be made up of old polar explorers from the Nansen, Amundsen and Sverdrup expeditions.

A Peril to Egypt

Cairo Sphinx: (Egypt is menaced by vast swarms of locusts in the Sinai Peninsula). At any moment, a strong east wind may drive the swarms of locusts across the narrow strip of desert and sea, but a still more serious situation may arise if the locusts succeed in breeding in Sinai. Indeed, this is more than probable. The hatching of locust eggs requires a certain amount of moisture in the soil. Normally, Sinai is too dry for this to happen, but this year's rains are without precedent, and there is a possibility that the sand will remain moist till the weather becomes warm enough for the locusts to breed. The situation is a grave one that calls for immediate action, but it is difficult to get the authorities to realize the magnitude of a danger that is at present just at their doors. The swarms can be destroyed now if a fleet of cars is employed in sufficient numbers and equipped with flame guns and trained teams.

Banff Park Set Aside in 1885

Banff national park in the province of Alberta is the oldest of the Dominion playgrounds, the original reservation having been set aside in 1885. It comprises an area of 3,590.5 square miles of territory. Reserved for the enjoyment of all who visit it, it is also a wild-life sanctuary, evidence of which is manifest in the large number of sheep, deer and bear to be seen in the areas adjacent to the highways of the park.

Liver—in Vancouver

"Three years ago, while in Vancouver, the house physician at the hotel, advised me to use Kruschen Salts for a bad liver and constipation. I can say I never have had anything that gave me almost instant relief before, and I therefore got my chemist to order Kruschen for me. I think no less than 40 or 50 families have used it by my persuasion. Most other remedies on the market leave a bad effect in many ways, but I can safely say I haven't been as well in many years as since I have taken Kruschen."—Mrs. C. R. M., Willamette, U.S.A.
Original letter on file for inspection.

FREE TRIAL OFFER

If you have never tried Kruschen—try it now at our expense. We have distributed a great many special "GIANT" packages which make it easy for you to prove our claim for yourself. Ask your druggist for the new "GIANT" 75c package. This consists of our regular 75c bottle together with a separate trial bottle—sufficient for about one week. Open the trial bottle first, put it to the test, and then, if not entirely convinced that Kruschen does everything we claim it to do, the regular bottle is still as good as new. Take it back. Your druggist is authorized to return your 75c. immediately and without question. You have tried Kruschen free at our expense. What could be fairer? Manufactured by E. GETTING READY FOR THE TOURISTS

With commendable zeal, our enterprising new proprietor of the Rodrigue House, Mr. Desjardins, is spending considerable money in bringing his newly acquired hostelry up to a standard of excellence that will ensure every comfort and consideration for the travelling public. The tourist trade is now established and generally recognized as a major industry of our Dominion, many authorities placing it third in importance with a yearly value to the country of $350,000,000.

Quebec Province is fully alive in fostering this new industry and realizing that good clean hotels, with well-cooked wholesome dishes, are an essential in drawing the visitors to our towns, the Provincial Government has been carrying on a campaign by sending out inspectors among our rural hotel owners to look over tourist accommodation and make suggestions a staff of chefs have also been organized to travel among them, and provincial cooking schools have also been established and lastly a series of radio talks in which small hotel-keepers are advised to make their hotels attractive.

With running water in every room, comfortable beds and assured cleanliness, excellent food and homely atmosphere the Rodrigue Hotel will receive a new impetus and will materially assist in giving a real welcome to the many visitors whom we hope to entertain during the coming season.

The VANISHING MEN

By Richard Washburn Child

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Peter DeWolfe, visiting at the Benham, in England, becomes interested in Brena Selcom. Muriel Benham tells DeWolfe to keep away from Brena or he will vanish like the others. Peter meets Brena in London. Brena tells him her story. When but seventeen years of age and living at Mrs. Wilkie's boarding house in Dallas, Texas, she meets Jim Hennepin. Hennepin arranges to meet her in St. Louis and marry her. Brena goes to St. Louis but Hennepin fails to show up and Brena returns to Mrs. Wilkie's. Hennepin has disappeared and has not been heard of since. Hennepin's boss, Compton Parmalee, then asks Brena to marry him and she agrees. As they are leaving on their honeymoon, Parmalee suddenly turns to her and asks her what is the "fate" that follows her, declaring that he feels a horrible, unaccountable terror. Brena's father, before he died, left her a note in which he tells her to never fear as she will always be protected.

The extraordinary transition in Compton Parmalee began with his marriage.

Apparently an inexplicable fear had seized him within a few minutes; inexplicable fear little by little took possession of his life and made him a source of the contagion of unreasoning dread.

There was a six-month period after the departure of the strange bride from Dallas wherein, whatever emotions of apprehension he may have felt, a struggle was made to conceal them and to give Brena Selcom the variety, content and luxury that he had said should be hers.

He, who never had more than touched her hand with his own cold, refined fingers, sometimes burst forth with all the zealous energy which had made him a great gambler.

"You are my speculation!" he would exclaim. "I have bought a future in you!"

He lived two lives, not at the same time, but alternately. The one was in her; the other in himself. When he could put his own life into hers he forgot his own.

He procured her entry into rare social circumstances. In the first year Brena, considered by all strangers to be several years older than she, in fact, was, and of whom no one would have believed it if it had been told them that she had been plucked out of that kitchen garden of Wilkie's boarding house, had dined with foreign ambassadors, hunted with Lady Tremayne Nash, been courted over, through and under her disgust by a cousin of the ex-King of the Portuguese, occupied a villa in the Italian lakes and voyaged in a luxurious yacht around the Baltic in midsummer with the family of Stockholm's largest banker.

Other men, sensing subconsciously her ungiven and unused affections, brought all their sophistication to their aid in making love to her. Dozens of men in various capitals, noting her beauty, gave amusement to the Dallas broke and annoyance to her. She might have been thrilled by these idolatries were it not for the fact that she believed they always came either from those whose attentions to women were quite general and successive or from those whose imagination could conceive only a very plain driveway from the thoroughfare of formal society to the sequestered dwelling place of a woman's heart.

"There are times when you look at me as if I were the bearer of some evil," she once said.

"It is absurd," he told her, but his face showed the sudden twist of fear.

"You have some knowledge that I have not," she asserted accusingly.

"None," he answered; after a pause he said: "Your father was interested in Aztec architecture?"

"Yes." Her eyes opened in amazement.

"He went to Mexico more than once," said Parmalee. "He considered that the civilization of the Mayas was far more extraordinary than even experts like Thompson and Nightingale have represented it. He believed that they had developed forces quite unknown to modern life."

"How did you know this?" she asked sharply.

Parmalee was quite nonchalant; he said, "You forget that my library is full of documents and books and monographs which your father asked permission to consult. I am sorry I did not meet your father."

"You would have found him a man quite incapable of believing in the supernatural, whether it be a thing of today or attributed to an ancient people," she said.

"You would say more?" he asked with his uncanny ability to read her thought.

"Yes. I think that you have some purpose in creating this atmosphere of strange and unreal things."

"You spoke of a piece of paper given you in a roll of bills," he said after another silence, with a marked absence of his usual assurance. "It fluttered out. You saved it—"

Brena drew back as if the subject were odious.

He appeared frightened, but went on: "I think you said there was a drawing of an arrow and a lizard."

"I said lizard. I don't see what difference it makes. It wasn't exactly a lizard."

He thrust toward her an envelope and a pencil. "Draw it," he said.

"I told you I had almost forgotten," the girl replied. "I lost the scrap—the figures and the words."

"Draw it," he repeated, "the best you can."

Brena searched in her memory for a photographic impress. Then suddenly with quick precision she outlined a strange figure on paper.

Parmalee snatched it eagerly and stared; he saw a figure, half snake and half bird.

"That?" said he in a muffled voice. "Well, do you know what that is?"

Brena raised the arch of her brows. "It is the Kuk-ul-can," said Parmalee.

"The Kuk-ul-can," she said, repeating it.

"The symbol of the Mayan—the Aztec culture. The supreme object of reverence. The fools who go about the Southwest, driving their oil wells, and laying their railroad ties and eating their prepared breakfast foods forget that this symbol is to be found among the present day Zuni and other Pueblo tribes, the degenerate fringes of a civilization which flourished before Rome was suckled by a wolf! They forget that a thousand years ago it was carved on rude adobe walls in memory of a lost grandeur and lost practices, dead these six thousand years!"

Brena possessed two laughs, both quite natural and sincere. And now it was her merry Irish laugh. "What of all this?" said she. "I will blush for their ignorance, but what more than that can I do on a sunny Thursday. I am not interested, Compton, in that which is dead. I—"

She stopped suddenly, sobered by a recollection.

"The Kuk-ul-can," said Parmalee. "You've never seen that scrap of paper again, have you?"

This was the last time he ever spoke of it.

Winter had come again when the Parmalees had settled into a quieter life in New York. Brena had turned the back of her interest upon dining out and the amusement of new acquaintances.

There was in Parmalee's face that weariness from some tensely which would not relax, an expression that increased as the weeks went by and the lives of the two drew more apart.

Less and less did he appear inclined to go out of their apartment; less and less did he go anywhere alone.

"There is a book auction—the Odin Collection with two volumes of illuminated MSS. from the old monastery at El Mayaguez," he said one day in March. "Will you go with me, Brena?"

"Of course," he said, but his request marked sharply the moment of her realization that unless he were behind the closed doors of his library, he always wanted somebody with him.

She tried to remember the various occasions when he had found trivial excuses to take the butler or the chauffeur on some short excursion beyond the pretentious entrance of the apartment house; she concluded that he did not ask her to accompany him for the pleasure of companionship.

He seldom conversed with her as he had once done; if there was a choice between going with her or in the limousine with Paul, he chose the silent and cynical chauffeur.

Nor was this all. She began to notice frequent repetitions of the fear that had seized him within so short a time of their odd marriage. He never spoke of this, but she saw over and over again his face, which had become less youthful now, contort, the color leave it, his eyes grow restless and fill with terror.

She had observed him in the theatre, even at a moment when a tense dramatic situation was being enacted on the stage, turn around as one turns who feels eyes from behind, and search the faces of those who sat in rows farther back.

Brena felt it her duty to interrogate him; she was met by the first burst of rage he had ever projected at her. "Let me alone!" he said evilly, as he thrust a vicious glance at her. "I have problems that are my own. Keep your hands off!"

"You forget that whatever it is that is making you so strange affects my life also," said Brena. "There are times when I wonder whether this new turn in our lives is not connected in some way with me."

"New turn?"

"Yes!" She was vehement. "This thing which hangs over us like a guillotine blade. This thing which makes your eyes flicker from side to side as if every street corner were an ambush. The thing which makes you afraid to be alone."

He sprang up.

"What if it were?" he said. "It is possible, isn't it? It is possible that some people might carry around in their trails some strange destiny. There might be some extraordinary forces behind you, mightn't there? It is possible that some tragic end awaits all men who bind their lives with yours!"

Brena opened wide her dark eyes. "I'm going to leave you, Compton!" she said.

The idea knocked him on to his knees.

"No, no!" he cried. "For the love of heaven don't leave me!"

"Then speak no more of mystery trailing upon my heels," she said. "Never bring this insinuation that a curse follows me. This is the twentieth, not the twelfth century, and those who now attempt to raise superstitions will fare badly if others believe as I do."

He stood.

"Very well," he said at last in cold, hard syllables. "You shall not hear of it again. But the time will come. There are stranger things in the world than you know."

He left her alone, somewhat shaken.

His physician later told Brena confidentially that Compton Parmalee was suffering only from a mild form of neurasthenia in which dread had attached itself to some particular chain of morbid thoughts.

"Do you mind if I kiss your hand?"

"Not in the least, but you ought to know that isn't the proper place. That's where you put the ring."

Bird Sanctuaries

"The true sanctuary for British birds is one composed almost entirely of British trees and shrubs. Their preference in this direction is very striking," writes Mr. J. R. Raynes in the Daily Telegraph, London, Eng.

"An old-fashioned hedge of hawthorn, holly, rose, and bramble is never deserted, winter or summer, by the feathered kingdom, to whose citizens the showy rhododendron, the docile privet, and the laurel have little attraction."

"The princely goldfinch, brightest of songsters, is happy in thistles and gorse, and sticks contentment from a crab-apple tree. Hips and haws, the elderberry, and the mountain-ash, provide food in those hungry days when the earth is locked in frost or snow."

"The blackbird and thrush, the yellowhammer, and the bullfinch, cleave alike to old traditions, and the restless linnet is

"Amid yon tuft of hazel trees the happiest guest, In all this covert of the blest."

The Homesick Turtle

Eleanor Halbrook Zimmerman

I found a little turtle once, When I was in the wood at play; I put him in a cardboard box And carried him away.

His little head was striped with gold, His shell was water-dark and brown, I think I was the gladdest child Of any child in town.

But when the night came whispering To me alone upon my bed, I thought how lonely he must be Out in the kitchen-shed.

I thought of how the stars looked down Upon his small pool, bright and clear,

And wondered if he longed to have The woodland creatures near.

I slipped out to the kitchen-shed, And, listening, knew there was no doubt;

With little scuffling sounds I heard Him trying to get out.

So when the morning came again I took him back, and set him free, And laughed to see him scramble in His pond so hurriedly!

Churchill, the Farthest North

Opportunities Exist for Man Ready to Rough it—Accommodation Poor; Money Can't Buy Comfort

Although the Government is preparing to construct a town at Churchill, the seaboard terminus of the Hudson's Bay Railway, and although it is anticipated that there will be a lot of activity around Churchill in the next few years, anyone who wishes to go up there with a view to doing business of any kind had better not rely too much on the power of money, according to Antony Dugal, who has just come to Montreal on a short business trip, after spending two and a half years in the country between The Pas and Churchill.

The picture he draws of this prospective seaport is of a place where coal is cheap, water extremely scarce, money almost worthless, game and fish abundant, houses rare, and hotels non-existent; the three months of combined spring and summer uncomfortably hot and sticky, and everything during the other nine months frozen hard. A fine place for a young man to go and "rough it," with a very high chance of his winning out; but not a place inviting to a man with a family, or to one who is accustomed to paying people to do things for him.

"Anyone who is thinking of going up there," says Mr. Dugal, "had better take all the beds and bedding he needs, and an abundant supply of food and provisions. It is no use relying on a pocket full of money, because most of the time your money is of no use up there. In any case, I advise them to take a return ticket."

The Town Itself

The principal work that has been done at Churchill during the past year, Mr. Dugal said, is the building of the docks, and harbor works. A picture he brought back showed the main wharf extending out from the shore some distance, and then turning to form a shelter bay. This bay he explained, is to be filled in with rocks and gravel, of which an abundant supply is available within a mile of Churchill. Three houses visible in the foreground of the picture constitute the town of Churchill to date, and are inhabited by three of the engineers in charge of the work there. The workers are sheltered in bunk-houses some distance away.

There is no sign of a hotel there yet. In fact, the nearest thing to a hotel between Churchill and The Pas, according to Mr. Dugal, is Bacon's Two Bit Plop, of which he brought back a picture. The "dop" costs, as the advertisement says, "two bits," but the customer must take his own bedding, or else sleep uncovered on the floor. In front of the building are a few big builders, which constitute the main dining room. Anyone who has food can sit on a boulder to eat it, free of charge. If he has no food, he is out of luck. Money is not likely to procure it for him.

Plan Model City

The town of Churchill is being planned by the Provincial Town Planning Engineer of Manitoba, W. E. Hobbs, and it is claimed that it will be laid out in ideal form, so that its construction and layout will be of the most modern, and will allow for expansion for many years to come.

"Conditions there, however, are not just what they are said to be in some advertising booklets," Mr. Dugal continued. "Of course, the advance of civilization may improve living conditions there. But the Government has not yet solved the water problem. So far, they have been bringing water up from Lake Rosabella, but that will not be enough to take care of the demand for long."

"The railways and the Provincial Government and other organizations have already had thousands of inquiries and applications from people wanting to go up there and establish businesses. I believe when they all get there, there will be a lot of suffering in and around Churchill unless the people take with them abundant supplies of beds, bedding, plenty of food, and so forth. They need not go there with money in their pockets, for it is of practically no use to them."

No End to Frost

"With regard to water, they have dug as far down as 210 feet and still had not gone beyond the frost. The water will have to be brought in from at least 10 miles away. On account of the cold weather and the continual presence of frost, they will have to pipe steam against the water pipe, and encase the whole in a bigger pipe. At each mile they will have to provide another station to furnish steam pressure, or else the water pipes will freeze and burst."

"As an example of how the frost gets everything, last year a few men cached some pounds of meat to keep it cold and fresh. Some weeks later they wanted to dig it up, and, although it was only six feet in the ground, they had to use axes to get the meat out of the ground and out of the frozen boxes. A double brick roundhouse is being built to resist the temperature changes. The Government is building two radio stations, two in the Straits and one at the port."

Last Summer Late

There were 1,700 men working at Churchill last year, under the Department of Railways, but Mr. Dugal points out that most of them were shipped in from abroad for the work and shipped home again after it was over. Weather in summer is very hot and sticky. Spring and summer start together about August, but last year, he says, the summer was late, and men were working in their shirt sleeves until the beginning of November. During the summer period there is a very salt tang to the air.

Its Pleasant Side

Asked regarding the really agreeable features of Churchill and its neighborhood, he said that one could buy abundant quantities of coal there for $5 a ton. The coal was shipped in through the bay from Nova Scotia. He has lived there two and a half years, travelling back and forward between Churchill and The Pas, and now finds that he feels below par when he comes so far south, especially in a big city like Montreal.

To a young man who wants to rough it, to take life as it comes and deal with men whose yes and no are as good by word of mouth as on a sworn affidavit, this north country, in his opinion, is a land of golden opportunity. If he has a big heart, and no fear of bucking adverse conditions, and ignores physical discomfort, he has a 10 to one chance of winning out and making good.

As a mining country, Mr. Dugal thinks the territory served by the Hudson's Bay Railway is ideal, and a man who lives in the country has a wonderful chance to achieve success financially, as well as in other spheres that he may value more highly than money making.

No Cellars Built

Owing to the frozen condition of the ground, a new method of house construction has had to be devised. The foundations are built above the ground. Basements start from the ground up. Then, when a few houses have been built, the space between them is filled up, and the surrounding land raised to the ground floor level by dumping gravel and rock on the frozen earth. This eliminates the necessity of blasting through frozen ground which is as hard as rock.

Even if, as may yet happen, in Mr. Dugal's opinion, there is ever enough grain shipped out of Churchill to make it worth while bringing ships there, he is convinced that the railway will ultimately prove a profitable enterprise, through serving the mining country. Practically right up to the head of steel, ores of various kinds are to be found in the ground, and as the mines open up and begin to produce, they will furnish freight for the railway, and will attract a mining population for which provisions will have to be shipped by rail.

In this way, as a mining land, and as a railway devoted to the service of the mines, he foresees a great future for northern Manitoba and the Hudson's Bay Railway. As a seaport, he is not very hopeful for Churchill at present, although he agrees that the advance of civilization might change conditions in many ways.

At present the Eskimos, who are very numerous around Churchill, are showing a great deal of surprise at all the activity that is going on, and are very much interested. Whether they will be able to adapt themselves to civilization, or whether they will recede as the white man pushes further north, remains to be seen. The Eskimo finds abundant subsistence in this district, and so can the white man, if he will follow the Eskimo example, and hunt and fish for it. Baby whales 15 to 20 feet in length can be harpooned any time, and fish of various kinds are plentiful. In the neighborhood there is also plenty of wild life. But you have to go and get it yourself. There is no store around the corner where it can be purchased.

It Gets 'em All

Among the pictures Mr. Dugal brought from the north is one of an Eskimo quivering with joy as he listens to an old jazz record being played on a portable gramophone. Ten thousand dollars' worth of white fox and silver fox pelts hung up on the wall of the trading post just behind him do not give him the slightest thrill. But the syncopated racket from a 50-cent record sets him quivering with excitement.

grapher bribed the Eskimo to pose with his family by allowing him to wear his snow goggles for a few moments. The sweater worn by the man and the skirt worn by the woman are of city manufacture, and were purchased by the Eskimos with precious pelts.

SMILES

Of all appearances of the human countenances methinks a smile is the most extraordinary. It plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and sits like a glory upon the countenance. What sun is there within us that shoots his beams with so sudden a vigor? To see the soul flash in the face at this rate one would think would convert an Atheist; by the way, we may observe that smiles are much more becoming than frowns. This seems an actual encouragement to good humor, as much as to say, if people have a mind to be handsome, they must not be peevish and untoward.—Jeremy Collier.

"Tom has broken with his relatives." "But he broke them before he broke with them."

HELPING OTHERS

Light and reflector both have their part in the radiance of the lighthouse. If we cannot have the power and brilliance of a flame for good, we can unselfishly reflect whatever light others make. Many a great man's life is made a beacon not only by his own flame, but by the wife, or sister, or friend, who helps to gather, focus, and send out the rays. "I had a friend," was Charles Kingsley's explanation of his success in life. In helping others to shine, many souls can find the loveliest usefulness and radiance that could be asked for.

TRUE PLEASURE

True pleasure consists in clear thoughts, sedate affections, sweet reflections: a mind even and stayed, true to its God, and true to itself.—Hopkins.

Should They Be Told?

By Prof. Fraser Harris

"I have been to half a dozen doctors—and not one of them can do anything for me."

How often do we hear that phrase from men and women who, for one reason or another, have been unable to find a cure or even a palliative for their disease?

When complaining that their doctor "tells them nothing" they are apt to forget that sometimes the truth would be as brutal as to be overwhelming. In the old days—yet not so very long ago—there was a blind belief in the infallibility of the medical man, and hence equally unquestioning obedience to his advice.

To-day he is no longer placed on a pedestal. The patient is apt to take a "man-to-man" attitude.

Yet every sick man must put some trust in the ability of his physician, just as the litigant must believe that his lawyer will pull him through some difficult legal case.

Speaking generally, laymen now know so much about the broad principles of hygiene and even of elementary physiology that a doctor is justified in departing from the older rigid notions of medical etiquette.

But the trouble is that having given the layman an inch he demands several ell!

In many cases the doctor can persuade his patient to co-operate intelligently with him by discussing the benefits of certain treatment, but there are necessarily limits beyond which no physician, surgeon, or consultant must go.

The converse holds equally good, for there have been many instances of great suffering and hardship inflicted through well-meaning but too outspoken frankness on the part of the doctor.

Not long ago an officer of a certain regiment in India requested a medical man to explain the reason of an intermittent pain and swelling in his throat. The surgeon examined him with care, the patient meanwhile scanning his face anxiously for the verdict.

At last he could stand the suspense no longer.

"I think you'd better tell me the truth," he said. "Anything is better than this suspense!"

After a certain amount of eyasion, the surgeon gave it as his opinion that the officer was suffering from cancer, and said that his immediate return to England was imperative.

For more than four weeks that man suffered tortures of mental anguish. He knew the reputation of the dread disease, and that he might have to face years of treatment and expensive operations which, in the end, might perhaps prove useless.

When he reached London he went at once to a specialist who pronounced the "cancer" to be nothing more serious than a tumour which could easily be removed!

Here was a case in which the medical man—not absolutely sure of his diagnosis—should most certainly have kept his opinions to himself.

On the other hand, there are those terrible moments when the physician must tell the truth at the risk of entailing great mental suffering.

In the case of a fragile, nervous patient that word may be a virtual death-sentence; but where the patient is stricken with mortal sickness, it is the doctor's plain duty to be frank.

Even the worst news can be broken gently, for there comes a time when to hide the truth is to be guilty of a grave misdemeanor.

The keynote of all medical practice is, and must remain, "Is it in the best interest of your patient?"

"Any playwright knows that an onion is a strong idea in a garden plot."

Iceland to Mark June Millennial Of Parliament

Canada Among Many Countries to Join Early Republic in Celebrating Anniversary

The millennial anniversary of the founding of the Icelandic Parliament, the oldest existing Parliament, will be observed next June on that island. It will constitute a milestone in the history of the civilized world and many countries will send delegates.

Canada and the United States will send two delegates each, and the United States has appointed a commission, under the chairmanship of Senator Peter Norbeck, of South Dakota, to erect on the island a statue or other memorial to Lelf Ericson at a cost of $55,000.

King Christian to Attend

King Christian X of Denmark will open a special three days' session of Parliament at Thingvellir, the ancient site where, 930 A.D., the sturdy Viking settlers met and worked out a democratic constitution. The King will receive greetings and addresses the first day of the Althing, or National Assembly, from both houses of that body and from delegates from foreign governments.

The official opening of the celebration will take place with a religious service on the morning of June 26, conducted by the Right Rev. Jan Helgasson, Bishop of the State Church of Iceland, which is Lutheran.

By invitation of Parliament two delegates will represent each of the following countries: Great Britain, Denmark, Germany, France, Belgium, the Irish Free State, Switzerland, Italy, Greece, Czechoslovakia, Spain, Portugal, Norway, Sweden and Finland. The Faroe Islands and the Isle of Man will each send one representative. Delegates will also be sent from the Canadian provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan and from the states of Minnesota and North Dakota, where there are many people of Icelandic descent.

Churches to Send Delegates

Preparations are being made to care for 25,000 people, and the Lutheran and Unitarian Churches are making plans to send large numbers of their communicants to the celebration.

Iceland's name is misleading. Instead of being an ice land, or a "Snow-land," which it was called by the Norwegian pirate, Naddoc, who was its discoverer, Iceland has mild winters and temperate summers. The climate is comparable to that of Edinburgh or Glasgow, and the island is diversified by sea, glaciers, volcanoes, uplands and rivers.

In 874, when two Norwegians and their families and followers made the first settlement there, Iceland was in a primeval state. The geographers and map-makers are responsible for the general impression that, except for the southern portion, Iceland is vague and unknown. From Montreal, through the Strait of Belle Isle, to Reykjavik, is about 2,100 miles.

Population Now 100,000

For years the Gloucester, Mass., fishermen have been visiting the island, fishing on the west coast. Some married Icelandic women and brought them home to Gloucester, where there are now about fifty Icelanders. The present population of Iceland is estimated at 100,000. In Canada there are from 35,000 to 40,000 Icelanders, and in Western United States there are from 12,000 to 15,000.

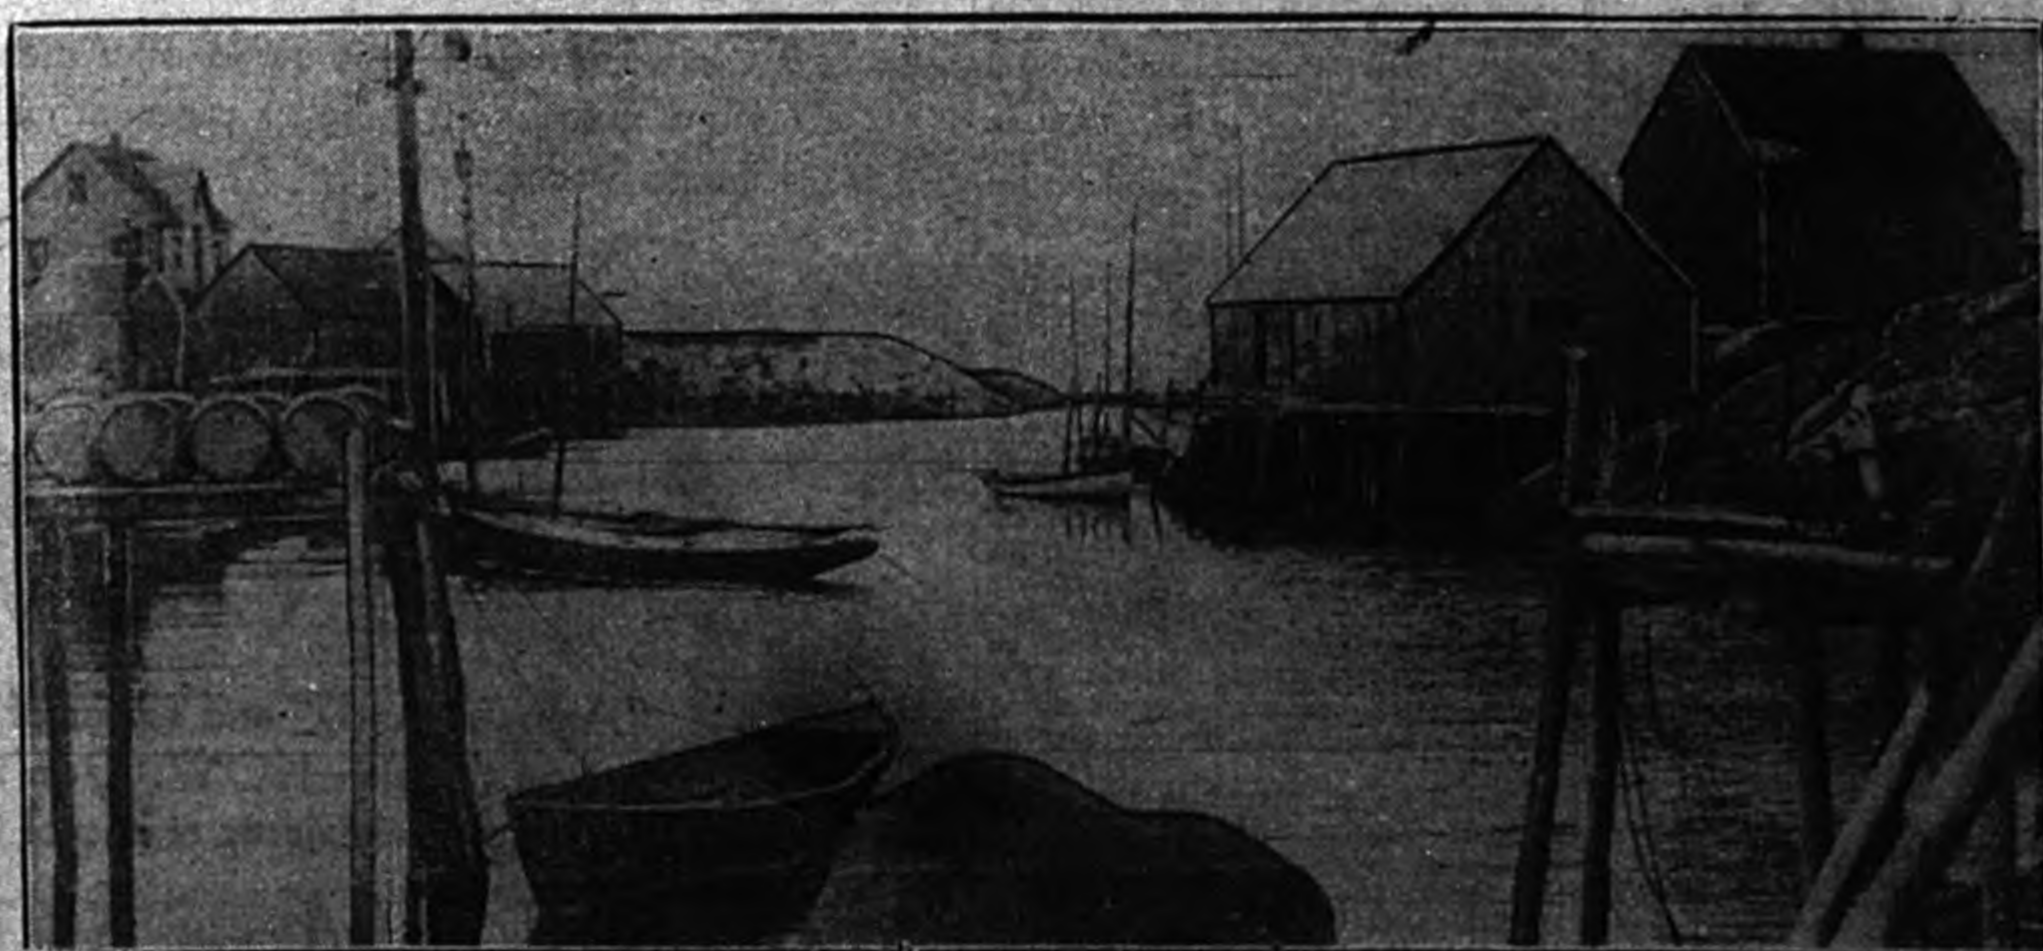

Visitors in June probably will find that the most interesting place on the island is the Thingvellir, the seat of the old Parliament, along with the Logberg, or Mount of Law, a long, oval fragment of lava upon which the old Logmann, the sovereign judge of the whole island, expounded the laws or proclaimed new ones. On the Logberg the sturdy Vikings founded one of the earliest republics in Europe; indeed, the Icelanders have declared it to be the very first.

On the Logberg the old sagas originated and were told, and it was there in the year 1000 that Christianity was adopted for the entire island, without bloodshed, although not without opposition. There, too, criminals were tried and had punishment meted out to them. Women, convicted of infidelity, infanticide and other offences were sewn in sacks and tossed into the "drekkingarhl," or drowning pool, from the brink of the chasm where the Oxera or Axe River forms a noisy basin on its way to Thingvalia Vatn, the largest of the Icelandic lakes.

The city of Reykjavik is supplied with natural hot water, and heat is being developed from the springs for public buildings in that city. From time immemorial the hot water has been used for laundry work. From many miles around the women and girls congregated, bringing their linen.

The King of Denmark will be present this summer as the King also of Iceland. The island was an independent republic until 1262, when the National Assembly agreed that it should become subject to Norway. A Norwegian Governor was appointed to reside in Iceland, but the laws remained practically unchanged. In 1337 Iceland became part of the Danish kingdom, and in 1804 home rule was granted to the people there. In 1913 full independence was given.

AN AMAZING STATEMENT

It is extremely doubtful if Parliamentary history in Canada holds any parallel of the remarkable utterance in the House of Commons on April 3rd, when Premier King flatly declared his Government would not extend a single cent in help to any Conservative Government in Canada.

More amazing still was the fact that it was in a discussion of unemployment relief, a purely humanitarian duty, that Mr. King laid down the principle that public money was to be used as a threat or a bribe over the heads of those who contribute it to the public treasury.

Four Provincial Premiers refused to believe Mr. King had made such statement until they received the official report. Here it is from the House records:

Mr. King: "May I conclude what I have to say? So far as giving money from this federal treasury is concerned, in relation to this problem of unemployment as it exists today, I might be prepared to go a certain length possibly, in meeting one or two of the Western Provinces that have Progressive premiers at the head of their governments.

Some members, "Oh!"

Mr. King: "But I would not give a single cent to any Tory Government."

Mr. Bennett: "Shame?"

Mr. Stevens: "Shame."

Mr. MacKenzie King: "Do my hon. friends say 'Shame'?"

Mr. Bennett: "Res, shame."

Mr. MacKenzie King: "What is there to be ashamed of?"

Mr. Stevens: "You ought to be ashamed of that."

Mr. MacKenzie King: "My hon. friend is getting very indignant. Something evidently has got under his skin. May I repeat what I have said? With respect to giving moneys out of the federal treasury to any Tory Government in this country for these alleged unemployment purposes, with these governments situated as they are today, with policies diametrically opposed to those of this government, I would not give them a five cent piece."

Thus has Mr. King excommunicated five great Provinces of Canada from aid from the Federal treasury, to which they contribute much more than one-half the total taxation of more than $400,000,000 a year. He has insulted and attempted to bludgeon the great majority of people in those provinces, thousands of whom heretofore gave their federal votes to the Liberal party. He has insulted hundreds of thousands of Conservatives in the other four Provinces. He has announced a wholly improper and indefensible policy, the use of the moneys of all Canada to coerce political opinion.

ON INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Sir George Perley made a most valuable suggestion last Friday before the parliamentary committee on international affairs. He expressed the view that a complete library on international affairs should be maintained in Ottawa. Summer schools could be conducted in connection with the library. Students at any university interested in the subject could attend. Doubtless Sir George's suggestion will appeal to the chairman of the parliamentary committee, Cameron R. McIntosh, member for North Battleford, who is taking the work of inquiry seriously.

One possible method of establishing this library would be to enlist the aid of the Public Archives of Canada. Indeed, under Dr. A. G. Doughty's able direction the foundation of an international library has already been laid. Since the war, but particularly within the last five years, many valuable documents have been added to the records of the Public Archives. Excellent use is being made of the facilities provided for students, but it should be possible to extend this desirable public service by summer schools along the lines suggested by Sir George Perley.

Canada is so placed in the world between Europe and the Far East, in closest relation to Great Britain and the nearest neighbor to the United States, it is in every way desirable that the Canadian public should be better informed on international affairs. Miss MacPhail's view, expressed in the House, is that more money relatively should be spent on promoting peace, with less on preparations for war. The munitions of peace must be largely in the form of books, pamphlets and written articles. One source of supply for such munitions may well be maintained in the Public Archives.

The Only Larks in America

Fifteen minutes car drive from the Empress Hotel, Victoria, is the only colony of skylarks on the continent of North America. This sweetest of all songsters of whom Canadian children read in all anthologies of British poetry, but which they have never seen or heard in actual life in their own country, save in this one section of the Dominion, has been acclimatized at Victoria successfully. They are to be found in considerable numbers among the oaks to the north of the city, on the slopes of Mt. Tolmie, at the Colwood Golf course, among the orchards of Gordon Head, in the deep meadows near Elk Lake, and from the flower-scented grounds of Butchart's Gardens. Photographs show the Gardens with inset of the English skylark.

One of the largest real estate transactions of modern times will be put through at the present session of the Canadian Federal Parliament, when legislation will be submitted to enable the Government to hand over millions of acres of land, a substantial amount of water power, vast forest wealth and other natural resources to the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia.

The music, songs and dances of Latin, Celt, Scandinavian, Slav, Teuton and British will all be presented for Canadians this month when on March 19-22, the third Great West Canadian Folk Dance, Folk Song and Handicrafts Festival will be held under the auspices of the Canadian Pacific Railway at the Palliser Hotel in Calgary.

Unusually heavy pre-Lenten weddings were indicated this month from the Windsor street station, Montreal, when 25 blushing honeymooners left that city for Ottawa, Quebec and New York on one morning. Station officials say that this is very heavy for the time of year and comes close to the number leaving the station on mornings of Cupid's special month of June.

CANADIAN INDUSTRIES

How much do Canadian women of to-day know about Canadian Industries? We women of Canada who are about 90% of the buyers, should know to what extent we are affecting industrial development by the intelligence or otherwise, which we where they are marketed? Who Do we know what goods manufactured in Canada are exported, and show as purchasers.

Do we know that Grecian women are making bread from Canadian flour, that men in Danish dairies and packing houses are wearing Canadian made rubber boots? That mines in South Africa produce gold by power transmitted by Canadian made rubber belting. At Henley Regatta a popular sandwich is made from Canadian lobster and salmon. Peruvian and Columbian crude oils flow down Canadian pipe lines to the tankers at the port docks. In harvest time in France can be heard the whirring of Canadian binders. Canadian lanterns shed a glow from Chinese junk and barges. Theatre curtains the world over are made fire resistant with Canadian asbestos. Canadian toilet soaps brighten the faces of West Indians and South Americans while Canadian carbide brightens their nights. West African docks are solidified by Canadian cement reinforced by Canadian steel. The dock warehouses have Canadian rolling doors, and Canadian rails carry the produce to and from the steamers. Newspapers with circulations running into millions carry their messages on Canadian newsprint. Bonnie lassies in New Zealand and England photograph their picnic parties with Canadian cameras and films.

We must not forget how important our Canadian wool is. Canada has her woollen mills, and also has a thriving wool-growers co-operative association to which many Canadian sheep-breeders belong. Woollen mills are an important branch of Canadian Industries, and our homespun made up in dainty articles, and by the yard are eagerly bought by our friends from across the border.

There is a big foreign demand for Canadian autos, which is another branch of Canadian Industries; they are in demand from Alaska to Belgium Congo. Over roads in the four corners of the earth Canadian autos are rolling in ever increasing numbers. Low priced cars went everywhere, and with the exception of one which went to Persia and one to Syria, the high priced cars found a market in the United Kingdom. Canadian trucks are carrying freight over the roads of Malta, across the deserts of Africa, over the mountains of Peru. They went to Ceylon and the Straits Settlements, to Palestine and Salvador. Those in far lands whose purses were too slim for autos sent in orders for Canadian bicycles.

The Canadian National Exhibition has gone far towards fostering the demand for made-in-Canada goods. It is a source of pride to a true Canadian citizen to be able to say of some article, that has been manufactured of entirely Canadian goods, by Canadian workmen, that this was made in my country.

Celanese is one of these articles, it is an incidental product of one of Great Britain's war-time industries. Cellulose acetate was used in great quantities as dope for airplane wings and fuselages, a protection against wind and rain and sun. To-day it is used for feminine adornment and necessities of the home. Truly a case of sword turning plough-share. It is a habit of the press to refer to the romance of celanese and the term is not ill-chosen. The Provincial board of the Quebec Women's Institutes; at the semi-annual meeting decided to again send an exhibit to the Canadian National Exhibition, in the form of a textile display, textiles manufactured at home and commercially, in the Province of Quebec; textiles made from wool, linen and celanese fibres.

As British men and women we rejoice that Celanese is a British industry, giving employment to thousands of loyal subjects. Home dress-makers will be glad to see their choice endorsed by Parisian dress designers whose supremacy in the world of fashion cannot seriously be challenged.

The smart women of our cities are buying celanese to beautify their homes, their children & themselves. We can be justly proud of our produced-in and made-in-Canada goods. Let each one of us demand Canadian merchandise, and as the links in a chain makes its strength, so will our individual buying, strengthen this great country of ours.

CORRESPONDENCE

While at different times the Watchman has drawn attention to its readers of the need of a hospital for Lachute, and asked from its citizens an expression of opinion, it takes one of its old residents, in the person of J. M. Armstrong, of Oxbow, Sask., to respond to our appeal, and their kindly letter (with renewal of subscription) is published as follows:—

"Having read about the desirability of establishing a hospital in Lachute, I am enclosing a clipping from the Oxbow Herald about the Community Hospital in Oxbow. Oxbow is a town of between six and seven hundred in population. There are operations performed very frequently, many of serious nature, by our two local doctors. Since opened it has saved a number of lives in this district.

If a small town can do this, a town like Lachute should be able to support a large hospital.

Yours truly,
J. M. ARMSTRONG.

COMMUNITY HOSPITAL FLOURISHES FINANCIALLY

The Hospital board met Saturday March 22nd. Messrs. Carswell, Reid, Davison, Thompson, Porter, Noble, Lang, Wylie and Allen present.

Nurse Bishop, who fills the dual role of matron and treasurer, presented a most encouraging financial report. Two years ago, the hospital owed $1500 on running expenses. Now we owe $900. Two years ago patients owed the hospital $1500. Now they owe us $3,000. Please get this fixed in your minds. Bad times, bad debts, short crops and poor prices, and yet your little hospital during the last two years has improved its position $750 so far as its debts are concerned, and has placed an additional $1500 on its books. Does that bear out the board's prediction that if you saw fit to make your hospital municipal, it would not be a burden on you, or does it not? During the past three years your hospital, starting with nothing, has treated 500 patients. Their bills amounted to $20,000. These bills have been paid to the tune of $17,000, or just 85 per cent in cash. And at the end of three years the hospital owes $900 on running expenses with a thousand dollars worth of supplies and about $1500 worth of furniture on hand, and another $1,000 has been spent on improvements to the property. Was that debt of $900 too much to incur in order to take care of 500 sick people? Was $900 ever spent in this community, for which better value was received? We will leave the answer to you. The board feel just a little bit chummy about this splendid financial showing.

Seventeen European races contributed songs, folklore and handicraft work while inhabitants of Labrador, the Arctic Circle, the Maritimes, Pacific Coast, and Indians furnished their quota towards the brilliant success of the Great West Folk Dance, Folk Song and Handicraft Festival, held at Calgary, March 19-22. The Premier of the province, the Lieutenant-Governor and D. C. Coleman, vice-president Western Lines, and J. M. Gibbon, General Publicity Agent, representing the Canadian Pacific Railway, gave inspirational addresses in this effort to "broaden, stabilize and elevate Canada's national consciousness."

Recuperation of Europe from economic ill effects of the war and the return of European nations to active and formidable competition in world's production is making it more and more essential for Canada and the United States to develop the vast potential markets of the Orient," said Louis Geunther, publisher of the New York Financial World, who sailed from Vancouver recently aboard S.S. Empress of Asia for a tour of China and Japan.

Widespread interest aroused in the United States as well as Canada by the musical programmes broadcast by the Canadian Pacific Railway on Friday evenings over its own transcontinental network have led to negotiations between the railway and the National Broadcasting Company of New York, under which Canadian Pacific will supply WJZ and associated stations with a series of Canadian programmes made in Canada by Canadian talent. Five million receiving sets owned in a population of sixty millions will be reached by this extension which commenced first week of April.

THE new Durant 6-14 has such striking APPEARANCE and is so apparently a COMFORTABLE car that it only requires a test of its PERFORMANCE for one to fully realize its true VALUE.

Admiration for its appearance is accounted for by its attractive colors and general design . . . a low-built car with long, flowing lines and spear-point decorative theme throughout. Large doors, wide seats, deep cushions and a surplus of interior roominess immediately suggest a new standard of riding comfort.

The merits of the new motor are best appreciated when the 6-14 is in actual road performance. After you have seen this new car, ask your dealer to give you a demonstration in order that you may judge its new riding and driving qualities for yourself.

The Double Job

Many a housewife does not find her full time and energies occupied with her housekeeping and ambitiously wishes to do something out side, to supplement the family income. That is very commendable, but she will find it more difficult and less satisfactory than she has anticipated.

For the farm housewife, it is easy. She can always find extra work at her own door, but for the city woman it is different. Almost every job to be obtained is a full-time job and does not combine well with getting three meals a day, washing dishes, ironing and ridding up a house, not to mention the hundred and one other tasks that fall to the lot of a housekeeper. How shall she manage to perform this double job?

"Let her husband share the work with her," someone suggests. First, you must get the consent of the husband. Second, even if willing, he probably will not be adept at it and it will irritate both him and her to witness his awkwardness, and possible unhappiness in this. It really is no way to live, except as a temporary makeshift, to prepare a hasty breakfast before dashing off to work, and to come home, tired, to a mess of dirty dishes and beds unmade and the evening meal to get. This is not a satisfactory home life.

No! I am not offering a solution. I am merely presenting a problem.

Vary Your Type

Why dress your hair, year in and year out in the same way? Your friends say, "It looks just like you," but that is because they have never seen you in any other style, and all of us are made of many different personalities, all combined in one. At one time, we may be one kind of person, at another stage of life, or in different circumstances, another. Wouldn't it freshen and rejuvenate you, at this glorious spring season, to play a different role for awhile. At least, play it on occasions.

For example, you are a demure, modest little thing. Give yourself a treat, and your friends a little surprise, by dressing a bit brilliantly for once, and see how you and they like it. Comb your hair a different way, wear it plain, if you have been having it curled, or curled if you have been having it plain, or show your ears, or make the part somewhere else. (That is good for the hair anyway).

Do not wear quaint clothes with modern jewelry. Keep the type you are a perfect type, not a mixture. Be either quaint, or modern completely, for the time, not a mongrel.

Have one modest, demure outfit; then vary it with one which is rather showy and glad; one which is elegant and rich; and one which is out-door, of brown with a dash of red or gold, or blue like the sky, or green like the grass and trees.

Do not be too willing to "stay put." Fly a brand new role, on various days and occasions. It will put new pep and life into you; and will stimulate new interest in you on the part of your friends, and they will admire you for being progressive and adaptable. It will indicate that you are up-and-coming, and not a "dead one."

Baby Clothes

The well dressed baby will wear a diaper, a flannel band, a knitted shirt with long sleeves, a skirt or not, depending on the temperature, a thin cotton dress, a sweater when it is cool, or blankets if he is very young, and socks when he is a few months old. All of his clothing will be white and easily laundered.

The old-fashioned, long dresses are passed. Modern ones are made about twenty-two inches long and with large arm and neck measurements, so that by the time he is six months old his dresses are short and fit him perfectly.

When baby begins to creep he needs rompers. His first pair of shoes should be of the soft type with soles of the same material as the rest of the shoe.

Just one word as to the diaper. It is no longer folded triangular, but oblong and pinned at the sides, and also pinned to the flannel and on each side at the front. Thus it becomes a more comfortable and less budging, pant-like garment.

Conservative Furnishings

Gay, loud colors and bizarre cubist and futuristic designs are supposed to be the style in modern furnishings, but not so in the best homes. Visit the most expensive furniture stores, where the best furniture is sold, and you will find that conservative lines prevail. Good lines in furniture and grace, beauty and simplicity never go out of style and cannot be crowded out by modern jazzy pieces.

If one insists in furnishing a room with some note of the modern, let it be a small and temporary piece, not an important and expensive piece, which you will feel that you must keep for years, when once purchased. If you wish to mix furnishings in a room, an antique chair, for example, with a modern lamp, let the color and design of the lamp be not too glaring and intrusive. Soft, greyed-down shades and simple lines will go with any furnishings.

A Good Sleeper

If you are a light sleeper and cannot induce that blissful unconsciousness which "knits up the ravelled sleeve of care," there is something wrong with your habits of living, for Mother Nature intends us all to have plenty of sleep. That is why she draws down the purple curtains of the night and makes it deliciously dark and quiet and rest invigilating. If you toss on a restless bed and hear the clock strike every hour, you are sure to be dull and despondent and inefficient the next day, until you get the habit.

The conditions which induce sleep are simple and easily attained. They are: a body tired from physical exercise, a serene mind and a clear conscience, a light evening meal, and a regular bed time.

The Child's Sweet-tooth

Children should not be permitted to gorge themselves on candy, but a certain amount of it, eaten as a dessert, or after other food and not on an empty stomach, is satisfying of a natural craving. Sugar is a highly concentrated source of energy and the child of ceaseless activity demands this support for his vitality.

If raisins, and other fruits, nuts and chocolate are contained in the candy, they furnish pleasing sources of proteins, fats and vitamins.

Choose your candy wisely, and eat it in moderation, after meals or in the middle of an afternoon, and it will increase your stamina.

Pie Crust

To make the best pie crust, have all ingredients as cold as possible and handle lightly. To two cups of sifted flour add a half teaspoon of salt and a half cup of shortening. With a knife or spatula, cut the shortening in until the mixture looks like meal. Add water, a little at a time, until the dough cleans the bowl of all flour and paste. It should not take more than one-third or one-half cup of cold water, the less the better. Roll the dough one-eighth of an inch thick on a slightly floured board. Fit loosely on a pie plate. Turn the edge and prick with a fork. This makes enough dough for a two-crust pie.

Creamed Onions

A delicious vegetable dish is creamed green onions. Try creaming the tops with the onions. The green imparts a pleasant color as well as making the flavor less strong.

Picture Making

It's rather lonely when you are all by yourself, isn't it, children, especially if you have read all your picture books through and played all your games? There doesn't seem anything nice to do to amuse you. But I can tell you of a very pleasant pastime that you can play quite alone. Though you'll find it equally good fun another time with your playmates.

Picture-making can be most entrancing. First of all get a sheet of cardboard or a piece of thick white paper. It must be nice and clean to make a background for your picture. Then get an old picture book that you are allowed to cut, or perhaps an old comic or fashion book. Cut out lots of figures and trees and houses and animals and then start building your own picture from them. If you decide on an outdoor picture, put in trees and grass, sticking down animals and houses and bits of sky.

When you think you have got a nice complete picture, color it all in. You'll be surprised at the lovely effects you get.

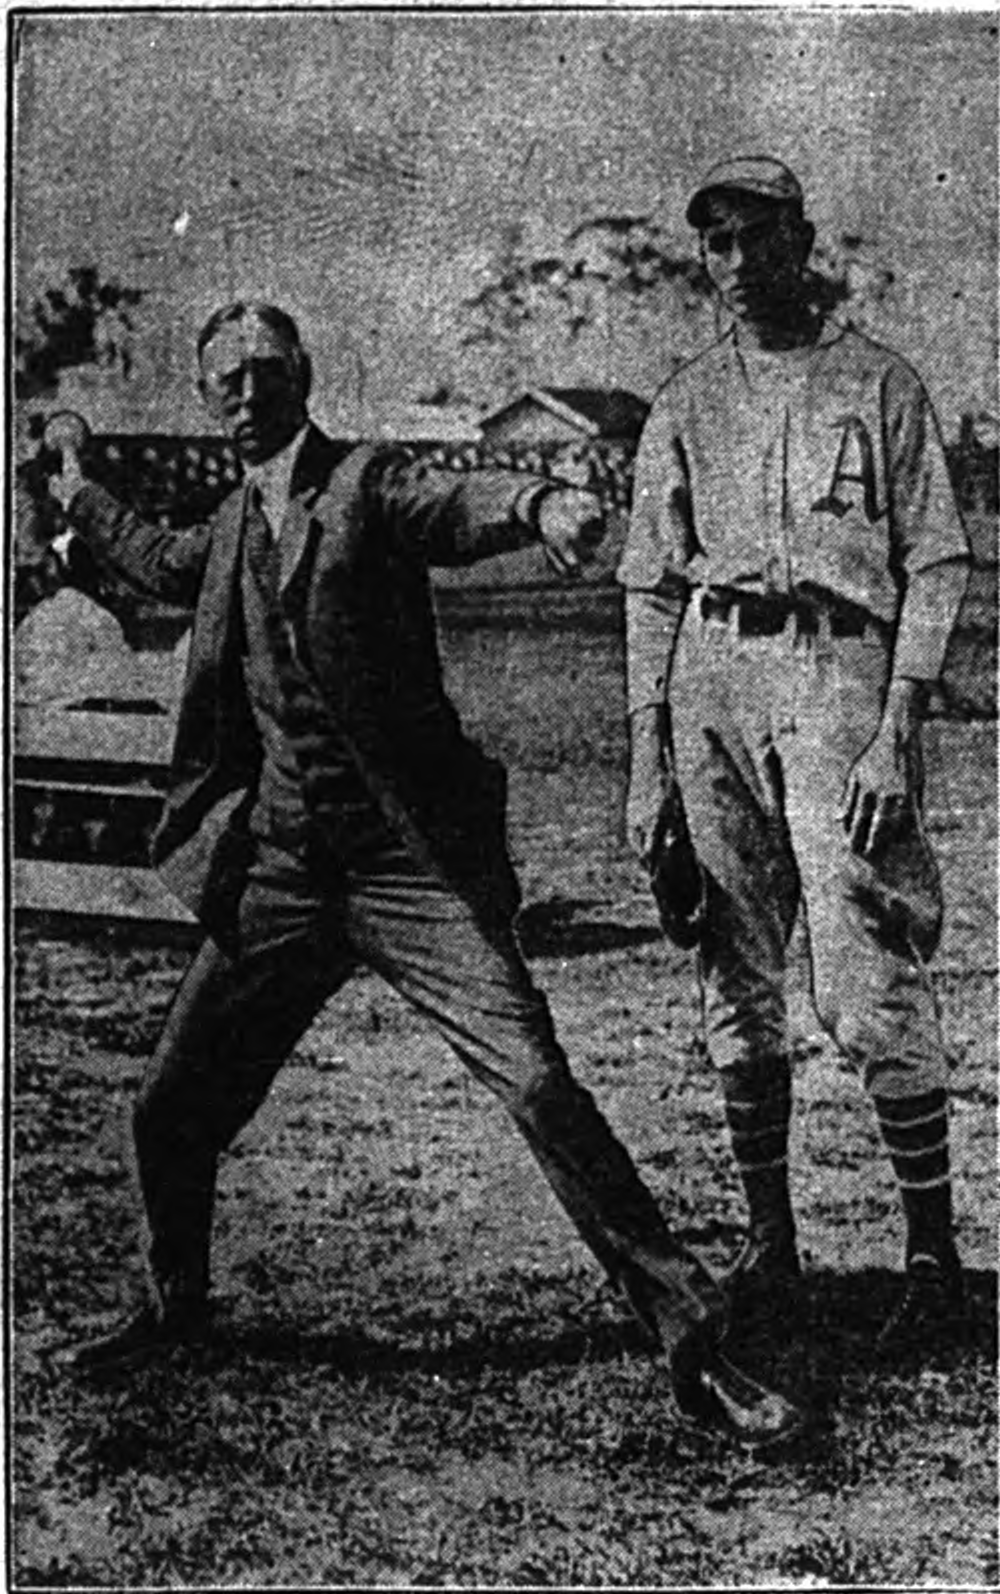

PLEASURE

Pleasure, like quicksilver, is bright and coy; We strive to grasp it with our utmost skill; Still it eludes us, and it glitters still; If seized at last, compute your mighty gains; What is it, but rank poison in your veins. —Young.

Red Cross Blazes New Trail For Scientific Housekeeping

With the recent establishment in the Ontario Division of the Canadian Red Cross Society of a Visiting Housekeepers' Service for the province, there has been taken a second most important step along a pioneering trail leading in the direction of a raised status for housekeeping and home-making in Canada. The first step forward was made in Toronto some five years ago, when a unique service of this kind was initiated in that city, by the local Red Cross Society, the Housekeeping Centre then established being an experiment arousing widespread interest throughout the Dominion and in the United States, where a few similar enterprises are being tried out.

The original Canadian undertaking arose from war experience among philanthropic and social service workers generally in the Queen City. During the long years when our armies were overseas, thousands of families of soldiers were looked after and visited by members of regimental auxiliaries or other agencies, in Toronto and elsewhere. It was found by workers at that time that one of the most urgent requirements of the social order was the Visiting Trained Housekeeper who could not only assist, but advise.

Giving, giving and again giving, to many of these households was, perhaps, charity in the older sense, but it was also national extravagance for far too few of the women in the assisted families were well instructed in the maintenance of health standards, understood what foods yield the best return in nourishment for given expenditure, knew how best to cook for child or adult, how to care for the sick or to wisely conduct the business of a home.

Thus there was much discussion regarding the widely felt need for a Trained Housekeeper Service which would meet the demands of the troublous days of war, and, in times of peace, could be made available when illness or tragedy had entered and disintegrated the household. Funds, however, were lacking for the establishment of the necessary training school and centre, so that it was not until several years after the close of the war that the Toronto Red Cross was able to put its theories into practice by starting an experiment which has proven sociologically most valuable.

In 1924 this Society grasped at the opportunity presented by the proposed abandonment by the city of the old Beverly Street Nursing Mission which had been conducted for many years in an old roomy house, donated for the purpose in earlier days by Mr. Goldwin Smith.

The use of the Mission building was acquired, the house furnished, equipped for the purpose, and placed under the capable management of Miss Lexa Denna, a Household Science specialist who opened the Centre in 1925 with half a dozen trainees in attendance.

The service subsequently provided has been an unqualified success. In times of illness or other family stress it has been given the best type of assistance to many hundreds of homes by the provision of trained helpers.

The Visiting Housekeeper from the Centre knows how to care for children; how to prepare meals of the best from a limited budget; how to keep the house in order, and how to give simple bedside care to the sick. She steps in when the mother is incapacitated or there is other urgent need. Her salary is paid by the Centre, her hours of service are fixed by the Centre, and all her work is done under its direct superintendence, so that the family has the benefit of conference with an expert social agency which co-operates with all other agencies to supply the exact type of assistance required during the time of stress.

So valuable has proven the Housekeepers' Service that, in the past year, the Toronto Centre has been adopted as a community affair, receiving a substantial grant from the city, an equal amount from the Toronto Red Cross, and a guarantee by the Federation For Community Service to carry all deficits. For it must be understood that this is not a service which as yet can pay its own way, though to-day many of the more prosperous families ask for its help and pay market prices to the Centre for the trained helpers, of whom there are now over thirty in the field. But the bulk of the clients are still unable to pay adequately for the service provided, which aims at assisting underprivileged and more needy families, irrespective of their ability to meet the full cost of the scientific help extended them.

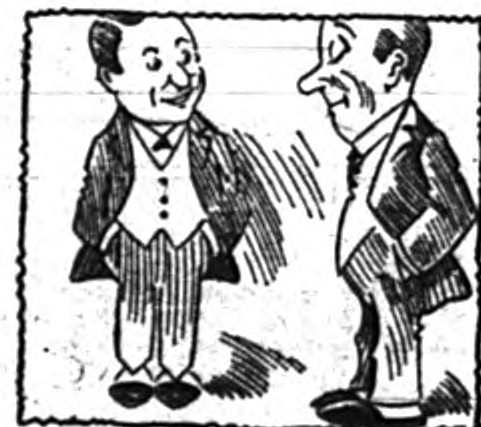

Having in mind the general need which has been so convincingly demonstrated in the Toronto experiment, the Ontario Red Cross has now initiated a provincial enterprise under the directorship of Miss Margaret McCready, who is at the head of the Visiting Trained Housekeepers' Department, which aims to bring the service to all communities applying for it.

Already under Miss McCready's direction the Hamilton Red Cross is establishing a Housekeeping Service in March, with four trained women provided by the Toronto Centre, and it is anticipated that within the next two months both Brantford and St. Catharines will initiate like services.

Province-wide activity along these lines is envisioned by the Red Cross for the near future when Ontario will place herself among forward thinking states in thus attempting on the one hand to supply urgent needs, and on the other to raise the whole status of home making and domestic help to the level of scientific occupations.

THE TRUE CLAIM

She had fought her own hand long enough in the world to learn that the true claim to love lies not in relationship, but in service; that it is more often in the bleak places of the world than under the shadow of the family tree that one finds those who are truly of one's own household.—Francis Gribble.

"I don't see you with Miss Gonne as often as I used to." "No. I'm married to her."

CONSCIENCE

I believe that we cannot live better than in seeking to become better, nor more agreeably than having a clear conscience. —Socrates.

Warden Completes Arduous Journey

Westward Trip from Baker Lake to Reliance Included Patrol of Thelon Game Sanctuary and Shows Romance and Adventure on Government "Job"

Warden A. J. Knox, of the North West Territories and Yukon Branch of the Department of the Interior, has completed the return journey from Baker Lake, at the head of Chesterfield Inlet, Hudson Bay, to Reliance at the east end of Great Slave Lake. During this trip he patrolled through the Thelon Game Sanctuary. Warden Knox accompanied Mr. W. H. B. Hoare, special investigator of the North West Territories and Yukon Branch, during his seventeen months' examination and patrol of the northern musk-ox preserve which was concluded in August last year. Mr. Hoare came to Baker Lake on his way to Chesterfield to meet the Canadian Arctic patrol ship Beothic on its homeward voyage. Warden Knox picked up supplies at Baker Lake and in company with an Eskimo boy began the return trip to the sanctuary.

In his westward journey, Warden Knox had to face high winds, blizzards, bitter cold, and many other hardships. At one time when through accident he was without a compass he became lost but regained the trail and reached his objective. He left Baker Lake early in September, and after a stiff battle with high winds, the Thelon river was reached on the 19th. With "freezep" expected any time, Warden Knox and his Eskimo assistant busied themselves netting fish for dog feed and otherwise preparing for the cold weather.

The work of building a sled for the continuation of the journey was undertaken. Although the lakes were frozen over on October 6th. It was a month later before the ice was thick enough for travel. On November 27 after a very arduous journey Warden Knox arrived at the cabin at the junction of the Thelon and Hanbury rivers. Here, one of the dogs which strayed away from the team during the eastward journey in the summer, was found in good condition. On July 21 he had raced away in pursuit of a herd of caribou and was not seen again. It was expected that he would return to the cabin and a supply of food had been left there for him. He was added to the team for the remainder of the trip.

On December 4 the journey to Reliance was continued but as Warden Knox was without a compass, due to an accident earlier in the trip, he lost his way. The trip across the northern plains he described as cold, with high winds, mist, and a heavy ground drift every day. He discovered that he had missed the trail when he came to a lake near timberline. However the sight of the spruce trees was a welcome one as it gave him and his assistant an opportunity to dry out their clothing and sleeping bags which were frozen stiff. Judging that he had gone too far south of Campbell lake, he set his course due west. He later picked up an Indian trail, reached an encampment, and from the natives received directions which brought him safely to Reliance on December 26.

As his toboggan was worn out he secured another from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police at Reliance and continued on to Snowdrift, a Hudson's Bay Company's post at the mouth of the Snowdrift river on Great Slave Lake. Here he despatched his letters and reports by dog team to Resolution from which point they were carried by air mail to Edmonton and by rail to Ottawa.—Natural Resources.

"Which Is Our Home?"

The things on earth are shadow forms Of something far above. No beauty here is rare enough. No love quite worth our love.

And we were meant for rhapsody, For joys pursued by joys, For suns that carry symphonies, And stars should be our toys.

Oh, of the real and perfect things Such memory is mine That I forget the world I see, Remembering the divine.

Our perfectness we ask again And not the shadows given. Oh, write the gods and tell the gods That Heaven must stay with Heaven! —Jane Arms in the New York Times.

A SONG

If your name is to live at all, it is so much more to have it live in people's hearts than only in their brains! I don't know that one's eyes fill with tears when he thinks of the famous inventor of logarithms, but a song of Burns or a hymn of Charles Wesley goes straight to your heart and you can't help loving both of them, the sinner as well as the saint.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

RECIPROCITY

Is there one word which may serve as the rule of practice for all one's life? Confucius said, "Is not reciprocity a word? What you do not want done to yourself, do not do to others."

SUFFERED FOR YEARS FROM RHEUMATISM

Regained Health Through the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Rheumatism is a disorder of the blood—caused by too much uric acid in the blood. It attacks its victims when vitality is low, thus setting up inflammation in the muscles and joints. Wet and cold weather may start the tortures of rheumatism but it is not the cause. The cause is the blood—bad blood. Enrich and purify the blood and rheumatism will disappear. If you are a sufferer from this painful malady begin the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and see how soon the pains and stiffness will disappear. These pills enrich and purify the blood and good blood means good health.

Mrs. John C. McPherson, St. Mary's, Ont., was a victim of rheumatism for years and writes as follows of her illness and recovery. She says:—"I suffered from rheumatism for nearly sixteen years and for eleven years I was unable to walk. I tried a number of medicines as well as massage and chiropractic treatment without any permanent benefit. I was then so bad that I was at a loss to know what to try next. I noticed in different papers how strongly Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were recommended for cases like mine so I decided to try them. After taking several boxes I noticed that my appetite was improving. The pains became less severe and my color improved. I continued their use and now I am able to do light housework. I wish I could impress on all rheumatic sufferers just what these wonderful pills have done for me."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do one thing but they do it well—then enrich and purify the blood. This rich red blood banishes such troubles as rheumatism, sciatica, neuralgia and neuritis and leaves the former sufferer robust and healthy and well able to take his or her place in doing the duties expected of them. The pills are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Death Stalks Vienna

If the present death rate prevails in this city in two hundred and fifty years there will not be a soul left. Every month there are seventeen hundred more deaths than births. Last year there were 880 suicides against 867 deaths from epidemic causes. Three per cent. of all deaths in Austria is by suicide.

Health organization is the essential framework of a sound body politic.

April Foolish — and Wise!
By James Edward Hungerford
Some folks are April foolish,
And some are April wise,
And some are just plain "mush"—
And "cop" the donkey prize!
Some kick the hat with brick flat,
And smash their big toes flat,
And others cash the "trick" in—
And walk off with the hat!

Some get "the laugh" on others,
And chortle at the "joke,"
And make fun of their brothers—
Who help them when they're broke!
Some step around a bill-book,
They don't think holds a yen;
One grabs it with his "pin-hook"—
And finds inside—a ten!

Some think they'll "put it over"
On "soft ones" they can "carve,"
And spend their days "in clover"—
And let the victims starve!
But when at last they waken,
And take stock of their wares,
They find they were mistaken—
The "booby prize" is theirs!!

Some folks are April foolish,
Also May and June;
In other months, untruthful—
And imitate the loon!
Some others use their "thinkers,"
Also their hands and eyes;
Their brains are clear of clinkers—
And these are April Wise!

It's difficult to relieve the breath of suspicion of halitosis.

When a fellow gets with a girl he gets away with anything he tries, but after he's married he tries everything he can get away with.

Judge—"Prisoner, have you anything to say before I pass sentence?"
Prisoner—"No, your honor, except that it takes very little to please me."

"There's a hole in one," said the golfer, as he reached for his socks.

The shepherds watched their flocks by night, which shows that neighbors have always been about the same.

It is hard to understand a girl before she is married, and even harder afterwards.

There are still a lot of people who will take checks from people they do not know and then yell for the police.

Charleston—"And say, dearie, they even took my finger prints."
Black Bottom—"Hey? Well, look at what you took first."

Your superiors are those you delight to catch in error.

He—"What do you think of this invention of the artificial larynx?"
She—"It would be a splendid relief if church ushers would get wise to it and have all larynxes taken out and cleared before the sermon starts."

Sell better merchandise for less money and you'll get the business and it will make no difference whether your place is called a chain store or rope store.

It's only three years now until the World's Fair in Chicago, and we believe we can wait.

THE DAWN

Listen to the exhortation of the dawn! Look to this day!
For it is life, the very life of life, In its brief course lie all the Varieties and realities of your existence:

The bliss of growth,
The glory of action,
The splendor of beauty?
For yesterday is but a dream,
And to-morrow is only a vision,
But to-day well lived makes
Every yesterday a dream of happiness
And every to-morrow a vision of hope,
Look well, therefore to this day!
Such is the salutation of the dawn.

Youngest Ocean Traveller

Beryl Brown, 13 months of age, youngest traveller ever to have made a trans-Atlantic trip alone, travelled half way round the world by the time she reached her mother in Red Pass, B.C. She came over on S.S. Minnedosa to Saint John and thence by Canadian Pacific to her home. She is showing her doll to officials and newspapermen who came to see her in her sleeping car aboard the train.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF A FOND MOTHER

Her child is a never-ending source of joy and a never-failing responsibility to the fond mother. It not infrequently happens that minor ailments of the child distress and puzzle her; she does not know just what to do, yet feels them not serious enough to call a doctor. As just such times as these it is that Baby's Own Tablets are found to be mother's greatest help and friend.

Most childhood ailments arise from a derangement of the stomach or bowels. Baby's Own Tablets will immediately banish them by cleansing the bowels and sweetening the stomach. Thus they relieve colic, correct the digestion, banish constipation and make teething pains disappear.

Baby's Own Tablets are guaranteed to be free from injurious drugs such as opiates and narcotics and may be given to the newborn babe with perfect safety and beneficial results. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Maritime Lumber Trade

Saint John Telegraph-Journal (Ind.): The announcement that the Canadian National Railways has successfully negotiated with the Boston and Maine Railway for a reduction of 15 per cent. freight rates from the Maritime Provinces to New England points is being received with gratification by lumber shippers. Some weeks ago the Canadian Pacific Railway made a similar cut in rates. Now all points in the Maritime Provinces will benefit from the savings to be effected. . . . The whole question has been handled from a business standpoint and a satisfactory conclusion has been reached, without the old-time political fireworks which attended the settlement of such problems. Another of the recommendations of the Duncan Commission has thus been carried into effect to a major degree.

Keeping Air Cool on Trains in Summer

The Santa Fe Railway has been experimenting for several years with the problem of keeping the air cool in club, dining and sleeping cars, during the summer season.

W. J. Black, passenger traffic manager, states that at last the problem is solved. As a starter, a contract has been closed for early installation of reconditioned air, cooled by a patented process, on dining cars of The Chief, the Santa Fe's extra fast and extra fare flyer.

There is absolutely no draft, the cool air being brought in overhead, with a resultant uniform temperature of 65 to 70 degrees Fahr.

HATRED AND LOVE

It is a curious subject of observation and inquiry, whether hatred and love be not the same thing at bottom. Each, in its utmost development, supposes a high degree of intimacy and heart-knowledge; each renders one individual dependent for the food of his affections and spiritual life upon another; each leaves the passionate lover, or the no less passionate hater, forlorn and desolate by the withdrawal of his subject. Philosophically considered, therefore, the two passions seem essentially the same, except that one happens to be seen in a celestial radiance, and the other in a dusky and lurid glow. The Scarlet Letter.

POSSIBILITIES

"A man's best desires are always the index and measure of his possibilities; and the most difficult duty that a man is capable of doing is the duty that above all he should do."

"Do not think that what is hard for thee to master is impossible for man; but if a thing is possible and proper for man, deem it attainable by thee."—Marcus Aurelius.

British Trade in Canada

Saskatoon Star-Phoenix (Lib.): There is only one kind of action by Canada which can stimulate British export trade, and that is, of course, a reduction in the tariff on British goods. The preference now given appears substantial, but it is not enough to overcome the British exporter's handicap of distance from the market. By its 1919 platform the Canadian Liberal party is pledged to increase the preference to 50 per cent., making duties on imports from Britain just half of general rates. This promise should be redeemed in Mr. Dunning's first budget. There was never a more appropriate time for taking that step.

Empire Trade

London Sunday Express (Ind.): Between 1913 and 1926 the percentage of American trade with the four Dominions and with India increased by over 6 per cent. During the same period Britain's percentage declined by nearly 10 per cent. In these circumstances it is hardly astonishing if American critics express surprise, tempered by apprehension, that we should be so slow in organizing our Empire as an economic entity.

DO YOU SUFFER WITH HEADACHE?

So easy to get quick relief and prevent an attack in the future. Avoid bromides and dope. They relieve quickly but they affect the heart and are very dangerous. They are depressing and only give temporary relief, the cause of the headache still remains within.

The same and harmless way. First correct the cause, sweeten the sour and acid stomach, relieve the intestines of the decayed and poisonous food matter, gently stimulate the liver, start the bile flowing and the bowels pass off the waste matter which causes your headache. Try Carter's Little Liver Pills. Druggists 25c red pkg.

True Humanity

In a certain village in Ontario there was a family consisting of man, woman and four children. They got along passably well until the man, tiring of his responsibility as a parent, suddenly departed for parts unknown. No effort was made to find him and the brave little mother became the village washerwoman to earn enough to keep her children together. Working for other people all day she had little time to train her children, and the oldest—a boy of twelve—developed plying habits that soon made him the talk of the neighbors. The magistrate decided to send him to the Reformatory and a social worker was deputed to convey him to the institution next day. For safe keeping he took the lad home with him and as he was going to the church meeting that evening he took the boy along so he could have his eye on him. The good women gathered at the church became interested, and the pastor suggested that they make him the subject of their prayers. A discussion followed which led to practical results. The boy was found to be a mighty fine youngster only needing encouragement. His sentence was rescinded and with contributions from the missionary fund of the church the family was assisted to become self-sustaining. All concerned were made very happy as a result of this friendly intervention.—J. J. Kelso.

Miss Dorothy Matthews who has successfully completed the Y.M.C.A. Course in Montreal spent the week-end the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Matthews, of Centreville. On her return she will enter the Women's General Hospital for three months training.

The many friends of Mr. Albert Chabot will welcome his return to Lachute, after an absence of several years in Montreal. Mr. Chabot has leased the southern half of the Charlebois block on Bethany Street, and has again started in business for himself. He is a first-class tailor, and experienced fitter and will give strict personal attention to all work.

Miss Staveland, of the Canadian Chautauqua Circuit was in town this week in an effort to interest our people in putting on a five day Chautauqua for the month of July. Having already committed ourselves for a renewal contract with the American organization to hold our Chautauqua in September, we understand that arrangements have been made with our neighboring town, Brownsburg, who are to be congratulated upon their effort. As they have freely supported and enjoyed the entertainments of past years in Lachute, this will afford an opportunity for our own folk to heartily reciprocate.

Quite a lot of talk has been going the rounds lately and this because the energetic squad engaged in remodeling the store leased by W. D. McQuat to the A. & P. organization had vacated the premises and all sorts of rumors were afloat. However there is not further cause of worry, because the early part of this week found the doors open again and the heavily laden trucks unloading their cargoes of provisions in readiness for their opening this week. One of the pleasing features of our new comers is the fact that one of our old townsmen has been appointed local manager, and we welcome the return of Mr. Wilbur Fraser.

A special meeting of the Town Council was held in the Town Hall, on Monday last, when the by-laws relating to waterworks, improvements and sewage passed their third reading, and it was finally decided to submit same to the electors on May 5th. and 6th. Mayor Tremblay is busily preparing an explanatory circular which will shortly be distributed to the electors in order that they may fully understand the questions upon which they are called upon to exercise their vote.

It was first thought advisable to incorporate both the waterworks and sewage in the one by-law, but it was finally decided that as there was considerable diversion of opinion in such extensive outlay it would be better to divide them and vote on the two by-laws in separate measure.

Had she lived a few weeks longer she and her husband would have celebrated their golden anniversary, having been married in May 1880 by the late Rev. Jas. Fraser at that time pastor of St. Mungo's Church. Four children were born to their union, James, Margaret (Mrs. R. Clarke) of St. Catherine's, Ont.; Frederick, of Parent, Que., and Grace, Mrs. L. Gleason, of Fossmill, Ont. That the family possessed the sympathy of the community in their loss was evidenced by the large gathering of friends and neighbors at the funeral on Sunday afternoon. The service was held in St. Mungo's Church, being conducted by the pastor Rev. J. McLean and the remains were laid to rest in the adjoining cemetery.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Peter DeWolfe, visiting at the Benham, in England, meets Brena Selous. Muriel Benham tells him to keep away from Brena or he will "vanish like the others." Brena tells Peter her story. When but seventeen and living at Mrs. Wilkie's boarding house in Dallas, Texas, she arranged to go to St. Louis to marry her lover, Jim Hennepin, who falls to show up and has not been heard of since. Hennepin's boss, Compton Parmalee, then asks Brena to marry him and she agrees. As they leave on their honeymoon, Parmalee suddenly turns to her and asks what is the "fate" that follows her, declaring he feels a horrible, unaccountable terror. Parmalee gets Brena to draw from memory a figure she has seen on a piece of paper given to her by Jim Hennepin, and says it is the Kukulcan, the symbol of the Aztec Cult.

In March Parmalee conceived the idea that he was being followed. He spoke of it several times and Brena laughed. He was not amused. "Then report it to the police," she said.

"The police? What a suggestion!" She heard no more, however, of his morbid suspicion. And yet the unknown terror of which he would now say nothing, infected her so that the cloth of each day had woven into it some threads of fear, in a crazy, senseless, indistinct pattern.

A crisis came one evening. A musical performance kept the pair out until nearly eleven. "Good night," said Brena, as they parted. "You seemed tonight more like yourself."

He laughed and waved to her as she went down the corridor to her chambers. She was undressing slowly when there sounded three quick successive pistol shots.

Her first thought was that Parmalee had killed himself. Perhaps if her mind had been less active she would have screamed, but she remembered that three shots were more than the number usually fired by one who seeks destruction. So she concluded that whatever the menace her husband had feared, it now had proved its reality.

For the moment, she at least believed, and even in her startled breathing she formed the words, "It is some fault of mine."

She opened the door cautiously and the moon's rays on the carpet beneath her feet went forward across the carpet in the corridor like sliding fingers. "Stand back, Brena!" Compton called in the darkness. "Don't get between me and him. He's at the end of the hall. Look out. I'm going to turn on the light!"

A sudden flood of light filled the corridor. "You fool!" cried Brena. "You have shot the glass out of this picture." She pointed to the large photographic print.

"I thought it was him," said Parmalee.

"Him?" asked Brena. "Who?"

"Why—a burglar," he said quivering.

She came close and put her hands upon his shoulders.

"The city is bad for you, Compton," she said. "You are quivering yourself to pieces over some absurd apprehension. We must go outside somewhere—a house, a garden—quiet."

He almost blubbered. "We must go where I can escape, if there is a chance to escape," he said. "And Brena—If anything does happen to me—"

"Yes."

"—you're not to blame—not in the sense that it's your own will. Do you understand?"

She looked at him in disgust; for the first time she felt a pang of hate. Within thirty days he had purchased a great gloomy house up the Hudson.

He had a coping of concrete, filled with broken glass, built all around the top of the wall. He had ordered iron bars for the lower windows, and an elaborate electric burglar-alarm system.

But the retreat into the walled estate gave little relief to the secret fears of Compton Parmalee. For a few months, to be sure, he showed lively interest in the rehabilitation of the place, and Brena, who had made up her mind to stand by her extraordinary husband, formulated a policy with full knowledge that it would be hard to follow.

Her own nature revolted against mysteries and superstitions and fears of unrealities.

Her husband had not ever given her grounds to assert that these were the basis for his morbid panics, but he had, by malice or inadvertence, created a dim picture of some menace, some strange force, which pursued to the death any man unlucky enough to have meddled with her destiny.

At times it was difficult for her to escape, by the exercise of common sense, a haunting idea that there was some foundation for this apparent absurdity.

A choice was open to her between turning her back upon Parmalee's fears and setting out to uncover them.

It was not because the latter course was difficult that she rejected it; it was not because of his increasing irritability when questioned, nor was it because he always, in the end, made her feel that he was trying to spare her from some dreadful knowledge, and some overhanging curse that was upon her.

She chose to neglect the terror that had seized him because she felt that if sufficient neglect were heaped upon it, it would gradually die. Often enough in years that were to follow she wished with all her being that she had not allowed herself to remain in the dark.

She wished often enough after the end came that she had at least kept her eyes open, but there were incidents which drew her attention by the very force of their being extraordinary or bizarre.

Within a year Parmalee had developed an insatiable appetite for his studies of the history of the Southwest, his collecting of books and manuscripts upon the ancient civilization and tribes of Central America, Mexico and the tangent region of the United States, where the painted deserts, and his compilation of data that bore in any way upon the comparison of the Inca, the Aztec and the Yucatan civilization with those of Egypt, Greece and Persia.

The third winter of their marriage her husband began a practice of finding relief from that terror which had crept in upon him at first but now had begun to drive his nerves into a gallop. He who had conserved so carefully his precious health, now undertook a new burden.

One morning Parmalee did not answer Brena's call. He was not at the breakfast table. The servants could not find him in his rooms.

He was discovered finally by his voice which came in faintly with the sound of the wind. Brena, without protection from the driving rain, ran out the great front door, down the path to the massive iron gate.

Parmalee was there with his little white hands grasping the upright bars—swaying backward and forward like a caged animal, staring out with wild eyes at the high shores of the distant river bank seen through the haze, his bare head wet and disheveled.

"Come on and get me—damn your eyes!" he screamed. "You've been waiting long enough. Come and get me. I'm not afraid of you all!"

Brena looked up and down the road beyond the gate. No living creature was in sight.

"You better come into the house, Compton," she said with a tone of authority.

She believed he had lost his mind.

He looked at her stupidly, his lower jaw limp and hanging, but he followed her meekly into the house.

He stopped with his hands on the black walnut newel post of the stairs and leaned toward her.

"Footprints," he said grinning like a fiend. "Footprints!"

Brena, in his library, walked rapidly toward the telephone on his desk. At last she had been driven to summon the aid, counsel and authority of the world beyond the doors of this damned home. Parmalee was mad!

But as she put out her hand toward the telephone instrument it knocked over an empty glass. She raised the glass to her nose.

The supports of her heart suddenly crumbled, for then she knew that her husband was not mad, but was only at the end of a long night trying to drink himself into the freedom of insensibility.

To Brena the cause of his terror, his suspicions, his isolation, the horrid exiled days he led, the sleepless nights he spent, now appeared of less importance than the fact that no man was suffering more than he.

But she was unable to help him: his defences were now impregnable.

"I do not know what you mean," he said. "We live a clean, wholesome kind of existence, don't we? You never hear complaints from me. I do not go out much, it is true. But I am working. I do not sleep well. Neither do many men. I drank too much once, that is true. But that was thirty or forty days ago. You have not seen me make the mistake again."

"It calms me. My nerves are not good—there's no denying. But why should you complain, Brena? You can have anything you want for the asking. Why complain?"

"I'm not complaining," she said. "I am inquiring."

"Inquiring?" he said with sudden heat. "Well, by heaven, if you ask once too often—you shall know! I'll tell you something about yourself you'll not want to hear."

"You cannot," she answered quietly.

"Are you laughing at me?" he exclaimed angrily.

"I was smiling."

"Smile on!" he snapped. "Maybe you can tell where Jim Hennepin is. Maybe in the end you won't smile. Maybe you will learn what it is that has clung to you—unseen and unknown!"

"I demand to know!"

"No—by heaven—you shan't. Not until I know all—myself. Not until I know how I shall pay!"

He paused.

"And let that come quickly," he added throwing his open hands toward the ceiling as if beseeching heathen gods. "Sudden, swift and sure!"

He rushed out of the room.

Night after night she heard him pacing his study floor beneath her room.

Once she awakened and heard no sound. She crept down the stairs and peered into his study. He was crouching down below the window sill, only his eyes above, watching the running shadows made by trees, shrubs, wind and moon upon the lawn.

"What are you doing, Compton?" He jumped around and then laughed. "I was thinking," he replied.

"Thinking? Thinking of what?"

"Of life."

"And what about it?"

"How I love it!" he had exclaimed. A few days later he rode in with Brena to New York. A new spirit had come into him. His eyes were filled with a new light; his voice had grown more firm. On his countenance was a new expression, in his motions something of the former dynamic activity and decisiveness.

When Brena came home that evening he had not returned.

At half-past eight the telephone rang again.

It was Mr. Lanfrew Compton's lawyer. He wanted to speak to Mr. Parmalee. It was about some legal document that had been drawn that morning.

"But Mr. Parmalee is not here yet," said Brena.

"That's strange," said the telephone instrument. "I understand you were going on a long journey, Mrs. Parmalee. He had drawn the money to buy tickets. He wanted to hurry home this afternoon."

She shuddered. She wondered if by any chance it could be that the blow had fallen at last—the final dread conviction; she felt that it had. Brena was right. Compton Parmalee, in spite of all that money could do to conduct a search without publicity, had dissolved as completely as a wisp of smoke in the blast of some great wind of heaven.

SENTIMENT

Refinement of sentiment and feeling is well, but some one suggests that the refining process may be carried to the point of sterilization. When feeling and sentiment have been analyzed and distilled to such an exquisite degree that there is neither spontaneity nor life left in them they may indeed be pure, but for all human purposes they are valueless.

A Paris Frock

It's Intriguing with Capelet Collar and Circular Hemline

By ANNETTE

297

It has just arrived from Paris in printed crepe silk in tones that speak of Spring in fashionable green coloring.

The collar is of plain blending shade of green crepe. The bodice in basque effect is stitched to the skirt at normal waistline. The downward curved outline at front gives length to the figure.

The circular skirt is fitted snugly through the hips with a smart widening toward hem that just flutters beautifully in motion.

Style No. 297 comes in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20 years, and is an adorable dress to wear now beneath the fur wrap to brighten Spring wardrobe.

It may also be made with long sleeves and is attractive in navy blue silk crepe self-trimmed.

Black crepe silk with collar of egg-shell crepe silk is distinctive.

Royal blue crepe Moroccan, Paquin red crepe silk, chiffon in Lanvin green, wool crepe in new rust shade and printed Rayon novelty crepe are attractive combinations.

Printed chiffon is stunning for formal afternoons and for resort wear.

A Talk Given by An Ex-Burglar Over the B.B.C. in London, England

I will begin my story of prison life at the point where a convicted man makes his last public appearance, the dock, and from this place we will journey to the local gaol in one of those fear-inspiring vehicles, a Black Maria. From the outside a Black Maria looks bad enough, but wait until you see it from the inside. Each prisoner is allotted a tiny compartment, taking up about one-twelfth of the space of the van. There is barely sufficient room in these compartments to sit down, and the only way you can stretch your legs is by standing up. This you do at the risk of a crack on the nut if you are tall. But the actual seating isn't the worst feature of a Black Maria. Playing the part of shock-absorber each time you come into contact with the wooden upholstery as the vehicle jolts along is far more trying. The rocky road to Dublin isn't in it. By the time the prison van arrives at the gaol the spirits of its human cargo are very low indeed. The excitement of the trial has worn off and the thoughts of long, weary days to be spent in confinement are firmly rooted in the mind.

The first time I went to prison I took things very hard. I was twenty-two years of age and had been sentenced to fifteen months' hard labor at the County of London Sessions for burglary. I no doubt deserved every day of the sentence, but to me the time seemed an eternity. I had the days, hours, and minutes of a fifteen months' sentence reckoned out on my cell slate, and used to reduce the figures as the days went slowly by, getting a certain amount of satisfaction from this morbid occupation.

One young fellow who was quartered near me used to have a totally different view of prison life. To him it meant regular food and shelter. When he was at liberty he would spend most of his time in casual wards in workhouses. He had seen more dinner-times than dinners, poor devil, and for this reason used to worship food. If he asked him how long he had got to do, he would give you the answer in meal-times.

Prison grub is much better now than it used to be. The menu is more varied. Nowadays the lags receive Irish stew, savoury bacon, sheep, oat-pot, haricot mutton, shepherd's pie, treacle duff, pork soup, and suchlike dishes for their midday meal. These dinners are certainly an improvement on the old diet, and it's a great pity that the other two meals, breakfast and supper, are still the same as they were years ago. Porridge, dry bread and tea is served up with unfailing regularity for breakfast in Parkhurst 365 days a year. I've heard men say they would do one extra week's imprisonment for a couple of gammon rashers and a fried egg—just to break the monotony of prison breakfasts.

On Christmas Day convicts get a decent dinner. They have 'roast beef and vegetable', followed by Christmas pudding. The pudding is usually a subject for discussion weeks before it arrives, and the men look forward to it with a wistfulness which sits very strange upon them. Christmas is really a very unhappy time for the boys, because to them it means extra confinement. Holidays in prison are just like Sundays. Sundays outside are slow inside they are a thousand times worse, every minute seems to drag. Only half of the warders are on duty, and the men don't get out of their cells very much.

One associates with all classes of men in a convict prison. Men of noble birth, financiers, doctors, lawyers and schoolmasters rub shoulders in the workshops with professional cat-burglars, blackmailers, forgers, coiners and pickpockets. Some strike up friendships which last even after release. The 'Silence Rule', though still in force, does not always prevent men talking together. Convicts soon learn how to speak without moving their lips. On the exercise ring where they walk round in circles, one behind the other, it is not so easy, because the warders are stationed close to each other; but even here it is often thought to be worth the risk.

Blackmailers are usually the most unpopular men in prison, but good thieves are admired. Even murderers are tolerated if there are any redeeming features about their cases. It soon becomes known 'inside' what a man has got his time for, and if it is anything out of the ordinary it does not take long for the news to circulate. Everywhere he's pointed out as the man who 'dressed up as a lady's maid and got a job in private service', or 'the man who forged banknotes that deceived Bank of England experts'.

It is quite easy to get talked about, you've only to make an attempt to escape to become a nine days' wonder. There were on an average three attempts to escape each year I was at Parkhurst, but no one ever succeeded and there is less likelihood of any one succeeding now, because an extra wall has been built around the prison and more guards have been engaged for night duty. Men who have at some time or another made an attempt to break gaol are subject to a special watch in case they try their tricks again. They are deprived of their clothes at seven o'clock every evening and are refused the solace of darkness at bedtime, their lights being left on all night so that they can be kept under observation.

I was subject to these restrictions for attempting to escape from Oxford Prison a few years ago. I had been working for two days with a pair of scissors making a hole through the outside wall of my cell, when someone squeaked on me to the warders. They sent for me in the chief warder's office, and while I was away examined my cell, but I had put the mortar back around the bricks and covered the edges with soap, and this deceived them. They thought the wall had not been interfered with. The same night I had another go, but progress was far too slow. I couldn't have managed it before the cells were opened about six a.m., so I had to give it up. Early in the morning a warder examined the cell and discovered the whole thing. He reported me to his superiors. I was tried by the visiting magistrates for the offence and sentenced to No. 1 punishment—solitary confinement and bread and water.

It may seem strange to say, but some of the happiest hours of my life have been spent in Parkhurst. Here I became acquainted with the words of Charles Dickens, Thackeray, Sir Walter Scott and some of the present-day authors, such as George Bernard Shaw, H. G. Wells, and Arnold Bennett. I used to spend at least four hours every day with books in the quietness of my cell, and to me they were hours of supreme contentment. My thoughts during those periods soared high above prison walls and petty tyranny.

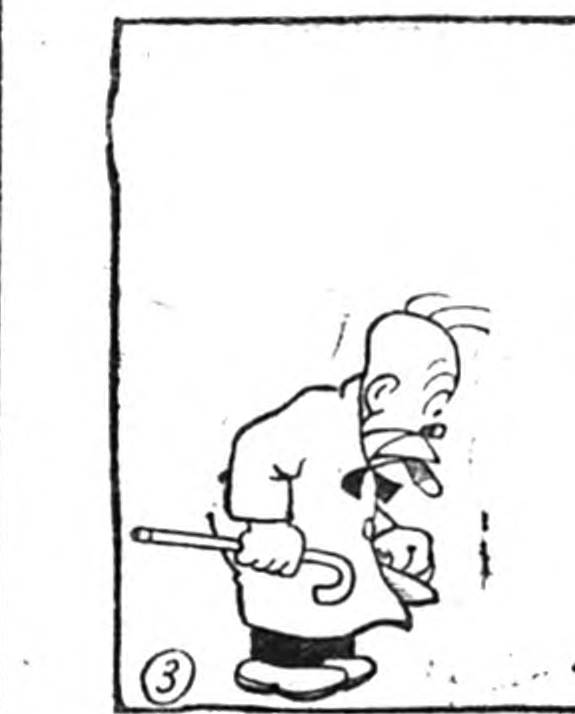

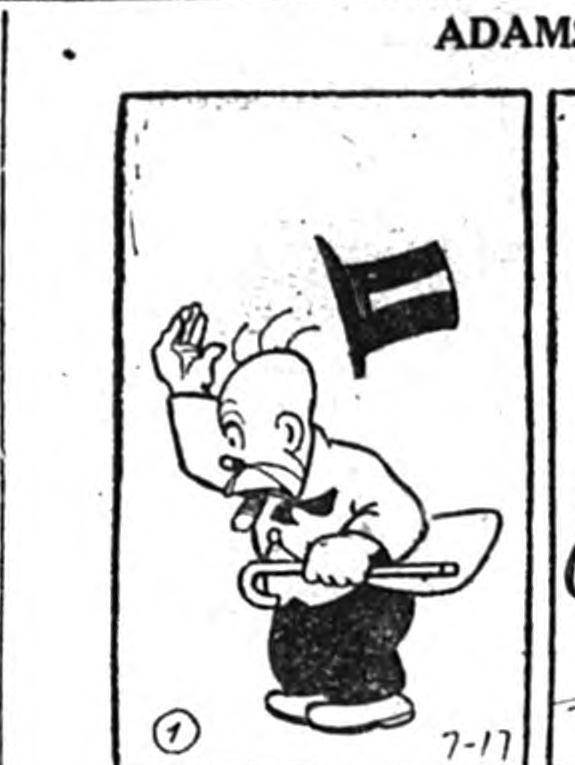

I have noticed on several occasions that men doing small sentences, i.e., from three to five years' Penal Servitude, go in for heavier reading than men serving long sentences. Short-sentence men especially the younger ones, read books on philosophy, classic literature, science and languages, but long-sentence men, especially 'lifers', don't seem as if they can manage anything heavier than an Edgar Wallace yarn. I know one man, a 'lifer', who passes the long evenings away sketching or doing embroidery work. Another sews mail-bags. A third, to the general disgust of his neighbors, practises on the violin.

The authorities will not allow convicts to keep birds in their cells, but they allow mice. In fact, they supply cages made from old bully-beef cans to intending mouse-keepers. The mice are well fed and looked after, and are a great source of entertainment to their keepers. Tribute must be paid to the authorities for their kindness in allowing men to keep pets—it certainly saves the reason of some of the poor lonely devils doing long sentences.

It is terrible doing 'time' if you can't settle down to reading, sewing, writing or some other occupation during the evenings. Nothing to look at but bare walls for months and years on end is enough to send anyone barmy.

I know men who keep on scrubbing their cell floors and cleaning their tins to pass the time away. Others roll part of their bread rations into small pellets to feed the rooks with. Hundreds of rooks make their homes in the grounds of Parkhurst Prison, and at times their unmusical 'caw-caw-caw' is very trying, especially first thing in the morning before the 'reville' goes. Some prison was said that these rooks are reincarnations of old warders—or old screws, as we call them—still carrying on, watching that the lags behave themselves.

The conduct of the majority of men in prison is very good. Men who are real terrorists when they are at liberty go for years inside without a single report for misbehaviour. They keep themselves under control in order to obtain the full amount of remission marks. Old lags—men with a dozen or so convictions behind them—rarely give the officials any trouble. Some of them have got more service

In than the warders, and they are not slow to speak of the changes in prison conditions since the days when they were boys.

I have questioned scores of old lags whether in their opinion the crooked game pays. Some of them have handled thousands of pounds in their time and are considered the leading lights in 'crooked circles', yet they all give me the same answer, 'It isn't worth the candle'. I am entirely in agreement with them. All crooked men make mistakes some time or other, and for these mistakes they have to pay. Cutting out any question of morality and looking at it from a 'profit and loss' point of view, it is a mug's game. The average crook spends the best years of his life in prison and retires at the end of it broken both in spirit and in pocket.

The authorities are doing their best to bring this home to the inmates of our prisons, paying special attention to young offenders. May their efforts meet with the success and good will they deserve! Here's one who is going straight in future.—'The Listener.'

ADAMSON'S ADVENTURES—By O. Jacobsson

"Apples is Apples"

"Apples is Apples" but not when you know them. In a recent survey the Fruit Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture secured some interesting information on this subject. The Dominion favorite is McIntosh, the survey shows. Then in order come the Spy, Gravenstein, the Delicious and the Baldwin. By provinces Ontario prefers its "Spy"; Nova Scotia and New Brunswick their "Gravenstein"; while Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia all vote "McIntosh" first. Other popular varieties are, Greening, Snow, Fameuse, Duchess, Winesap, Bow Sweet, Wagener, Jonathan and Wealthy.

"Quack's" Cure-All Fails

The "quack" finds a new field of operation in connection with the control of stem rust in wheat. Many preparations are now advertised for the disinfection of the soil and for the treatment of seed to prevent rust. The Rust Research experts of the Dominion Department of Agriculture find that the organism which produces rust does not develop in the soil, therefore, disinfection of the soil cannot destroy the organism. They also point out that rusted wheat kernels when sown do not develop into rusted wheat plants; and for this reason seed treatments are useless as a means of control of rust.

Color Indicates Real Grade

The maple sugar industry is one of the oldest known to this continent. It was brought to the early settler by the native Indian and to-day is of outstanding commercial interest. The Dominion Department of Agriculture finds that quality in maple sugar and syrup is clearly indicated by color. The grading rule is the lighter the product the better its quality. Grade 1 is very light in color, corresponding closely to clover honey in appearance. Grades 2 and 3 are perceptibly darker, while Grade 4 corresponds quite closely to the color of buckwheat honey. Quality counts in maple products as in everything else.

Briand Goes Fishing

W. H. Crawford in the American Review of Reviews: Aristide Briand is the only statesman I ever knew who frankly admits he is a professional politician. Our American statesmen are more ingenious. They label themselves as lawyers, doctors, manufacturers, business men and farmers. My experience in finding M. Briand was unique. I had an assignment to write close-ups of the three French statesmen—Herriot, Clemenceau and Briand. I saw Herriot and Clemenceau with little difficulty, but Briand was seemingly nowhere to be found. He was not listed in either the Paris city or telephone directory. I asked dozens of chauffeurs and gendarmes if they knew where he lived. The only satisfaction I could get was a deprecating shrug of the shoulders. My next best bet was to ask the hotel concierge, who is usually a walking encyclopedia, but he was stumped. Then, with ironclad nerve, I asked M. Herriot where I could find M. Briand, his chief political opponent. With a twinkle in his eye, as a youngster would show when peaching on another kid, he said: "You will probably find him fishing at Eure." Later, after I caught up with M. Briand, he jocosely remarked: "my office is under my hat. When I am out of office I am out of a job, and a jobless man does not need an office."

Making Poor Wheat Pay

The sale of frozen wheat at $1.13 per bushel is a pretty attractive figure. Feeding tests made at the Lacombe, Alta., Experimental Station—of the Department of Agriculture, shows that this can be done. Tests were made with four lots of hogs with varying rations of frozen wheat and frozen wheat fed with oat chop. A market value for frozen wheat ranging to $1.61 per bushel was shown by the test where oats were fed with the frozen wheat. The value of grain fed in this way depends directly on the price of hogs. At current market prices frozen wheat can be marketed through hogs at a price equivalent to No. 3 Northern.

"Safety First" A Guiding Star

Pedestrians as Well as Auto-ists Urged to Join in General Protective Move

"Safety First!" is a slogan which has come in for a lot of criticism in its general application to life, since there are those who believe that progress is made not by always giving first consideration to safety. It seems there are times when it is proper and desirable to forego safety, to run risks and become involved in dangers in accomplishing the desired results. However true this may be in some realms of life it is not true in the matter of operating an automobile.

No one need be ashamed to proceed on the safety-first principle in driving an automobile. In fact, it is criminal to have any other conception of a motoring experience. In spite of all efforts, and there are many of them, to encourage safe driving, there are altogether too many accidents. There is a possibility that this accident situation will, by the very fact that it continues from year to year, come to be a taken-for-granted part of the automobile era and people will neglect to fight this evil or even to co-operate in putting it down. There is need for numerous campaigns to keep the issue alive.

Duty of Every Operator

There is one thing that every automobile operator can do in the interest of helping to reduce accidents which cause great inconvenience and suffering, not to mention the destruction of valuable materials. Every one can apply the safety-first principle in operating an automobile. If there is a general tendency in this direction it has the best possibility of answering the question, "How can automotive disasters be reduced to a minimum?"

There is also another answer to this question and this has to do with that part of the population which are not for the time being motorists. These people are usually termed pedestrians. It is not fair to place all the responsibility for automotive accidents on motorists. There are no end of pedestrians who outdo the most reckless drivers in their lack of applying safety-first principles. They invite disaster by their heedless, inconsistent attitude toward traffic rules.

One of Serious Causes

One of the causes of the serious automobile accident situation is intoxication. Although we may be in an age of temperance from the standpoint of liquor traffic, it is evident that some people are violating the law and that some of these violators are motorists. Statistics are available to show that in a number of places more than half of the licenses revoked by motor vehicle bureaus were due to the drivers of cars being more or less under the influence of liquor. Whatever one may believe in regard to prohibition, certainly there is no question that people driving automobiles should be sober. Those who are subject to drunkenness in any degree should see to it that some one else drive their cars rather than themselves.

Other causes of automobile accidents include reckless driving, speeding, lack of maturity of drivers, lack of ability to read signs. These are the main reasons why licenses are revoked and they are the principal cause of automobile accidents. In spite of the fact that highways are becoming wider and better, and that manufacturers are turning out automobiles that can be operated at higher rates of speed for hundreds of miles at a time, this does not necessarily indicate that a higher rate of speed is essential or even necessary. It is true that careful drivers can proceed at a reasonably rapid rate without much chance of accident, but driving at high speeds merely for the sake of exhilaration is poor business.

There are several points to be considered by a motorist who would avoid accidents. At all times a driver should be sure his machine is in first-class condition. He can then well afford to proceed at a moderate rate of speed and is better prepared in an emergency.

When you cannot see what is coming from around the corner be prepared to stop, sounding horn a short distance before reaching intersection. Slow up for all turns in the road.

Apple Trees for Prairie Farms

After fifteen years of seed planting the experimental work of the Dominion of Agriculture has developed sixteen varieties of apple trees suited to the climatic conditions of the Prairie Provinces. Of these varieties two have been graded "very good" and four "good." Horticultural experts point out, however, that it will take several more tree generations to evolve the ideal species. Prairie farmers can help in this work by getting seed from the Experimental Station at Morden, Man., for planting in their own gardens.

MORE POLITICS THAN LEGISLATION FEATURES SESSION OF PARLIAMENT.

Easter recess finds Parliament with little actually accomplished in the matter of legislation. Fair progress has been made with estimates and a number of resolutions and motions have been talked over, but the bill to stop export of liquor to the United States is the only piece of legislation of public interest which is within striking distance of becoming law. It awaits third reading in the Senate where its adoption is practically pledged. It is held up as a formality to permit progress with reciprocal treaty negotiations with the United States under which that country will help keep prohibited goods reaching Canada from the south.

There is a crystallizing of opinion to the effect that if any election is coming this year it will take place during the last week in August or the first in September. The budget will pretty well settle the point.

The capitol is still buzzing with comment upon Premier King's declaration of April 3rd., to the effect that his Government would not give a single cent to any Tory Government, a declaration made with reference to Federal help to the Provinces for unemployment and other purposes. Protests have poured in from five Provinces of Canada which provide much more than half of the revenues of the country. Later on Mr. King raised the amount to a five cent piece, but even this has failed to soften the blow.

Conservatives applaud what they term his indiscretion and see in it a solidification of their ranks in provinces where heretofore the federal and provincial organizations have not been notably co-operative. It is quite possible that Mr. King will modify or explain the declaration which is being exploited as "the formal excommunication of five provinces from all direct benefits from the federal treasury." This actual fact is, however, that Mr. King cannot help any one province through the treasury without according proportionate help to the others so that if the "Tory Provinces" are shut off the same fate awaits the others.

Pension legislation is still in the hands of a special committee of the House, with Senate members sitting informally upon it. When the bill comes back, it will be much more comprehensive than "the dole" for unemployable veterans which was first proposed.

AN OBVIOUS INSINCERITY

For eight years it was the habit of the King Government to push popular but economically unsound legislation through the House of Commons with the hope, if not the knowledge, that it would be killed in the Senate.

In those years Mr. King was not able to command a majority in the Senate. He and his colleagues would claim against a condition which made it impossible to translate the "will of the people" into Mr. King's legislative majority in the upper chamber.

Many months before the session commenced, death had created enough vacancies in the Senate to give Mr. King a very comfortable majority in that chamber. Mr. King has not taken advantage of them. Some of the seats have been empty for two years. Mr. King has declined to fill them.

Evidently he still desires to use the Senate as the "orgue" which thwarts the will of the people. But the people should know and should understand that the remedy is entirely within Mr. King's own hands. A clear majority in the Senate is his and if he fails to use it—as he has failed—he is playing politics and not the public interest.

PIONEER WOMAN MEDICAL MISSION WORKER'S BIRTHDAY

Beloved by many Canadians all throughout the Dominion because of her activities in the mission fields in India, and because of her charming personality, Dr. Margaret O'Hara will receive congratulations and felicitations on Friday of this week, when she observes her 75th birthday. Dr. O'Hara has travelled extensively in Canada since her retirement from foreign mission service in 1926. She is spending her days at her old home in Smith Falls, Ont., and is having the dream of a life time come true, that of being able to attend the Presbyterian Church of which she was a member when a young girl.

Her experience is unique and interesting, and she has left the marks of a lifetime of work, devoted to mission service, in many fields. She was born in Smith Falls in 1885 and is of Scotch and Irish descent. After teaching for some years in Smith Falls, she decided to become a medical missionary and took her university course at Queen's College, Kingston. She then took post graduate courses at New York and London England.

In 1891 she was designated at Smith Falls for mission work in India, Central India. She opened a station at Dhar in 1895 and built a hospital on a gift of land from the Maharajah of Indore. The Maharajah was very wealthy and kindly disposed to Dr. O'Hara and aided her in every way possible. She was able to build two bungalows and her work there was with the women and children and lepers.

In 1900 India suffered from one of the worst famines in its history. Dr. O'Hara's work at that time was indispensable. She gathered about her 200 boys and 110 girls and they were placed entirely in her care. For her zealous and untiring energy she was awarded the Kaiser-i-Hind medal by the Indian Government and since that time she has received the Long Service medal and bars of the (W.D.) Women's Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church in Canada.

Dr. O'Hara retired from active mission service in 1926 but is still active and never more happy than when speaking to mission circles of her work in India. She will spend her birthday in Ottawa amongst many of her friends and will speak to nine homes next week.

Memories of Old St. Andrews

The History of St. Andrews of early days would be very incomplete without devoting a large place to Sir John and Lady Johnson who figured so prominently in the social life of the Old Town during the second and third decades of last century.

Sir John was the last of our Seig-nors, and contributed even more to enrich the historic background of the Seignior of Argenteuil than either of his predecessors, Major Murray or Hon. Pierre Panet of the pioneer period. We will the better estimate the character of Sir John Johnson by making a brief reference to his distinguished ancestry. The heritage of a birth-right so rich in romance as that of the life of his renowned father Sir Wm. Johnson, in no small measure moulded the destiny of the less distinguished son.

The following brief outline of the brilliant career of this truly remarkable man is based on Authentic History. William Johnson at the age of 23, in the year 1738 was sent to America by his uncle, Admiral Sir
Peter Warren, to manage and colonize his estate of forest lands in the Mohawk Valley in the heart of the Colonial Province of New York, a region at that time, the hunting ground of hostile and friendly tribes of Indians, he came with a free hand to seek his own fortune. Our hero threw himself boldly into this wilderness, and unaided he became the Architect of his own fame.

He is regarded by historians as the most unique and picturesque figure of pre-revolution days, and is described as a tall and handsome man of powerful and athletic build, and courtly manners. He united the culture of a gentleman with the endurance of a back-woodsman. The successive stages of his eventful career reveal a character of great energy and industry combined with an ability and sagacity that seemed almost super-human. From the humble beginnings of an agency in charge of the property of his relative and a trader in peltries, he arose to be the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs for North America, a Major General of the Colonial Army, and finally a Baronet of the British Realm; and with the single exception of William Penn, the richest man within the bounds of the New England Colonies.

His influence and control over his Indian Allies was extraordinary. On his arrival he lost no time in mastering the Iroquois language, and he soon became an adept in Iroquois retoric and eloquence, an accomplishment he made splendid use of in strengthening the Iroquois Confederacy of six nations on the side of the English.

This alliance was probably no small factor in the downfall of the power of old France on this Continent. Johnson was soon made a Sachem, and initiated into all the mysteries of Iroquois diplomacy. Bedecked with paint and feathers he joined in their war dances and smoked calumets of Peace seated on the earthy floors of bark wigwams. His equally successful diplomacy with state governors and leaders in civilized life revealed many sided qualities possessed by few men in that or any other age. Under his colonizing policy the Mohawk Valley soon blossomed with Orchards and fertile farms. Here throughout his life Sir William Johnson reigned with patriarchal sway.

Before the years of his celebrity, about 1740, he married his first house-keeper Catherine Wessenberg, a plain Country woman of no social position, who proved a faithful wife, and bore him one son our Seignior, and two daughters, Ann, the wife of Colonel Daniel Claus, and Mary, who married her cousin Colonel Guy Johnson. These with the return of negro slaves, and retainers red and white, constituted for a time the household of Johnson Hall, the Model which our Seignior imitated on a smaller scale when erecting his Manor House on the bank of the North River. Johnson Hall, was the most spacious and elegant mansion in the Province outside of the City of New York. The massive staircase and balustrades led to apartments that could accommodate thirty or more guests at one time. A little to the rear were two stone structures loop-holed for musketry and connected the main residence by subterranean passages. The group of buildings were surrounded by a breast-work for defense, and the whole was framed in a garden that was the joy of Sir William, and the pride of the Mohawk Valley. Here the great man reigned in semi-barbaric splendor, surrounded by every attraction that wealth could command and with a sway that rivalled that of the Barons of Runnymede, but a sway that was so benevolent that he won the admiration and affection of his numerous negro slaves his tenantry and the whole country side. So lavish were his hospitalities and so princely his generosity, that to provide for barbecues, and the annual tournaments for Indian games, it required 24 oxen and 100 hogs to supply the larder throughout the year.

The great event of the year at the Johnson Hall was the Sport of the Day, when the yeomeny of the country side rallied to compete for his generous trophies. Sir William in his sportsmanship had a keen eye for the ludicrous, when in the horse-races, the riders had to face the tails of their horses, and when young men almost naked chased guinea pigs whose tails were shaved and greased.
But our Hero was not without a religious side to his versatile character for he built and endowed churches, and was specially interested in the work of converting the Indians to

FOR LACHUTE MERCHANTS ONLY

Being one of a series of chats with Lachute businessmen, in which it is suggested how they many increase their volume of sales.

There's no need for a Fence Around Lachute

YOU can't put a fence around Lachute to keep La-chute's people from shopping elsewhere. Neither can you prevent them from buying from mail order houses.

None the less, it isn't by any means the hardest task to get Lachute's folk to shop and buy in your stores. It's a task, to be sure, but one in which your help will go a long way.

People buy where they are trained to buy. Educate them to buy in Lachute and they'll always buy there. And buying education is very largely a matter of advertising.

Advertising! That's the solution! Your own advertising and that of the manufacturers whose goods you strive to sell. Both, in your local, home newspaper, should prove effective in keeping Lachute's business in Lachute....and Lachute's Dollars in Lachute.

Where the manufacturers' advertising is concerned, your task is easy.

When their salesmen come to sell you goods, talk up Lachute to them. Talk it up with enthusiasm. Make them realize how important Lachute is to you in turnover. How important it is to them in orders....How important it is to their companies in more sales.

Talk up Lachute so that these salesmen will pass the good word on to their sales manager who decide where advertising appropriations are to be spent.

With the advertising of more national manufacturers in your local newspaper, Lachute and district people will find it easier to shop in your stores. You'll find it easier to keep them coming to your stores. And there won't be any need for a fence around Lachute.

You need the advertising aid of the manufacturers whose goods you stock—urge their salesmen to recommend your local home newspaper.

The Lachute "Watchman"

the christian faith, an effort in which he was seconded by Thazen-denega better known as Joseph Brant whose fame is perpetuated by the Statue which adorns one of the squares of the city of Brantford, Ont.
After the death of his wife and during the latter part of his life, the famous Mohawk Squaw Molly Brant the sister of Joseph Brant was installed as the house-keeper and the presiding genius of Johnson Hall, and according to the ideas of her tribe was Johnson's lawful wife.

Our Seignior's mind was stored with memories of this rich background and the life of Johnson Hall furnished him with a repertoire of stirring tales which appealed to the interest and imagination of that charmed circle which so often engaged the hospitality of the St. Andrews Manor House.

"England is intensely interested in reciprocal trade possibilities with the Dominion. Although a satisfactory trade between England and Canada has been carried on in the past, an even greater interest is being shown by well-established firms in Great Britain in Empire trade," said R. R. Galbraith, British exporter, at Saint John recently on landing from S.S. Duchess of Richmond. Mr. Galbraith is touring Canada in the interests of his firm.

"There is no feeling of resentment against the Canadian Wheat Pool in Great Britain," stated Rt. Hon. Lord Eustace Percy, seventh son of the seventh Duke of Northumberland, on landing from S.S. Duchess of Athol at Saint John recently. "The consensus of opinion in the British Isles is becoming increasingly conscious of a serious economic problem which both British and Canadian farmers are called upon to face," he added.

Covering nearly 90 miles, leading into rich agricultural territory in Saskatchewan, and Alberta, the Canadian Pacific Railway has just let contracts for grade construction of four branch lines. It is announced by D. C. Coleman, vice-president in charge of western lines. These contracts cover less than half the railway's present grading programme.

Receipt of the first entry in the world's grain exhibition and conference to be held in Regina in 1932 has been credited to William Hudson of Kathryn, Alberta, with an exhibit in the Reward wheat class. Mr. Hudson, who has been exhibiting successfully in provincial fairs in the past three years, came to Canada from the Old Country in 1912.

Announcement is made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that on and after Wednesday, April 9, they will accept shipments of freight at eastern points destined to points in the north-west, via Port McNicoll, Ont., and their lake and rail route, subject to delay at Port McNicoll pending the first sailing. There will be five steamers in the company's lake service between Port McNicoll and the head of the Lakes during the coming season.

While the Five Power Conference is in session in London considering ways and means of promoting world peace, active preparations are under way in Canada for launching another war with relentless fury. Millions of casualties will result from this war which is timed to start in May. It is the war on insect pests in the Dominion which work incalculable damage to trees, plants and crops unless checked by Government entomologists.

Homestead entries in the four western provinces during January and February this year numbered 1378 as compared with 1416 for the corresponding period of 1922. Alberta and British Columbia showed advances while Manitoba and Saskatchewan showed recessions.

Over $2,000,000 has been invested in manufacturing enterprises in the Province of Alberta and these concerns are paying about $14,000,000 a year in salaries and wages to over 11,000 employees. Similar rapid development in industrialism is to be noted in the sister provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

SOCIAL WORKER GIVES CAUSES

P ROBLEMS OF TO-DAY.
Miss Vail, Community Centre Social Service Worker, in an address before a rally of Hochelaga County W. C.T.U. workers, gave as the cause of much social unrest and suffering several problems with which the Old Brewery Mission of Montreal is seeking to solve. Among these were ignorance, over-crowding, illiteracy, the want of recreation and play-grounds, and disease, the latter being an ever-present condition.

Miss Vail believed that information bureaux were needed in each centre, these, where established, having provided a great help. Other needed factors were recreation rooms, free clinics, baths and work of a practical and educational sort among mothers and children.

Several clinics have already been established where children are weighed and measured at stated periods, food habits corrected and advice on health lines given to the mothers.

WHAT A DIFFERENCE
90 DAYS MAKE!

TODAY A TODDLING CHICK... in 90 days a proud pullet about to lay. There's something to think about! Tiny bones and little muscles have grown several times in size... a delicate fuzz has sprouted into hundreds of feathers... a chick weighing grams has grown into a pullet weighing pounds... all in 90 short days!

A wonderful change... and only one thing can do it... good feed! This year consider Purina Startena Chow (mash) and Purina Chick Chow (scratch) or All-Mash Startena Chow for the first six weeks... and then Purina Growena and Purina Intermediate Hen Chow until your pullets are laying at 16 weeks.

Put these Chows before your chicks. You will see pullets that are built right... pullets that will lay eggs aplenty in fall and winter when eggs are always worth good money.

The Knock-out

But There Was a Still Worse Blow to Come

By WILLIAM FREEMAN

Henry Benyon sat in an imitation Jacobean chair upholstered in imitation hide, and allowed his gaze to wander contentedly over the rest of the drawing-room furnishings of his new house in St. Chrysilda's Avenue.

It was the name given by a builder with imagination to the very newest thoroughfare in London's very newest suburb. On the left of Henry were houses which would doubtless be occupied directly the walls were papered, the electric fittings fitted, and the first instalment paid. On his right were plots still awaiting the laying of the first brick.

Opposite—well, you couldn't see what was opposite—though, in point of fact, it was just a field—because the fog was too thick. Henry, in short, was as much alone as the late R. Crusoe, Esq., of Footprints Parade, The Island. It had been his condition since seven o'clock in the evening, when his daily help departed.

Abruptly his attention wandered. Footsteps, too faint to be noted by an ear less experienced than Henry's, were coming along the gravel path to the side door.

Henry, with astonishing speed for a man who weighed fourteen stone and was fifty-one last birthday, rose, slipped into the hall, changed the coat he was wearing for another, and, returning, switched off the light and turned out the gas-fire. The room was at the back, and heavy plushette curtains covered the french windows.

The visitor's step paused at the side door. Henry, sitting motionless in the darkness, smiled sardonically as he heard the handle softly turned; he had locked up the entire house an hour earlier. The footsteps resumed their patrol, rounded the corner, and halted immediately outside.

A series of small, scratching sounds ensued. There was a creak, and the left-hand window swung open, and someone stepped lightly into the room. Henry continued to smile sardonically.

Following further uncertain movements, including a stumble that brought a muttered curse from the visitor, an electric torch clicked, a wedge of yellow brilliance cut the darkness.

"Hello, Albert!" said Henry in a loud, cheerful voice.

Albert, whose other name was Price, dropped the torch with a crash. The room was plunged in darkness again.

"Don't get rattled," said Henry pleasantly. He rose to his feet and switched on the light. "Glad to see you; more glad than I'm surprised. Mind shutting the window? The fog's pouring in like—well, like fog. Thanks! And now sit down."

But Mr. Price, having closed the window, carried obedience no further. He was a tall, loosely-built man, dressed with funeral respectability in black that went with his long, melancholy face, the chin of which was muffled in a woollen scarf.

"Come by train?" continued Henry. "No; walked," said Albert sarcastically. "All the way from Aggerston. Seventeen miles in thirty-five minutes."

"You're telling stories!" said Henry reprovingly. "You did come by train. The only walking you've done has been from the station."

"That was a deal farther than I wanted, anyway."

"And now you have come—"

"Listen to me, my lad!" Albert's growl was a menace in itself. "No, don't talk—don't try to talk. Just listen! If you don't, you're as much chance of seeing the sun rise to-morrow morning as—as a goldfish has of having kittens. I came out o' clink 'smornin'!" He paused.

Henry wisely refrained from comment. But his expression hinted that he had known all about Albert's release—which, indeed, he had.

"Told you I'd look you up, didn't I?" continued Albert. "Wrote it down on prison paper last month. And the warden let it go. Didn't contain no threats, that letter didn't. 'Oping to call and see you on the 14th ult.' it said. Not that 'ult' was the right word; but I couldn't remember the right one, and I knew as you'd understand."

Henry nodded to indicate complete understanding.

"Very well, then—ere I am. And I wants fifty quid, and the promise of another fifty in three months' time."

"You want all that?" "I do. And I'm goin' to get it. And if there's any silly 'anky-panky,' 'Enery—"

"I've not got the money in the house. And a cheque wouldn't help."

"Not a bit. But there's other things besides money and cheques."

"I know, Albert. But—"

"You talk too much, 'Enery. You always 'ave talked too much. If you 'adn't been so chatty while we was crackin' that crib o' Lord Putney's, the cops wouldn't have rumbled there was anything wrong, and I wouldn't 'ave got the stretch I did."

"I tried—"

"It was me as was tried. You—you was all right." A growing sense of injustice made Albert raise his voice. "You didn't trip over one of the damned lines as we'd laid for 'is lordship and pitch 'eadlong and get took. You got clear with about a thousand quids' worth of antique foolery and bricky-brack. Never even saw your silly old fat face, they didn't."

"Anyhow—"

"Down 'ere you're the respectable bachelor, ain't you—the retired City bloke? Takes round the plate on a Sunday, I shouldn't wonder. Thinkin' o' standin' for the Urbing District Council, with yer photo in the local rag, and all the rest of it!"

The more exasperated he became the more Mr. Price's English deteriorated.

"An' you a bloomin' welsher turned crackman and crackman turned—well, I ain't sure what you 'ave turned!" he concluded fiercely. "And don't care, as long as I get what I come for!"

Henry rose to his feet, his arms hanging stiffly at his side, a faint smile on his face. He took a couple of quick paces towards the visitor.

Albert backed even more quickly. From his pocket he whipped a small block pistol.

"And up!" he snapped, his muffled slipping from his chin in his excitement. "No 'anky-panky! Quick—fore I counts three! One, two—"

Henry's arms rose with convulsive suddenness, while Albert readjusted his muffled with his free hand.

"Glad to notice you ain't lost what little sense you started with!" sneered Albert.

"Quite true," said Henry. "Fifty quid was what you said, wasn't it?"

"Yes. And another fifty in three months."

"But I haven't got it."

"Said that before, didn't you?" "Fact!"

"It's either the money or the shiners. 'Ow much 'ave you got?"

Henry's forehead wrinkled as he made a hasty calculation.

"Eighteen. Twenty, if you include a couple of sovereigns I've been saving as souvenirs."

"Not good enough!"

"Try something else, then!"

From somewhere in the depths of Henry's coat a fist shot out and landed on Albert's muffled-up chin. Albert went down with a crash.

But Albert, contrary to tradition and legitimate expectation, did not stop down. He was on his feet again almost instantly. Nor did he appear to be suffering. Judging from expressions, it was Henry who was the victim. Albert, after one glance at him, sat down in a chair and collapsed in helpless laughter.

He had excuses. Henry, to begin with, appeared suddenly to possess four arms—two raised rigidly above his head; two with the hands grasping one another across his waistcoat. And his face was distorted with agony.

At last Albert's guffaws ceased. "Enery—"

"Well?" groaned Henry.

"What made you think of a couple of false arms fixed in a coat while the real ones was underneath?"

Henry unbest sufficiently, in both senses, to confess that he had borrowed the invention from the late Charles Peace.

"But that there goin' up with a jerk when I says, 'And up!'"

"That was my own idea," admitted Henry.

"Dashed neat, I calls it!" said Albert, handsomely bestowing credit where credit was due.

"I put on the coat when I heard you coming," said Henry, still further unbending. "What made you think of that chin-spike?"

"More'n once," said Albert. "I been put to sleep by some chap giving me the knock-out, and woke up to find myself in the charge-room. It's my weak spot, that there chin of mine. So I fixed up a metal gadget with a sort of nutmeg-grater surface, which is hid by a muffer. Any bloke can knock me down, but 'e can't knock me out—unless, of course, the back of my 'ead 'its something knobbly. 'Enery—"

"Well?"

"I got an idea. What about letting bygones be bygones, and making a fresh start together?"

"What d'you mean—fresh start?"

"Partnership, 'Enery—us two. We done it before. Two inventive blokes like me and you ought to be able to make a do of it—jools and drawing-room stuff. Me shoving open the scullery windows, and you choosin' the best pieces out o' the cabinet. 'Igh-class 'ouses only visited, not by appointment." Albert chuckled at his own wit.

"There's something in the idea," admitted Henry. "Though you did do your best to murder me."

"That there pistol wasn't loaded, not really." He reverted to the partnership. "We'll make it fifty-fifty, 'Enery. You with them false arms o' yours; me with my patent chin."

"The trouble with that," said Henry, "is that it doesn't cover all your sally mug." His fist shot out again, this time aiming at the limited space between Albert's eyes.

Albert, ducking sideways, escaped scatheless. He leapt for Henry's throat, was shaken off, and received a buffet on the side of his face.

"Look out!" he shouted suddenly. "The cops! Be'ind you!"

"Nothing doing!" said Henry grimly, and fung himself bodily on Albert.

They swayed and fell to the floor with a crash which landed them side by side with their heads on the kerb, and knocked two china ornaments from the mantelpiece. One of them pitched on Henry's temple, turning the yellow brightness of the room into black darkness.

Presently the darkness cleared. Four policemen were bending over him.

"Where—where's Albert?" inquired Henry.

"Albert the Undertaker," said the sergeant who seemed in charge, "is in the cupboard under the stairs. We found him hiding there—he hadn't time to get out of the house and locked him in. If he hadn't twisted his ankle when he fell—"

"Twisted his ankle, did he?"

"That's right. Feeling better? Because if so, we've a car waiting at the corner."

"W-what for?"

"To take you and your pal to the station. We got the tip from the Yard that Albert was on his way here by the 10.22; and as he don't take evening trips in the fog for his health, we followed him."

"But what have I got to do with it?"

"We've had our eye on you, official speaking, for some time, Mr. Benyon," said the sergeant.

There was a short silence, during which a key turned in the passage, and another official voice said.

"Come out of it, my lad!"

"Well, well!" said Henry, rising, with philosophic calm. "This'll give Albert a new nickname, anyway. 'Old Tin-chin,' that'll be his tally!"

"What about yourself?" came the voice of Albert from the passage.

"Four-Armed Fatty"—that's what they'll shout after you, my lad!"

"I wouldn't lose no sleep over that if I was you," said the sergeant soothingly; "it isn't likely to happen for another three years."

And it was so—Answers.

"Yes, Willie, when the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock it was dreadfully cold and they suffered terribly."

White Man's Burden In Far East Slipping

Changing Times Has Taken the Romance Out of Life For Many Great Adventurers

A certain self-pity used to tinge the work of some writers when speaking of the "white man's burden"—especially in Asia.

But now it begins to look as if he is to be relieved of this burden—and through no wish of his own.

The present generation may see the white man more or less quietly voted out of Asia, says Feng-Shui in the Sydney (Australia) Bulletin. Meanwhile he recalls that Europe fastened her dominion on Asia in a highly autocratic style, and he proceeds:

"Jan Pieterszoon Coen, whose 300th birthday has just been celebrated in Batavia, ruled the Dutch East Indies like an independent monarch."

"God was with him on the spot, and there was no such thing as a Labor majority in the government at home to worry him."

"Stamford Raffles, whose 100th birthday has just been observed in Singapore, seized that island and founded the British dominion of Malaya, practically on his own initiative."

"Single-handed, James Brooke quietly made himself raja of Sarawak, a country larger than Britain, and nobody troubled to ask him where he got his mandate."

"A syndicate composed of a Jew and two Englishmen floated 300,000 Bornean savages into a limited liability company with less formality than an Australian manufacturer starts a shoe factory."

Even up to the World War colonial administrations were practically irresponsible, according to this contributor to the Sydney Bulletin. At least, he adds, they were responsible only to a person in "a distant Foreign Office."

But since the war, we are told, things have changed enormously. The Bolshevik upheaval spread abroad the proletarian doctrine, it is noted. Asia lapped it up, but it is pointed out also—

"President Wilson helped on the work with his slogan of self-determination. European Demos began to get interested in his colored brother."

"In the Imperial Parliaments of Holland, France, Britain, and America the radical Oppositions began to demand a share in the control of the destinies of a third of the human race, hitherto the sole preserve of colonial offices."

"The results have been interesting. It has only been necessary for countries like Egypt, Turkey, India, the Philippines, and China to assume the outward garb of democratic institutions for unsophisticated European Demos to believe that they have absorbed the spirit thereof."

"Nothing could be further from the truth. Democracy can no more function in the India of to-day than a motor-tractor could in a rice-swamp. China has rubbed along successfully with the family system for 4,000 years."

"Faced with the problem of converting patriarchal rule into a republic, she has only succeeded in producing a new Son of Heaven in a modern general's uniform."

"But the effect on the doctrine of white superiority has been disastrous. Time was when a white man was safer in a civil-war area in China than walking in some parts of an Australian capital."

"To-day he is liable to confiscation of goods or imprisonment of person. The British raj in India merely keeps the ring while the local democrat rends the loin-cloth of his fellow democrat, or suspends hostilities to throw a joint bomb at a viceroy."

"In the Philippines Uncle Sam has been edged out of pretty well every position of authority."

All these reflections were suggested to Feng-Shui of the Sydney Bulletin by an act of the Chinese Government that he says is marked with Chinese "characteristic silliness."

This description he takes from the fact that this Government announced that "as far as it is concerned, extra-territoriality, or the right of foreigners to live under their own laws, has been abolished as from January 1."

If the announcement were to be taken at its face value, he avers, the consequences would be serious, and he continues:

"The foreign trade of China would be thrown into confusion, the mun-cial rule of the million-city of Shanghai would become illegal. Foreign residents numbering upward of 300,000 would have no security of person or property, and there would probably be armed intervention.

"No Chinese declaration need ever be taken at its face value, however. Some months ago Dr. M. T. Z. T'au, the Kuomintang's most eminent authority on international relations made it clear what the move portended."

"He advised the Government to denounce the treaties, but to follow up the announcement with no action."

"The result would be to stampede the Powers into a conference. Democratic Western sympathizers with the Flowery Republic's aspirations would then be mobilized on China's side and Chinese statesmen would be in a position to start the game, in which they are past-masters, of playing one Western country off against another. This is what is about to happen."

"China's move is not as immediately serious as it looks; yet it is symptomatic of something that is serious. It brings up the whole question whether the European Demos can be a successful imperialist."

THE PAST

There are those who want to get away from all their past; who if they could, would fain begin all over again. Their life seems one long failure. But you must learn, you must let God teach you, that the only way to get rid of your past is to get a future out of it.—Phillips Brooks.

The surest protection against failure is never to attempt to do anything.

WAS WEAK AND PALE

Health Restored Through the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

Mrs. Leo Bedard, Quebec City, tells how her health and strength were restored through the use of that great blood-building tonic, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Mrs. Bedard says: "Some three years ago, after the birth of my little boy, I was left very weak and pale. I did not seem to have any strength, and at times I was so dizzy I would nearly fall down. A friend advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I did so. In a few weeks I was surprised to notice the difference in my condition—I felt like a new woman. I continued taking the pills until I had used ten boxes, by which time I had completely regained my former health and strength. I feel that I cannot praise too highly Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for what they have done for me."

To the woman in the home—the woman closely confined through household duties—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a positive blessing. So if you are suffering from any condition due to poor, watery blood, or weak nerves, begin taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills now, and note how quickly your health will improve and your strength return. The pills are sold by all medicine dealers, or will be sent by mail at 5 cents a box by The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

TO-DAY

"Every day is a little life," was an old thinker's wise epigram. If each day gets the better of us, how are we going to conquer in life as a whole? Only as we make each day a victorious battle ground where selfishness and shirking and disobedience and discontent are overcome, can we make life a victory in the end. Lavater, the old philosopher, laid down the rule that "each day should be distinguished by at least one particular act of love." It is a rule which makes life happier for the doer, and for everybody else.

INDOLENCE

The cause of all evils of the world may be traced to that natural, but most deadly error of human indolence and corruption—that our business is to preserve as 'not to improve. It is the ruin of us all alike, individuals, schools, and nations.—Dr. Arnold.

Export of Alcohol

Chicago Tribune: Canada is talking very seriously about shutting down on the exportation of "likker" to the United States. It would be a good thing for Canada, for then everybody that likes champagne or beer would have to go up to Canada to get it and spend a lot of money on railroads, hotel bills, and post cards, besides what they pay for their drinks. . . . About the only way to scare Canada into having a heart is to talk about annexing it. The one big bugaboo that stalks around Canada day and night and all the year around is annexation by the United States. Start a lot of talk about annexing Canada if she shuts down on letting us have "likker" and the Canadians will rush down to the boundary line with a quart bottle in one hand and a tin dipper in the other and pour us out all we want. Not that we want to annex Canada—far from such. Where could we drive our autos when we wanted to be free from snoopers and reformers and bandits and hijackers and enforcement officers with their roaring shotguns if Canada was under the same laws that have been smeared over the U.S.A.? No, Canada is our land of refuge, our oasis in a dreary desert, our sanctuary.

We read that a New Zealander, who played the piano for one hundred and twelve hours without stopping, is coming to England. This country is always very good to refugees.

West Grows Airminded

Western air mail service between Winnipeg and Calgary—over 800 miles in distance—has been inaugurated recently and the Canadian Pacific Express Company has renewed its contract made in 1923 to carry express packages in addition to the regular mail. This allows of a saving of more than 24 hours between the two cities. The package which pilot W. J. Buchanan is shown delivering to a Canadian Pacific Expressman, was mailed eight hours previously at Calgary and had therefore travelled at the rate of more than 100 miles an hour to reach Winnipeg, its destination.

A SIMPLE TREATMENT FOR CHILDREN'S COLDS

Cold in the head is very common at this time of year, especially in the very young. Neglect of a cold is prone to lead to serious consequences. To relieve all congestion of the system is the first step in treating a cold, whether in infants or adults. For the very young, Baby's Own Tablets are the ideal means of doing this. Containing no narcotics or other harmful drugs they soothe the child's fretfulness, relieve its suffering and ensure convalescence.

Baby's Own Tablets are without an equal for relieving indigestion, constipation and colic. They check diarrhoea; break up colds and simple fevers; promote health-giving sleep and make the dreaded teething period easy. The Tablets are the one medicine that a mother can give her little ones with perfect safety as they are guaranteed to be free from injurious drugs. They are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Doctors Prescribes Heavy Food to Meet Current Vogue

Paris.—Doctors and cooks, called into consultation by the leading dress-makers in an effort to fatten the mannikins of the Rue de la Paix to meet the requirements of the new styles, have prescribed liberal doses of potatoes and macaroni, dumplings and pastry.

The new modes upset the life of most women. For several years they have gone hungry and wrestled medicine balls to grow thin and reveal the svelte line of the prevailing fashion. Now almost overnight, they have to be fatter, for the newer styles with normal waistlines look much better on a woman with good poundage.

Where they formerly lunched on a bit of salad, sprinkled with lemon, and munched mints during the day, they now sit down to a four course meal at noon and drop three or four lumps of sugar in their coffee. Doctors are elated for there are many who contend that France's increasing death rate among women and small children, and decreasing birth rate were directly traceable to improper diet.

One smart dressmaker gave as her opinion that a healthy woman of five feet six inches, who should have weighed 110 pounds last year to be ultra-fashionable, must now weigh 115 to 120 pounds.

King of Belgians Get Pardon For Italian Engineer's Father

Verona, Italy—Carlo Sasselli, seventy-six years old, now restored to his family here after serving thirty-four years in prison for murder, has King Albert of the Belgians to thank as well as his own King, Victor Emmanuel of Italy, for the royal pardon that set him free. One of Sasselli's sons is an expert locomotive engineer on the State Railways, with Milan as his headquarters. When the royal train bearing the then Princess Marie-Jose of the Belgians, her parents and brothers came through Milan in January the engines were changed, and the younger Sasselli had the honor of taking the royal convoy on to Rome for the wedding.

Now Albert, King of the Belgians, is something of a mechanic himself, and can run a locomotive with the best of them, as he proved on his tour of the United States some ten years ago. He climbed into the cab, took the throttle for a time, and then talked to Sasselli.

"You're a good engineer," said the Belgian monarch, at the end of their conversation. "If there is anything I could do for you, I should be glad to."

Then the engineer told him the sad story of his family; how his father had tried time after time to have his trial reviewed, but without success, and how after all those years of confinement, most of it in "solitary," he wanted to see his aged wife, his two sons and two daughters and grandchildren before he died.

"I think," said King Albert, "that I might say a word to my 'cousin' of Italy." True to his word, he did, and the elder Sasselli is finally at liberty.

TIME

We err in speaking of Time as "passing." Time is stationary; it is Eternity, which is never still. Time is but the fixed standpoint from which we mortals see the swift stream of Eternity sweep past.

Awful thought. Suppose the millennium, when at last it comes, is held up until ratified by the U.S. Senate. Fifty million powder-puffs were sold in this country last year. Some lucky manufacturers are making hay while the nose shines.—Punch.

Sick stomachs, sour stomachs and indigestion usually mean excess acid. The stomach nerves are over-stimulated. Too much acid makes the stomach and intestines sour.
Alkali kills acid instantly. The best form is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, because one harmless, tasteless dose neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Since its invention, 50 years ago, it has remained the standard with physicians everywhere.

About Time

Canada Writes Own Histories to Replace Those from United States

Of all nations Canada, it is asserted, is the least nationalistic. No other country subordinates the teaching of its own history in its own schools to the history of another country. No other country authorizes for use in public schools historical texts prepared in a neighboring nation. The resulting general ignorance of dominion history surprises no one except visitors from other countries.

For years there has been a widespread belief that Canadian history is duller than other history. British history gets first place in the Ontario schools and did until recently through the West. After first year in high school Canadian history becomes an optional subject, but every Canadian must matriculate in British history to enter a university.

It was only a year or so ago that some one made the discovery that supplemental historical texts authorized in the maritimes and British Columbia were United States texts and preached in Canadian schools ardent American nationalism.

The discovery turned attention to the teaching of Canadian history, with the result that new texts are now being prepared and a more voluminous, and perhaps a more interesting one, will replace the sketchy books now in use in the country.

But still Canadian history retains its secondary position in the curriculum of Ontario public schools.—New York Herald Tribune.

HAPPY FAILURES

Failures are frequently a source of blessing. If Peter and the others had had a reasonably good catch, the larger draught would not have impressed them so much, or led to their following Christ. It is well for us to fall when we have been depending on our own strength and knowledge, for then we may be thrown upon God and receive the greater blessing. The failure was not from lack of industry or from fault, but proved to be preparation for a wonderful lesson, which benefited not only those who were witnesses, but all who have since read the narrative. Do not be discouraged at failure. Resist despondency, and rest upon the promise that all things work together for the good of those that love God.

DO YOU SUFFER FROM CONSTIPATION?

Countless remedies are advertised for constipation. Many relieve for the moment but they are habit forming and must be continued. Others contain calomel and dangerous mineral drugs, which remain in the system, settle in the joints and cause aches and pains. Some are harsh purgatives which cramp and gripe and leave a depressed after effect.

Avoid lubricating oils which only grease the intestines and encourage nature's machinery to become lazy. A purely vegetable laxative such as Carter's Little Liver Pills, gently touches the liver, bile starts to flow, the bowels move gently, the intestines are thoroughly cleansed and constipation poisons pass away. The stomach, liver and bowels are now active and the system enjoys a real tonic effect. All druggists 25c and 75c red pkg.

No care was lavished here in vain

"SALADA" TEA

'Fresh from the gardens'

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Brena Selcoe, an orphan, receives a last message from her father before he dies: "Be not afraid; if any danger threatens you, something will protect you." Brena and Peter DeWolfe fall in love in London and Brena tells him the story of her life: After her father's death and while living in Dallas, Texas, she went to St. Louis to marry Jim Hennepin, who failed to show up. Hennepin's employer, Compton Parmalee, then marries her and they travel widely. Parmalee seems to fear something, and he, too, vanishes, as did Jim Hennepin. Parmalee seemed very interested in a scrap of paper bearing the figure of the Aztec deity "Kuk-ul-can," which Hennepin had given to Brena but which had been lost.

GO ON WITH THE STORY

"Well," said Peter DeWolfe as Brena finished her story. "That is not a very pretty story."

The gray light of early summer dawn filtered through the chintz curtains of Brena's apartment.

"No, Peter," she replied. "It is not a pretty story."

She shivered as one who, having no sleep, feels the dawn as a wet shroud.

"You can see now, Peter, why the time when your arms were about me and your lips were on mine is the end," she said. "If I knew I was free, Peter, I could not see more of you. I could not bear the thought that you too—"

"Would vanish?" he finished and laughed.

She did not answer.

"But you can't believe—" he began.

"Damn it—the thing is absurd!"

"You forget that I have lived close to this thing! You might believe, too, if you had heard not my words but the words of life itself!"

"You've told me all!"

Brena, sensing the presence of a doubt, said, wearily, "Yes, Peter—all."

He walked up and down the rug, touching the repetitions of the pattern with the toes of his shoes.

"What about this Kuk-ul-can? You

Peter glanced at this mirror, saw himself, stopped. The expression on his own face alarmed him. He imagined that upon it was the first faint expression of terror written, not as it is written upon the face of a man who is a coward, but the dim suggestion of fear of unknown dangers and of subtle influences.

Peter had an unpleasant idea: it was that his subconscious self as endeavoring to transmit to his conscious self some message of warning.

That many things in the great library had been disturbed since the moment when Parmalee had walked out into oblivion was evident. The correspondence on the large desk in the centre of the room had been gathered into a neat pile and tied with string. The papers once held by a waste basket, now empty, had been poured into the open fireplace and most of them burned. The study had the air of having been cleaned and straightened.

Peter, who had Brena's permission to examine anything, found at first no interest in the correspondence.

The mail was the miscellany received by a man whose personality had no power to be loved or remembered, who was on the mailing lists of book dealers and others desirous of reaching a man of means by personal letters addressed to his weaknesses or his vanities. There were a few letters from stock brokers as to investment changes and a few bills.

One of these bills was the only piece of matter that gave Peter the slightest interest. It was from the famous old John-Henry Wycoff of Baltimore, of whose death Peter had read. This bill was for two thousand eight hundred dollars—an account that had probably been settled by Parmalee's attorney, Lanfrew. It was something of a bill for one book—a book described as Kolb's privately reprinted version of the Jesuit MSS. entitled "Explorations of Father Carlos in Mesclero Desert," shipped via registered post on 18th inst. Below this statement of account were the words, "Please see letter."

The letter was missing, but Peter searched among the burned papers in the grate and was rewarded by two bits of paper upon which were the "Yours most truthfully" of John Henry Wycoff, and the words "reluctant to present but you" and below "Only this justifies" and "the owner though aware of your possession of the imperfect copy, accordingly he" and "not in your confidence."

Peter turned toward the library shelves and found the book was a beautiful piece of bookmaking in perfect preservation.

Peter reading the descriptions of the old missionary who had braved the terrors of thirst and heat to penetrate eastern New Mexico, suddenly came upon a hiatus in its continuity. Page thirty-two began a description of Lost Pueblo, where according to legend a city whose age was of centuries had been ended as a punishment for failing to worship the god of water. A scourge of thirst has been visited upon the degenerate Indian dwellers who had been so long protected by the terrors that the waterless desert must have had far more warlike tribes who would otherwise have attacked them. The well around which the pueblo had been built—the very life of the people—had been dried up in one night by a miracle.

"Many and curious are the carvings upon the walls of this Lost Pueblo," said Father Carlos. "Especially I noted a figure of great size, a serpent with feathers, like a bird, a figure such as is seen never but in the lands to the south and beyond the Great River."

The next page began: "These accounts of treasure are but the poor speculations of the ignorant. Long after the sandstorms have covered the pretentious dwelling places of man such perversity will endure that worldly avarice will conjure into belief the tradition of fools."

This was not page thirty-three but page thirty-seven. The pages between were gone.

For a moment DeWolfe was puzzled. This was not a perfect copy. After a moment's reflection he felt the humiliation of stupidity.

Of course the copy he was examining was the imperfect volume that Parmalee had owned originally; the one sent by Wycoff probably would be found in its place on the shelves where Brena's husband had put it—one of the last acts he ever did in that house. In less than three minutes he had found the other copy of the quaint old book and taken it down.

He blew the dust off the once gilded top of its pages and as he did so he noticed that at one place the pages did not quite press close together. The volume fell open there—at page

Getting Ready For 1930 Accidents

The tide of motor traffic will soon be swelling with the coming of summer. It is some comfort to know that, along with "Safety First" injunctions from many quarters, Bell Telephone linemen and construction chiefs will be found on many highways carrying on their big 1930 construction program. The Bell men are practically all skilled first-aiders. They undergo a thorough training in that useful art, and their timely aid in all parts of the province has saved the lives of many who, without skilled initial attention to injuries, would have been in grave danger. Over 2,300 Bell employees—men and women—successfully passed First Aid examinations in 1929. Sixty-three per cent of the 7,500 male workers are qualified First Aiders.

ON A PICTURE FOUND IN A SECOND HAND STORE

Time pushed it from a parlor-table, where

For long it stood, and with the tenderest care

'Twas handled, as some loved one viewed it there.

I found it folded in an old brown book Among things faded, dusty and forsook.

And at the face I could not help but look

She had it taken on a summer day: 'Twas long before Time's thieving took away

That hair's young gold—done in that girlish way.

She dressed for it, and tied that ribbon so,

And stood before the mirror, all aglow:—

The style says it was forty years ago! 'Twas given and received—a kindly thought.

Eyes lit with joy on getting it, I wot; Now giver and receiver are forgot! From home to home it went, as the owner moved,

And gathered the choice things the family loved; By chance it was to this dim region shoved.

This picture served its day—recalled a face,

A world, jogged memory a while; I place

It back, but whose it was—I have no trace.

—Alexander Louis Fraser.

Needless Pain!

Nowadays, people take Aspirin for many little aches and pains, and as often as they encounter any pain.

Why not? It is a proven antidote for pain. It works!

And Aspirin tablets are absolutely harmless. You have the medical profession's word for that; they do not depress the heart.

So, don't let a cold "run its course." Don't wait for a headache to "wear off." Or regard neuralgia, neuritis, or even rheumatism as something you must endure. Only a physician can cope with the cause of such pain, but you can always turn to an Aspirin tablet for relief.

Map Makers Must Keep Pace

Before Settlement the Government Must Run Base Line and Produce Adequate Maps for Prospectors and Settlers Alike

Few people can resist the fascination of a modern map with its implication of travel and appeal to the imagination.

Particularly fascinating are the maps of Western Canada where the changes are swift and continuous. A case in point is the Humboldt Sheet of the Sectional Map of Canada embracing 4300 square miles of central Saskatchewan between townships 33 and 40, ranges 15 to 29, west of the second meridian, of which the 7th edition since 1902 is now off the press of the Topographical Survey, Department of the Interior.

The first edition of June, 1902, indicates two out of 104 townships surveyed into sections with the old Prince Albert Qu'Appelle trail and the Government Telegraph line along it representing the only facilities for travel or communication on the mapped area at that time. Cutting off the two lower tiers of sections the boundary line between Saskatchewan and Assinabola, divisions of the old Northwest Territories, stands out as one of three east and west surveyed lines. At the centre of the region stood the Humboldt telegraph station, until 1892 one of the two telegraph stations between Winnipeg and Edmonton to which the surveyors sometimes had to travel long distances in order to obtain by telegraph the time signal for the purpose of determining longitude. A Saskatchewan directory of 1888 gives a population of eight households for Humboldt, the telegraph operator and line men with a rancher and five others, either freighters or hunters. This represented the settlement over the whole area of 4300 square miles up to the time when the second tide of immigration reached the West well after the beginning of this century.

Then followed six more editions of maps of this area.

Differing from all of these is the seventh edition which is topographical not only to the extent of showing contours and all other natural features but which displays facilities such as telephone lines, ditches, classified roads differentiated in color, schools, churches, garages, etc. The mass of information necessary for the compilation of this truly fine example of the topographer's science was obtained from previous surveys and from data supplied by various Dominion and Provincial departments, and from the railway companies.

In very early days in the West people travelled about wholly by water. As the Humboldt area lies nearly forty miles from any water route it remained an unknown land except for occasional winter travellers until the construction in the '80's of the main line of the C.P.R. to the south, when Humboldt telegraph station became the half-way point on the stage route between Qu'Appelle and Prince Albert.

On his way north to survey a portion of the Arctic coast, in December, 1836, Thomas Simpson travelled diagonally across this area. His approximate course across the country is indicated by the line of the Canadian National Railway northwesterly. Taking observations on the way, as did most of those early explorers who had a working knowledge of surveying, Simpson appropriated the carriage of his books and instruments, travelling himself all the way to Athabasca on foot.

Quill Lakes, on the southeast corner, 1703 feet above sea level, he refers to as "Lac aux Plumes," and informs us that they derived their name from the multitude of wild fowl that moulted there every summer. The portions of these lakes falling within the mapped area cover seven townships and have been reserved for a bird sanctuary, together with Lenore Lake at the north centre of the sheet, while Ponass Lake on the eastern boundary has been created "Public Shooting Grounds Reserve."

Simpson described his route across the eastern half of the tract as being from one deeply curved woods to another, "as if traversing successive bays of the sea to which these great plains that reach to the Rocky Mountains may well be likened." In spite of the fact that the district is well settled some of this forest cover still remains and the woods, tinted in green on the map, appear much as they did 94 years ago. Christmas day, 1836, he travelled 31 miles, passing over or near what are now the villages of St. Gregor, Muenster and Carmel, and the town of Humboldt. Northeast of Humboldt, from the summit of Mount Carmel, he and his guides obtained a view of the boundless prospect of the plains to the south with belts of woods to the north. When he saw a "seemingly endless tract of open underwood varied by gentle swelling eminences, thickets and hillocks, interchangeably with still further more open country varied by coteaus or bare ridges and here and there in the hollows large ponds," This might be a terse description of the terrain as it now looks except that, where not a building or farmstead stood at that time, and few even sixty years afterwards, nowadays the expanse is dotted with the homes of settlers who have gone into the tract since 1902.

Some years after Simpson, in the midsummer of 1872, the Sandford Fleming expedition passed across the tract on their way to examine the Yellowhead Pass for the C.P.R. and to report on the intervening and extending countries. Climbing the same hill from which Simpson obtained a view in 1836, the secretary of the expedition commented rapturously on the roses, marigolds, and asters in such a profusion of color that his impression was of an earthly paradise, but he says sadly, "Where hundreds of homesteads shall yet be, there is not one!" Yet the new map now shows on the area 6,270 buildings exclusive of the towns and villages.

Train Your Boy To Love the Dentist

Getting children to go willingly to the dentist is frequently among a mother's most perplexing problems.

The reason for this usually is that children make the acquaintance of a dentist only when they are in great pain. Dr. Esther Schupack, a dentist, explains in Hygeia (Chicago). We read:

Mothers should plan to make the child's introduction to the dentist a painless one. This may be done by taking him early for examination and cleaning of the teeth, and establishing the habit of repeating the visit every six months. Thus friendship and confidence are cemented, which will be valuable if painful treatment is ever necessary.

Lying to a child is the way of failure. If one has a child's confidence, one can soothe him into patient and stoical endurance of great suffering.

Another important cause of fear of the dentist is in careless discussion of dental aches and pains in the presence of children. Nine out of ten who rebel fiercely at a necessary visit to the dentist are in a state of fear because of conversation overheard in the family circle. This can be avoided by the exercise of discretion.

Rare Lizards of Desert Given to Field Museum

Three rare African lizards, one of them equipped with a broad shovel-like snout for digging in the sand, one with fringed toes designed to produce the same effect as anti-skid chains on an automobile tire, and one with web feet, have been presented to Field Museum of Natural History by Dr. Will J. Cameron, of Chicago. This is the second gift of unusual species of lizards which Dr. Cameron has made to the museum as a result of his activities on the recent Cameron-Kadle Kalahari Desert expedition.

The lizards are of species represented in few if any other museums in the world, according to Karl P. Schmidt, the museum's herpetologist. They are all admirably adapted for life under the conditions they encounter in their native habitat, which is one of the world's driest deserts. The anti-skid feet of one, and the web feet of the second, give them improved traction in moving over the loose sand, while the shovel-snouted one has long fringes extending from its toes which aid it similarly. All three are of the typical desert sand coloration which makes them practically invisible except to the most observant eyes.

LIFE AT HOME

One's everyday life is a surer revealer of character than one's public acts. There are men who are magnificent when they appear on great occasions—wise, eloquent, masterly—but who are almost utterly unendurable in their fretfulness, unreasonableness, frascibility and all manner of selfish disagreeableness in the privacy of their own homes, to those to whom they ought to show all of love's gentleness and sweetness. There are women, too, who shine with wondrous brilliancy in society, sparkling in conversation, winning in manner, the centre ever of admiring groups, resistless in their charms, but who, in their everyday life, in the presence of only their own households, are the dullest and wearisomest of mortals. No doubt, in these cases the common, every day, unflattering as it is, is a truer expression of the inner life than the hour or two of greatness or graciousness in the blaze of publicity.—Dr. J. R. Miller.

The Coal Stoppage in Australia

Sydney Bulletin: Australia is entitled to know what the parties to this coal dispute are doing to end it. Even if it is granted that the people are not entitled to tell them how they shall end it, proof at least should be required that steps of some sort are being taken. The time has passed, if it ever arrived, when it was open to the controllers of great natural sources of wealth to close them down indefinitely. No country heavily in debt to foreign creditors could admit such a right. In our own case we have pledged ourselves to pay something like thirty millions a year to foreign creditors in interest, and payment can be made only by using our resources to the utmost. The controllers of the coal mines in common with others are under an obligation to the nation to use every means in their power to produce their proper share of this interest. They may fail to do it. They may even be justified in that failure. But at least there is an obligation upon them to endeavor to do it.

Chromite Mines in Canada

The principle chromite deposits in Canada are situated in the Coleraine district, Quebec, and are regarded as capable of producing large quantities of ore. Several interesting occurrences of good chromite ore at Obonga Lake, in the Thunder Bay district of Ontario, have recently been reported.

Landlord Howe

Those of us who love the flavor of colonial days and delight in surviving monuments of that time cannot be too thankful for the preservation and continued use as an inn of the Red Horse Tavern in Sudbury. Sudbury was a great tavern town originally, and Longfellow, when he spoke of Landlord Howe's establishment simply as a wayside inn was giving it a perfectly correct description. For it was then only one of many. But, through the genius of the Poet of America this tavern has since become "the Wayside Inn, the most widely known and deeply loved of all the old taverns in New England."

Sudbury was one of the first towns settled by our Puritan forebears, Rev. Edmund Browne, who named the place after the Suffolkshire home of his childhood, being among the passengers who sailed on "the good ship Confidence," April 24, 1633, and settled here in "the wilderness." The place, however, had rich natural advantages, and these lusty young men from Old England were soon prosperous as a result of their choice of a home.

John Howe was among the first in the settlement to be admitted a freeman. In England he had been a glover, but, there being slight demand for gloves in new towns of the seventeenth century, he turned his attention to the trade of tavern-keeper. Very early, therefore, we find a Howe keeping a tavern. Longfellow, in accounting to an English friend for the coat of arms and justice authority with which his Landlord Howe is endowed said (Dec. 28, 1863) "Some two hundred years ago an English family by the name of Howe built in Sudbury a country house, which has remained in the family down to the present time. . . . Losing their fortunes, they became innkeepers, and for a century the Red Horse had flourished, going down from father to son."

Adam Howe was the antiquarian of the family and he spent a great deal of time tracing the family line back to the nobility of England. Apart from this, however, he did little to add to the lustre of the name. He kept the inn until 1830, when he was succeeded by his son, Lyman, whom Longfellow thus describes:

Proud was he of his name and race,
Of old Sir William and Sir Hugh,
And in the parlor, full in view,
His coat-of-arms, well-framed and glazed,

Upon the wall in colors blazed;
He beareth gules upon his shield,
An chevron argent in the field,
With three wolf's heads, and for the crest

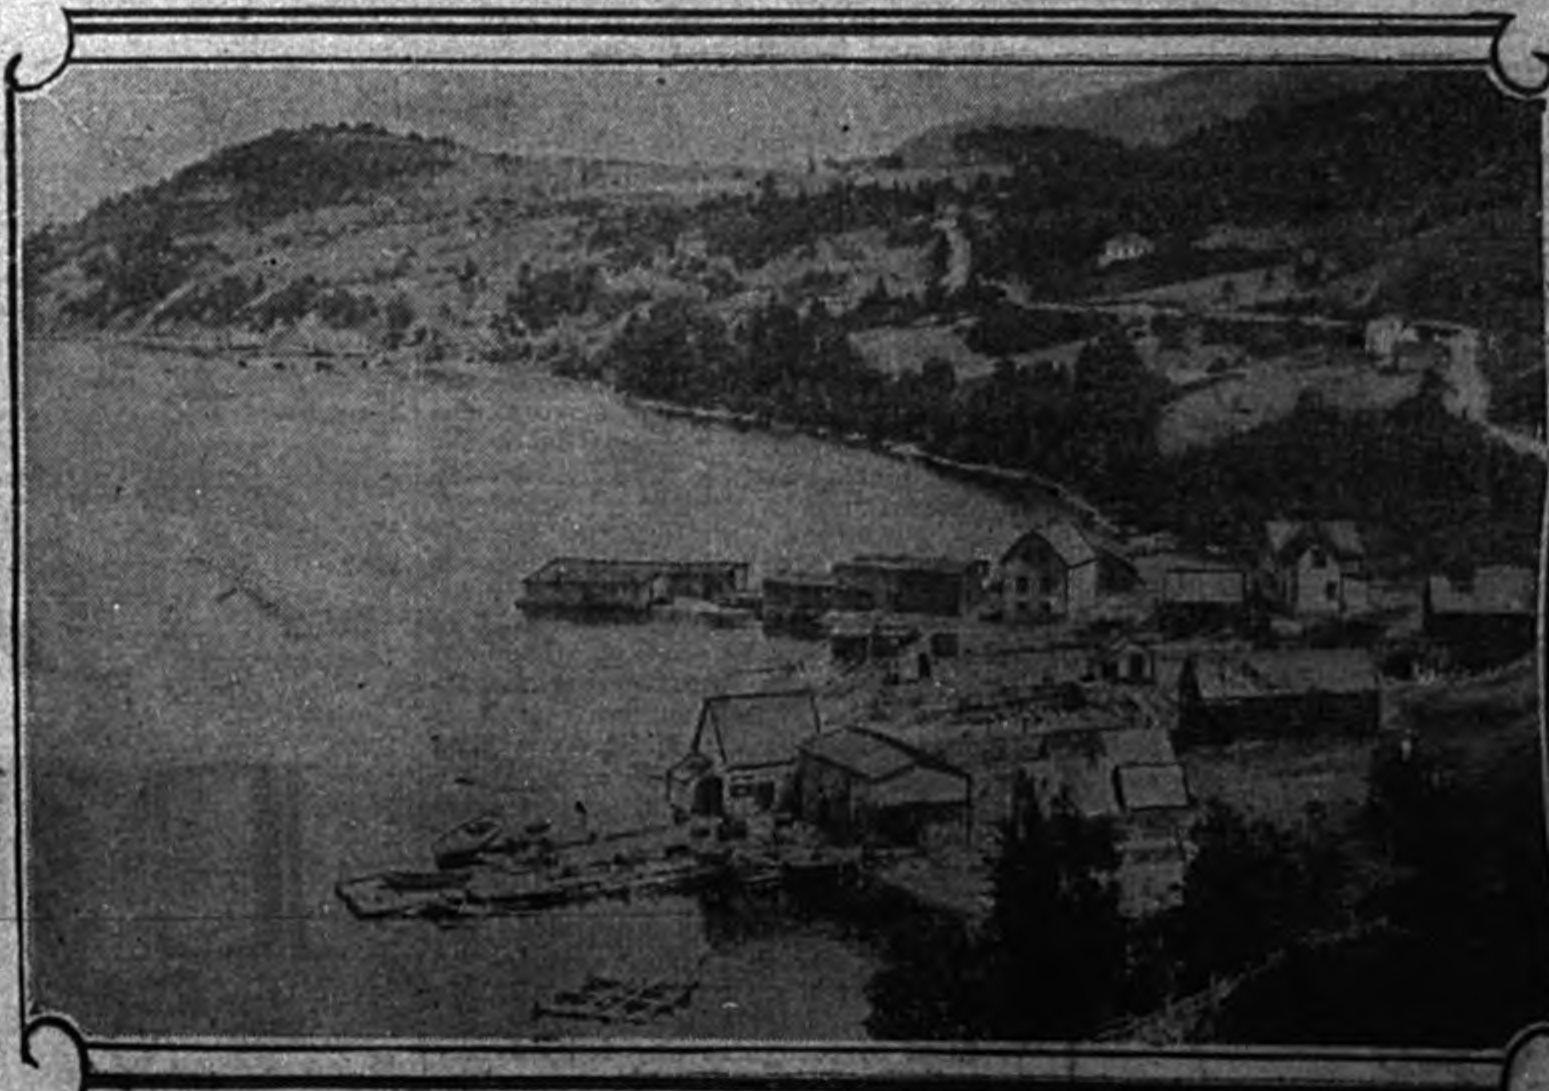

A Wyvern part-per-pale addressed
Upon a helmet barred; below
The scroll reads, "By the name of Howe."

It is with this Landlord Howe that the "Tales" are bound up.—From "Little Pilgrimages Among Old New England Inns," by Mary Caroline Crawford.

Indians in S. Africa

Madras Mail: The majority of the issues in dispute must ultimately depend for their settlement upon the good sense of the two communities concerned, on the development of that mutual understanding which will remove the fears entertained by both. As we have pointed out before, the difficulties are, at bottom, due to economic causes, and have political importance only to the extent to which their bearing on these economic factors influence the policy of parties. When "bread and butter" issues are involved, the speeches of men are apt to be extreme. This has been notoriously true of the speakers for and against Indian claims in South Africa. Of late, however, a spirit of sweet reasonableness seems to have been imported into the discussions, with the result that there is a greater readiness on both sides to see the other point of view.

"Tonic" of War Tales

Mudie's is the great London circulating library.

It has stood for years under the shadow of the British Museum. It circulates at present 2,000 copies of "All Quiet on the Western Front." But its manager tells a representative of the Manchester Guardian that he was "prepared to believe that the enormous demand for books about the war would soon be on the wane, but he had been advised that it was likely to continue for some time, and he suggested that people were finding in these harsh, vivid revelations something like a tonic."

Not a tonic so much as an intoxicant is what "Ian Hay" (Major Belth), the playwright and novelist, considers the war books. Also a slander on the soldier. In speaking in Coventry Cathedral recently on the subject of "Peace and War," as the London Daily Express reports him, he "vigorously denounced the impression created in recent novels of the life of the British soldier during the war." Thus:

"There was, he said, quite rightly expressed, a hatred of war and a determination to prevent another war, but certain other things were being done that were not so unassailable."

"The natural reprobation of war itself was being allowed to obscure our judgment to such an extent that we were inclined to transfer the horror and reprobation of war itself to the men who had fought. This was no new thing."

"The soldier suffered more ups and downs in popular esteem than any other man, and he could not help feeling that the soldier was being belittled even more vigorously than usual. He was being insulted."

"We are," said Major Belth, "being submerged by a flood of so-called war books which depict the men who fought for us in the late war for the most part as brutes and beasts, living like pigs, and dying like dogs. Some of these books are conceived in dirt, and published for the profit dirt will bring. Nobody seems able to write on this subject without yielding to this tendency, and even if it is not the intention, it is so interpreted."

"For instance, the brilliant play 'Journey's End,' which deals quite fairly with a certain rare, exceptional case of war-strain, has been claimed, quite against the author's intention, by some people to be a regular representative picture of a British soldier keeping his courage up by drink."

"Major Belth said that he had found this had a most unfortunate effect, particularly in America, from which country he had recently returned. There were scores of men present who, he believed, would agree with him that these war books were enormously exaggerated, and the stories about the habits and life of the average soldier on active service were mainly untrue and unjust."

"These would-be realists had overlooked what were the things that kept our soldiers going during the years of mud and blood. There was the feeling that they were all in the same boat, whatever their rank or job, and that was always a very comforting and unifying reflection when they were in danger of their lives."

"I understand your friend Bangs recently led a charming widow to the matrimonial altar."

"I don't know about that. I'm inclined to think she pushed him there."

THE UPWARD CLIMB

Not all ascents are followed by descents. Some mountains have only one side. "The road continued up, up," writes a traveller in Persia, "the gorge became narrower until we could cross it by a short bridge, and then wound from ridge to ridge across the top of the mountain. The view was grand. As far as the eye could see were the crests of the mountains; between, the beginning of valleys and river courses. There were so few trees that the whole configuration was spread out before us. Finally the horses began to go a little easier, and we knew we were over the top, but there was no going down on the other side of the mountain. Before us stretched out a wide, almost level plain, sloping away very gently from the crest we had crossed. In 50 miles we had ascended 4,500 feet, but in the next 170 miles did not descend 700 feet. It gives one a queer sensation after spending so much time climbing a mountain not to go down the other side." This is life. The heights which we scale we keep. Life is not meant to be up and down. It is meant to be up and up; and beyond the steep ascent lie the tablelands of God.

While the Easter recess finds the capital practically deserted by members of Parliament it is by no means barren of political gossip and rumor which is principally concerned about the impending election.

While formal announcement of an election date is never made until dissolution is asked, the date is fixed by a variety of factors which can be judged by an intelligent student of politics with reasonable accuracy. Rumors this year have fixed the voting for all months between June and December and when a number of Liberal members returned to their homes for the recess they declared that either August 26 or September 3 would be the day.

They were so emphatic on the point that considerable doubt is cast upon its authenticity. In the first place probably no one but Premier King and his chief organizer Senator Hayden, know the date, if it has been finally set. In the second place if the talkative Liberal members did know it, they would hardly be likely to give it to their opponents before they had to.

It is a far better guess to say that July will see the voting ended. The Liquor Clearance Bill having proved abortive as an election issue—in fact it is regarded as a potential boomerang—Mr. King has left as an election issue only the budget. Mr. Dunning will present that to the House early in May. If it proves to awaken an enthusiastic reception throughout the country that reaction will be apparent very shortly after it is made public and that will be the time to take whatever advantage is possible of its popularity. Budgets invariably promise more on presentation than they deliver in operation and a pre-election budget is most useful when its new. There will, of course, have to be some discussion of it by Parliament but there is nothing to compel Mr. King to let the debate drag along until it is thoroughly pulled to pieces for errors of omission and of commission. He can ask for dissolution when he desires it and after the episode of 1926 he will get it. The end of May will also see the soldier's legislation ready for consideration by the House, so don't be surprised if Mr. King closes up shop in the third or fourth week of next month and takes the plunge.

July also offers other advantages as compared with late August or early September, the latter dates through the close of the campaign right into the busiest of the harvest season, a situation which is not appreciated by the farmers.

The Conservative party is full convinced that Mr. King has selected July and is preparing its campaign accordingly.

If the debates in Parliament can be taken as a guide the Conservative attack on the King administration will centre along these lines.

Failure of the Government to protect the Canadian Farmer. The dairy industry is stagnant, 36,000,000 pounds of butter being imported in 1929 and 50,000,000 pounds promised in 1930. The Fruit and vegetable growers and poultry and egg producers have been left to the mercy of surplus foreign stocks. In 1929 over $300,000,000 worth of agricultural, were imported and our own exports animal and vegetable products which could have been produced in Canada in these categories particularly dairy poultry and meat products practically vanished. All this, Conservatives claim, because the King Government refused reasonable safeguards to the home market for Canadian producers.

Industrially a similar situation exists. From the United States Canada bought in 1929 over $890,000,000 worth of goods, mostly manufactured. In the same period Canada sold to the United States some $520,000,000 worth of goods, mostly raw materials, half of what we bought, it is claimed, could and should have been made in Canada. Half of what we sold in raw materials might have been manufactured in Canada for the markets of the world.

Then there will be emphasized the refusal of Mr. King to assist in the building of a national highway; his refusal to aid technical education; his refusal to recognize any federal responsibility in meeting the unemployment problem; his refusal to embark upon a national public health plan; and last but by no means least, his remarkable declaration that he would not give a single cent to any province under a Conservative Government.

There will be many other points of attack peculiar to different localities but the activities in the House indicate that foregoing as the major force in the Conservative campaign. It will be shown that despite asserted reductions in taxation the King Government is taking more than fifty millions a year more in taxes from the public than did its predecessor and it will be shown that there has been no decline in the cost of living from the post-war inflation of 1921. Whatever happens it will be a brisk and interesting campaign and you can look for it in July unless Mr. King decides that economic conditions are too bad and postpones his venture until 1931.

CANADA POINTS AN OBJECT LESSON AND EXAMPLE TO ALL WHO HAVE THE INTEREST OF THE DOMINION AT HEART.

TO PRESERVE NATURAL BEAUTY OF NATIONAL PARKS OF DOMINION

Hon. Chas. Stewart, Minister of the Interior, will shortly bring before Parliament a bill the main purpose of which is to prevent the exploitation by private interests of the power, timber and mineral riches of our great national parks.

According to existing laws the leaders of the Government in power here have the right to dispose by order-in-council of any or all water power, timber or mineral resources within the boundaries of our national parks. Under Mr. Stewart's bill it will be necessary for a private bill to pass the House before any lease or other rights for commercial development can be figured.

This bill will receive the support of the House irrespective of party affiliations. It will be supported because its purport is to protect the interests of the whole population of the country and to have any claim for expropriation thoroughly aired by debate in Parliament before it is granted.

There might be a rare occasion when it would be in the general interest to permit private development of power, mines or timber within the parks area and this bill would allow for such a contingency, but it would make impossible the ruthless exploitation for immediate gain of any portion of a great national asset.

These parks are the country's play grounds and their scenic and other attractions are a source of huge revenue to the Dominion. The parks branch, recognizing these facts, has all along followed the policy of keeping them inviolate. It will not permit mining or lumbering or the developing of water power within them, and it has refused to accept park lands from any province with strings attached, permitting exploitation. Evidently strong pressure has been brought to both to overcome this stand. If this bill passes the onus will be with the public and it is most unlikely that public sentiment will favor anything in the nature of exploitation.

The dream of many far-seeing Canadians is the establishment of the great Trans-Canada Highway from coast to coast bordered at intervals by wonderful national parks in every province. Through this great shop window it is hoped that twice the number of tourists now coming to the Dominion will view unspoiled natural advantages enjoyed by no other country in the world.

HOW MAY A MAN CHOOSE?

A reader of The Star, a skilled mechanic at present unemployed in Toronto, sends us a cutting of an advertisement from an English newspaper and asks us to publish it and say what we think of it. Here it is:

Situations vacant for able-bodied Single Men on Canadian Farms; wages with board. Apply without delay for information as to the coming season's vacancies, which are being rapidly filled, to District Representative, Colonization Department, Canadian Pacific, 31 Mosley, street, Manchester; or Local Agents.

There could easily be more objectionable advertising than this in the English press, inciting immigrants to come to Canada. Without doubt there are many openings on farms for men who know something of farming or who will stay on the farm long enough to gain some experience, and the two railway systems of Canada have detailed arrangements for placing such men where they are wanted.

There are certain difficulties, however, and their existence cannot be overlooked. More people in the old land want to come to the new world than want to farm. Of those who signify their willingness to farm many change their minds when they find farming in Canada so different from what they had imagined it. Again, there is the case where an immigrant is placed in the hands of the wrong kind of farmer and, ill-used there, the newcomer goes away condemning all farms and all farmers in the country. It is not easy to reconcile city-bred people to farm life—it would not be easy for them to take to that life in England and it is less easy in Canada, where the country is more sparsely settled, distances are greater and the surrounding wall of loneliness more confirming. Yet a great population thrives on the land and a far greater population will do so. Of that which we have seen already much more will be seen—where a few settlers locate villages will rise and of these some will grow into cities within one man's lifetime. It sometimes happens that the newcomer who refuses to be a pioneer refuses the great opportunity and, heading for the busy town, accepts the small certainty of a regular wage and a fixed condition. Miss Westgate spent the Easter vacation at her home in Lachute.

Dr. H. B. Cushing and family spent Friday at his residence here.

Mr. Wallace Walford and friend are spending the week at Pine Cottage.

Mr. A. C. Pinkerton visited his parents Mr. and Mrs. R. Pinkerton on Sunday.

Mr. J. Douglas, of Montreal, spent the Easter vacation with his parents at Chabot.

Mrs. T. Weir and daughter Dorothy and Helen, spent the Easter holidays in Hawkesbury.

Mr. Jamie Fraser, of Haley's Station is visiting his cousin, Mr. C. F. Kains for Easter.

Mr. Owen Keatley and Miss Eileen Smith, of Montreal, were guests of Mrs. Jas. Watson and other friends here last Sunday.

Other Montreal visitors for Easter were Mr. and Mrs. S. Whelehan, Mr. Eddie and Miss Katie Whelehan and Messrs. Douglas and Ernest Hartley.

Much regret was felt here on Wednesday last, when it became known that Mr. Donat Houle had succumbed to the dread disease spinal meningitis, from which he had been suffering for some weeks and had passed away. The deceased who was a lad of 18 was a general favorite in the community. The funeral on Friday afternoon was conducted by Rev. Mr. McLean, of St. Mungo's and was attended by a number of the friends and neighbors; interment being in St. Mungo's cemetery.

THE LATE JOHN GRACE

In the death which took place on Thursday the 10th. inst. at his home in Stonefield of Mr. Jno. Grace there passed away one who has been a prominent figure in the public life of this community for many years. The deceased who was 65 years of age was born in Carillon and spent his early years there. In 1888 he came to Stonefield to assume the duties of foreman of repairs on the Grenville canal a position which he has filled ever since to the entire satisfaction of all concerned. Several months ago Mr. Grace was stricken by an insupportable malady and his sufferings have been most intense but sustained by his unshakable faith and hope he bore himself with a courage and calmness which were an inspiration to all around him. A typical Irishman of the finest type, genial and warm-hearted he counted his friends amongst all classes and creeds and there are few whose passing could be more deeply regretted.

The funeral was held on Monday morning, April 14th, from his late residence at Stonefield to Grenville Roman Catholic Church and was one of the largest ever seen in the locality, the spacious church being filled to its capacity. The impressive funeral service was conducted by Rev. Fr. Mandeville, of Calumet, with Rev. Fr. Belanger, of Pt. au Chene, and Bouchard, of Brownsburg, as deacon and sub-deacon while Rev. J. H. Brosseau, of Grenville, conducted the choir, whose rendering of the funeral music particularly the mournful "Dies irae" was very fine. Delegations from the C. O. F. and the K. of C. to both of which societies Mr. Grace belonged were present and the bearers were as follows: A. M. Derrick, J. Densmore, J. Johnson, E. Barron, W. Laughren and M. Grace. The remains were interred in Calumet cemetery. Besides his wife who was formerly Miss Mary Johnson, of Grenville, Mr. Grace leaves a son, M. P. Grace and a daughter Mrs. G. Villeneuve, of Stonefield, to deeply mourn his loss. Those from a distance who were present at the funeral were the deceased's sister Mrs. Pickering, of Utica, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. F. Barron, of Montreal. Mr. M. Grace, of Valleyfield, and Messrs. S. Whelehan and W. Barron, of Montreal.

For several years Canada has led the world in aerial surveying and last year consolidated that leadership by applying, for the first time in any country, aerial methods to geodetic reconnaissance and transportation. Around 70,000 square miles were covered by aerial photographs last year by the Royal Canadian Air Force and the Canadian Government Department of the Interior.

Canadian investments abroad at the end of 1928 totalled $1,579,071,000, according to a recent official estimate. Of this amount $874,626,000 is invested in the United States; $131,915,000 in Great Britain; and $572,533,000 in other countries.

Canada's Trans-Atlantic Challenger

While her builders maintain secrecy as to her engines, the new Canadian Pacific liner "Empress of Britain" is hailed by newspapers in the Old Country as a challenger in the Atlantic speed race. The London Daily Chronicle declares that "she will prove a formidable rival of the Bremen, and in any case will set up a new Atlantic speed record, for the journey from Southampton to Quebec will be made in five days or less."

So far the Canadian Pacific has made no claims for the new liner beyond the statement that she will bring Canada one and a half days nearer to England and will be the most luxurious liner on the seven seas.

Every first class cabin is to be an outside room with natural light and air and the room without bath attached will be unusual. Other ways in which the $15,000,000 the new ship is costing will be spent includes two stages fully equipped for theatrical performances, Turkish baths, swimming pool, squash racket court (the first on an ocean liner), full size tennis court on sports deck, beauty parlours, violet ray installations and a series of public rooms designed and decorated by prominent members of the Royal Academy.

Now building in Scotland, the Empress of Britain will enter service early in 1931. The sixteenth vessel of a building programme totalling 215,000 tons launched in a three year period, the Empress of Britain is designed to accommodate 1,100 passengers in First, Tourist Third and Third classes. A comparison of her tonnage of 40,000 with the 20,000 gross registered tonnage of the "Duchess" class which accommodates 1,600 passengers, indicates the lengths to which the company has gone to make spaciousness an outstanding feature of the accommodation.

In addition to her position as Speed Queen of the St. Lawrence route to and from Europe, the Empress of Britain will have the distinction of being the largest liner making round the world cruises, achieving this by the comfortable margin of 8,000 tons.

The Fliers' Job In a Great Battle

Zero Hour!
Gray columns of smoke "stalked forward like a row of trees set in motion by some magic power. The ground became alive with men."
Clearly the British flying-officer, Colonel Enderby, who had been sent up on patrol to relay information, could see the British as they clambered out of the assembly trenches, over the top. The dull glitter of their bayonets "showed up plainly through the murk. On they went, line upon line of them, one of the most moving and inspiring sights it will ever be my lot to see." So says Colonel Enderby in "Letters from a Flying Officer," by R. Stuart Wortley (Oxford University Press).

The book is fiction, but into the life of Colonel Enderby, the hero, the author has put much of his own wartime experience. The deeds of the Colonel may not be literally true, but they are typical. The volume was intended to interest the youth of England in the future of the air.

The flight described by Colonel Enderby took place in the great Somme battle, starting on July 1, 1916. Writing of it the next day, he said:

Yesterday was a historic day; wonderful and awful.

It was the culminating point of months of steady preparation, hard thought, hard work, and hard training.

The Fourth British Army flung its full strength against the German positions on the River Somme, supported on the left by divisions of the Third Army, and on the right by the French.

For a few days previously the massed allied artillery had been carrying out an intensive bombardment of the German system of defenses; cutting through their barbed-wire entanglements, destroying their machine-gun emplacements, battering in their trenches, so preparing the way for the infantry attack. The zero hour, that is the schedule time for assault, was settled for 7.30 a.m.

There was little sleep for any of us the night before, we were much on edge. Again and again we went over the details of the operation orders. We would not fail the infantry for lack of care and trouble.

At last the summer morning came, calm, smiling, tranquil.

The roar of the guns had died down. Only the echo of an occasional crump could be heard faintly wafted from the eastward. From the first gleaming of dawn onwards, the aerodrome became a scene of bustling activity. Finishing touches were being put to the machines, engines tested, rigging inspected.

This was the day of days.

The scouts had already taken the air and were early scouring the heavens miles away over the lines in the endeavor to keep the opposing aircraft from approaching our trenches.

I had been detailed for contact patrol, trench-plane, whose job it was to keep in touch with the attacking battalions, to report the progress of their advance, to watch for their signals, and to communicate their needs to the Commands of Staff.

Ten minutes before the hour of zero I was floating over the front line at about 1,000 feet. The artillery bombardment had started an hour since. Guns of all calibres had joined in raining shot and shell on the enemy front lines and supports. The heavy howitzers were plunking huge projectiles onto the German billets, onto cross-roads, and onto strong posts far in the rear.

It was a stupendous spectacle!

Never in the history of mankind have organs of destruction contrived by human agency been so concentrated by nation against nation.

The air was thick with smoke; the atmosphere suffused with the acrid smell of powder. The whole broad belt of dusty brown which marked the trench line lay under a dirty yellow pall, stretching from Gommecourt in the north way down beyond the river Somme. The ground below lay quivering as in mortal agony under the hail of staggering blows as the guns quickened their rate of firing. . . . it was "drum fire" now.

Great blocks of earth shot skywards; shivered asunder and fell, breaking into spray like an Atlantic roller which has burst against a rocky promontory, and flooding the ground with debris.

Puffs of black smoke flashed up into sight and slowly dissolved into the general haze; to be replaced by others and yet others. Smaller puffs of white went dancing in hundreds along the parapets. The fifteen-pounders were working at full pressure.

Behind the curtain of vapor great columns of powder and dust spouted upwards from where the fifteen-inch shells had made their mark, spreading outwards as they rose.

It was as if nature had thrown up a string of miniature volcanoes.

How could mortal man survive in such a terrible inferno?

Then came the zero hour, the eruption of the men from the trenches. From his vantage-point above Colonel Enderby could see them. He describes the charge thus:

On they swept. A few short minutes and they had gained their first objectives. Not all along the line. There were gaps. I could see that already. In some places the oncoming waves of khaki had faltered.

Men fell in heaps in the face of the German machine-gun fire. Our bombardment had evidently failed to cut the barbed-wire absolutely and completely.

I could see the men struggling to get through the tangled maze. Nor had even the heaviest guns succeeded in penetrating the roofs of the deep dugouts which the Germans had constructed. As our barrage lifted I could see their machine-gunners, their steel gray uniforms and "pickelhaubes" were easily distinguishable, bringing up their deadly weapons from the shelter 20 feet below the ground. In some cases. Where our men had overrun the first line of the trenches, the Huns emerged in rear of them and shot them in the back.

My time had come: the moment was at hand in which I could help.

I came down to 200 feet. I remember a pang of uneasiness. It was not pleasant flying at this altitude right in the line of the trajectory of our own shells which were still pouring over into Hun-land.

But fear is most readily banished from the mind when there is much else to think about.

I sounded my Klaxon horn, and almost immediately the flares showed up. I flew up and down the line, both my observer and myself busily drawing in the positions newly occupied by our infantry on a trench map. In some places they had penetrated unexpectedly far into and beyond the German line. They had taken Pri-court and had pushed on as far as Contalmaison. Over toward the Ancre the attack had not been so successful. There was obviously a terrific struggle going on in and around Thiepval Wood.

We filled in the new line on our map fairly accurately, I think, and flew back to the appointed spot where we dropped the information which we knew was anxiously awaited. Then we returned to the front line, and again announced our presence by a blast upon the Klaxon horn.

One by one the white letters of the code of signals were displayed upon the ground: "B.B." "H.H." "The enemy are retreating." "Lengthen range." came up the silent cry of the units of the 34th Division. Our own barrage was holding up the advance. "Z.Z." "Held up by wire," said the division to its left. "F.F." "P.P." "The enemy are offering strong resistance, reinforcements wanted."

We flew back with these messages. The long day wore on. Twice and three times the pilots returned to the aerodrome, replenished their petrol tanks and were off again to the line. When darkness came there was not one of us who was not dead beat. It had been a day of high hopes; partly realized, partly disappointed. The situation is still obscure: to-morrow we shall know better what we have gained and what the victory has cost. I fear it has cost the R.F.C. a few lives that can ill be spared.

Wife (at 3.30 a.m.)—"Now, don't pull that old gag about sitting up with a dead friend."

Husband—"No—he was a live one, all right. He trimmed me for 75 in a poker game and the landlord will have to wait until next month for his."

Smallpox Is Child Slayer

Vaccination To-day is Saving Thousands of Children

This is the twenty-first of a Series of Weekly Health Articles prepared by the Canadian Social Hygiene Council.

Smallpox is sometimes called the children's disease. This is a rather broad statement, and as a Frenchman said, "all generalizations are false, including this one." Smallpox is everybody's disease, just as vaccination is everybody's protection. It is true, however, that smallpox is an especial danger to childhood.

I have some figures before me that tell a frightful story of what smallpox can do to children in a country, where children are cherished above all things—England.

At the end of the nineteenth century a smallpox scourge hit England, moved from city to city, leaving a terrible trail of death and disfigurement behind it. The old country's public men, always on the alert to better conditions for the people, made an exhaustive investigation into the circumstances surrounding the epidemic. I will give you the result of their search for facts. These figures refer in each instance to children under ten years of age.

From the year 1891 to 1900 in London, the death rate among vaccinated children was nil; among unvaccinated children the death rate was 22.8.

For the year 1895 and the year 1896 in Leicester, the death rate among vaccinated children was nil; among unvaccinated children it was 14 per cent. The total number of smallpox cases of all ages was 357.

From 1887 to the year 1888 in Sheffield the death rate among vaccinated children was 1.7. The total number of smallpox cases of all ages was 4,703.

From 1892 to 1893 in Oldham, the death rate among vaccinated children was nil; the death rate among unvaccinated children was 33.3. The total number of smallpox cases of all ages was 124.

From 1892 to 1893 in Leeds, the death rate among vaccinated children was nil; the death rate among unvaccinated children was 37.5. The total number of smallpox cases was 200.

There you have an idea of England's experience with just one epidemic. Five other cities and towns have about the same story to tell.

It is the experience of doctors the world over, and shows how real is the danger from smallpox, how terrible its effects of the scourge; how remarkable the benefits of vaccination and how largely imaginary are its hazards.

During the period when these figures were accumulated, smallpox was as prevalent as measles, and that was the decade when it acquired the reputation of being the "children's disease." Time has taught the medical profession that smallpox resumes its epidemic proportions of other days whenever and wherever the system of vaccination is habitually neglected. Through such neglect there results an accumulation of people who are susceptible to the disease and who promptly spread it among other people.

Personal experience is a great teacher, but it would hardly be fair to ask the anti-vaccinationists to try an experiment which was undertaken during a virulent smallpox scourge which swept through Boston, Mass., by Dr. Isaac Pfeiffer, a physician of that city who opposed the "germ theory" and contended that good physique, exercise, food, etc., were all the protection needed against the disease.

He challenged the Boston health department to let him expose himself to smallpox infection. The challenge department officials and reporters—was accepted and a group of health all vaccinated—went to Balloups Islands, where the smallpox cases were isolated, with Dr. Pfeiffer, who was the only unvaccinated person in the party. The doctor trotted into the wards with this group, then out again. He boasted that he "would inhale the breath of the smallpox cases, wipe their faces with his handkerchief, then wipe his own face with the same handkerchief." But he did none of these things. He returned to his home, some forty miles out of Boston, and was later discovered there with a developed case of smallpox from which he nearly died. The newspapers at the time said he was "a man very much to be pitied."

There was a parallel case in Toronto, during an epidemic, when an alderman of the city, a former member of the city's board of health, and an opponent of compulsory vaccination, found himself in a smallpox hospital, and unable to continue his active part in the agitation against vaccination.

Montreal, too, had its taste of anti-vaccinationists and soured on the type. For a dozen years or so, Dr. Coderre lectured and issued anti-vaccination literature throughout the French-Canadian section of Montreal. When the disease was introduced in their midst, it was found that ninety per cent. of the deaths were among children under ten years of age who had not been vaccinated and who, no doubt, had been influenced by the anti-vaccination literature of the day.

That, however, was only one of the horrible features of the epidemic. Dr. Coderre, leader of the anti-vaccinationists until the epidemic broke out, tried to leave the province and enter Ontario. The authorities insisted that he be physically examined so that there would be no danger of the scourge passing into this province. The examination showed how little Dr. Coderre himself trusted the theories he was broadcasting among the children—he had been vaccinated himself.

It has been charged that tuberculosis may be caused by vaccination. Here is what Dr. Edward Baldwin, director of the Trudeau Foundation for Research in Tuberculosis has to say about it: "Personally, said Dr. Baldwin, 'I have never seen a case of authenticated tuberculosis due to vaccination. Furthermore, I have seen many cases of tuberculosis who have undergone vaccination without harm. In fact, vaccination in the course of tuberculosis has been the cause of improvement in some cases, and over twenty-five years ago vaccination was seriously advocated by French Physicians, as a form of treatment.'"

Does vaccination cause syphilis? Here is a question which constantly raises its head.

New York is the second largest city in the world and it is estimated that 8 to 10 per cent. of the population has syphilis. As a result New York affords a wide opportunity for the study of the disease. The answer to the question—does vaccination cause syphilis?—which I will read to you, comes from Dr. John A. Fordyce, the professor of syphilis in Columbia University, one of the greatest students in the interest of mankind of this disease. Dr. Fordyce says, "I have never in my experience seen a case of syphilis conveyed in such manner, and do not believe that such a mode of infection is possible."

It is generally considered that if a child is vaccinated within the first year of its life and again during the early stages of the adolescent period it will be protected from the danger of smallpox for the rest of its life. The mother who has charge of the health of herself and the members of her family should have no difficulty in deciding without a shadow of a doubt in her mind that vaccination is the safe procedure and the only safe procedure in the avoidance of smallpox.

ONE DAY AT A TIME

All along our earthly life we are shut in with God, as it were, in little spaces. We must live a day at a time. The mornings are little hilltops from which we can look down into the valley of one little day. What lies over the next hill we cannot tell. Perhaps, when we come to it, it may reveal to us a lovely garden through which our path shall go. Or it may show us a vale of shadows, or a path amid briars. No matter; we have but the one little valley of the day now in sight. Evening is our horizon. Here in this one little day's enclosure we can rest as though in a refuge. Tomorrow's storms and cares cannot touch us.—J. R. Miller, D.D.

Novelties Bring Sophistry

Materials Bring Symmetry of Line and Harmony

Feminine imagination will receive pleasant stimulus in the fabric surprises of the spring season. Many and delightful are the novelties in new materials and the manner of their use.

When the last word has been said, the true value of any fabric rests upon its ability to enhance feminine charm. Weaves and color combinations this spring offer the couturier wide range. Since sartorial enchantments depend upon symmetry of line, harmony of color, and the use of materials appropriate to the cut of gowns, the more diversified styling of materials is an incentive to greater originality in design.

Fabrics this spring combine body and suppleness. Satins of considerable weight and great elegance, some of them richly brocaded, some of soft, luscious crepe satin, proclaim the new era of formality. Flat crepes grow richly soft and take on new dignity. Chiffons have more body, and laces of real worth, such as Alencon and Chantilly, supplant the sheerer and less impressive ones. Tulle, nets, and even horsehair braid add their originality to materials for evening and the brocaded chiffons and laces are sumptuous in their feeling and beautiful in design and color.

Imported Sophistication

An import from Lelong illustrates smartly the utilization of horsehair braid for evening gowns. It is an ultra-sophisticated gown, entirely of the horsehair braid, and the gleaming sheer blackness of its material gives it tremendous chic.

The entire gown is formed of horsehair braid of varying widths, commencing with narrow braid which fashions the smart bolero that flares slightly over the molded body-lines of the gown. Spiraling around the body to a line well below the hips, the braid is molded to the figure, giving the chic tubular line. From below the hips, wider braid makes a full skirt which billows like an irregular umbrella, swooping to the floor in the back.

The very character of the fabric insures its unusual flare and furnishes its own trimming. The black is unrelieved by any color and the gown represents one of the smartest creations from Paris for spring.

Lace Has Chic Role

For ultra-femininity, Alencon lace has no superior for an effective and extremely serviceable evening gown. For the lace gown finds itself perfectly at home on the most formal occasions and on those where less formality holds reign.

Air Mail to India

Bombay Times of India: Truth, that very shy lady, compels us to admit that the Air Mail is an interesting experiment and a modest convenience; but little more. . . . There is a newspaper aphorism that nothing is news which does not come by the quickest route. The quickest route between Great Britain and India is not the aeroplane, nor even will be; nor the airship, when it comes; but the harness, by the genius of Marconi. We invite the Associated Chambers of Commerce in all seriousness to consider which would be of the greater value to the community—an Air Mail, arriving a day or two before the Sea Post, so uncertain that every important message should be duplicated, or wireless messages at a penny a word. None can doubt what the answer should be.

BABY'S OWN TABLETS A HELP TO MOTHERS

There is no other medicine of as great a help to young mothers as Baby's Own Tablets. These Tablets are a mild but thorough laxative which regulate the bowels; sweeten the stomach; correct constipation and indigestion; break up colds and simple fevers and make the cutting of teeth painless.

Mothers who keep a box of the Tablets in the house always feel safe from the sudden attacks of illness that seize their little ones. If baby's Own Tablets are given on the first sign of illness the baby will soon be right again. Concerning the Tablets Mrs. B. G. Carver, Lyndale, P.E.I., writes:—"I always keep Baby's Own Tablets in the house and find them a wonderful help in keeping my baby well."

Baby's Own Tablets are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Moscow and Montreal

Quebec Action Catholique Ind.): By the orders of Moscow, on Thursday of last week March 6, . . . four thousand people in the City of Montreal tried to parade and demonstrate in the streets! Four thousand people, just consider the figure! . . . Montreal is taking orders from Moscow. There must, therefore, be a Bolshevik organization in Montreal. And, judging by the number of people who obey these instructions, how can we doubt the existence of continuous propaganda? The fact is that in Montreal, as in many Canadian towns, there are nuclei or cells of Communists. They distribute revolutionary literature, even to children.

About two hours after eating many people suffer from sour stomachs. They call it indigestion. It means that the stomach nerves have been over-stimulated. There is excess acid. The way to correct it is with an alkali, which neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Training Spiders For Commerce

"I hear of an interesting little enterprise in Canada for the commercial development of spiders' webs. The very fine threads which the spider spins are valuable in special kinds of photography and, I think, in gun-sighting," says the London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian.

"But it is not every kind of spider that spins a thread delicate enough for this delicate work, and in Canada the National Physical Laboratory, bringing the aid of science to commerce, sends out its spider experts to collect the right variety, and to cultivate them as factory workers, so to speak, much as bees are cultivated for their honey."

"The process of the education of these commercial spiders is interesting. They are induced, entirely by kindness, to walk round and round a stick, and as they do so the thread is wound round it, so that the spider is made to manufacture a sort of bobbin of inconceivably fine thread. This thread is afterwards wrapped round the prongs of a fork which has been painted beforehand with shellac to prevent the thread from sticking, and these forkfuls of gossamer are then put into cold storage. I believe these commercial cobwebs are wanted chiefly for aerial photography, the thread being stretched across the diaphragm of the camera to supply the sighting line."

"The spider thus joins the ranks of industrial workers, a prosaic addition to the exploitation of nature in the age of business. Perhaps there will be a spiders' protection society with proper trade union regulations. It seems rather a grim business for the spider, and certainly a contrast to the poetry of the spider's web, and one wonders what W. H. Hudson, who clad his ethereal Rima in a diaphanous vesture of spider's gossamer, would have thought of it."

Nurse Gains 7 lbs. in 2 Weeks with Yeast and Iron

"I am a nurse at the hospital," writes Miss Martha Burns, "and I want to let you know that I am glad to recommend your Ironized Yeast."

"It gave me a good appetite. I got strong and gained 7 pounds in 2 weeks. I could write all day about how much good Ironized Yeast did me. You would be surprised at the strength I gained in 3 or 4 days."

People everywhere are amazed at the wonderful benefits of Ironized Yeast. Many write they were doubtful when they started. But after taking it regularly for only 3 or 4 weeks they gained 5 to 15 pounds. Ugly hollows fill out. Skinny limbs become gracefully rounded. Blemished skin gets clear and beautiful.

Only when Yeast is Ironized is it more effective—for iron is needed to bring out the weight-building and strengthening values of Yeast. Pleasant tablets in a handy bottle. Never cause gas or bloating. Safe—no harmful drugs.

Go to any druggist to-day and get a full size treatment of Ironized Yeast. If after this generous trial you are not delighted, your money back instantly from manufacturer.

Chinese Financier

Chinese people are beginning, to realize the value of currency and are learning to handle it systematically. The financial position in China is better to-day but not until the government adopts higher taxation will there be peace, is the view of K. N. Chang, president of the Bank of China and outstanding financier of the country who sailed from Vancouver for Shanghai aboard Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Russia recently. Photograph was taken on the ship.

A Chinese Magna Charta

What may well prove to be an important step towards constitutional guarantees, hitherto significantly lacking in China, is discerned by some keen political students in a Bill of Rights which has been jointly sponsored by Dr. H. H. Kung, Minister of Industry, Commerce and Labor, and Mr. Chiao Yi-tang, a prominent Nationalist leader. This Bill of Rights has been widely printed throughout the Chinese press, and has attracted a good deal of attention both in the English press in China and from the newspapers of Japan.

According to despatches just received, the first article of this Chinese Magna Charta sets forth that the Chinese people, irrespective of race, caste, sex, or creed, shall enjoy full legal equality, and the second provides that no person shall be restrained or deprived of his liberty without due process of law. No one is to be subject to the jurisdiction of military courts except those in the service of the army, navy, or aerial forces engaged in war or in areas of occupation.

The principle of freedom of speech and of the press is affirmed by another article, which declares that everyone has the right, within the bounds of the law, to express his views by word of mouth, by writing or drawing, or by any other method that he may think of. It is also provided that within the limits set by the law the people shall have the right to assemble and to organize. The right of privacy as regards the mails, telephones, telegraphs and other means of communication is recognized.

Other articles lay it down that no dwelling-house may be searched without the consent of the owner and due process of law, that every person shall have the right to live and travel wherever he wishes, and that everyone shall be permitted to choose his own occupation, profession, or employment. No property is to be confiscated without due process of law, and every person is to have the right of free access to the courts.

Parents who have more children than they can care for can call upon the State for help; orphans, cripples and those enfeebled by age have also a claim to State assistance; while the right of the workless to ask the State for employment, the right of landless peasants to cultivate unowned land, and the right of poor people to free education are also fundamental principles of the Bill. Whatever else it does, it certainly gives indication that somebody in China has got a clear grasp of the best foundation upon which to build a really democratic Government.

The Wealth of India

Calcutta Englishman: The general public, pathetically unversed in economics and exchange, do not realize the immensity of India's natural resources. They do not understand that their wealth remains; that though political tergiversation and corrupt and inefficient administration may make the winnowing of this wealth by the Indians and Europeans harder in the future than it has been in the past, the wealth remains and demands the application of ever greater capital and labor. Whatever the precise evolution of Indo-British politics, it is utterly unthinkable that any time, however distant, Britain will be false to her trust to the extent of letting India slide into Chinese chaos.

Combining Pastels

In the evening fashions worn this year there is the same tendency to combine pastels as in sports costumes. By the younger women, short, baby blue wraps are worn over flesh pink frocks, or pink velvet capes are seen over blue frocks. Tulle and nets are as popular as ever, more especially in black and white, and in pink, but occasionally in other colors.

DO YOU FEAR A HEARTY MEAL?

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Will Tone Up Your Stomach Making
Mealtime a Pleasure

Are you afraid of meal-time? Does eating distress you? Would you rather go without food? That is the condition of many due entirely to indigestion. There can be no perfect digestion—hence no enjoyment of meal-time—unless you have rich, red blood. This pure blood is necessary to tone up your stomach and make it capable of properly digesting the food.

Many so-called stomach remedies merely try to digest your food for you. That is a mistake—nature should do that work and if nature does not do it serious results are bound to follow. Toned up your stomach by driving out the poisons that are in the blood. Make new rich blood and your appetite and digestion will soon be normal—meals will once more be a pleasure.

The one sure medicine to enrich the blood, restore strength and banish stomach trouble and indigestion is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Concerning them Mrs. Wm. T. Thompson, Brussels, Ont., says:—"For years I suffered with indigestion, headaches and dizzy spells. I tried a great many so-called remedies without relief. As a farmer's wife, with three little girls, it was almost impossible to be idle and I just dragged myself through my work. I suffered so I was actually afraid of meal time. A friend advised the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and although I had lost faith in ever being well again I purchased a supply and began taking them. Gradually the dizziness and headaches left me. My appetite improved and soon I was able to enjoy my meals. I gained in weight and my health in general is better than it has been for years. I feel I owe much to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for they relieved me of all my misery."

You can get these pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Suzanne Lenglen Seeks New Technique in Making
Sports Attire

Suzanne Lenglen is now open champion for the short skirt brigade, and it is related that she is in conflict with the long skirt advocates among the Paris dressmakers and she is planning a new conception of feminine dress based upon the modern woman's need for unhindered movement, particularly at sport.

To carry out her ideas the former tennis champion, who is now a dress designer, has given orders for the installation near her Paris office of a private tennis court, upon which specially chosen mannequins will play daily with racket and ball under her critical gaze.

Grace in Motion

Every variation in the lines of the frocks worn by the players will be carefully noted and later studied.

"Clothes which are graceful only while the wearer remains motionless are useless for women of to-day," Miss Lenglen declared. "New frocks must be designed for action and speed, as well as for elegance."

"My first matches at Wimbledon impressed the idea on me. I was struck by the clumsiness of women's clothes on the court. They wore their skirts and sleeves too long and had too much to carry. The effect in motion was ugly."

"Sooner than play in this ridiculous attire, I introduced the bandeau, the sleeveless jumper and the short skirt, which were all adopted."

"That was a beginning, but there is still much to be done. I think I have found a way to do it, and a new technique of dressmaking will be the result. All my designs will be based upon the fact that beauty to be charming must vary incessantly."

Magistrate: "Are you here again? I told you no to let me see you here again." Prisoner: "Yes, sir, I told the policeman, but he wouldn't listen to me."

Brownsburg Wins Championship at Toronto

Wins Two Strings out of Three in Bowling Contest with Sandwich

Six of our Brownsburg stalwarts journeyed to Toronto last Saturday and won the Championship of the C. I. L. in their contest with Sandwich. The game was most exciting and there was a gallery of over 200 people to witness the play in which Brownsburg won two out of the three strings from Sandwich. The local team comprised J. A. Hazel, E. Lavoie, E. Dagenais, A. Brunelle, and J.
 Kettyle.

Following the game a very enjoyable banquet was given in the Hotel
 Victoria at which about 100 were present. A pleasing feature of the occasion was the attendance of some 15 of old Brownsburg boys who were pleased at the opportunity of renewing old acquaintance.

The team and a number of supporters motored to Toronto returning on Sunday night.

Fort William.—Elevator capacity at Fort William will probably total 100,000,000 bushels by 1930. Present storage capacity of the twin cities is recorded as 72,540,000 bushels and between 9,000,000 and 10,000,000 bushels will be added before the 1923 crop is garnered. Expansion in the following two years will take about 20,000,000 bushels, one of the largest terminal building projects either in the history of the lakehead ports or any of the other centres of the continent.
