WEDDING BELLS

ROSE-DOIG

The marriage of Mildred Elizabeth second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. Doig, of Lachute, Que., to Mr. Ernest Edward Rose, of Ottawa, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Rose, of Hampstead Garden, London, England took place quietly on Saturday afternoon at Calvary United Church, the Rev. A. G. MacKinnon officiating, assisted by the Rev. W. L. Tucker.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father wore a gown of white satin fashioned in princess lines. Her long veil of bridal net was held in place by a strand of orange blossoms, ending in clusters at either side, her slippers of white satin to match and she carried a shower bouquet of butterfly roses, and lilies of the valley. The bride was attended by her sister, Annabel, who wore a gown of blue moire satin, fashioned on princess lines, with hat and slippers to match and carried a bouquet of Columbia roses. Mr. Richard Weldon, of Montreal, acted as best man. Mr. Cornish, organist at the church, played the wedding music. During the signing of the register Miss E. Washer sang, "All Joy be Thine." The bride's mother wore a gown of black crepe, with eggshell trimmings and hat to match, with corsage bouquet of Ophelia roses.

Later Mr. and Mrs. Rose left for their wedding trip, the bride wearing an Oxford grey tailored suit with hat, shoes and purse to match. On their return they will reside at 126 Ossington Avenue, Ottawa, Ont.

THE LATE MRS. J. DRYSDALE

After an illness of some months, the death took place at the home of her niece Mrs. Wm. Jackson, early Sunday morning, of Mrs. Jas. Drysdale, aged 82. Deceased was formerly Miss Mary Kettle, born in Hill Head, and was married to James Drysdale 68 years ago. Her husband predeceased her 22 years. She was one of our town's most highly respected citizens, a devout member of the former Methodist (now United) Church; a life member of the W. M. S. and an earnest consecrated Christian.

The funeral service took place on Monday afternoon, conducted by Rev. W. Rosborough in the presence of a large number of sympathizing friends and relatives, after which the remains were interred in Lachute cemetery.

SAD DROWNING AT LOUISA.

A sad accident occurred at Lake Louise on Saturday afternoon, when Murray Robertson, aged 11 years, only child of his widowed mother was drowned when jumping into water over his depth. The little lad had been brought to the Lake by friends to spend a pleasant outing from the city and they had only arrived a few minutes when the little fellow jumped into a boat and dove off although warned it was too deep. Murray clutched hold of another young lad Dalton by the neck and almost carried him under. Help arrived, but not before Dalton was exhausted and when he came to he asked where Robertson was. It was only then that Miss L. Giles and others who were assisting realized that there had been a real fatality, and the body was afterwards recovered in about 8 feet of water. Dr. J. H. Mason notified the coroner, who returned a verdict of "accidental drowning" and the body was taken the same evening to Montreal to the sorrowing mother for whom the sympathy of this community is lovingly extended.

ELECTROCUTED AT LONGUEUIL

The death of Alfred Robinson occurred at Longueuil on Friday evening last. Deceased was the son of Antoine Robinson and was a young man of 28 years. It appears he had engaged with the amusement company that were running the Ferris wheel and merry-go-round who were operating at Longueuil and word was received that he had come into contact with a live wire carrying some 1700 volts. The body was removed to the Morgue where a verdict of "Accidental Death" was recorded, the remains being afterwards brought to Lachute, interment taking place on Wednesday morning.

People Will Talk

Yes, people will talk, and here is something that they will talk about, that is worth talking of. We all remember how a few months ago the well known comedians, musicians, radio artists, Messrs. Marrazza and Hokea, of studio C.K.A.C. proved very successful in their entertainment, in Lachute and many were hoping they would soon return. Now, the wardens of St. Simeon's Church have secured their services and on July 11th, on Mrs. Robert Miller's lawn, they will once again entertain themselves in their choice of entertainment. They know what Lachute folk like, and they have something a little special for them, remember, just for Lachute and district, no purchase your tickets in advance, and take advantage of the ice cream and cake, select programme, and other novelties, all for 35c and 20c.

The Snowshoe Trail

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Bill Bronson undertakes to lead Virginia Tremont to her fiancé, Harold Lounsbury, who vanished in the Clearwater of northern Canada six years previously. Disaster parts them from her fiancé's uncle, Kenly Lounsbury, and the cook Vesper, who complete the party. Bill and Virginia are snowed in in one of his trapping cabins. Bill presses a double quest, for the lost mine of his murdered father and for Harold. He finds the latter, who has turned "squaw man."

GO ON WITH THE STORY

Bill realized at once that this new development did not in the least affect his own duty. His job had been to find Harold and return him to Virginia. This smirch in Harold's life was a question for the two to settle between them.

It did, however, complicate the work of regeneration. Bill had known squaw men before, and few of them had ever regenerated.

Harold shrugged once more. "And is it anybody's business but my own?" he asked.

"It hadn't ought to be, but it is," was the answer. "It's my business, and somebody else's, too." He turned to the woman. "You're Joe Robinson's sister, Sindy, aren't you?"

The Indian looked up, nodded, then went to her work.

"Then you left Buckshot Dan to come here and live with this white man?"

Harold turned to her with a snarl. "Don't answer him, Sindy. It's none of his business." Then his smoldering eyes met Bill's. "Now we've talked enough. You can go."

"I've got one question, Lounsbury—do you think, by any chance—you've got any manhood left? Do you think you're rotten clear through?"

Harold leaped then, savage as a wolf, and instantly his rifle swung in his arms. Bill's form, impassive before, seemed simply to waken with life. Seemingly with one motion he wrenched the gun from the man's hand and sent him spinning against the wall.

"Before you start anything more, hear what I've got to offer you." His voice lowered, and the words came rather painfully. "It's your one chance, Lounsbury—to come back. Virginia Tremont has come into the North, looking for you. She's at my camp. She wants to take you back with her."

Lounsbury's breath caught with a strange, sobbing sound. "Virginia—up here?" he cried. "Does she know about this—this?" He indicated the cabin interior, and all it meant, with one sweep of his arm.

"Of course not. How could she? Whether you tell her or not is a matter for you and she to decide. She's come to find you—and bring you back."

"My God! To the States?"

"Of course."

For the instant the black wrath had left his face, and his thought swung backward to his own youth—to the days he had known Virginia in a far-off city. He was more than a little cowed at this manifestation of her love.

But quickly the expression of his face changed, and Bill couldn't have explained the wave of revulsion that surged through him. He only knew a blind desire to tear with his strong fingers those leering lips before him. Harold was lost in insidious speculations. He remembered the girl's beauty, the grace and liteness of her form, the holy miracle of her kisses. Opposite him sat his squaw—swarthy, unclean, shapeless. Perhaps it wasn't too late yet.

"You won't tell her about Sindy?"

"Not as long as you're decent. That's for you to settle for yourself—whether she finds out about her."

CHAPTER X.

"Build a fire and put on some water to heat—fill up every pan you have," Bill instructed Sindy.

WRIGLEYS

Life—like good golf—is made up of many little things each one of which helps the score. Better digestion—steadier nerves—clearer brain, are all factors that count and are gained from the use of Wrigley's.

After every meal. Wrigley's keeps you awake.

CHAPTER XI.

"Who's there?" Virginia called. "Is it you, Bill?"

"It's not Bill," the answer came. "But he's here."

"Who is it?" she asked again, steadily as she could.

"It's I—Harold Lounsbury. Bill told me to come."

Virginia for the moment stood still, trying to quiet her leaping heart and her fluttering nerves. Her hands clasped at her breast, then she walked to the threshold and opened the door.

Harold Lounsbury stepped through, blinking in the candlelight.

"Harold," she murmured unsteadily. She tried to smile. "Is it really you, Harold?"

"It's I," he answered. "We've come together—at last."

The words seemed to rally her scattered faculties.

Instinctively her eyes swept his face and form. All doubt was past; this man was unquestionably Harold. Yet she was secretly and vaguely shocked.

He seized her hands in both of his. "Virginia," he cried. "My God, I can't believe it's you!"

She remained singularly cool in the ardor of this cry. "Why didn't you write?" she asked. "Why didn't you come home?"

The questions, instead of embarrassing him further, put Harold at his ease. He had prepared for just these queries.

"I did write," he cried. "Why didn't you answer?"

She stared at him in amazement. "You did—you say you wrote me?"

"Wrote! I wrote a dozen times. And I never received a word—except from Jules Nathan."

"But Jules Nathan—Jules Nathan is dead!"

"He is?" But Harold's surprise was feigned. This was one piece of news that had trickled through the wastes to him—of the death of Jules Nathan, a man known to them both. It was safe to have heard from him. The contents of the letter could never be verified. "He told me—after I'd written many times, and never got an answer—that you were engaged to be married—to a Chicago man—I thought you'd forgotten me."

She hadn't forgotten, but—six years of separation had wrought their changes. She felt that she needed time to become adjusted to him.

"Where's Bill?" she asked. She turned to the door and called. "Bill, where are you?"

His voice seemed quite his own when he answered from the stillness of the night. "I'll be in in a moment—I was just getting a load of wood."

Cows and Snail Join Celebrity Roster

Cow Travels by Plane at 135 Miles an Hour—Another Starts Fire

It was recently revealed that there was a hen in this country—at Carleton, near Skipton—that was seventeen years old and was still laying.

On the basis of the average life of a hen, that bird is just as remarkable as a man 300 years old would be; yet she will probably be forgotten very quickly. There are very few famous hens.

Fame among animals is, indeed, fickle and capricious. There are famous horses, famous dogs, and famous cats—and a number of captive wild animals have obtained a considerable celebrity. But how many people are there who could mention, for instance, a famous cow?

One now living deserves to be famous. She is Elm Farm Ollie, a Guernsey, who can claim to be the first flying cow that the world has known. She recently took a trip in an aeroplane, and was milked while the plane was travelling at a rate of 135 miles an hour, 5,000 feet above St. Louis, in the United States.

Another cow is still remembered in the States—and will be for many years to come. This animal, fifty-eight years ago, kicked over the milking stool, and so upset a paraffin lamp. This simple accident started the great fire of Chicago, one of the most destructive conflagrations on record.

Snail That Won a Castle

America claims both these bovine history-makers. But there is one animal celebrity which Britain produced, and which other countries would find it hard to beat. This was the snail through which Hornby Castle, Bedale, and a large estate came into the possession of the then Duke of Leeds.

The affair happened in the days when gambling for high stakes was a commonplace. Many queer wagers of that time are recorded, but none are stranger than that in which the owner of Hornby Castle bet the castle and 15,000 acres of land that a snail he owned could outpace any brought forward by the duke.

When the curious "race" was held it looked as if the challenger's confidence was justified, because his snail soon gained the lead. However, he was impatient, and pricked the snail with a pin to make it go still faster.

Unfortunately for him, this had precisely the opposite effect to what he had intended. His snail retired into its shell, and the duke's passed it and went on to win the castle and estate for its owner.

From that day until the beginning of this year, when it was sold with the Duke of Leeds' Yorkshire estates, Hornby Castle was the property of the Dukes of Leeds.—Answers.

Soap Bubbles Used to Measure Stresses on Parts of Airplanes

Milwaukee.—Engineers are blowing bubbles in their studies to test the strength of airplane construction. G.V. Trayer, a research engineer, speaking before the faculty conference of the University of Wisconsin's engineering college here recently, explained how the use of thin soap film over specially designed holes enabled scientists to compute stresses in airplane parts.

One of the principal difficulties in using the soap film method for investigating torsional stresses, as described by Mr. Trayer, was that the ordinary soap bubble is a fragile thing totally unsuited to standing the wear and tear of a hard day's work. Persistent effort resulted in the production of a soap film that will last for day under continuous measurements.

A hole of the size and shape of the cross-section of the airplane part which is to be studied is cut in a metal plate. Over this hole is swept a film of soap by a sweep of the type that was used in pre-Velstead days to remove the excess suds from a glass of brew. Then the film is blown up slightly by a current of pure air. Ordinary human breath would destroy the film within too short a period of time.

The next step is to measure the slopes and contours of the bubble. This is a delicate and tedious process similar to the work which is done by a land surveyor in gathering field data and mapping topography.

When the step is completed the investigator has data from which he can compute the stresses that will be produced in the airplane part by the loads and twisting it will suffer in service. The soap film is not loaded or twisted; it so happens that there is a curious analogy between the contours of the bubble and the stresses in the airplane part whose cross-section it represents.

The Mayor's Nest

"All's Fair in Love"—and the Mayor Liked Pluck and Initiative

By A. G. Greenwood.

Bill Horne paused as he tore open the envelope. Something had made him glance across the office at Daphne Webb. There, in a shaft of sunlight, she sat, his assistant and the girl he secretly adored, bronze hair gleaming; blue eyes intent on her work; white hands flitting over the keyboard of the typewriter.

Everything was hopeless. Everything was going—or had gone—from bad to worse. The little shop had been dwarfed by the huge emporium opened next door. Business was dwindling; bills were increasing. He would never be able to tell her he loved her—never!

Oh, well—work!

The letter informed Bill that Mr. John Turnbull (Mayor of Heyworth Heath) admired Mr. William Horne's initiative and pluck in entering the lists against far larger firms, and that his estimate for doing up Sunnycote—facetiously known as the Mayor's Nest—had been accepted.

Initiative and pluck had made John Turnbull, converted him from pauper to plutocrat, and were now passports to his favor.

Bill gasped, then leapt up, crossed the room, and held the letter out under Daphne's delightfully reticent nose. She read it, looked up smiling, and floored Bill.

He had made such rigid vows to be formal and precise, and never hint by word or deed that he cared for her the least bit in the world. But her smile, her evident joy, her loveliness undid him.

Very suddenly he bent and kissed her.

"Daphne, I can't help it!" he explained, speaking with great swiftness and equal incoherence. "I've dreamt of it—months! Loving you. Hopeless. Not a dog's chance. And now this may make me! Satisfy old Turnbull that I've initiative and pluck, and he'll back me. That means that half Heyworth would employ me. But the real thing's this—I love you!"

Then he saw her eyes, and kissed her again.

Comparatively normal conditions had been restored, and Bill was deploring having only one "hand"—old Jack Abercrombie, who made paper go further on a wall than any other man alive—and the impossibility of raising any money, when the door opened, and a shabby stranger, a tall, lean young man with tanned cheeks, red-brown hair, and a small brown moustache, came in.

Bill said "Good-morning, sir!" with his usual questioning arch of eyebrow.

"Forgotten!" ejaculated the newcomer, in tones of melodramatic despair. "Lost to sight, and not even to memory dear!"

Then Bill "placed" Teddy Simpson. They had been at Heyworth Grammar School together. But Teddy had left the place quite four years ago—for Canada, rumor said.

A few minutes later Teddy was explaining. He had felt homesick, so he had come back on an indefinite visit, and he wanted a job. Bill sympathized.

"I can slap a brush as well, and whistle as loudly, and make as big a mess and nuisance of myself as any painter extant," said Teddy. "Sign me on, Bill."

In the end, Bill did. Lame dogs always got Bill to help them. That was on Saturday. On Monday, as Bill and Jack Abercrombie were loading up the handcart preparatory to tackling the job at Sunnycote, a stranger sauntered into the yard—at least, Bill imagined the white-coated man to be a stranger till Teddy spoke.

His hair had been shaven and his moustache removed. On his face already there was a smear of what looked like whitewash.

The three went to Sunnycote. Into Teddy's hands were put a pail, a large brush, and the washing of the attic ceilings.

"Mr. Horne," said Miss Agatha Turnbull, the mayor's spinster sister, who kept house for her brother, "kindly leave this room till the last. My niece—Bill knew Anne Turnbull by sight—tall, slim, dark of hair and eye, vivid lip, twenty or thereabouts—" "My niece is lying on the sofa. A sprained ankle at the Heyworth Ice-drome. She was learning. The Mayor things it shows initiative and pluck. I call it sheer folly."

Except for the snail's progress made by Teddy Simpson, upstairs, the first three days at Sunnycote passed off uneventfully. But on the fourth, Bill, chancing to go upstairs, failed to find Teddy. He hunted for him. On the landing outside the forbidden room where the mayor's daughter, Miss Anne Turnbull lay, he heard voices and a laugh.

Teddy's laugh! The idiot must have forgotten the embargo on the room. Bill knocked. There fell a silence. Then a peculiarly silvery voice said: "Yes? What is it, please?"

"Pardon, Miss Turnbull," said Bill, "but I'm afraid one of my men—"

He opened the door. He saw Teddy swing round from the sofa and seize a picture hanging on the wall.

"Just getting the room ready for you," Teddy said.

Bill apologized, removed Teddy, and accompanied him upstairs to one of the attics, where he said:

"Didn't I tell you, Ted, that room was to be left?"

"Silly of me," said Ted. "Now I come to think of it, you did. Without a doubt you did. Silly ass I am!"

Bill agreed, but was kind enough not to say so. The work proceeded. But on the evening of the following Monday Bill again found Teddy missing—from the drawing-room this time. He hunted. He ascended the stairs.

"Wanting me?" asked Teddy, not ten seconds after Bill had passed the landing outside Anne's room.

"Where did you get to?" demanded Bill. "What are you up to up here?"

"Up to? Me? How d'you mean?" asked Teddy, the picture of injured innocence. "Where did I get to? Only here. Taking a small breather, that's all. Drawing-room ceiling's very dirty Mr. Horne."

On Tuesday, Bill was hanging an ornate paper in Miss Agatha Turnbull's boudoir when a sudden uproar arose. It was the mayor's voice—bawling!

"Out you go this instant—neck and crop! The idea! The blinking insolence! Upstart! Out of my house!"

Bill let a length of pasty paper fall. Upstairs, stamping and loudly blowing, came the mayor.

"So there you are!" he roared, on catching sight of Bill. "Come out of there! Clear out of it, you and your traps! I cancel the contract—every line of it! Insolence! One of your men—"

"What's happened?" demanded Bill. Oblivious of the paper, he stepped forward.

The length, sticking to his knees, accompanied him. He bent and tore at it. Pieces stuck to his hands.

The mayor glowered. It was evident that fury was rapidly rendering him speechless.

"You bring a foul fellow into my house to insult my daughter," he belovied, "and then ask me what's happened! Think himself lucky I didn't fling him downstairs. And you, too, you—"

Miss Agatha Turnbull came, fluttering and flustered, and dragged her brother into the back room and shut the door. In vain. The door was burst open fifteen seconds later. Out shot the mayor and roared at Bill (still struggling with adherent pieces of wallpaper):

"Still there, are you? Didn't I tell you to get out?"

"You'd better go," said Miss Turnbull, as the mayor clattered downstairs. "Indeed you had!"

The mayor, apparently distrustful of his self-control, had disappeared when Bill arrived in the hall. A servant informed Bill that all his ladders, etc., were to be removed by noon. The melancholy Jack Abercrombie appeared with a pail of distemper.

"What's all this?" demanded Bill. "The youngster," said Jack hoarsely. "Caught kissin' the young lady. Heard it all. Wigs on the green."

In the road, by the tip-tilted handcart, stood Teddy. Eyeing him, Bill felt murderous. This was ruin.

"Sorry, Bill, old man," began Teddy, as Bill approached. "The old brute must have come creeping up as quietly as a snake. He—"

"Sorry my foot!" broke in Bill. "Snake be blowed! Can't a man go about his own house in any way he likes? You—you shut up till we get back!"

Teddy obeyed. The three loaded the handcart in silence. Down the road they pushed it.

"Kissin'," observed Jack gloomily—"kissin', they says, is wot got Adam and Eve fired out of Eden."

In the yard behind the shop Bill turned on Teddy.

"Now then," he said.

Canadian Heroes Immortalized

March brothers put finishing touches to one of figures which will adorn Canadian Memorial. They are shown at work in their Kent studio.

"She's so hauged pretty," said Teddy. "I simply couldn't help it!"

"Lying there helpless with a sprained ankle!" scoffed Bill. "Couldn't help it! Then you're a first-class example of the common-or-garden cad—that's all I've got to say!"

"Well, but I love her," said Teddy. "Listen, Bill. I've loved Anne for years. Ever since she was at the High School. I left Heyworth because of her. I've only come back because of her. I'm only trying to get a job here so as to be near her."

"You see, years ago, when we were quite kids, old Turnbull caught us. He hates me—said he'd never let me set foot in his house. So Anne and I met secretly in London twice a week. When I heard she'd sprained her ankle and was laid up, I felt simply desperate. Then I heard you'd got the job of doing the house up. So I put on my oldest suit—"

"You mean to say you only came down here and got me to take you on so as to—"

"Exactly. To sneak into the house—to ask Anne to marry me. And I have asked her. And she said 'Yes.' Old Turnbull didn't recognize me—not even just now. And I didn't dare tell him who I was. He's have had a fit. He loathes me—always has. Says I've no initiative or pluck. Bill, old boy—"

"You've ruined me!" burst in Bill. "I never meant anything like this to happen," said Teddy earnestly. "I'm frightfully sorry. I'd give anything to undo it all."

Their raised voices had brought Daphne to the back window. Bill stared at her. In some miraculous way the sight of her enabled him to stand in Teddy's shoes. If he had been forbidden to see her—

"Even the kiss, Ted?" he said, in queer tones. "Would you forgo that to undo it all?"

"I—I would, Bill!"

"Oh, well!" said Bill, with a sigh. "That's that, then. Give Jack a hand unloading."

Into the office he went. "Anything wrong?" Daphne asked nervously.

He sat down and told her. "Using you!" she exclaimed. "It wasn't fair!"

"All's fair in love, they say," he answered. "It wasn't fair my—my kissing you, either. I ought to have waited. This looks like the last straw. Turnbull's an influential man. He can put my shutters up for me—and he will. I know him. It's ruin!"

She went to him, drew down the cold fingers that ruffled his hair, held his hands wide apart, deliberately settled herself on his knees, and said:

"But halved. Say it's easier to bear now all your troubles are halved with me."

"You sweet!" cried Bill. "The door from the yard burst open."

"Bill—Oh, sorry! I say, frightfully sorry!" stammered Teddy. "But, Bill, Miss Turnbull's here. She's been talking to the mayor like a Dutch uncle! It's a miracle. She told him who I was, and why I'd done it, and how I was longing for a job down here. And he says what I did shows I've got initiative and pluck, and he's caved in! We're to be engaged, Bill, and old Turnbull's going to take me into his office!"

"You lucky dog!" cried Bill. "Seems to me," said Teddy, smiling, "you've a pretty charming slice of luck yourself. And, Bill—"

Behind Teddy, Jack Abercrombie's gaunt face appeared.

"Shall I start off, guv'nor?" he inquired. "Miss Turnbull says we're to get back on the job hinstanter!"

Fertilizer for Lawns

For many years bone meal has been used quite generally as a fertilizer for established lawns, but experiments have shown that a mixture of three parts of cottonseed meal and one part of ammonium sulphate gives much better results. This fertilizer should be applied in Spring and early Fall at the rate of twelve to fifteen pounds per 1,000 square feet.

"What! Asking for another hand-out. My good fellow, why don't you try to be a man? Can't you stand alone?"

"Well, I should say I could stand a loan. Anything from a nickel up, and you kin have my hat as security."

Smash and Grab

By M. N. Thomas

A thin drizzle of rain had begun to fall, making the business men and women who thronged the pavement quicker, their pace homeward. A large grey car drew up expertly at the curb and a well, but unostentatiously, dressed young man alighted.

He walked across the wet pavement to the jeweller's shop with the easy grace of the athlete. At the door he glanced over his shoulder at his companion in the car. Then his arm flew up and he hurled the parcel he had been carrying through the plate-glass window. In a flash his hand followed it. Before the startled pedestrians had collected their wits he was back in the car, which was speeding swiftly down the street.

Inside the shop a young assistant hurried forward. A crowd of curious faces round a jagged hole in the window met his as onished gaze. Rings and watches were scattered by the confusion caused by the passage of a neatly-tied parcel which now lay between two pairs of gold and tortoise-shell hair-brushes.

He went a shade paler when he realized that the diamond and emerald necklace which had been the centre of the window display was missing.

The manager, marvellously cool and suave even now, had to tell him twice to put the shutters up at once.

A new diversion for the rapidly growing crowd outside was caused by the arrival of a policeman.

"Smash-and-grab," nervously volunteered a little man in a large bowler.

"Now, then, Sherlock," replied some one.

"Could anyone identify the man?" sternly demanded the constable, who disapproved of such untimely levity.

A babel of voices rose in reply to his question. Comparative silence was restored eventually.

"Can anyone give a description of the car?" he asked, impatiently tapping his open note-book with a much-sucked pencil.

"Nivey bloo."

"Purple."

"A Rolls, sure."

"Black as sin."

The constable, feeling matters were getting beyond his control, threw back his cape with a magnificent gesture, ordered the crowd to disperse, and strode into the shop.

The young man in the car was wrapping a handkerchief round his bleeding wrist. After turning the first corner his companion had slowed down to a more normal rate. Suspicious speed was the last thing desired.

"We're well away," the young man almost pleaded.

"Sure thing," replied the other. "D'you think they got our number?"

"Doesn't matter much if they did, old son," reassured the elder, "for it isn't the real one."

"Still, it might save trouble."

The driver laughed. "By the time they get this number circulated we'll have abandoned the bus and it will probably be restored to its right and lawful owner, the only person temporarily inconvenienced. By George," he added, "I envy him—she runs like clockwork."

"Yes," agreed the young man, frowning at his inability to tie a knot with his left hand and teeth. "I say, I'm going to take a rest for a bit if we pull this off."

"We have pulled it off, my boy."

The young man smiled a little self-consciously as he said: "You know, I got the breeze up tugging it back to the car. It seemed like miles across that pavement."

For a time neither spoke, and the car glided smoothly along the brightly lit streets. If anyone took the trouble to consider them at all they could have dismissed them from their minds as an ordinary business man and his son driving back to their suburban home. Only a typist, standing under a cotton umbrella waiting for a bus, gave them a second thought when a passing light illuminated the young man's face. He looked, she thought, just like her favorite actor.

The elder man found the continued silence of his companion awkward. He jerked his head towards some newsboys standing with their apron-like bills and crying out: "Orrible City murder! 'Orrible City murder!"

"I wonder how soon it'll be before they change it to 'Daring Smash-and-Grab Raid'—eh?" he queried.

"Not till to-morrow, I hope," the other replied, fervently.

They had now passed through the busiest part of their journey and were making for a certain quiet side street where they intended "permanently parking" the car.

"Not long now, old son," the driver said gently.

The young man did not make a very good job of smiling back at him. Then suddenly he started, and something like a moan escaped from between his lips as a policeman's arm was raised at a crossing and the two streams of traffic at right angles to them gained precedence.

"Steady on old man," cautioned his companion.

A Chrysler slid up beside them. Its driver was apparently in a hurry, for he protested vigorously at the delay by sounding his horn so repeatedly that the policeman turned his head and glared at them. Apparently to show his independence, he decided to keep them waiting a little longer. The light from a shop window caused the sweat on the young man's brow to glisten.

Then the policeman did a strange and sinister thing. For no obvious reason he blew an agitated blast on his whistle. All traffic stopped. Drivers of limousines, buses, taxis, vans, lorries, and coupes looked guiltily at the massive figure in blue to see if they had unwittingly committed the offence that had caused this blast. But the policeman was looking at none of them. He was watching two other constables who were threading their way across the street towards him.

"Make a dash for it," the young man whispered unsteadily, but even as he spoke the traffic at right angles commenced to move, barring their way.

"Don't be a fool," the driver snapped out, suddenly irascible. "I tell you they'll barely have had time to get news of it through to the Yard—far less advise every cook cuddled on point duty."

The three policemen held a hurried consultation, nodding sagely to each other, and the next moment a detaining hand was placed on the stolen car, while another policeman stood on guard over the Chrysler.

"What the devil—" they heard the driver of the Chrysler exclaim, indignantly.

The policeman on point duty edged his way between the two cars and stood looking slowly from one driver to the other as though trying to determine which was the guilty one.

"Now, then," he said severely at last, "ow is it you two cars 'appen to have the same registration number?"

—Tit-Bits.

Out of Doors

I'm sick of walls of stone and brick. They seem so cramping and so thick! Let's pack a bag and get away. And leave the walls and ceilings gray.

We'll have, instead, the trunks of trees. What better walls indeed, than these? The bushes and the heather hills. The little gleams and laughing rills.

We'll have a carpet 'neath our feet Of giving turf or bracken sweet, Or crunching sand beside the sea—These are the floors for you and me!

We'll make a ceiling of the sky—What matters if the clouds are nigh? I like them more than plaster white, If you, my dear, share my delight.

So let us go, and let's be quick! I don't like walls of stone and brick! I don't like ceilings so, nor floors, I want to be with you, out-of-doors! —A. M. F. in "Answers."

Towering Masts

What is the highest mast ever carried by a ship? The question has arisen because Shamrock V's mast—162 feet high—is the tallest on record for a racing yacht.

As a matter of fact, it is quite a tall mast for any ship. A usual height for the mainmast of a big sailer was about 150 feet from deck to truck. The truck is the wooden disc at the top of the mast.

Perhaps the highest mast ever known was that of the Harbinger, which was about 200 feet from deck to truck. It was one of the British clippers. An American ship, the May Flint, has also been described as the loftiest ship, but it is doubtful if it was really any taller than the Harbinger.

Sir George H. Perley is Again the Unanimous Choice

R. S. White and R. L. Calder, K.C., former Political Opponents, Pledge support for Bennett

It was indeed a most enthusiastic gathering of people, in which all sections of the county were well represented, that met in the Lachute Auditorium on Friday last, and unanimously tendered the nomination to Sir George Perley to again contest this riding in the Conservative interests.

The chair was occupied by Col. J.
E. Seale and Notary J. F. Lavigne, who called the convention together and asked for nominations. The name of Sir George Perley was proposed by Mr. Albert Lamarche, President of the Farmers' Club of St.
Philippe, and seconded by Mr. John T. Ayers and it was unanimously received.

Sir George first thanked the electors in French, declaring that it was hardly necessary for him to express his sincere appreciation of the continued confidence of the people in him, and assuring them that he would always strive to live up to the honor accorded him. He saw victory for the Conservative Party on July 28, declaring the tide was running the Conservative way with general recognition throughout Canada that the Hon. Mr. Bennett would be the next Premier.

He recalled how he had been associated with the growth of the county for many years, and reminisced of the days when, in 1902
he first ran against Tom Christie, was beaten, but defeated him in 1906. Today, Mr. Christie was one of his strongest friends, he said, adding that he not only counted the Conservatives and those who voted for him as friends today, but also many liberals who, though they did not vote for him, were sincere in their friendship. He paid tribute to his leader the Hon. R. B. Bennett, declaring that Canada never had a leader better equipped for the job he had undertaken than the popular "R.B." and he had earned the honor and respect of all, not only for his great ability, eloquence and knowledge as a business man, but also for his great sincerity.

The Conservative leader's battle cry was "Canada first," he said, and Mr. Bennett's was fighting to see that she came first. Such a policy was his, Sir George stated a policy that assured Canadians of justice and protection as well as amelioration of the country's economic ills, such as unemployment and the emigration of so many Canadians to foreign lands. Mr. White expressed his appreciation at seeing his old political foe "Bob" Calder, on the platform with him, recalling that he was his opponent five years ago in Mount Royal, and that he had felt his steel more than once and, with some success, had parried his thrusts.
It was an encouragement not only to the Conservative Party but to every man and woman in Canada to find men of the ability and independence of Mr. Calder associating themselves with the Conservative Party, he said.

Mr. White reviewed outstanding questions on which the support of the people is requested by the present Government, first touching upon the recent legislation establishing a bill prohibiting the granting of clearance papers to vessels bound for the United States, with cargoes of liquor. He approved of this measure, which disassociates the Government from such business, but declared that the measure did not stop liquor smuggling from Canada, but merely changes the route.

Mr. King tried to make a great moral issue out of this, Mr. White said, despite the Hon. Mr. Euler's assertion that it would be unwise and ineffectual for the Canadian Government and Parliament to put a stop to this practice. Later, the commission that dealt with the customs scandals, recommended that such a measure be adopted. Furthermore, a royal commission was appointed and the same recommendation made, but the Government did not act and it was only this year, Mr. White said, that Mr. King had the courage to terminate what he was wont to describe as a menace to the friendly relations between Canada and a disgrace to the Canadian Government.

The presence of Mr. R. L. Calder, K.C. on the platform with Sir George was the cause of much surprise and general satisfaction when he gave his reasons in now opposing Premier King, for his fight was against the attitude of the Premier in regard to national affairs.

Three things in particular—all of which he declared, were a disgrace to the Liberal Government—led him to turn against his old party and chief, and denounce both. These were: First, the raising up of old prejudices in the present campaign, especially in Quebec, by the Liberal Government, including such ridiculous boogies as conscription and Imperialism; second, Mr. King's uncalled for "five cent speech," when he declared that he would not give five cents to any Tory Government to help the unemployed, and, third, the way in which the Liberal Government evaded the Beauharnois Power Corporation question.

"It is a wonder that we, as honest citizens and, above all, Canadians, with the welfare of our country at heart, should tolerate the disgraceful doings of the Liberal Prime Minister and his Government," Mr.
Calder said. As he delivered his address, he stood near R. S. White ex-M.P. for Mount Royal, his old political opponent.

CHANGE NOT WRONG

He first stressed that if Canada was a more democratic country, his action in abandoning the ranks of the Liberal party, joining up with the Conservative party, and supporting its policies and program, the while he denounced those of his old party, would not be criticized, nor would he be condemned as a traitor and a renegade by the Liberals. In England many great statesmen, including Lord Balfour and Winston Churchill had deserted one party for another during a lifetime of politics, and had done so because they thought it best. Their action excited no unfavorable wave of criticism. It was understood that they were doing so after having independently thought over the situation, and considered which party had the best programme for the country's welfare and prosperity. As had British statesmen, so had he. Mr. Calder said and today he was with the Conservative party because he was of the firm belief that their policies and program favored Canada, whereas the policies and programme of the Liberal party —past and present—were not in Canada's favor, and offered nothing constructive to bring a stop to the present economic depression and ills, including unemployment, adverse trade balances, etc.

"I have made the change fearlessly," Mr. Calder emphasized, "and as an independent-thinking Canadian citizen who desires above all, to see a Canadian government with Canada's interests at heart."

He had been a Conservative until 1904, he admitted. Then, as he had now, he had changed and embraced Liberal policies because he thought they were the best for Canada at the time, and he was sure that he had acted as wisely then as he had acted wisely now. After having run as Liberal candidate in Mount Royal in 1928, he had made the resolution to remain inactive in politics, but now, for certain developed tendencies, not so much on the part of the Liberal party as on Mr. King's part, he was active again, and he was nauseated at three things which, he declared, demonstrated clearly Mr. King's stand as regards Canada and her welfare.

The present campaign conducted by the Liberals under Premier King was one of shameful prejudices and boogies. Mr. Calder held, particularly in Quebec, where the Liberal ministers, especially the Hon. Fernand Rinfret, Secretary of State, were getting away from the principal questions of the day and grossly insulting their opponents. The conscription bogey was being raised
"If you vote for Sir George Perley your sons will have to go to India and fight!" the Liberals cried. And, furthermore, the Secretary was wont to cry out that the main question before the electorate was as to who will represent Canada at the Imperial Conference. If you elect Premier King and the Liberal Government, they will go to London and obtain for the Dominion greater autonomy, they cry, adding that if Mr.
Bennett and the Conservatives went into power, Canada would be reduced to the status of the old colonial regime. And King accentuates these preposterous utterances by warning the electorate that Canada's status was greatly endangered by the Conservative imperialistic policy.

"Ridiculous! Shameful! Such did Mr. Calder label these boogies, and he expressed wonder that any intelligent, independent, thinking Canadian citizen would believe them.

This endangered autonomy bogey of Mr. King's is nauseating. Mr.
Calder said, particularly in view of the fact that Canada never will be in danger of losing her autonomy.
For what autonomy she has, the credit cannot go to Mr. King who makes of it a play which he always cherishes, especially at election time.
It is King's continentalism and lack of Canadianism that is behind it, and this continentalism is nauseating. He is always afraid that some minion from Downing street will bludgeon him and rob him of what little autonomy he has given Canada. And it is strange yet true that we find him begging on his knees

whenever Uncle Sam whistles loud enough.

"There is no fear of any Canadian Government going to London and sacrificing one iota of Canada's autonomy," Mr. Calder said, to the rousing cheers of the audience.
"These are the bogey politics of King alone, and he is always springing them at election time. All of Canada's great premiers of the past —premiers both Conservatives and Liberal—have been autonomists, striving tirelessly and endlessly to secure greater and greater freedom and autonomy for the Dominion, and they always have and always will adhere to the line of Canadian autonomy given us by Kipling—'Daughter am I in my Mother's house, but mistress in my own.'"

Mr. Calder soundly flayed the Premier for his "five cent speech" declaring that Mr. King, confronted by the awful spectacles of thousands of suffering and miserable unemployed workers in Canada seeking relief, turned his head and told them he would not give them five cents unless he knew how they voted in 1926.
This was a gross insult to Canadian citizens, Mr. Calder said, and one they should not forget. It was a most disgusting and shameful statement to make, and one that serves to show up the Premier in the light of one who would give no relief to any elector who had cast a Conservative vote.

In the Beauharnois Power Corporation project, the King Government, and especially the Premier showed marked apathy towards the whole affair, Mr. Calder charged, stating that the fact that it was permitted to proceed without a signed order-in-council, and with only the permission of the House of Commons, showed that the Government was not acting in the best interests of Canada. The corporation, he alleged, was going over the development of a limited amount of horse power, and when the Conservative leader had brought the question up in the House, the Government had evaded explanations. The entire project, as well as the charter, should be investigated, he said, whether it hurts Liberals or Conservatives.

It was for these and the general reason that the Government had not the best interests of Canada at heart, that he deserted the Liberal party, Mr. Calder said, affirming that the policies and constructive programme for the development and welfare of the Dominion and its peoples, as laid down by the Hon.
R. B. Bennett, for the Conservative party, would in a great way, enable the Dominion to recover from her numerous economic ills of the present and continue on her march to greater development and prosperity.

Mrs. Mills was thrifty!

She would dearly like to talk to her mother back home, as her friend told her she was doing every week, but think of the expense—

She was astonished when she learned that a call for the distant number during the day would cost only 60 cents, and after 7 p.m. only half a dollar.

She actually made her call after 8.30 and it cost her only 35 cents — the night rate!

Now the weekly 3-minute talk with her mother is a regular thing. And what a joy it is both to Mrs. Mills and her mother. Both declare it is almost as good as a visit!

Many people are like Mrs. Mills — they think long distance expensive!

Just run over the rates quoted in the opening pages of your telephone book — especially those for "Anyone" (station-to-station) calls during the evening and night periods! It will convince you.

A KEENER FOLLOWING.

Prospects for the success of the Conservative party at the polls never looked brighter than they are now, according to competent observers, who believe that the appeal made to the voters of the West by Hon. R. B. Bennett has done a tremendous amount of good.

Wherever the Conservative leader showed himself on his Western trip he was received with a great deal of enthusiasm; an enthusiasm which not only was personal because Hon. R. B. Bennett has long been a Westerner himself, but was largely caused by the fact that he brought a message of hope to the new west which has developed in the past war years.

Protection is not longer a bugbear in the West. Cities there are becoming industrialized. Farmers are interested in providing employment for those sons and daughters who will not stay on the land. The value of protection has been brought home to them by the blunders of the Mackenzie King government in the New Zealand butter preference which has resulted in losses amounting to millions of dollars to the dubbing western dairy industry. A British preference scheme such as outlined by Hon. R. B. Bennett, involving a British preference for Canadian wheat is much more to the farmer's liking than the one-sided proposals of Mackenzie King.

Something of the feeling was shown in Saskatchewan last year, when the Liberal provincial government was swept out of power. Something of it was shown in the provincial election in Alberta, last week when three Conservative members were elected for Edmonton, Progressive Liberals and Labor getting only one seat apiece.

There are changes coming about in the West.

Conservative faith in victory has also been upheld in New Brunswick through the return of the Baxter government with an overwhelming majority, in spite of the fact that the Federal party threw its full weight into the campaign.

Voters of the New Brunswick remembered that the Duncan report has been only partially implemented so far and that the Liberal government has been most regrettably dilatory in dealing with the just grievances of the maritimes.

There are many factors working against Mackenzie King, and not the least of these is the natural resentment caused by his disregard of the unemployment problem which even yet exists in Canada.

Again and again has it been made manifest that the Canadian worker is hotly resentful of the Prime Minister's vicious partisanship as shown in his infamous "not a five cent piece for unemployed in Conservative provinces" speech.

In his public speeches since the election campaign started Mackenzie King has insisted that Canada is prosperous. He has once or twice admitted that there might be a "slight" depression, but he has waved it away as something very temporary and not worthy of his notice.

His stand is in marked contrast to that of Hon. R. B. Bennett who has recognized federal responsibility in dealing with unemployment problems and at Winnipeg promised that a special session of parliament shall be held to deal with subject immediately after the Conservatives have been elected to power.

The working man of Canada whose family was close to starvation during the past winter and spring, while Mackenzie King ignored his appeals for aid and assured him that employment figures for Canada were higher than ever, will remember this when he goes to the polls.

Universal Brand Salt

As white as Snow.
As pure as Crystal

Universal Brand Salt is the purest German Mined Salt obtainable. The instant you open the bag its snowy whiteness will reveal to you its superior quality over the common damp sandy colored salt from inferior mines. For salting meats, etc. Its flavour will add greatly to the taste and its greater strength will keep them much better and longer. Its purity recommends it as the ideal salt for cattle and grain.

Ask for and insist on Universal Brand and be assured of the best.

A new queen of the Pacific will pay homage August 24 to a former Empress of the seas when the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Japan, new 26,000 ton flagship of the company's Pacific fleet, steams through the Narrows to receive Vancouver's vociferous applause. Just before reaching Brockton Point the new Empress, gay with flags and bunting, will dip her ensign to the dragon-carved figure-head which rests on its pedestal in Stanley Park overlooking the waters of Burrard Inlet. The figure-head is that of the old Empress of Japan, scrapped and sold in 1922 after 31 years of service between Canada and the Orient.

Impressively simple ceremonies were held at Fort William recently for the late F. E. Trautman, for the past 18 years Canadian Pacific Press representative in Western Canada. He was buried in the city where a large part of his career as a pioneer western newspaperman was passed as editor of the Fort William Times-Journal. The cities of Port Arthur and Fort William were officially represented as was also the railway company while a large number of private citizens paid their last respects.

S.S. Princess Joan, new 5,000-ton steamer of the Canadian Pacific Railway's British Columbia coast fleet, became a floating hotel at Vancouver recently when 425 members of the Grand Masonic Lodge of British Columbia swarmed aboard for their 59th annual convention at Powell River.

The Algonquin Hotel at St. Andrews-by-the-Sea, has opened ahead of its usual time with three conventions booked prior to the official opening of the St. Andrews season the last week in June.

Fifteen years ago the average hen in Canada laid 50 eggs annually, according to Professor E. A. Lloyd of British Columbia. This number has now grown to 70. From extra eggs alone, Canada has produced an increased revenue of more than $200,000,000.

Nearly one billion dollars was invested in central electric power stations in Canada at the end of 1929, or $956,919,603 to be exact, according to an official report issued by the Canadian Government Bureau of Statistics. This is twice the amount of the investment in this industry in 1920 and over $90,000,000 more than the total in 1927.

At the fourth World's Poultry Congress to be held at the Crystal Palace, London, July 22-30, Canada will have a total of 853 birds in competitive entries, also 453 exhibition birds and 244 production birds. Exhibits of ducks, geese, pigeons, and rabbits will also be there from the Dominion. Birds from the ranch of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales at Pekisko, near High River, Alta., will be among the many interesting exhibits.

The first four months of the current year saw 503 homesteads filed upon in western Canada than during the same period last year. The increase was furnished almost entirely by Alberta, though British Columbia showed a small gain.

Dr. Sutherland, of L'Orignal was taking pictures of heron's nests on Isle aux Chats on Monday. We understand that these birds, without permission from the Canadian government have established a "sanctuary" for the heron family there. The ruggedness of the county and the density of the cedars on Isle aux Chats afford a good protection from intruders. Dr. Sutherland makes a special study of birds and their habits.

DOMINION DAY

Once again Dominion Day has come and gone. Our national birthday! To many of us just another holiday; to the true Canadian another milestone in the nation's progress. There is perhaps much less of the exuberance & fervour in Canadians in regard to Dominion Day than our American cousins across the border display in their celebration of their Independence Day. In their case, they celebrate what they regard as deliverance from oppression and the securing of freedom. While Canada had many political problems that were solved by the conferring of Dominion status, there were nevertheless not the same conditions that-irked the American Colonists. Hence Canada remained within the Empire and secured a larger freedom without secession.

Since the granting of Dominion status, Canada has seen the borders of her freedom steadily enlarging, her status yearly more clearly defined, and her stature constantly growing. Today, this Dominion stands in a position of equality both with the Motherland and the rest of the Dominions, but with added prestige over the latter in that this country is the oldest of His Majesty's Overseas Dominions. In a fuller and true sense than when Kipling coined his immortal phrase, Canada can say: "Daughter am I in my mother's house, but mistress in my own." It does not detract one iota from Canada's loyalty to the Motherland that we now possess equality of status. Rather is it the case that the ties that bind us to the stock from which we sprang, though still "slender as gossamer," as Joseph Chamberlain said, are stronger for the wider liberty and greater powers we have obtained.

Dominion Day should be a time for taking stock of ourselves as individual Canadians, a time for each of us asking ourselves the question, "What am I doing by my life to make this country of mine a better country, a more prosperous country, and a more enduring country?" If our answer to that question should stimulate us to be better Canadians, to do more to build up a bigger and better Canada, and to hand down to our children a richer heritage than we ourselves obtained, then we shall not have lived in vain. It is not only "In Flanders Fields" that we take up the torch that others lay down. It is in the ways of peace and industry and nation-building that we must carry ever the torch of progress. A heart-to-heart talk with ourselves at this time about our duty to Canada will help us make Dominion Day a factor of greatest importance in our lives. This dear land is worthy of all we can give it; it is our own land; our homeland; it is the land where our children and our children's children will have their being when we are at rest beneath its sod. Surely here is incentive enough for us to be good Canadians.

GOODYEARS ONLY

Here's the Reason

WE know this. For years we've watched every make of tire in actual service. We've seen what it gives for its cost.

Our policy of selling only Goodyears is based on such experience. We've proved time after time that Goodyears give longest, most satisfactory mileage. We've proved the stamina of Goodyear Supertwist Cords and the great traction of the All-Weather Tread.

We make a smaller single profit on Goodyear Tires. But we gain through their quality selling more tires. And the complete Goodyear line gives us a tire and also for the particular need of every customer.

L. L. Legault, K.C., is Choice of Liberal Convention

Hon. P. J. A. Cardin Makes Strong Plea for Government Support

From the turn out at the Liberal Convention last Saturday afternoon, there is evidence that a big fight is on in the County. The fact that Mr. Legault received the nomination was a foregone conclusion and although he has twice suffered defeat in his effort to attain a seat in the House of Commons at Ottawa, he unhesitatingly gave his sanction.

A meeting was first held in the Court House at which the delegates and others gathered at 1.30. Mr. David Black was elected Chairman and Mr. W. George Rodger officiated as Secretary. Mr. C. F. Cains of Cushing was desirous that the minutes of the Association be read and the business of the meeting should be conducted in a business-like way. Insistent cries of "sit down" and "put him out" brought response of defiance, the meeting being held up for quite a few minutes and it was only when a motion was made by Mr. McKay of St. Andrews to dispense with the minutes and proceed with the business for which the convention was called, that order was restored.

Mr. Legault's name was then placed in nomination as also was Mr. Fortin's and the delegates retired upstairs to ballot for their choice of a candidate. Brief addresses were delivered by both Mr. Legault and Mr. Fortin, the former thanking the meeting for its confidence and the latter asserting that Mr. Legault should retire from the race because of his two previous defeats. The scrutineers then arrived and reported 108 ballots for Mr. Legault, 3 for Mr. Fortin and 2 blank ballots.

There was an immediate adjournment to the Auditorium for the discussion of political affairs by the candidate, the Hon. P. J. A. Cardin, Minister of Marine and others. Mr. Tanner was to have been present, but in consequence of his absence the Hon. Mr. Cardin put up an eloquent appeal in both English and French, for Mr. Legault, stating that his previous defeats were the result of slight trouble in the ranks, but now he was glad to report that their differences had been overcome and there was perfect unanimity in the party.

Mr. Cardin stated that the King Government was sure of victory and its wonderful administration since 1921 could only obtain the greater number of votes. Alluding to the King Government's impartiality and justice to all creeds, nationalities and languages, Mr. Cardin emphasized the fact that when one doctrine was preached in one section of the country, the same doctrine and principles were advocated in other districts. The Liberal's attitude in the past had always been fair and honest and their policy would be continued.

"Great questions are being referred to in this campaign," Mr. Cardin said, "but consideration must always be given to the financial standing of our country. Many side issues are being brought up at the present moment. Generalities are being given publicity. Conservative speakers and candidates are drawing particular attention to unimportant questions. But as in a commercial enterprise the same questions must be asked: What is the financial standing, what are the prospects? If a balance is found at the end of the year, then prosperity has knocked at the door, but if the opposite exists, then the country needs a change."

REDUCTION OF DEBT.

Upholding the reduction of the debt during the last seven years as one of the soundest proofs of the Liberal Government's skill, Mr. Cardin said that taxes are more convincing than promises. Liberals in other Federal campaigns promised reduction of the debt and the party had succeeded in its difficult task. As to Conservatives their campaign was based on an indefinite and unending series of "Santa Claus" promises, he declared.

Parliament had faced great problems during its last administration. Enormous amounts had to be provided for the payment of war debts and interest. Out of every dollar received by the Canadian Government, 40 cents was used for this purpose and the remainder was used for the development of trade, commerce and natural resources.

The Mackenzie King Government deserved the unconditional support of the electorate, Mr. Cardin declared. It had been true to the pledges it put before the people in 1921, he claimed, and had followed progressive policies and had a clean record. It is not a class or group Government, favoring one section to the detriment of another, but an administration which governs for all Canadians with the purpose of bringing peace, happiness and prosperity to the country.

Mr. Cardin ridiculed the Opposition's cry of "protect our industries." He compared the policy of protection to the advertisements of herb healers and quacks, who claimed their products were a panacea for all ills. Comparing Liberal and Conservative regimes since Confederation, the Minister asked his hearers to judge for themselves which party had made the most progress in all fields of activity, whether political or economic.

Today Canada is more developed than any other country of the same population, because of its wealth of natural resources, the spirit of wealth and enterprise of its people and its determination to forge ahead despite a world-wide economic crisis.

FLEXIBLE POLICY

A flexible policy was followed by the Liberal Government in tariff matters the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said. This policy was, he declared, capable of being adjusted so that it would meet the changing conditions of the present time.

Before concluding, Mr. Cardin appealed to the electors to rise up as one man and vote for Mackenzie King Government which had done so much to establish the Dominion on the progress and prosperity.

Other short addresses were delivered by Mr. Geo. Dansereau, M.L.A., of Grenville, Mr. Plante of Montreal, and the candidate Mr. L. L. Legault.

"The Bridal Home"

Why is it that so many of the daughters are not marrying these days, and so many young men are putting off the honeymoon, until they get the cold habit of bachelorhood? Is it not that we have placed a wrong value upon some of our ideals; have failed to put first things first, have weighed money and worldly success above the sweet old sentiment of home love and family partnership and character building?

Too many girls feel that they must begin housekeeping where their parents leave off. The young man who cannot provide this feels that he dare not ask a girl to step down to a lower economic level, since so much importance is attached to what money can buy; and how can he, in youth, provide such a home and such standards as it has taken the elders a life time to build up?

Would it not make for happier homes, for better citizenship, and for even better worldly success in later years if our young folks were willing to buckle down to "hard pan"—what ever that is—and begin at the bottom of the ladder, as we parents did so long ago we have almost forgotten it? We should not spoil it all by pitying them if they have to make material sacrifices. How happy we were in those days, when our parents were worrying about us because we were at the bottom of the ladder.

It is largely a matter of mental attitude. They will not suffer hunger nor cold nor actual want, and if we only could magnify sentiment and romance and adventure and industry and economy and character and the worth while things of life, how much more happily might our young people build for the future and in homes of their own, with a lovely family growing up around them to be their joy and comfort in later years, just as you and I did.

Foot Viger

An elastic step is not only a beauty and grace asset, but foot health is necessary for efficiency in most lines of work. Poorly fitting and inappropriate shoes are the cause of great sorrow to the human race, as well as a lot of inefficiency and waste.

Shoes too short, too small, too narrow, are sometimes worn "because there is still some wear in them, and they cripple the feet, cause bone deformity, deprive one of joy in walking and sports or other active enterprises, disqualify one for military training, cause much pain, perhaps, and a lack of success.

Shoes with very high heels throw the body out of line, make one's neck, and affect the spine. Children should not be taught to walk with the feet turned out, as that leads to weak feet and flat foot.

If you have foot trouble, consult a reliable foot doctor. The wearing of proper shoes is one of the best remedies for sick feet. Cleanliness plays an important part, and exercise helps. The proper shoe is low at the heel, broad at the toe, straight on the inside line and as flexible as the foot. Stockings also should be properly fitting and not too short.

Featherweight Wool

Wool Chiffons, so sheer they could almost be used for veils, and wool pique are among the new fabrics. Reducing hose not been confined to the figure, during the past decade, but the summer girl may still go clothed in two pounds, or less, of clothes, though she be frocked in woolsens.

Woolens worn at the time of the hobble skirt, weighed from ten to fourteen ounces per yard. The heavier weights, if seven ounces may be called heavy, are the tweeds and broadcloths. Challis, voiles, flannels, kas has and light weight tweeds run from three to five ounces to the yard.

Gloves

The tendency for gloves this season is to contrast with the coat or gown rather than to harmonize with it. Black and white are favorite colors. White gloves, or ivory, are worn with the black costume. Most gloves are of very light shades and even the kids are washable. Green, blue and red gloves will be worn to add a vivid touch to a sombre outfit.

Large slip-on gloves, which come nearly to the elbow, are worn with summer dresses. They are not stretched full length but are crushed at the wrist, or the wrist may have an elastic in it to shir it slightly, or it may flare gauntlet-wise. Chamoles and doe-skin pull-on gloves are worn for sports.

Cocoonat Tapioca

Heat a quart of milk and add to it a half cup of minute tapioca. Simmer this until the tapioca is clear, about ten minutes. Watch it carefully that it does not burn, or you may cook it fifteen minutes in a double boiler. Add the beaten yolks of four eggs, two tablespoons of sugar and a cup of shredded cocoonat; and cook a minute longer until the eggs have thickened the mixture a bit. Then remove from the fire and add a quarter teaspoon of vanilla and half the stiffly beaten white of the eggs, to make the tapioca creamy. To the other half of the beaten eggs, add two tablespoons of sugar, and a little vanilla. Spread it on top of the pudding and bake in an oven until the meringue is browned.

Trinkets

Little lace sets add a touch of spring to the costume. They are composed of frivolous cuffs and a collar that ties.

Half! milady may call to that run in her stocking, as she takes from her handbag a small bottle of a liquid she carries on purpose for that emergency and drops one tiny drop on the spot which had begun to wel. The run stops instantly and the fabric is not injured.

The traveler may now carry along a small flat iron and a tablet which will keep it hot for half an hour. A bottle of the tablets costs only fifty cents.

Savory Meat Loaf

Brown in fat a pound of hamburger, or ground pork or veal. If you use veal, you will have more flavor if you also use bacon fat. To the browned meat, add two cups chopped celery, one small minced onion, a tablespoon of salt, pepper to taste, and a dash of red pepper, if you wish. Cover this and cook ten minutes. Then add two beaten eggs, one cup tomato juice and one cup cracker crumbs, and bake in an oven for half an hour. This will make a savory meat loaf which will not need sauces to accompany it.

Cheese Salad

Cheese is rich in vitamins, highly nutritious, requires no cooking, is easily and quickly prepared and is delicious. Try this cheese salad: Make a base of water cress or shredded lettuce; arrange like spokes of a wheel four thin strips of cheese about an inch wide; and spread the cheese strips lightly with mustard. On one strip spread chopped hard-boiled egg-white mixed with salad dressing, on the next spread chopped egg yolk mixed with the dressing, on the third, chopped olive, and on the fourth just a wee bit of grated onion.

Soap Bark

To wash very delicate fabrics, try soap bark. It may be purchased in the form of chips, powder or long, flat pieces. Pour hot water over it and extract the soapy element. The resulting solution will be leather-forming and is very mild in its action. Soap bark is probably the most valuable soap substitute.

Tea Stains

If tea is spilled on your fine tablecloth it may leave a stain which will never come out. To prevent this, immerse the spotted linen in fairly strong ammonia water and then wash in the usual way.

Darby and Joan Tour Continent

Brighton, Eng.—England's real Darby and Joan have started a tour of the Continent on tricycle and afoot.

When the pedaling becomes a bit strenuous, especially on the up-grades, Worrall pushes the tricycle. His wife never alights except for meals and sleep.

Rat and Snake in Death Battle

London—A woodman was the only spectator of a duel to the death in Piper's Wood, Amersham, Bucks, recently.

The duellists were a rat and a snake. Both were killed. The snake had twisted its body round that of the rat, and when it saw the woodman it tried to escape. The infuriated rat pursued it and gave it a fatal bite. Then the rat collapsed and died.

On the Bowery

How New York Handles Her Unemployed, Beggars and Tramps

Bruce Bliven, an Editor of "The New Republic."

It seems too cold to rain; but it isn't. A bad night to be out, even if you are well shod and warmly clothed; and most of the men lounging along the Bowery, with the L trains rumbling overhead, are neither. Their shoes are broken, and perhaps only two in five of the mhave an overcoat of some sort, an overcoat too large or too small, or with the buttons missing so that it has to be held together with one hand, as the great ladies hold their fur wraps.

You turn a corner, and here is a surprising spectacle. There is a line of men, three or sometimes four abreast wedged tightly together. For this compactness there is a reason: those at the head of this human snake will eat to-night; those further back probably won't.

A block away, the line tails off around a corner; follow it, and there is another block's length, and beyond that, another. At the very end is a pitiful spectacle. The charity on which the line depends is not unlimited, and so, when about as many men have lined up as can be handled, two policemen stand behind them, facing the other way. Necessarily, they are obdurate, but the late comers can never quite believe this, and so they line up anyhow, ten or twelve feet from the officers. There are several hundred men in this extra line, none of whom, it is certain, will get anything to eat.

What do they get, if they get it? They get food tickets worth a nickel each, and cashable only at the Y.M.C.A. cafeteria nearby. A lucky individual may get four or five or them. An unlucky one may get only two or three. This distribution is the work of private charity. For several winters a certain young woman has been handing out these tickets Mondays and Thursdays; they are costing her $1200 or $1400 a week of her own and other people's money, and God knows what the Bowery would be without her.

Many of those who get her tickets will have to wait in a second line from one to three hours before they can get into the Y.M.C.A.'s big cafeteria to eat.

eat. Here good food is served at minimum prices—most dishes are five cents, and the rest ten. Coffee and stew is the favorite combination; with every cup of coffee go three big slices of bread. No one loiters at table; through the basement windows you can see the feet of a hundred other hungry men waiting their turn.

This is but one line of several on the Bowery. Let us look at another of these lines, one of the most important. It is the line waiting to get into the Municipal Lodging House, conducted by the New York City Department of Public Welfare. In February, 1100 men sought its shelter every night, on the average. This is an increase of 45 per cent. over a year ago, and of 53 per cent. over 1923. No individual may spend more than five nights in the Lodging House in any one month; the actual number of men cared for during the first two months of 1934 was 13,913.

Every man who secures admission receives a cup of coffee (in a tin cup, boiling hot), a big dish of stew (beef to-night and lamb to-morrow)—and as much graham bread as he can eat. Anyone capable of consuming a second helping of stew is welcome to it. After supper, they are registered and check their valuables (if by a miracle somebody turned up with three dollars he would be refused admission). Every man hands in all his clothing, to be fumigated during the night and returned to him in the morning. Every man gets a shower bath—compulsory; a clean white nightshirt, and a medical examination. If he needs a doctor's care, he is sent over to Bellevue Hospital; otherwise, he gets a bed in a room with several hundred other men, where he sleeps about 11 hours; and so would you, if you had tramped the streets from dawn to dark and had just had a big hot meal, perhaps your first in several days. In the morning they are given a hot breakfast, and sent on their way. Their only payment is the humiliation of accepting charity.

For many of them, of course, that is no payment at all. They don't mind being "pauperized." But there are others who pay dearly. This winter differs from previous ones in that exceptionally high number of men who have never before had this sort of experience, for whom it is a personal tragedy too deep for words. As Mr. Joseph Mannix, the brisk, enthusiastic and friendly young guardian of all these lost souls will tell you, there are professional men in the line nowadays—teachers, musicians (many of these), doctors, pharmacists, lawyers, expert accountants.

"Don't scatter your sympathy too indiscriminately. Many of these men have a little money but are saving it. Many others are unemployable—just bums; some of these panhandle for a few nickels and spend them on 'smoke'—vile raw alcohol. Others are psychopaths, but not violent enough to be locked up.

"Many others, however, are good workmen who are genuinely unemployed and in great distress. Plenty of the are white-collar men, bookkeepers, clerks, and the like. All they need is a chance to get on their feet, and then they are all right."

The service of the Municipal Lodging House, as I have said, is free. Other organizations usually charge for their services a sum which may or may not cover its cost. The Y.M.C.A., for example, charges for its room and meals, but no hungry man is turned away for lack of money. An account is opened for him, and he pays when he can. Something like 65 or 70 per cent. of the sums thus advanced are ultimately repaid.

Before we say good night, Mr. Mannix has something else to show us. We go down to a wharf on the East River. Here we find a boat which runs errands for the city of New York in the daytime. She is loaned to Mr. Mannix at night, and he makes good use of her. For here in an enclosed deck space, lying on tarpaulins spread on the hard boards, he puts his overboard customers, to the number of several hundred nightly. They sleep in their clothes, of course; their toilet facilities are of the crudest; but it is better than waiting the streets. All of them, Mr. Mannix explains with a pride which his ingenuity well justifies, are "second-night men." They slept last night in the lodging house, and therefore have had a bath and a medical inspection no more than 24 hours ago.

A hundred yards away, in the greasy black waters, lies a big and handsome yacht. It is too dark to read her name. It is not too dark, however, to look through the glowing disks of her portholes at the busy, happy and presumably prosperous visitors on board.

"That's an ironic contrast," you suggest to Mr. Mannix. "What do your guests think, looking at that yacht so near, while they sleep on the deck?" "I never heard one mention it," says Mr. Mannix, and we button up our coats and face the rain.—Readers Digest.

Solution is Seen In Empire Trade

London Journalist Discusses British Politics and Industries

Montreal—The solution to Britain's present difficulties lies in Empire trade, according to A. Ralph Cooper, news editor of the Daily Telegraph, London, who is one of the lucky newspapermen assigned to go back on the R-100. Mr. Cooper was somewhat chagrined on arrival to know that he must wait for almost a month for the dirigible.

Mr. Cooper spoke knowingly of British politics, from the vantage point of Fleet Street, and gave his opinion that Lord Beaverbrook had the right idea when he proposed to make the Empire one vast trading unit with free trade within all out side competition.

Lord Beaverbrook's idea was to expand British markets through free trade to all the dominions and crown colonies overseas, and at the same time keep out foreign goods. This would mean that the shrunken markets of England, Ireland and Scotland would once more expand, because the whole Empire could thus be made economically accessible. At the same time, the Empire would put a tariff against all non-British goods, and the now surplus population of Britain would be no longer a surplus. As long as Britain's markets were restricted as at present, it is Mr. Cooper's opinion that unemployment would never be solved.

With regard to the R-100, Mr. Cooper said he was sent out, not as an aeronautical expert, but as a writer. The people did not want technical fact but a real news story. The agreement with Press and Air Ministry was that there was to be no "scoop," that the news would be handled by a selected few who would syndicate all their stuff, and that he happened to be among the chosen few.

The R-100 was half as big again as the Graf Zeppelin, Mr. Cooper declared, and although supposed to make 70 miles an hour, it actually did 80. Answering criticism that it had been a long time in getting under way, as compared with the Graf, he pointed out that this was an experiment and the Air Ministry wanted to be sure before launching this 5,000,000 cubic feet of airship into space for a 3,000 mile flight.

While many had thought a shorter trip to Egypt should be attempted first, Mr. Cooper believed that as a gesture toward linking the Empire together, the experiment was well worth the risk, and there was no doubt, a great moral effect would be achieved by such a trip.

Australian Hens

Compete For Title

Melbourne, Vic.—What is claimed to be the world's biggest egg-laying competition is now in progress at North Croydon, Victoria, for the championship of Australasia.

Entries comprise 1166 hens and 81 ducks. The competition extends over a year, finishing on March 30, 1931.

Birds have been entered from every state of the Commonwealth and also from New Zealand. For three years the Australasian Stud Poultry Breeders' Society has been preparing for the contest, which is being held on a 77-acre block.

During the year it is estimated that the competing birds will produce 300,000 eggs, the whole of which have been sold in advance.

Exchange of Boys

To Take Place

Sheffield, Eng.—Arrangements have now been made for an interchange of secondary school students to take place between Sheffield and Berlin during the summer months.

Twenty boys from each city, under the supervision of three masters, will spend a few weeks in the foreign town, where they will be given an insight into the social, political and municipal life of the area where they are staying. It is estimated that the total cost to Sheffield of the establishment of these two co-national holiday schools will be $3,000.

Bill to Extend Age

Advanced in House

London.—The Government bill to require all children in Great Britain to remain at school until they reach the age of 15, one year longer than has hitherto been obligatory, passed its second reading in the House of Commons by 230 to 223 votes and is now expected to become law.

A resolution to provide the necessary finances was accepted May 30 by 225 to 109 votes. The measure takes effect in April, 1931, and is intended to afford to 400,000 boys and girls at their most fertile educational stage the advantages of instruction they would not otherwise enjoy.

AGONY OF NEURITIS

A Story of Intense Suffering and Relief.

"Do I recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills? You may believe I do," says Mr. John H. Jamieson, of Wallaceburg, Ont.

"For five years I suffered day and night from neuritis. The agony was terrible. I lost control of my arm and shoulder and my hand became shriveled. Nothing helped me till I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Even then the improvement was slow and I took ten boxes before I was on the way to recovery. After that, though, relief was rapid. My hand gradually filled out; the pain left me and I could sleep in peace. That was two years ago and I have not had a twinge of the trouble since."

Sufferers from neuritis, neuralgia or rheumatism should try the common-sense method of banishing these troubles by enriching the blood and strengthening the nerves with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Says Pluto's Size Is That of Mars

Dr. Sipher, Flagstaff Director, Declares Observations Show No Cometary Features

Flagstaff, Ariz.—Dr. V. M. Sipher, director of Lowell Observatory, said recently that the new planet, Pluto, discovered by the observatory last January is about the size of Mars and that further study had revealed no cometary features.

"The preliminary orbit of Planet X," Dr. Sipher reported, "has been computed by the Lowell Observatory staff, with the collaboration of Dr. John A. Miller, director of Spruill Observatory, using positions of Jan. 13, Feb. 23 and March 23, determined from the Lowell plates of Dr. C. O. Lampland, and yielded the following elements referred to mean equinox 1930.0:

"Node, 109 degrees 21 minutes; inclination, 17 degrees 21 minutes; log semi-major axis, 2.3359; eccentricity, 0.090; longitude perihelion, 12 degrees 52 minutes; mean daily motion, 1.112; mean anomaly, 1930.0, 3 degrees 20 minutes 47 seconds. Distance from sun, 41.3 astronomical units.

"Our knowledge of the orbit's shape and size, its eccentricity and semi-major axis, must be regarded as probably subject to considerable modification when more extended positions are available, but the plane of the orbit—its inclination and the line of nodes—and the present distance of the object are fairly reliably known in the present orbital data.

Planet Has Yellowish Hue
"Color tests of Planet X indicated this body is yellowish and very different from the blue planets Uranus and Neptune. This suggests an albedo and density more like those of the inner planets."

Retirement of Veterans Brings Changes in Canadian National Financial Staff

Upon the retirement, June 1, of J. M. Rosevear, General Comptroller of the Canadian National system, and of C. E. Friend, Assistant General Comptroller, each of whom has given 34 years' service, the appointment is announced of J. B. McLaren, hitherto Comptroller of the Central Region, Toronto, to the position of Comptroller of the system. In the photographs, from left to right, are: top row: C. E. Friend, J. M. Rosevear and J. B. McLaren; bottom row: T. H. Cooper, who has been appointed Assistant Comptroller, General Accounts; A. C. Egan, appointed Assistant Comptroller, Disbursements; W. S. Harrison, appointed Assistant Comptroller, Revenues; and Fred Horton, appointed Assistant Comptroller, Subsidiary Companies, all at Montreal. Other appointments are: J. F. Aitchison, Regional Auditor, Toronto; T. J. Gracey, Regional Auditor, Winnipeg; G. H. Palmer, Regional Auditor, Moncton, and G. B. Bird, Auditor, Detroit.

Both Mr. Rosevear and Mr. Friend are very highly respected by railway accounting officers on the continent. The Rosevear family has played an important part in railroad service in Canada, the story having begun in 1854, when Matthew Rosevear came to Canada from England to work for the Grand Trunk, and the family has given the National System four generations of men and more than two hundred years' of service in the aggregate.

King Edward's Life Revealed in Book

Once Slapped His Aunt Instead of Kissing Her, Book by Late Sir Lionel Cust Declares

London.—That Sir Lionel Cust was a friend of King Edward VII. in his book just published entitled "King Edward VII. and His Court," makes some notable comments and tells many interesting anecdotes.

Sir Lionel writes: "I am disposed to think since my acquaintance with King Edward, that the great misfortune of his life—a misfortune which was shared by the country—was that his mother lived too long, not in the general sense of the word, but from the point of view of the welfare of her son and successor.

"In the last 20 years of Queen Victoria's reign, the Prince of Wales had not enough to do. Ministers neglected and even despised him as a possible factor in politics and the higher aristocracy gave him the cold shoulder.

No Advantage
"He should have reigned earlier but not a day later. Ten years longer would have been no advantage and might have been a disaster, but had he reigned ten years earlier, the face of European history might have been changed. Had Queen Victoria taken her son into partnership she would have found him a zealous worker loyally deferential to her authority and a shrewd and useful successor to her husband as a private adviser on politics in general."

Intimate Stories
Sir Lionel Cust tells intimate anecdotes of King Edward's life such as when Queen Alexandra asked who the marble bust of the "babe" was and Edward's reply, "Don't you know? If he had lived we should not be here." The bust was of Princess Elizabeth, daughter of King William IV.

Another story tells how the King experimented dyeing marble busts with tea in order to prevent their clashing with the wall panelling and his surprise at finding the bust of the Prince Consort wearing a chestnut colored wig.

He tells how the then Prince Henry being asked to kiss his aunt, the Grand Duchess Augusta Mecklenburg Strelitz, promptly slapped her. How the Queen of Portugal flustered the King by planting resounding kisses on both cheeks at Windsor.

The best story is of the small child who was a guest at one of the royal parties at the Palace on being asked by His Majesty what he would like, replied, "More jam King."

IS BABY TEETHING?

Teething time is a time of worry to most mothers. The baby is nervous; fretful; feverish. His little gums are swollen and sore; diarrhoea, constipation, colic and sometimes convulsions set in—neither baby nor mother can sleep.

These troubles can be quickly banished, however, through the use of Baby's Own Tablets, concerning which Mrs. Louis Grubb, Teeswater, Ont., says:—"I have used the Tablets for all my babies while teething and have found them a splendid medicine."

Deadly Weapons

Tests of a new torpedo were recently carried out between Weymouth and Portland.

This new weapon, which experts think may revolutionize torpedo warfare, has an eight-cylinder engine instead of the two-cylinder of older varieties, and is said to be "more deadly than anything yet invented."

Another improvement in the art of warfare is reported from America, where "the deadliest machine-gun in the world" has just been invented. It is said to fire half-inch calibre bullets at the rate of 800 a minute, and has a range of nine miles.

As new and more terrible varieties of poison gas are being discovered from time to time, the prospects for the next war aren't particularly cheerful. But perhaps things aren't as bad as they seem. There were more people killed, in proportion to the number of combatants, when men fought hand to hand than there have been since "deadlier" weapons than sword and spear were introduced.

ENVY

What a wretched and apostate state is this! To be offended with excellence, and to hate a man because we approve him! The condition of the envious man is the most emphatically miserable; he is not only incapable of rejoicing in another's merit or success, but lives in a world wherein all mankind are in a plot against his quiet, studying their own happiness and advantage.—Addison.

"KING OF PAIN"
LINIMENT

What many people call indigestion very often means excess acid in the stomach. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated, and food sours. The corrective is an alkali, which neutralizes acids instantly. And the best alkali known to medical science is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It has remained the standard with physicians in the 50 years since its invention. One spoonful of this harmless, taste-

Bathing Beauty's Complexion Secret

"I have now used Kruschen Salts for a long time, and think it wonderful. Everyone tells me how well I look and what a beautiful skin I have. I tell them that it is thanks to your wonderful Kruschen Salts. I have just won a second prize in a bathing beauty competition of a leading newspaper. I shall use it always, and tell all my friends to do the same." —(Miss) A. E. Central letter on file for inspection.

Triple Drowning Narrowly Averted at Brownsburg

A very fine act of heroism, that resulted in the saving of the life of at least one little girl, was enacted in the West river, at Brownsburg, on the afternoon of Monday, July 7th., just above the dam that supplies water for the Canadian Industries. At this point there is a fairly strong current and, near the shore, a space where the water is shallow but out from the bank a little, a large boulder rests on the outer edge of which the water is over an average person's head. A number of children were in bathing at this point, and a couple of those who could not swim had climbed onto the boulder to watch proceedings. Ida Emard, daughter of the Rev. Emard, probably becoming engrossed, slipped off the rock into deep water and struggled to a cleft to hang on. Her sister Olive, aged 12, not realising the danger, jumped in after her though she could not swim. They are both now in deep water, Ida and slipping back into deep water, trying to cling desperately to the rock, reaching a hand to her sister, and both struggling. A boy, Stanley Hall, aged 18, visiting in Brownsburg, realizing the desperate situation, unable to swim, now plunges in to render assistance, and grabs Ida by the bathing suit. Finding the water is over his head he struggles frantically to reach the rock holding the now gasping Ida, endeavoring to keep her head above water. The situation is now pretty critical for these two; they cannot reach bottom; they cannot swim, nor can Stanley cling to the rock indefinitely with the girl dragging on him. Sitting on the rock is a girl named Mary Williams, aged 18, visiting the Emards on her holidays, who now reaches down a hand bravely, clinging as best she can to any fissure or crevice into which she can dig her fingers. Her hand is grasped by Stanley, and though nobody can tell just how it was done she manages to pull up the boy, who drags the girl after him, and this end of the situation is saved through her level headedness and presence of mind.

Meanwhile Olive, struggling and gasping in the current has gone twice down and now rises to the surface in a last wild effort to grasp at something. It is all over in a minute. The cries of the crowd attract the attention of Ida Stewart, the daughter of Bob Stewart of our village, aged 14, swimming a little above this position in the river, who takes in the situation at a glance. With all her might and main this brave little girl hurries through the water to the side of the almost exhausted child, and without any thought of her own safety, grabs her as she is just sinking, and with one hand holding a shoulder strap and the other swimming bravely she drags her charge to the shore. The rest need scarcely be told. They all reach home in safety and nothing is said. It is only when others who witnessed the scene let the thing out that it is realized how bravely two young girls struggled and fought heroically to prevent what might easily have been a triple drowning right in our very midst.

The St. Simeon's Ice Cream Social has many attractions for you on Friday evening. It is something you won't lose on, for there is plenty for your money. The programme is just full of laughs furnished by the famous artists Marrazza and Hokea. A beautiful motoring rug will be raffled, also a lovely cake, come and take advantage of these numerous chances, and enjoy the ice-cream and cake with your friends.

The Ladies of the Red Cross were on hand at the station on Tuesday morning and were delighted at receiving such a beautiful lot of flowers which carry sunshine to the inmates of our city hospitals. The kindly thought so expressed means much to the suffering ones deprived of enjoying our privileges so let us not forget when Tuesday comes around, that the ladies are at the Station, awaiting your floral offerings which they will gladly receive. It is a little work of love in which we may all participate.

CHAUTAUQUA AT BROWNSBURG

From the programme submitted by the Canadian Chautauqua, that opens in Brownsburg on Tuesday, July 15, continuing until the 19th. one can readily see that the people are in for a real treat.

The coming of this group of artists who are specialists in their different lines, brings to Brownsburg and surrounding district a programme of splendid merit, that will both amuse, instruct and educate.

This has been made possible through the kindly spirit of those who have placed their names on the list as guarantors and assumed the responsibility of seeing that the expenses are met. It is now up to the public to give full support to the committee in charge, for it is a wonderful asset to the community that such a splendid organization of talent can be brought to our doors, thus giving many the opportunity of enjoying such a distinguished privilege.

A THIRD CANDIDATE?

The political pot is overheating in Argenteuil and during the past few days rumors of all kinds have been spread throughout the county.

We have just heard from a reliable source, that a third candidate is to come forward for federal honors, at this election, in the person of Mr. Z. N. Raymond, well-known Notary of Lachute.

A delegation, composed of veterans of both Liberal and Conservative parties, called upon Mr. Raymond and insisted that he enter at once, the political arena, as a true representative of all classes of our population. Mr. Raymond, although very appreciative of this proof of esteem touched upon the importance of a few days' delay to consider the situation and promised a final decision for next Monday.

If Mr. Raymond's answer is in the affirmative, the electors of Argenteuil will have to decide between three candidates, Sir George Perley and Mr. L. Legault having been chosen already as Conservative and Liberal standard-bearers, respectively.

The re-appearance of Mr. Raymond on the hustings, with the reputation of a forceful speaker and old-time fighter, will surely bring a greater interest in the coming contest.

WEDDING BELLS

PROPHET — MacGILLIVRAY

The marriage of Olive, only daughter of Mr. William MacGillivray and the late Mrs. MacGillivray to Mr. Irvine M. Prophet, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. John Prophet, of Calumet, was solemnized on June 28th., 1930, at 3 p.m., at the manse, at St. Mungo's Church, Cushing, the Rev. Mr. McLean officiating.

Peonies, tulips and ferns were used in decorating the manse. The bride who was given in marriage by her father, was gowned in midnight blue lace over powder blue satin, wearing a wreath of orange blossoms in her hair. She carried a bouquet of sweetheart roses and maiden hair fern. The bride was unattended. A tea was held at the home of the bride's father and later the couple left by motor for Ottawa, returning by Huberdeau, Arundel and Kilmar. The bride travelling in a suit of green silk flat crepe with hat and shoes of beige.

The groom's gift to the bride was a black fox scarf. The bride's gift to the groom was a white gold wrist watch.

The couple were the recipients of a large number of beautiful gifts. The guests at the wedding were: Mr. and Mrs. John Prophet; Mrs. Wm. Kennedy; Mrs. David Kennedy; Mrs. Jos. Hewlett and Miss Lillian Hewlett; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Kelly of Montreal; Mr. Howard Dixon, of Dalesville; Mr. Wm. Campbell; Miss Agnes Campbell; Mr. Gordon Campbell and Mr. Laughlin Campbell; Mrs. Berton Prophet; Mr. Arthur McHardy, Miss Doris Prophet; Miss Marie Kelly and Miss Jennie Kelly.

A Real Treat.

Do you realize, when going away for the week-end or on small picnics how easy it is to take along a gallon can of Ice Cream? It is packed on shortest notice by our local concern, the Lachute Dairy, in rear of McKimmes' Bake Shop, and is highly recommended by the many who have tried it. A gallon costs only $1.25 packed, will easily give 40 large helpings and makes an ideal dessert for the hot weather. Smaller quantities may be secured if required, all well packed and which will keep hard for over 36 hours. Try it this week-end and see if what we say is not true.

Mr. C. Miller, of Gaspé, Que., is spending this week the guest of his brother, Mr. T. R. Miller.

The many friends of Mrs. Thos. Christie will be grieved to learn that she was taken to the Montreal General Hospital, on Saturday last, to undergo a serious operation.

The Snowshoe Trail

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Bill Bronson has led Virginia Tremont into the Clearwater of northern Canada to find her fiancé, Harold Lounsbury, who vanished there six years previously. Disaster separates them from the rest of their party, Kenly Lounsbury, Virginia's fiancé's uncle, and Vosper, Bronson's cook. The man and girl are snowed in in Bill's trapping cabin beyond Grizzly River. Bill seeks his murdered father's lost gold mine. One day he finds Harold, who has turned squaw-man, and takes him to Virginia.

GO ON WITH THE STORY

Virginia turned back to her new-found lover.

She was a little frightened by the expression on his face. His eyes were glowing, the color had risen in his cheeks, and he was curiously eager and breathless.

"Before he comes," he urged.

"We've been apart so long—"

His hand reached out and seized hers. He drew her toward him. She didn't resist; she felt a deep self-annoyance that she didn't crave his kiss. He crushed her to him, and his kiss was greedy.

She struggled from his arms and he looked at her in startled amazement. In fact, she was amazed at herself!

That first night Bill and Harold made bunks on the floor of the cabin, but such an arrangement could only be temporary.

They might be imprisoned for weeks to come. Bill solved the problem with a single suggestion.

They would build a small cabin for the two men to sleep in. Many times he had erected such a structure by his own efforts; the two of them could push it up in a few hours' work.

"I'm really not much good at cabin building," Harold protested. "But I don't see why Bill shouldn't go to work at it. I suppose you hired him for all camp work."

For an instant Virginia stared at him in utter wonder, and then a swift look of grave displeasure came into her face.

"You forget, Harold, that it was Bill that brought you back. The thirty days he was hired for were gone long ago." But she softened at once. "It's your duty to help him, and I'll help him, too, if I can."

In the next few days Bill mostly left the two together, trying to find his consolation in the wild life of the forest world outside the cabin. Harold had taken advantage of his absence and had made good progress: Virginia's period of readjustment to him was almost complete.

She did not, however, go frequently into his arms. Someway, an embarrassment, a sense of inappropriateness and unrest always assailed her when he tried to claim the caresses that he felt were his due.

"Not now, Harold," she would tell him. "Not until we're established again—at home."

Finally his habits and his actions did not quite meet with her approval. The first of these was only a little thing—a failure to keep shaved.

The stubble matted and grew on his lips and jaws. Bill, in contrast, shaved with greatest care every evening.

A more important point was his avoidance of his proper share of Bill's daily toil.

There was a little explosion, one afternoon, when he ventured to advise her in regard to her relations with Bill.

Harold spoke tolerantly, patronizingly. "Those fellows are apt to take an advantage of any familiarity. They're all right if you keep 'em in their place—but they're mighty likely to break loose from it any minute. I'm sorry you ever let him call you Virginia."

Virginia's eyes blazed.

"Listen, Harold," she exclaimed. "I don't care to hear any more such talk as that. I don't need or want any such warnings. I don't care what you think of Bill—for that matter, you can be sure that Bill doesn't care at all either—but I'll ask you to keep your thoughts to yourself. Oh, if you only knew—how good, how strong, how true he has been—how tender he has been to me—"

Harold was torn with jealous rage, and in his fury and malice he made the worst mistake of all. "I hope he hasn't been too tender—" he suggested viciously.

The girl answered only with her eyes; but her answer was unmistakable. Harold muttered something unintelligible, half an apology, half an excuse. Then he turned his back and stalked out of the cabin.

CHAPTER XII.

The addition of Harold to their number did not influence, for long, Virginia's old relations with Bill. They were comrades as ever; they talked and chatted around the little stove in the hushed nights; they played their favorite melodies on the battered phonograph, and they took the same joyous, exciting expeditions into the wild.

One morning Bill called her early.

"We're face to face with a new problem," he announced. "The pack came by last night—the wolf pack. I didn't hear them at all. And they got away with the big moose ham, hanging on the spruce."

"Then we're out of meat?"

"All except the little piece outside the door. We've been going through it pretty fast."

Bill spoke true. Their meat consumption had practically doubled since Harold had come.

"But if you care to," Bill went on, "we can dash out and see if we can pick up a young caribou or a left-over moose."

She dressed, and at breakfast their exultation over their trip grew painful to Harold's ears. He announced his intention of going alone.

Bill took rather a new course today. He bent his steps toward a stream that he called Creek Despair—named for the fact that he had once held high hopes of finding his lost mine along its waters, only to meet an utter and hopeless failure.

After proceeding a long distance Bill glanced back in warning and pointed to an entrancing wilderness picture, a hundred yards in front.

In a little glade and framed by the forest stood a large bull caribou, flashing and incredibly vivid against the snow.

Incidentally he made a first-class target—one that it seemed impossible to miss.

"I'll take him," Harold shouted. "Let me take him."

In a flash Harold realized that here was his opportunity; in one stroke, one easy shot, he could focus Virginia's admiration upon himself.

But it was not the way of sportsmen, wandering in file in mountain trails, to clamor for the first shot at game. Whatever is said is usually in solicitation to a companion to shoot; and Virginia felt oddly embarrassed.

Harold's gun leaped to his shoulder.

The target looked too big to miss, but his bullet flung up the snow behind the animal.

The caribou's powerful limbs pushed out in a mighty leap. Frenzied, Harold shot again; but his nerve was broken and his self-control blown to the four winds. The animal had gained the shelter of the thickets by now.

"My sights are off," Harold shouted. "They didn't shoot within three feet of where I aimed. Damn such a gun."

"I think we'd better look for something else," said Bill drily.

"Then I want you to carry my gun awhile and let me take yours. It's all ready, and here's a handful of extra shells. You ought to be willing to do that, at least."

Harold had forgotten that this man was not his personal guide, subject to his every wish. He held out gun and shells; and, smiling, Bill received them, giving his own weapon in exchange.

But Harold's miss had not been his greatest sin. The omission that followed was by all the codes of the hunting trails unpardonable. He supposed that he had reloaded his rifle magazine with shells before he put it in Bill's hands. In his confusion and anger, he had forgotten to do so; and the only load that the gun contained was that in the barrel, thrown in automatically when the last empty shell was ejected.

CHAPTER XIII.

Several seasons before there had been a fatality on the hills above Creek Despair. An ancient spruce tree had languished and died from sheer old age.

On the day that the three hunters emerged on their snowshoes in search of meat for their depleted larder, the wind pressed gently against it. Because its trunk was rotted away it swayed and fell heavily.

The falling tree had made a frightful crash just over the head of a great grizzly, hibernating for the winter, and even the deep coma in which he lay was abruptly dissolved.

He sprang up, ready to fight.

His little, fierce eyes bulged and smoldered with wrath, he grunted deep in his throat, and he pushed out savagely through the cavern maw. It was only a step farther through the spruce thicket into the sunlight.

Three figures, two abreast and one behind, came mashing through the little pass where the creek flowed. The grizzly recognized them in an instant as his hereditary foes.

His ears laid back, and he uttered a deep growl.

As he stepped, his forefeet swung out, giving to his carriage an arrogance and a swagger that would have been amusing if it hadn't been terrible. His wicked teeth gleamed white in foam, and the hair stood stiff at his shoulders.

Bill's keen eyes saw the bear first. It was the last sight in the world that Bill had expected.

There was no waiting this time to offer the sporting opportunity to Harold.

Virginia was not aware of a lapse of time between the instant that Bill caught sight of the bear and that in which the gun came leaping to his shoulder.

He had full confidence in the hard-hitting vicious bullet in Harold's thirty-five, and most of all he relied on the four reserve shots that he supposed lay in the rifle magazine.

The grizzly died hard; he felt that all four of them would be needed to arrest the charge that would likely follow his first shot.

He aimed for the great shoulder, the region of the lungs and heart. (To be continued.)

Old Brown had had a terrible morning. He was unable to walk, and had engaged a man to pull him about in an invalid's chair. Twice they had nearly been crushed under a tramcar, and once the invalid-chair man had almost dropped his charge into a river.

They halted at the top of a very steep hill. At first Brown welcomed the halt. But at last he began to get restless.

"Why are you stopping here?" he asked, nervously.

"It's all right, gu'nor," the attendant replied. "I'm only waiting for my mate, with another old gent. We're going to 'ave a race down the 'ill'—"

Mother Dear

A Grown-up Child's Prayer

By BETTY GOURRE

Let me please, oh Mother dear
Lay my head upon your breast
And in silence surely feel,
Here, at last, I can find rest.

I cannot find the words to tell you,
What burns in my heart so deep;
Just let, me, Mother, like a child
Sit near you—and softly weep.

Do not question; Such a child Cannot find expression
For the thoughts that rack the mind
And that need suppression.

Everything is still too new,
Do not know its name;
Only lately have I learnt
To know—love and pain!

Let me please, Mother dear,
Lay my head upon your breast,
And in silence surely feel,
That with your love I am blessed!

Bad Luck

The clerks were having a little gossip.

"Did I tell you chaps that I was leaving?" drawled the languid swell of the staff, whose incompetence was as palpable as the splendor of his attire. "Heard you'd got the sack," replied the cashier.

"I answered an advertisement yesterday for what looks like a first-class job," resumed the overdressed one.

"I've pitched rather a strong yarn, but you've got to do that if you want to keep up with the times."

Just then the senior partner arrived and, after reading the letters, called the swell to his room.

"The following dialogue was heard by the others:—"

"Have you been in our service ten years?"

"No, sir; only fifteen months."

"And is your salary seven pounds ten a week?"

"Er—no, sir—fifty shillings."

"Are you leaving us because of a difference with the firm regarding the management of Colonial branches?"

Dead silence and a short pause.

Then the senior partner:

"You should be more careful in your statements. This is a small world. The advertisement you answered was for the situation you are leaving on Friday. That will do."—Tit-Bits.

Memories

By BETTY GOURRE

I found a rose in an old, old book,
Hidden away in a dusty nook
In a summer house by a rippling brook!

It had shrivelled and died in that tumble-down shed
Had no bright green leaves or petals of red,
But it brought to my mind a romance long dead!

Fragrant and sweet in that old book it lies,
And though its long long ago, and I'm old and wisp,
Somehow the tears find their way to my eyes!

I thought of a far away night in June,
Starry skies, and a glittering moon,
And of innocent love that had ended too soon!

Einstein Declares Space Eats Matter

Time is Turning Around and Somewhere Old Grows Younger

(By Howard W. Blakeslee, Associated Press Science Editor.)

New York. — Einstein's announcement in London that "space is eating up matter" is another break into a new field of investigation, one not so incomprehensible as it sounds.

He has found another method of measuring space of a particular kind, the tangible space in which man lives, which is not empty, but is known to be filled with gravitation, light, electrical forces, possibly with "ether," and perhaps other unknowns. Einstein's figures have shown for some time that space has these properties may be limited in extent.

His theories do not say what is outside the kind of light-electricity-gravitation-filled space that telescopes can see and human brains figure mathematically. His theories do not deny the common sense of imagination, which thinks of space as going on forever. They simply postulate that the kind of space visible either to the eye or imagination is probably not only limited, but likely in the end to prove different from what is expected.

The size of this Einstein "space," provided it exists, has been computed by astronomers. They have been able to figure the weight of all the stars and matter in sight of telescopes, and from these weights to derive the size.

Outer Edge of Space

They found that the outer edge of this "space" is about 600 times as far as the present limit of vision in telescopes, which can now see the distance travelled by light in 140,000,000 or 150,000,000 years.

Einstein also holds that this space is curved, which means that, owing to some still unsolved property, space is able to bend light, and make it travel in a circle, like circumnavigating the earth. So mathematicians have figured that light would travel completely around this Einstein space in 500,000 million light years. That is, after that long lapse we ought to be able to look in the opposite direction in the sky from our sun, and, if our telescopes are powerful enough, to see the sun's rays coming faintly from the other way around.

Others Agree

Einstein is not alone in these daring ideas. Eddington, English astronomer, has suggested that time itself may be different in some other part of space. He speaks of the arrow of time pointing in a different direction, as if somewhere things were growing younger.

Milikan's cosmic rays, which are not theories, but concrete, measurable radiation that pours down upon earth from all directions in space, are another illustration of something almost inconceivable happening in space. No one knows their source for certain. Milikan says they probably come from the creation of matter in the intense cold of interstellar space.

This space between the stars is the most completely empty region man has been able to imagine, and the one least likely to be picked as the home of vast forces capable of creating solid substance.

Ants Help Doctors In Surgical Cases

From Peru comes an interesting account of a novel way in which ants are made to help human surgery.

An expedition which has just returned from that country describes how the native doctors make use of them in their treatment of wounds. In Peru is found a species of ant equipped with very powerful jaws. Place one of these near anything biteable and it immediately bites—and never lets go.

When a native is wounded the medicine man presses the edges of the cut together and then picks up an ant. He holds its head immediately over the wound; the ant promptly bites, binding the severed edges together with its huge jaws. The body is then snipped off. Ant follows ant until a neat row of these extraordinary stitches has closed the wound.

Child Saving

Mr. Kelso Talks Encouragingly to Members of the Children's Aid Association

At the annual meeting of the Children's Aid Association of Ontario held last month in the Parliament Buildings, Mr. J. J. Kelso, Supt., gave an address in which he said:

"You are engaged in a great work. Indeed, I know of no other more important than the protection of children, the building up of the home and the preservation of all that is best and sweetest in family life.

"No movement is more popular at the present time because of the realization that a better and happier civilization can only be evolved from a healthy and well-developed childhood: that here is the solution of many of our most vexing problems.

Preserving the Family

"The family welfare is fundamental to social progress—the basic principle in all child protection work. Therefore the home is our chief concern. When disputes and differences arise adjustments have to be made that require much time and thought and the best that each of us can give. To restore order and harmony gives a comfort and satisfaction that is in itself ample reward.

Problem Children

"Among others, we have constantly before us the problem of the handicapped child, the defective, the precocious delinquent, the homeless child, the deserting father, the weak-minded, thriftless people who bring children into the world without the means or ability to maintain and train them. There is in fact no end to the variety of social ills that call for patient, expert consideration and this I know is also present in your minds.

"You have a heavy and responsible task. All I can say to you is to keep on doing what you honestly believe is best for the child. Aim at greater efficiency and the enlistment of new workers in this great service. Do not attempt to do it all yourself for that is impossible. Hold frequent conferences with other social workers so that there may be the fullest co-operation.

Secure Friendly Aid

"Volunteer workers can be secured in every community who would give valuable assistance. Do not neglect this asset for there are splendid people who could guide and counsel with boys and girls and perhaps prove an anchor to them when the storms of temptation arise. What many of our wards, and people in trouble generally, need above all things is a sympathetic friend to whom they can turn with confidence.

Waywardness in children is not real badness—it is often loneliness, lack of

The Road-Mender To Heaven

By Anne Sutherland

I wouldn't be an Emperor, I wouldn't be a King.

I wouldn't change the job I have for gold or anything.

And yet from early morning till the sleepy sun goes down

I only tend the little road that leads to Heaven-Town.

I help to keep it shining and I help to keep it sweet.

I brush away the dusty sins that clutter round my feet.

I send out birds of laughter and they fill the morning skies.

I bind my wings of damaged dreams like broken butterflies;

I plant a seed of kindness, then I hide behind a tree

And pretty soon a friendship-flower grows and blooms for me:

I dig out little falsehoods and I throw them in a heap

And have a splendid bonfire; then I try to watch and keep

The worn-down places in the road all neatly patched with some

Good brand of faith; and when with harp and psalm the pilgrims come,

They ask me, "Little brother, we be weary with our sin,

Oh tell us, doth the Warder wait to let a traveller in

Who longs for Heaven-Comfort?" And I point them straight ahead,

"No heart goes up to Heaven-Town that is not comforted"

I answer, and they ride away, and softly down the night

The friendly lamps of Heaven-Street are guiding them aright.

Then give to Kings and Emperors their crowns! I envy none

When Master comes to praise me for the bit of work I've done:

I dare not raise my eyes, but I be proud to hear Him say,

"God bless thee, little brother, for a spotless road this day!"

Our Idea of an Easy Job

"I'm publicity man for the citrus growers."

"Well?"

"I want to get grapefruit in the public eye."

"Daddy," asked little Eric, looking up from his book. "What is a 'chauffeur'?"

"It is what they call a man who drives a motor car," replied father. "But, daddy," said Eric, "that wasn't what you called the motor driver who nearly knocked us down yesterday."

Monkeys to Become Color Conscious?

Can a monkey distinguish between colors? To find an answer to that question a group of Berlin scientists have been conducting a series of experiments. It has been assumed that monkeys knew colors, but it was not known whether their color sense was strong enough to enable them to attach significance to changing colors. It was found, however, that a monkey could learn that one color meant dinner-time and another did not.

The first proof came from a test that was conducted by Professor W. Trendelenburg of the Berlin Psychological Institute. He put pieces of apple in a box in a monkey's cage and when the box was filled he illuminated it with yellow light. When the box was empty he used other colors for illumination. Finally the monkey understood that yellow signalled the presence of food and that other colors meant that "no food."

When the monkey came to understand the distinction between yellow and food and other colors and no food, Dr. Trendelenburg carried the experiment another step forward. He found that the monkey, after having served his period of training, would not budge when other colors that yellow were flashed, even if the box contained many pieces of delicious apple. As a final test, a color approximating yellow was thrown on the box. This was the animal's critical moment. He became restless, and, apparently unable to make up his mind just what the signal called him to do, walked up and down his cage.

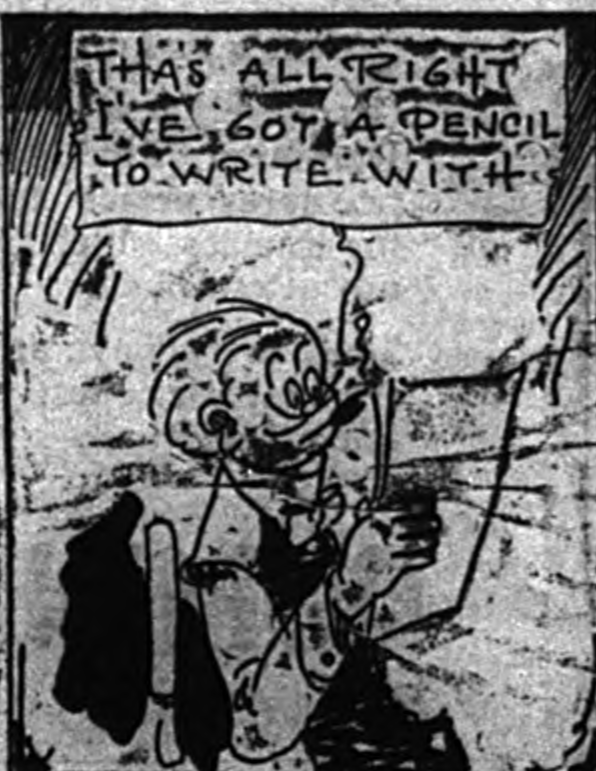

Wills Made By Talkies

The newest use of talking motion pictures, it was stated by Mr. O. H. Caldwell, Editor of the new magazine Electronics, at the recent conference on lighting at the Westinghouse Lighting Institute in New York City, is for making wills. In recent instances, Mr. Caldwell stated, instead of writing an ordinary will which is then acknowledged before witnesses, the testator called in a motion picture operator and camera, spoke his desires before the camera and microphone and had both his face and his voice photographed on the film. The witnesses next appear before the camera, state that they have heard the will thus made and witness it.

Sir George Perley.

The County of Argenteuil and particularly the Conservative Party, have reason to be justly proud of the Opposition Candidate, no less a personage than the popular and distinguished citizen Sir George Perley, who is again seeking the suffrage of the electors in this county in the Federal campaign which terminates on July 28th. next.

The Watchman, in its support of Sir George, feels that it is serving the best interests of the County and the fact cannot be denied that there is no member sitting in the House of Parliament, at Ottawa, who has a better trained mind as regards Canadian business matters on legislation dealing with foreign questions.

Sir George beyond all contradiction, has proved himself a worthy member; his speeches designate him as a man of high culture and universal knowledge, with a thorough grasp of all matters affecting the welfare of Canada, and he has always given fair and honest support to legislation that has come before parliament, no matter from which side of the House, when he was convinced that it was in the interests of the country at large. There is probably no member who is more esteemed by the different parties in the House and this has been the result of his broadmindedness, and exceptional courtesy during the years he has sat in Parliament.

The County is indeed fortunate, in that Sir George has again accepted the nomination so unanimously extended at the recent convention, and there is no doubt but that if the Conservative Party is victorious on the 28th. that Sir George will be included in the new Cabinet.

The Watchman will have more to say about the record of Sir George in future issues and in the meantime every effort should be put forward to ensure his return.

While elections are like horse races, it is sometimes difficult to pick the winner, but if reports that are being published daily regarding the reception accorded the Hon. R. B. Bennett throughout the country in his tour of the Dominion, one can make a pretty safe guess that the energetic and brilliant leader of the Conservative Party in Canada will not have to wait long until he is called upon to form a new cabinet.

CAMPAIGN ISSUES CLEARLY DEFINED

Outside local issues which will be a major factor in a relatively small number of constituencies, the Federal election campaign appears to be taking definite shape along two lines: the King Government on its record and its budget, or the Conservative party on the pledges laid down by Mr. Bennett at Winnipeg.

The latter number ten and embody many constituent parts which might emerge as planks by themselves, but the two which are really issues are unemployment and the condition of agriculture throughout Canada.

Mr. King, during his present tour of Western Canada, is finding for himself conditions which amazed Mr. Bennett, as he said on his return to the East. It will not be at all surprising if Mr. King in the light of personal experience, announces a much more immediate and radical method of dealing with unemployment than he has yet laid down to counteract the Conservative promise of an immediate session of Parliament to deal with the matter.

Such a session would undoubtedly affect Canada's representation at the Economic Conference overseas this fall. Out of such a conference Mr. King is preaching the gospel of future employment for Canadians, but Mr. Bennett has seized upon the present situation as demanding action here at once. There is really no reason why a special session cannot proceed with the conference. It would probably reduce the number of Canadian Ministers who would go overseas, but the rapidity of communication would permit a Prime Minister to sit in Ottawa, and to keep a very intimate finger on the course of events at an economic conference in London.

At this writing the fat is all in the fire with both parties genuinely optimistic. The soldiers' pension problem and his general treatment have been yanked actively into politics, despite all sorts of protestations to the contrary. In Quebec conscription for service in India—has been made an issue and creed and race are not free from political controversy.

It is a case of preventing an anticlimax. The Campaign has been long already and there is still about three weeks to go. The party that can seize public interest in those three weeks will pick up the unattached voter and will win. The old lines of party fealty are not as general as of yore. There are new conditions and many thousands of new voters.

Women have enjoyed the franchise in Dominion affairs since 1917, though it was not until 1921 that the unrestricted franchise was given them. Still that is eleven years ago.

Add to that fact another, which is that women represent some 56 per cent of the voting strength of Canada at the polls on July 28.

Then consider that in all the 245 electoral divisions of Canada not a woman has been given a nomination by either of the chief parties in a "safe seat."

Miss McPhail, who has sat in the House since 1921, is Progressive and even she—unless someone drops out before nomination day—is up against an uncertain three-cornered fight.

Half the seats in Canada are reasonably safe for one party or the other. That is, nomination is about tantamount to election. Both parties are pleading strongly for the votes of women but, obviously there has been no real concern on the part of the constituency organizations to see them in Parliament.

HAWKESBURY - GRENVILLE BRIDGE

During the past twenty years we have heard from time to time rumors regarding the possibility of the building of a highway bridge across the Ottawa River from Hawkesbury to Grenville, and it is with a great deal of satisfaction that we are at last in a position to make a definite statement that this bridge is to be built in the very near future. We have it from very good authority that the plans for this bridge have been approved by the Federal Government as well as by the Quebec and Ontario Governments, and that the plans and specifications will be published by the Department of Public Works, Ottawa, within the next few days, most likely between July 14th and July 19th.

It is to be a high level bridge with adequate allowance for the present and future boat traffic on the Grenville Canal and of sufficient width to accommodate two lines of vehicular traffic. A foot path will also be provided for pedestrians.

We understand that it is the intention of the Department of Public Works to call for tenders for the construction of this bridge immediately, so that the work will proceed without delay and thus assist in relieving the present unemployment situation.

This bridge will give Eastern Ontario and Western Quebec additional means of intercommunication which has long been considered a necessity, and in addition to contributing very considerably to the development of the portions of the provinces mentioned it will also give the motoring public very considerable additional travelling facilities.

Holidays on Horseback in West

Year by year the idea of Dude Ranching as a holiday recreation that really means recreation, is taking greater hold on young and old alike all over the continent. Horseback riding, trail riding, taking part in rodeos—if you are a good enough cowboy—but anyhow on horseback from morning to night, that is the way to harden the muscles and bodies of people who have gone soft in the enervating life of cities. This totally different kind of a holiday is offered in any of half a dozen Dude Ranches in the Alberta Foothills and the Rockies. There is the historic Kananaskis Ranch, owned by Mrs. "Bill" Brewster; the T. S. Ranch, operated by Guy Weadick; the Lake Windermere Girls Camp and the E. T. Ranch, recently opened by Miss Emily Yates of Montreal, to name a few. The holiday-maker attires him or herself in weird and wonderful cowboy outfit from high-heeled boots and chaps to ten-gallon hat and tries out everything—roping and riding calves, packing mules and ponies and learning all the mystery of the ancient craft of knot-tying. Riding the mountain trails and sleeping out at night—just a real western open-air holiday. Lay-out shows typical scenes from the Kananaskis Ranch. Society boys hog-tying a calf; a party of riders all set for a day's outing and a glimpse of the exciting business of erecting a "teepee."

SEASONAL HAPPENINGS

Contributed by H. W. Butler.

We have reached that period of the year when schools and colleges are closed and the great majority of people are planning for a vacation. The great outdoor beckons us to take advantage of what nature has to offer in the way of refresh- ing tired bodies and building up im- paired constitutions, the result of constant study, business activity or whatever else may occupy the atten- tion previous to the vacation period. A vast number of people now drive their own cars; and we see the cus- tomary trek, complete with camping outfit, travelling in the direction of lake and stream where one may en- joy to the heart's content the cooling effects of a swim in the lake or the thrill of landing a catch of fish. Every contingency is provided for in the majority of cases, except acci- dents, particularly drownings. The daily newspaper records regularly the toll of deaths from this cause, and, beyond a little sympathetic com- ment we are not unduly affected, providing of course that none of our loved ones are involved. While out- door bathing will always be popular during the summer months it would be a splendid move on the part of all vacationists, swimmers or not, to Et themselves to the application of artificial respiration; so that they could when occasion demands apply their knowledge in restoring life to an apparently drowned person. Com- plete immersion for a considerable length of time does not necessarily mean that the victim is beyond hu- man aid. The doctor is recognized as the one person best endowed to pronounce life extinct. Artificial res- piration is fairly simple to perform and not at all a difficult subject to master. The following rules if faith- fully learned and practiced will en- able anyone, from the age of youth up to take care of an emergency of this nature. First of all send some- one for a doctor whenever possible. Then proceed by laying the patient flat on his stomach arms extended above the head. Turn the head side- ways, remove any obstruction from the mouth, such as false teeth, etc., so that the passage of air to the lungs is free, and see that the ton- gue is pulled forward. Now kneel astride the patient facing his head and place both hands, with fingers extended and slightly open over the lower rib. The thumbs should as- sume a position almost parallel with the spine with the tips slightly in- clined toward one another. You will now by pressure and relaxation imi- tate the movements of breathing. Keeping the arms straight and rigid and leaning your body forward you apply firm but not violent pressure downwards gradually while you count 1-2-3; this produces expiration. Re- lease the pressure somewhat rapidly raising the hands at the same time but allowing the fingers and thumb tips to retain contact with the pa- tient's body this produces expiration. On the release count 1-2. So to a count of five, pressure and release is continued in rhythmic fashion un- til such times as you are assured that natural breathing is restored. Vigor- ous massage of the limbs towards the heart can be practiced by some- one else while artificial respiration is going on. If necessary relays can be arranged providing no undue time is lost in changing over from one person to another. Don't give up hope too soon; it may be necessary to work for two hours or more. Re- solve to learn now. Practice on a live person, and, having acquired the art you will not have to think how to apply your knowledge when the time comes. Cut this out and keep it for constant reference.

Only Five Weeks to Annual Event in the Capital

Ottawa Exhibition, Aug. 18 to 23, Offers Many Inducements to Make 1930 A Record Year.

Five weeks from Monday will see the opening of six big days and six big nights at the Ottawa exhibition. This annual event is looked forward to each year and many from this district are regular patrons. Each year seems to be better than the previous year and the directors of the Central Canada Exhibition Associa- tion say that the 1930 exhibition will be the best ever held in Ottawa and that is speaking for about half a cen- tury.

Of the features, Creators and his band will be probably the most out- standing. Creators is unique as a bandmaster and with his wonderful organization of artists creates a fu- rure among music lovers each time he appears. Two concerts will be given each day, no extra charge be- ing made for this attraction.

An elaborate and high class out- door production will be the Winter Garden Revue and Edgar I. Schooley ensemble, which will top the pro- gram in front of the grandstand. Broadway artists, pretty girls, catchy music, novel costumes, special stag- ing, elaborate lighting effects, music dances, color, rhythm, harmony, make this offering rank with the high class and high-priced produc- tions in the big theatres.

Quite a new attraction this year will be put on by the Ontario gov- ernment. Arrangements have been completed for a government showing of live fish, pheasants and game birds, wild animals, foxes, etc. These will be shown in typical surround- ings and promise to be a big hit with old and young.

An entirely new display, live stock, poultry, agricultural, dairy and hor- ticultural displays, child welfare demonstrations, dog show, automo- bile show, pure food show, free horse show, stellar vaudeville acts, spec- tacular fireworks, aeronautics, and formation flying, track and aquatic sports, horse races, dancing competi- tion, hobby show, handicrafts and arts, Dominion government ex- hibits, merchants and manufacturers displays, and many other factors will combine to make the 1930 Ottawa ex- hibition one that will more than maintain the high standard already set.

The dates are August 18th to 23rd and prize lists and other informa- tion may be secured on application to the exhibition office in the city hall, Ottawa. For the automobile owner, good highways and special parking arrangements within the grounds ensure enjoyable trips. For the less fortunate, special railway rates have been arranged.

"Standing on a record of sound progressive accomplishment, we approach the problems of the future with the same faith, courage and optimism which have made possible the achieve- ments of the past years."
—From Premier King's Brant- ford Speech—June 16th, 1930.

Forward Canada!

Under the guidance of the King administration, Canada treads to-day the high road of steady progress.

¶ When the King government took office in 1921, it was forced to assume the task of financing the cost of the war and of demobilisation. The interest on this debt alone amounted to $140,000,000 annually. Despite this handicap, the King administration in less than two years had succeeded, not only in balancing the budget, but in creating, in 1924, a surplus of $36,000,000. Each year, since then, the staggering burden of debt with which war and Conservative extravagance had saddled the country was gradually lightened.

¶ The era of the King administration is in truth "the era of surpluses". During the sixty-three years which have elapsed since Confederation, Canada has known only fifteen surplus years. Four only of these surpluses were in the entire period of Conservative administration, but seven have been created during the two last terms of the present administration, the four others being under the administration of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

¶ The total sum of Canadian surpluses since Confederation is $315,000,000, of which $273,000,000, or approximately 86%, is to the credit of the King administration, a record which has not been equalled during the same period by any of the countries which participated in the late war since the beginning.

CANADIAN AUTHOR'S CONVENTION

Argenteuil Members of the Canadian Author's Association who attended the recent Convention in Montreal, thoroughly enjoyed the meetings. Listening to such speakers as Napier Moore, of McLean's Magazine; Ruthledge of the Canadian; Prof. Rossignol of University of Nebraska, who claims that although his home is in U. S. A., his heart is in Canada and that is why his stories are all of Canada. Dr. Salem G. Bland of Toronto, a wonderful speaker who claimed that it was not only the privilege but the duty of Canadian Authors to write so as to raise the young Canadians from their state of apathy and undiscussion, their seeming desire to drift with the tide and calmly take advantage whatever fate handed out to them; instead of being up and doing, self-reliant, and desirous of doing hard things accomplishing seemingly impossible achievements. He said God had raised our country up with a grounded instinct to do hard things and she must keep on. She must also develop international lines or in 50 years, she would go to pieces. Said Canada was troubled with "too much party" and party leaders; people were thinking more of that than of the real good of the country. Said they were striving to make Canada a Heaven for first grade people and a hell for 5th grade people and it was our duty to make Canada a country for 5th grade people, for after all common people were the best people. God would not have made so many of them if they were not.

Other noted speakers addressed the meetings such as Dr. W. H. Wright, of the University of Manitoba; Dr. E. A. Hardy, President of Toronto Branch. Dr. C. G. D. Roberts, of Victoria B. C.; Jean Charles Harvey, Quebec. Dr. W. T. Allison of Winnipeg, and the grandson of the writer of Uncle Tom's Cabin. TWO PARTS to a Tire

TREAD CARCASS

Goodyears lead in both

WHEN you judge a tire, look to two things. The tread and the carcass. These are the main parts of a tire and Goodyear Tires are outstandingly superior in both! Prove this to your own satisfaction by these tests:

1 Press your hand down on the Goodyear All-Weather Tread. Feel the grip of the deep-cut, sharp-edged blocks which are placed in the centre of the tread—where they belong. Traction!

2 Have us show you on our cord-testing machine the greater stretch in Goodyear Supertwist Cord over ordinary cord. This extra stretch gives the Goodyear carcass its great vitality, enabling it to withstand road-shocks.

"Dry Ice" Powder Thrown From Plane In Early Morning Means Fair Weather

Success Crowns Aviator's Efforts and Rain Falls—Ultimate Aim—More Sunshine

Amsterdam—After a long series of failures since the beginning of last year, A. Veraart of Rijnswijk, near The Hague, finally succeeded in producing rain by throwing so-called "dry ice" powder out of an airplane on clouds.

Mr. Veraart's theory is that the falling particles of powdered solid carbon dioxide, commercially designated "CO₂" and popularly known as dry ice, become laden with electricity by their fall, which transforms them into numberless very small drops, which convert the clouds into big drops, thus causing the clouds to dissolve or condense into rain.

Owing to adverse weather conditions and lack of the right kind of clouds a great number of former experiments carried out with the financial assistance of a group of interested estate owners in the Dutch East Indies and with the help of airplanes of the Royal Dutch Airlines, have been unsuccessful. Recently, however, one of the company's new machines went up with Mr. Veraart and 1½ tons of dry ice powder, which were thrown out at a height of 2500 meters near the island of Marken, in the Zuider Zee, while thick masses of clouds were 500 meters beneath the plane.

Four military airmen, each of whom flew over the indicated spot that morning at a height of 400 meters, reported ed they had flown for two minutes in a local drizzle accompanied by fog somewhat west of Marken, the wind being west. Their machines were still wet with rain when they landed. Rain also fell on the island of Marken and on the southern shores of the Zuider Zee.

This preliminary success soon will be followed by new experiments on a larger scale. Mr. Veraart's system is said to have great possibilities in periods of drought here, as well as in the Indies for it is possible also to produce artificial clouds (although the method still has to be improved before it reaches a completely practical stage) by means of an ammonia or chlorine combination. By Mr. Veraart's method these artificial clouds can be transformed into rain.

Actually Mr. Veraart's endeavor, however, have been inspired by the desire to make it possible for mankind to enjoy more sunshine. By throwing dry ice powder on the clouds in the early morning he wants to clear the sky for the rest of the day. He is confident that fog mist can be attacked in the same way and made to disappear in a short shower of rain. He also believes that night frosts, that do much damage to agriculture and horticulture, can be controlled through the same system, first producing clouds and afterwards transforming these clouds into rain.

Learn How to Fall And Spare Limbs

An Interesting Article on This Elusive Art of Falling Harmlessly

Learn from the cat, which always falls on her feet. We have only two of these; but we have arms and hands and though we can not acquire the cat's marvelous reflex action, we can use them to good purpose with a little practice, if we do not lose our heads.

This is the advice of a contributor to L'Education Physique (Paris), who credits the Berlin Illustrierte Zeitung for its substance. He writes:

"There is an art of falling down. If you doubt it, watch what goes on at a circus. Clowns and acrobats will soon persuade you, if you have the observing eye.

"But without attaining the virtuosity of these artists, any normal individual with proper training may assimilate a certain number of principles regarding this matter, that will render him great service on the many occasions when more or less accidental falls occur. Either during sports such as football, skating, skiing, jumping, riding, etc., or when, in the ordinary course of things, he makes a misstep or slips on the classic orange-peel, which lies in wait for us at every street corner.

"It is known that a cat, thrown into the air, always lands on its four feet. The animal owes this curious specialty to the extreme sensitiveness of its nervous and muscular system—to its reflexes. We can not pretend to any such control over ours. Our reactions are slower than the cat's, and besides—we have not four paws! But it is quite possible for us to cultivate certain preservative instincts that are usually dormant within us, and the adepts of the so-called 'natural method' know how greatly their address and 'muscular intelligence' may be developed by regular practice.

"Children fall often and are rarely hurt.

"This, you think perhaps, is because they have not far to fall and because their joints are still very supple. Not at all. Children's falls are almost always harmless because they react more naturally than adults. Instinctively they assume the safest posture. They know how to employ at the proper moment, not four paws, as kittens do, but their four limbs; for the arms and the hands play an important part in the art of falling.

"In some degree, we may compare learning how to fall with learning how to swim. What happens when an ignorant bather falls into the water? In his terror at finding his head under water the poor soul tries to keep his shoulders above the surface. He raises his arms, becomes agitated and is soon exhausted. But a skilled swimmer is not afraid of plunging in as far as he can. He is thus supported better by the water.

"In the case of a backward fall, the unskilled person seeks above all to ward off with his hands the contact of his head with the hard surface. He contracts his back and legs violently and falls with all his weight on one point. He thus runs the risk of breaking some delicate bone. On the contrary, he ought to 'unfold' his body flexibly in the direction of the fall, keeping his head up, while his extended legs serve as counterweights and his hands and arms, meeting the ground flatly constitute valuable shock absorbers.

"In falling forward he should avoid raising his arms suddenly over his head—a useless and dangerous movement. On the contrary, he should at once bring his arms to the front that they may serve as an elastic buffer at the moment of contact with the earth. "Keep your head. In this way you will acquire control of your reflexes, and will be the happy possessor, in certain emergencies of daily life, of the elements of a minor acrobaticism which will prevent unfortunate accidents."

Jack Rich—"I wonder if Miss Wise knows I love her."

Mary Tellit—"I shouldn't wonder. She says she expects to be married in November and to spend the winter in California."

If Bed Points North Nightmares Vanish

If you want to sleep well take a compass to bed.

French scientists have discovered that the art of sleeping consists of turning your bed so that your head is to the north and your feet to the south.

This "law of oriented sleep" is really nothing new. In 1884, an Austrian chemist, Charles de Reichembaach, who had previously discovered creosote and paraffin, conceived the same theory.

Dr. Fere, in 1905, tested the theory for the French Biology Society, and came to a similar conclusion. He had had dreams and pains every time he used a bed standing east and west. But if he moved his bed to a right angle, his pains disappeared and he slept like a child.

Last month, two other French engineers, Wm. Duchatel and Rene Warcollier, tested the Reichembaach-Fere law and they found it based on fact. They even went a step farther and decided that humans not only must sleep from north to south, but must work from east to west.

Without explaining whether magnetic terrestrial currents or the rotary movements of the earth are to blame, they concluded that a compass is as necessary in a box of tools as a screwdriver.

"All work executed by movements from north to south cause a useless waste of effort, and all rest taken from east to west brings insufficient repair of preceding fatigue," their report states. They urge the turning of beds, and the moving of office desks or workshop tables to double results.

All Fliers in Cuba Must Speak Spanish

Havana—Commercial aviators intending to spread their wings in Cuba, irrespective of nationality, henceforth must be able to speak and write the Spanish language to pilot airplanes under the aviation laws of the Republic, according to a resolution signed by Gen. Carlos Rojas, Secretary of War.

Foreign pilots already flying commercial ships in Cuba will be given one year to master Spanish, it was said.

Home-Finding

At a recent meeting of the Children's Aid Association of Ontario Mr. J. J. Kelso, Supt., gave an address, extracts of which follow:

Finding homes for homeless children is an important function of the Children's Aid Society. It requires diligent search to locate and persuade the best people to share their home with a child, for the policy of waiting for applicants to come along will never provide the desired results. Intensive effort should be made to get children quickly absorbed into the ordinary home life of the Province.

Then in the matter of supervision of children in foster homes, I doubt if we do sufficient of that to guarantee that the children are receiving all the attention and consideration required. When we assume responsibility for the child we undertake to do all that a good and loving parent would do. Can we conscientiously say that we live up to such a high standard?

We should be constantly checking up on our work to see if we are following the best methods and securing all the good results that should follow as a natural consequence.

Growing Worse or Better

"Preventive work does not lend itself to the spectacular, and sometimes we may grow discouraged when we read of the apparent prevalence of crime and loose living, but let us not forget that it is the sensational and abnormal that attracts public attention and causes scare headlines in the newspapers. Crime would soon become commonplace if it were not for the steady humdrum labors of the devoted social worker.

Too Many in Prison

"Prisons are not going out of business, in these days. The tragedy of the crowded jail is a reflection on our selfishness and indifference, for we might easily have saved many of these young fellows if we had the zeal, the enthusiasm, the faithfulness, to go after them while their hearts are still susceptible to good impressions.

Unemployment is a prolific cause of crime for idle hands soon get into mischief, and the next difficulty is that young men are unemployed because they have no trade or calling and machinery is doing away with the need for unskilled labor.

Patient Study of the Boy

Sending boys to a Reform School is not the solution for juvenile delinquency for it is too often a confession of our impatience and inability to find the right remedy. Many of these lads could be reformed if taken in the right way by the right people. As, however, we can never entirely dispense with the training school for those who fail, these schools should be practical workshops, planned to equip graduates for industrial life. Teaching boys to work and to love work is the aim that should be kept in view.

Great Opportunity

These are some of the thoughts that I throw out at random in the hope that we may all realize how great is the opportunity and privilege of guiding, encouraging and inspiring the young people who pass through our hands."

College Education For Janitors Now!

Los Angeles—Twenty-seven graduate janitors received diplomas for completing what is believed to be the first course in janitor engineering in the history of educational work in the United States at commencement exercises of the Frank Wiggins Trade School here recently.

The class was organized at the instigation of the Building Owners' and Managers' Association, in co-operation with the Southern California Telephone Company. The latter company recruited the pupils from its branch buildings several months ago and they have been receiving training in the operation of high and low-pressure boilers; in waxing and oiling floors and welding the mop and broom. Their diplomas are for trade proficiency and certify that the holders have completed the course in janitor engineering and served successfully in the trade for six months.

Mutt or Thoroughbred Which Has the Brains?

Scientist Believes Super-Dogs Could be Bred and Taught to Talk—Thoroughbreds Often Beautiful and Dumb

A dish of scraps for the cute mutt.

Little Beaucoup, not very handsome but full of personality, fell to with a will, and, when she had finished, her expressive eyes and vibrant tail said thanks for her meal.

The Roanoke, Virginia, housewife had fed the cunning little homeless dog because of her natural kindness. Little she guessed that she was feeding a future stage star. But such was the case, we learn from a copyrighted article by George H. Eckhardt, syndicated by Newspaper Enterprise Association.

Not long after, Beaucoup ran away with the circus—Pamahasika's Society Circus, directed by George Roberts, an animal trainer of long experience.

Because she was smart, Beaucoup became a star performer in the circus. She married Grant Murphy, another canine thespian of equal attainments; and for nearly thirty years they, their children, and their grandchildren delighted audiences.

It is such dogs as Beaucoup—mutts, hybrids, mongrels—that are really brainy, Mr. Eckhardt tells us in an article on the work of Dr. William Lentz, director of the Small Animal Hospital of the Veterinary Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania.

According to Dr. Lentz, the hybrid is the highbrow. The thoroughbred may be beautiful, but he is also likely to be dumb, for he has been bred for appearance rather than brains.

Man has been as fickle and whimsical in fashions among dogs as he has been in clothes and other every-day things.

To-day the so-called police dog enjoys a world-wide range, but from the earliest recorded times fashions have changed to suit man's whims.

From his observations of Beaucoup and animals like her, Dr. Lentz states that if the same care were exercised in breeding dogs for intelligence as is expended on arriving at some fancied physical characteristic, a race of super-dogs would soon result.

The idea of breeding dogs for their mental powers, rather than for appearance, was conceived by Gustave Michaud, in France.

While unable to complete his work, Michaud obtained startling results, and he convinced Dr. Lentz that while it would be impossible to bring about a race of dogs that could be taught to articulate, or pronounce words, they could be taught a sign language.

To obtain the best results from these experiments, the work would necessarily have to cover the lifetime of more than one man. Michaud's scheme was to breed intelligent dogs, regardless of kind.

When ever he heard of a particularly smart little dog on the stage, or in a home, he endeavored to bring it into his family of canine Einsteins.

Due to the peculiar formation of the brain of the dog, more closely resembling that of man than do those of any other common animals, he has been man's friend, and is capable of returning affection with loyalty, explains Dr. Lentz.

Temper

When I have lost my temper I have lost my reason, too. I'm never proud of anything which angrily I do.

When I have talked in anger and my cheeks were flaming red.

I have always uttered something which I wish I hadn't said.

In anger I have never done a kindly deed or wise.

But many things for which I felt I should apologize.

In looking back across my life, and all I've lost or made.

I can't recall a single time when fury ever paid.

So I struggle to be patient, for I've reached a wiser age;

I do not want to do a thing or speak a word in rage.

I have learned by sad experience that when my temper flies

I never do a worthy thing a decent deed or wise.

Man Drops 800 Feet From Ocean Surface

Hamilton, Bermuda—A record depth of 800 feet beneath the ocean's surface was reached June 10 by William Beebe of the New York Zoological Society's oceanographic expedition, in a steel ball with fused quartz windows. The previous depth mark was 325 feet.

The hollow sphere in which Mr. Beebe made the dive contained an oxygen supply and was fitted with apparatus for absorbing exhaled air. The ball was lowered by cable from a tug and telephone conversations between the diver and the surface were successfully carried on.

The expedition hopes to make observations at a depth of a half-mile by means of its apparatus.

The Telephone And Its Origin

50th Anniversary Slips by Unnoticed—Links the Three English-Speaking Races

Scarcely noticed, there has just slipped past the fiftieth anniversary of the Bell telephone system in Canada. The event is important, for the development of the telephone really dates from the organization of that company, and a large share in the glory of the invention must go to the Dominion. Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, conducted experiments both at Brantford, Ont.—near his father's home—and at Boston, Mass. Brantford claims—and the claims are supported by evidence of a convincing nature—that the telephone was invented there and perfected in Boston. Boston has its own version of the invention.

But while the controversy has proceeded apace the system has developed with such rapidity that the extent of its ramifications is hardly appreciated. By telephone a man on a moving train in Canada may now converse with a friend in England; a member of the British Government can leave a debate in Parliament a few minutes to consult an official in Borneo; or a man in Germany can talk with a friend in South America, while paths are being mapped out for a Commonwealth system that will include a regular service between London and India. This is the telephone in its later phases. Its domestic uses are too well known to need description.

Such amazing progress has only served to sharpen the debate between those who hold that Brantford is the cradle of the telephone and those who assert the prior claims of Boston. In this dispute a third, yet not unimportant factor, is somewhat overlooked, and that is the inventor's own cosmopolitan habitat. Bell was born in Scotland, emigrated to Canada, and later proceeded to the United States. He thus served as a link between three great English-speaking countries and his invention thus regarded is a much better subject of consideration than as a question upon which well meaning citizens of great nations disagree.

Home

Who has a roof above his head,
A patch of soil to keep,
A lawn to mow, and seeds to sow
Which later he shall reap,
And children small, on earth has all
That makes men smile or weep.

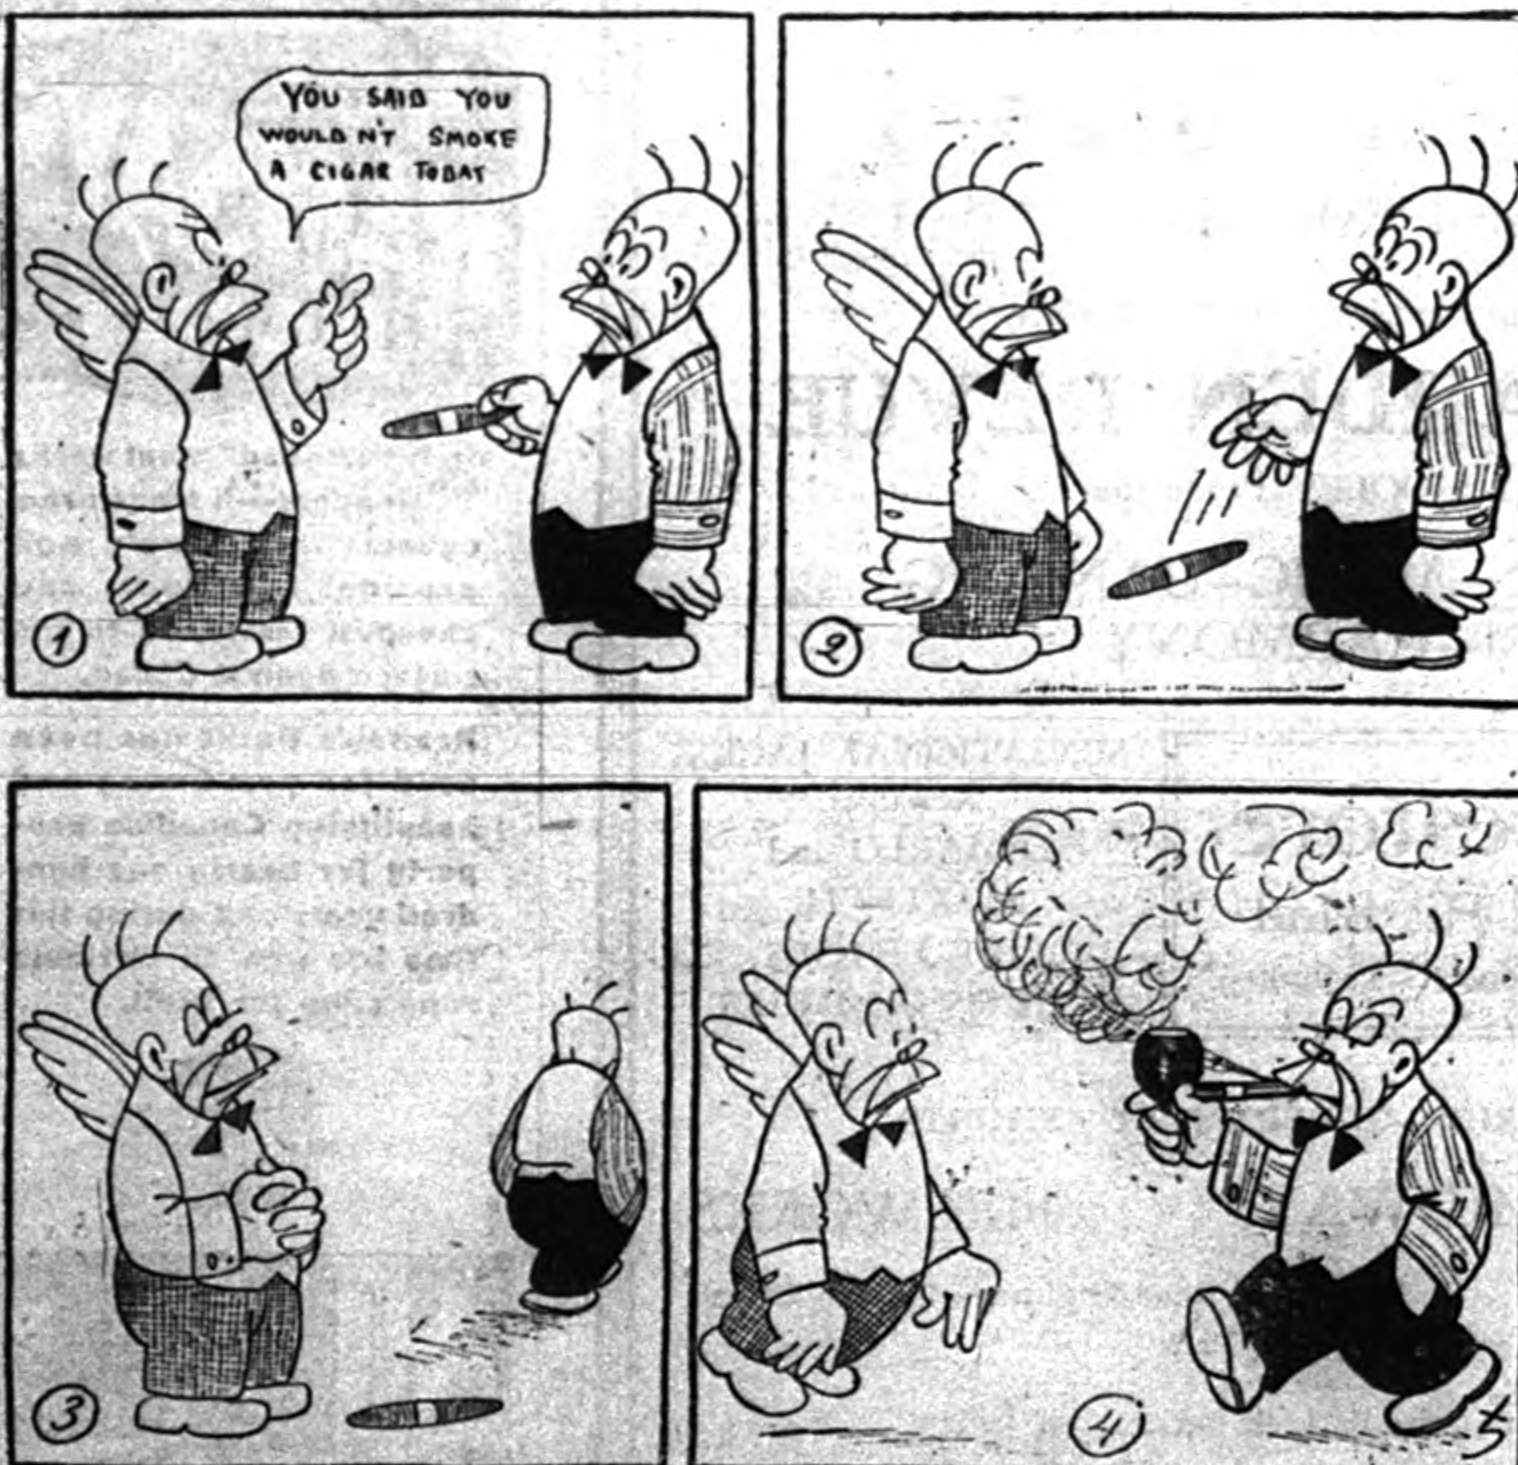

Who has of books a shelf or two,
Of friends but three or four;
A fire to blaze through winter days,
In summer at the door
A climbing rose, that taller grows,
Has all men struggle for.

For not in much contentment dwells
The joys of men are told
In things like these: familiar trees,
And love and friendships old.
Four walls contain all mirth and pain
The human heart can hold.

For only that is happiness
Which sets the home aglow,
And man shall grieve when loved ones leave,
And only that is woe.
Thus roof and wall of home hold all
A man shall ever know.

A Night In Bachelor's Hall
They've gone away! It seems a year, Aye, weeks of years, since they were here.

And yet it was but yesterday I kissed them when they went away; Away from all the scorching heat That grips this brick-walled city street. And it was I who bade them go. Though, the dear heart, protested so, And vowed I'd find no joy at all, Nor any peace, in Bachelor's Hall. I laughed at that, but she was right; I never knew a sadder night Than this, while thus I tread alone, These silent halls I call my own. I never thought this place could change

So utterly, and seem so strange. The night is hot and yet a chill Pervades the house; it is so still. I miss the living atmosphere That comforts me when they are here; I miss the sigh, long drawn and deep, The music of refreshing sleep, That undulates the gentle breast Of weary motherhood at rest. And in the unaccustomed gloom That shrouds the small adjoining room

I miss the moans, the muffled screams, Of childhood troubles in its dreams. O! Sing your song, all ye who roam; Your wistful song of Home, Sweet Home,

But, though unhappy is your lot, You will not find a sadder spot In all the world, than Home, when they

Sheep Usurped by Bunnies

For many years rabbit fur has been used to adorn milady's coat. This fur has been dyed, manipulated, treated, or bleached and made to resemble the more expensive furs. Animal lovers have always deplored the death of so many rabbits to appease milady's vanity.

A rabbit has now been developed which bears a plentiful crop of "rabbit wool," and the first angora wool farm has been started near Windsor, England, by Lady Rachel Byng. An angora rabbit will supply an average of an ounce of wool per year in four clippings. The wool can be spun on even the old type of spinning wheel. The rabbit does not suffer when clipped, nor is it injured in any way. The wool that is produced is very silky and highly prized. It is possible that Lady Byng has started a new industry which may partially supplant sheep farming.

WHEN YOUR CHILD IS FEVRISH

Give Him Baby's Own Tablets

The health of babies and little children is subject to rapid changes. Thus the mother must be on her guard. At the first sign of feverishness Baby's Own Tablets should be given—this may avert a serious illness.

Concerning the Tablets Mrs. Norman Lee, Uxbridge, Ont., says: "My little boy, now three years old, was not at all well. He was feverish and had no appetite. I gave him Baby's Own Tablets and he was soon well again. I would not be without the Tablets as long as there are young children in the house."

Baby's Own Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Latest Zoo Inmate Hard to Describe

New York—Near the animal house in the Bronx Park Zoo a small animal with brown fur that looks something like the second cousin of a dog enjoys the distinction and honor that goes with "the latest acquisition." He gazes wistfully at the large crowds and occasionally snarls defiantly to let the passer-by know he is the "only one in captivity."

When Curator Raymond L. Ditmars transferred the canine from a box from South America to a place in the zoo, he shook his head and was at a loss for words to describe him. Although the animal looked like a dog, he was more than a dog, and after inquiries into animal lore, a sign was placed on the cage bearing the words "Cercopithecus Microtis."

Paint stains can be removed from clothes by saturating the stain with equal parts of ammonia and spirit of turpentine. Repeat the process two or three times if necessary, then wash out in warm, soapy water.

A writer says that woman is the playmate and helpmate of man. And often the cheque-mate as well.

Clubs Are Planned For British Women

First Experiment Will Be Made in the Island of Cyprus

London.—A plan for assisting British professional women is now being advanced. To those working out of their own country the problem of where to live on retirement is a real difficulty. Most of them have no homes, and in many cases have no particular wish to return to England, where their problem might be even more difficult of solution.

To meet such cases as these residential clubs abroad are to be started, beginning with Cyprus. This place has been chosen because the members would be living under the British flag, in an ideal climate, free from heavy living expenses, and in a locality specially favorable to women whose lives have been spent in foreign lands. Miss Helen H. Dennison, originator of the scheme, is full of expectation of its success.

The inhabitants of Cyprus are expert at needlework, and also make honey and jams in considerable quantities. It is proposed to co-operate with them in developing their work and selling their produce, thus affording social and mental stimulation for all concerned. These British professional women abroad are drawn from many professions, teachers, librarians, stenographers, accountants and so forth. The aim of the residential clubs is to afford them opportunity to continue working while providing them with a home and, at the same time, plenty of interesting things to occupy time and energy.

It is hoped to follow the first club in Cyprus by another in one of the Channel Islands. To join the proposed household a woman has to be over 60 years of age.

BRIGHT EYES, ROSY CHEEKS

The Birthright of Every Girl.

Dull eyes mean misery and weakness—sure sign of a bloodless condition. Anemic girls and women have dull, heavy eyes with dark lines underneath. The bright-eyed girl or woman is always happy and well.

There is one way to make the eyes bright—to bring the glow of health to pale cheeks—this is to invigorate the body with new blood—rich, red health-giving blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills do this and they do it well. Concerning them Mrs. Robert Devitt, Brougham, Ont., says: "My daughter became so ill and nervous we had to take her out of school. She was pale and thin; her eyes were dull and the least exertion upset her. I began giving her Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and in less than six months you would not know her. She gained in weight and strength and is now the picture of health."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Sun Loses Weight 250,000,000 Tons

A Pound of Sunshine, Please!

—Rays that Weigh Millions of Tons a Second

For hundreds of years English-speaking folk have used expressions such as "The sunlight strikes the hilltop" without realizing that they spoke not in metaphors but of an actual fact. To strike means to deliver a blow; there can be no blow without weight behind it. But can light itself weigh anything at all?

Science has proved recently that it can and does. Sir James Jeans tells us that with a sufficiently strong light one could knock down a man.

Minute measurements have shown that a huge searchlight requiring the equivalent of fifty horsepower to operate would radiate one-twentieth of an ounce of light and heat if it were kept working continuously for a hundred years. Heat as well as light can be put into the scales and weighed. So can wireless waves or X-rays.

Every square inch of the Sun's surface is as powerful an emitter as our fifty-horsepower searchlight. The candle-power of the Sun is expressed by a staggering figure—323, followed by twenty-five noughts or three thousand two hundred and thirty quadrillions. If every square inch brings out only a twentieth of an ounce of light and heat in a century, the Sun's whole surface is emitting over four million tons in each second of time!

In a single minute, outpourings of light and heat cost the Sun 250,000,000 tons of weight. An astonishing thought is that the Sun as we see him today is 360,000 million tons lighter than he was this time yesterday.

There is no need to worry; the Sun has gone on "slimming" at this rate for thousands of millions of years, and there is enough of him left to allow him to light and heat the world for untold ages.

Horses Like Humans Fancy Cold Drinks

The season is here when the fanciers of young and old turn to long, cold drinks in glasses that tinkle musically when they move. Hot summer days without cold drinks would seem unbearable to human beings. How must it seem to horses working in the heat of the day beneath brazen skies, with, perhaps, only a drink night and morning? Many housewives, during the summer months, have greatly relieved the suffering horses by placing a card near the top on the lawn informing drivers that they may water their horses there. The watering troughs for horses in the city are too few and far between. There are localities where a horse may travel miles without getting a drink from a public trough. The Imperial Oil stations have been supplied with pails, 10¢ having been given out last year.

The Society will be glad to supply cards to anyone who applies for them. Will you do your bit for thirsty horses, if you have a lawn top? And will you ask your delivery men if they carry a pail to water their horses during the day?—Humane Pleader.

School Diplomas

DON'T SUFFER WITH DANGEROUS INDIGESTION

Do you suffer after meals with a belching, from sour and acid stomach? Many believe they have heart trouble and tremble with fear, expecting any minute to drop dead. This condition can be prevented, likewise relieved. Take Carter's Little Liver Pills after meals and neutralize the gases. Sweeten the sour and acid stomach, relieve the gas and encourage digestion. The stomach, liver and bowels will be cleansed of poison, painful and dangerous indigestion disappears and the system enjoys a tonic effect. Don't delay. Ask your druggist for a 25¢ pkg. of Carter's Little Liver Pills.

HOW I LOST 28 LBS.

In a Safe, Easy Way

Read how one woman lost 28 lbs. of fat, without diet, without dangerous drugs or exercises. "I take a daily dose of Kruschen, and I have lost two inches round the waist and hips and 28 lbs. since last summer. I feel very well on it and people tell me I look very fit. I am 5 ft. 4 in. in height, 40 years old, and come of a stout family." Miss E. L. Don't go lumbering about with a burden of unhealthy, excess fat—you can get rid of it easily if you get the Kruschen habit. Kruschen Salts provides the easiest, safest and surest way to lose fat that you can possibly desire. By purifying your blood of harmful acids, helping the liver, kidneys and bowels to throw off waste material, they remove in a natural way the fatty deposits which poisonous waste matter has produced. Not only do you lose pounds in weight, but you lose years in appearance. Little by little, the ugly fat disappears—slowly, yes—but surely—and you soon feel wonderfully healthy, vital and energetic—more so than ever before in your life.

Too Much ACID

Many people, two hours after eating, suffer indigestion as they call it. It is usually excess acid. Correct it with an alkali. The best way, the quick, harmless and efficient way, is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It has remained for 50 years the standard with physicians. One spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in stomach acids, and at once. The symptoms disappear in five minutes.

You will never use crude methods when you know this better method. And you will never suffer from excess acid when you prove out this easy relief. Please do that—for your own sake—now.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. Each bottle contains full directions—any drugstore.

THE PASSING OF J. JOHN

It is many years ago that the well-known figure of J. John traversed the roads of this town and county in the interests of the tea business in which he was engaged. The slogan of "As high as the Rockies in Quality" was one which will be remembered and there are yet those in this community who are still getting their supplies of tea and coffee from Peterboro where Mr. John had built up a very fine business.

As a man, J. John was greatly esteemed and many regrets were expressed when he moved from Lachute to the larger sphere of activity in Ontario.

It is with deep regret that his many friends learn of his sudden demise, and the Evening Standard of Peterboro baring date of June 25th. has just come to hand and gives the following account:—

Peterborough suffers another decided loss in the death last night of Joseph John. Active in business until several weeks ago, when he was taken ill, Mr. John passed away at his home, 366 Simcoe Street.

He was known and loved for his humanitarian endeavors, his high standard of citizenship and applied ideals. He was one of the most active and honored members of the local Kiwanis Club, giving himself over to the heavy duties of that office with all his zeal and energy. Later he was district trustee of the Kiwanis Club. Always on the side of the best in life, he allied himself wholeheartedly with the Boy Scout movement, and in 1927 was president of the Peterborough Boy Scouts' Association. He was for many years one of the guiding spirits of the organization. This year he offered himself for municipal service, and was elected to the Board of Education.

Born in Manchester, England, Mr. John came to Canada as a young man. Twenty-two years ago he established the John Tea Company here, and the nature of his business brought him into contact with nearly everyone. He carried his same high qualities and standards into his business life.

He was a member for years of St. Andrew's Church, where he held the office of elder.

He is survived by his wife, one brother, William, of Manchester, England, and one sister, Hannah also of Manchester.

Mr. and Mrs. Pelly, Mr. and Mrs. Carson and daughter Enid, Mr. and Mrs. Evans, of Ahuntsic, Miss Gladys Sutton, Mr. and Mrs. Hill and sons Jack and Norman, of Montreal, are spending the summer at Lake Louise.

The many friends of Mrs. Harold McFaul will sympathize with her and her three sisters, in the loss of their mother Mrs. C. W. Arthur, of Belle Riviere, who passed away on Tuesday last in the Montreal General Hospital.

Among those attending the 100th Anniversary of the Royal Orange Association were Messrs. Jos. Boyd, of Lachute; Clarence Neill, of Lake Louise; Nelson Morrison, of Dunsmuir; W. J. Cooper and family, of Brownsburg; Stanley Holt, James Morrison and W. T. MacNaughton, of Lachute.

The ladies of Lachute and surrounding district, who are so kindly sending their flowers to Montreal, to help brighten the lives of sick ones, are asked to send these flowers on the 9.30 a.m. train, as when sent on the 11.35, they miss the morning collection, and are not delivered until late afternoon. Any of the ladies, who find it inconvenient to meet this early train, if they will communicate with either of the chairmen, they will gladly call. This change will become effective this Tuesday, July 22nd.

A very pleasant and profitable Sale and Tea were held in the Town Hall, St. Andrews East, on Saturday, July 12th, under the auspices of the W. A. of the Anglican Church. After doing full justice to the good things provided for the tea, there was a feast of song and story. Piano Solo by Miss Wason, Vocal Solos by Mrs. Gilbertson, Mr. Flower and Mr. Fraser. Selections by Lachute Male Quartette consisting of Messrs. Duncan, Gorman, Owen and Douglas Todd, and a reading by Mrs. Macnaughton. Accompanists Misses Ruth Todd and A. L. Wales.

NO THREE-CORNERED FIGHT

While information was brought to the Watchman last week of the possible entry of a third candidate in the political field by the appearance of Notary, Z. N. Raymond, who signified his intention to run as a straight Liberal, claiming that much pressure had been brought upon him by electors of both parties to contest the county in the present fight we now learn from reliable source, that the contest will be confined to Sir George Perley and Mr. L. L. Legault.

LACHUTE BRANCH OF THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC FISH & GAME CLUB

A meeting of those interested in the organization of a branch of the Fish and Game Club was held in Lachute on Wednesday evening, resulting in the election of following officers:

J. T. Ayers, Honorary President; P. A. Fortin, Acting President; Vice-Presidents, C. Tremblay, Mayor, R. Langille, J. R. Charroin, Z. N. Raymond, Directors: Harry Ayers, O. Paquette, Wm. Deacon, Leslie Morris, El St-Maurice, Dr. Drew, O. Gosselin, Dr. Lavigne, Scouts: F. Ashworth, E. M. Jones, H. St-Jacques, Philippe Mallette, Athanase Samson, A. Miller, F. Jenkins, A. Cooke, Secretary: R. A. Giles; Charlie Fortin, Acting Secretary.

Moved by Mr. Leslie Morris, seconded by Mr. E. St-Maurice that above ticket be voted unanimously.

The Pioneer Women's Institute were indeed favored with an ideal evening for their Ice Cream Social held on the lawn of Mr. Geo. Armstrong, on Thursday last. The Brownsburg Orchestra rendered delightful music during the serving of the ice cream and cake, which was greatly enjoyed.

Mr. L. Hooker acted as chairman, and proved to fill the position in first class shape. A very lengthy, but interesting entertainment that all appreciated, had been arranged, consisting of group songs, solos, recitations, quartettes etc., and the Robert Sisters, from Brownsburg were especially pleasing with the rendering of their trios in costume, and "The Pirate Song" made a great hit and was worthy of the encore given. The singing of the National Anthem brought the evening to a close.

The weather condition of Friday evening last proved very unsuitable for the St. Simeon's Church Lawn Social held on Mrs. Robert Miller's Lawn, but still the attendance was splendid considering the handicap, as the people had turned out in full force to see the radio artists Messrs. Marrazza and Hokea, only to be disappointed at the arrival of the entertainers. The wardens had received word that they had left Montreal and were on their way to Lachute, but at 10 p.m. they had not arrived so a programme had to be hurriedly arranged of local talent, which was well appreciated by the audience. The motoring rug was raffled and won by Miss Amy Combie. The proceeds of the social amounted to a little over $180.00.

OBITUARY

THE LATE MRS. W. J. MORROW.

It is with deep regret that the death of Mrs. W. J. Morrow, of Dalesville, is recorded. After a serious operation, Mrs. Morrow passed away at the Royal Victoria Hospital, early Saturday morning.

She was born in Brownsburg in 1881, but since her marriage 22 years ago, has lived in Dalesville.

She leaves her husband and four children Florence, June and John in Dalesville, and Lawrence in Dundern, Saskatchewan; five sisters Mrs. S. Wilson, Mrs. R. Stuart, Mrs. F. Brunelle, all of Brownsburg; Mrs. Clossen, Mrs. F. Lamoureux, of Montreal and three brothers James Martin, of Brownsburg; Charles Martin, of Lachute, and George Martin, of Strathclair, Manitoba.

The funeral was held on Sunday, July 13th, at 2 p.m. in the Dalesville Baptist Church. The Rev. A. Penman conducted the service, which was attended by a great number of friends and relatives.

The pallbearers were Messrs. Jas. Martin, Fred Brunelle, Walter Clossen, Austin Morrow, Thomas Morrow and Burton Cuthbert.

Those attending from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Aikin, Miss Evelyn Whitlaw, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Read, and Mr. Baden Read, all of Ottawa; and Messrs. Burton and Kenneth Cuthbert, Alex. Christie, Mr. & Mrs. H. Robertson, Mrs. D. McWatters and Miss M. McWatters, all of Montreal.

There were many beautiful flowers sent, among them wreaths from the sisters, brothers, nephew and nieces, also Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Aiken Sprays from the School children, Mr. A. Christie, Messrs. Kenneth and Burton Cuthbert, Mrs. W. Fletcher, Mr. and Mrs. Austin Morrow, Mr. & Mrs. D. McWatters, Mr. W. J. Stewart, Miss A. Stewart and Mr. and Mrs. Harold Robertson.

Tragedy of Marble Island Disclosed

Half a Century Passed Before Full Details Were Discovered

News from the Far North during the past six months has recounted many daring adventures, entailing great peril and hardship, and many acts truly heroic performed by brave and resourceful Canadians, drawn in the first place from the ordinary, peaceful pursuits of civil life.

In all these thrilling tales the aeroplane enters as the dominating material element, but not the wholly dominating one. That was the character of the men beside the engine and behind the wheel.

All of these tales of adventure from the Far North are tributes to the young manhood of Canada; all are inspiring, and most of them are bright. Here and there, however, is one on which the curtain falls on darkness, another tragedy is added to the long list that throws its shadow across the history of the Great Lone Land.

Without the aeroplane, the most modern and the swiftest of all means of locomotion, many, probably most of these adventures, would have ended in disaster like that, for instance, which occurred a little more than two hundred years ago on an island off the northwestern shore of Hudson Bay.

Aeroplane would have saved the two ships, crews marooned there, all of whom perished of hardship, exposure, and starvation. Such is the story of the Tragedy of Marble Island.

On the northwestern shore of Hudson Bay an arm extends a considerable distance inland, known as Chesterfield Inlet, near the mouth of the Inlet is an island of moderate size called Marble Island because of the kind of rock found there.

During the last quarter of the eighteenth century the Hudson's Bay Company carried on a black whale fishery in the Bay and Marble Island was the rendezvous of the whales, but at the time of the occurrence of the tragedy, now to be recounted, whaling operations had not reached these waters and very seldom did white men set foot on Marble Island.

Always seeking to increase their knowledge of the vast region committed to their control in order that trade might be promoted and safe-guarded, the Governors of the Hudson's Bay Company, in the early part of the open season of 1719, sent out from London two vessels for the purpose of exploring the western coast of the Bay from what is now Churchill, the northern terminus of the Hudson Bay Railway, to the mouth of Chesterfield Inlet.

One vessel was the frigate "Albany," commanded by Captain Barlow; the other the sloop "Discovery" under Captain Vaughan, the whole expedition in charge of Captain James Knight.

These two small vessels, stout and most sea-worthy, and well fitted out in every respect, sailed from Gravesend, London, early in June, 1719. After they had passed out of the Thames and turning westward, left the shores of England behind, they were never again seen adrift by white men.

No uneasiness was felt when the ships did not return to England at the end of the year, because they were well supplied with provisions and outfit for wintering in the Far North, but when the end of the year 1721 arrived and neither frigate nor sloop had been heard from, the Company became alarmed.

In the following June the Governors of the Company in London sent orders to their officers on Hudson Bay that the sloop "Whalebone," then in those waters, should make search for the missing explorers. Unfortunately the sloop was cruising in the northern waters, and did not receive the orders in time to carry them out that season.

And here one instinctively turns to a comparison of the means available two hundred years ago for meeting such a pressing emergency and those available to-day. To-day wireless telegraphy would in a few minutes convey the orders to the "Whalebone," while at the same time aeroplanes would be scouting every coast.

Marble Island would have been visited and its secret revealed. In fact, there would have been action two years earlier, before Marble Island had a tragedy to relate.

After receiving the orders sent out by sailing ship, of course, the "Whalebone" had to go into winter quarters, for the end of the open season was at hand.

It was not until the following summer, 1722, three years after the expedition had sailed from London, that search was made for the missing vessels, the "Albany" and the "Discovery."

After coasting a considerable distance northward along the western shore of the Bay, the "Whalebone" came upon Eskimos wearing white men's clothing; but it was possible that the Eskimos might have come by these garments in trading with whites.

No information was obtained respecting the fate of Captain Knight and the men who had sailed with him on the "Albany" and the "Discovery."

One conjecture was that Captain Knight had discovered the long-dreamed-of North-West Passage through the Arctic, that he had entered the Pacific by way of Behring Strait, and would in due time be heard from. These conjectures were false. The explorers had left their bones in the Far North, but it was not until forty-eight years later that the nature of their fate was learned. It was the black whale fishermen who discovered the dark secret of Marble Island.

When the "Albany" and the "Discovery" entered Hudson Bay in the summer of 1719 there was no whale fishing in waters adjacent to Marble Island, but by the year 1767 such fishery was carried on all along the western coast.

On a summer day of that year a boat-crew landed on the most easterly portion of Marble Island, and there they made a startling and significant discovery. There, among the stones and gravel, the fishermen found guns, anchors, cables, a blacksmith's anvil, and many other articles, all of English make, and all defaced by weather and time.

Apparently the Eskimos had no use for them or had found them too heavy to remove. Near stood the remains of a frame building, to a large extent demolished by Eskimos, seeking wood and nails.

When the tide was out there became visible the hulls of two vessels, lying in about thirty feet of water. The figure-head of the vessel and its guns were raised shortly afterwards, and sent to England.

On this inhospitable island, nearly half a century before had perished Knight and Barlow and Vaughan and all the other members of the exploring expedition of 1719.

Two years after this discovery, another whaling party landed on Marble Island, and one of the party, coming upon an aged Eskimo, questioned him and obtained further information respecting the fate of the crews of the "Albany" and the "Discovery." The account received by the whalers from the Eskimos was to this effect:

When the doomed vessels arrived at Marble Island, it was late in the autumn of 1719, and in making the harbor through the ice the vessels were greatly damaged and both went down within the harbor. The crews however, landed in safety, and at once set about building a house. As soon as the ice permitted in the following summer, the Eskimos paid them a further visit and observed that the white strangers were largely reduced in number and that the survivors were very unhealthy in appearance. According to the account given by these Eskimos, these survivors were very busily employed, but the nature of the employment they could not easily describe. It is probable that they were lengthening the longboat, or repairing the ship and to support this conjecture, forty-eight years later there lay, at a little distance from the house, a quantity of oak chips, "most assuredly made up by carpenters."

By the second winter only twenty were alive out of the fifty of the crews of the two vessels. The Eskimos who had taken up their temporary abode on the opposite side of the harbor, supplied the English explorers with such coarse food as whale's blubber, seal-oil and train oil.

When spring came these Eskimos crossed to the mainland, but in the summer of 1721 they again visited Marble Island, where they found only five white men alive. Such was the hunger and distress, the latter that they instantly seized upon the seal-flesh and whale blubber given them by the Eskimos in exchange for certain articles of iron.

The excess to which the whites ate the strong, coarse food brought on severe illness of which three of the five died within a few days.

Although very weak, the two survivors managed to dig a large grave, and in it bury their dead companions.

During several weeks longer the two survivors dragged out a wretched existence. Whenever their ebbing strength permitted, they crawled during the day to the summit of a rock near their camp, in the hope of being seen by some rescue party.

Finally the last spark of hope flickered and went out in the darkness of despair. The Eskimo related that the two men were seen to crouch down close together and cry aloud like children, the tears rolling down their cheeks. The end now was close at hand, and death must have come as a relief to the last two survivors. Coming upon the camp one day the Eskimo saw one of the white men stretched out on the gravel, sleeping peacefully the sleep that knows no waking.

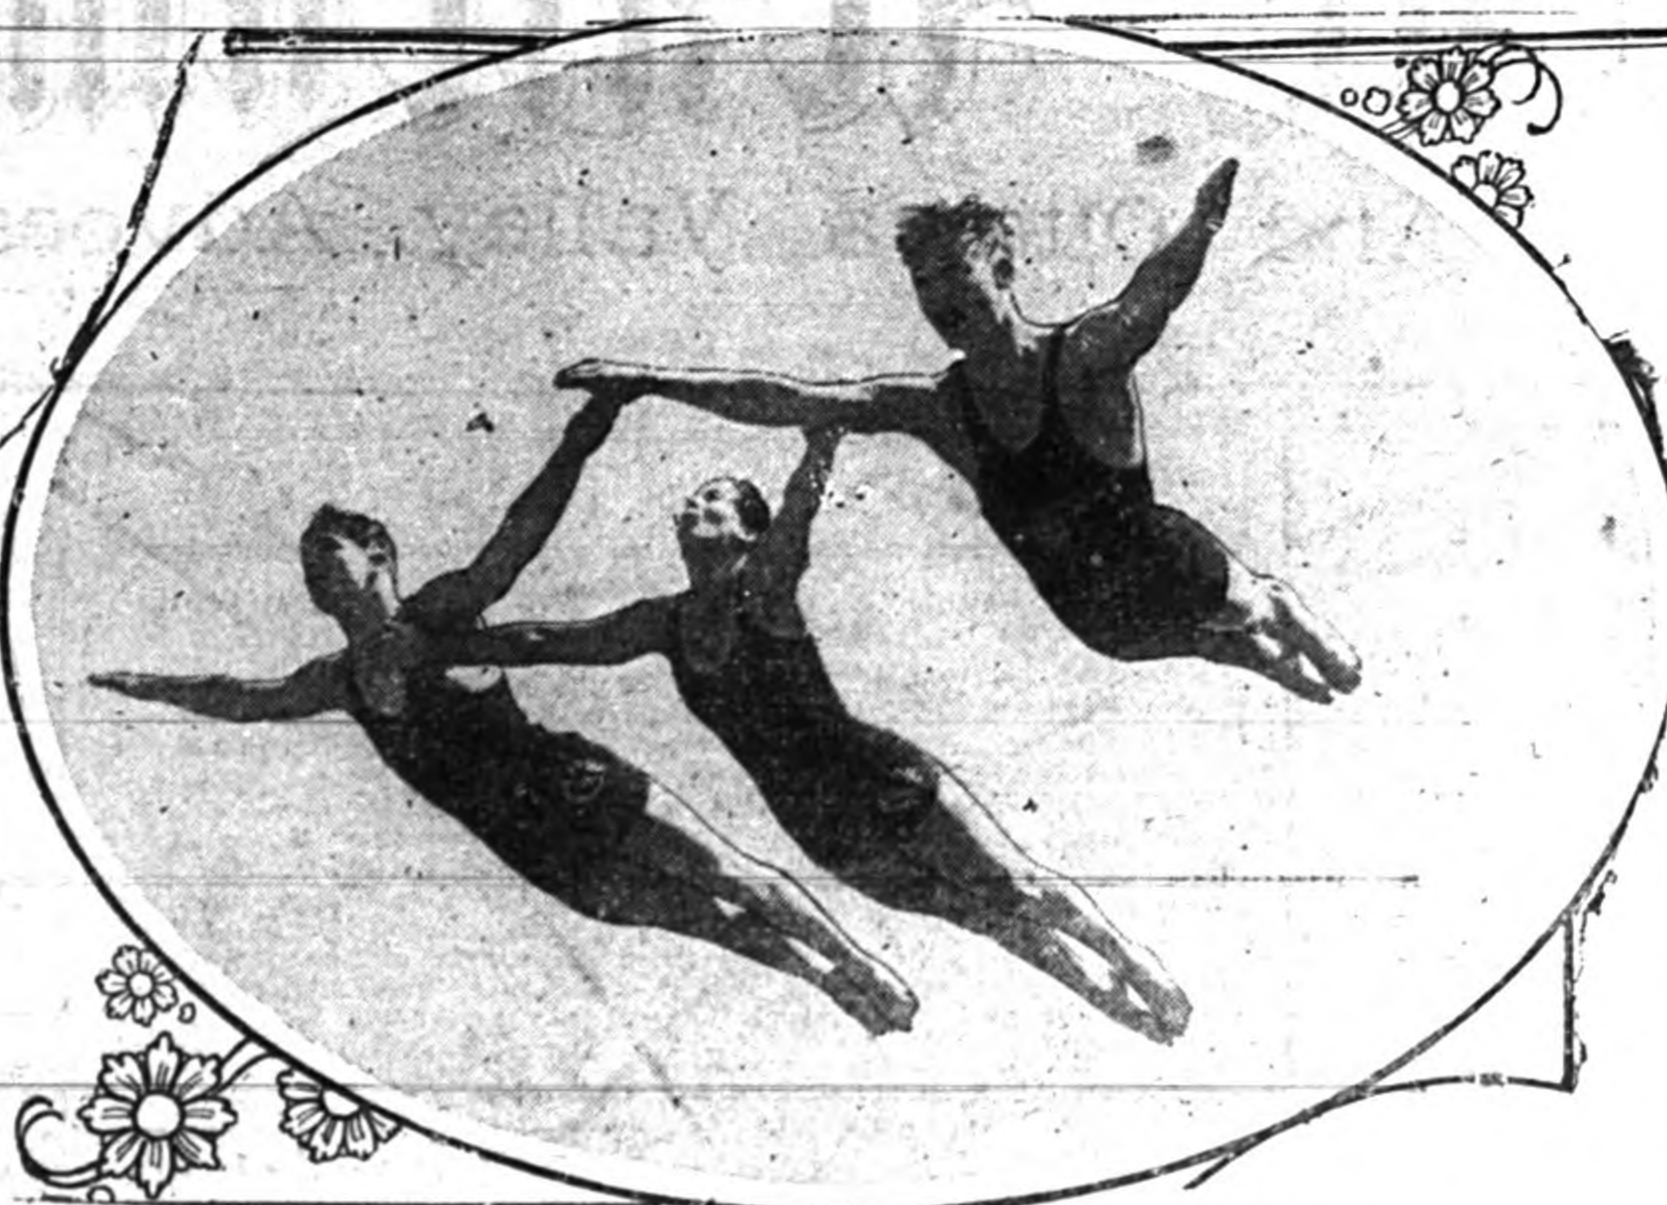

Near by was the sole survivor, weak, sick, and emaciated—a miserable, living skeleton. With spade in his trembling, withered hands he was trying to dig a grave for the dead man beside him. While the poor, loyal creature labored at his task he fell dead into the little hole he had scooped out of the hard earth. The crews of the "Albany" and "Discovery" had reached port at last.

The Eskimos did not attempt to complete the burial, for the old man who gave this account of the fate of the explorers, took the fishermen to the spot where the two men had died, and there, lying above ground were found their skulls and the large bones of their skeletons.

After a silence of almost half a century, Marble Island had given up its secret.

England's Rural Women Study Needs

Specially Trained Teachers Called for—Convenient Water Supply Urged

Blackpool, Eng.—The rural women of England and Wales are unanimous in their desire for education—education, that is, on lines adapted to their special needs.

At the annual general meeting of the National Federation of Women's Institutes held recently here there was little doubt that the main line of interest lay in the direction of the establishment of facilities which would carry into the rural districts better understanding of the methods of agricultural work and better knowledge of those domestic subjects with which, more than any other thing, the country woman spends her days.

One-fifth of the workers in agriculture and horticulture are women, but the plea of the country woman is not for these workers alone, but for all those other workers who, in small villages and lonely farms and cottages up and down the land, are engaged in the making of homes and in the rearing and, in large measure, the training, of children.

The Women's Rural Institute movement is rapidly becoming in England one of the most powerful of national bodies, which has grown since its first beginnings in 1915, to an organization which now includes 4,500 institutes—a total larger by 232 than that of a year ago—an boasts a membership of some 270,600.

Practical Education Stressed

Throughout the last year, and during the coming year, as was explained by Lady Denman from the chair, the main effort of the executive has been, and will be, to carry out the wish, definitely put forward at the last annual general meeting, that the national and county federations should concentrate largely upon obtaining the adoption of some of the reforms which were recommended in the report, drawn up by the federation, on the practical education of women for rural life.

Efforts have been made to bring to the notice of the Minister of Agriculture the necessity for special training of teachers in farm household management, and for the appointment of more women inspectors to help and advise the county authorities on the education of women in agricultural subjects—the work of the one woman at present employed by the Ministry for this purpose having proved of such value.

Efforts, too, have been, and will be made to obtain for certain teachers specialized training for the instruction of rural children; and very definite efforts are leading in the direction of making special provision, in the schemes necessitated by the raising of the school-leaving age, for the teaching of domestic economy to adults as well as to the older girls.

Board's Support Pledged

The proposals made by Lady Denman were answered by H. M. Richards, chief inspector of the Board of Education, who was the guest of the conference, and answered in a way which gave hope that some at least of the rural women's desires would be granted.

Difficulty of circumstance, and the extreme caution and tardiness of officials, Mr. Richards said, accounted for the slow progress made, although the Board of Education did intend to give all the help possible.

"We of the Ministry want your co-operation," Mr. Richards said, "in making it possible to teach the older girls and the adult women together, so that education may go on in a continuous line and be fruitful to everyone."

A resolution which embodied the main requests made by Lady Denman, and pledged the institutes to "do all in their power to co-operate with the local education authorities (authorities for general and agricultural education) in meeting the present urgent need for such instruction" was carried unanimously.

A resolution was carried which welcomed the stimulus given by the 1929 Local Government Act to the schemes for the supply of water to the rural districts, and urged women's institutes to press their county councils to take the initiative in the foundation of an advisory regional water committee in order that, so far as water was concerned, the interests of town and country might be jointly considered.

Water a Main Problem

Woman after woman, the wives and daughters of farmers and cottagers, told of the plight of their villages where water had to be carried from a single pump in the village square, or paid for by the bucket, or drawn from deep wells and filtered, or brought from a distance by a water cart.

The conference called, too, for a larger use of English flour and expressed its satisfaction at the action of the Ministry of Agriculture in bringing into force regulations for the application of the national mark to all English flour with a view to standardizing English wheat.

The conference gave attention, among other things, to questions relating to the inadequate punishments often given in cases of cruelty to children, and to various questions dealing with cruelty practiced in the trapping of rabbits and in the training of performing animals.

It dealt, too, with the need for an awakening among country people to the ruthless sweeping away of the ancient buildings which were the priceless heritage of British people, calling upon women to prevent the sacrifice of beauty to utility before the arm of modern reform had gone too far. One evening was given over to the singing of folk songs.

Paint the rug in the usual way and when dry apply two coats of varnish, allowing one to dry thoroughly before applying the next. Contrasting borders will give the linoleum the resemblance of a rug. One housewife produced a much admired floor covering by using stencils to form a design in corner squares in black on a gray ground, while rest of border was green and the centre gray.

Linoleum thus treated will give service for several years more.

Atmosphere Will Be Made to Order?

Oxygen No Longer Symbol of Life—Science Will Make Own Mixture in Future?

Oxygen became the very symbol of life when the chemist discovered its essential role in vital processes. It was supposed that other gases merely fully diluted the oxygen so that we would not burn ourselves up in a mysterious flameless fashion. Helium, argon, neon, krypton, long undiscovered because they occur in barely detectable quantities, were simply misunderstood curiosities which have only recently acquired industrial importance.

These time-honored teachings are now rudely shaken by Professor J. Willard Hershey. With a five-gallon jar, into which gas was fed and from which it escaped in measured quantities, and with an assorted collection of mice, rats, pigeons, cats, guinea pigs, snakes and monkeys, he verified some old facts and discovered some startling new ones. No animal can live in any one of the atmospheric gases alone for any great length of time. Oxygen kills in a few days, except when it is supplied to water animals under natural conditions. Even when oxygen is mixed with another gas, the artificial atmosphere created cannot usually support life. Helium mingled with oxygen is an exception. Animals thrive in the mixture. Although they constitute less than 1 per cent. of the air we breathe, the rare gases—argon, neon, krypton, xenon, helium and carbon dioxide—prove to be as important in maintaining life as oxygen.

The earth's atmosphere turns out to be not a haphazard mixture but a carefully compounded prescription for just the kind of life that the earth is now supporting. What might not have been the course of evolution if the primordial protoplasm that first slipped about in a marsh millions of years ago had adapted itself to a little less helium and argon than the atmosphere then contained?

Professor Hershey draws practical conclusions from his experiments. Having definitely shown that animals live better in atmospheres different from that which nature now prescribes, he wonders whether man may not adapt himself more perfectly to the strange environments that industry creates. If foul air hampers the diver, the miner or the submarine sailor, let science provide him with the right atmosphere. Aircraft of the future will probably be hermetically sealed and will fly at altitudes of 30,000 feet to take advantage of favorable, constant air currents. High-flying passengers must be fed with something better than the pure oxygen hitherto recommended. Professor Hershey believes that he may have opened the way to the control of disease through a knowledge of the physiological effect of atmospheres made to order. There are not the hasty assumptions of an enthusiastic experimenter. Professor Hershey's researches have been carried on for eight years.

A Sick Ant-Eater Creates Problem

Five keepers of the London Zoo recently found themselves faced with the problem of giving medicine to an ant-eater. The patient, the largest of its kind in London, was said by the keepers to possess unusual muscular strength, and, like all of its breed, seemed peculiarly designed by nature to resist such attention.

A funnel, for instance, would not fit into the long narrow slit of the ant-eater's mouth, but after several keepers' uniforms were torn, it was observed that the animal was licking up whatever medicine had been inadvertently spilled on its coat and the problem was solved.

Relics of Nelson

A number of Nelson relics are to be sold by public auction at Sotheby's, in London.

They include two watches presented to the great admiral by Sir William and Lady Hamilton; and Nelson's own sextant, compass, and midshipman's short sword. A pewter dish engraved "H.M.S. Victory," and a number of personal belongings of Captain Hardy, in whose arms Nelson died at Trafalgar, will also be sold.

These various articles have been handed down in the Hardy family for generations. No doubt American buyers will compete for them eagerly, but it will be a pity if they leave England—the proper place for them is on board the Victory at Portsmouth.

Motor Future Run Minus Gas?

Automobile owners need not fear a shortage of motor fuel, according to Thomas T. Read, professor of mining engineering in Columbia University.

Professor Read foresees the possibility that the automobile of the future may not require liquid fuel. This development he regards as no more improbable than flying was thirty years ago. He says, as quoted in a press bulletin issued by the University's Department of Public Information:

"The only people who have grounds for immediate worry are the petroleum refiners, who in 1929 made 420,000,000 gallons more gasoline than they could sell, and so had to add it to their already large stock."

Gasoline is not the only possible fuel for automobiles, for the research men and manufacturers have many other "strings to their bow," as we are assured as the discussion is continued:

"Motor fuel can be produced by the hydrogenation of coal, and the Leuna plant in Germany hoped to produce 100,000,000 gallons in that way last year."

Even in the face of the fact that more ordinary gasoline is being made than can be sold, a number of possibilities of substitute liquid fuels are being studied, and encouraging progress is being made.

Finally, there is the possibility that the automobile of the future may not require liquid fuel.

It seems improbable now, but not more improbable than flying through the air seemed thirty years ago. So there is no need for worry.

Travellers Finish 23,000-Mile Trip

Travelled Across World to Prove Worth of British Motorcycle

Montreal.—Fourteen days imprisonment in Turkey as spies, two encounters with bands of bedouins in the desert, who shot at them, and a bird's eye view of the bursting of the Shycot dam in the Syndh desert, which wiped out villages and caused hundreds of deaths are among the experiences of J. Gill, 31, of Bradford, England, and P. Irving, 27, of Melbourne, Australia, world-travelling motorcyclists, who recently arrived in Montreal on the last lap of their 23,000 mile journey.

Starting from London, England, on May 13, 1929, Gill, accompanied by W. T. Stephens, who was later obliged to drop out on account of ill health, went through France, Germany, Switzerland, Austria, Hungary, Jugoslavia, Bulgaria, Turkey, Syria, Iraq, Persia, Baluchistan, India, Burma, the Federated Malay States and Australia. At Melbourne he picked up Irving, his present companion, and from there they went to New Zealand, taking a steamer from there to Vancouver. They came here from the Pacific coast and took in a little United States territory on their way. Arriving at Vancouver on April 24, it took them less than two months to reach Montreal.

"The object of our trip is to prove to overseas motorcycle dealers that British-made machines are still supreme," Gill said. "Ours is a Vincent H.R.D. one-cylinder, 4 h.p. machine," he said, "which when the sidecar is loaded, pulls a weight of more than 1,200 pounds. It is, I think, the only one-cylinder machine that has ever been used on a trip around the world."

PALE FACES JADED NERVES

Due To Weak, Watery Blood.

Anaemia — impoverished blood — comes so stealthily that it is often well advanced before recognized. Fatigue and discomfort, the earliest manifestations of the trouble, are seldom taken seriously. Soon the face becomes pale; the nerves jaded; the heart palpitates violently after the slightest exertion; the appetite becomes fickle and before you realize it you are in a terrible plight.

At such time, by enriching and purifying the blood Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will build up the nerve cells and correct the run-down condition. Concerning them Miss Margaret Torrey, Toronto, Ont., says:—"I suffered a complete breakdown. My heart would palpitate on the least exertion. Nothing I ate agreed with me. I started taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and by the time I had taken several boxes I was ready for anything; I had gained in weight and every distressing symptom had left me."

You can get these Pills from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Empress of Japan C.P.R.'s Biggest Ship

Marble Swimming Pool, Palm Court and Fine Decorations

An engineering triumph of splendor and efficiency, the Empress of Japan, largest ship of the Canadian Pacific Railway's many ocean services, has become a unit in the largest transportation organization in the world. In a few days she will leave for the Pacific.

The railway has staked the millions which have gone into the largest ship sailing under the Canadian ensign upon the growth of trade and development of relations with the Far East. The ship is a worthy portrayal of their faith.

Never has such a floating palace been placed on the Far East service, and to Canada is offered the pride of sailing the largest ship on the Pacific, built in Glasgow for a Canadian company, operated by Canadians and with an established Glasgow-to-Montreal speed record.

Though she will be overshadowed by her sister ship recently launched by the Prince of Wales, the Empress of Britain, nearly half as large again in tonnage and even more luxuriously equipped and fitted, yet the Japan will carry the name of Canada into the far routes of trade.

The interior decoration is artistic throughout. Deck after deck appears before the eye, a symphony of harmonious finish. For completeness few ships on any route can compete with her.

Spectacular Swimming Pool
Sunk in a marble setting at the upper end of which a golden dolphin spouts a spray of water to the centre of the pool, it is surrounded by a promenade. At the lower end is a modernistically designed buffet from which soothing fluids are dispensed to resting bathers.

On boarding the ship the first to catch the eye is the Palm court, reaching from side to side and ceilinged with ground glass through which filters golden light. At the forward end is the dining salon, the full width of the ship, one end given to a serving stand above which towers a gleaming mirror in the centre of which is embedded a tiny clock.

A futuristic promenade alley leads to the oak ball room. Here, from a golden stage, the orchestra will be heard. Above it dancers will find a garden, a promenade riotous with colorful blooms.

All lighting is from concealed fixtures. Each room, no matter what its size, is a blending of woods, furnishings and fixtures. Two suites, surpassing that of many hotels and only rivalled in a few instances, have tiny gardens with cool-colored summer furniture. All staterooms have green and white tiled bathrooms and all clothing cupboards flood with light as their doors are opened. All staterooms have beds instead of berths. They also have dressing tables.

Minard's Liniment gives quick relief.

Tire Antics!

There is quite a lot of fun to be had from an old auto tire. It may be used as a swing and tied with a strong rope to a beam overhead, or to the strong branch of a tree. A single rope is sufficient. The one who swings sits on the lower curve with the feet on one side of the tire, and the head above the upper curve, holding to the rope tied around the center of the upper curve. Such a tire may also be tied over a plunge or swimming pool and used as a spring board. The dive may be made from it either in a sitting or standing position.

For a stunt contest at a picnic, camp program or party, the auto tire is full of possibilities. Below are some suggestions; you will think of many others:

1. See who can roll a pair of auto tires, with the hands, to a certain goal within the shortest time. Someone holds a watch to time each contestant in turn.
2. See who can roll a single tire the longest distance ahead of him without allowing it to fall.
3. Suspend an auto tire above the heads of the players, and see who can throw a number of different articles through it, without missing. Such articles as a ball, an apple, a shoe, a horse shoe or a hat may be tossed through it in turn.
4. Roll a tire toward a line of boys and see if each boy on a side (there should be two sides in this contest) can jump and allow the tire to roll between the legs.
5. Have two persons hold an auto tire on the ground and see which boy can crawl through the tire the quickest.
6. Place an auto tire around the waist and, with this handicap, time each contestant in a race to see who can run the fastest to a certain point.

Minard's Liniment Checks Colds.

A game I vow I'll have to close,
Though Kitty would make it last forever.
I watch her thus, aglow, alert,
A pretty maid, and so—a flirt;
My heart's the ball; 'twas Kitty's way
To seize it first, then order—"Play."

Casey (after seeing Riley fall five stories): "Are yer dead, Riley?"
Riley: "O! am that." Casey: "Shura, an' ye're such a liar O! don't know whether to believe yer or not." Riley: "An' that proves O!m dead. 'Yez wouldn't call me a liar if O! was alive."

YOUNG WIFE STRENGTHENED

After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Bancroft, Ontario—"When I first took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I had been married about a year and my strength was leaving me on account of my condition. I was only 19 and it was my first child. My mother told me I needed something to steady my nerves and a girl chum told me to take the Vegetable Compound. I am so thankful I did because it strengthened my whole system and now I feel perfectly well and have a sweet little baby boy."—Mrs. J. B. STALKER, Bancroft, Ontario.

The Finishing Touch

As the giant liner clipped off the miles on her regular transatlantic journey, Miss Edith Young and her girl friend reclined on the promenade deck, enjoying the steady rhythmical motion of the mighty monarch of the deep.

"I'm so happy I want to tell everybody!" exclaimed Edith to her friend. "How is that, Edith?" said her companion.

"Well you know how worried Mamma and Dad were about us arriving safely at the boat. Then to come on board here and almost the first thing I saw was a telephone sign inviting me to call home and actually speak from the ship to Mother and Father. It just took me about five minutes to get them on the line. My, what a delight it is to leave them knowing that we arrived safely. It's just wonderful."

"Wonderful, indeed," said her friend, "but that's only part of the miracle. Just think that even now, miles at sea we can go to the same telephone, and thanks to the genius even be home sick anymore on sea or land with the telephone at hand.

talk to our parents as easily as from downtown at home. Say, we can't even be homesick anymore on sea or land with the telephone at hand.

Sir George H. Perley

Once again the Dominion of Canada finds itself in the heat of a general election, and consequently the County of Argenteuil is playing no small part. This riding has been very fortunate in its selection of representations both at Ottawa and Quebec and for years past the men who have gone to the Federal and Provincial capitals have done credit not only to themselves but to the County.

This is not the time for special reference to our Provincial representations, but it is the occasion in which the Federal member is the centre of discussion. For years past this riding has been represented at Ottawa by such men as the late Rt. Hon. Sir John Abbott, the late Senator Owens, the late Dr. Thos. Christie, Thos. Christie and P. R. McGibbon and last but not least our present worthy member Hon. Sir George H. Perley, K.C.M.G. & P.C.

A volume might be written, enumerating the services which Sir George has given, not only to the County of Argenteuil, but to the entire Dominion of Canada, to say nothing of the time he has spent in his illustrious work as High Commissioner of the Dominion in London. Let us for a moment look back at the work Sir George Perley has done not only as a business man and financier, but as a Statesman and Empire Builder.
His name is still a household word in England. As High Commissioner for Canada his services to this Country can never be over estimated. It was largely through his term of office in London that Canada was made known to the people of the Old Land. He lost no opportunity to tell of the possibilities of the Dominion and on his retirement from that important position he left a reputation in the British Isles as a man of shrewd business principles and ideal patriotic methods.

Let us deal with Sir George Perley for a moment as a purely Canadian business man. What do we find? From a humble beginning, through sheer business acumen and energy he achieved a national reputation and built up a business that gave employment over a term of long years to many thousands of men, during which time his name was revered and respected by the most humble of his employees.

As a member of Parliament representing the county of Argenteuil at Ottawa, what is his reputation? Sir George, during his membership has sat on the Government and opposition benches and his career is outstanding. It is hardly necessary for us to remind the electors during two summers Sir George was acting Premier of Canada in the absence of Premier Sir Robert Borden in England, following which he was Secretary of State in the Meighen Government. In Parliament Sir George has always occupied a front seat, whether on the government or opposition side and has always been ranked as one of the leaders of the House. His speeches on questions before Parliament have always attracted attention and he is considered one of the most thoughtful men on Parliament Hill.

One might go on at considerable length to enumerate the many personal activities in which he is engaged, not only at Ottawa and his County, but in many philanthropic directions. For instance, the unexpected and very timely donation given this year by Sir George to the Argenteuil Agricultural Society in which he made a deposit of bonds to the value of $10,000 bringing at least a further revenue of $500 annually to the society.
It might be interesting to know how many members of Parliament have dealt so generously with any like organization. Many other instances could be quoted of timely financial assistance made by Sir George, but our worthy member has always objected to any publicity or notoriety that might come from personal benevolence. There is one fact that might be pointed out with reference to his parliamentary record, and that is that he is constantly in attendance at parliament during the sessions and takes seriously the confidence placed in him by the electors. He is one of the leading thinkers of the House and when he rises to speak he commands the attention and respect of every member present and is looked upon as one of the leaders.

It is to be hoped that the electors of Argenteuil will seriously consider the influence which Sir George sways before casting their vote on July 28th next. He is a representative that any constituency may well be proud of, and the services which he has rendered to this county as our representative in parliament is certainly deserving of public recognition and approval by his re-election as member for Argenteuil.

assistant manager, western lines, Winnipeg; No. 1, H. S. Ingram, superintendent, eastern division, Montreal, to be superintendent, Ontario division, Toronto; and No. 2, W. S. Emery, chief operator, Montreal to be superintendent, eastern division, Montreal.

DANGEROUS ROADS NEAR PAPINEAUVILLE

Last Saturday morning, Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Robert, of St. Philippe, met with an automobile accident one mile west of Papineauville. They were driving along at an easy gait and when nearing the turn to avoid some trucks eastbound, Mr. Robert pulled over to the side when the bank gave way and the car turned completely over, resulting in injuries that necessitated Mrs. Robert being taken to Dr. Smith's Hospital at Hawkesbury where she is now improving. Mr.
Robert was badly shaken up but escaped serious injury. This is a dangerous section of the road as no less than five cars have gone over at this point in nine days. There is apparently some hitch as to responsibility but whether the C. P. R. or the municipality, the remedy should be at once effected before a real fatality occurs.

MR. BENNETT'S PENSION POLICY

The National Old Age Pension Policy which Hon. R. B. Bennett is pledged to adopt shifts the half of the cost of pensions now fastened by MacKenzie King on to the Provinces and the municipalities to the Federal treasury.

It means a square deal to the old folks who are in want, no matter in what part of Canada they live. Now, though every Province contributes to the Federal revenues which pay half the pensions to the Provinces that have brought them into force, four of the great Provinces—where the needs of the aged are perhaps greatest—have been unable to provide the other half of the money and the cost of administration. Their aged people in necessitous circumstances get nothing from Mr. King.

That is true of Quebec, of New Brunswick, of Nova Scotia and of Prince Edward Island. Not a cent have the needy folk of those Provinces received under the King Government's half-way scheme.

Mr. Bennett's pledge is a national system that guarantees to the aged, who have done so much for us, a pension whether they live in Prince Edward Island or on Vancouver Island.

It takes the financial burden from the Provinces and means the instantaneous application of Old Age Pensions throughout the Dominion. It takes the financial burden off the municipalities in those Provinces where the local Governments were compelled to pass on from two-fifths to one-half the Provincial cost to municipalities by direct taxation.

Municipalities of Manitoba and of Ontario know how heavy that tax burden has been and how much heavier it is growing.

Mr. Bennett's policy means relief for the municipalities and the Provinces, but, above everything, it means a square deal and equality of treatment for our old folks in every part of Canada.

Mr. Dunning's budget statement claims that Canada's national debt has been decreased by $257,000,000 during the last six years. But on May 6th, 1930, the Hon. R. B. Bennett demonstrated that the bulk of the money which went to reduce this debt had not been raised by taxation but came from special sources.

Mr. Bennett showed, (page 1903 Unrevised Hansard) that the government received $45,437,000 from the repayment of loans due Canada from interest on investments, $93,270,000, and from banking operations $8,629,000 making in all a total of $147,000,000. This sum came into the hands of the government without effort, and without taxation. Commenting upon this fact the Leader of the Opposition said: "however, we have $147,000,000 in the hands of the government from other than taxation sources for reducing the national debt of this country. That was not obtained by taxation but it was money that came from banking operations, money that came from the repayment of past debts and interest on our investments."

CAMOUFLAGED REDUCTION

"The Minister told us the other day that the total reduction in the national debt amounted to $257,000,000, commencing with the year 1925-26 because in the years preceding that during which this government was in power there was an increase in the general debt in two years. During six years the government has paid off a total of $257,000,000, including sums used for acquiring stocks and bonds for the sinking fund. They had $147,000,000 without imposing a dollar of taxation upon the people of Canada. So that the total amount raised by taxation and used in reducing the National debt amounted to something like $110,000,000. (page 1903, Unrevised Hansard.)"

In six years (1925-1930) the government collected in taxes $715,000,000 more than its predecessors in office in the six years ending March 31st, 1921.

The government received from loans, etc. $147,000,000 in this same period.

The total increase, taxation and special revenue therefore was $860,000,000. The public debt in that period was reduced $257,000,000 leaving the difference between that amount and $603,000,000 or $603,000,000—to be accounted for.

Three Generations of Golfers

Golfers, like poets, are born, even though, unlike poets, they are also made. But when a six-year-old girl makes a par-four hole in seven including a drive across the Spray River, and when her mother at 17 was golf champion of Alberta, and when, further, her grandfather is the professional at the Banff Springs Golf Course—why then, you have to allow a little something for heredity. The above data cover the facts in the case of Lois Dalgleish 4-year-old daughter of Mrs. Peggy Dalgleish and granddaughter of William "Bill" Thomson, professional at the Banff Springs Golf Course since 1910. "Start them young" is a good rule in any sport, but is particularly applicable to golf. Lois' mother began her golfing career at six but Lois herself commenced at four, when her grandfather purchased diminutive specially made clubs for the baby hands and spent hours of patient training with her—hours of spontaneously invented methods of teaching. The result is that a child of barely school age is doing what many adults and in fact many golfers cannot do, namely, making par four holes in seven strokes while her putting is beautiful to watch.

Lay-out shows the spectacular drive across the Spray River which features the Banff Springs Golf Course; the three golfing generations; Lois swinging for the drive across the river; and Lois putting—true as a die.

PUBLIC NOTICE

PROVINCE OF QUEBEC, MUNICIPALITY OF THE TOWNSHIP OF HARRINGTON.

PUBLIC NOTICE is hereby given by Pierre Cantin, Secretary-Treasurer of the Municipality of the Township of Harrington, that the Municipal Council of said Municipality at a special meeting held in its regular place of meeting on the twenty-fifth day of June, nineteen hundred and thirty, has adopted the following by-law, bearing No. 7a of the by-laws of said Municipality, to wit:

"Article 1.—The Municipal Council of the township of Harrington request the Quebec Liquor Commission by these presents to grant:—

1st. Permits for the sale of wines and beer within the territory of the Municipality of the township of Harrington.

2nd. And permits for the sale of beer by the glass without meals. The present by-law will be submitted, as required by law for ratification by the municipal electors of the Municipality of the township of Harrington at the date and place announced by public notice to that effect and will come into force only after having been approved by the vote of a majority in number of the aforesaid electors who have voted."

Prince Iyadoki Tokutomi, president of the Japanese House of Peers, and his son, Iyegao Tokutomi, Japanese Minister to Canada, met recently on board Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Russia. The Prince was on his way to London to attend the Inter-Parliamentary Conference and took the opportunity to see his son who had come to Victoria from Ottawa to meet him.

Leaping into shark-infested waters in the China Sea Saturday between Hong Kong and Shanghai, Carpenter Tom Ellworthy, of the U.S. Empress of Russia, saved the life of Mrs. Makareff, passenger on the ship who had jumped overboard in a fit of dementia. The woman strongly resisted efforts to rescue her and 4th Engineer Dunn went to Ellworthy's assistance. On two men succeeding in bringing her back aboard ship after long and exhausting struggles.

Beating the world's record to passenger traffic operation, Western Canada comes into the limelight this year with the 12th continuous run from Port Williams to Calgary of the Canadian Pacific locomotive number 2002. A number of locomotives of this class are now being built by the railway, equipped with roller-bearing wheels which will still further lighten engine operation on long runs.

The season's first climb of Mt. Temple, 11,600-foot peak in the Rockies, was made last week by Dr. Thompson of Philadelphia, well-known writer and author, and Dr. Hart, of Vancouver. Edward Penn, down of Swiss guides in the Rockies, was in charge of the climb which started out from Chateau Lake Louise at 11:30 a.m. in the morning and reached the summit at ten.

With the opening of the New Times Hotel at Digby and the Algonquin Hotel at St. Andrews-by-the-Sea at the end of June, the tourist season in the Maritime Provinces is now in full swing. Reservations at both hotels are very heavy, forecasting a prosperous season.

Thousands met by Canadian and United States motorists when taking their cars to Europe have been overcome by facilities afforded by the Canadian Pacific Railway under which the owner can ship his car on baggage between Canada and European points in either direction. The Company arranges for the necessary customs and registration documents for every country to be visited, driving licenses, visas, plates, and membership in the Royal Automobile Club. The car is unloaded within an hour of the ship's arrival and is furnished with oil and a small supply of gasoline and made ready for the road. There is no red-tape and no bond or other financial guarantee required.

Believed to be the largest salmon ever taken by fly on the Madway River, Cape Breton, Archie Joudry, Bangor, Club guide, took a fish recently that weighed 17 lbs., was 43 inches long and with a girth of 21 inches. The fish has been photographed for reproduction in the Saturday Evening Post.

The railway grade crossing problem is not a problem of the railway's making but essentially a "social problem" and responsibility for its solution rests upon society as a whole, in the opinion of W. P. Borland, Chief of the Bureau of Safety, United States Interstate Commerce Commission.

Reduction of public debt and remission of taxes -- under the King Administration

Public debt reduced: - - - $257,866,939
Remission of taxes - - - $118,000,000.

King Architect of Prosperity

Every year, since 1926, the King Administration has substantially reduced the national debt. It is estimated that, if future Canadian governments could continue the debt reduction at the same rate, in less than 40 years Canada would see its total public debt entirely paid off.

During the last five years, while the debt was being reduced and surpluses created, the Canadian tax-payer had the pleasure to find his burden $118,000,000 lighter. That was the income taxes gradually reduced. The 6% sales tax was reduced to 5% in 1924, to 4% in 1927, to 3% in 1928, to 2% in 1929 and to 1% in 1930. The "nuisance taxes" on cheques, receipts, railway and steamship tickets, insurance premiums, telegrams and cablegrams were abolished, except a flat rate of 2 cents on cheques above $10.00. In 1926, letter postage was reduced from 3 cents to 2 cents and in 1928 penny postage was re-established from Canada to other parts of the British Empire.

Thus, despite the heavy burden of debt, - which conservative extravagance had increased instead of making lighter, - the King Government succeeded in balancing the budget, in reducing our national debt and taxes, in stimulating our industry and commerce and in bringing to Canada the greatest period of progress it has known.

"Normally a national debt is paid off by increasing taxes. We have reduced our national debt and at the same time have reduced taxes. The explanation lies in the remarkable prosperity which has come to Canada under liberal policies since 1922."

—From Premier King's Brantford Speech, June 16th, 1930.

A VOTE FOR KING AND THE LIBERAL PARTY IS A VOTE FOR CANADIAN DEVELOPMENT

The Central Liberal Campaign, 25 St. James St. West Montreal.

To The Electors of the County of Argenteuil

Having again the honour of being selected as Conservative Standard bearer in Argenteuil in the coming Federal Election I take this opportunity of thanking my friends for this further proof of their confidence. During the eighteen years that I have been the representative of this County in Parliament, I have done my best to faithfully perform all the duties imposed upon me in that position and I appreciate this fresh evidence of your confidence.

In making my appeal for your support I wish it were possible for me to visit personally your individual homes and calmly discuss with you the questions that are of vital import to you and our beloved Dominion.

In June 1921 the census of this country was taken. If you add the people who came in by immigration and the births as shown by the figures issued by the Bureau of Statistics, up to the first day of June 1930, and then deduct the deaths, you will realize that the country should have a population today of one and one quarter million more than it now has, if they had been able to get work here. This is a scathing indictment against the King administration.

The loss to the farmers of Eastern Canada caused by the diminished demands for their products, and the influx of New Zealand butter has destroyed the dairying industry to the point where agriculturalists are in a precarious position. As a direct result of the preferential duty Canada imported in 1929 over 34 million pounds of butter, while in 1925 Canada exported a surplus of 24 million pounds over and above our own requirements.

One of the principal matters that mean much to the people of Canada is that of the old age pensions in which I take a deep interest.

At present no one in this Province of Quebec gets an old age pension. Why? Because the King Government insisted that the Provinces should pay half of the cost and the Province of Quebec has refused to do this. Some Liberal Speakers say that the Conservatives in Parliament opposed the giving of Old Age Pensions, but that is not true. The Conservatives objected to the conditions imposed by the Government on the Provinces, and Bennett has pledged himself to the payment out of Dominion Money of the whole of old age pensions in all the Provinces. The present Prime Minister's feeling regarding payment for old age pensions by the Dominions was really best expressed by himself when he referred to it as "a vicious principle." Under the Liberal policy there are no old age pensions for any one in this Province. If you believe that they should come from the Dominion exchequer, you must support the Conservative Party.

The Electors of the County must pass judgment on the 28th. inst., and I make this appeal for your support not only on behalf of myself, but for my leader Hon. R. B. Bennett whose keynote in this election is "Give Canada a chance." If you honour me by again electing me I will do my best to give you faithful service.

GEORGE H. PERLEY.

July 15th., 1930.

Vous m'avez fait l'honneur, une fois de plus, d'être le porte-étendard du parti conservateur dans le comté d'Argenteuil pour la prochaine élection fédérale et je suis très touché de cette nouvelle preuve de confiance. J'ai représenté ce comté au parlement pendant dix-huit ans et durant cette période, j'ai toujours rempli fidèlement tous les devoirs qui m'étaient imposés en ma qualité de représentant de votre comté.

En faisant appel à votre appui, je désirerais qu'il me fût possible de vous visiter chacun en particulier afin de discuter des questions qui sont d'importance vitale pour nous et pour notre cher Dominion.

La population du Canada, telle que fournie par le recensement de juin 1921, en y ajoutant le nombre d'immigrants et les naissances d'après les rapports du Bureau des Statistiques jusqu'au premier juin 1930, déduction faite des décès, notre pays devrait avoir une population d'un million et un quart de plus, si les conditions de travail avaient été plus favorables. Ceci constitue une accusation grave contre le gouvernement de M. King.

La perte causée aux cultivateurs de l'Est, par la diminution de la vente de leurs produits et par l'entrée en ce pays du beurre de la Nouvelle-Zélande, a détruit l'industrie laitière à tel point que les agriculteurs sont dans une situation précaire. Comme conséquence directe du tarif préférentiel, le Canada a importé en 1929 plus de trente-quatre millions de livres de beurre tandis qu'en 1925, le Canada en avait exporté un surplus de vingt-quatre millions. Une des questions qui intéressent beaucoup le peuple du Canada et à laquelle je porte moi-même un grand intérêt, c'est la "pension aux vieillards."

Actuellement dans la province de Québec, il n'y a pas de pensions aux vieillards. Pourquoi? Parce que le gouvernement King voulait que chacune des provinces payât la moitié du coût de ces pensions et que la province de Québec a refusé de le faire. Quelques orateurs libéraux prétendent que les conservateurs au parlement sont opposés à ce bill mais ceci n'est pas la vérité. Les conservateurs se sont opposés aux conditions imposées par le gouvernement des provinces, et M. Bennett s'est engagé à payer des pensions aux vieillards, dans toutes les provinces, à même les fonds du Dominion. Le sentiment du Premier-Ministre actuel au sujet du paiement de la pension aux vieillards n'a jamais été si bien exprimé par lui-même que lorsqu'il en parle comme d'un "principe vicieux." Sous la politique libérale il n'y a pas de pension aux vieillards pour qui que ce soit en cette province. Si vous croyez qu'elle doit être payée à même le trésor royal du Canada, vous devez supporter le parti conservateur.

Les électeurs de ce comté feront leur choix le 28 juillet courant. Je vous demande votre appui ce jour-là, non-seulement pour moi mais pour mon chef, l'Honorable R. B. Bennett qui, dans cette élection, a pour cri de ralliement: "Donnez une chance au Canada." Si vous me faites l'honneur de m'élire, je ferai tout en mon pouvoir pour vous représenter dignement à la Chambre des Communes.

GEORGE H. PERLEY.

CANADIAN CHAUTAUQUA GOES OVER STRONG

Splendid audiences are greeting the varied artists who have come with the Canadian Chautauqua to entertain and provide good wholesome amusement and instruction to the people of this community. The public owe a debt of gratitude to the men responsible for bringing this Chautauqua to us and as the manager Mr. Evans, who gave a short address during the intermission on Wednesday stated, there were 25 tents in the organization, all ministering throughout Canada, to the social and spiritual needs of the varied communities, that its purpose was not that of materialism, but they were endeavoring to carry the best means of enlightenment to those who were unable to get the advantage afforded the larger centres. Mr. Evans spoke of the 50,000 committeemen all over Canada who were sponsoring the good work for general good. By this means was the cultural realm of drama, good music and intellectual food for thought brought by the best of talent.

Two days only are left in which to avail yourselves of attendance at one of the best and most profitable entertainments it has been your lot to enjoy. Don't miss the last two days.

CUSHING WEST

Mrs. S. O. Hartley spent the latter part of the week in Montreal.

Messrs. Ernest Hartley and Mason Couper, of Montreal, spent the week-end here.

Miss Pearl Dawson, of Stonefield, was the guest of her sister, Mrs. C. F. Watson the latter part of the week.

The Rev. and Mrs. McLeod and children, of Alexandria, were guests of Mrs. Usher for several days last week.

Mr. Stephen Walford motored in last week from Lafayette, Indiana, and is spending a two week's vacation with his mother at Pine Cottage.

Dr. Cushing and daughter Marjorie were at their residence here on Saturday en route to Sixteen Island Lake where the latter will be the guest for some time of her grandmother Mrs. L. Cushing Sr.

Mrs. L. C. Cooke is enjoying the pleasure of a visit from her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Petit who motored in last week from Hoosier, Sask., accompanied by the Misses Petit and Miss Norma Cooke.

On Saturday morning last Mr. and Mrs. J. Robert of St. Philippe, set out by motor for Campbell's Bay, Ont., to visit their married daughters and had reached a point a mile or so West of Papineauville, when they met with an accident which might well have had much more serious results. They had paused at a C.P.R. crossing turning out at the same time to allow the passing of a truck when suddenly the side of the road gave way and their car overturned over a bank some six feet in depth pinning them underneath. Luckily the driver of the truck witnessed the accident and came to their assistance, but they were both badly bruised. Mr. Robert having a sprained wrist while Mrs. Robert was conveyed to Mr. Smith's Hospital at Hawkesbury, where it was found she had suffered a fracture of the pelvic bone. As she has been in delicate health for some time great anxiety was felt by her friends, but reports as to her condition continue to be encouraging. We are informed that no less than five autos have come to grief at this same spot lately and as both the C. P. R. and the Road Department repudiate the responsibility it continues to be a menace to travellers.

BENNETT, THE MAN OF ACTION

In the later weeks of the campaign it is evident that the general condition of the agricultural industry and unemployment are two factors which will have an important if not a decisive influence on the result. Premier King has met the unemployment situation by saying that, if returned, he will consult with the provinces to find a remedy. Mr. Bennett has pledged a session of parliament to deal with the matter immediately after July 23. If he is returned parliament will probably meet in September and continue in session for several months, for in addition to emergency relief legislation it is understood that tariff legislation which he believes will bring a permanent remedy will also be presented and dealt with.

Regarding agriculture Mr. King believes the budget of this year will bring relief. Mr. Bennett does not and he is promising legislation to give the home market to the home producer and to direct our foreign purchases by treaty to those countries who will give Canadian agricultural products preferential entry.

Old Age Pensions, of which the provinces must now find half the cost, is an active issue. Mr. Bennett promising to have the Dominion assume the full burden, while Mr. King says the subject will be taken up at an interprovincial conference. Immediate development of the St. Lawrence route and a national highway are arousing national interest but other issues appear to be more local. The usual tide of last-minute roor-backs is to be anticipated. Whether or not they will influence the polling is doubtful. But, it won't be long now.

THE LATE

ALEXANDER DRENNAN

It is with deep regret we record the death of the late Alexander Drennan, which took place after a long illness on Monday last.

Deceased who was in his 87th. year was the eldest son of the late Wm. Drennan, and Eliza Redpath. Besides his loving and devoted wife, formerly Miss Margaret Black, he leaves to mourn his loss three sons Wm. of Flint, Mich.; Frank, of Vancouver, B. C.; John at home and two daughters, Mrs. Mooney, of Upper Lachute, and Margaret at home. The funeral took place from his late residence, Upper Lachute, on Wednesday afternoon, service being conducted by the Rev. H. Cousens. Interment being made in Lachute Cemetery.

and the Housewife

The mere mention of this month conjures up visions of heat - stifling heat - with its attendant loss of energy and the will "to do."

The eternal cycle of cleaning, washing and cooking takes on a rather formidable aspect at this time. The dust settles almost faster than one can manage. Dust and duster seem on a merry-go-round.

Washing - so much more of it in the hot summer months - will ruin any woman's day. Cooking, instead of a delight, becomes a hardship.

BUT THIS NEED NOT BE!

There are electrical servants for almost every household task. They will lighten your labor.

Do not throw away time and health on tasks that can be done for you for a few cents a day, the cost of your electric service.

Man of the World

By Dudley Hays

Don't you ever get sick of doing the same old thing over and over again? If you don't—well, let's be polite and call you a—unusual. But if you do—read on, and sympathize with Smith.

He was sick of going up to town by the same old train every morning, sick of seeing the same old faces, sick of the same old walk to the bank, the same old work, the same old overtime on the first of each month, the same old journey home by the 6.2, the same old question of "Any news?" from his same old wife when he got back.

Hence the blossoming of his ambition to meet a real Man of the World. By luck he was introduced to Sledwick, who often travelled up in his train. Sledwick used to roll along to the station in a Daimler, and step out of it silk-hatted, white-spatted, sleek, a shrewd and knowing look in his eyes.

Here might be the object of Smith's quest—wealthy, able to do big things in his own time, and, Smith hoped, with his finger on the pulse of affairs in general.

Smith had one chat with him. That was enough. Sledwick turned out to be in the margarine business. Rich? Yes. But didn't margarine direct his life? Wasn't he at the mercy of every rise and fall in the margarine market? Weren't the bulk of his thoughts—when it came down to bedrock—centered around margarine?

Then there was Rayner. Smith met him on occasional Wednesdays, on the 2 down. He was bright, breezy, talkative, and seemed packed with interesting side-lines of information on the current news.

"Rayner," said Smith, one day, glowing with hope, "would you call yourself a Man of the World?"

Rayner snorted. "Would I—Hades!" "But you know a lot, and get about a lot, and don't seem to be tied to a groove."

Rayner grimaced queerly. "Don't I? Listen. I travel in cheap jewellery—Jewell, Chelmsford, Tumbler, Wells, Bulldford, Ashford, Folkestone. Same old round, year in, year out. Same old lines, same old scenery. Same old effort at bright talk to get my clients in a good temper and make 'em buy. Groove? It's a ravine!"

In desperation, Smith tackled a tramp in a lane near his station.

A tramp, surely, was a Man of the World—in one sense.

"You wander where you like every day?" he began.

"Ho, gu'nor, does I? I've got me regular rahnd, I ave, and don't forget it. There's places where they gives, the Unions. Fair makes yer sick, an' places where they don't, an' there's preachin' the same old tale, an' ringin' the changes on the same old places. But it's a bloke ter live unverswise?"

At last inspiration fished up into Smith's brain. The twinkling bubbles of it hissed: "Find your Man of the World among authors and artists. They observe their fellow-creatures, and picture them at their own sweet will, when they like, and how they like. They don't run in grooves."

He set about getting himself elected to the Scratch Club, which, as everybody knows, simply reeks of the knights of pen and pencil. He sounded Weggit, the fellow who supplies the illustrated heroines for half the magazine writers in the kingdom.

"No grove about my life?" snarled Weggit. "My good fowl, I'm in a permanent one, and I don't leave it. I'm not allowed to. Haven't you seen the same old heroine, with the same old impossibly long legs smirking out of the pages for these twenty years? No grove!"

Gubb, the short-story merchant, was equally disappointing, and more concise.

"Same old pen, same old desk, same old juggling with inane plots—man, girl, situation. . . . I'm a sausage-machine, that's what I am."

The angels must have taken pity on Smith when Egbert Conklin dawned upon his universe. Twice, when Smith deliberately missed the 8.37—to escape the same old faces—and caught the 9.14, Conklin entered his carriage and with a cosmopolitan aplomb had everybody listening to him.

Conklin had been everywhere, it appeared.

"I believe you've found a Man of the World at last," Smith told himself. But experience had made him cautious. Better, he decided, get to know Conklin a little more before he acknowledged the glorious truth.

The third time he met Conklin it was again on the 9.14. Smith was travelling with Robson, a man probably more consistent at doing the same old thing over and over again than an elevator. The other occupants of the carriage were a skinny little man with a pale face and a wisp of moustache, a pompous-looking old business man, and a square-cut woman who might have been an inspector of factories.

Conklin, suave, immaculate, got in at the station. The train moved off. With a kind of amiable boredom Conklin glanced at the travel advertisements on the compartment walls, then turned to his new acquaintance.

"Ever been there—Brussels?"

"No," said Robson, shaking his head regretfully.

"Charming city, with beautiful environs. Almost entirely surrounded by the Forest of Soignes. Tervueren Park is well worth a visit, and so is the field of Waterloo. You know Paris, of course?"

"No."

Conklin's face showed polite amazement. "Really? Nobody should miss the fascination of the gay capital. The vista down the Tuilleries Gardens, through the Arc de Triomphe, is without a parallel." He proceeded to describe a trim of attractions.

The pompous business man, trying to read his paper, snorted indignantly. The square woman raised her eyes from a technical book and stared at Conklin as if he were a bluebottle on the window. The skinny little man seemed to be getting more insignificant than ever.

"Now, as a change from gay Paris," said Conklin, "there's picturesque Brittany, or the wooded grandeur of the Ardennes. Why not take your summer holidays there? Fishing, boating, shooting, romantic castles, glorious drives. Or a fortnight on the Riviera can be done quite reasonably. There's Nice, a jewel of the Mediterranean, and the glamour of the Corniche Road."

Robson shook his head humbly. "Can't afford these jaunts abroad. By Jove! I envy you."

Conklin waved one hand airily, while Smith's heart warmed to him.

"Travel, my dear fellow, is the finest stimulant the brain can have. Look at the thousands of people who go to the same old seaside resort every year, some dull hole on our own coasts. They've never been outside England. They remain narrow, suburban. Now, even a trip to Paris—He caught the eye of the insignificant little man, and fished him into the conversation.

"You ever been to Paris, sir?"

Without waiting for an answer, he continued: "Then take my advice, and make up your mind to go. That quotation, 'What do they know of England who only England know?' is very apt. Of course, one needn't necessarily choose the big cities. For a real restful holiday you can't rival Picardy! And if you want sun, then Spain—ah!" He sighed expressively. "History and romance lurking in every shadow of the Alhambra, soft, velvet nights, languorous days and scented by the radiant orange groves."

The pompous man glowered. The square woman pressed her lips firmly together. The skinny little man listened mildly.

"Never been there, I suppose?" asked Conklin, with a hint of good-natured contempt.

"Never," said the little man, his wisp of moustache drooping apologetically.

Conklin smiled. "Pity the majority of us are so insular. How can anybody be a man of the world without travel? It isn't so frightfully expensive. Even the limited purse can afford a surprising number of places abroad."

With a light and careless touch he continued to paint the wonders of foreign travel until the train reached the junction. By this time the pompous man was purple, and a rat-trap was a kindly thing compared with the square woman's mouth. Then suddenly Conklin pressed back hard into his seat, as though trying to hide. The door swung open, and in came a lanky youth.

"Hullo, Conklin!"

Conklin seemed uneasy.

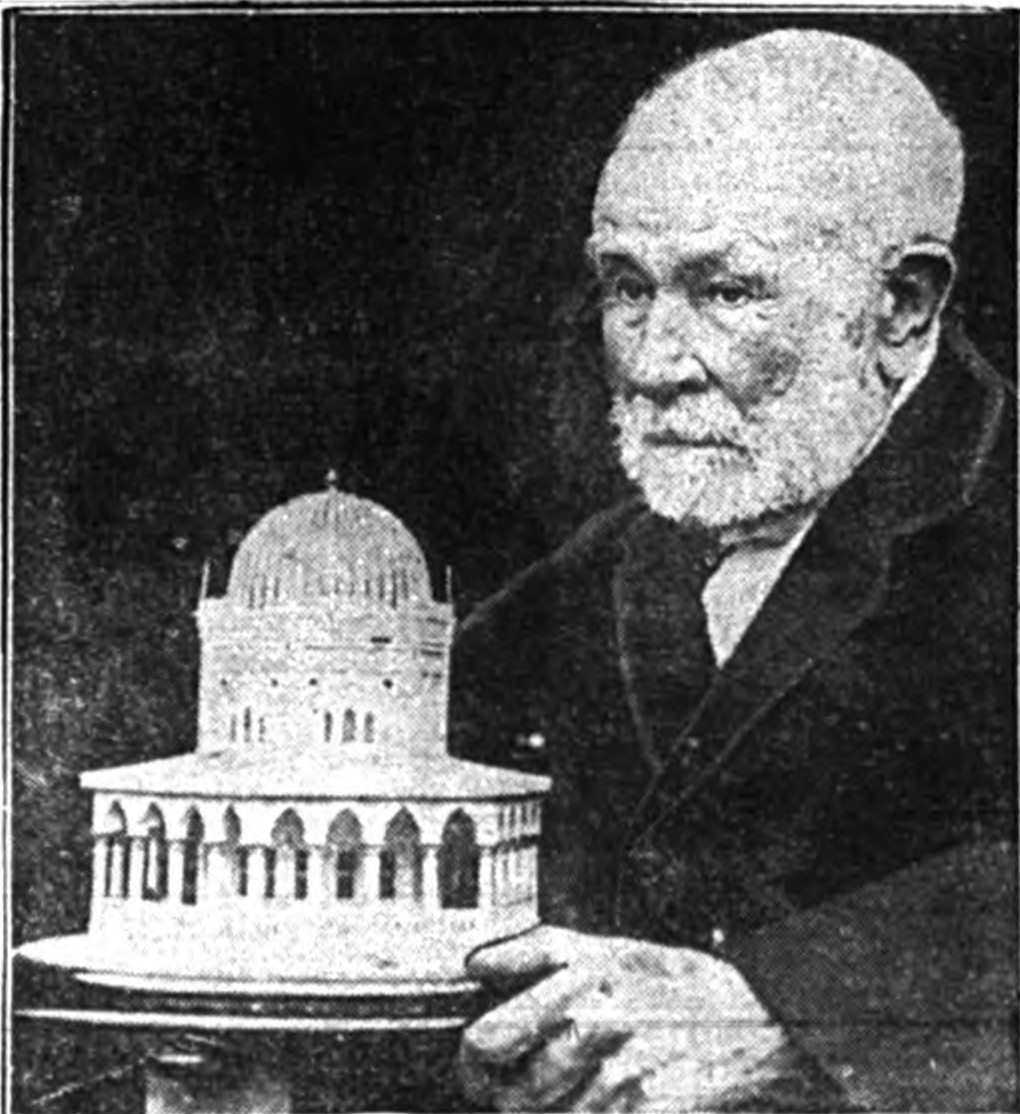

"How are you?" asked the stranger.

"Looking forward to the summer holidays, I bet. Going to Margate again this year?"

The pompous old man broke into a guffaw. The square woman grinned viciously. Conklin gave a good imitation of a balloon turning green and shrivelling. As for Smith—

"Might do worse," went on the ruthless one. "But I dare say you fellows of Twemlow's Travel Trips envy the people who come in and buy tickets for all sorts of wonderful spots abroad."

Centenarian Congratulated

Conklin was obviously praying for the floor to swallow him. But his friend seemed to notice nothing.

"I say," his voice was a whisper. "See that little man in the corner. I thought I recognized him. Fancy him being in here!"

Conklin was beyond speech. So was Smith. Robson raised questioning brows.

"Well, it's surprising. Surely you know his face? He tries to keep out of the papers, but the Press are always writing up his affairs. That's Walwyn, the explorer and financier. Sort of chap who's equally at home trekking through Brazilian jungles, or engineering political coups in the Balkans, or entertaining royalty at his shoots—a very great man of the world."

Smith had a vague idea that Conklin had fainted, but he ignored his fallen idol, and with pulses throbbing, leaned forward and addressed Walwyn. "Sir," he said, tensely, "are you a Man of the World, leading a life free from grooves?"

Falwyn smiled faintly. "Free from grooves? H'm! I schemed out my life from the age of twenty-four, schemed it out to the inch and the minute. And if I hadn't kept ramming myself along those grooves I'd planned, I shouldn't have got anywhere."

That morning the bank staff were surprised by the same old Smith. Of course, he was his same old self. But there was a new and noticeable expression of contentment on his same old face.—Tit-Bits.

White Lilacs

By DANIEL WHITEHEAD HICKY

Who once has seen white lilacs, never more

Upon the altar of his heart shall keep

A place for things more lovely,

though he go

Into a hundred garden lanes and reap

A harvesting of blooms whose petals hold

The embers of the sunset's fires,

and glow

Of purple twilight quivering with dew.

Who once has seen white lilacs can not know

A thing more glorious to blind his eyes,

A beauty lovelier to pierce his heart,

And though he tread the hills and seek the plains,

Trail every silver stream and counterpart,

He shall come back to lilacs whispering

Beside a garden gate; pale lilacs

white

Against the quiet stars—the loveliest poem

The gracious hand of God shall ever write!

"Chicken Express" Dominates Balkan Railway Route to Switzerland

Poultry Trade Important Three Trains Have Right of Way to Carry Produce from Sofia to Heart of Europe

Dragoman, Bulgaria. — "Clear the track for the chicken train" is what a good many of the Balkan locomotives are whistling these days as they speed toward western Europe, for international arrangements have been made whereby three trains each week go directly from Sofia, the capital of Bulgaria, to Switzerland, in order to carry Bulgarian poultry and eggs to foreign consumers.

They might be called the "Chicken Express" and are given right of way over other freight trains. If you happened to be at one of the stations when the chickens passed they would impress you as thoroughly enjoying their first trip abroad. Although they don't travel in sleepers, their cars are equipped with 10 berths, one above the other, and with windows. And special windows at that. In all the other cars in southeast Europe the windows are supplied with whole clusters of signs saying in not less than six languages, "Don't stick your head out," but none such are to be found in the chicken cars, so from all of the 10 rows of windows protrude the heads of the lucky birds who were clever enough to scramble to the best places.

All the feathered travelers seem to be very talkative and keep up animated conversations. And even though one were not altogether familiar with their language, which would not be strange, since the Balkan languages are not easy to learn, still he could tell at once that the lady chickens are commenting on the things they see along the way and on the wonders that await them, while he would be no less sure that the roosters, from the awful din they are making, must be boasting of the wonderful feat they have achieved in persuading the authorities in half a dozen states to arrange for the installation of this international excursion train for the Bulgarian chickens.

There are more cars filled with eggs than live fowl. One of Bulgaria's chief exports is poultry and eggs. The Minister of Finance once said that it was the Bulgarian hen that stabilized the lev, Bulgarian coin worth 19.3c.

living history of to-day. They are all carefully preserved in tin canisters, labelled, and filed. In the strong rooms of the Gaumont and British Movietone News companies Mussolini, Bernard Shaw, the King of Spain, our own Royal Family, and America's presidents lie next to one another awaiting the verdict of posterity.

Kubelik's Secret Film

Jan Kubelik, the celebrated violinist, recently put himself on permanent record for the benefit of his descendants. He made a sound film in secret of two of his most characteristic pieces. This film, the only one he has ever made, will never be shown to the public. It is purely private.

The gramophone companies, too, have carefully saved records of our King and some of our famous writers. Caruso's golden voice will be available to folks who will only know him as "a singer who lived a hundred years ago." Sir Thomas Beecham's conducting, Kreisler's playing, Rachmaninoff's pianoforte performances will live almost forever.

When, not long ago, Mr. Henry Ainley gave his brilliant performance of Hamlet before the King, people were comparing him with the acting stars of the past. But few remembered even Henry Irving's Hamlet, while Kean, Garrick, and Mrs. Siddons were merely names. With the aid of the talking film Mr. Ainley's Hamlet can be shown to our descendants. By the same means Paul Robeson's Othello and Sir John Martin Harvey's famous roles will again live. The dramatic critics of the future, when they raise their usual plaint that "acting isn't what it was," will be able to prove it. Or their critics will disprove it!

Which raises intriguing speculations. It is going to be harder than ever for the actors, writers, and statesmen of to-day to hand down any illusion of greatness.

All this, of course, means that it will be grand to be a schoolboy or girl in the future. Instead of reading about Bernard Shaw, to-morrow's schoolchildren will see and hear him. Historical events will re-enact themselves—Mr. MacDonald introducing his second Labor Cabinet, the Naval Conference, the re-opening of St. Paul's Cathedral.

America is also preserving to-day in celluloid. The Roosevelt Memorial Library is assembling in film form a complete pictorial story of each president of the United States.

Time and Space Wiped Out

So important do they consider the audible film that when Mr. Stimson, the head of the Naval Conference Delegation, presented to Mr. Hoover at the White House, Washington, a copy of the London Naval Treaty, only the talkie cameramen were allowed to photograph the ceremony.

One of the most staggering pieces of living history was the recent talkie news reels of Commander Byrd at the South Pole. The picture showed a radio operator in New York sending wireless greetings to the explorer at the Pole ten thousand miles away. Time and space were annihilated. You heard the operator's "dot-dash-dot-dash" message on his keyboard.

Then you actually heard Commander Byrd's reply in Morse Code! The operator translated for us. The thing is awe-inspiring when you consider that all this took place three thousand miles away in New York, and we heard it in England three weeks later! The brain reels when you think that the whole thing can be reenacted in fifty years' time!

The gap between us and the future is very small indeed. Will there be a very big difference in the inventive and scientific fields? It is an interesting thought, because inventions spring up and are obsolete in a very short time. Motor-car, wireless, aeroplane and gramophone are practically post-war in their really big developments. Just how quaint will they appear to those who follow us?

The "horn-and-box" phonographs of early days would make a modern child laugh. You can see them in the Imperial Science Museum, London, that wonderful treasure house of interest. Next to them stand the electric gramophones, the combined radio-gramophones, and the portables of to-day. What will the comparison be in fifty years' time?

There is a lot of to-day in this museum, waiting for the quaint relics of pre-war days. Models of our India mail planes, of the Graf Zeppelin and R-34, models of our Flying Scotsman, our big locomotives, motor-cars, and Atlantic greyhounds. Their forerunners next to them are quaint and curious. So will they be in a hundred years' time.

And what of the things which are brand new—the novelties and inventions of to-day? In South Kensington you can see the latest film cameras and projectors. There is a complete story of the making of a talking film. Vest-pocket Kodaks and studio cameras, a Photomaton machine in working order, and a home cinema set, wait with the early box-and-head-cloth cameras, our fathers knew.

Keeping Our Memory Green

When we have complete talking film performances in every home, what are these exhibits going to look like to to-morrow's museum visitors?

And when we ring up New York and both see and hear our friends across the Atlantic, what will Baird's first television set seem like?

Answers does something towards the keeping of our memory green. A copy of every issue is filed away in a safe deposit, to be kept for years to come. When we have ceased to buy newspapers and weeklies and have our news and entertainment reading printed by wireless in our own homes, what will the "Golden One" appear like to our third and fourth generations?

In every sphere of life, the present is being preserved in a number of ways. The food canning folk keep tins of foods. One they opened not long ago had kept wholesome for forty-five years. So the future will even be able to taste our food.

But the Central Department for Science in Soviet Russia has gone one better. It proposes to make a museum refrigerator capable of preserving indefinitely the bodies of human beings and animals. Even the ancient Egyptian mummies would be outdone by that!—Answers.

JULY and the Housewife

The mere mention of this month conjures up visions of heat - stifling heat - with its attendant loss of energy and the will "to do."

The eternal cycle of cleaning, washing and cooking takes on a rather formidable aspect at this time. The dust settles almost faster than one can manage. Dust and duster seem on a merry-go-round.

Washing - so much more of it in the hot summer months - will ruin any woman's day. Cooking, instead of a delight, becomes a hardship.

Those who are ignoring the unemployment question should mark well the fact that things are none too rosy in our own industrial mills in town. There has been considerable loss time of late, and things do not incline to betterment. In our neighboring Province some 18 Ontario towns report the disappearance of one or more mills and those of five others where two mills had been reduced to one and one town where three of five mills had closed. In all, instead of 33 woollen mills in Ontario there were now six. The cotton industry had similarly suffered. The result was unemployment meant hardship and hunger, and in the end, anarchy. It had meant the loss of 1,250,000 Canadians since the King Government came to power—nearly half the population of Ontario. Every Canadian boy and girl was worth $25,000 to the State. "So what has it cost to keep Mr. King Prime Minister?"

A number of the St. Simeon's Church members held a little surprise party at the home of Mrs. Alfred Miller, for Cyril Gillard who is sailing this week on the C. P. S. S. Montclair, to take up residence in the Old Land. The evening was pleasantly spent and an Eveready pen and pencil was presented, as a small gift of remembrance from the Church members.

OBITUARY

THE LATE MRS. L. KENNEDY

It is with deep sorrow, we record the death of the late Mrs. Lawson Kennedy, who after a long illness passed away at her home in Pine Hill, surrounded by her family on Sunday morning, July 13, 1930. Born at Edina, Que., in the year 1852 she was the eldest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Moncrieff and was married to Lawson Kennedy in the year 1874, when they settled in Pine Hill, where the remainder of their lives were spent. Eleven children were born to them, of which only four are now living; Mrs. James Tomalty, of Montreal; J. L. Kennedy of Edina, Que.; Sadie Kennedy, who lives in the old home and Mrs. A. Kennedy of Edina. Besides her loving family, she leaves 21 grandchildren and two great grandchildren, also two sisters and one brother, Mr. Wm. Moncrieff, Mrs. D. Kennedy and Mrs. Geo. Nightingale. The funeral which was largely attended was held at the home on Tuesday, July 15th, at 2 p.m.; service being conducted by Mr. J. Walthe, student pastor of "The Maple Ave. Regular Baptist Church", who spoke comforting words from John 14 Chapter, assisted by McMaster Trio, who sang that beautiful hymn, "There'll be No Night There."

Those attending from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Boyd, Mrs. and Mrs. Jack Moncrieff, Mrs. L. Bennett, Mr. Geo. Moncrieff, Mr. Lulu Swail, all of Arundel; Mr. H. Grey, Mr. David Grey, Mr. Gordon Grey, Mr. and Mrs. Eddy Grey, all of Grey Valley; Mr. Robert Kennedy, Mr. Fred Kennedy, Miss Sadie, Miss Woods, all of Morin Heights; Mrs. Jack Shute, Mrs. Archie Jones; Mrs. E. Haskins, Mrs. J. Moncrieff, Mr. and Mrs. James Tomalty and family, all of Montreal.

The pall bearers were Messrs. Geo. Moncrieff, Robt. Kennedy, Jas. Tomalty, Geo. Moncrieff, Jack Moncrieff and Gordon Grey.

Among the flowers were wreaths from the family and grandchildren. Interment being made in Edina Cemetery.

Don't Shirk Your Duty !

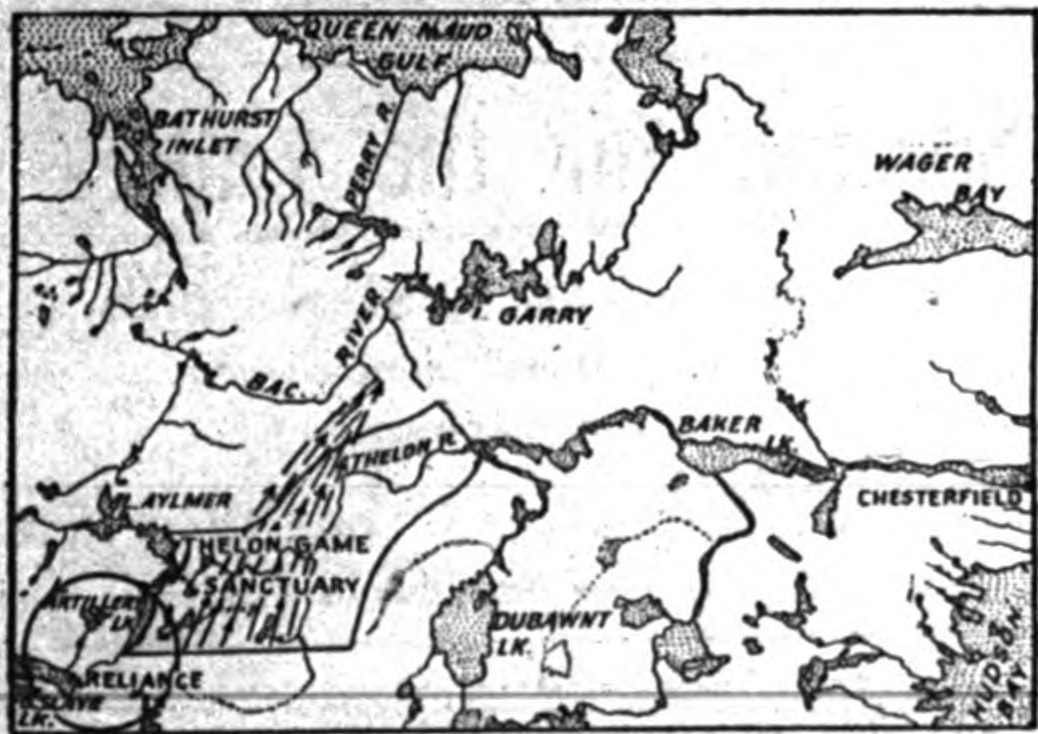

Next Monday is Polling Day and at that time it is your privilege to say by means of the ballot, just who shall govern and administer the affairs of the people of Canada. This election has a vital bearing upon the life of every one of us. Matters of taxation, the development of the country, the providing of work for our people, the giving of opportunity to our sons and daughters, the maintenance of harmony within our borders, and of the closer relations with our Motherland and the rest of the Empire, are some of the issues that must engage our attention and everyone of us, claiming to be a good and true Canadian must use the ballot with a true sense of responsibility and discharge our duty in an honored conscientious manner.

Canada is a young country with a wondrous future if properly handled. We must assume our role of elector with seriousness and sincerity. The problems of our Country's administration must be considered and studied and our action at the polls will have much to do with our contribution to the life of the world in which we live. Our votes must be given to insure Canada's best development and this can best be done by supporting men of character, ability and integrity.

Caribou in Canadian North

Marked Increase in Numbers of These Animals in Area East of Great Slave Lake

Caribou in Canadian North—The above map of a portion of the Northwest Territories shows in the lower left hand corner the Thelon Game Sanctuary. The circle shows where the caribou "milled" around Artillery Lake while the arrows pointing upward indicate the direction and wedge-like shape of the caribou migration, both of which movements are described in the accompanying article.

Observations made by explorers and investigators of the Department of the Interior over a considerable period indicate that a decided improvement has taken place in recent years in the condition of the caribou herds of Canada's northland. To the west in Yukon Territory and eastward almost to Hudson Bay the caribou are reported in large numbers, in many cases having reappeared in their old migrational routes. The frequent changing of migrational routes is a characteristic of the caribou and a source of worry and uncertainty to natives and others depending on the caribou for food. However the return of the caribou in such large numbers to the old routes is looked upon as a favorable sign.

Mr. W. H. B. Hoare, investigator for the North West Territories and Yukon Branch, in the course of his patrol and investigation of the Thelon Game Sanctuary east of Great Slave Lake in 1928 and 1929, had unusual opportunities for studying the caribou migrations in the eastern part of the Mackenzie District and secured much data on hitherto unobserved phases of this important subject.

During the winter of 1928-29 Mr. Hoare was engaged in transporting supplies for the sanctuary patrol for the season of 1929 from Reliance at the east end of Great Slave Lake eastward to the Thelon River, a distance by their route of about 200 miles. The western boundary of the Thelon preserve is formed by a chain of long, narrow lakes of which the most southerly is Artillery Lake, and the next Ptarmigan. These lakes are roughly parallel with the course of the Thelon River and from 100 to 120 miles west of that stream.

Early in the winter numbers of caribou began to appear on both sides of Artillery Lake, and about the middle of December the herds joined in a great anti-clockwise milling movement in a circle, seventy-five to one hundred miles in diameter. They went north up the east side of Artillery Lake, turned westward and crossed Ptarmigan Lake on the ice, then, swinging to the south, crossed the east arm of Great Slave Lake to the mouth of the Snowdrift River, then eastward again to Artillery Lake. Mr. Hoare's duties kept him travelling from one point to another in this great circle, and the movement reminded him of the method of preparing for a parade by marching the units around a city hall square.

Early in the month of March a distinct migration began, proceeding from the south end of Artillery Lake to the northeast. The moving mass was wedge-shaped, with the thin edge to the front. It took six weeks for it to pass a given point and in that time it gradually expanded from a few hundred yards in width until the base of the wedge covered the whole space between Artillery Lake and Thelon River. The spear head consisted of a narrow column of old bulls. During the first two weeks nothing but bulls appeared in the widening phalanx; then occurred two weeks when bulls and cows were about evenly mixed through the moving herds; whereas during the last two weeks cows and yearlings made up practically all of the animals seen.

During this period of a month and a half Mr. Hoare and his assistant were moving back and forth between Artillery Lake and Thelon River, almost at right angles to the moving mass. In the earlier trips as they moved eastward they would pass beyond the line of march and on their return would find that it had broadened out in that direction, until finally the tracks spread across the whole expanse, so that for miles it would be impossible to take a step without crossing one or more caribou tracks. At no place was the snow trodden down into a path. This indicated that the caribou travelled in extended order and that they were grazing as they went.

Observations extending over a number of years show that on these fall and spring migrations the cows in each case travel a much greater distance than the bulls, continuing their southern movement well into the fringe of the timber and their northern journey farther to selected areas of safety for fawning. The mature bulls may be said to confine their seasonal movements to the central part of the caribou range. Thus in the spring migration the bulls are in the lead at the beginning but the cows soon overtake them and pass through their ranks. The cows continue on to the fawning grounds, while the northern limit of the bull migration is governed by the desire to secure good summer pasturage and to escape insect pests.

Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior, has always taken a keen personal interest in wild life matters in the Northwest Territories and through the investigations and surveys of his officers has been kept closely in touch with the changing conditions. Game regulations and other laws governing the protection of wild life have been revised from time to time to provide for the altering situation and this constant and close supervision is considered to have been one of the factors in the present gratifying changes as regards caribou.

Washing Silk Frocks

With the advent of summer, many mothers are busy making pretty silk garments for the children. Silk frocks and jumpers are frequently spoilt with the first wash. The following rules should be kept in mind:—

Never rub—you will make the material streaky. Never wring, but squeeze with hands in the soap-suds; then pass the garment through the wringer, wrapped in a towel. Never use a hot iron—it will shrivel silk.

If a gloss is desired, add one dessertspoonful of methylated spirit to half a pint of water; if stiffening, add one teaspoonful of gum water to the same quantity of water. Iron wet on right side with a thin cloth between the material and the iron. A piece of butter muslin is quite thick enough.

A Sprig of Rhododendron

Dear friend, you wrote me much of news
Of babies born and old folks died;
And said no word of melting blues
And grays against the mountain-side.

You told how many came to church
And something more about the weather;
And wrote no word of mountain birch
And pine that nestle close together.

Now, from your note, a single word
Of blossom speaks of clouds that settle,
And now your note sings like a bird
With that one rhododendron petal.

—Raymond Kresensky.

Noted Authority Says Science Has Tuberculosis "On the Run"

London.—"Consumption is on the run," declared Sir Robert Philip, authority on the disease, at the recent annual conference of the National Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis. Sir Robert is vice-chairman of the council of the national association, head of the Tuberculosis Society of Scotland and member of a dozen other societies working to control "the white plague."

The fight against tuberculosis has been so successful that there are good prospects for the wiping out of the disease within one generation. This was the view expressed by several speakers at a session of the convention.

Sir Robert Philip reported the death rate from consumption had been reduced from 230 per 100,000 of population of the British Isles, which it was in 1870, to 90 per 100,000 in 1922. Infected milk, said Sir Robert, was still responsible for much tuberculosis but the association was doing its utmost to solve the problem of bovine tuberculosis.

New Apartments Meet All Needs

Groups Like "Child-Rich" Families Join to Build Homes

(By Earl D. Myers, Asst. Professor of Social Economy, University of Chicago.)

Hamburg, Ger.—The city of Hamburg has a very limited land area. Therefore its rapid rate of growth, beginning in 1923-1924, soon convinced the housing authorities that the "garden city" plan of development at first tried must be abandoned in favor of the apartment house type of building. The dream of a garden for each worker's family became an impossibility.

MORE THAN SELF-SERVICE

A few of the new buildings has been erected as private enterprises, under the usual public supervision. But by far the majority have been constructed by associations and organizations of every conceivable sort. One unusually fine block was planned and erected by the officials of the Treasury Department of Hamburg; another by the postal officials; another by an association of directing officials in various government departments; others by trade union groups; others by political groups. All of them are so constructed that every apartment receives abundant light and air. Great open courts, with huge sand boxes and play space for the children, with benches set among attractive shrubbery where the adults may sit, and flower gardens for the enjoyment of everybody are the universal rule.

One great new building, covering with its courts, a huge city block, and containing 230 apartments, has been built by an association of families with four or more children—a branch of the German Union of "Child-rich" Families. Because most of these families are relatively poor, the city paid a great share of the building cost. Furthermore, because the mothers must work in order to help feed and clothe so many, the building has been equipped with a thoroughly modern and amazingly attractive kindergarten and day-home (Hort); the former for the day care of small children and the latter for the care in the afternoon, of those of school age.

SCAR-PROOF WALLS

The children are separated into small groups, each in charge of a trained Kindergarten or Hortener. Each room is painted in a different color, but all in colors so pleasing that no room is less attractive than the others. The lower part of the walls are of special composition, and painted with a special paint which makes it possible for the children to write and draw on them with chalk without rearing or damage. They need only to be washed to remove all evidence of their use as blackboards. The visitors who see only the empty rooms has to be told that they are thus used. They appear only as unusually well-done, flat-tone walls. This part of the building serves also as a centre for the meeting of small or large groups in the neighborhood, in the evening. One large room, decorated in distinctively "modern" German fashion, with equally "modern" lighting fixtures, serves in the day as a place for the afternoon nap, and at night for lectures or for meetings of the parents. Another unique housing project in Hamburg has been carried out by the Association of Trade Unions. They have built, near the centre of the city, a large 10-story building. One-half is devoted to a comfortable and attractive hotel for transient men, and is operated at a profit. The rates are Vilhjalmur Stefansson, world famous Norwegian Arctic explorer, talking to reporters on the Empress of Scotland on which he sailed from Quebec for England.

HOMELESS YOUTH SHELTERED

The two upper floors of the hotel have been rented by the public bureau for the care of children and youth, and are used for giving shelter to young men between the ages of 16 and 21 who have come to Hamburg and have no place to live. They are of two types. One is the young journeymen, who in many trades still spend three years traveling from place to place, working a few weeks or a few months at each place, just as did the journeyman of the eighteenth century.

The other type is the young man who has left home without due notice, and is waiting for the decision concerning his return to the city or town from which he has come. The airy light rooms, each with two new beds, writing table and wardrobe are quite in contrast to the barren dormitory rooms which one usually finds in German cities for the accommodation of this latter group. On the first floor is a restaurant where the youth, the hotel guests, or the general public may go for good meals at reasonable prices.

APARTMENTS FOR MOTHERS

The other half of the building—the part which is most unique—contains some 200 two-room kitchenette apartments for working women with small children. These are the very people who are likely to live most miserably when houses are scarce and wages low. It was largely for these that the house was built. The surplus earnings of the hotel are applied to the costs of this part of the institution, making possible a rate of rent which the low wages of the woman worker can meet. The apartments themselves have been planned with great care so that space is conserved and a maximum of comfort achieved. The women who live here are justly proud of their new home, and are eloquent in their expressions of appreciation for the service which the trade union group is performing for them and their children. Adequately equipped kindergarten and Hort are of course, a part of the equipment of the place.

NO PROFITS SOUGHT

This house, then, is for some 200 women of Hamburg a sort of equivalent for the widespread American practice of granting a mother's pension to the mother with small children so that she need not be separated from them.

Thus in this city of flux and change, of buzzing activity and rapid growth—this gateway to a continent—the city, the trade unions, the social and political organizations are combining in an attempt to meet adequately the housing aspect of the life of a great city. And, as Dr. Brand said: they are trying to do it from a "social" rather than a purely economic standpoint.

Dandelion

The Lady Dandelion
Is going far away,
She wears her robe of morning mist
In the broad of day.

And all across the meadow
The spirit blossoms stand,
And Summer's just beginning,
And Spring has left the land.

The Lady Dandelion
Was jewel bright and fair,
When Spring came lightly treading
And bound her in her hair.

But Summer will not have her,
And so, on silver wing,
The Lady Dandelion
Is going after Spring.

—Jessie Findlay Brown.

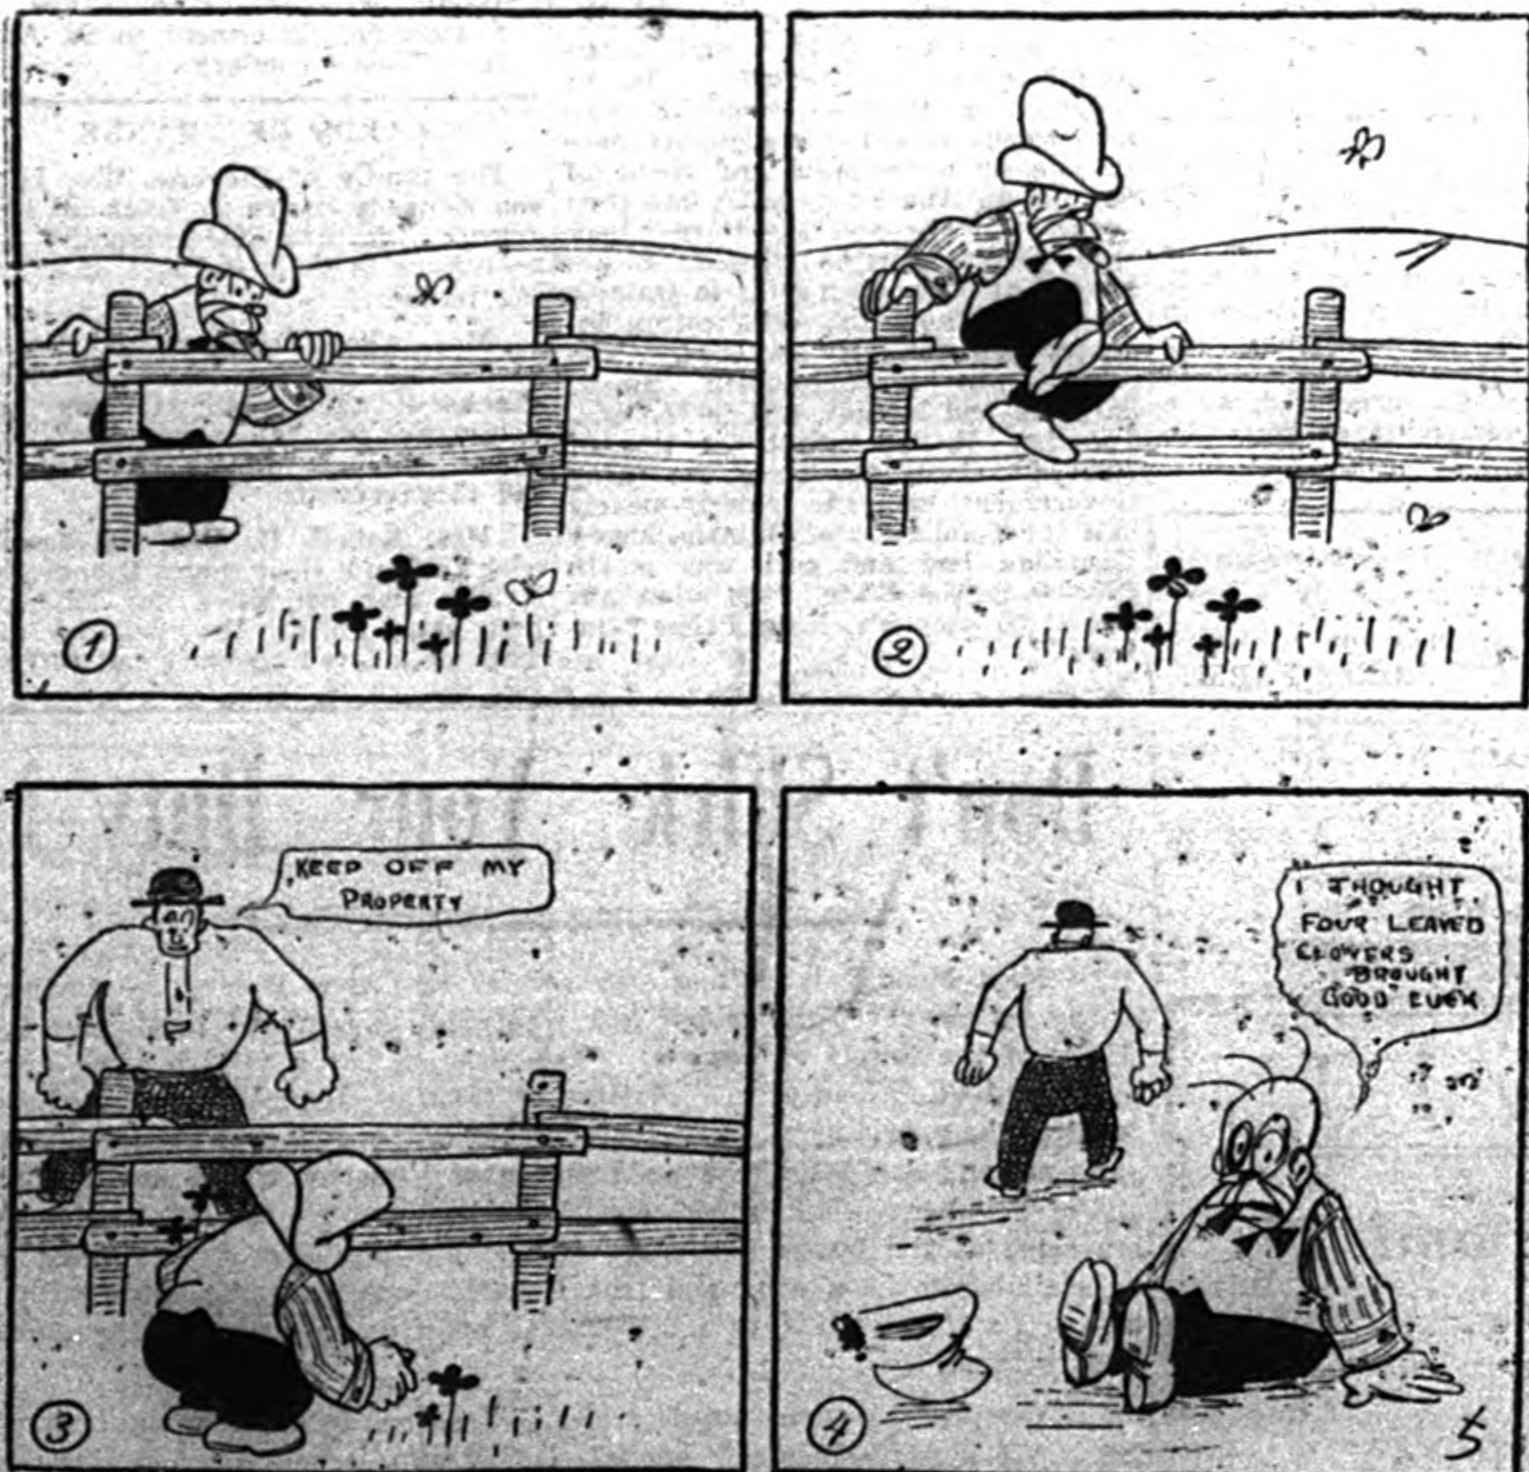

"Lady, give me dat lawn mower for a few minutes."

"Gracious. And are you really going to push it a while? How nice of you."

"No, mum, I'm not going to push it. I am going to put some oil on it so it will run easier. De squeaking disturbs de slumbers of me pards in the gooseberry patch."

Doctor: "Your wife seems to have eaten something that disagreed with her." Henpecked Husband: "Oh, no, doctor! It wouldn't dare to."

ADAMSON'S ADVENTURES—By O. Jacobsson

They Do Less Damage as Butterflies.

Oil Well Splashes Business District

Oklahoma Civic Leaders Threaten Well-drillers

Oklahoma City, Okla.—When the first oil well "came in" not so long ago in a city-owned park and a new source of revenue poured into the municipal treasury, citizens rejoiced over a dream of making Oklahoma City a taxless community. When, however, another park gave way to the pounding "mud hogs" and wind-blown spray from a well that "went into the air" spotted white buildings and nicely polished motorcars—well, something had to be done about it.

The press, civic leaders and the city government took steps to head off further encroachment of the drillers within the city limits, by pleading, by law and by appeal to civic pride. The sight of an oil well less than half a mile from the center of the business district, with another imminent in the very shadow of the beautiful state Capitol, close to an exclusive residential district, has spurred them on to save the city by regulating the drillers or by mechanically controlling the flow from the wells.

Early after the discovery well came in, it was found that the field was moving toward the city. The City Planning Commission threw open certain parts of the area in the city limits to drilling, subject to rigid regulations. This "U-Z" zone has caused litigation that is swamping the city legal department and making it imperative that more than make-shift ordinances be prepared and enforced.

Most Oklahoma City property owners are convinced that the city is built on an oil pool, but most of them appear at this time to be more interested in their homes than in possible oil riches. They have visions of the noisy rotary drills, or "mud hogs," busy day and night near the south edge of the city, of another wild "Mary Sudik" gusher spraying the city for weeks, and of blazing gassers that make the nights hideous.

To understand the terrific pressure with which a wild gusher comes to the surface in this "deep production" area, imagine a small hole, seven inches in diameter, but 6500 feet deep—about a mile and a quarter—purposely filled with rock and earth to make "rock pressure"—21,600 pounds per square inch—which holds back the oil and gas until the operator decides to "open the well."

As the fluid starts rising, the "bailers" know the well is ready to "clean itself out." In practically all cases in the Oklahoma City field, this has been done by allowing it to "go over the crown block," that tiny square structure at the top of the derrick. Mud, oil and water are scattered over the countryside. The drillers rush in and turn the huge valves of the master gate, the well is controlled, and turned through the "separators" into the tanks.

Oil produced here brings to the surface a hard sand, almost as fine as flour. Sand cutting, which destroyed gates, heads, valves, and every other machine, was the direct cause of wild "Mary Sudik" and several other less spectacular wells in the field.

Experiments have been tried to control wells and let them "clean out" without turning the oil into the air. The most recent experiments, and to some extent successful ones, have been in turning the oil through a "trap" similar in action to an ordinary plumbing trap, before it goes into the separator. The sand catches in the trap, and thus does not "eat out" the separator.

The Latest in Bread-Lines

A bread-line for cats has been found necessary, as indicated by its establishment on Centre Market Place, New York City, where alley cats are fed milk and beef. This should arouse some cat owners to the realization that family cats can no more be expected to pick up their sustenance on the streets than can family children.

Paris is eating less bread, the decrease being nearly 5,000,000 loaves a year for the last five years. French farmers are blaming the slimming craze among women for this serious state of affairs.

A Real Nerve Tonic

Is a Bountiful Supply of Rich, Health-Giving Blood.

Sufferers from nervous debility and themselves tired, low-spirited and unable to keep their minds on anything. They are totally unfit to perform their everyday duties.

Doctoring the nerves with sedatives is a terrible mistake. The only real nerve tonic is a good supply of rich, red blood. To secure this rich, red blood Dr. Williams' Pink Pills should be taken. Enriching and purifying the blood is their whole mission. Concerning them Mrs. Albert Bentley, Bancroft, Ont., writes:—"Two years ago I was a complete wreck; in bed for seven months; extremely nervous had no color. Nothing I tried seemed to help me till I began Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. My condition at once improved and to-day I am well and able for anything without fatigue or trouble."

You can get these pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Helpful Hints!

It is a mistake to keep biscuits in the same tin with cakes. If placed together, the former quickly become soft.

If meat is not to be used at once in hot weather, sprinkle a little pepper over it. This not only discourages flies, but helps to conserve the juices.

Mint will keep fresh for a considerable time if it is washed in cold water in which a little carbonate of soda has been dissolved.

Suet will not stick to the knife while chopping if a little ground rice has been sprinkled over it.

When frying foodstuffs care should be taken to avoid placing too much into the pan at one time, as this decreases the temperature of the fat.

Add a few drops of lemon juice to rice while it is cooking. This not only whitens the rice, but separates the grains.

Bacon will not shrink while frying if it has been dipped into flour.

Plans are taking shape for the institution of a regular air service between Manchester and Blackpool, consisting of a daily trip that will take 40 minutes for a journey that takes twice that time by the fastest trains at present. The existing round-trip fare for the Manchester-Blackpool trip is £3, but expectations are that this will be reduced to approximately £1 for the single journey, with the possibility of further reduction if larger machines can be employed for the journeys.

Copenhagen Union Purchase Island To Be Used as Children's Playground

Copenhagen.—After somewhat protracted negotiations the Union of Copenhagen municipal teachers have bought the charming island of Thoro, off the coast of Fuhnen, itself an island, and almost opposite the ancient and picturesque town of Assens. The recent owner had spent large sums of money on it and, amongst other things had erected a colossal bronze monument of the old Northern god Thor, after whom the island is called, and which cost twice as much as the teachers have paid for the whole island, with residence, outbuildings, museum and so forth. The Copenhagen Municipality has guaranteed the purchase sum.

The purpose is to turn this island into a holiday resort or "colony," as they call it in Denmark, for Copenhagen school children, and for which purpose it is simply ideal. Some more cows will have to be added to the live stock, so that there will be milk enough for the children who are to spend their holidays there. There will be an "all the year round" colony for children, and this section of the work will naturally entail regular teaching of the children. There is ample accommodation for the teachers. This is the first venture here in the matter of an "all the year round" colony for children, needing care, and the innovation is being regarded with much interest. The buildings leave nothing to be desired, being equipped with central heating and other modern installations and it is expected that 100 children can be received in the new home.

The island, which in the past has been much frequented by tourists, will remain open to the public throughout the year. Denmark is rich in islands along her extensive coasts; they number about 50 and Thoro Island now will become a children's sanctuary.

Arabian Spices and Mysteries of the East Lurk in Jerusalem's Byways

"Plau"—Rice Cooked in Fat—Spiced English Beef and Midget Porters Fascinate Visitors

Jerusalem.—Exotic corners of Jerusalem are being explored by a Palestine journalist who describes out-of-the-way places where tourists rarely go, yet where is to be found much of the variety of color and interest with which Jerusalem is filled.

"A little with eight people squeezed into six seats will take you right into the Bukharian Quarter," the description says, "where people wear gloriously colored dresses which, resplendent in Bukharian, have not lost all their resplendency in Jerusalem. Here you will find silks which make the mouth water. The colors are perhaps a little gaudier than you may like and the gold and silver thread may seem a little too rich for you to take back with you to somber London or to some other sunless city of the West. You will try and secure a meal in the house of a Bukharian. He will give you a dish of plau, which is like the taste of all the luxurious sweetmeats of India. It is merely rice cooked in a bath of fat. But if you cool rice in fat, you won't get plau. There are centuries of exotic cooking behind plau.

"I mentioned plau when talking of the Bukharians. In the Georgian Quarter you can have a meal of shashlik. It is English roast beef with the mystery of all the East in the roasting. I do not know how it is prepared, but I have a suspicion that it contains all the spices of Araby. You may not relish the way it is served up but if you do not have a meal of shashlik, your visit to Jerusalem will have been in vain."

"There is a Quarter for Kurds who come from Kurdistan. But you scarcely need to go to their Quarter to see them. They are to be found on every main road with a pack on their back waiting to carry your luggage for you, for the Kurd is the beast of burden of Palestine. One short man will take your grand piano, heave it on his back and walk along with it as quietly and as nobly as a camel. He looks so small that you would never suspect he could carry more than a tin of biscuits."

Gliding Popular Sport in Britain

London.—Great Britain must organize a series of summer camps, or even a number of week-end camps, if gliding is to become anything but the sport of a few enthusiasts.

That is the view which Herr Kronfeld, the Austrian gliding champion, expressed to a reporter recently when he discussed the possibilities of gliding in this country.

"You have an ideal country here," he said "and I am surprised that Great Britain has not taken it up more seriously. She became a great nation of seamen in the days of sailing ships. That gave her a sea sense which power-driven ships will never do. In the same way a glider or a soarer gives you air sense which pilot trained on a power-driven machine rarely acquires."

"I am sure that more than half the aeroplane crashes could be avoided if the pilots were trained first on gliders and then on soarers."

Herr Kronfeld explained how in a glider one learnt to do a series of hops then in a more advanced type of craft one learnt to do "S" bends in the air. Finally in a high efficiency soarer, one was able to keep up almost indefinitely while there was any wind. "Where there are clouds," he said, "there you can soar for there is always a rising current of air which causes the clouds."

Hot July Days Hard on Baby

July—the month of oppressive heat; red-hot days and sweltering nights; is extremely hard on little ones. Diarrhoea, dysentery, colic and cholera infantum carry off thousands of precious little lives every summer. The mother must be on her guard to prevent these troubles, or if they come on suddenly to fight them. No other medicine is of such aid to mothers during the hot summer as is Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the bowels and stomach, and an occasional dose given to the well child will prevent summer complaint, or if the trouble does come suddenly will banish it. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Lace Box

Sylvia came running to her mother with a piece of lace. "May I have this to dress up with? I want to be a queen."

"Mercy no! Where did you find my Venetian lace bertha?"

"It was in a box on the closet self, and you don't wear it any more!" A quiver was appearing in Sylvia's chin. Mrs. Burnet was just putting on her hat, but she took it off, and going to the closet, carried the lace box to the bed. A pang of memory shot through her. She could remember her own mother gently unwrapping the blue tissue paper covers, taking out a christening robe and saying: "Three Sylviae have been christened in this dress. See the lovely little puffs, and the lace it is trimmed with is real Valenciennes." Now a fourth Sylvia had been christened in that same dress—her own little Sylvia who was looking at her, with tears of disappointment. The laces in the box were scrambled by hurried little fingers, and on one wrapping was a black smudge.

"That's my fault," thought Mrs. Burnet, "for not having taught her about these beautiful things."

She unfolded the point lace wedding veil that lay inside and began to tell all she knew about the way it was made; how the peasants gathered great bundles of flax and soaked them in water until the thick jacket of the stem rotted away leaving the tiny tangle of white fibers beneath; how it was combed and then spun into threads, and how the patient women sitting on their doorsteps in the sun worked away day after day, and sometimes year after year, on the same pattern, putting in the flowers and tendrils and dainty traceries; how certain families had been so noted for their lace-making that they had come to make lace only for the kings and queens and royal princesses.

"Do the Indians make lace, Mother?" Sylvia asked.

"Not if you mean the American Indians," her mother answered. "Some of the tribes make embroidery, but they have never made lace, at least, not until taught by white people. Some civilized nations have never made any of importance, either, but you and I would need to travel a good many miles if we visited every country where the lace in this box was made. Here is a mantle made by Spaniards in South America, and here is a bit of Brussels lace made in Belgium. This Venetian is made of a tiny braid. Doesn't the pattern make you think of the waves and bubbles in the water in the wake of a gondola? It is very different from the leaves and flowers of this Duchess or this Irish crochet."

"Let's play a game," said Sylvia. "See if I can name each piece and tell its country as you put it back."

"You may handle them yourself," said her mother, "only—"

"Only I must get my hands very clean first," and Sylvia skipped off happily, coming back after a few minutes with a pair of pink, perfectly scrubbed hands. As she helped fold the laces and put them back in their tissue paper covers she said, "Mother, I'm glad you didn't let me dress up. If you had I should only have been thinking about me and not that the lace was lovely at all."—Issued by the National Kindergarten Association, 8 West 40th Street, New York City. Those in attendance at the nomination proceedings in the Auditorium on Monday afternoon were doubtless surprised at hearing the Liberal candidate L. L. Legault, K.C., publicly denounce Mr. J. T. Ayers for bribery and corruption in making certain promises of money to the Rev. V. Bouchard for repairs to his church. The following letters are self-explanatory and we are pleased to publish same in order that the truth may be fully known.

July 22nd, 1930

Reverend V. Bouchard,
Parish Priest,
Brownsburg.

Dear Reverend Father Bouchard:—

I wish to inform you that, at a Political Meeting held in the Auditorium, Lachute, yesterday, Mr. L. L. Legault, speaking in English, made the statement that I had promised you the sum of $1,200.00 for repairs to Church if there was a Conservative majority in this election.

As you are fully aware that I never made you such a promise in connection with your Church in Brownsburg or elsewhere, I would be greatly obliged to you for a letter acknowledging this fact.

Thanking you very much for your kind consideration, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

J. T. AYERS.

Mr. J. T. Ayers,
Lachute Mills, Que.

Dear Sir:—

With reference to the information contained in your letter of this date, I wish to state that there is no foundation whatsoever in the statement made by Mr. L. L. Legault at a Political Meeting held in the Auditorium, at Lachute, on the 21st., that you made me a promise of the sum of Twelve Hundred Dollars for repairs to Church if there was a Conservative majority in the present election. No such promise was ever made in connection with my Church in Brownsburg or any other Church under my charge.

You were very generous to me at the time I built the new Church in Brownsburg some years ago in donating the sum of One Thousand Dollars at which time Sir George Perley also donated the sum of Five Hundred Dollars, such donations having had nothing to do with politics and I was most thankful for same.

Hoping this letter will fully establish the truth in the matter,
I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

V. BOUCHARD, P. P.

Brownsburg, P. Q., 22nd July, 1930.

Lachute Mills, P. Q., 22 juillet 1930

Révérend V. Bouchard,
Prêtre-Curé,
Brownsburg, P. Q.

Cher Monsieur le Curé:—

Je désire vous informer qu'à une assemblée politique tenue à l'Auditorium, à Lachute, hier, M. L. L. Legault, alors qu'il parlait en anglais, fit l'assertion que j'avais promis la somme de Douze Cent Dollars pour réparations à l'Eglise si une majorité conservatrice était obtenue dans la présente élection.

Comme vous savez parfaitement bien que je ne vous ai jamais fait aucune promesse de la sorte en rapport avec votre église à Brownsburg ou ailleurs, je vous serais grandement obligé pour une lettre de votre part accusant ce fait.

Vous remerciant beaucoup pour votre bonne considération, veuillez me croire,

Lachute Mills, P. Q.

M. J. T. Ayers,
Cher Monsieur:—

A propos de ce que vous m'apprenez dans votre lettre d'aujourd'hui, je désire affirmer par la présente qu'il n'y a absolument aucune fondation pour l'assertion faite par Mr. L. L. Legault, à une Assemblée Politique tenue à l'Auditorium, à Lachute, le 21 courant, à l'effet que vous m'aviez fait une promesse du paiement de la somme de Douze Cent Dollars, pour réparations à l'Eglise s'il y avait une majorité Conservatrice dans la présente élection. Vous ne m'avez fait aucune promesse de la sorte concernant l'Eglise de Brownsburg ou aucune Eglise sous ma desserte.

Vous avez été très généreux alors que je bâtissais l'Eglise neuve de Brownsburg il y a quelques années en me donnant la somme de Mille Dollars, Sir George Perley m'ayant aussi donné la somme de Cinq Cent Dollars à cette même occasion, et je vous fus bien reconnaissant et heureux de cette libéralité qui n'avait positivement rien à faire avec la politique.

Espérant que cette lettre établira la vérité dans cette affaire, je suis

Votre tout dévoué,

V. BOUCHARD, Prêtre-Curé

Big Rally at Nomination!

Sir George Perley and L. L. Legault in titanic struggle

Charges of bribery and corruption

With two defeats, Mr. L. L. Legault is again for the third time contesting the seat of Argenteuil for Federal honors against that of Sir George H. Perley and nomination day found the stalwarts out in full force to uphold the men of their choice.

Long before the hour appointed for the meeting the commodious auditorium was packed to overflowing and the vast audience were duly appreciative of the speakers as they advocated the interests of their respective sides.

Mayor C. Tremblay, of Lachute, and Mayor David Black, of St. Jerusalem, were appointed joint chairmen of the meeting and the first speaker called was Mr. Legault the government's candidate who spoke on what Mr. King has called the three main issues of the campaign, the record of the Government, the Dunning budget, and Imperial preference and concluded that a straightforward, honest and successful administration such as the past, with sound policies for the future, should continue to receive the support of the Canadian people. The Conservative policy he contended was one of "protection and promises" which would bring increased taxes and a higher cost of living.

Mr. Legault then turned upon Sir George and denounced him as having used corrupt methods in buying up the country, at the same time he stated that Mr. J. T. Ayers as Sir George Perley's organizer endeavored to bribe Father Bouchard at Brownsburg with a promise of $1200.
for his church if St. Michel gave a majority in favor of the Conservatives.
Sir George immediately denied any knowledge of such transaction. Mr.
Legault also wanted to know on what items the tariff would be raised if the Conservatives came to power and also referred to the New Zealand butter treaty, stating they had done nothing to abrogate it when they were in power in 1926.

Sir George Perley spoke in French and English, touching first on immigration, unemployment and old age pensions, before turning to a reply to Mr. Legault. The King Government, he said, had wasted money during its years in power instead of putting some aside for hard times such as were now being experienced, and he challenged Mr. Legault to talk about present conditions rather than quote figures and statistics about three and four years back. "What has the Dunning budget done?" he added, "can
Mr. Legault answer me that? How has it helped you people?"

In regard to the articles upon which the tariff would be raised, Sir George answered that that would have to be carefully studied by the Conservative Government when it came into power, but he assured his auditors that Mr. Bennett's policy was one of reasonable protection in all cases.
Sir George further refuted Mr. Legault's statement that British preference would solve the problem of selling Canada's wheat. He said that what Canada needed was an arrangement with Great Britain for mutual preference. Further, in reply to the Liberal candidate's allusion to bribery at Brownsburg, Sir George asked his adversary what he meant by using provincial money to give extra work to many men on the roads just at the time of the federal elections.

Finally Sir George paid a sincere tribute to R. B. Bennett, leader of the Conservative party, and asked for continued support in the present elections.

George Dansereau, M.L.A., for the county, spoke briefly in favor of Mr. Legault; and he was followed by Jean Laporte, of Montreal, who made a fiery speech in favor of Sir George Perley. Denouncing the 61 Quebec Liberal representatives as "mouton deputies," who have betrayed their province to the west, he asked if the people of Argenteuil wanted to send another "mouton" in the person of Mr. Legault to Parliament.

Mr. Antonio Plante asked the electors if they did not have enough good men in Argenteuil without having to go to Ottawa to find their member of Parliament. He felt that the King Government had been working for nearly ten years to pay off the debts of the last Conservative Government, and he hoped that the people would take no chances of acquiring more debts through the policy of promises and expenditures advocated by Mr.
Bennett. He denied that Mr. Legault was using provincial money on the roads to gain federal votes; but declared that, even if he was, it would be better to give men jobs than to give them bribes of money.

CALDER RECEIVES OVATION.

R. L. Calder, K.C., summer resident of Lachute for many years and former Liberal, received a fine ovation when he rose to speak, though a certain section of the crowd endeavored for a while to prevent him from speaking. Mr. Calder was interrupted on numerous occasions by speakers on the Liberal side and by members of the audience, but each time he rose to the occasion and turned the laugh on his opponents. Mr. Calder spoke of the terrible state of agriculture in the province, of the unemployment in the cities, of the depression in the boot and shoe industries, and simply asked his audience to ask themselves how this had all come about.

He declared that Mr. King had said in Parliament that he must know how a man voted before he could give him anything for unemployment. "Mr. King never said that," Mr. Legault interrupted. "Oh yes he did, he said it twice and repeated it at Calgary," Mr. Calder replied.

T. H. Carveth, who ran as Liberal against R. S. White in the last election in Mount Royal, was the next speaker for Mr. Legault, and he quoted from a mass of documents to show how prosperous the country had been during the past few years.

Mr. Calder then completed his speech with a reply to S. W. Jacobs, former Liberal M.P. for Cartier, who had referred to R. S. White as the Pied Piper of Hamelin, and to Alderman Biggar and Mr. Calder as like the animals that followed the piper. Mr. Calder said that he remembered well when Mr. Jacobs had considered with Mr. Mitchell leaving the Liberal party, but that "Mr. Jacobs had been a prudent rat and had remained in the ship because he had found so much provisions in the hold for himself."
"As the most competent backstairs climber in the public life of Canada, he is no man to bring up such a matter," Mr. Calder said, adding that if Mr. Jacobs had read the legend of the Pied Piper aright he would remember that there were children as well as rats who followed after and that these former had left because they had decided that the town of Hamelin was no place for them.

Dr. Plante concluded the argument for the Liberal side, but both he and Mr. Calder declared that they were looking forward to further discussions of other points upon which they were unable to touch at further meetings.

The interest in the meeting and in the elections was carried outside the Auditorium and Lachute was a lively town for the rest of the evening.
Some of the most rowdy arguers, however, were judged to be actuated by other than political feelings, and they were taken in hand for the night.

Head Office Toronto

Sir George H. Perley

Once again the Dominion of Canada finds itself in the heat of a general election, and consequently, the County of Argenteuil is playing no small part. This riding has been very fortunate in its selection of representatives both at Ottawa and Quebec and for years past the men who have gone to the Federal and Provincial capitals have done credit not only to themselves but to the County.

This is not the time for special reference to our Provincial representations, but it is the occasion in which the Federal member is the centre of discussion. For years past this riding has been represented at Ottawa by such men as the late Rt. Hon. Sir John Abbott, the late Senator Owens, the late Dr. Thos. Christie, Thos. Christie and P. R. McGibbon and last but not least our present worthy member Hon. Sir George H. Perley, K.C.M.G. & P.C.

A volume might be written, enumerating the services which Sir George has given, not only to the County of Argenteuil, but to the entire Dominion of Canada, to say nothing of the time he has spent in his illustrious work as High Commissioner of the Dominion in London. Let us for a moment look back at the work Sir George Perley has done not only as a business man and financier, but as a Statesman and Empire Builder. His name is still a household word in England. As High Commissioner for Canada his services to this Country can never be over estimated. It was largely through his term of office in London that Canada was made known to the people of the Old Land. He lost no opportunity to tell of the possibilities of the Dominion and on his retirement from that important position he left a reputation in the British Isles as a man of shrewd business principles and ideal patriotic methods.

Let us deal with Sir George Perley for a moment as a purely Canadian business man. What do we find? From a humble beginning, through sheer business acumen and energy he achieved a national reputation and built up a business that gave employment over a term of long years to many thousands of men, during which time his name was revered and respected by the most humble of his employers.

As a member of Parliament representing the county of Argenteuil at Ottawa, what is his reputation? Sir George, during his membership has sat on the Government and opposition benches and his career is outstanding. It is hardly necessary for us to remind the electors during two summers Sir George was acting Premier of Canada in the absence of Premier Sir Robert Borden in England, following which he was Secretary of State in the Meighen Government. In Parliament Sir George has always occupied a front seat, whether on the government or opposition side and has always been ranked as one of the leaders of the House. His speeches on questions before Parliament have always attracted attention and he is considered one of the most thoughtful men on Parliament Hill.

One might go on at considerable length to enumerate the many personal activities in which he is engaged, not only at Ottawa and his County, but in many philanthropic directions. For instance, the unexpected and very timely donation given this year by Sir George to the Argenteuil Agricultural Society in which he made a deposit of bonds to the value of $10,000 bringing at least a further revenue of $500 annually to the society. It might be interesting to know how many members of Parliament have dealt so generously with any like organization. Many other instances could be quoted of timely financial assistance made by Sir George, but our worthy member has always objected to any publicity or notoriety that might come from personal benevolence. There is one fact that might be pointed out with reference to his parliamentary record, and that is that he is constantly in attendance at parliament during the sessions and takes seriously the confidence placed in him by the electors. He is one of the leading thinkers of the House and when he rises to speak he commands the attention and respect of every member present and is looked upon as one of the leaders.

It is to be hoped that the electors of Argenteuil will seriously consider the influence which Sir George wields before casting their vote on July 28th next. He is a representative that any constituency may well be proud of, and the services which he has rendered to this county as our representative in parliament is certainly deserving of public recognition and approval by his re-election as member for Argenteuil.

"To Mr. Bennett and his party, trade is war . . ." "I always thought trade was an exchange, as the result of which each of the parties concerned may gain . . . To Mr. Bennett, all the countries are competitors. He forgets that all countries are also our customers . . . By our changes in the tariff, we have benefited the manufacturing industries and extensively furthered Canada's trade . . ."

From Premier King's Brantford Speech—June 16th, 1930.

The Liberal Party, builder of Canada's World Trade!

To-day Canada ranks fifth among the great trading nations of the World

We certainly would never have attained that rank under a highly protectionist administration. The goodwill we now enjoy in the markets of the world is undoubtedly the result of the generous fiscal policy inaugurated by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and continued by the King Administration. Thus has our foreign trade developed to twice its previous volume during the eight and a half years of the present Liberal Administration. NO COUNTRY, SINCE THE WAR, HAS REGISTERED AN EQUAL INCREASE IN FOREIGN TRADE.

It is interesting to note that even our exports of manufactured products have also proportionately increased, so much so that these exports to-day exceed in value per capita those of any other country in the world, with the exception of Great Britain.

These characteristic increases are not the result of chance. Recent happenings prove how promptly importing countries react to measures inspired by narrow and selfish protectionist policies. Canada's success is due to the wisdom and moderation of its present fiscal policy, a policy of which our Department of Commerce has taken full advantage in order to open advantageous markets to our goods all over the world.

Here and There

Pressure of business and growth of the Canadian Pacific Telegraphs has necessitated the appointment of an assistant general manager of the system, W. D. Neill, assistant manager, western lines, Winnipeg, having been promoted to the position. Other appointments resulting from this are: W. M. Thompson, superintendent, Ontario Division, Toronto, to be assistant manager, western lines, Winnipeg; E. S. Ingram, superintendent, eastern division, Montreal, to be superintendent, Ontario division, Toronto; and W. S. Emery, chief operator, Montreal, to be superintendent, eastern division, Montreal.

Fox Film Corporation during early July took sound records of the wind in the pines, the music of the waterfalls and the rippling of streams around Banff Springs Hotel and into this boxed atmosphere there will be placed actors and actresses who will be shown climbing mountains, walking by the side of lakes or canoeing on water-courses they have never seen.

Beating the world's record in passenger traffic operations, western Canada came into the limelight at the end of June with the 1,252 mile continuous run from Port William to Calgary performed by Canadian Pacific engine No. 2808, of the H1 class. This locomotive is one of several now in service and under construction for the railway and are the latest type of passenger engine.

Carrying nearly a hundred tourists organized by the University of Montreal, a special Canadian Pacific train left Montreal July 5 for western Canada and the Pacific Coast. This tour is the sixth annual transcontinental trip undertaken and will last for three weeks. The richest industrial, agricultural and commercial districts of Canada, as well as the most beautiful scenery, including the Rocky Mountains, will be visited.

With a five-pound trout taken himself and a four-pounder landed by his son, in the catch, Arthur C. Roche, of Melrose, Mass., has just concluded a ten-day fishing trip down the Cain's River, New Brunswick. He said he had never heard of waters where there were so many trout as in Cain's River.

A total of over $27,000,000 is to be spent this year on the construction and maintenance of roads throughout Canada. Ontario has set aside $12,500,000 of which $10,000,000 for new construction; Quebec will spend $11,000,000 for extending, improving and maintaining the provincial system of roads. Maritime will spend $10,000,000; the Prairie Provinces, $15,000,000, and British Columbia, $8,500,000, representing a total of $67,000,000 spent by provincial governments.

The old gentleman, Father Time, often regarded as somewhat relentless, has had one put over him by the plant breeders at the Government Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa. Two crops of grain are now grown there in each year, one in the open and the other in greenhouses, brilliantly lighted with electric lamps, which have proven to be good substitutes for sun's rays.

venues from excise duties was $10,607,000, this year as against $9,884,000 last year. Income tax revenue, the great bulk of which is collected in these two months was up at $57,783,000 as against $55,454,000 or a gain of $2,329,000.

BRIGHTER PROSPECTS FOR WOMEN ON SCHOOL BOARDS.

The Protestant School Boards of Quebec province have long been in favour of removing the sex disqualification, and of allowing women to sit upon School Boards and to act as Trustees. The law, however, forbade this, until quite lately a special law has been framed for Montreal to admit Sister Anna Marie to the Catholic Board of higher studies in that city. It may be said, on reliable information, that the attitude of the French and Roman Catholics has entirely changed in recent times about the question of allowing women a place on School Boards, and that there are indications that women will be granted this privilege even before the larger franchise is given, and that, since women have so much to do with education in the public schools, she may be allowed an opportunity to present her views in the School Boards throughout the Province.

NATIONAL REVENUE ON THE DECLINE

Canadian revenue receipts show a large falling off for the first two months of the present fiscal year, April and May, as compared with last year according to information released by the Department of National Revenue.

Declining imports have resulted in a reduction of revenue from customs duties, which was $24,476,000 in the first two months of the current fiscal year compared with $33,597,000 in the same period of the fiscal year in 1929-30 or a drop of $9,121,000. Excise taxes were also lower this year at $7,198,000 as compared with $8,885,000. On the other hand, the re-

To The Electors of the County of Argenteuil

Having again the honour of being selected as Conservative Standard bearer in Argenteuil in the coming Federal Election I take this opportunity of thanking my friends for this further proof of their confidence. During the eighteen years that I have been the representative of this County in Parliament, I have done my best to faithfully perform all the duties imposed upon me in that position and I appreciate this fresh evidence of your confidence.

In making my appeal for your support I wish it were possible for me to visit personally your individual homes and calmly discuss with you the questions that are of vital import to you and our beloved Dominion.

In June 1921 the census of this country was taken. If you add the people who came in by immigration and the births as shown by the figures issued by the Bureau of Statistics, up to the first day of June 1930, and then deduct the deaths, you will realize that the country should have a population today of one and one quarter million more than it now has, if they had been able to get work here. This is a scathing indictment against the King administration.

The loss to the farmers of Eastern Canada caused by the diminished demands for their products, and the influx of New Zealand butter has destroyed the dairying industry to the point where agriculturalists are in a precarious position. As a direct result of the preferential duty Canada imported in 1929 over 34 million pounds of butter, while in 1925 Canada exported a surplus of 24 million pounds over and above our own requirements.

One of the principal matters that mean much to the people of Canada is that of the old age pensions in which I take a deep interest.

At present no one in this Province of Quebec gets an old age pension. Why? Because the King Government insisted that the Provinces should pay half of the cost and the Province of Quebec has refused to do this. Some Liberal Speakers say that the Conservatives in Parliament opposed the giving of Old Age Pensions, but that is not true. The Conservatives objected to the conditions imposed by the Government on the Provinces, and Bennett has pledged himself to the payment out of Dominion Money of the whole of old age pensions in all the Provinces. The present Prime Minister's feeling regarding payment for old age pensions by the Dominions was really best expressed by himself when he referred to it as "a vicious principle." Under the Liberal policy there are no old age pensions for any one in this Province. If you believe that they should come from the Dominion exchequer, you must support the Conservative Party.

The Electors of the County must pass judgment on the 28th. inst., and I make this appeal for your support not only on behalf of myself, but for my leader Hon. R. B. Bennett whose keynote in this election is "Give Canada a chance." If you honour me by again electing me I will do my best to give you faithful service.

GEORGE H. PERLEY.

July 15th., 1930.

Vous m'avez fait l'honneur, une fois de plus, d'être le porte-étendard du parti conservateur dans le comté d'Argenteuil pour la prochaine election fédérale et je suis très touché de cette nouvelle preuve de confiance. J'ai représenté ce comté au parlement pendant dix-huit ans et durant cette période, j'ai toujours rempli fidèlement tous les devoirs qui m'étaient imposés en ma qualité de représentant de votre comté.

En faisant appel à votre appui, je désirerais qu'il me fût possible de vous visiter chacun en particulier afin de discuter des questions qui sont d'importance vitale pour nous et pour notre cher Dominion.

A la population du Canada, telle que fournie par le recensement de juin 1921, en y ajoutant le nombre d'immigrants et les naissances d'après les rapports du Bureau des Statistiques jusqu'au premier juin 1930, déduction faite des décès, notre pays devrait avoir une population d'un million et un quart de plus, si les conditions de travail avaient été plus favorables. Ceci constitue une accusation grave contre le gouvernement de M. King.

La perte causée aux cultivateurs de l'Est, par la diminution de la vente de leurs produits et par l'entrée en ce pays du beurre de la Nouvelle-Zélande, a détruit l'industrie laitière à tel point que les agriculteurs sont dans une situation précaire. Comme conséquence directe du tarif préférentiel, le Canada a importé en 1929 plus de trente-quatre millions de livres de beurre tandis qu'en 1925, le Canada en avait exporté un surplus de vingt-quatre millions. Une des questions qui intéressent beaucoup le peuple du Canada et à laquelle je porte moi-même un grand intérêt, c'est la "pension aux vieillards."

Actuellement dans la province de Québec, il n'y a pas de pensions aux vieillards. Pourquoi? Parce que le gouvernement King voulait que chacune des provinces payât la moitié du coût de ces pensions et que la province de Québec a refusé de le faire. Quelques orateurs libéraux prétendent que les conservateurs au parlement sont opposés à ce bill mais ceci n'est pas la vérité. Les conservateurs se sont opposés aux conditions imposées par le gouvernement des provinces, et M. Bennett s'est engagé à payer des pensions aux vieillards, dans toutes les provinces, à même les fonds du Dominion. Le sentiment du Premier-Ministre actuel au sujet du paiement de la pension aux vieillards n'a jamais été si bien exprimé par lui-même que lorsqu'il en parle comme d'un "principe vicieux." Sous la politique libérale il n'y a pas de pension aux vieillards pour qui que ce soit en cette province. Si vous croyez qu'elle doit être payée à même le trésor royal du Canada, vous devez supporter le parti conservateur.

Les électeurs de ce comté feront leur choix le 28 juillet courant. Je vous demande votre appui ce jour-là, non-seulement pour moi mais pour mon chef, l'Honorable R. B. Bennett qui, dans cette élection, a pour cri de ralliement: "Donnez une chance au Canada." Si vous me faites l'honneur de m'élire, je ferai tout en mon pouvoir pour vous représenter dignement à la Chambre des Communes.

GEORGE H. PERLEY.

Farmers suffering from Liberal Policy, is claim

There has been much election talk during the present Federal contest, about the danger of some future war and the attitude that would be taken by opposing political parties in Canada in the event of such a war occurring, but the real danger which the electors of this province have to fear is that of the economic war being waged by foreign manufacturers and producers, with the permission of the King Government, against the homes and families of the people of Quebec. Arthur Sauve, Conservative candidate in Laval-Two Mountains, told a numerous and enthusiastic audience at St. Elzéar de Laval last night.

PROFITS DOWN

"Why can't you sell your produce this year at profitable prices?" he asked them. "Why do you not get prices in keeping with your production costs? Why have you sold your vegetables at absurd prices? Why are new potatoes already down 75 cents? There is a reason. I read in the Farmers' Bulletin that for the week ending June 20 there were imported into the Montreal market two cars of strawberries, five cars of tomatoes, 18 of cucumbers, nine of cabbages, two of celery and several of potatoes. Coming to this month, in the week ending July 4, importations into Montreal market were 36 cars of tomatoes, seven of cucumbers, 99 of potatoes, and two of celery. There you have the secret of the low prices paid for produce. A war is being waged against your homes and families by the exporter of foreign produce. That is what has brought on the crisis that you have to face today, and the responsibility of it lies directly at the feet of the King Government. Mothers and wives, before you worry or let anyone frighten you about the kind of war that only breaks out at rare intervals, think seriously of this war that is being carried right to your own door and waged against your home and your children."

DISSATISFIED WITH KING

He believed the electors of the division had decided to ask him to be their candidate for two reasons; first that they were dissatisfied with their previous representatives at Ottawa, and second, that they were dissatisfied with the policies carried out by the King Government. He would never have torn himself away from his many old associations in the Quebec House to enter a legislative body that was new to him, had he not felt assured that the electors were right on both of those points. It was the economic question which played the important role in this election. The people had need to select for themselves representatives in Parliament who would protect them properly and give them a chance to live and bring up their families in comfort. For that purpose they needed representatives who were in close touch with the needs of the people of the country, and who would devote close study to those needs. To that end it was necessary as had been the spirit of Confederation, that there should be good representatives of every section of the country in both the political parties. He was not out to preach any narrow doctrine of political fanaticism. It was in the interest of the French-Canadian people to have good men in both parties, and Providence had not given to either party an exclusive right to brains and integrity.

MAIN QUESTION

The main question now was whether it was better to demand a consistent policy of protection in fiscal matters, or whether it was wise to accept a policy of protection, adopted for election purposes by a party which had always demanded protection as economically unsound. The electors had two things to consider. First, the interests of their own country, and second, that of the Dominion at large. He himself was perfectly confident that he was going to be elected as representative of Laval-Two Mountains, and he appealed to the electors to make his majority as substantial as possible.

He made a special appeal to the women voters not to fear on behalf of their sons and menfolk generally in regard to suggestions that had been circulated that if elected, he would contribute towards sending their men away to a war. All his past record stood out against such a thing. He had always, even at cost of himself, opposed anything of that nature. And at his age now it was far from likely that he would be tempted to betray and destroy the life-long record he had built up for himself.

Eugene Cousineau, of Cartierville, pointed out that the Conservatives of Quebec had elected Arthur Meighen because of his association with conscription and the Union Government. But far from being so severe with their Union Government leaders and their conscriptionists, the King Government had made them ministers and rewarded them with pensions.

present Canada at the Imperial Conference. He wondered how far the Imperial Conference would go toward helping the Quebec farmer to sell his potatoes and his lettuce. Mr. King's imperial preference was of no interest either to the Quebec farmer. It seemed to the farmer to be a means of leaving his vegetables to rot in the cellar while the markets were filled with produce from various corners of the empire. They were more interested in a policy like that of Hon. R. B. Bennett, "Canada before the Empire."

PARLIAMENT QUESTIONS?

Many questions are being asked at this time as to the wondrous activity displayed by the addition of so many extra gangs along the highways and by-ways of our community. If it is, as is said, a genuine desire to relieve the unemployment situation, well and good, but there should be other means less extravagant and more useful could be adopted than drawing gravel from Lavigne's pit in Grenville, some 15 or 16 miles to dump on roads where as good, if not superior gravel is to be found within a couple of miles of where it is said to be required.

SAD DROWNING OF ROBERT WATSON BRADLEY.

The sad death of young Robert Bradley by drowning has brought deep sorrow to this community, for he was a young man of great promise. Educated in St. Andrews Model School, he afterwards entered the Bank of Nova Scotia, where he worked for two years and then left for Detroit where he worked for the Hardisons Ltd.
Returning to Montreal he secured a position with the Imperial Oil Refineries and word reaches us that he apparently slipped from the deck of a boat near the plant into the St. Lawrence river and was stunned in the fall. Search was made for four days when the body floated to surface. The funeral was conducted in the St. Andrews East Presbyterian Church and a large number of beautiful wreaths and flowers bore silent testimony of his popularity. He leaves his parents Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Bradley, four sisters and two brothers to mourn his loss.

The Snowshoe Trail

CHAPTER XVIII.

Standing motionless in the dreadful gloom of blindness, insensible to the growing cold, Bill made himself look his situation in the face.

Finally his thought seized upon an idea so fantastic, seemingly impossible of achievement, that at first he could not give it credence.

His snowshoe tracks probably were not yet obliterated under the wind-blown snow. Could he feel his way along them back to the cabin?

The miles were many and long, but he wouldn't have to creep on hands and knees all the way. He groped about at the side of the cabin for his snowshoes.

He found them in a minute, then walked straight as he could fifty feet out from the door. Once more he went on hands and knees, groping in the icy snow. He started to make a great circle.

Fifteen feet farther he felt a break in the even surface. The snow had been so soft and his shoes had sunk so deep that the powdered flakes the wind had strewn during the night had only half filled his tracks. He started to follow them down.

He would walk ahead five paces, then drop down and grope again for the tracks. Sometimes he found them at once, often he had to go on his hands and knees and start to circle. Then, finding the trail, he would mull on for five steps more.

Oh, the way was cruel! He could not see to avoid the stinging lash of the spruce needles, the cruel blows of the branches. Already the attempt began to partake of a quality of nightmare.

He could not judge distance or time. Already it seemed to him that he had been upon the journey endless hours. He didn't know how far he had come. The only thought he had left was always to count his terrible five steps and count five more.

On and on, through the long hours. But the fight was almost done. Exhaustion and hunger, but cold most of all, were swiftly breaking him down.

The time came at last when he could no longer get upon his feet. And now, like a Titmouse who could not die, he crawled along the snowshoe trail on his hands and knees.

"I can't go on," he told himself. Yet always his muscles made one movement more.

Suddenly he missed the trail. His hand groped in vain over the white crust, and he started to creep forward again.

But slowly the conviction grew upon him that he was crawling in a small circle—the very circle he had just made. Some way he had missed the snowshoe trail.

Slowly he sank down in the snow.

CHAPTER XIX.

When the southeast wind struck the home cabin, Virginia's first thought was for Bill.

Harold's first thought was also of Bill. He knew what the wind could do to a snow crust. His eyes gleamed with high anticipations, curiously intertwined with the remembrance of the dark cavern he had entered yesterday, the gravel laden with gold.

"I only wish I hadn't let him go," the girl's tone was heavy and dull. "But we have to have supplies."

"We could have gone out on that crazy meat."

The afternoon that followed was endlessly long and lonely. Her heart sank at every complaint of the wind, and she dreaded the fall of the shadows.

All through the hours of early night she slept only at intervals.

She awakened before dawn; and the icy, winter stars were peering through the cabin window.

Shivering, she slipped quickly into her clothes. Then she lighted a candle and put on her snowshoes. She rushed across the little space of snow to the men's cabin.

She knocked on Harold's door.

"Who's there?" a sleepy voice answered.

"It's I—Virginia. I'm up and dressed. Did Bill come back?"

"Bill? No—and what on earth are you up this early for? Forget about Bill and go back to bed."

"Listen, Harold," she pleaded. "Don't tell me to go back to bed. I feel—I know something's happened to him. And—and—I want you to go out and look for him."

Harold had no desire to rescue Bill. Besides, he was angry and bitterly jealous at her concern for him.

"You do, eh—you'd like to send me out on a bitter night like this on a fool's errand such as that. Where is there a cabin along the way—you'd only kill me without helping him."

"You won't go then?"

"Don't be foolish, Virginia."

Angry words rose in her throat, but she suppressed them.

She went swiftly to her cabin, put on her warmest clothing, and, as Bill had showed her, rolled a compact pack for her back.

She took a little package of food—nourishing chocolate and dried meat—the whisky flask that had been her salvation the night of the river experience, and a stub of a candle for fire-building.

Then, with never a backward look, she started away, down the dim, wind-blown snowshoe trail.

CHAPTER XX.

Now that the fight was done, Bill lay quite calm and peaceful in the drifts. The pain of the cold and the wrack of exhausted muscles were quite gone.

He was face to face with the flaming truth, and he knew his fate.

On the trail that he had made on the out-journey, and which he had tried so vainly to follow back, Virginia came musing toward him.

It was a long, hard, nerve-racking trek.

Finally where the trail entered the spruce thicket, her keen eyes made out a curious, black shadow against the snow.

The heart in her breast turned to ice, her blood seemed to go still in her veins. She recognized this figure now. It was Bill, lying in the frozen drifts. She fairly raced toward him.

Now she knelt beside him, and with no knowledge of effort turned him over and lifted his head and shoulders into her arms.

His eyes were closed, his face expressionless, his arms dropped limply to his side.

She sobbed softly, and her tears lay on his face.

"Bill, oh, Bill, won't you wake up and speak to me?" she cried. She pleaded softly, but he didn't seem to hear.

"Come back to me, Bill—I need you," she told him. "It's so cold—and I'm afraid. Oh, please open your eyes."

She kissed him over and over—

CHAPTER XXI.

"Bill had not been lying long inert in the snow."

And now he thought he was in the midst of some wonderful, glorious dream.

"Virginia," he whispered. "Is it you, Virginia—come to me—?"

Then, so clearly that he could no longer retain the delusion of dream, he heard his answer.

"Yes—and I've come to save you. He gave him liquor. He felt the strength returning to his muscles. He tried to open his eyes.

"I'm blind," he told her.

"No matter. I'll save you. Can you eat?"

The man nodded. She thrust a fragment of sweet chocolate into his mouth, permitting it to melt.

"You'd better get to your feet as soon as you can—and try to get the blood flowing right again. We're only a few miles from the cabin—if you'll just fight we can make it in."

He shook his head. "I can't—I can't go any further. I can't see the way."

"But I'll lead you. Try with every muscle you've got, Bill—for me!"

She need make no other appeal. She took his hand, and they started musing over the drifts.

They won at last.

And Harold stared at them like a lifeless thing as Bill reeled through the cabin doorway. Virginia led him to her own cot, then drew the blankets over him. And she was not so exhausted but that she could continue the fight for his recovery.

"Build up the fire, and do it quickly," she ordered Harold. Her tone was terse, commanding, and curiously he leaped to obey her. She removed Bill's snow covered garments, and as Harold went out to procure more fuel she put the water on the stove to heat. Then, procuring snow, she began to rub Bill's right hand, the hand that had been frozen in his effort to grope for the trail.

It is one of the peculiar faculties of the human body to recover quickly from the effects of severe cold. About midnight Bill awakened from a long sleep, wholly clear-headed and free from pain. Wet bandages were over his eyes.

He groped and in a moment found Virginia's hands.

She was still sitting beside his bed, wrapped in a blanket.

He started to get up so that she could have her own cot. Gently she pushed him down.

"But I'm all right now," he told her. "I'm sleepy—and sore—but I'm strong as ever. Let me get to my bed and get some sleep."

"No. I'm not sleepy yet."

But Bill laughed, the same gay laugh that had cheered her so many times. "It's my turn to be nurse—now," he told her. "Get in quick."

"But I have some blankets spread on the floor," she objected. "I can go to sleep there, when—I'm tired."

"And I can go to sleep there right now."

With his strong arms he half lifted her and laid her in his warm place. The touch of his hand was in some way wonderful—so strong, so comforting.

"Good night, Bill," she told him sleepily.

In the hours of refreshing slumber that lasted full into the next morning there was but one curious circumstance.

These were four shots, one swiftly upon another. Four—and the figure four had a puzzling, yet sinister significance to Bill's mind.

Unwholesome Mind Creates Ailments?

Detroit, Mich.—Growing knowledge that bodily disease is directly traceable to mental causation, a conviction often expressed by eminent physicians and surgeons on both sides of the Atlantic, was given a prominent place on the program of the American Medical Association, which held its annual meeting here recently.

In a paper on "The Menace of Mental Factors in Bodily Diseases," Dr. Cornelius C. Wholey of Pittsburgh declared:

"A vast amount of evidence has accumulated to show that mental conflicts and emotional disturbances upset the normal physiological functions which regulate secretion, circulation, digestion and respiration.

"If this system is disturbed, functional disability takes place in the viscera associated with these functions such as kidneys, heart and stomach. When this functional upset persists in time it may become organic."

"This 'vicious circle,' he declared to be least susceptible to medical treatment.

Dr. Wholey brought out that "medical and surgical conditions are often initiated and exaggerated by mental causes."

Dr. George A. Moleen of Denver told the convention that mental shock has been known to result in ulcer of the stomach.

Dr. George S. Derby of Boston said that "many cases of eye strain were mostly neurotic." He discussed cases in which patients had so frightened themselves with the dread of loss of sight that they developed bad neuroses. In most of these cases, he declared, there was little if anything wrong with their eyes.

Dr. Esther Loring Richards of Baltimore contributed the information that "40 per cent. of the men and women who consult physicians for a wealth of distressing ailments are victims of poor health associated with an unwholesome state of mind."

Dr. W. J. Mayo of Rochester, Minn., added to the cumulative evidence lodged against the mental factor as an offender in physical disorder, pointing out that heart disease "is practically prevalent among those who lead lives of emotional stress."

Ford Will Follow Carnegie's Example

Henry Ford expresses the intention of following the example of Andrew Carnegie and spending the remainder of his days in dispensing an odd hundred millions of his wealth for the good of humanity. The automobile magnate probably begins to realize that industrial success and the accumulation of wealth offer no prospect of enduring fame. Andrew Carnegie would be almost forgotten to-day were it not for his libraries, and though Rockefeller is alive he too would already have passed almost into oblivion, as far as the younger generation is concerned, were it not for the Foundation that bears his name. True greatness comes only from service to mankind. The making and administration of millions of dollars is apt to absorb so much of a man's time and energy that he has no opportunity to win for himself an enduring name. As a consequence those who gain a place among the immortals are often poor men, or men of moderate means, to whom money is a secondary object, or on object at all. When the Emperor Napoleon commiserated with Louis Pasteur because his discoveries had not brought him wealth, that greatest Frenchman of his generation expressed satisfaction that it was so, since money would have been a handicap to him in his work. There are exceptions, where money has been but a by-product, or a means to an end, as in the case of Cecil Rhodes, the great Empire builder. It remains to be seen whether Henry Ford has it in him still to win a place among the immortals by rendering services that will be remembered gratefully when automobiles are found only in museums.—Orilla Packet-Times.

Dogs Carrying Headlights To Guide Blind Masters

A Berlin blind man has invented an illuminated dog so that he and other blind individuals may be led out for walks at night as well as in the daytime. Dogs are now trained in Europe to guide blind people virtually anywhere, the only necessity being that the dog has learned the route to be followed. The intelligent animals lead their blinded charges safely through the traffic on the sidewalks, give the necessary signals to stop for street crossings and the like, and even are capable, with occasional assistance from kindly citizens or traffic officers, to convey a blind individual safely through the vehicular traffic of the street itself. This works well enough in the daytime, when the dog can see his route and when human bystanders can perceive the circumstances and can render help if necessary. At night, the method of dog guidance is less used. The dog himself sees imperfectly. Human beings are apt to mistake the facts and cause accidents. This is the opportunity which the Berlin inventor sees for his invention. A small electric lamp is attached to the dog so that he can see his way. Another signal light may be placed on the animal's back so that nearby human beings see just what is going on. These lamps are supplied with electric current from a small dry battery carried by the dog in a simple harness worn on his back. The blind man can tell by feeling the warmth of the lamps whether or not they are burning properly. The dog might even be trained, it is probable, to turn these lamps on and off as required.

Canada's Aerial Progress Steady

Commodore Says Great Advance Made in Dominion

The development of civil aviation is probably greater in Canada than in any other country of the world with the exception of the United States, according to Air Commodore J. A. Chamier, who was in Toronto recently after having toured much of Canada and the United States, largely by air. Commodore Chamier was formerly a director of Vickers Aviation, London.

Asked what he thought of the establishment of the Northern air mail route from Britain to Canada, Commodore Chamier said that he was inclined to believe that a better route was available on a line south of the Azores. The expenses of lighting up the northern route and heating planes and sheds in northern latitudes, would be very great, he said, and would add materially to the cost. Though the distance farther south was greater, the conditions were easier and he calculated that the trip could be done in 35 hours.

Still another possibility was emphasized by Commodore Chamier in the use of planes in connection with fast ocean vessels. The planes could put out 24 hours after the vessels leave the home port and leave it with mail 24 hours before arrival.

One London Dawn

By Luce Dennis

In the dark hours before the dawn, a band of adventurers come driving into London.

They come from the country, driving through the dark lanes at first, in vans piled with fruits of the generous English earth, to sell in the dawn at Covent Garden Market.

Elizabeth Leverett was one of them. She drove her father's van, because Leverett himself was ill. He was a brave, obstinate man, whose leg had been injured in the war, and further injured because he would not stop digging in his market garden until the doctor drove him to bed.

Since then Elizabeth had taken his place in the fields and in the hot-houses. She had helped to grow the fresh strawberries packed in baskets behind her in the old Ford van. She had helped to pick them, to sort them, and to stack them in their baskets; and she had gone to bed, tired out, at ten o'clock. She had risen before two, in the moonlit morning, to join the band of adventurers who drive their wares to London, to the market which is built on what was once a convent garden.

Elizabeth drove at first through some of the loveliest country in England; she passed gardens from which enchanting scents drifted on to the moonlit lanes; she heard nightingales sing, and saw the summer stars grow pale before a ridsommer dawn; she smelt the honeysuckle in the hedges. And all the time she was thinking:

"Two hundred pounds—no, two hundred and seventy-five—and then we could always be sure of water in the meadows. If I had that money, and a strong, willing man who wanted to help, I'd pull the lot of us out of the mud. Two hundred and seventy-five."

For Elizabeth, at twenty, with eyes the color of blue lilac, and skin with the warm whiteness and fragrance of white lilac, had no time for moonlight, or nightingales, or loitering between the summer hedges with a good companion. She had to consider arithmetic, and how, if she should bring back so much as eight pounds for her strawberries, she could pay the water rate.

At last, before the dawn was more than a rose in the eastern sky, Elizabeth came to London town. At this hour London was already waking. Other vans were rattling towards the market, and the street cleaners were busy. But here and there, behind curtained windows, shafts of light stole out, to show that to some folk it was still night.

Near Covent Garden the traffic suddenly increased until it became impossible to drive quickly. Vans of fruit and vegetables were in front and behind blocking the road.

Finally, outside a tall, grey house, Elizabeth had to sit still and wait, in company with many other van drivers, all of them anxious and impatient; for the narrow street ahead of them was closed by a middle-aged farmer from Sussex, whose van had broken down. He had been bred among horses, and could not understand engines. He sweated and struggled with his van and with the advice other drivers poured out to him.

Elizabeth, patient when impatience did no good, sat still and looked about her at the City who has always something new to show her lovers.

In the tall, grey house beside her there were three windows that showed yellow light behind their drawn curtains. She watched the curtains, which sometimes stirred, and wondered what they hid. The windows were ugly—too narrow and tall—and the ironwork of the balconies in front of them was dingy.

While she watched one of the windows suddenly became dark. Evidently the time had come when this house, too, must reluctantly be finished with the night. The second window, directly beside Elizabeth, grew pale as some of the lights were switched off.

Then, while there was still a little light left in that room, a young man came to the window and parted the curtains to let in the dawn light which was growing clear. He must have been unseen to anyone in the street, but from where she sat Elizabeth could clearly see his head and shoulders and his hands.

He wore evening clothes, and he held something in his hands, which he was examining closely; and Elizabeth saw that he was looking into the barrel of a revolver, which he held open in his hands and appeared to be loading.

Then, as the last light was switched off in that room, he stepped back between the curtains and vanished.

Elizabeth wondered if she had seen the beginnings of a murder or of a suicide. She hesitated. Either must be stopped. Yet what can a girl from the country, in charge of a van which must not be left, do about so strange a thing as this? She looked up and down the street for a policeman, but there were no pedestrians. She threw off her rug and prepared to jump down from her seat, when the door of the house opened and the young man came out.

He was pale and haggard. He turned north and began to walk quickly away. But, murder or suicide, he must be stopped—for someone else's sake, or his own. Before he had gone ten feet Elizabeth called to him crisply:

"Young man, come here!"

He hesitated, stared at her, and then said pleasantly:

"Is there anything I can do for you?"

He was too direct and candid, she thought, to be a murderer; it must be suicide. And at that moment the released traffic began to move forward again. Elizabeth had to move forward too. But not without this strange young man, for she had inherited her father's courage. She pointed urgently to the seat beside her. It was unthinkable that on this lovely summer's morning a decent young man should be permitted to go away and kill himself.

"Jump up please!" she said.

The young man, still more amazed, stood still.

"Please!" Elizabeth repeated. And the young man, looking into her lilac eyes, obeyed.

Nearly anything, he knew, can happen in London; but never before, after a night of hectic and rather depressing entertainment, had he come out to the pavement to find a strong-willed beautiful young woman driving a van of sweet-scented strawberries who insisted that he should sit beside her.

"I think," he said to her, as he climbed into the seat, "that I must have fallen asleep reading the 'Arabian Nights Entertainments.' Don't wake me, will you?"

Elizabeth said nothing, for she was thinking swiftly and clearly. The obvious thing to do was to keep him beside her until she knew a little more, or found a policeman. She said presently:

"You may have noticed that I've come up from the country?"

"You are the country," he said earnestly. "You're a June morning, bringing your strawberries with you. Yes?"

"Well, I've got to go to Covent Garden, and I don't know my way about London. It's important to me that I should go to the right place quickly. You look as if you knew London well; and you look decent, too. So I thought you might show me the way—without being funny."

"Sorry!" he said meekly. He seemed abashed, which made him look very young. In fact, he was twenty-four, and a little Roman in appearance, having a square head and heavy-lidded eyes; but his mouth was kind, and his eyes themselves very true.

Elizabeth noticed these things and many others before they came to the market itself. She saw that, though his evening clothes were excellent, he wore no links in cuffs which had obviously started the night with links; there was a spot of wine on his shirt-front; but there was no trace of scent clinging to him anywhere.

Because of these things she passed the first policeman they met.

The young man, sometimes leaning out of the van to ask advice himself, brought her safely to her destination. He stood with his hands in his pockets watching and listening while she sold her strawberries. He concluded, as she prepared to come away with ninepounds-ten and no fruit, that this could hardly be the first time she had encountered the baffling uproar of Covent Garden at four in the morning. His curiosity increased.

"And now?" he said, when her business was finished.

They looked at each other gravely; then Elizabeth smiled. "Breakfast," she said. "I know a place near here where we can get coffee and ham and eggs. You've been very kind, and I can't offer you a tip, because you're a gentleman, I think. If you really are one you'll let me give you some coffee to set my mind at rest."

He followed her into an eating-house which she seemed to know, and sat down with her at a quiet table. She ordered breakfast for two; and after it had been eaten and paid for she spoke:

"Now, about that revolver—have you used it already, or are you thinking of using it when I leave you alone?"

"Ah! So you saw that?"

"Yes."

"And being a young woman of character couldn't let it rest there? No. It would be your duty, of course. I'm afraid it's an ordinary story. Middle-class decent relatives who died too young, a snobbish school which only teaches the young how to spend money, and then an inheritance. And since then a binge." He said with some satisfaction: "It really has been a classical binge, my dear!"

"My name's Elizabeth Leverett. And the binge is finished?"

"I took to playing cards for money."

I took to that last week with, I'm afraid, the wrong playmates. They have my inheritance and my cuff links, but I have the gun you saw."

"And your strength and your health and some humour. You're all right. All you want now is work. You never seem to have had any of that. I believe you'll enjoy work when once you get used to it."

"Perhaps. But being untrained—"

"That doesn't matter. I can give you work; and train you, too."

"Elizabeth, you're—royal! But—"

His voice faltered.

"Listen! We've got a market garden; but my father's ill, and I've got more to do than that I can manage. Will you help me? I can easily train you; and it's fascinating work, and you can make money if you know your business."

"It would be great work to help you. But do you really need help?"

"All the way up to-day I was wondering where I could find a little capital and a strong, reliable man to help me to pull things out of the mud."

"Then when do I start?"

"You can come back with me this morning; but you can start now—by giving me that gun."

He chuckled and drew from his coat-pocket two small ivory pistols, exquisitely made and ornamented with gold.

"Japanese work," he said; "very rare and old and perfect, and worth £400 or £500. Your capital and mine, Elizabeth. I won them earlier in the evening, and I was looking them over before I went out to sell them when the shops open."

"Then you weren't going to—"

"Quit? No! I was going to sell them and settle down to work. Life's so interesting; but it'll be more interesting working with you, Elizabeth," he finished softly.

He looked at her steadily. And Elizabeth found herself remembering the moonlight and the nightingales and the gardens she had had to pass by, and the honeysuckle she had never had time to pick. A little breathless she stood up.

"I think we'd better be going—"

"Home!" he said.

New England Pastoral

birches outing the hillside aisles,
Like ladies in churches.

Orchards, fragrant, stonewalled,
Where the humming of drowsy bee-choirs
throbs through the long summer hours
Like the chanting of friars.

Gardens of larkspur and phlox,
With an old-fashioned charm, quaint,
enthralling;
Hearth-fires at twilight, and peace,
And the organ tones of the sea calling.

Gland Secretions Used In Treatment of Eyes

Detroit.—The latest development in the use of glandular substances to treat disease is the application of this method to the relief of eye diseases. How the powerful secretion of a gland was used to treat progressive short sightedness in 100 patients was told members of the American Medical Association meeting here by Dr. Meyer Wiener, eye specialist of St. Louis.

From the suprarenal glands, small cap-shaped organs lying just above the kidneys, comes the potent epinephrine or adrenalin, as it is more commonly known. This substance has been extensively used as a stimulant. Dr. Wiener found its stimulating properties beneficial to near-sighted eyes. Nearsightedness, or myopia, is not a disease in itself, Dr. Wiener explained, but is a sign of congenital weakness. This weakness affects the elastic part of the coating of the eye, so that the eyeball stretches and the lens of the eye gets out of focus. The person so afflicted is nearsighted.

Dr. Wiener treats his patients with epinephrine and advises strenuous exercises in an effort to increase the secretion of this substance by the patient's own suprarenal glands. In 79 cases following this method the near sightedness was checked. The patients were almost all of school age, well nourished and developed, but of an easy-going, inactive nature, adverse to taking exercise. Dr. Wiener said that while one type of progressive myopia is benefited by this method of treatment, another type shows some other influencing factor as yet undiscovered.

Epilepsy Cures

A notable number of cures of epilepsy were reported by Dr. Henry F. Helmholz and Dr. Haddow M. Keith, of Rochester, Minn. The physician used a diet high in fat content, known as the ketogenic diet. It was worked out by Dr. Russell M. Wilder, formerly of the Mayo clinic and now at the University of Chicago. The diet gets its name from a substance called ketone, which is produced in excessive amounts in the blood of persons following it.

Epilepsy is one of the most difficult maladies doctors have to combat. Because little is known definitely about it, anything which has been tried in the way of treatment and cure has been little more than stab in the dark. The Rochester physicians have been working with this special diet for eight years. During that time they have followed 141 patients, who kept faithfully to the diet. Of these 43 are cured, Dr. Helmholz said. They have not suffered epileptic attacks for per-

Churchill, 95; Dean Inge, 91; H. G. Wells, 88; and others. Thirty-two more patients were definitely improved while 66 definitely did not improve. Some of those who were improved were able to return to a normal diet, while others suffered recurrences of the disease when they abandoned the diet. The results were obtained with cases of idiopathic epilepsy, which was not the result of some other disease.

Many operations could be avoided by careful study of the mental and nervous factor, Dr. George A. Moleen of Denver said at the meeting. He told of cases in which persons suffering from what appeared to be conditions requiring surgical operations. Yet these people recovered when their mental distress was relieved, without any operation. Severe mental and emotional shock may cause various disturbances of stomach and intestinal tract and may even play a part in the development of stomach ulcers, Dr. Moleen said.

Shock Affects Stomach

Shock of other kinds is known to affect the stomach. For instance, the shock of a broken bone in arm or leg often causes nausea or vomiting in susceptible persons, who have easily upset mental and nervous systems. The secretions of the stomach, liver and pancreas are distinctly influenced by shock to the mind and emotions. This condition has not received the attention it deserves, Dr. Moleen said.

"No scheme has yet been evolved of state insurance, state medicine, or whatever it may be called, that has demonstrated unequivocally the advisability of going the limit in the matter of governmental control over individual health maintenance," said Dr. William Gerry Morgan, of Washington, D.C., newly-installed president of the American Medical Association at the first general session. Dr. Morgan warned vehemently against the encroachment of state medicine. Neither the public nor the doctor would benefit from it. The present high cost of medical care is not enriching the doctors of the country, and cannot be used as a valid argument in favor of state medicine.

In tracing the development of paternalism of the national government, Dr. Morgan said that now the state says, at least in certain notable instances with which all are familiar, "what its citizens shall drink, what they may and may not buy and sell, what they may and may not do on certain days of the week—in short, it has built up such a maze of thou-shalt and thou-shalt-not laws governing personal affairs that one wonders, what next?"

Dogs Fed Soft Meat Live to Ripe Old Age

Do Not Feed Your Dog Choice Cuts—Prefers Cheaper Grub

To make dogs live to a ripe old age and stay healthy, do not feed them the choice cuts of meat, but give them the soft internal organs, the parts usually thrown away. That this is the proper way to feed our canine pets is vouched for by Dr. William Lentz, director of the small animal hospital of the University of Pennsylvania. In a long research on the longevity of dogs Dr. Lentz has found that in dogs reaching a life span of twenty years or more, the great majority had access to the waste meat materials, the scraps, the soft inner parts and the various unused glands thrown away by butchers. Dogs so fed lived from three to four times as long as dogs fed a careful meat diet of the better portions of the firm muscular meat such as are eaten by humans.

The dog, left to himself, is ordinarily carnivorous and follows the instinct of his wild cousins in eating the inner organs rather than the muscular flesh. It appears that these animals derive some benefits from the softer diet and from certain chemical properties of the glandular organs.

One of the main reasons for the relatively short life span of dogs is that we do them an injury, while thinking to benefit them, by feeding them what we ourselves would like to be fed.

As a contemporary check on this viewpoint in regard to dog dietetics, it is interesting to know that Dr. Herbert Fox, director of the pathological laboratory of the Philadelphia Zoological Society, has found that a diet of muscular meat fed to lions and other carnivores in captivity is not nearly so beneficial to them as a diet of softer meat which more nearly resembles their choice in the wild state. Dr. Fox, who is also director of the Pepper Pathological Institute and author of works on the diseases of wild animals, is studying this subject to find out the facts responsible for the preference of the animals and the benefits derived.

Chase

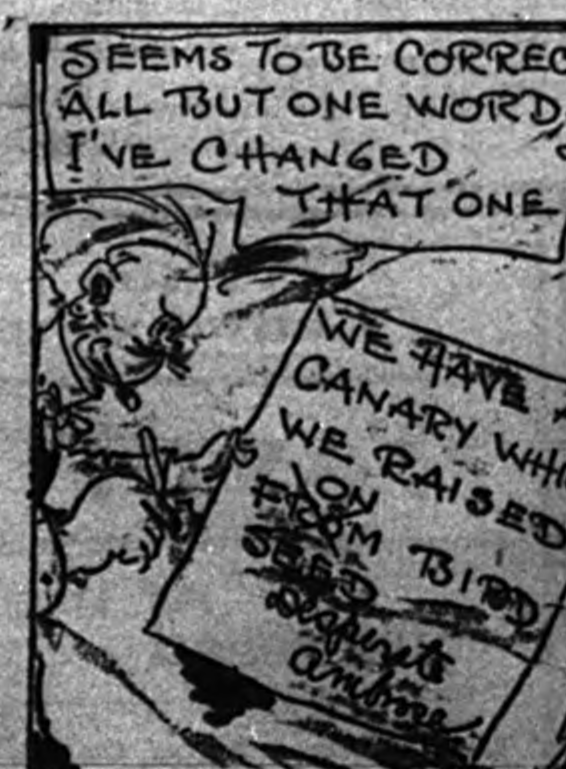

Up the stream,
Dodging stones,
Surging laughter,
Breathless moans!
Over the hill,
Across the lane,
Flat on the grass
And up again!
Light on the brambles,
Splash in the moat,
Mocking cries
From a wind-white throat.
In through a window
Flash on the stair,
Wild hair fallen,
White breast bare!
Laughing surrender,
End of a race
And red mouth lifted
To a lad's brown face!
