Local news of the Week

Mr. George Muir is visiting friends in Detroit.

Mr. and Mrs. S. Goldsworthy spent the week-end in Quebec.

Miss Louise Goldsworthy spent a few days last week in Montreal.

Miss Millie Davis of Ottawa, was the week-end guest of Mrs.
 Wm. Deacon.

Miss Eleanor McCoy, of Montreal, spent the week-end with her parents.

Miss Grace McMahon was the guest of Miss Reta Gordon over the week-end.

Mr. J. McLeland, of Montreal, was the guest of Mr. W. J.
 Boyd over the week-end.

Mr. and Mrs. P. Jousse, of Vankleek Hill, were in town visiting friends on Sunday last.

Mrs. Jas. Ogilvie, of Grenville, spent the past week with friends in Lachute and Brownsburg.

Miss Willow Lavery of Montreal, spent the week-end the guests of Mrs. Walker McArthur.

Miss Shirley Hamilton, of Montreal, was the week-end guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. Hamilton.

Miss Gladys Cruise, Miss Dufrais, and Mr. W. Hodge, of Montreal, were the week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Cruise.

What would you do if you lived in a boarding house that was short on blankets and long on prunes; where your neighbour overhead had a very talkative parrot and the gentleman across the hall took lessons on the saxophone? That was Tom Hazleton's problem. Come to the Auditorium, on Friday evening, Nov. 13th., and see the happy solution he arrived at.

Our popular young townsman
 Mr. John MacKimmie was treated to somewhat of a surprise party when on Thursday evening last he was invited to an impromptu banquet tendered him by a goodly number of business and other friends. The event took place in the Curling Rink and John was presented with a well filled purse in token of public appreciation as an honored citizen and a read good fellow.

Witches, goblins and ghosts were all abroad on Saturday in their grotesque garbs as they marched up to the homes demanding Apples and Nuts or Tricks. Needless to say the children had lots of fun when landing home they emptied their bags, revealing a plentiful supply of edibles that should keep them busy for some time. No real mischief has been reported and the youngsters appear to have learned the lesson that one does not have to be destructive in order to have a real good time.

The St. Simeon's Club held a very pleasant Hallowe'en party on Thursday last at McArthur's hall. An invitation was extended to friends and the Bible Class and appropriate games and tricks were indulged in. Mrs.
 Alfred Miller, who has left to make her home in Ottawa, received a very pleasant surprise at the gathering, when she was asked to step forward and receive a beautiful silver tea set as a token of appreciation from the St. Simeon's Club members.
 Mrs. Miller replied with suitable words expressing her great joy, and thanked the club members for their kindly act.

DAY OF REMEMBRANCE

We are pleased to know that a special service is being held in our Memorial Park on Wednesday next at 10.45 where our citizens may rally around the Cenotaph and pay their debt of gratitude to those who left their all that we might enjoy the freedom and liberty which we now possess. Should the weather prove unfavorable service will be held in the Auditorium adjoining.

VETERAN JEWELS

PRESENTED

The Independent Order of Oddfellows held their regular meeting on Tuesday evening last at which were present the Grand Master, Bro. A. S. Decarie, Past
 Grand Master, Bro. F. Nickel, Bro. F. Henshaw, Provincial Grand Warden and other visiting brethren from Montreal. After the regular routine business was ended Bros. Arthur Campbell, Wm. Painter and Ed. Wilkes were presented with Veteran's Jewels, for 25 years membership in the order. Later the brethren retired to the Banquet Hall, where a hearty supper was served and a most pleasant time spent in speeches and entertainment.

Literary and Dramatic.

A very pleasant evening was spent in McArthur's Hall, on Wednesday evening last when a considerable number of members gathered together for a Hallowe'en Party. Refreshments were served and dancing and games indulged in to the great enjoyment of all present.
 The Society is looking forward to a good season.

Successful Tea-Meeting.

The Ladies of the Lachute Presbyterian Church scored a great success on Friday last with their annual Tea Meeting, which was held in the Auditorium. The supper, which was served in the newly decorated basement, was indeed a credit to the ladies.

The sumptuous repast and the splendid system of service were indeed unsurpassable, for the feeding of over six hundred hungry persons, between the hours of 6 p.m. to 8.20 p.m., is indeed a feat in itself.

The programme rendered in the Upper Hall, proved just as popular as the previous item, for Messrs. Ben Hokea and Marrazza, the C.F.C.F. Hawaiian artists, supported by other talented performers excelled themselves once again with their musical numbers and humorous jestures.
 Both modern and old time favorites pleased the audience, and we are sure the people of La-chute will always be willing to give these artists their fullest support in the future.

Mrs. Alfred Miller left on Tuesday last to join her husband in Ottawa, where they are making their new home. During the six years of their matrimonial life in Lachute, Mr. and Mrs.
 Miller have made a host of friends, who will miss them dearly. They were valuable supporters of St. Simeon's Church, also energetic members of the Club, and the position they held in the social sphere will indeed be hard to replace. Mrs. Miller is a graduate of the Royal Victoria Hospital, & was also highly appreciated among the ladies of the local Red Cross Society, for she was always willing to do her bit and help in any way at all possible. We hope that Mr. and Mrs. Miller will like their new place of abode, and wish them every success.

Cruelty to Animals.

Friends of animals may well be cheered by the progress everywhere evident in this movement.
 A keen regard for the welfare of animals has rapidly spread over the world during the last few years and an organized effort is being made to protect dumb creatures from cruelty and suffering. There is yet much to be done and greater care is sought in the overloading when transporting to the market.

Rumors of dog-fights being staged in quarters not far from Lachute have been brought to our attention and we take this opportunity of reminding those lending themselves to this brutal and inhuman depravity (designated as sport) that the utmost rigor of the law will be imposed upon any so engaged.

The Captain's Corner

THE CAPTAIN'S WEEKLY LETTER.

Dear Boys and Girls :—

Here it is November : and I know that you are thinking already of Christmas, and the holidays that will come along then. In the midst of all your preparations for a happy time I hope you will give a thought to THE LITTLE BOYS AND GIRLS TO WHOM CHRISTMAS MEANS NOTHING AT ALL. They will be cold, wet, and hungry, so I am going to ask you to help me to at least make one or two poor children happy at Christmas.

We can't do much, but even a little will be helpful, and bring a ray of sunshine and happiness into some little lives. Will you help me ? If you will, then please send me a contribution to

THE CAPTAIN'S CORNER, WATCHMAN,
Christmas Joy Fund for Poor Children.

It will be enough if you just send 1, 2, 3, or 4 cents, because its wonderful how, soon cents makes dollars. Don't go to your parents for this contribution. Just save a cent or two and send it to me. To start the fund my own contribution will be 25 cents, and I will acknowledge every amount received.

Remember, its not the AMOUNT its the THOUGHT for others that counts, and I am sure your own Christmas will be all the happier because you have THOUGHT OF OTHERS, who cannot have what you have.

I think I will conclude by just reminding you that HE who has given you such happiness, says—"For as much as ye do it unto one of the least of these ye do it unto Me."

With affectionate good wishes to you all. The Captain.

TO CANADA

O Canada, thou art a lovely land,
And filled with all the vital strength of youth,
Thy spirit famed afar and great as Truth:
On East and West the oceans bound thy strand;
Between are mighty forests, mountains grand,
And prairies, rivers, lakes, the hungry tooth
Of deadly frost in Northland wastes uncouth;
While rich with merchant wealth the cities stand.
O may our country breed a noble race
Of men and women who are not afraid
In sacrifice of war and peaceful trade
To serve their land with hand, and heart, and brain,
Among the Nations claim her rightful place,
And keep her Honour ever clear of stain.

THE MAGIC OF MUSIC

The musician leaned towards the piano with his supple fingers poised lightly over the keys. There was a moment of intense silence which seemed to breathe and pulsate. Then, as the audience waited spell-bound, the master struck a cord and the gates of romance and passion were flung open. The passive listeners yielded themselves to the magic spell of the genius in their midst, who immediately transported them to another world full of rhythm and beauty. Fairies and elves lured them through woodland glades with flutes and songs. Pan came and danced with them—a dance which wove round and round, swaying in motion to the fairy music. Then low rumblings spread a chill of fear and suddenly a great storm broke on the happy scene. Deep thunder crashed and lightning rent the heavens which seemed about to overwhelm the world. But gradually the storm-god was soothed, and with his all-powerful sceptre he lulled the furious elements. Again the fairies danced and played until tired children, they crept away—softly—softly. Another moment of intense throbbing silence and then a mighty burst of applause told that the audience had repassed the gates of Fairyland and were living again in the world of reality.

A Playlet

Title—ORPHEUS

Scene—THE WOODS

Orpheus—leopard skin, harp, wreath of leaves.

Animals—dressed according to name.

The mountains in the distance are yellow and red with darker brown and green.

Scene opens with Orpheus coming from behind some trees. He sits down and starts to sing a song about the autumn and its beauty. A fox from a near-by burrow comes and stands near him he presently starts to talk to him about the hunters. After a while a cow, a wolf, a bear, a blue-jay, and a robin, come to him.

(Robin)—"Sing of the early morning, and of the worms which delight our insides."

(Jay)—"No wonder you are so fat if you think only of worms."

(Fox)—"I would like Orpheus to sing of some baby chickens within the reach of my mouth."

(Bear)—"Please, dear Orpheus, sing of some fat, juicy, berries, right beside my hollow tree. For I like nothing better."

(Wolf)—"Sing of the end of traps and of hunters. Sing of the tracks of the wolf-pack. Sing of our prey, sing of the chase and the fight."

(Cow)—"Sing of a field of grass, and a nice warm stable filled with oats, sing of a pretty girl to milk me."

(Jay)—"A field of grass ! You empty-headed cow ! Orpheus heed him not, but sing of the tit bits a hunter gives me."

(Fox)—"For the sake of my tail, hurry up and sing something."

(Orpheus)—"Nay, stop thinking of your own desires, have a thought above your food."

He sweeps the strings of his harp and all are spell-bound with the magic of his music and these are the words he sings :

"The berries are ripe on the bushes,
The sunset is drawing nigh,
The earth is flooded with beauty,
That comes from the Gods on high.
Mankind is at peace with the world
As each thinks of his bounteous day,
He looks at the rose-tinted sky,
And waves to its fast sinking ray."

ONE GOOD TURN DESERVES ANOTHER

Darky was a little black dog with large floppy ears, a long curly tail and soft brown eyes. As a rule he was very quiet and good but there were times when he lost control of himself and rushed around in circles after his own tail just like any puppy. His surprise when he caught it was very funny. It was only then that he realized what he was doing and dropping it quickly he would put on his dignified manner again, and try to make everyone forget his strange behaviour.

PETER PICKLE'S POEMS—I.

Running away.

I've run away from home today,
'Cos mother said I must not play
At Indians in the house, and so I never even said I'd go—But ran away.

Gee, can't a fellow have his fun
When he's not harming anyone ?
You go and just ask other boys
If they play Indians with no noise.

I guess it must be supper soon,
I've run away all afternoon,
Somehow it doesn't seem so good,
And where's a chap to get his food ?

It's lonely too.....and looks like rain,
And hunger is a nasty pain !
I'll just sit down and have a rest
And then.....I think.....perhaps I'd best—Run back again !

Peter Pickle (Poet)

We take great pleasure introducing your new friend --- Auntie Diana

Dear Girlies :—

As I am quite a new person on this page, of course I must first of all introduce myself. Well, I am your very own, brand-new Auntie Diana, (Auntie Di for short !). It all happened like this.

One day, not so very long ago, I paid a visit, (the very first), to your own charming Lachute. It was wandering happily along past "The Watchman" office, thinking how beautiful was the riot of colour made by the distant trees, when I was startled by the sound of a hollow groan. Yes, children, really, and in broad daylight too ! Again came that dreadful sound, and it seemed to me that it came right from the office on my left. I hastened inside, for I felt sure that some one was in great trouble, and there, (you'll never guess this part !), there sat your friend the Captain, with his head bowed in his hands.

I was very alarmed, for I knew that the Captain his the true British spirit which never gives way except under great stress.

"What is the matter ? I asked, touching him on the shoulder. "Where does it hurt you ?" He raised his head and said sadly.

"I am not in pain, but I fear I shall have to disappoint the children this week."

But why !" I asked in amazement.

"Work, Work, Work !" he almost shouted, pointing to a great stack of paper on his desk, "so much of it that I shall never spare the time for "The Captain's Corner !"

"Come, come," said I in my most bracing manner. "It will never do to disappoint the children. I have a plan ! I myself will write part of the page every week, and that will be less for you to do."

You should have seen, children, how he brightened up !

"Done !" he cried, and we shook hands, and that is the story of how your Auntie Di came to "The Watchman."

Now just a few words about Peter Pickle. He has promised me a poem for you every week, and his sister Trudy will send you a story or something else equally jolly. You see they are the children of a fountain-pen maker, so writing comes very easy to them. Don't you think Peter was very naughty this week, but he does hope you will like him just the same.

And although, girlies, my part of the page is especially for you, Peter says he doesn't really mind if the boys read about him ? What do you think !

Your loving, Auntie Di.

Our Puzzle Corner

What Animal walks on four legs in the morning
Two at noon
And three in the evening?

THE ENGINEER'S NAME WAS BLACK.

The puzzle which I set last week caused lively interest. The answer to it is that the engineer's name was Black. I will not spoil sport by telling this week how the answer is reached, because many readers, who failed to get the answer for themselves will find it as good as another puzzle to work out the question.

HOW WAS THE ANSWER FOUND?

Next week I will disclose all. I repeat however, that there is no catch. The problem is a detective story in little. All the clues are present. Next week also, I will give the name of the winner of the book prize for the best puzzle sent in.

As I stated last week I would give the answer to the puzzle which appears at the top of our corner each week, I now proceed to do so.

In the mythological era, the Sphinx was a fabulous monster which had the head and breasts of a woman, the body of a dog, the tail of a serpent, the wings of a bird, the paws of a lion, and a human voice. The Sphinx had been sent into the neighborhood of Thebes by Juno, to punish the family of Cadmus, and it raised continual alarms by proposing enigmas and devouring the inhabitants if unable to explain them. It usually sat on a pedestal at a cross road and travellers who sought to pass that way were given a riddle which if unable to answer, they were put to death. The Thebans, however, were told by the oracle, that the Sphinx would destroy herself as soon as one of her enigmas were explained.

Upon hearing this Creon, king of Thebes promised his crown and his sister Jocasta in marriage to him who could deliver his country by a successful explanation. This offer and the fame of the Sphinx attracted Oedipus to Thebes. He came to the monster and was asked "What animal walks on three legs in the morning, two at noon, and three in the evening. Oedipus observed that man, in the morning of life, walks upon his hands and his feet; when he has attained the years of manhood, he walks upon his two legs; and the evening of life finds him supporting his old age with the assistance of a staff. The Sphinx no sooner heard this explanation than she dashed her head against a rock, and immediately expired.

This week, if the end of the world should come on the first day of a new century, what are the chances of it falling on a Sunday? The answer next week. THE SPHINX.

PROTECTION OF BUILDINGS AGAINST LIGHTNING The Theory of Lightning Conductors.

Looking over some notes by J. J. Elliott B. Sc. on the report of the Lightning Research Committee of the Royal Institute of British Architects (1905) I am sure that the following summary will be of interest to "Watchman" readers. It was in A.D. 1752 that Benjamin Franklin, the American editor, philosopher & statesman, laid the foundation for the scientific investigation of the subject of lightning and its effects, by establishing its identity with terrestrial electricity. Franklin had familiarised himself with these simple effects—to which we shall presently refer—which characterise what we call "static electricity" and desired, if possible, to produce the same effects by obtaining a supply of electricity from the clouds. While waiting for the completion of a tall spire in Philadelphia, on which he proposed to experiment, it occurred to him to send up a kite with a wire attached, the kite being held with a length of twine which at its lower end was attached to a key held by a silk ribbon to avoid contact with the observers hand.

While the twine remained dry nothing particular happened; but as soon as this cord became wet, thereby becoming a conductor of electricity, electricity could be drawn from the key, and all the experiments could be performed which are usually done by frictional electricity.

Electrification by Friction.

If we rub a stick of sealing-wax with a piece of flannel, we find that it attracts certain small light bodies such as paper or bran in much the same way as a magnet attracts iron filings; while a glass rod, when rubbed with silk, exhibits the same property. We call this acquire property "electrification" and say that the sealing-wax or the glass has become charged with "electricity" without pretending to know what electricity really is.

We find that to get the most powerful results "resinous" substances such as sealing-wax should be rubbed with wool or fur, and that "vitreous" substances—such as glass—should be rubbed with silk. We find moreover that some electrified bodies attract each other, while other electrified bodies repel one another, and that rubbed sealing-wax exerts a force which opposes that of the rubbed glass. This gives rise to the conception of two sorts of electricity—positive and negative. We choose to call the electricity of the rubbed glass "positive" and thus that of the sealing-wax is negative, the "rubbers" being as previously specified—for glass rubbed with cat's fur acquires weak negative electrification

GOOD LIGHTING

flatters a room with subtle accents

The hidden colors of your rooms appear with all their charm when correct lighting eliminates dark corners. Softly shaded lamps strengthen the accents of your careful color harmonies. Throughout your home, your lighting effects display your taste as much as the furnishings.

There's a great deal of art to this decorating of a room for evening. Mazda engineers have already worked out the principles upon which real charm in lighting can be built. We'd be happy to show you what they've found—what size Mazda bulbs have proved best for every purpose. With that to work on—and enough Electric light bulbs to fill your needs—you'll find it easy to plan lighting effects of new beauty for your home.

REMEMBRANCE DAY.

"Throughout Canada in each and every year, the 11th. day of November, being the day in the year 1918, on which the great war was triumphantly concluded by an Armistice, shall be a holiday, and shall be kept and observed as such, under the name of Remembrance Day."

Thus, both houses of Parliament amended the Armistice Day Act, removing the provision for the observance of that day with thanksgiving day, with Royal assent.

Canadians regard this legal enactment with profound satisfaction. Varying with the importance of the event we commemorate,—anniversary observances serve a valuable purpose.

With the return of this anniversary reflections are brought home to us, which must never be allowed to grow dim.

The memory of those whose lives were the price of victory, may well deserve the duty and responsibility developed upon us, to maintain the sanctity of the day, observing it in its proper spirit, as a day of sacred significance to the nation.

This tribute of remembrance is due also to those who, fighting for our liberty, are still suffering and disabled, and to those others who were spared to return to their homes, as well as to those countless thousands who sacrificed their nearest and dearest.

As the great war recedes into history, and as each year we reach another Armistice Day milestone, thoughts of the nation turn to effects to preserve peace in our land, that the terrible destruction of life and property may never occur again.

While we thankfully reflect on the safety of the Empire, we must also live in the future, striving to do our share, for all may help toward the relief of the distressed, and the building up of our country.

This article was contributed by Mrs. B. B. Morrill, Provincial Convener of the Committee on Canadianization and National Events.

A REAL PETRIFIED MAN

Body Transformed to Solid Stone as Rest After 250 Years.

The only real petrified man in the world, will no longer be available either for public view or for examination by scientists. He has been buried, presumably forever, in the churchyard of the little Swedish town of Färun, where his body has lain for seventy years in a glass case and where he met his death and attained petrification over 250 years ago.

In 1677 a miner named Matts went down the mine one day to set off blasts, expecting to return in a few hours to the sweetheart whom he was about to marry. He never reappeared. A half century later miners found a solid, petrified body, looking as fresh and unaltered as though its owner had just died.

Someone remembered the missing Matts of fifty years before. The miner's former sweetheart was still alive and was sent for. Instantly she recognised the lover who had left her forever fifty years previously. By some chemical action of the mine waters in which the body had been steeped, the flesh had been preserved and hardened more perfectly than by any known process of embalming.

Scientists have imagined that arsenic, iron and silica, all of which are present in the mine waters, may have combined first to preserve the body from decay and then to harden it to stone-like substance. However, no complete scientific investigation of the case was made, as local authorities would not allow the body to be destroyed or damaged.

Once before the petrified body was buried, but about seventy years ago it was dug up again and put on display.

MAY INHERIT FORTUNE.

Sixteenth Century French Silk Merchant's $100,000,000 May Be Shared.

Immense wealth, stored up over three centuries ago by an industrious Frenchman who capitalised on the lowly silk worm, may be shared by several Canadians. Claims to this, the Jacques estate, is to be pressed in the Court of Chancery in London, England.

Mrs. Elizabeth Campbell, housekeeper at the home of Frank McCormick, biscuit manufacturer, is among the London persons laying claim to a share in the vast estate.

Mrs. Campbell has a daughter, Miss Mary Campbell, a nurse in Toronto, and sons in Vancouver who hope to share in their mother's good fortune, if their dreams come true.

The Jacques estate, which has been in chancery since 1875, now amounts to the staggering sum of $160,000,000. It was accumulated largely by the original John Jacques who fled France to escape the St. Bartholomew massacre in 1572. He was skilled in the art of silk manufacture and in England successfully developed his trade, amassing a huge fortune.

THE UNIVERSE TRAVELS NORTH

Planetary System Approaches Heaven 400,000,000 Miles Yearly.

Hurrying at an incredible speed toward the judgment day, the sun and its planetary system, inclusive of the earth, are approaching heaven by 400,000,000 miles every year. Supported by an array of Biblical quotations and scientific facts, such a theory is advanced by Rev. P. D. Cameron, of Wallaceburg, Ont.

Heaven has a definite location, the preacher claims, and that location is to the north. The planetary system, it has been shown by scientists, he states, is travelling directly north at a speed of approximately 400,000,000 miles per year. There are no other systems of the universe to block the path. The judgment day would come when the planetary system had reached heaven, was the claim made by the preacher.

PURCHASE MUCH WET GOODS.

When the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon were ceded to France after the conquest of Canada by the British, it was little dreamed the time would come when they would rank ninth among the nations of the world in total trade with the Dominion. Consisting almost entirely of liquor, Canada in one year sold the two islands a total of $11,094,479. This was large enough to outbid such nations as Australia, Ireland, Brazil, Argentina, China, Mexico, Sweden, and Denmark. Shipments, however, are now shrinking.

Calm to Mark First Cheese Factory.

The Historical Sites and Monuments Board has decided to mark the site where the first cheese factory was built in Canada. This was erected in 1864 in Norwich Township, County of Oxford, Ont. A cairn and tablet will be placed on the site indicating where the great industry of cheese production had its start in the Dominion.

Explosive Soap.

Your cake of soap, when powdered, is a dangerous explosive, tests taken at the experiment station of the Department of Mines have shown. Soap dust, it has been found, when in suspension in the air, produces even more violent explosions than suspended coal dust.

Gold in Manitoba.

Famous for wheat and honey, Manitoba is also becoming a gold producer of considerable importance, the present output being estimated at the rate of $2,500,000 annually.

A Pioneer Locomotive.

The first railway locomotive crossed the Red River at Winnipeg in June 1851. The original locomotive, long since superannuated, is now a centre of interest in one of Winnipeg's parks.

Bels Vulnerable in Tail.

Bels have an organ in the tail that pulsates, and fishermen call it a second heart. It is not a real heart, but if an eel is struck in this region it has the same fatal effect as a blow over the heart.

PULLING TOGETHER

There is a good old maximum which strikes a note that needs to be sounded just now in regard to the straight division that has occurred in the situation arising out of the vexed question of water works, by our city fathers.

For a long time negotiations have been under way to improve our water works system and it has engaged a great deal of serious thought and attention, during which many suggestions have been offered with consequent differences of opinion.

Owing to the natural spread and growth of our town during the past few years, our water supply has proved itself inadequate to meet the demand, and many complaints have been registered against the inequality of service, and justifiably so too, because those within our town limits should have equal privileges, and while paying their taxes regularly, many of our citizens have been scantily supplied, hence the real protest.

In order to effect a remedy there has been a general desire for improvement. Some are for temporary arrangements, while others are anxious that we should meet the situation with a view of taking care of future needs in years to come. This has naturally brought about a strong diversion of opinion in which two sites have been proposed, one for Pollock's and one for Lake Sir John.

Lake Sir John is about 2½ miles from the present dam and is estimated to give about 275 ft. more head. During ex Mayor C. Tremblay's term of office, he had consulted with the Provincial authorities in order to see what benefits would accrue from the town getting their supply from this source, and after careful survey, the Fire Commissioners submitted a strong report that if the town conformed to the purchase of enlarged fire pump, one thousand feet more hose, install six additional hydrants and raise the hose tower to 57 feet at a total cost of $8,600 they would extend a special grant of $5,010 and if the town took advantage of the Lake supply, the assurance of head would enable them to give substantial reduction of from 10 to 15c. on mercantile insurance now in effect on our present system and also a reduction on our domestic insurance. This of course would apply equally to Lake Sir John as well as Pollocks, and doubtless a larger percentage for the former owing to its greater head.

The alternative plan on which the council has been working has been that of the Pollock site.

A letter addressed to the Provincial Board of Health appears elsewhere in this issue which clearly defines that a chlorination plant must necessarily be established if water is taken from Pollocks. This of course means that the installation will approximately cost $3,000 and will necessitate the retention of a man, who according to the report of Mr. Lafreniere, must be one with technical knowledge, which means an additional outlay of at least $1500 annually.

Twice have the people voted on this question, and now the council is at a deadlock, because the last vote has become nil and void owing to irregularities in the Council's procedure on by-law No. 123.

What one needs is a spirit of tolerance. Because we cannot see eye to eye with those who disagree is no reason for us to denounce them in such scathing terms as have been in evidence during the past few weeks.

There is no good to be accomplished by one faction setting themselves up against the other, as that will mean utter failure. Rather let us exercise the spirit of give and take, where we can work in harmony for the general good of our community.

We have sought to lay these facts before the public in order that they be made fully aware of conditions as they now stand.

ILLUSTRATED LECTURE

Rev. F. L. Orchard, B.A., B.D.

The Y. P. S. of the United Church, Lachute, were indeed pleased on Monday evening last with the attendance at the lecture by Rev. F. L. Orchard, B.A., B.D., of First Baptist Church, Amherst, N. S., entitled "The Romances of the Maritimes." Preceding the lecture a short programme was given. President O. C. Todd, was chairman, and opened with a few remarks, thanking those present for their continuous support to the Y.P.S. The Lachute Male Quartette rendered a lively selection for the opening number called "The Jolly Roger" which was well accepted by the audience. A very humorous reading was given by Miss Lottie McDowell which was indeed a popular item of the evening.

A fine tenor solo "Queen of the Earth" was rendered by Mr. Neil Anderson, followed by a cheerful piano duet "The Dance of the Demons" by Miss Ruth Todd and Mrs. Bruce Bradford, which were evidently well appreciated by the audience. The Rev. W. B. Rosborough, B.A., B.D., introduced his old Nova Scotia associate, the Rev. Orchard, who was the lecturer of the evening. After the speaker had expressed his pleasure at being able to visit Lachute, he lost no time in explaining the many wonders and beautiful places that are to be found in the Maritime provinces. It is surprising how little we know about our neighboring provinces until the remarkable facts are pointed out to us by eloquent speakers such as Mr. Orchard.

The romances, historical data, natural scenic beauties were forcefully emphasized regarding the land of Evangeline, and the products, numerous industries, etc., were indeed an eye opener to the individual who has not been fortunate as yet to visit that section of Eastern Canada.

and the many lovely colored slides that illustrated the lecture sure induced those present to spend their next vacation in the Maritimes. The Y. P. S. regret very much the fact that the pictures did not show to the fullest advantage, as a slight accident happened to the lantern during the operation, causing the focusing to be rather difficult, and wish to apologize to those present also to the Rev. F. L. Orchard. A vote of thanks to the lecturer was moved by Mr. C. Duncan on behalf of the Y. P. S. seconded by Mr. Geo. Wason, and the meeting closed with "God Save the King."

CANADA OFFERS PARADISE TO HUNTERS

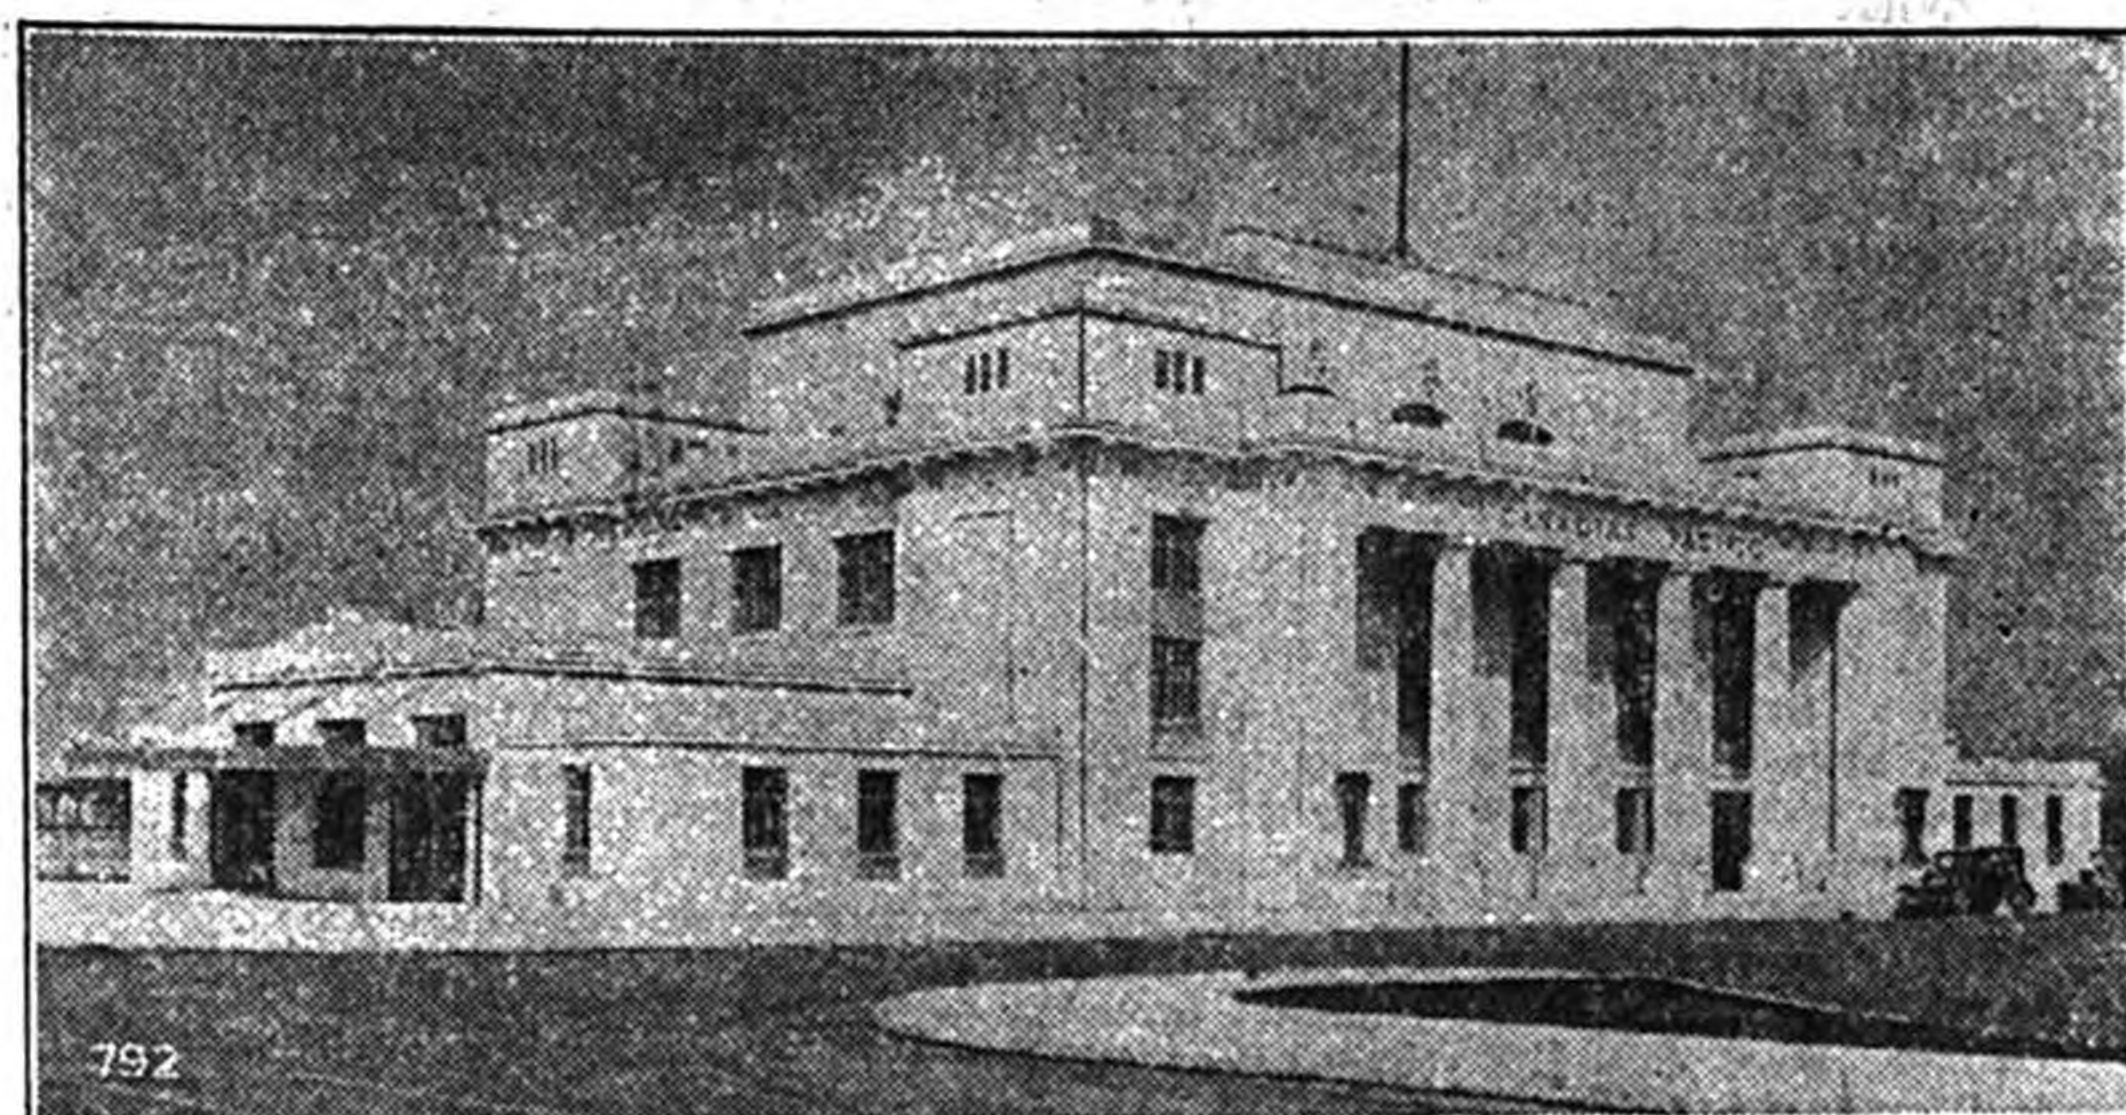

With the fall of the leaf and the tang of autumn in the air the fishing rod is laid aside and the Nimrods look to their rifles and shotguns, as the hunting season is ushered in. True to her reputation as one of the world's greatest playgrounds, Canada offers a wide range of sport, furred, feathered and horned, to all who care to penetrate its far-flung hinterlands. From coast to coast, all along the vast system of the Canadian Pacific Railway, there are countless established points of entry into the woods and mountains, readily accessible to those in search of game. The shores of countless lakes, rivers, and creeks, abound with all varieties of duck and goose and are not infrequently the scene of the termination of successful expeditions after moose, elk and deer of all kinds. New Brunswick rivals Ontario and Quebec as moose territory, while further west, the towering Rockies offer their tribute of bear, mountain sheep and mountain goat. Bear are also plentiful in the Ontario northland and in certain parts of Quebec. With a view to preservation, various changes have been made this year in the game laws of all Canadian provinces, but even with the new restrictions a broad period of hunting is offered and the invading army from Canadian centres, as well as from the United States, is already starting on its expeditions.

Holstein Judging Demonstration Creates Great Interest

There was a splendid turn out of those interested in Holsteins, when on Tuesday last they gathered at the home of James A. McKenzie to witness and participate in the judging demonstration in which about 80 of our young people entered into competition which was conducted, under auspices of the Lachute District Holstein Breeders' Club and extension department of the Holstein Friesian Association of Canada.

The objective of course was to develop in the minds of breeders and those interested in dairy farming, that the Holstein Cow conforms to the model of the Association and meets the requirements of the market, both home and foreign.

Great interest was manifested all through the proceedings and many questions were asked of the experts who were only too pleased to indulge in the discussions.

In the Cow Class the honors were won by Arnold Parker, J. MacKenzie and Archie MacKenzie.

In Calves, the honors went to Arnold Parker, John MacKenzie and Jas. Conley, of Buckingham.

The two classes were keenly contested and many were the kindly sentiments expressed towards Mr. Alex. Bothwell for his untiring work and marked success as evidenced by the young members of the country in the knowledge they possess. Mr. Simard, Fieldman of the Holstein Association in Quebec; Clarence Goodhue, Manager of the Raymond Farm at Vaudreuil; W. L. Carr, of Huntingdon, Que., 4th. vice-President & one of the two directors of the Province; Mr. Lee, Past President of the Holstein Breeders' of Springfield, Ont., and R. B. Faith, Director of Extension for Canada, all of whom gave very snappy and interesting addresses at the evening meeting held in the Lachute Auditorium where much valued information was submitted by Mr. Faith as he produced in picture form many of the outstanding Holstein record-breakers.

Mr. A. Bothwell made an excellent chairman and expressed his pleasure at the splendid success attained which was most gratifying.

W.C.T.U. Conven- tion at Sutton

Concluded.

Mrs. Colcomb reported 75 unions, 1932 member. What a pituful few compared to the number of women there are in our province. Where are our women that they do not come out and join us in fighting this demon of intemperance?

Mrs. John Scott showed maple leaves made of Maple Sugar wonderfully realistic even to the tracery on the backs of the leaves, could not give the ladies' name and address who made them but leaves could be ordered through herself. Also told another story of a man who attended a meeting where a collection was taken for missions, this man refused to give anything, stating the fact that he did not believe in Missions. "Take some out said the plate carrier" "This is for the heathen too."

Mrs. Scott also said any one could have her position as Editor or Tidings at a bargain and on being re-elected said "She would not promise to do her best as no one ever did that; we could all do better if we tried" Mrs. Reese, of Athelstan, made the convention more enjoyable with her beautiful songs one being Jesus is my Neighbor.
Shufelt Brothers of Farnham, (four of them helped in the evening service in the United Church with Anthems and other singing. Mrs. (Rev.) Mallau-lieu also helped with a wonderful solo.

Rev. T. W. Jones, of Calvary United Church, gave an address on "Humanity on the March." Is the Highway safe. Mr. Jones is a speaker that may be classed amongst the finest ever. One point he brought out in John Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress was that Christian was not doing right to stop his ears and run on. He was selfish in so doing, and too busy thinking of his own soul's salvation to help his neighbor out of the slough of despond, another instance of forgetting that he was his brother's keeper. So many of us are like Christians, we cannot see past ourselves as it were.

The convention was much encouraged by the presence of Mrs.
S. W. Foster, of Knowlton, an aged lady of ninety five and a half years of age; one of our Honorary Presidents and mother of one of our late politicians.
Mrs. Foster got up at five o'clock in the morning and came by motor to Sutton for two days in succession. She expressed great pleasure in being present, recited quite a lengthy poem with perfect pronunciation.
This was done during the Children's Hour, when the children were present with us, singing and reciting temperance hymns.
Mrs. Foster said she had learned it when a child, one week she was kept at home with the earache.

Mrs. Foster dedicated Mrs.
Brumley's little girl by tying a white ribbon around its arm, to the W.C.T.U. cause and making it a Little White Ribboner.

Mrs. A. Graham gave a little talk on Social Responsibilities stressing the point that it was not a part of our social responsibilities to drink and smoke with people who asked us. We had no responsibility there, we must refuse to do so and when we did not, we followed the dictates of silly pride.

Mrs. F. Dougall and Mrs. H.
Wilson also opened several of the meetings with inspiring talks. Mrs. Cushing addressed the convention on behalf of the Educational Campaign. (Mrs.
Cushing, is the grand-daughter of the Hutchins) spoken in the late Mr. Walker's poem. It seems that although he has gone before, his spirit is still working through the grand-daughter.

Mrs. Reese, of Athelstan, gave the children an object lesson on Blessings and Curses, using barley, grapes and apples as objects of illustration.

Barley she said used in bread was a blessing, the same when apples and grapes were used as health giving foods. But when they were turned into beer, cider and wine, they were a curse to the people. The children repeated verses refusing to use the three objects in that way & so as Mrs. Reese put it, turning them back into blessing again.

Mrs. Reese is President of the Loyal Temperance Legion, the younger members of our W.C.
T.U. and would be pleased to hear from any one wishing to start a band of L. T. L's. amongst the young people. Her address is Mrs. N. W. Reese, of Athelstan, Que.

Mrs. Cushing said it seemed that in a great many cases it was too late to reach the adults, but it was not too late to begin with the children and that we should see that every child whether in Sunday School or Day School should take part in our Educational Campaign, studying the lessons and answering the questions.

Mrs. George, Mrs. Cushing's Ally told of a place down in Zerwick, Nova Scotia, where distillers had always been prohibited but, one was creeping in under the name of "The Natural Fruit By Products Co. This factory she said was only a distillery under another name.

Mrs. George also said that Unions all over the Province were taking heart on account of this Educational work as they now had something definite to work for. Do not overlook, she said, pledge signing in your schools.

Mrs. John Scott spoke of the friendly intercourse the country people had with their neighbors, said when she lived in the country often the neighbors would with a wee bit of their latest cake or, a tiny pie or a plate of their home-made soup, but said she I advise every person to learn to cook. She knew if she had not known how to cook, she would have gone hungry many a time because in her apartment house in which she lived you would wait a long time before any one would carry you in a plate of soup. And yet she said, I've known people who did not like the country; one old lady has been quoted as saying that she was so pleased that "Heaven" was spoken of as The Celestial City" because she never could bear to live in the country.

Mrs. Scott was called upon during the dinner hour quite often for a speech, because of her ready wit.

Some one remarked to her sister that Mrs. Scott had a wonderful gift. "Indeed she hasn't was the reply, she's been at it from a child", which goes to prove that she has not only a gift but a gift wonderfully developed by usage. No talent hidden away out of sight in a napkin in her case.

Mrs. Peirce, of the Anti-Alcoholic League in his address held up Ghandi's Speech on intemperance where he insisted that Indians must be set free from the curse of Alcohol. "Fortunately" said Mr. Peirce, India acknowledges the curse of drink. Can the same be said of Canada. I would to God that we could have the same request from Canada as a nation.

Canada is being weakened as a nation by the curse of intemperance, and the older members of our nation; some of them any way are leading the younger members to ruin according to one lady who said her fourteen year old son was invited to a party in a respectable home and about half and hour after the crowd had assembled, the man of the house carried in a tray of cocktails which he insisted his young guests should drink.

According to Mr. Peirce's story "Humanity is indeed on the March" but,—in the wrong direction and it is up to us women to see that the tide is turned in the right direction, not only our W.C.T.U. women, but our Women's Institutes and every other women's organization yes and the unorganized women too for every possible weapon of defence is needed if we should save our country and our homes from desolation and destruction.

Trace back into ancient history and what will you find—That the wonderful cities that were destroyed years ago were not destroyed so suddenly as we thought. Their foundations had been gradually decaying from evil doings and intemperance, & the fact that the end came so suddenly to many was because their eyes were not open to see that their strength was being sapped, just as Canada's strength is being sapped today by evil doing and intemperance.

Did I hear a voice from our Women's Institutes. "Oh but that is not our work; it's the work of the W.C.T.U. Friends, I say it is your work, and one of your greatest opportunities to work for "Home and Country, as nothing strikes harder at the roots of Home and Country as Intemperance.

You will say we all worked to have the saloons closed, yes, but let the dragon thrust up yet another head in the shape of a Government Liquor Shop "Government Control" they call it,
"Government Sale" it should be.
The government reaping profits at the cost of happy homes, of education and clothing for little children—yes, and at the cost of souls and lives.

Rev. Johnston in his lecture,
"Humanity on the March", says the world has become a large whispering gallery. What is said and done in Europe is heard at once in America and vice-versa. He told the tale of some one in South America, some honorable personage; who had heart trouble, the doctors there gave him up. The news was cabled to his friend, a heart specialist in Madrid, Spain. He asked that his heart beats might be broadcasted. They were—the specialist heard them successfully diagnosed the case, gave instructions as to treatment and the man recovered.

Oh that the heart beats of our nation could be heard by our people; their eyes be opened;
their ears attuned to diagnose it correctly as intemperance, and a cure immediately given, what a wonderful recovery our nation would have.

There were other sayings and doings at the convention but I think this is enough to let you know that the Women's Christian Temperance Union is not dead, as I heard one person say.
Now I shall end this creed with the old Irish lady's blessing given to all her customers who came to her well for water (take note) she was selling water not booze,

May the saints protect yez and sorrow neglect yez
And bad luck to the one that doesn't respect yez
And the top of the mornin to all that belong to yez
And long life to yer honours;
that's the end of my song to yez.
J. G.—Cushing.

BROWNSBURG.

A pretty event and one fraught with a great deal of interest, was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Izzard, on the evening of Wednesday, October 28th., when both of the W. M. S. and Women's Auxiliary of the United Church met in a joint session and to spend the evening together. The business of the two societies was conducted by the Presidents, Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Hagar who also shared the order of worship for the evening, minutes being read and reports given by the respective secretaries and treasurers. A feature of the evening, and one which had been particularly instrumental in bringing the two societies together in this manner, was the christening of the twin babies of Mr. and Mrs. Izzard, born the 24th. April last, and with this in view the passages of Scripture read, and verses repeated in answer to roll Old or New Testament, and containing the word child or children. After the business of the Societies was completed the baptismal ceremony was entered upon the twins receiving the names of David James and Joseph John. Mrs. Thompson rendered with a great deal of feeling "Only a bit of sunshine" and a pretty duet was given by Mrs. Cumbers and Mrs.
Martin, and a humorous poem on twin babies read by Miss Woodwark. Gifts of baby clothing and a little bank of money, the nucleus of an account for their future education, were then presented.

The kiddies' mother, who was quite taken by surprise at the very pretty donations, the gifts of the respective Societies expressed in behalf of both parents and children. At this point, the babies, feeling no doubt the pressure of too much solemnity and ado made over them, and who had been as good as gold through the whole ceremony, began to chafe under the attention and raised such a fuss, that they had to be at once given their bottles and taken up stairs. A very delightful pass around tea was then served by Mrs. Izzard, assisted by Mrs. George Hardie, and after passing a pleasant time together the gathering broke up, each one voting it a most delightful occurrence and one long to be remembered.

Turkey Calls Were Answered

By CHARLES SLOAN REID

"KEOWK! Keowk!"
The call rang down the ravine with a shrill resonance. The sun was not yet risen, and objects could be seen only a short distance through the woods. There was a dank smell in the air, but old Reuben Henry enjoyed it. The dead flowers of the passing summer were decaying there in great abundance where formerly the slopes of the ravine had been rich in various colors and woodland perfumes.

Old Reuben was bent upon shooting a wild turkey. He prided himself upon the absolute naturalness of his turkey call. Never had there been but one man in the whole mountain section who could closely rival his imitation; and that man had moved over into Buncombe county two years before. Reuben always chuckled when he thought of Ben Gordy no longer a competitor for the honors of best turkey caller on the range; for Reuben did not like contenders.

The stillness in the woods and the curvature of the hills made it possible for the turkey call to resound from a great distance.

"Keowk! Keowk!" Down the ravine it floated, arousing a slight echo, but bringing no response from a turkey.

Old Reuben waited for some time between calls, at one time squatting beside a bowlder on the side of the trail; at another leaning closely against a white oak, with the butt of his long rifle grounded at his feet.
"Well, reckon I'll get on over the ridge," the old man mused, "to the Laurel bluff. Don't never fall to git up one over thar. Funny I can talk in turkey language so dinged good at I can fool them smart critters.
Old Bennever couldn't make hit sound jes' natcheral somehow. Mought ha' fooled some o' them old birds as didn't ha' much sense. But a rale smart cock never got cotech on Ben's turkey talk."

Rube chuckled as he mused over the memory of Ben's efforts.

"Mayhap Ben's out somewhar over in Buncombe this very mornin' akeowkin' around, a-tryin' to git a shot at some foolish ol' hen."

Reuben moved forward over the trail which wound around the base of a huge rock some yards away, and led over a rough range spur and down into the Laurel bluff section. Out on the ridge he stopped once more. Cup-ping his hands about his lips he sent forth an unusually shrill "keowk!
keowk!"

A moment of silence followed. Then from a great distance came an answering:

"Keowk! Keowk!"
"Thar, by heck! I 'lowed I'd fetc' yuh. Jes' woke up. I reckon!" Rube carressed the long barrel of his rifle.
"Keowk! Keowk!" he repeated presently.

Some moments passed. Then a sharp reply came from a spot much nearer.

"Hm, thet ain't no lazy bird," old Reuben muttered. "Bet he's been trottin' ever since he hyard my fust call. Reckon I'll meet him part o' the way. I can ease over to the burnt stump at the alidge o' the bluff."

He sent forth another call, then crept forward at a rapid rate, while an answering call fell upon his ears, now from a point still nearer.

"Dingbust ol' Ben's hide—wisht he could be here now jest to see how easy hit's done. Nothin' like hev'in' the trick o' doin' it. Ben ain't never had it yit."

Reuben chuckled, and took his place in a sheltered spot by the big burnt chestnut. He grasped his rifle in such a way that it might be brought to his shoulder, with the muzzle protruding through some shrubbery which grew close beside the tree stump, and with little or no disturbance of the branches.

"Keowk! Keowk!" The answering call now was loud and exceedingly clear.

"Dinged ef he ain't a comin' up thet little trail right out o' the laurel!
He'll come out adzacly 'twix' them
two rocks yander agin thet post oak.
Hit'll be a' most like shootin' a rabbit in hit's bed; but I reckon I got to do it."

Old Reuben trained his rifle upon the space between the rocks, and waited. Presently there fell upon his ear a piercing "Keowk! Keowk!"

"By heck!" mused the old man to himself; "he's thar this minute! right ahin' thet high rock."

Reuben waited, with his keen eye trailing a bead along the rifle barrel.
But what he saw a moment later was not the head of turkey cock, but the muzzle of a long rifle like his own, which had come slowly through the space between the rocks. The butt of Rube's rifle went to the ground.

"Dingbust yuh'r hide, Ben Gordy!"
he shouted; "come out'n thar, afore
I shoot the end off o' yohr old gun!
They must ha' run yuh out'n Buncombe county?"

Old Ben stood up, then threw back his head, and laughed. "Jest over on a visit, Rube." Ben declared, rising from his place of concealment. "I knowed hit was you all the time.
Yuh'r call lacks just a leetle o' bein' natcheral, yuh know."

"Yuh'r a dinged liar, Ben; an' yuh know it! But I reconized yore sorry call the fust time I heyard it; an' I said to muhself 'Ol' Ben's back from Buncombe.' Yuh never could fool no turkey wi' thet call."

Sight Unseen

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

I find that the solution of the Arthur Wells mystery—for we did solve it—takes three divisions in my mind. Each one is a sitting, followed by an investigation made by Sperry and myself.

But for some reason, after Miss Jeremy's second sitting, I found that my reasoning mind was stronger than my credulity. And as Sperry had at that time determined to have nothing more to do with the business, I made a resolution to abandon my investigations. Nor have I any reason to believe that I would have altered my attitude toward the case, had it not been that I saw in the morning paper on the Thursday following the second seance that Elinor Wells had closed her house, and gone to Florida.

I confess I had an overwhelming desire to examine again the ceiling of the dressing room and thus to check up on degree further the accuracy of my revelations. After some reflection, I called up Sperry, but he flatly refused to go on any further.

"Miss Jeremy has been ill since Monday", he said. "Mrs. Dane's rheumatism is worse, her companion is nervously upset, & your own wife called me up an hour ago and says you are sleeping with a light, and she thinks you ought to go away. The whole club is shot to pieces."

But, although I am a small and not a courageous man, the desire to examine the Wells house clung to me tenaciously. Suppose there were cartridges in his table drawer? Suppose I should find the second bullet hole in the ceiling? I no longer deceived myself by any argument that my interest was purely scientific. There is a point at which curiosity becomes unbearable, when it becomes an obsession like hunger. I had reached that point.

Nevertheless, I found it hard to plan the necessary deception to my wife. My habits have always been entirely orderly and regular. My wildest dissipation was the Neighborhood Club. I could not recall an evening away from home in years, except on business. Yet now I must have a free evening, possibly an entire night.

In planning for this, I forgot my nervousness for a time. I decided finally to tell my wife that an out-of-town client wished to talk business with me, and that day, at luncheon—I go home to luncheon—I mentioned that such a client was in town. "It is possible", I said as easily as I could, "that we may not get through this afternoon. If things should run over into the evening, I'll telephone."

She took it calmly enough, but later on, as I was taking an electric flash from the drawer of the hall table and putting it in my overcoat pocket she came on me, and I thought she looked surprised.

During the afternoon I was beset with doubts and uneasiness. Suppose she called my office and found that the client I had named was not in town? It is undoubtedly true that a tangled web we weave when first we practise to deceive, for on my return to the office I was at once quite certain that Mrs. Johnson would telephone and make the inquiry.

After some debate I called my secretary and told her to say, if such a message came in, that Mr. Forbes was in town and that I had an appointment with him. As a matter of fact, no such inquiry came in, but as Miss Joyce, my secretary, knew that Mr. Forbes was in Europe. I was conscious some months afterwards that Miss Joyce's eyes occasionally rested on me in a speculative and suspicious manner.

Other things also increased my uneasiness as the day wore on. There was, for instance, the matter of the back door to the Wells house. Nothing was more unlikely than that the key would still be hanging there. I must, therefore, get a key.

Going through my desk I found a number of keys, mostly trunk keys and one the key to a dog-collar. But late in the afternoon I visited a client of mine who is in the hardware business and secured quite a selection. One of them was a skeleton. He persisted in regarding the matter as a joke, and poked me between the shoulder-blades as I went out.

"If you're arrested with all that hardware on you," he said, "you'll be held as a first-class burglar. You are equipped to open anything from a can of tomatoes to the missionary box in church."

But I felt that already, innocent as I was, I was leaving a trail of suspicion behind me: Miss Joyce and the office boy, the dealer and my wife. And I had not started yet.

I dined in a small chop-house where I occasionally lunch, and took a large cup of strong black coffee. When I went out into the night again I found that a heavy fog had settled down and I began to feel again something of the strange and disturbing quality of the day which had ended in Arthur Wells' death. Already a potential housekeeper, I avoided policemen, and the very jingling of the keys in my pocket sounded loud and incriminating to my ears.

I do not like deserted houses. Even in daylight they have a sinister effect on me. They seem, in their empty spaces, to have held and recorded all that has happened in the dusty past. The Wells house that night, looming before me, silent and mysterious, seemed the embodiment of all the deserted houses I had known. Its empty and unshuttered windows were like blind eyes, gazing in, not out.

Nevertheless, now that the time had come, a certain amount of courage came with it. I am not ashamed to confess that a certain part of it came from the anticipation of the Neighborhood Club's plaudits. For Herbert to have made such an investigation, or even Sperry with his height and his iron muscles, would not have surprised the club. But I was aware that while they expected intelligence and even humor, of a sort, from me they did not anticipate any particular bravery.

The flash was working, but rather feebly. I found the nail where the door-key had formerly hung, but the key, as I had expected, was gone. I was less than five minutes, I fancy in finding a key from my collection that would fit. The bolt slid back with a click, and the door opened.

Once inside the house, the door to the outside closed, and facing two alternatives, to go on with it or to cut and run, I found a sort of desperate courage, clenched my teeth, and felt for the nearest light switch.

The electric light had been cut off!

I should have expected it, but I had not. I remember standing in the back hall and debating whether to go on or to get out. I was not only in a highly nervous state, but I was also badly handicapped. However, as the moments wore on and I stood there, with the quiet unbroken by no mysterious sounds, I gained a certain confidence. After a short period of readjustment, therefore, I felt my way to the library door, and into the room. Once there, I used the flash to discover that the windows were shuttered, and proceeded to take off my hat and coat, which I placed on a chair near the door. It was at this time that I discovered that the battery of my lamp was very weak, and finding a candle in a tall brass stick on the mantelpiece, I lighted it.

Then I looked about. The house had evidently been hastily closed. Some of the furniture was covered with sheets, while part of it stood unprotected. The rug had been folded into the centre of the room, and covered with heavy brown papers, and I was extremely startled to hear the papers rustling. A mouse, however, proved to be the source of the sound, and I pulled myself together with a jerk.

It is to be remembered that I had left my hat and overcoat on a chair near the door. There could be no mistake, as the chair was a light one, and the weight of my overcoat threw it back against the wall.

Candle in hand, I stepped out into the hall, and was immediately met by a crash which reverberated through the house. In my alarm my teeth closed on the end of my tongue, with agonizing results, but the sound died away, and I concluded that an upper window had been left open, and that the rising wind had slammed a door. But my morale, as we say since the war, had been shaken, and I recklessly lighted a second candle and placed it on the table in the hall at the foot of the staircase, to facilitate my exit in case I desired to make a hurried one.

Then I climbed slowly. The fog had apparently made its way into the house for when half-way up, I turned and looked down, the candlelight was hardly more than a spark, surrounded by a luminous aura.

I do not know exactly when I began to feel that I was not alone in the house. It was, I think, when I was on a chair on top of a table in Arthur's room, with my candle upheld to the ceiling. It seemed to me that something was moving stealthily in the room overhead. I stood there, candle upheld and every faculty I possessed seemed centered in my ears. It was not a footstep. It was a soft & dragging movement. Had I not been near the ceiling I should not have heard it. Indeed, a movement later I was not certain I had heard it.

My chair on top of the table, was none too securely balanced. I had found what I was looking for, a part of the plaster ornament broken away, and replaced by a whitish substance, and plaster, I got out my penknife and cut away the foreign matter, showing a small hole beneath, a bullet-hole, if I knew anything about bullet-holes.

Then I heard the dragging movement above and what with alarm and my insecure position I suddenly overbalanced, chair and all. My head must have struck on the corner of the table for I was dazed for a few moments. The candle had gone out, of course, I felt the chair, righted it, and sat down. I was dizzy and I was frightened. I was afraid to move, less the dragging thing above come down & creep over me in the darkness & smother me.

And sitting there, I remembered the very things I most wished to forget—the black curtain behind Miss Jeremy, the things flung by unseen hands into the room, the way my watch had slid over the table & fallen to the floor.

Since that time I know there is a madness of courage, born of terror. Nothing could be more intolerable than to sit there and wait. It is the same insanity that drove men out of the trenches to the charge and almost certain death rather than to sit and wait for what might come.

In a way, I daresay I charged the upper floor of the house. Whatever drove me, I know that candle in hand, and hardly sane, I ran up the staircase, and into the room overhead. It was empty.

As suddenly as my sanity had gone, it returned to me. The sight of two small beds, a tiny dressing-table, a row of toys on the mantelpiece, was calming. Here was the children's night nursery a white and placid room which could house nothing hideous.

I was humiliated and ashamed. I, Horace Johnson, a man of dignity and reputation, even in a small way, a successful after-dinner speaker, numbering fifty-odd years of logical living to my credit had been running half-maddened toward a mythical danger from which I had been afraid to run away!

I sat down and mopped my face with my pocket handkerchief.

After a time I got up and going to a window looked down at the quiet world below. The fog was lifting. Automobiles were making cautious progress along the slippery street. A woman with a basket had stopped under the street light and was rearranging her parcels. The clock of the city hall, visible over the opposite roofs, marked only twenty minutes to nine. It was still early evening—not even midnight, the magic hour of the night.

Somehow that fact reassured me, and I was able to take stock of my surroundings. I realized, for instance, that I stood in the room over Arthur's dressing room, and that it was into the ceiling under me that the second—or probably the first—bullet had penetrated.

It Costs You Money

Every day you delay placing your goods before the public is costing you money.

True, everyone may know you are in business — know where your store is, but they do not have time to run to your store to find out about the new things you are showing, about the special bargains you are offering and the hundred and one other things that make your store an interesting place to visit.

Many people may be going past your store every day to buy something you could sell them at a lower price than they are paying—and why? The other fellow invited them to buy—that's all. You didn't.

CORRESPONDENCE

Editor of the Watchman, Lachute, Que.

Dear Sir.—I read with interest the passage-at-arms of our City Fathers in the waterworks discussion of last council meeting, and in order to clear up the chlorination that has been so prominently before us and had much bearing as to whether we should go to Pollock's site or to the Lake Sir John, I personally undertook to write Mr. J. T. Lafreniere, Chairman of the Provincial Board of Health at Montreal, asking the questions so that my reason was obscured save for the fact that I wanted the questions submitted definitely answered. My letter read,—

Lachute, Oct. 24th., 1931.
Mr. J. T. Lafreniere,
Chairman, Prov. Board of Health
Montreal, Que.

Dear Sir:—

Owing to certain rumours in town with reference to our proposed extension of waterworks, will you be good enough to answer the following questions:

Will we have to put in a Chlorine system, if we extend our waterworks, to Pollock's site.

Will we have to use Chlorine continuously?

Will we have to put in a chlorine system if we extend our waterworks system to the Lake?

Will we have to use Chlorine continuously?

To which I received the following reply:

Replying to your letter of the 24th. inst., I wish to tell you that the water intake at Pollock's Farm has been approved provided that a chlorine system is installed and the apparatus will need be run continuously.

If the water intake had been placed in the Lake, chlorination would not have been necessary.

Yours truly,
Theo. J. Lafreniere, Sanitary Engineer.

This answers effectively the questions that the public have a right to know and if a vote should be again required the chlorination of our water must be definitely taken into consideration.

Yours truly,
Interested Citizen.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Member of Faculty, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

PAUL IN EPHEBUS

GOLDEN TEXT—And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 19:1-41.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Paul in the City of Ephesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Paul in the Key City of Asia.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Bonfire of Bad Books.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Gospel Facing Error.

I. John's Disciples Become Christians (vv. 1-7).

These twelve disciples had only been taught the baptism of repentance as preparation for the Kingdom. Paul taught them to believe on Christ; that is, to receive Christ as the one who on the cross provided redemption for them through the shedding of his blood. When they believed and received Christ as their Savior, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, and Paul laid hands on them and they received the Holy Spirit.

II. Paul Preaching in Ephesus (vv. 8-10).

1. In the Jewish synagogue (v. 8). Though the Jews were Paul's enemies, he inflexibly followed his rule to go first to them with the gospel. His preaching was characterized:

a. By boldness (v. 8).
b. By reason (v. 8).
c. By persuasion (v. 8).

d. By speaking concerning the Kingdom of God (v. 8). He did not discourse on philosophy, or the latest in literature, but upon the message of salvation through Christ.

2. In the schoolhouse of Tyrannus (vv. 9, 10). The Jews, being enemies of the gospel, were only hardened by Paul's preaching, and spoke openly against this way of salvation in Christ. Paul separated the disciples from them and resorted to the schoolhouse of Tyrannus.

III. God Working Miracles by Paul (vv. 11-16).

Ephesus was noted for its wonder workers. That Paul's ministry might be successful here, God in an extraordinary way put his seal upon the work. Handkerchiefs and aprons that had touched Paul's body healed the sick and cast out evil spirits. Seeing the marvelous power operating through Paul, certain Jews who went about the country practicing magical arts undertook to use the name of Jesus in their incantations. Knowing that their connection with Christ was real, the use of his name by them only enraged the evil spirits who sprang upon and overcame them.

IV. A Glorious Awakening (vv. 17-41).

1. Fear fell upon all (v. 17). News of the casting out of these evil spirits created impressions favorable to Christianity.

2. It brought to the front those who professed faith in Christ while not living right lives (v. 18).

3. Many gave up the practice of the black arts (v. 19). Black arts are forms of jugglery by the use of charms and magical words. No one can have fellowship with God and practice such arts. They proved the genuineness of their Christian profession by publicly burning their books, valued at $12,500.

4. Uproar of the silversmith at Ephesus (vv. 23-41).

a. The occasion (vv. 23, 24). The power of the gospel was destroying the infamous business of Demetrius and his fellows. Their primary interest was its financial effect upon the principal business of the city.

b. The method (vv. 25-29). Demetrius, a leading business man, called a meeting and stated that much people had been turned from idolatry and that the market for their wares was materially weakened. He appealed to his fellows.

(1) On the ground of business (v. 27). The world is willing to tolerate any kind of religion or moral awakening so long as it does not interfere with its business or way of living.

(2) On the ground of religious prejudice. He said that the temple of the great Goddess Diana would be despoiled (v. 27). He became religious when he saw that his business was being damaged. His speech gained his end. The crowd in a rage cried, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!"

The mob was quieted by the tact, good judgment, and counsel of the town clerk (vv. 37-41).

 stand? And he has none for me. But he wrote a check for her." This is a problem a wife has in the comedy "Her Own reason why if you attend Fri-

Lachute is to have a visit from Professor Boyce, of Montreal, next Saturday afternoon. Quite a number of our young men are anxious to learn string instruments with a view to organizing an orchestra later on. This is a move in the right direction and we trust a goodly number will turn out to lend encouragement, for apart from the personal pleasure the members might derive it would be a fine thing for the town to have an orchestra of its own without having to depend on outside talent.

MASONIC BANQUET

AND DANCE

The Annual Ladies' Night in connection with Argenteuil Masonic Lodge, No. 67, held in the Auditorium on Tuesday evening last proved a huge success. Over 250 Masons with their wives and friends sat down to a most appetizing dinner which had been prepared by the Ladies of the Presbyterian Church and great credit is certainly due them for the quick and efficient service rendered.

Among the several toasts proposed the one to "Our Fallen Heroes" was most impressive and was most ably spoken on by Rev. Bro. H. Cousins, and it is nice to know that on the eve of Remembrance Day this token of respect was paid to those who made the supreme sacrifice, in order that Freedom might be the result. Vocal selections were rendered by Bros.
 Butler, Gorman and Duncan, which were greatly appreciated.
 A seven piece orchestra furnished music, which none could help but enjoy and several hours were spent in dancing. A pleasant feature of the evening was the attendance of Bro. E. H. Mc-Coy, whose 50 years of Masonry has made him the envy of many and who when called upon briefly outlined a few of the "Good Things", that are being done by the Order. An honor passed on was the drinking of a toast to his continued health and prosperity.

The Lodge under the able leadership of Wor. Bro. J. Hadley is certainly to be commended for the very pleasant evening.

NEWSPAPER MEN MEET AT HUNTINGDON.

Members of the Ottawa and St. Lawrence Press Association had a very interesting and profitable meeting on Saturday last, when as guests of Mr. Adam Sellar of the Huntingdon Glean-er, they gathered at the fine large hostelry "The Chateau." Following a busy morning in which the varied papers interested were under careful criticism, for the sole purpose of seeing how we can better serve our several communities, many improvements were suggested and we are convinced that much good will result.

The noon luncheon was rather unique, in that about 75 of Huntingdon's business men were invited to be present when they had the privilege of listening to an interesting address given by Mr. H. Stephenson, secretary of
 A. McKim & Co's, one of the most capable advertising men in the field today. His address was based on a 30 year experience and he pointed out to his audience the many ways in which both merchants and newspaper men might get greater returns through the adoption of progressive measures and stepping out of the old ruts.

A short address of welcome from Alderman McNier, to which on behalf of the Press, R. A. Giles responded and a hearty vote of thanks from C.
 J. McTavish to Mr. Stephenson for his able address, were enthusiastically received.

A fine orchestra and W. Grant with his million dollar smile, kept the gathering up to the pitch with such songs as "Smile awhile" & "Loves Old Sweet Song," and at half past three, the National Anthem brought to a close the second meeting since organization.

THE CAPTAIN'S WEEKLY LETTER.

Dear Boys :

I am writing to you by yourselves this week because as you were told last week, Aunt Di is looking after the girls and we welcome her help very much indeed although you must not think that I had any idea of giving up the pleasure of sending you my weekly message.

Now boys we have got to pull together and make a big effort to keep our end up otherwise the girls, now that they have got Aunt Di behind them, will beat us all along the line and say we are no good.

You know that I appealed to you last week for contributions to the "Captain's Corner Watchman Christmas Joy Fund for Poor Children," and it has been whispered to me that the girls are determined that their contributions will be greater than that of the boys, so I am depending on you not to let this be so.

Write to me often and write to me well. Let me know all about your plans for Christmas and don't forget the Drawing Competition that closes on the 19th.

Ever your affectionate friend,

BIRTHDAY CLUB NOTICES

THE PEACE TOWER SPEAKS.

I am part of the beautiful Parliament Buildings in Ottawa. In fact I am the most picturesque part. I stretch high up towards the heavens. My eyes look North, South, East, and West. With them I give the people of Ottawa their time. I have a very beautiful voice and every quarter of an hour you can hear me use my chimes.

Sometimes I use my beautiful bells and hundreds of people come to hear me make music. My largest bell weighs fifty tons and when it peals it makes music for miles around. When Parliament is in Session I am the one that informs the people of Ottawa because a light shines from my head as bright as the stars above.

I can see many beautiful things from my high position. I can see where King Edward laid the corner-stone for my late brother, who was burned to the ground. I can see the spot where Champlain landed and I have seen many wonderful ceremonies in the spacious park below me. But perhaps the most wonderful thing of all is that I can always look down and see the spot where the gallant Canadian soldiers were reviewed before going over the dangerous seas to fight for the Mother Country in the World War.

I have a room inside me, where all the names of the brave Canadian soldiers who were killed in the world war are written down in a book; and on the wall there is a tablet with the poem "In Flanders Fields" written upon it. This poem was written by a Canadian poet who was killed in the war.

"Take up our quarrel with the foe,
To you from failing hands we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high.
If ye break faith with us who die,
We shall not sleep, though poppies blow
In Flanders Fields."

The Canadian soldiers did hold the torch high, and I was built to help remember the agony and danger they went through for our own country, Canada, and for the Great Empire to which we belong.

—M. Cruikshank.

THE DANCE OF THE LEAVES

It was a sunny Fall day. A restless feeling prevailed in the forest. The birds noticed it, and one robin said to his mother, "Mother, what is the matter? I heard King Oak say something about 'invitations' to some of the breezes." "Yes, dear," answered his mother, "there is going to be a dance to which all the leaves are invited." The bird was right, for King Oak had sent some little breezes with invitations to all the leaves, asking them to a dance on the evening of Halloween.

"Oh dear, we must change our dresses quickly," the leaves were heard to rustle. Jack Frost was costumed to all of them. Madame Poplar preferred to dress her children in yellows, Mr. Maple in bright shades of red, yellow and reddish-brown, and Mrs. Elm in shades of brown and gold. The Evergreens were not invited to the ball because it was known that Mother Nature did not allow them to go. Queen Oak preferred Jack Frost to dress her children in shades of russet, brown, and amber.

How to get away was an important question. The leaves were getting very anxious about it. But Mother Nature came to the rescue. She hurried about from tree to tree, from leaf to leaf, putting a little layer of cork between the stem of the leaf, and the branch. "Now hold on tightly until the day of the ball, or you will not have your dresses fresh," she said.

They did hold on, most of them, until the day at last came. Everything was hustle and bustle in the forest. King Oak sent his servant, West Wind, to carry the guests to the ball. But alas! some of the leaves escaped and fell into a stream and never got to the dance at all; some got trampled under the feet of a herd of cattle; others, poor things, were gathered and burnt by those awful human beings. But the great majority got to the ball safely.

When all had arrived the ball began. South Wind helped them to dance. It was a gay scene. The moon was lighting up the field with its bright light. Crickets and frogs made the orchestra. The poor little Beech children had to look on, for their mother did not think it well for them to go. She liked them to stay with her till her new babies came next spring. One or two of them escaped, but only a few.

When all was over South Wind blew the leaves into ditches and hollows, where they slept all winter, never to wake again.

—Nancy Haultain.

THE BEGINNING OF A PERFECT DAY.

She sleeps, a smile of comfort on her face,
It changes as two hands begin their raid—
She turns, the covers only mark the place Where once a head had blissfully been laid.

The owner of the hands, stands by the bed,
A-shiver in the icy morning air.
"You're late already, get up sleepy head!"
The answer is a muffled "I don't care!"

The breakfast bell is ringing loudly now,
"Great jumping cats! Where did I put my tie?"
Her room-mate has gone down-stairs long ago
And, horrified she hears the girls rush by.

A frown of terror wrinkles up her brow, Wildly she's hunting for a safety pin.
"Oh, where's that comb?" Her shoes and stockings now.
The breakfast has begun—They've all gone in.

At last she's ready. Through the door she's peeping, Trembling she meets the matron's icy stare.
She feels cold shivers down her spine go creeping,
As timidly she crosses to her chair.

All's over now perhaps for evermore,
Thinks she, as extra work she sadly scans.
Oh, how she hates that history, what a bore!
She's never understood those foreign lands.

She's finished all her work and out she rushes
Just as the school-bell rings for morning prayers.
With murder in her heart she hotly flushes,
And, turning, slowly marches up the stairs.

—Florence Coristine, V. Matric.

PROTECTION OF BUILDINGS AGAINST LIGHTNING

The Theory of Lightning Conductors.

Having devised a simple test of discriminate between positive and negative electricity, we discover that the two bodies—such as the glass and the silk—after being rubbed together, become oppositely charged.

We also find that, with the exercise of certain precautions, the property of electrification can be imparted by one body to another, one method of impartation being by actual contact, in which case the one body gains electricity at the expense of the other, and the transference is said to take place by conduction; and further by conduction the electricity is conveyed from one part of a body to another part, but at different rates in different substances. Where the electricity diffuses slowly, we speak of the body being an insulator, but where the diffusion is rapid, we say the body is a conductor. It used to be thought that metals could not be electrified by friction, but that was because proper precautions were not taken to avoid the loss of the electricity by conduction; for a metal rod can be electrified by rubbing with fur provided the rod is held by an insulator so that the electricity is not conducted away by the hand, because any part of the human body acts as a conductor.

Some bodies such as the twine of Franklin's kite, may be good insulators when dry, but may become conductors by virtue of a film of water on their surface. For this reason a glass insulator is sometimes covered with shellac varnish, as the varnish is less "hygroscopic"—has less attraction for atmosphere moisture—than the bare glass.

A simple yet delicate indicator of the presence of static electricity—that is electricity at rest—is the gold leaf electroscope, which consists of two pieces of gold leaf suspended from the lower end of a metal rod fixed with insulating material in a glass case, one end of the rod projecting above and carrying a metal plate which forms a little table. Two brass side plates are introduced into the glass case, one brass plate opposite to each gold leaf, and each plate is connected to "earth" by a suitable wire conductor. The function of these plates will be understood when the subject of induction has been discussed. If the little table is touched by an electrified body, some of the electricity is conveyed to the gold leaves, and these being similarly electrified, repel one another.

M.V.T.

OUR PUZZLE CORNER.

So much interest was taken in the mystery of the Engineer's name that I cannot do better than explain it here and now, how Sherlock Holmes deduced that the name was Black.

"You see, my dear Watson" he said; we know that Mr. Smith lives in Montreal. We also know something about Mr. White, namely that his salary, including bonus is $10000, per annum."

"Capital" said Holmes, "you are coming along. I already had deduced that myself. But let us get back to the main point. Mr. White's salary cannot be divided exactly by three; therefore, it is not his salary which is three times greater than the Guard's. Elimination shows us, then, that it is Mr. Black whose salary is indicated."

"Marvellous!" said Watson.

"Elementary," said Holmes, "Now we learn from this that Mr. Black is the guard's nearest neighbour, and therefore that Mr. White lives in Ottawa. So the Guard's name is also White.

"We are now reduced to Black and Smith. One of these is the fireman, the other the engineer. We are told that Black can beat the fireman at billiards; so Smith must be the fireman and the engineer's name is Black. Thus my dear Watson, we close a satisfactory case. Let's go to the Rex and see Buster Keaton."

The answer to the puzzle that I set last week is "none at all." It is a fact that under the present calendar the first day of a new century never can fall on a Sunday, a Wednesday or a Friday. If you doubt me, wait till 2000 A.D. and see.

The book prize for the best puzzle sent in to our competition has been awarded to Mr. Trayers, Brownsburg, who has selected "Naked Fakir" which I am procuring for him.

This week's puzzle is not so difficult.

A performer was one of a stage army that went round and round the scenery. He was asked after the show, how many people there really were in the army. Being one of those exasperating people, who always gave crooked answers, he said: "If you add one-fourth of those in front of me to four-fifths of those behind me, you get the answer."

What was it?

BRITAIN'S NEW CABINET

Mr. Ramsay MacDonald has not only succeeded in forming a government, but he has collected a team of Cabinet ministers which satisfies the claims of all who supported the National appeal. There had naturally been anxiety in some quarters where it was feared that the Conservatives, having the vast preponderance in the House of Commons, would claim and receive similar preponderance in the Cabinet. But the Prime Minister has insisted on making his own Cabinet.

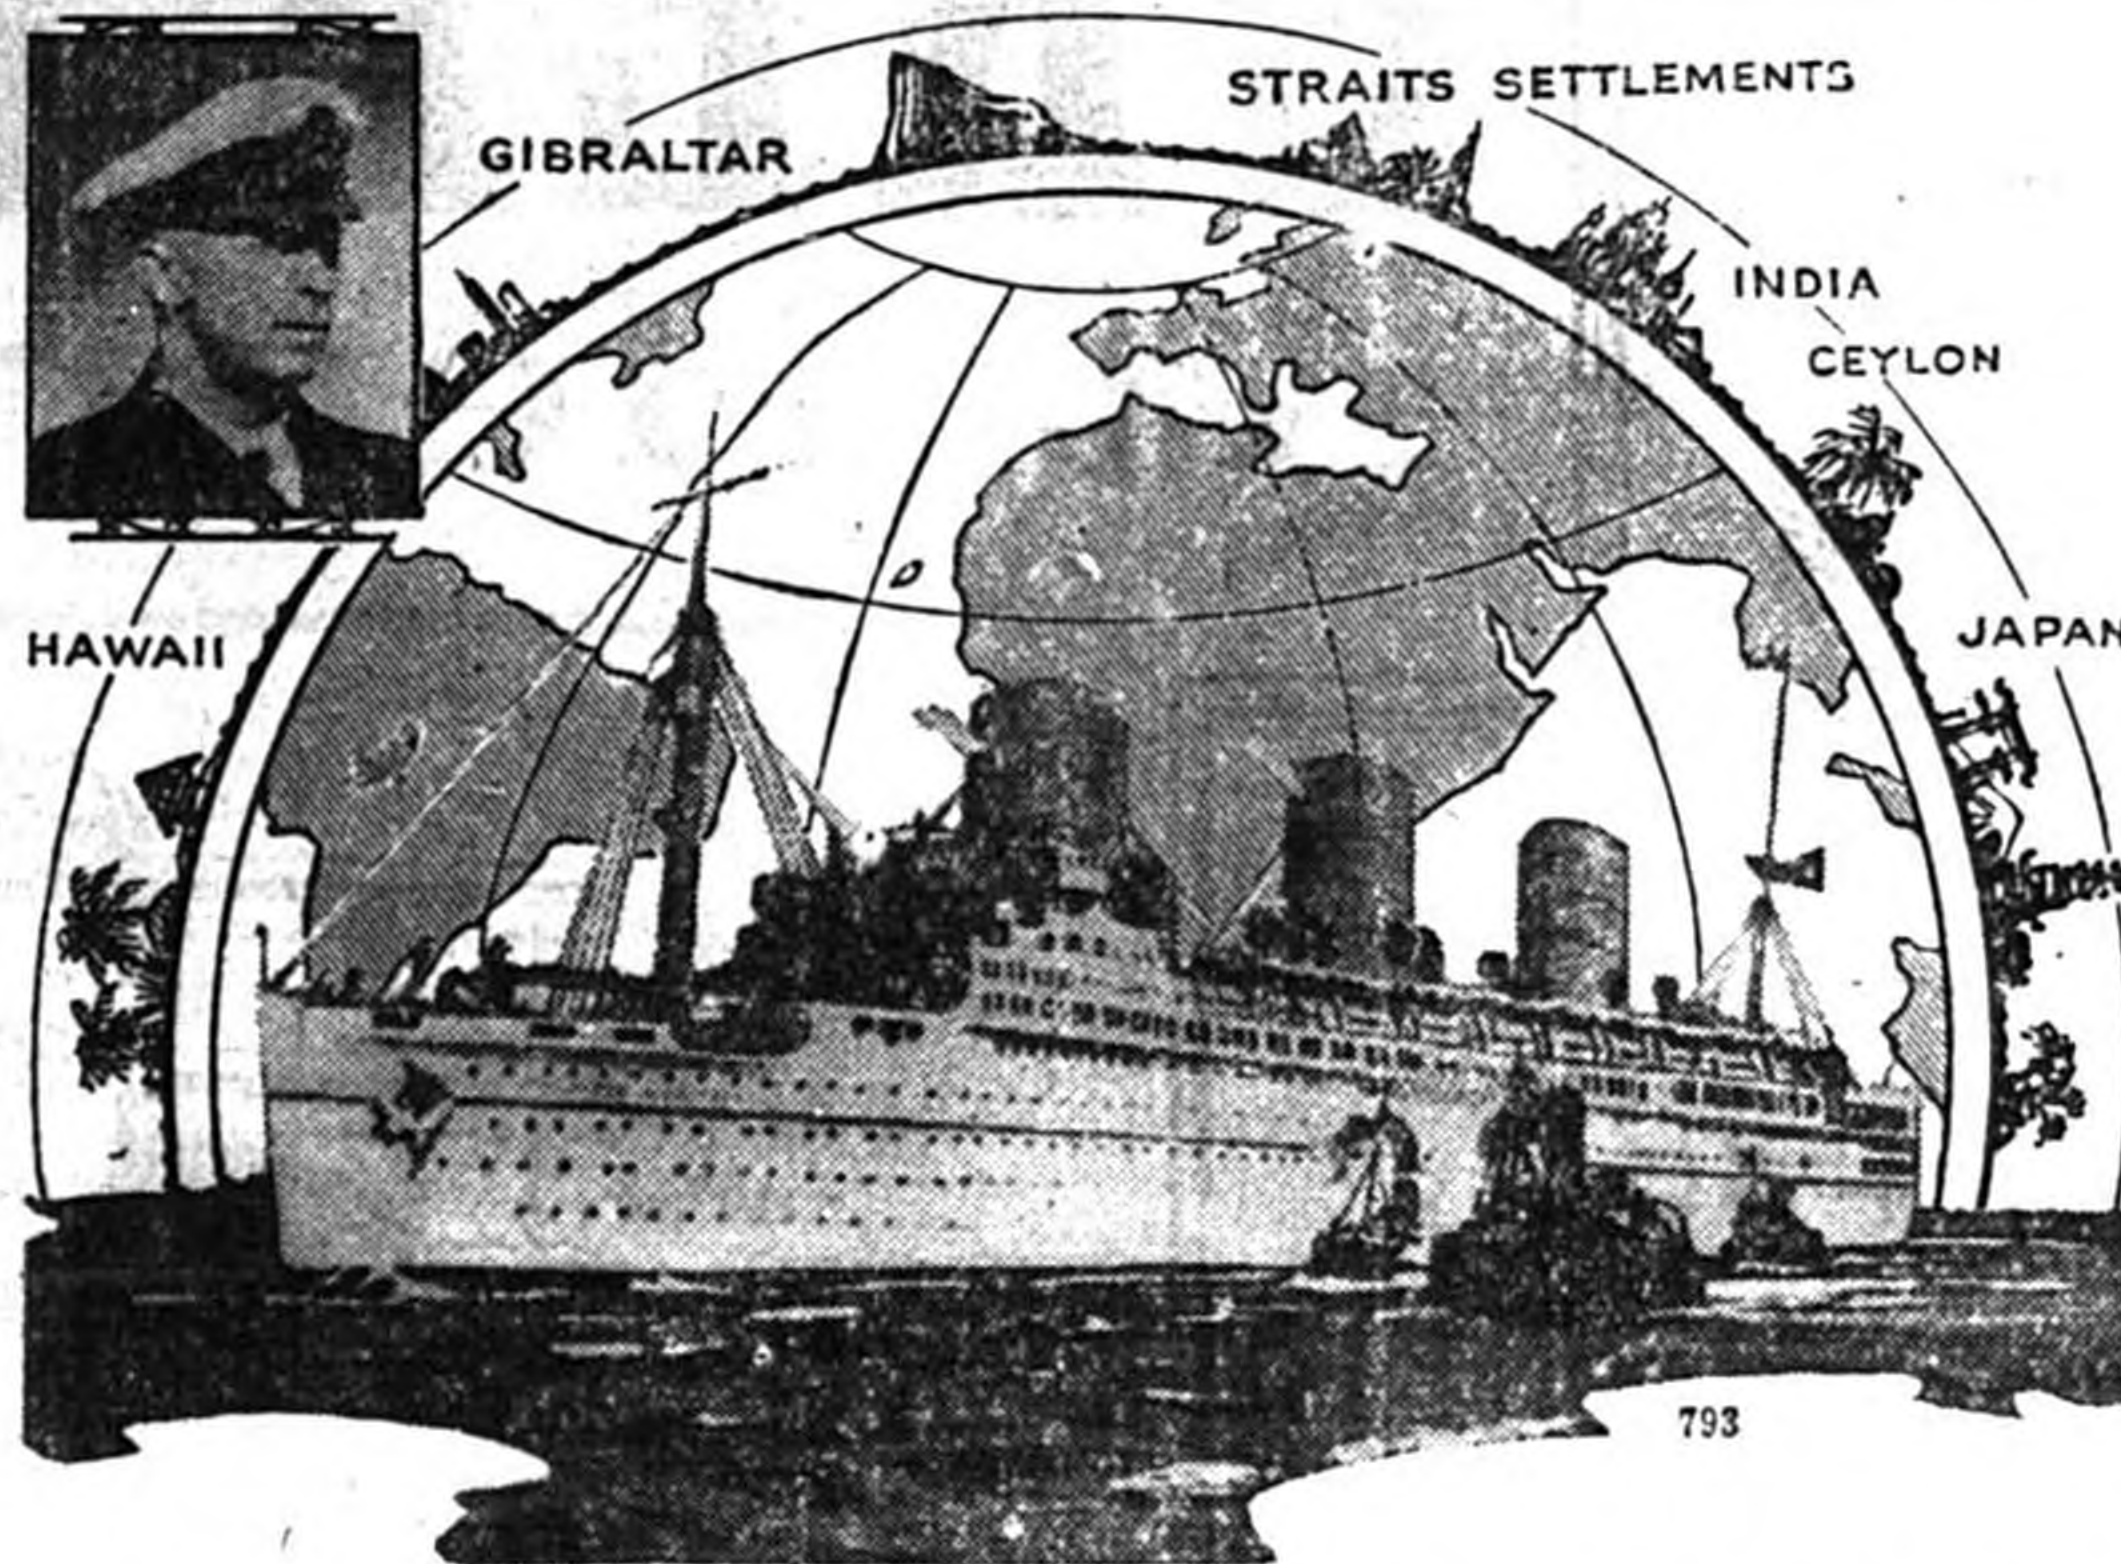

Of its twenty Members, eleven are Conservatives; that is to say the latter have but a bare majority, and so much was clearly right in view of the present composition of Parliament. But the result cannot be estimated by counting heads. Of the four former Labor ministers, three hold offices of the greatest importance, one being the Prime Minister himself, another the Lord Chancellor. The third is the redoubtable Mr. J. H. Thomas, who is resuming the office which will bring him in contact with the British overseas Dominions. The fourth is Mr. MacDonald's former right-hand man Mr. Philip Snowden, whose weighty counsel will still be available to the Government.

The Liberals have equal reason to be satisfied. Five offices have been given to them, and the include three at least of very importance. The Liberal leader, Sir Herbert Samuel, holds the dignified and responsible secretaryship of which he has had previous experience—that of the Home Office. The appointment of Sir John Simon to Foreign Minister may cause some surprise since for him this appears to be a new field of activity. But there is significance in his selection. He has unrivalled knowledge of law and almost uncanny expertness in handling financial questions, and these two qualifications are peculiarly needed in dealing with those complex international questions upon which the nations of the world will soon be required to deliberate.

Mr. MacDonald has made a courageous beginning. He has assembled a ministry really representative of all the groups which have lent support to the national ideal Mr. Stanley Baldwin and his Conservative colleagues equally command admiration for the manner in which they have recognized that their majority was secured by national rather than party vote and have accepted office in a generous mood of give and take. No doubt with so many men holding diverse opinions there will be many difficulties to face. Seldom has a Prime Minister had a harder task than that of Mr. MacDonald. But the more difficult his task, the greater his opportunity. All his skill, judgment, sympathy and statesmanship will be needed to drive this restive but brilliant team.

—You are sure to enjoy the play in the Auditorium, on Friday evening, "Her Own Money", a three act comedy. Full of humour, given by the St. Simon's Players.

Cruises Around World After First Season

Tired, like any debutante after the hectic gaieties of her first season, the young lady who, immediately after her presentation at the Court of King Neptune last May, became a leader of society, leaves shortly for a leisurely cruise around the world. The young lady in question, the 42,500 ton Canadian Pacific liner "Empress of Britain" has just concluded her first Atlantic season during which her parties, amongst the most brilliant ever held on the Western Ocean, have been attended by more representatives of rank and fashion than Ward McAllister dreamed of. Princes, Ambassadors, Earls, Viscounts, Barons, Knights of many of the highest orders of chivalry and their ladies have vied for her favour; and the highest aristocracy of North America, the noble Iroquois Indians, paid their homage when they conferred Chieftainship upon Captain R. G. Latta (inset) commander of the Empress of Britain, and Commodore of the Canadian Pacific fleet. Regaining the Blue Ribband of the Atlantic for the British Empire on her second voyage by making the crossing to Father Point, Quebec, in four days 12 hours, 30 minutes, thus breaking the previous continent to continent record by four hours and 36 minutes, the Empress of Britain did not rest on her laurels, and since that date has broken her own record on five other occasions. On her final voyage of the season she crossed in seven hours and 49 minutes less than the best record between Cherbourg and New York.

Starting December 3rd, from New York, the Empress will visit 30 ports before, after a complete circle of the world, she returns to the Atlantic. Her guests will bring back with them when they reach New York again, April 8th, 1932, fragrant memories of Madeira, Gibraltar, Algeria, Monaco, France, Italy, Greece, Palestine, Egypt, India, Ceylon, Sumatra, Java, Straits Settlements, Federated Malay States, Siam, the Philippines, China, Japan, Hawaii, Panama and Cuba.

She will be the largest and fastest vessel ever to cruise around the world.

ARMISTICE CEREMONY AT BROWNSBURG

On Wednesday, Nov. 11th., Remembrance Day members of our village fittingly celebrated the occasion by a Memorial Service at the Monument, conducted by the Girl Guides, under the direction of their Captain Miss Hanson. This service is observed annually, and while the troop is not large, the conduct of the service, its decorum and reverence, and the very fine spirit shown throughout the ceremony, are most beautiful and comforting. After the placing of the wreath by the color party of three of the girls, the familiar old hymn was sung, "O God our help in ages past," the lesson of the day was read by Rev. E. G. Baxter, and prayer by Rev. Mr. Cousins, who also delivered a very helpful and inspiring address, speaking frankly of the occasion, its solemnity as Remembrance Day, and its significance as set aside by the Government as an annual and solemn privilege of publicly calling to mind the ideals and sacrifices that are the bond and pledge of our nation, & that led to the victory of the allies in 1918. "Fight the Good Fight" was then sung and the solemn service was brought to a close by the benediction. It was a very spiritual and suggestive service, and while not as largely attended as the occasion called for it, it well repaid those in attendance for the time and effort made.

Day of Remembrance Receives Honored Recognition

It is most fitting that the eventful day of November 11th., is now to be recognized as a statutory holiday and that the little red Poppy will have greater significance than when associated with general Thanksgiving Day which day was largely given over to frivolity.

With the passing of the years there is a tendency to permit material affairs to impair to a more or less degree the solemnity of this anniversary. Over 60,000 Canadians lost their lives in the Great War, and the memory of those who made the supreme sacrifice should be the most sacred heritage in our national history.

We must fully recognize that because of the unselfish sacrifices made by our loved ones whose remains are now lying in the far-away fields of Flanders, we are privileged to enjoy our freedom, for in Flanders Field desolation was never so great that the little red poppies could not raise their little heads and cover with a scarlet blanket the destruction wrought by man's violence. These simple little flowers which are today being worn by us, remain as imperishable symbols in our memories of those who sacrificed that Right and Justice should prevail.

Each year, on the anniversary of Armistice Day, throughout the British Empire a common tribute will be made to our fallen heroes. And while speaking of these we must not forget that there are yet many who participated in the Great War who are bereft of sight and the greatest of all gifts, health and strength.

It was the writer's privilege to enter a home in Dover, England, one unday morning in middle of October, during a recent visit there, and a dear old lady, pointing to the picture of three stalwart boys, told of how they had been killed in the war, one other boy having been brought home and nursed back to life although only half of his former self, having suffered the loss of his right eye, his right leg and his left arm to the shoulder. In spite of this tremendous handicap the young fellow, with whom I counted it an honored privilege to accompany with his mother to church, was bright and cheery and left every morning at 8 o'clock in order to attend his daily duties in the Civil Service work.

Let us then give the kindly thought to those who served, but are not again able to occupy their places in society and take their stand in the struggle of life.

It was indeed gratifying to see the large attendance at the Auditorium on Wednesday morning, with the Boy Scouts and so many of our young people to whom the whole service will mean much, for we all need to learn the great lesson of Sacrifice.

The service was a very impressive one in which the Rev. J. A. Lackey read the scripture lesson and offered prayer, while the Rev. W. B. Rosborough made an earnest appeal on behalf of Peace.

Many hundreds of years ago said the speaker, the Prophet Isaiah looked forward to the time when men would "beat their swords into plough-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; when nation should not lift up sword against nation, neither learn the arts of war any more." And as we are gathered here this morning on a day which cannot but remind us of the great world war which came to a close on the eleventh of November, 1918, I feel that we could not select any more fitting words for our meditation than those which have come down to us from the great Statesman-Prophet of ancient Israel. What a wonderful transformation this old world would see if all the forces that are now moved by suspicion and fear and hatred were to be controlled and actuated by a spirit of love and goodwill, and all the people of the world were to co-operate and work together, enthusiastically, and whole-heartedly for the common good of all mankind! And this is just what Isaiah sees and prays for in this passage.

We remember with gratitude to-day the great sacrifice that was made by thousands upon thousands of our best young men to save the day for the Empire and for the world. And I firmly believe that the best way in which we can show our gratitude for what they did for us and for posterity would be to consecrate ourselves and all our powers to the great fight which is now on to end war and to relegate it to the limbo of outgrown and outmoded things.

The first thing I should like to emphasize for a moment or so this morning is that war, as a method of settling international differences and disputes is directly contrary to the teaching and spirit of Him whom we acknowledge as our Lord. It "employs the method of ruthless military necessity." It "employs the method of reprisals and counter reprisals, atrocities and counter atrocities." Kubiand Cobden sums it up in these words: "From the moment the first shot is fired, or the first blow is struck in a dispute, then farewell to all reason and argument; you might," he says, "as well reason with mad dogs, as with men when they have begun to spill each others blood in mortal combat." And it is the admission of no less an authority than Mr. Winston Churchill that, in the Great War, every means was made use of save torture and cannibalism. How then can any people who profess allegiance to Jesus Christ condone or tolerate such a barbarous method of settling international differences and disputes?

Then I should also like to emphasize the fact that war, as a method of settling national differences, costs more than any nation and more than the world itself can ever afford to pay. This is a statement that can be easily substantiated by a brief inventory of the cost of the war that was terminated on November eleventh, thirteen years ago.

(1) For one thing it involved a tremendous material cost. Prosperous and fertile sections of Europe were ruthlessly devastated. Priceless architectural structures were wantonly destroyed. And according to the carefully compiled figures of Professor Richard P. Strong, of Harvard University, the cost of the war in terms of money, reaches the stupendous total of 348 billion dollars ($348,000,000,000). This sum includes 186 billion dollars as direct costs, 84 billion as indirect costs, and 78 billion as costs due to the number of lives sacrificed in the war. A somewhat more conservative compiler estimates the monetary cost of that great conflict at $215,000,000 a day for over four years, or 250 billion dollars altogether. In any case the financial cost of what is so correctly described as "The Great World War," is something that the nations that were involved will be grappling with for many years to come.

(b) But the material cost, great and stupendous as it is, is simply dwindled into insignificance by the expenditure of human life and vitality that was entailed during those four terrible years. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, the great New York preacher, recounts the cost of the war, insofar as human values are concerned in these significant words: "Ten Million dead; three million missing, supposedly dead; nine million orphans; five million war widows; three million refugees and homeless; twenty million wounded."

(c) Then there is also the moral and spiritual cost. The war cost very heavily in the lowering and undermining of those standards and sanctions which have been set up in the endeavour to conserve the moral and spiritual gains that have been so slowly and laboriously made down through the countless ages that have come and gone in the history of mankind. I have no doubt whatsoever that the waves of lawlessness and crime which have been sweeping over the world during the last few years have been due, in very large measure, to the spirit engendered by the war when human life seemed to be so cheap and so paltry a thing.

The world certainly paid very heavily for that "recrudescence of medieval barbarism," as Mr. Lloyd George has so suggestively described it. And one trembles to think of what the result might be if the nations of the world were ever to be lured into such a maelstrom again. For with the marvellous progress which modern science has made in discovering new instruments of warfare, and in perfecting the methods of destruction which have already been employed, it is exceedingly doubtful as to whether civilization would ever survive another world war.

War is certainly one of the greatest problems which confronts the thinking men and women of this generation. For, according to Mr. Lloyd George, "Another war is inevitable, a more terrible war than has ever been experienced in the history of the world, unless—the fate of the world depends on that unless—you can induce the nations of the world to trust to law and justice and not to force." And to my mind there are several lines along which we ought to work in order that such a change can be brought to pass.

(a) For one thing, I suppose we are all agreed that the organization of the nations for peaceful ends has a most important part to play in the war to end war. And the League of Nations has already accomplished a great deal in this respect. Already fifty-five nations have given their support to the League, all of them agreeing not to go to war on any pretext whatsoever until every possible expedient shall have been resorted to in the endeavour to settle differences which may arise among or between any of these powers in a sane and peaceful way. Then about three years ago, the great and powerful United States of America which had previously held aloof from any alignment with European powers in the League of Nations, threw her mighty influence on the side of the outlawry of war as a means of settling international disputes, by not only becoming a party to, but by actually sponsoring and initiating what has come to be known as the Kellogg Peace Plan. On the 27th. day of August, 1928, this Peace Pact was signed in the City of Paris, fifteen sovereign nations affixing their signatures to the Pact. This multilateral treaty has been described as one of the most momentous proposals in the history of nations. Its purpose is, by the official outlawry of war, to abolish war from civilization. It means that the nations involved have formally agreed to renounce war as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another. In that great pact these fifteen nations have pledged themselves that settlement of all disputes "shall never be sought except by pacific means." Then a couple of years ago we had the coming together of President Hoover and Premier Ramsay MacDonald in the endeavour to devise some means whereby a curb might be placed upon the unseemly rivalry in the matter of armaments in which the various nations have been engaged. This was followed in due course by a five-power Conference in the City of London to grapple with, and, if possible, to find a solution to this same great problem. We have also had a disarmament Conference in Geneva, and are just looking forward to a world conference on that most important subject in the early part of the year 1932. The results of such conferences are always somewhat disappointing, but yet I feel it a great thing that representatives of the great nations come together at all, to discuss and face up to their responsibility on this important matter, that they are making some endeavour to limit the fashioning and building of armaments, and seem determined to find some other means of settling their differences than by the cruel arbitrament of war.

(b) But then I feel that Education has also a very important part to play before war, as a means of settling international differences and disputes, shall have become completely and permanently discredited. It must be instilled into the minds of the children and youth of our nation and of the world that war is not only a wasteful but also a suicidal method of settling international differences and disputes, and that the only hope for the individual nation or for the race, lies in people's ability to learn how to live amicably together, and to co-operate whole-heartedly for the happiness and well-being of all the people who dwell upon the face of the earth. Statesman can do a great deal by signing treaties and that kind of thing, but educational agencies must reinforce the efforts of statesmen by creating a public opinion in favor of peace if the treaties and Peace Pacts are to accomplish all or even a part of that which is expected of them.

(c) But further than this I am fully convinced that the Church of Christ has also a part to play before war can be completely eliminated from off the face of the earth. A few years ago Mr. Hall Caine, the great Novelist, used these significant and thought-provoking words: "On the day when the Church, as an undivided and corporate body, takes its stand on the moral ideals of Christ and proclaims the manifest truth that the morality which applies to the individual man applies to nations also, there will be no more war, and the worst troubles of the world will be at the end."

We all have some responsibility for making this a peace-loving and peace-abiding world. May we therefore go forth from this meeting to-day with a determination to think peace, to talk peace, to work and pray for peace, with all the energy of which we are capable, and not to cease from our effort until "the war-drum shall throb no longer, and the battle-flag shall be furled in the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world."

Following the address the vast audience proceeded to the cenotaph in the Memorial Park where floral tributes were lovingly deposited and the last post sounded by Scout Master C. Duncan. During the service "In Flanders Fields" was beautifully rendered by Lachute's popular male quartette comprised of Messrs. Owen and Douglas Todd, Jack Gorman and Charles Duncan.

One of our grand old men, Mr. Hugh Walsh, on Saturday last had the rare experience of celebrating a ninety third birthday. He was in good health and spirits and the day was marked by many callers and by flowers, telegrams, and letters of congratulation. We wish him many happy returns. It is worth noting that in the homes of Mr. Walsh and his next door neighbor live three men all in the nineties. Any one desiring longevity should come to St. Andrews to live.

Mystery of Hermit of Appledore

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"FANCY!" exclaimed young Mrs. Peterby to her husband, "I have heard the strangest thing, Dick—but perhaps you'd rather not hear it."

"Guess I can stand it," and Mr. Peterby smiled at their guest, an old college friend of Millie Peterby's, Grace Chame, "Can't scare us, eh, Miss Chame?"

"Well, you know that old camp up on the side of the mountain?" began Mrs. Peterby. "Well, a man is living there—and people say that he is a hermit, but Mrs. Wellminder told me yesterday, in confidence, that he is not a hermit—and not only that, but that he is a well-known author who is living there, writing a book. He lives that way as to be by himself."

"I met him yesterday," Mrs. Peterby continued, "and although he did not see me—I am sure that he did not—I recognized him at once as some one I used to know in Kerryville."

"That's a very pretty story, my dear, but don't dare try to get acquainted with this beautiful youth."

"Want to go nutting today, Grace?" asked Mrs. Peterby.

"Yes—it will be heaps of fun—I haven't been for years."

"We will have to climb the hill first—it is on the land of the old Porter estate—rather wild up there."

"We might take Don along—he is a big dog and such a protection."

It was after eleven o'clock when the two girls started out with the big dog. They had had an early lunch and were carefree. Mrs. Peterby's little car carried them part way up the side of the mountain, and they left it at a small cottage.

The two girls kept on the upward inclining road for another mile, and they stopped breathlessly and sat down to rest outside the gate of the old Porter residence. Don ran hither and thither, stirring up a rabbit or frightening the birds, but after awhile he disappeared.

They wandered along the mountain road, picking up nuts from under the broad chestnut trees, and from under a black walnut tree that grew near the Porter place. In the distance they heard Don's glad bark.

"Is he calling for us to come along?" asked Grace Chame.

"I am not sure," admitted Mrs. Peterby, "that sounds just like his family bark, doesn't it? He is your dog, Grace, you ought to know his speech!"

Grace listened intently. "Why," she spoke in surprise, "it sounds just as though he had met some one that he knew."

"Perhaps he is acquainted with the hermit," said Mrs. Peterby carelessly. "What is his name?" asked Grace.

Mrs. Peterby was silent, then she admitted with a foolish smile. "To tell the truth, I haven't the least idea!"

They could not hear Don barking now, and in the mountain stillness, there was only the music of the wind in the trees, and the song of a belated bird. Their baskets were filled with nuts, so they resolved to follow the dog, and learn his whereabouts.

They had not gone very far when Miss Chame spoke rapidly. "Wait here, Mollie, behind these bushes—look straight ahead—don't that darling!"

They could see a spreading knot where there were scattered birches and oaks—there was a flame of color from every tree—but it was not the scenery that mattered much, excepting that huge log on which lay Don, the great dog, his happy eyes lifted toward the artist who painted him.

"Good dog!" said the big man behind the easel. "Just five minutes longer, Don, old man, and then you may lead me to the loveliest lady in the whole world."

Don barked ecstatically.

"An artist!" whispered Mrs. Peterby to Grace Chame. "Why—why—might be the young man whom you quarreled with, Grace?"

"It is!" exclaimed Grace.

"Are you no longer in love with him?"

Grace was so silent that her hostess guessed the answer. Just at that moment the painter spoke to Don.

"Now Don, we will go and find our sweetheart!" and just then Mrs. Peterby stepped forward and Grace Chame slowly followed.

"Ah, Don!" called Mrs. Peterby, as the dog came bounding. She nodded at the handsome young man who hurried forward to explain. "Just tell Miss Chame all about it—Don and I must hurry on ahead!" and so she fled with happy Don to lead the way.

Grace Chame's eyes glowed with a soft fire as the artist stopped beside her. "I did not know you were here until Don came bounding upon me," he explained. "I have been making a good sketch of him. This is a wonderful country."

"I am spending a month with my old chum," murmured Grace blushing beneath his ardent eyes. "Mrs. Dick Peterby? Do you know them?"

"Yes, indeed—it was through Dick that I heard about this mountain. I hope you will let me come and see you—sometimes, Grace."

What Grace told him made him the happiest man in the world at that particular moment, and all reports say that he is the happiest man in the world now, long after they are married.

MY PARADISE

We earn, the preachers say, our Paradise—Heaven is not easily won.
We fight our way towards the shining skies;
The straight, hard race must run.

Thus do we win, they say, to Heaven's gate—No coward can attain.
Celestial joys upon the victors wait—The Price of Heaven is Pain!

To that bright place of gold, and harps, and wings,
The strong and noble go;
We weak ones turn instead to nearer things,
And seek our Heaven below.

For each man has his Paradise on earth
He fights to realize;
Some dream commences with his birth,
And dies not till he dies.

Someday will come my longed-for Paradise;
These feet shall cease to roam;
The long and weary trail before my eyes
Leads, in my dreams, to Home!

What matters, then, the vulgar world of strife,
The market's restless hum?
The roar of cities, din of teeming life
Will pass—and peace will come.

Beneath the pines, On Ottawa's gracious banks,
My body's hurt I'll rest,
My tired heart will sing to God in thanks
For Paradise so blest.

There, by the lovely river deep and broad,
My little Home shall rise;
And if I've won my fight, I'll ask from God
No brighter Paradise!

No, He Wasn't Telling

That One to the Wife

"I can match that one," said the man who owns a dog to the man with a new baby at home.

"Impossible!" said the man with the new baby. He had just offered, as an illustration of the intelligence of infants, the story of how a baby, picked up and walked with at 11:03 p. m., will demand with walls to be picked up and walked with the next night at 11:03 p. m. And the next.

"Well," said the man who owns a dog, "when our Maggie had puppies, I was doing night work. Came in at 3 a. m. Maggie and her puppies were sound asleep in their basket at that hour, but one night when I wasn't sleepy I turned on the light in the kitchen, dumped them all out on the floor and played with them for a while. The next night I did the same thing. And the next."

"The night after that I came home tired, I walked right through to the bedroom, undressed and got into bed, and you should have heard the yelps that went up from that kitchen. Every one of those puppies spent the next 15 minutes noisily reproaching me for my neglect. They woke up the wife, they woke up the neighbors. They made the darndest fuss. The next night I ignored them again, but they woke up and yelped at 3 a. m., just the same. It took three nights of ignoring them to break the habit."

"You don't say," said the man with the new baby, looking thoughtful. "Well, I wouldn't dare tell that one to my wife."—New York Sun.

Turkish Capital Famed

for Its Many Mosques

As the tourist gets his first view of Istanbul from the deck of an approaching ship, he is more aware of the mosques than of anything else, says an article in a Boston paper. Their domes, and the slender minarets which rise near them, give Istanbul a real distinction which many great cities lack. Not even Cairo has mosques which show up so astonishingly against the skyline. They are almost numberless, but there are a dozen that are really tremendous in size. They occupy commanding sites, so that the domes and minarets rise above the surrounding roofs. They give Istanbul, from a distance, an aspect of wonderful dignity and grandeur mingled with the charm of the Orient.

Of these mosques, the most renowned is St. Sophia, one of the most glorious buildings in the world. It was built as a Christian church and dedicated in the year 538. The minarets at the four outside corners were added by the Turks when they converted the structure into a mosque. From the outside, St. Sophia is apt to seem a little disappointing, but within it is hardly surpassed anywhere in architectural merit. It would be hard to find another great mosque so light and so graceful.—Detroit News.

Mother Earth's Age

The earth is 2,000,000,000 years old, according to the estimate of Prof. Dr. Otto Hahn, director of the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute at Berlin. The noted physicist bases his calculations on the quantity of lead to be found on the surface of the earth.

"The progress made recently in the study of radio-active substances and the disintegration of the atom enables us to fix the age of the world with fair accuracy," the professor told an audience of German scientists. "Uranium and thorium, contained in certain minerals, are converted, in the course of millions of years, into radium, and finally into uranium lead and thorium lead. The lead findings help us to determine the age of the earth at 2,000,000,000 years."

Old Story Disproved

There is an often repeated story credited to the historian, Harvey Rice, that Moses Cleveland's exploring and surveying party started up the Chagrin river, mistaking it for the Cuyahoga, and that upon discovering the error Cleveland gave it this name as representative of the state of his feelings.

It appears, however, that this story has little foundation, for on maps made before the Revolution the river was called the Chagrin. The name is no doubt from an Indian word given as "Shagrin" or "Shagun" and said to mean "clear." One map issued in 1755 calls it the Elk river.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Spinner's" Derivation

Spinner means one who works at the spinning wheel. In the olden days the work of making cloth for clothing was a part of the household duties and fell to the younger women to spin the yarn. As the prepossessing and marriageable girls had their minds on their fellows, the job usually became the responsibility of those who had had their chance and lost. So a spinner came to mean any unmarried woman, and is still today the legal phrase in England for any woman who has never been married.

Mine Rescue School

To train rescue crews in mine accidents a factory in Berlin, Germany, has opened a school where invasion of gas-infested chambers and the carrying of men to safety are taught. Experiments are made under varying conditions, different types of gas masks being worn by the operators, and dummies are rescued from rooms filled with poisonous vapors.

Sight Unseen

I know, as it happens, very little of firearms, but I did realize that a shot from a .45 automatic would have considerable penetrative power. To be exact, that the bullet had probably either lodged itself in a joist, or had penetrated through the flooring and might be somewhere over my head.

But my candle was inadequate for more than the most superficial examination of the ceiling, which presented so far as I could see an unbroken surface. I turned my attention, therefore to the floor. It was when I was turning the rug back that I recognized the origin of the sound which had so startled me. It had been the soft movement of the carpet across the floor boards.

Some one, then had been there before me—some one who knew what I knew, had reasoned as I reasoned. Some one who, in all probability, still lurked on the upper floor.

Obedient an impulse, I stood erect and called out sharply, "Sperry" I said, "Sperry."

There was no answer. I tried again, calling Herbert. But only my own voice came back to me, and the whistling of the wind through the windows I had opened.

My fears, never long in abeyance that night, roused again. I had instantly a conviction that some human figure, sinister and dangerous, was lurking in the shadows of that empty floor, and I remember backing away from the door and standing in the center of the room, prepared for some stealthy, murderous assault. When none came I looked about for a weapon, and finally took the only thing in sight coal-tongs from the fireplace. Armed with that, I made a cursory round of the nearby rooms but there was no one hiding in them.

I went back to the rug and examined the floor beneath it. I was right. Some one had been there before me. Bits of splintered wood lay about. The second bullet had been fired, had buried itself in the floor, and, some five minutes before, been dug out.

The extraordinary thing about the Arthur Wells story was not his killing. For killing it was. It was the way it was solved.

Here was a young woman, Miss Jeremy who had not known young Wells, had not known his wife until that first meeting at Mrs. Dane's, never met any member of the Neighborhood Club. Yet, but for her, Arthur Wells would have gone to his grave, bearing the stigma of moral cowardice of suicide.

The solution when it came was amazing, but remarkably simple. Like most mysteries. I have in my own house, for instance, an example of a great mystery, founded on mere absent-mindedness.

This is what my wife terms the mystery of the fire-tongs.

I had left the Wells house as soon as I had made the discovery in the night nursery. I carried the candle and the fire-tongs downstairs. I was apparently calm but watchful. I would have said that I had never been more calm in my life. I knew quite well that I had the fire-tongs in my hand. Just when I ceased to be cognizant of them was probably when, on entering the library, I found that my overcoat had disappeared, and that my stiff hat, badly broken, lay on the floor. However, as I say, I was still extraordinarily composed. I picked up my hat, and moving to the rear door, went out and closed it. When I reached the street, however, I had only gone a few yards when I discovered that I was still carrying the lighted candle, and that a man, passing by, had stopped and was staring after me.

My composure is shown by the fact that I dropped the candle down the next sewer opening, but the fact remains that I carried the fire-tongs home. I do not recall doing so. In fact, I knew nothing of the matter until morning. On the way to my house I was elaborating a story to the effect that my overcoat had been stolen from a restaurant where I and my client had dined. The hat offered more serious difficulties. I fancied that, by kissing my wife good-by at the breakfast table I might be able to get out without her following me to the front door which is her custom.

But, as a matter of fact, I need not have concerned myself about the hat. When I descended to breakfast the next morning I found her surveying the umbrella-stand in the hall. The fire-tongs were standing there, gleaming, among my sticks and umbrellas.

I lied. I lied shamelessly. She is a nervous woman, and, as we have no children, her attitude toward me is one of watchful waiting. Through long years she has expected me to commit some indiscretion—innocent, of course such as going out without my overcoat on a cool day—and she intends to be on hand for every emergency. I dared not confess, therefore, that on the previous evening I had burglariously entered a closed house, had there surprised another intruder at work, had fallen and bumped my head severely, and had, finally, had my overcoat taken.

"Horace," she said coldly, "where did you get those fire-tongs?"

"Fire-tongs?" I repeated. "Why, that's so. They are fire-tongs."

"I am not a curious woman," she put in incisively, "but when my husband spends an evening out, and returns minus his overcoat, with his hat smashed, a lump the size of an egg over his ear, and puts a pair of fire-tongs in the umbrella stand under the impression that it is an umbrella I have a right to ask at least if he intends to continue his life of debauchery."

I made a mistake then. I should have told her. Instead, I took my broken hat and jammed it on my head with a force that made the lump she had noticed jump like a toothache, and went out.

When, at noon and luncheon, I tried to tell her the truth, she listened to the end: Then: I should think you could have done better than that," she said. "You have had all morning to think it out."

However, if things were in a state of armed neutrality at home, I had a certain compensation for them when I told my story to Sperry that afternoon. "You see how it is," I finished. "You can stay out of this, or come in, Sperry, but I cannot stop now. He was murdered beyond a doubt, and there is an intelligent effort, being made to eliminate every particle of evidence."

He nodded. "It looks like it. And this man who was there last night—" "Why a man?"

"He took your overcoat, instead of his own, didn't he? It may have been—it's curious, isn't it, that we've had no suggestion of Ellingham in all the rest of the material."

Like the other members, of the Neighborhood Club, he had a copy of the proceedings at the two sances, and now he brought them out and fell to studying them.

"She was right about the bullet in the ceiling," he reflected. "I suppose you didn't look for the box of shells for the revolver?"

"I meant to, but it slipped my mind."

He shuffled the loose pages of the record—"Cane—washed away by the water—a knee that is hurt—the curtain would have been safer—Hawkins—the drawing-room furniture is all over the house. That last, Horace isn't pertinent. It refers clearly to the room we were in. Of course, the point is how much of the rest is also extraneous matter? He re-read one of the sheets. "Of course, that belongs about Hawkins. And probably this: 'It will be terrible if the letters are found.' They were in the pocket-book, presumably."

He folded up the papers and replaced them in a drawer.

"We'd better go back to the house," he said. "Whoever took your overcoat by mistake probably left one. The difficulty is, of course, that he probably discovered his error and went back again last night. Confound it, man, if you had thought of that at the time, we would have something to go on today."

"If I had thought of a number of things, I'd have stayed out of the place altogether," I retorted tartly. "I wish you could help me about the fire-tongs, Sperry. I don't seem able to think of any explanation that Mrs. Johnson would be willing to accept."

"Tell her the truth," "I don't think you understand," I explained. "She simply wouldn't believe it. And if she did I should have to agree to drop the investigation. As a matter of fact, Sperry, I had resorted to subterfuge in order to remain out last evening, and I am bitterly regretting my mendacity."

But Sperry has, I am afraid, rather loose ideas.

"Every man," he said, "would rather tell the truth, but every woman makes it necessary to lie to her. Forget the fire-tongs, Horace, and forget Mrs. Johnson to-night. He may not have dared to go back in daylight for his overcoat."

"Very well," I agreed.

But it was not very well, and I knew it. I felt that, in a way my whole domestic happiness was at stake. My wife is a difficult person to argue with.

She is just as tenacious of an opinion once formed as are all very amiable people. However unfortunately for our investigation, but luckily for me, under the circumstances, Sperry was called to another city that afternoon and did not return for two days.

It was, it will be recalled, on the Thursday night following the second sitting that I had gone alone to the Wells house, and my interview with Sperry was on Friday. It was on Friday afternoon that I received a telephone message from Mrs. Dane, asking me to take tea with her.

"At what time?" I asked her secretary.

"At four o'clock."

I hesitated. I felt that my wife was waiting at home for further explanation of the coal-tongs, and that the sooner we had it out the better. But, on the other hand, Mrs. Dane's invitations, by reason of her infirmity, took on something of the nature of commands.

"Please say that I will be there at four," I replied.

I bought a new hat that afternoon, and told the clerk to destroy the old one. Then I went to Mrs. Dane's.

She was in the drawing-room plainly excited. Never have I known a woman who, confined to a wheel-chair, lived so hard. She did not allow life to pass her windows, if I may put it that way. She called it in and set it moving about her chair, herself the nucleus around which were enacted all sorts of small neighborhood dramas and romances. Her secretaries did not marry. She married them. It is curious to look back and remember how Herbert and Sperry and myself had ignored this quality in her, in the Wells case. She was not to be ignored, as I discovered that afternoon.

"Sit down," she said. "You look half sick, Horace."

Nothing escapes her eyes, so I was careful to place myself with the lump on my head turned away from her. But I fancy she saw it, for her eyes twinkled. "Horace, Horace!" she said. "How I have detested you all week!"

"I? You detested me?" "Loathed you," she said with unctious. "You are cruel and ungrateful. Herbert has influenza, and does not count. And Sperry is in love—oh yes, I know it. I know a great many things. But you!"

I could only stare at her. "The strange thing is," she went on, "that I have known you for years, and never suspected your sense of humor. You'll forgive me, I know, if I tell you that your lack of humor was to my mind the only flaw in an otherwise perfect character."

A SONG FOR NOVEMBER

Molly Bevan

The Blue Bell Poetess

Rain on the roof!
Waking old woes that long have lain,
Beating a dirge in a minor strain,
No escaping remorse and pain
With rain on the roof.

Wind in the eaves!
A wind that's lost the joy of the wild,
Softly sobbing like a tear-weary child,
A wind that's prisoned, plaintive, mild,
The wind in the eaves.

Fire on the hearth!
Hammer away, relentless rain,
Whispering wind you cry in vain,
Light and laughter return again
With fire on the hearth.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE TOPIC ANNOUNCED

"Mortals and Immortals" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches for Sunday, Nov. 15. The Lesson-Sermon includes the following verses from the Bible (John 3: 6, 7): "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit...ye must be born again." (Corinthians 15: 53) "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."

The Lesson-Sermon includes also the following citation from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "The real man is spiritual and immortal, but the mortal and imperfect so-called 'children of men' are counterfeits from the beginning, to be laid aside for the pure reality. This mortal is put off, and the new man or real man is put on, in proportion as mortals realize the Science of man and seek the true model." (page 409.)

The evening service of the Maple Ave. Baptist Church, of Brownsburg, next Sunday will be partly in charge of the Young People's Union. A beautiful pulpit Bible recently purchased by the Union will be presented to the Church and suitably dedicated. Special appropriate music will be rendered by members of the B. Y. P. U. The pastor will preach on "The Bible and Christianity." Visitors will be cordially welcomed at this and every Service.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Member of Faculty, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.

PAUL IN JERUSALEM

GOLDEN TEXT—For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard.
LESSON TEXT—Acts 21:17-23:22.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Paul in Trouble.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Paul in Trouble.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Paul Faces His Enemies.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Bearing Testimony in the Holy City.

I. Paul's Vow (21:17-20).
Upon Paul's arrival at Jerusalem representatives of the church there gave him a cordial reception. In order that the brethren in Jerusalem might graciously receive him, it was proposed to him by the elders that he take a Jewish vow to prove that he was in no way opposed to the law. They recognized that such an act would in no way compromise or involve the Gentile brethren. Nor did it compromise his own principle of action; namely, to the Jews he became a Jew and to the Gentiles a Gentile, all things to all men in order to gain them for Christ.

II. Paul's Arrest (21:27-40).
How far this act conciliated the Christian Jews we are not told, but it enraged the unbelieving Jews, causing them to resort to mob law. These maddened Jews seized Paul, dragged him from the temple and beat him mercilessly, intending to put him to death. He was rescued from the mob by the Roman guard. In order to protect him from the murderous frenzy of the mob, the soldiers lifted him upon their shoulders and bore him up the stairs. Paul kept himself under control and politely asked permission of the captain to speak to the people. When he addressed him in Greek and mentioned his Roman citizenship, the captain granted his request.

III. Paul's Defense (22:1-27).
Paul's chief concern was not his own safety. He used this last opportunity to witness unto them of Christ.

1. His claim for a rightful hearing (vv. 1-3).

a. His birth (v. 3). He was a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city of no mean reputation.

b. His education (v. 3). He was educated under the tutelage of Gamaliel, and instructed according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers.

c. His zeal (v. 3). He was as zealous toward God as the Jews who were trying to destroy him.

2. His former attitude toward Jesus (vv. 4, 5). "I persecuted this way unto the death."

3. How his attitude was changed (vv. 6-10). This change of attitude was brought about by the intervention of the Lord. While on his way to Damascus with authority to bind the Christians at Jerusalem, he was smitten to the ground by a light from heaven, and the voice of the Lord said, "Why persecutest thou me?" When Paul inquired as to what he was to do, he was told to go into Damascus where he would receive instructions. Ananias was sent to him by the Lord for this purpose.

4. The Lord commissioned him to go to the Gentiles (vv. 17-21). It was not of his own will that he preached to the Gentiles but by the Lord's direct commission.

IV. Paul before the Sanhedrin (23:1-10).

The Roman officer in order to learn why Paul was arrested commanded the chief council to assemble and brought Paul before them. This shows that there was an effort made by the Romans to give justice to Paul.

1. Paul's earnest look at the council (vv. 1, 2). This was a solicitation of their honor to give him a fair hearing, and also a look of conscious integrity and unflinching courage.

2. Paul's stern rebuke of the head of the council. "God shall smite thee, thou whitened wall." Paul shows that he had the highest respect for the office, but the man now occupying it was not worthy of it.

3. Paul's appeal to the Pharisees (vv. 6-10). Seeing that he could not get a fair hearing, and perceiving that the body before him was made up of Pharisees and Sadducees, he appealed to the Pharisees, for his preaching had something in common with their belief.

V. The Lord Stood by Paul (v. 11).
He was in great need of grace. He may have begun to question the wisdom of his going to Jerusalem, but the Lord assured him that his course was right.

VI. The Conspiracy to Kill Paul (vv. 18-22).

More than forty men banded together for the purpose of getting Paul out of the way.

The Divine Presence

Of the reality of fellowship with God every religious man is assured. Religion implies such a fellowship of love and grace on the part of God. How such a consciousness brings strength and comfort to a human heart let every one who knows the power of salvation attest.

Town Council.

At the Council Meeting held on Thursday last, the question of unemployment relief was up for consideration and the town secretary reported that the Provincial Government had acceded to the request for relief and had granted the sum of $24,000 of which the town was called upon to pay 50 p.c. of this amount.

Mayor Dobbie was dubious as to whether the Council were justified in taking action to spend $12,000 without submission to a vote of the ratepayers, Alderman Rice being also of the opinion that it was not legal and the government could not force an expenditure of the people's money.

Alderman J. B. Raymond presented a draft of work to be executed as follows :-2,500 ft.
 of 12 in. starting from present intake downward $8,750.00; 1,100 of 8 inch on Bethany Rd.
 $4,500; 400 ft. of 8 inch on Robert St. $1,250; Sewer collector going from Hamford St. to Avers Gully and discharging in North River below Ayers Dam $5,000; Upkeep of sidewalks during winter time, quarry and other improvements for balance of the $24,000.

This gave rise to further discussion in which nearly all the councillors saw the necessity of immediate action, but hesitated to make a start on the work until such time as a public meeting could be called in the Auditorium to discuss the matter, so the date of Tuesday was set and notices were issued

By 8 p.m. on Tuesday, Nov.
 17th., the Auditorium was fairly filled, but largely with majority of those seeking employment and a fair scattering of ratepayers.

Mayor Dobbie addressed the gathering which drew forth much controversy and the meeting served no good purpose as it seemed hard to arrive at any decision. Aldermen J. B. Raymond, Dr. Rodrigue and J. P.
 MacKimmie briefly spoke on the issue and later came to the opinion that an adjournment was necessary.

The Council assembled at 8 o'clock, 18th., inst., and after about an hours discussion a vote was taken on motion of John A. Rice seconded by Chas.
 Miller that the question of spending this money be put to a referendum of the people. The voting will take place on Monday and Tuesday next.

The Late Mrs. Hugh Fraser

Much expressions of regret were heard in the town when the news became known of the death of Mrs. Hugh Fraser Sr. who passed away after a few days' sickness in Montreal, on Friday last. Deceased lady was formerly Miss Matilda Douglas and was born in Bethany on the farm now occupied by the Golf Course. She had lived the greater part of her long and useful life in Lachute and vicinity removing two years ago, with her family to Montreal.
 In her early life she was greatly interested in the Girl's Hockey team work and later in Curling, and a loyal member of the Methodist now United Church. She was married to the late Hugh Fraser Sr., who predeceased her some twenty years ago. To them were born three children, Mrs. Cliff, of Kingston; and Guy and Wilbur, of Montreal, who mourn the loss of a loving mother.

The funeral service was held on Saturday evening from her late residence in Montreal, the remains being brought to La-chute for interment on Sunday afternoon, service being conducted by Rev. E. Morrison. A large number of sympathizing friends and relatives attended.

THE CAPTAIN'S WEEKLY LETTER.

Dear Boys :-

I promised you the opening chapter of the School Story "The Return of Timothy" this week and I am afraid you will be disappointed. However as Aunt Di would say "really and truly" you will have it next week and I am sure you will like it all the better for having waited so long for it.

Arthur Newton, a member of our Birthday Club, whom you remember was asking for foreign stamps to exchange with some he has duplicates of is such a keen collector that he has taken upon himself to edit a stamp corner and will write a little piece about stamps every week assisted by his brother George also a M. B. C. Look out then, those of you interested for the Foreign stamp section on our page and get in touch with Arthur at 130 Bruce St., London, Ont. For those who send him the most interesting letter before December 15th. on this subject, will receive a nice stamp album.

Now I have taken up all my space writing about stamps. Don't forget the Toy Fund for Poor Children at Christmas.

With all good wishes,

Your affectionate friend,

THE CAPTAIN.

THE STAMP CORNER

In saving stamps I have some specially good ones that I like and they are Japanese. These stamps are very pretty because they have a round circle in the centre, and the value is usually shown down in the lower corners. Maybe some of you readers don't know what that circle is supposed to represent? It represents the land of the setting sun. Should you have stamps that you are uncertain as to what Country they belong to; and you will describe them to me I will try to find out for you where they belong. Next week I will tell you something about the stamps of Finland.

Your friend,

ARTHUR NEWTON, M. B. C.

I, like my brother am interested in stamps. The stamps I like best are those of Russia. In the corner is placed the value and in the centre is a circular ring above which is shown the Crown of Royalty. The circle encloses an eagle which represents power, strength and swiftness. Because of my keenness in collecting stamps I will, with the aid of my brother, try to overcome some of your difficulties if you will write me.

Your friend,

GEORGE NEWTON, M. B. C.

WILLIE TRAVELS.

To Tokio the Capital of the Empire of Japan. There was a town here called Yeds 800 years ago, a place of no particular importance until Ota Dokwan built a great castle there in 1457. It became the headquarters of the great feudal family of Tokugawa, which for nearly 300 years was the ruling family in Japan.

When the Tokugawa fell from power the Imperial Court moved from its old Capital at Kyots to Yeds and gave the City its present name of Tokio, which means Eastern Capital. The City is frequently shaken by violent earthquakes, and in 1923, 25 square miles of the area were completely destroyed. From the Nihon-Bashi, the Bridge of Japan, all the distances in Japan are measured.

Name given next week!

THE KINDLY SNOW.

When Summer's here, with all its heat,
And sun's aglare on field and street,
I wear the thinnest things I've got,
And even then I'm much too hot.
But that's the time when all the trees
Seem not to like the tiniest breeze,
They wear the thickest clothes I've seen,
Their frilly, leafy gowns of green!
And then when winter comes I wear
My cosiest woollen clothes, and there Stand those poor trees with none at all,
They throw their leaves off in the fall!
They raise their poor, bare arms on high,
Till down there comes from out the sky
A soft, white blanket made of snow,
To keep them safe and warm, you know!

"Peter Pickle."

AUNT DI'S LETTER

How do you like Peter's Poem today? He said he thought of it when the snow fell last week, and he watched how glad the poor, naked trees seemed when the little flakes covered them so cosily.

I hope you will like what Trudy is writing this week. I forgot to tell you that both she and Peter spent part of the summer in England visiting their relatives, and so that is how they happened to go to this particular tea-party. Don't you wish you could see them, too, those sweet, clever, little chimpanzees? Well, save up your coppers, dears, and then perhaps you may sail on one of these great, big liners right across the Atlantic Ocean! Look in your maps and see what a great stretch of water it is! Then perhaps you may go to the big Zoo where Trudy and Peter spent so many happy hours, visiting all the animals and riding on donkeys, camels and elephants.

Trudy has just told me an interesting little secret about the stories she is going to write for you. She says that she is most terribly fond of TEA, and that when Peter asks her to tell him a tale, she always says:-

"Wait till after tea, Peter dear; I am so much more inspired after a cup of TEA!"

So now Peter always calls Trudy's tales "TEA-POT TALES!"

Look out for the first one next week, darlings, and now good-bye.

Your loving auntie Di.

THE CHIMPANZEES' TEA PARTY, BY TRUDY ..

I really think, out of all the jolly times we had in England, that Peter and I liked our visit to the Zoo best of all. And weren't we excited when we heard that, at 5 o'clock, real, live chimpanzees, (these are monkeys, you know, fairly large ones), were going to have a Tea-party, all to themselves.

Well, all the people, and there were so many of them, gathered round a special green lawn fenced in by iron railings. Peter and I were early, so we had a good place against the railings where we could see everything. Right in the middle of the lawn stood a little table and three chairs. On the table were three plates, some dishes containing vegetables, nuts and fruit, cut up small, and three mugs.

Then along came a keeper, leading three chimpanzees by the hands just as if they were children. They went up to the table and took their places most politely. Then the keeper fetched a big jug, and each little "chimp" held up a mug to be filled. Then the tea-party began. Did those monkeys grab the food and gobble it? No, they did not! They were more polite than some of the children were at the last party I attended, and really Peter and I had to admit that they were more polite to each other than we are sometimes! The biggest "chimp" always handed the dishes to the other two before helping himself and even passed the dish to the keeper as well. All the "chimps" ate their food daintily, and drank so carefully from their mugs that they did not spill a drop! Then when the dishes were nearly empty the biggest "chimp" was careful to pass the last bit round to the others before he thought of taking it himself. When the keeper came to fill up the mugs, each monkey held up the mug, and, to say "Thank you", each one stood on his chair, placed his hands on the keeper's shoulder, and then—kissed him! Peter and I were very amused, and the keeper did not seem to mind "monkey kisses" at all. I don't think I should like them. Would you?

Well, at last it was all over, and the dear little chimpanzees climbed off their chairs and gently trotted away with their friend, the keeper. Don't you think they were clever little animals? Mind you go to see them if you ever go to the "Old Country."

Trudy.

Above is Mick the Miller, which recently won the greyhound St. Leger at Wembley, Eng. He is reputed to be a most intelligent dog, usually rating behind his competitors until the final turn for the finishing post, when he passes them with a tremendous burst of speed. The charming little girl in the picture is Anne, daughter of Mrs Arundel H Kempton, who owns Mick the Miller.

Our Puzzle Corner

It happened that at a certain stage of the journey the Miller and Weaver sat down to a light repast. The Miller produced five loaves and the Weaver three. The Maniciple coming upon the scene asked permission to eat with them, to which they agreed. When the Maniciple had fed he laid down eight pieces of money and said with a sly smile, "Settle betwixt yourselves how the money shall be fairly divided. 'Tis a riddle for thy wits." A discussion followed, and many of the party joined in it. Some held that the Miller should receive five pieces and the Weaver three. One simple lad was ridiculed for suggesting that the Miller should receive seven and the Weaver only one. While others insisted that the money should be equally between the two. Finally it was decided to bring the question before the SPHINX. His decision was quite correct. What was it? Of course all three are supposed to have eaten equal shares of the bread. Answer next week.

I called into the Puzzle Club the other evening. Thinking I should find some weighty problem engaging the attention of its eristic members. The conversation had to do with eggs, and some tall stories were being recounted. A young "son of the soil" who evidently had much to do with poultry and their produce related the following. He said that one day he had taken a certain number of eggs to town. He sold half of them to one customer, and gave him half an egg over. He next sold a third of what he had left, and gave a third of an egg over. He then sold a fourth of the remainder, and gave a fourth of an egg over. Finally he disposed of a fifth of the remainder, and gave a fifth of an egg over. Then what he had left he divided equally among thirteen of his friends and, strange to say, he had not throughout all these transactions broken a single egg. How many eggs did he bring to town?

The answer to last week's problem is that there were 21 men in the stage army.

PROTECTION OF BUILDINGS AGAINST LIGHTNING

The Theory of Lightning Conductors.

From the point of view of the student of lightning and its effects, the facts of induced electricity are of the greatest importance. It can be demonstrated that when an electrified conductor is brought near an insulated conductor, this conductor becomes electrified, and that in such a way that the part nearest to the first body acquires electricity of opposite character to that of this initially charged body, while the more distant part of the conductor gains electrically of the same "sign" as that of the inducer. Thus we have only to bring a charged body near the gold leaf electroscope in order to make the leaves diverge. On removal of the inducer, the conductor loses its electrical properties. If however, before the inducer is removed the furthermost electricity is removed by a second conductor, then, on removal of the inducer, the electricity which was near the latter spreads itself over the conductor, leaving this charged oppositely to the inducer.

It follows from the foregoing statements that the presence of an electrified body anywhere must be accompanied by induced electrification upon other bodies which face the inducer; and since the inducer charge is of opposite sign, there is a tendency for the two charges to "jump the gap" in order to coalesce. When a certain difference of voltage between the positive and negative charges has been reached, the intervening material (such as the air) can no longer bear the strain, and electricity jumps over or through the gap to the accompaniment of sound and sometimes of light.

Thus an electrified cloud induces an electric charge of opposite sign on the earth immediately below, and if the difference of voltage is sufficiently great, electricity will jump the gap, and we call this discharge a flash of lightning. Similarly, a discharge may take place between one cloud and another. Now, it can be shown that the electrical charge on a conductor generally resides on the outer surface, and we can even speak of the density of the charge as so many units of electricity per square inch and we find that the density is influenced by the form of the surface, so that at a sharp point the density is very great, and even when the total electrification is comparatively weak, the concentration at a sharp point may be so great that the air cannot resist the effort to break down its insulating power, and so a stream of electricity may flow out continuously from a sharp point on an electrically charged conductor to neutralise the equal and opposite charge on the other side of the gap.

Lightning Conductors.

It is this easy and gentle discharge from a point that gives virtue to the elevated tapered metallic rod (when in electrical communication with the earth) as a lightning conductor. As already pointed out, the presence of an electrified cloud is accompanied by an induced electric charge on the earth below, and this induced charge will tend to concentrate on elevated sharp points such as buildings, trees, rocks or elevated metallic spires. Such an elevated spire, when in good contact with the earth, allows a steady stream of electricity to pass off from earth to cloud before, perhaps the voltage difference becomes equal to sparking intensity.

What then is lightning? To be continued next week.

Old English "Sport" of

Fox Hunting Endangered

Would England still be England, without its hunting rallies? Is this sport of centuries, the merry chase of elusive foxes, fated to die out?

It is unlikely that there is any feature of English country life so typical of the customs and traditions of the nation, as fox hunting. This being so, a recent statement of the earl of Rosebery, on accepting the mastership of the Whadden chase, that this sport is in a very critical condition, came rather as a surprise. He declared that five neighboring packs are having difficulty in finding masters, and that sportsmen must rally around now, or see fox hunting go the way of hawking. His lordship ascribed the decline to hard times and high taxation.

This might be considered bad news, even for the foxes, for from accounts of this sport that I have read, it would seem that the prey gets as much fun out of eluding the huntmen, as the latter do in the galloping pursuit. After some of these old wily masters of the craft have learned the business, their chances of becoming a mere brush are comfortably few. Why, there are even some of these old fellows who pay visits to the kennels, if the hunt is not up regularly, to see what is keeping their little playmates! At least that's the story told.—Border Cities Star.

How English Merchant of 1480 Sought Custom

One of the earliest posters ever printed in England is to be seen in the Bodleian library, and concerns a Sarum service book, printed in 1480 by Caxton. It reads as follows: "If it pleases any man spiritual or temporal to buy our pyes of two or three commemorations of Salisbury Use, emprinted after the form of this preste's letre, whiche ben wel and truly correct, late hym come to Westmonester into the almonestrye at the reed pole, and he shall have them good and chepe." The manner of presentation is somewhat unimpressive. The goods advertised belonged to the Middle Ages, which were fast dying. But a new force had been let loose, which in the course of the next century was to revolutionize not only the art of advertising, but the whole of European culture.

Famous English Potter

Josiah Wedgwood was born on July 12, 1730. He was the youngest son of a potter and came of a family of which members had been notable potters in Staffordshire, England. Soon after the death of his father in 1759 he became skilled in the art of shaping pottery on the wheel. In 1753 he became manager of a small pottery. In 1760 he began work on his own account in the Ivy house pottery at Burslem. Salt glaze and green and yellow glaze seem to have been his first staples. However, the fine white English earthenware was just reaching perfection and Wedgwood became one of its best known makers. He presented a service of his ware to Queen Charlotte in 1762 and was appointed potter to the queen and later to the king. He next turned his attention to artistic pottery and reproduced designs based on the later phases of Greek art.

Dog's Warning of Death

While there is a very common superstition that dogs by their wailing can prognosticate death, this cannot be given as a fact, any more than other superstitions. A writer in Chambers' Book of Days, mentioning that the howling of a dog at night under the windows of a sick room is looked upon as a warning of death's being near, adds: "Perhaps there may be some truth in this notion. Everybody knows the peculiar odor which frequently precedes death and it is possible that the acute nose of the dog may perceive this and that it may render him uneasy."

Old Dishes Still Popular

Peacock tongues and humming bird wings may have lost their place on the festive English menu, but medieval dishes still play their part in the true English observance of Lent. In hamlets throughout the shires eating fried peas is a time-honored tradition on Castering Sunday, the fifth in Lent.

Shamrock cakes are eaten in Shropshire and Herefordshire on Midlent or Mothering Sunday, the fourth Sunday in Lent, and in Westmoreland ayvers or havers are the rule of that day. Pancakes are in order on Shrove Tuesday and on every successive Tuesday during the Lenten season.

What Is Success?

He has achieved success who has lived well, laughed often, and loved much; who has gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of little children; who has filled his niche and accomplished his task, whether by an improved poppy, a perfect poem, or a rescued soul; who has never lacked appreciation of earth's beauty or failed to express it; who has always looked for the best in others and given the best he had; whose life was an inspiration and whose memory a benediction.—Exchange.

Golf and Geography

The scholars of a Pacific coast school have built an ingenious miniature golf course which is at the same time an instructor of geography. The various links represent different parts of the country and their products, which is impressed upon the minds of the players as they make the rounds.

Street Lighting

At this period of the year it is a matter of importance that Municipalities should ensure good and satisfactory lighting of all streets within their jurisdiction.

Apart from increasing the safety of motorists and pedestrians there are many other reasons why this matter should receive serious attention. Nothing creates a bad impression more quickly to the mind of a visitor than to enter a badly lit town or city—especially as he passes through the residential area, before reaching down town. The Business Section has proved over and over again to the Municipal Authorities that the lavish use of Electricity is good advertising and flood lights in tall buildings is a case in point.

A well-known Judge has remarked that he accounts for the large amount of Juvenile Crime to darkened streets and while we may not feel inclined to entirely agree with this statement, there is certainly enough truth in it to make us think.

Finally we would urge that the Authorities go carefully into this question and where improvement is necessary carry on with the good work. There are not a few streets in our locality which could well do with a few more lamps. Perhaps that is the reason why the text of the sermon in our Church last Sunday was "Lighten our Darkness we beseech Thee O Lord."

Water

When one comes to think of it there is quite an amazing amount of indifference in the attitude of the Citizens towards the question of Water, that is until he comes to the moment for paying the tax.

Though water is perhaps the most common necessity of life, it is at the same time the most important. The health of a city depends on an adequate supply of good water at all times.

When we read that water is running short and care has to be taken it makes us wonder if we have changed our position geographically on the world's surface.

Many of us are inclined to think that the secret of the trouble is Wastage, and it is well known that thousands of dollars are spent which could be saved to the community, by a proper system of regulating supply and demand.

Of the three classes who are consumers of water—Individual, Industrial and Municipal, the last mentioned could well set the others an example of careful checking up and prevention of wastage so that in any case of emergency, a sufficient supply of good water is at all times available.

The scheme to send a certain number of English public school boys to Canada to finish their education at Canadian Universities has already borne fruit. The Anglo-Canadian Educational Committee (which was formed to put the idea into practice) is to be congratulated on its success in sending thirty-two boys out to Canadian Universities in this, the first year of working the scheme. Of these, nineteen are going to McGill, three to Toronto, eight to Queens, and one each to British Columbia University and the Ontario Agricultural College. The work of sending these boys to Canada has been undertaken in the belief that thereby Canada might gain useful citizens who would strengthen the ties between the Dominion and the Old Country, and also that by the association of boys of different educational and social backgrounds the educational life of both English and Canadian boys might be enriched. The English Committee has succeeded in arranging that several existing British scholarships should be made tenable at Canadian Universities, while the Canadian Committee has assisted in arranging for some scholarships from that end. The idea is so admirable that both countries will feel pleasure in the success of the movement, and will, be believe, benefit through it.

"Her Own Money"

Proves Great Success

Sidelights into the inner workings of married life were told in truth by the members of St. Simeon's Guild as they put on their play "Her Own Money" to a crowded audience in the Lachute Auditorium on Friday evening last.

Never a more realistic play was enacted and the morals it bore will surely cause a genuine shake up in the homes represented, for the lessons, though jocularly taught, were forcibly driven home and the old Proverb that "There's many a true word spoken in jest" was given its full meaning.

It was a three act comedy in which all members of the cast played their part to perfection.

The first act opened with a homey little sitting-room in a New York Apartment House at which Mrs. Aldem was checking up bills disputing with her swarthy dusky maid Martha, who though unable to read was able to convince her mistress that her accounting was alright by drawings representing the meals procured. Her sister Mildred coming home early from office finds Mary Aldem in trouble over money matters and fails to understand why she should be always skimping. Mary with a few pointed remarks puts her off and during the conversation an admirer of Mildred's, Mr. Hazelton, a real estate agent, walks in to tell Mr. Aldem about a deal he had heard of. Mrs. Aldem has a great desire to live in a country house and notwithstanding her husband's wish to live in town, is bent on saving, in the hope of one day owning her own home. Hazelton invites Mildred out to dinner and makes a proposal to her placing a ring on her finger. A neighbor of theirs, Mrs. Beecher, who is always in trouble, runs in to borrow $3.00 in order to pay a bill for which her husband had already given her the money, but which had been spent for something else. After the arrival of Mr. Aldem, his friend the real estate agent tells him of the trouble that has arisen through the failures of a client to pay for a deal in property and around this the story hinges.

Aldem must have money and requires $2,000 to complete the deal and it seems impossible to raise it. His wife has the money which she has saved but rather than lend it herself, gives it to Mr. Beecher to lend her husband and Mr. Hazelton also donates some $800. The next day the news comes that the situation has been saved and Mr. Aldem returns the money with interest added. However while cheques are being passed between Mr. Beecher and Mr. Aldem, Mrs. Beecher, who is a very exacting and jealous woman gets her suspicions aroused and insists on getting to the bottom of it all with the result that Mr. Aldem is so hurt over his wife's action that they separate and Mrs. Aldem goes with her sister and Rhoda to live in the little home of her dreams. A year passes and her husband returns, full of desire to right the wrongs, but she refuses until as he turns to go, love overcomes and she runs after him, leaving Mildred and Mr. Hazelton (who had accompanied the erring husband) clasped in each others arms, proving that although money counts, love is greater than all.

It goes without saying that Mrs. Leggett who took the part of Mary Aldem could not possibly have been improved and Mr. Taylor ably sustained the part of her dutiful better half. Miss Marshall and Chas. Henderson were most realistic in their portrayal of the young lovers, while Miss J. Valpy and H. Stansfield played a most difficult role, entirely foreign to their nature, for squabbling is really not in their make up, but Mrs. George Deacon as the colored servant drew many laughs. The dialect was never forgotten and she proved a real mirth-maker.

The careful coaching of the players by Principal Hall was largely responsible for its great success. The sum of $207. was the appreciable amount taken at the door.

The staging effects throughout were very prettily arranged, thanks being due to Messrs. Stansfield and Maiden who spent much time in their fixing.

The St. Simeon's Players wish to express their appreciation to the P. T. Legaré Company, for furniture loaned, which helped to make the stage layout very effective.

One oftentimes hears the Slogan of "Safety First" and especially is this being used in our large institutions where the finding of better ways has become one of the worlds newest and greatest studies. In many of our factories there are men studying means of protection against accidents, analyzing mishaps and devising ways of preventing their recurrence. The seeking of safety is not alone for the dollars and cents but rather than the human element has entered into the undertaking and a genuine endeavor is being made to see what can be done to prevent accidents in their operations.

One of the human factors which needs to be considered in the present crisis of unemployment is the preserving of the workers self-respect by furnishing him with the chance of earning rather than receiving charity. A job be it ever so menial, that calls for the expenditure of one's energy and which yields some financial recompense is better than an order for free groceries etc. There are very many odd jobs that could well give employment and there is much in the argument put up by Alderman J. B. Raymond that we may put a quarry to good use this winter as we have the crusher and other appliances.

The announcement from the League of Nations Council that some 50 governments had declared a truce in armament construction for one year is another step in the great desire for world peace. A number of governments made their acceptance on reciprocity which had been achieved. This is heralded as a good augury for disarmament in Conference in February.

Mr. Douglas Rodger of Lachute Road, left on Thursday to visit the Royal Agricultural Winter Fair at Toronto. We understand he has a prize winning heifer in the fair.

There was a good attendance at the meeting of the Women's Institute at Mrs. L. M. Hooker's on Friday. Miss McCain of Macdonald College, spoke on Institute work and gave a demonstration of First Aid.

The Reading Circle met on Thursday evening at Mr. W. J. Pitcairns and Col. Hooker gave them an interesting talk on "Armistice Day" and the present problems of war and peace. Plans were made for an illustrated lecture on Canadian Scenery and Recreations to be given in the United Church, Nov. 28th. It is expected that this will be a very interesting and informative entertainment. The slide show kindly been loaned by the Department of the Interior.

The Sale of Work and Home Cooking and the Afternoon Tea given by the ladies of Christ Church Women's Auxiliary, at the Town Hall, St. Andrews E., last Saturday, was a pleasant and successful event. The Concert in the evening, put on by Mr. Alan Murray and the Sun Life Dramatic Club was well patronized and brought out a good audience. To the regret of all present, Mr. Alan Murray developed an attack of laryngitis at the very opening of the programme and was quite unable to take any of his numbers. Needless to say his help was greatly missed all through the evening. However the other members of the Dramatic Club did all they could to fill in the vacancy. They rendered their individual parts very efficiently and the principal sketch in the programme, entitled "The Valiant", was a wonderful performance. Mr. Matheson's interpretation of the title role was exceptionally brilliant. Altogether the programme was varied and excellent, and the financial results most satisfactory.

Town Planning and Recreation in Canada

A. G. Dalzell, M.E.I.C., President of the Town Planning Institute of Canada.

The City of Toronto is the second city in Canada as measured by population. Montreal, with a larger population, was incorporated two years earlier than Toronto, which will celebrate its centenary in 1934. Montreal however, was founded on a much older settlement of almost entirely French people, and the early plans of the city do not indicate any appreciation of the need to reserve areas of land for recreational purposes.

The town of York, which preceded by only a few years the city of Toronto, in its earliest plan showed the reservation of two large squares for public purposes, though these were later used as sites for educational and administrative purposes, and are not to-day in the public domain. A plan of the city soon after incorporation does show two other squares for public use, and both remain to the present day as public parks. This plan also shows that it was intended to reserve the water front on the north shore of the harbour as a promenade and pleasure ground. This land was however, also alienated in later years, though most has had to be repurchased to carry out harbour improvements. A plan of the city dated 1842 shows the influence of British and particularly English settlement, because it indicates that a large area of land, immediately south and west of the present Queen's Park, was used as a St. Leger race course and cricket ground.

In 1843 the first races associated with the Toronto Hunt Club, were run at Lansing, seven miles north of the city and ever since the Club has been a distinct feature of the social and recreational life of the citizens of Toronto. Probably the same lovers of horses were responsible for the establishment of race-courses within the city, and two exist at the present time within the city limits, and two immediately adjacent to the city, and the race for the King's Plate is one of the social functions of the year. Though race-courses involve the use of large areas of land, their presence within a city has not involved the planning problems that cemeteries have created. In Toronto the dead have caused more complexing town planning problems than the quick.

In later years Toronto has been fortunate in securing large areas of land for park purposes the gift of private citizens, and owns two such donated parks outside the city limits.

The city of Winnipeg which only recently gave way to the city of Vancouver as the third city in Canada was founded in 1876, also on a settlement made by French Canadians. Its plan has been in part influenced by the subdivision of land into river lots, as common in Quebec; but before the city was incorporated in 1876 the Dominion Government had adopted for the purpose of land settlement the subdivision of land into rectangular townships, as before adopted in the United States. The section of one square mile, and the quarter section of 160 acres, with the road allowances pertaining thereto, has had a dominating influence on the plan of the city of Winnipeg and all prairie cities. This influence has extended even into British Columbia where the systems of surveys by townships does not prevail, and the city of Vancouver has a plan corresponding in many ways to a prairie city, though not so consistently uniform.

Unfortunately in all the plans of towns and cities of Western Canada the provision of land for public purposes, and particularly for recreation, was not given consideration. Vancouver owes its incomparable Stanley Park of 1000 acres, not to the appreciation of land for such a purpose, but because it was reserved for naval and military purposes.

In an issue of September 20th last, the "Vancouver Province," usually regarded as the leading and most moderate paper in British Columbia, had an editorial on "The Land and the People." In this editorial mainly directed towards the difficulty of placing land hungry people onto small holdings, the writer says,—

What is the difficulty? Why, that British Columbia is not really interested in land settlement, has no land settlement policy and never had. We have been a province of exploitation, never a province in which settlement and home-making have been systematically and honestly encouraged. We have had land policies, of course, land speculating policies, land selling policies, townsite policies. Land has been regarded as a pawn in the commercial game, never as the real basis of our growth and prosperity.

The policy of subdivision of land for urban use in great parts of Canada has been to sell the greatest amount of land to the greatest number of people at the greatest possible price. The effect on the use of land for public recreation can be shown by stating that it has cost the citizens of Vancouver to secure eight acres of land for small recreation grounds; from land which less than fifty years ago was sold by the Crown at One dollar an acre, than it cost the citizens of London, the capital of the Empire, to purchase eighty acres of land within the five mile zone, from land which was alienated from the crown more than 300 years ago.

The policies of the past served their purpose very effectively, but that purpose was not community welfare. The ultimate effect is shown by the fact that in British Columbia the Government is in possession of nearly three million acres for non-payment of taxes, and that some prairie cities have also one-third of the land within municipal limits confiscated for the same reason. There is, however, this saving feature that the opportunity is now presented to adopt entirely new policies, and that by means of public education such as this Congress affords, the people may come to see that public welfare depends on the proper use of land, and that one such use is adequate space for healthy recreation. There is some evidence that this is already partly realized, but time will not permit to record the steps that have already been taken towards better methods.

Scientific city planning will facilitate recreation because it will prevent the waste of land in unnecessary streets and street development, and the inefficiency which results from making streets of a standard width regardless of their purpose. Present systems are quite unsuitable to an age of motor vehicles. In some cities all streets leading in one direction are so cut up by intersections that a motor vehicle travelling at 20 miles an hour crosses the centre of two such intersections every six seconds. This is both unsatisfactory to the motorist, and a great hazard to children on their way to school and playground, and if playgrounds are to be used, and to serve their purpose, the approach to them must be safe. The future of healthy recreation in Canada is bound up with city planning, and the present day calls for new policies and bold methods, but the country waits for leadership.

Later in the evening a Banquet was held in honor of the event at which most inspiring addresses were given suiting the occasion.

A good representation was present from Lachute, Brownsburg and Grenville.

MARK SPOT OF LOCKS AT GRENVILLE

The Canadian National Historic Sites of the National Parks Branch of Department of Interior at Ottawa, has just completed a monument in the park at Grenville, Que., to commemorate the first locks constructed on Long Sault canal at Grenville. They are also building similar monuments at Carillon and Lachine. The monument is constructed of cut granite stone, 7 feet square at base, 11 feet high and tapers to 2 ft. square at the top. There is a bronze tablet on the face with the following in French and English, "Commission des Sites et Des Monuments Historiques du Canada. Grenville Canal designed and constructed by Royal engineers. Commenced in 1819 and completed in 1833. Enlarged from 1871 to 1882. One of the canals which by way of St. Lawrence and the Ottawa Rideau and Catarague rivers connect Montreal and Ottawa. General Cruikshanks and Judge Demers, of Montreal, were instrumental in having these monuments erected in the province of Quebec and similar ones in Ontario. S. O. Roberts is the engineer in charge of erection of the monument at Grenville and Carillon.

The monuments are being erected throughout Canada to commemorate chief historical points.

Thought She Was a Wise Girl

By RUBY GRUBER

"WILL you go with me to the Senior Charity Ball?" Bill Wayne asked the pretty little blond girl seated by his side. They were devouring a sundae special at the corner drug store just off the campus.

"I should love to go with you, but I promised Howard last night." She raised her big blue eyes. "You see, . . . I am engaged to Howard Dickson."

"Engaged? Why—you can't do that, Jerry! You are the only reason I ever come to this darned college—and you know it."

"I do know it! But, nevertheless, I am going to marry the sedate and studious Howard Dickson!"

"Gee, if I had known—!"

"You never would have bought our lower forty acres back on the farm, so I could go to college," Jerry interrupted. "It was mighty sweet of you that day when you won two thousand at the races and came right over and gave daddy a thousand!"

"Well! The remaining thousand is just about gone. How's yours holding out?"

"It's gone," Jerry Blair admitted. "But I must run now, Billy."

Bill and a red-headed girl were swaying to the low whine of the saxophones when Jerry and Howard came into the dance that night. Over the flaming head, he watched the little figure of the straight-shouldered Jerry.

She wore a plain little nondescript evening gown of pale yellow satin, but on her shoulder rested two exquisite orchids. Bill glared at the smug, condescending Howard; so awfully correct, in his nonchalant, gentlemanly way. His dark hair so smooth, and his assurance so very personally egotistic.

The next day, as Bill Wayne strolled across the campus, Jerry dashed after him. Catching up with him she fondly slipped a slim arm under his, and snuggled close to his waist.

"Say, what's the big idea? Or is this just sisterly affection?"

"I'm not going to marry Howard. Judge for yourself!" Jerry smiled happily up at him.

"What's wrong?"

"Nothing, Bill. I'm trying to tell you—I don't want to marry anyone—but you," she added, mischievously. "Don't you love me, after the hundreds of times you have told me you did?"

"Of course I do. Let's get off the campus, so I can show you just how much I do love you." He seized her hand, and pulled her along.

"But, my English class!" objected Jerry.

"What do you care about English? We're going back to God's own country where no one cares how you speak. It's what you say that counts back home!"

"It will seem good to be back, won't it? Dad and mother will be tickled to death to see us."

"I'm going to get my job in Lem Stevens' feed store," he said. "Lem said I could always come back when I left him to trail off to college with you."

"The old high school education was enough for a couple of hicks like us wasn't it, darling?" Jerry asked, happily. "You still have the forty acres that Dad sold you haven't you?"

"Sure. But we aren't going to live out there. We will stay in Fremont, and I'll work at the feed store."

"When will we start home?" practical Jerry asked.

"Say! I've got an idea; let's get married and surprise them!"

Jerry was thoughtful for a few moments. It would be a good idea. Her mind reviewed the letter she had found waiting for her from her mother as she returned from the dance last night.

"Daughter dear:

"It seems we are the unluckiest folks in the world. Pa scraped enough money together to get the oil men out here but they say we ain't got any oil on the home place. But the lower forty, that he sold Bill Wayne, is full of it."

"I get so tired of it all I don't care to go on. Write when you can."

Your Mother."

So Jerry decided to marry Bill, and let him find out for himself about the oil.

They were married, and went to their rooms to pack.

That evening, Jerry stood by the train case. Bill Wayne was late. The hands of the big clock pointed to three minutes before train time. Angrily, she tossed her trim little slipper. Tardiness was just one of the many faults of the slouching Bill Wayne—but, oil was money, and his land had oil!

With a sigh of relief, she saw him walking hurriedly toward her: a wide smile on his handsome, ruddy face, and two great long green tickets in his hand.

With wonderment, she watched him. The tickets to Fremont were small white cardboards; a mere two hours' ride on the train. Bill was before her. "Take a look at this, Mrs. William Wayne—Niagara Falls for two!" He proudly held forth the tickets for inspection. "I just pulled off a great stroke of finance—big business deal—we can go places and see things!"

"What do you mean, Bill?"

"I just sold the lower forty to Howard Dickson for $3,000 cash. How's that for profit?"

Young British Grocers See Canada

Six clever young British grocers who won trips to Canada offered as prizes by the Trade Publicity Bureau of Canada's Department of Trade and Commerce arrived at Quebec Friday on the Canadian Pacific liner Duchess of Atholl. They are shown above on the deck of the ship with (centre) Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Y. Beechings who are in charge of the party. Their itinerary includes Sherbrooke, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, London and Niagara Falls. Their names are W. Woodhouse, Y. Howarth, L. Stutard, A. Skelhorn, H. Boardman and A. Hicks.

FAIL TO APPEAR and BAIL IS FORFEITED

The smart capture of four alleged pickpockets during the ceremonies connected with the opening of the Perley Bridge recently was a tribute to the Provincial Police engaged for the occasion. It will be remembered that complaint was made that a man had lost his wallet, and the police kept an eye open for suspicious characters. They located a car in which the chauffeur sat through the afternoon, parked near the church, and watch was kept on this. When three men got into it and started to drive away, four motor-cyclist police gave chase. They caught up with the car before it had left town, and with two motor police on either side of it, one of the provincial constables jumped on the running board of the car, while in motion, his motor-cycle being guided along by the constable riding the second bicycle. As the police ordered the car stopped the man in the front seat was, it is stated, handing money to those in the back seat. They were placed under arrest and taken to the county jail at L'Orignal to face a charge of picking pockets. A considerable sum of money was found in the possession of the accused. The men arrested did not show up for trial and their bail of $2,000 was forfeited & warrants taken out for their arrest. Their chauffeur returned for the car but he was re-arrested and allowed out without the car on another $1,000 bail. He returned recently before Judge O'Brian at L'Orignal, and was committed for trial on December 8th. and was refused bail by the judge.

The late Dr. G. Archambault.

The death took place in the Notre Dame Hospital on Sunday evening last of Dr. Gustave Archambault, 544 Sherbrooke street east, at the age of 48. Dr. Archambault was a well-known medical practitioner in the city and during the war, acted with distinction as second in command of the Laval No. 6, General Hospital in France. For his services there, he was created a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour and an Officer of the Academy. Born in Montreal, Dr. Archambault was a son of Dr. Gaspar Archambault and was educated at St. Mary's College. At Laval University he graduated in medicine in 1905 and going to Paris to continue his studies, remained there for four years. On returning to Montreal, he specialized in the treatment of skin diseases and was in charge of the University clinic. He was a consulting physician in the St. Jean de Dieu Hospital and at the Bruchesi Institute;

he was a member of the Provincial Council of Hygiene and of many medical societies.

In 1915 he joined the Laval Hospital unit of the C.A.M.C., and served until 1919, his unit being attached to the French army.

He was a member of the Reform Club, the St. Denis Club, the Cercle Universitaire and the Laval Golf Club.

He is survived by his widow, formerly Miss Fernande Lemay, daughter of Mr. J. D. Lemay of Lachute, one son Claude and four brothers.

The Lost is Found

Nita was worried . . . she could not imagine where she had lost her bracelet—in the hotel or on the journey home.

"I can't think what I could have done with it," she kept telling her mother.

"Why not telephone to the hotel," mother suggested. "It's after eight-thirty now and a call will only cost a few cents."

Imagine Nita's joy when the hotel clerk told her that the bracelet had been found in her room and would be mailed to her right away.

Thanks to her mother's suggestion, Nita's anxiety was relieved at once . . . and the cost of the call was considerably less than her taxi fare from the station.

Station-to-station ("anyone") calls between 7.00 p.m. and 8.30 p.m. local time are on the low evening rate. Between 8.30 p.m. and 4.30 a.m. they are on the "night rate" basis and still lower.

Sight Unseen

"I am not aware—" I began stiffly. "I have always believed that I furnished to the Neighborhood Club its only leaven of humor."

"Don't spoil it," she begged. "Don't. If you could know how I have enjoyed it. All afternoon I have been chuckling. The fire-tongs, Horace. The fire-tongs!"

Then I knew that my wife had been to Mrs. Dane and I drew a long breath. "I assure you," I said gravely, "that while doubtless, I carried the wretched things home and—er—placed them where they were found, I have not the slightest recollection of it. And it is hardly amusing is it?"

"Amusing!" she cried. "It's delicious. It has made me a young woman again. Horace, if I could have seen your wife's face when she found them. I would give cheerfully almost anything I possess."

But underneath her mirth I knew there was something else. And, after all, she could convince my wife if she were convinced herself.

I told her of the visit Sperry and I had made the night Arthur Wells was shot, and of what we discovered: of the clerk at the pharmacy and his statement, and, last of all, of my experience in the deserted house.

She was very serious when I finished. Tea came, but we forgot to drink it. Her eyes flashed with excitement, her faded face flushed. And with it all, as I look back, there was an air of suppressed excitement that seemed to have nothing to do with my narrative. I remembered it, however, when the denouncement came the following week.

She was a remarkable woman. Even then she knew, or strongly suspected, the thing that the rest of us had missed the X of the equation. But I think it only fair to record that she was in possession of facts which we did not have, and which she did not divulge until the end.

"You have been so ungenerous with me," she said finally, "that I am tempted not to tell you why I sent for you. Of course, I know I am only a helpless old woman, and you men are people of affairs. But now and then I have a flash of intelligence. I'm going to tell you, but you don't deserve it."

She went down into the black silk bag at her side which was as much a part of her attire as the false front she wore with such carelessness, and which brown in color and indifferently covered, was invariably parting from its mooring. She drew out a newspaper clipping.

"On going over Clara's notes," she said, I came to the conclusion, last Tuesday, that the matter of the missing handbag and the letters was important. More important, probably, than the mere record shows. Do you recall the note of distress in Miss Jeremy's voice? It was almost a wail."

I had noticed it. "I have plenty of time to think," she added, not without pathos. "There is only one Monday night in the week, and—the days are long. It occurred to me to try to trace that bag."

"In what way?" "How does any one trace lost articles?" she demanded. "By advertising, of course. Last Wednesday I advertised for the bag."

I was too astonished to speak. "I reasoned like this: If there was no such bag, there was no harm done. As a matter of fact, if there was no such bag, the chances were that we were all wrong, anyhow. If there was such a bag, I wanted it. Here is the advertisement as I inserted it."

She gave me a small newspaper cutting: "Lost, a handbag containing private letters, car-tickets, etc. Liberal reward paid for its return. Please write to A. 31, the Daily News."

I sat with it on my palm. It was so simple, so direct. And I, a lawyer and presumably acute, had not thought of it!

"You are wasted on us, Mrs. Dane," I acknowledged. "Well I see something has come of it."

"Yes, but I'm not ready for it."

She dived again into the bag, and brought up another clipping.

"On the day that I had that inserted," she said impressively "this also appeared. They were in the same column." She read the second clipping aloud, slowly, that I might gain all its significance:

"Lost on the night of Monday, November the second, between State Avenue and Park Avenue, possibly on an Eastern Line street car, a black handbag containing keys, car-tickets, private letters, and a small sum of money. Reward and no questions asked if returned to Daily News Office."

She passed the clipping to me and I compared the two. It looked strange, and I confess to a tingling feeling that coincidence, that element so much to be feared in any investigation, was not the solution here. But there was such a chance, and I spoke of it.

"Coincidence rubbish!" she retorted. "I am not through, my friend."

She went down into the bag again and I expected less than the pocketbook, letters and all, to appear. But she dragged up among a miscellany of articles women like to carry, an envelope.

"Yesterday," she said, "I took a taxicab ride. You know my chair gets tiresome, occasionally so I stopped at the newspaper office and found the bag had not been turned in, but that there was a letter for A. 31." She held out the envelope to me.

"Read it," she observed. It is a curious human document. You'll probably be no wiser for reading it, but it shows one thing: we are on the track of something."

I have the letter before me now. It is written on glazed paper, ruled with blue lines. The writing is of the flowing style we used to call Spencerian and if it lacks character, I am inclined to believe that its weakness is merely the result of infrequent use of a pen.

You know who this is from. I have the bag and the letters in a safe place. If you would treat me like a human being you could have them. I know where the walking-stick is, also. I have no wish to do her any harm. She will have to pay up in the next world, even if she gets off in this. The way I reason is this: As long as I have the things, I've got the whiphand. I've got you, too, although you may think I haven't.

About the other matter I was innocent. I swear it again. I never did it. You are the only one in all the world. I would rather be dead than go on like this.

It is unsigned.

I stared from the letter to Mrs. Dane. She was watching me, her face grave and rather sad.

"You and I, Horace," she said, "live our orderly lives. We eat, and sleep, and talk, and even labor. We think we are living. But for the last day or two I have been seeing visions—you and I and the rest of us, living on the surface, and underneath, carefully kept down so it will not make us uncomfortable, a world of passion and crime and violence and suffering. That letter is a tragedy."

But if she had any suspicion then as to the writer, and I think she had not, she said nothing, and soon after I started for home.

In one way, Mrs. Johnson's refusal to speak to me that evening had a certain value, for it enabled me to leave the house without explanation and thus to discover that if an overcoat had been left in place of my own, it had been taken away. It also gave me an opportunity to return the fire-tongs, a proceeding which I had considered would assist in a return of the entente cordiale at home, but which most unjustly appeared to have exactly the opposite effect.

It has been my experience, that the most innocent action may under certain circumstances assume an appearance of extreme guilt.

By Saturday the condition of affairs between my wife and myself remained in statu quo, and I had decided on a bold step. This was to call a special meeting of the Neighborhood Club without Miss Jeremy, and put before them the situation as it stood at that time with a view to formulating a future course of action, and also of publicly vindicating myself before my wife.

In deference to Herbert Robinson's recent attack of influenza, we met at the Robinson house. Sperry himself wheeled Mrs. Dane over and made a speech.

"We have called this meeting," he said, "to determine whether the Neighborhood Club as a body wishes to go on with the investigation, or to stop where we are."

He paused, but, as no one spoke, he went on again. "It is really not as simple as that," he said. "To stop now, in view of the evidence we intend to place before the Club, is to leave in all our minds certain suspicions that may be entirely unjust. On the other hand, to go on is very possible to place us all in a position where to keep silent is to be an accessory after crime."

He then proceeded, in orderly fashion, to review the entire situation up to then.

Mrs. Dane then read and explained the two clippings and the letter, and the situation, so far as it had developed, was before the Club.

Where we to go on, or to stop?

We broke into animated discussion. The letter to A. 31 was the rock on which all our theories foundered, and the message the governess had sent to Charlie Ellingham not to come to the Wells house that night. By no stretch of rather excited imaginations could we imagine Ellingham writing such a letter. Who had written the letter, then and for whom was it meant?

As to the telephone message, it seemed to preclude the possibility of Ellingham's having gone to the house that night. But the fact remained that a man, as yet unidentified, was undoubtedly concerned in the case, had written the letter, and had probably been in the Wells house that night I went there alone.

In the end, we decided to hold one more seance, and then unless the further developments were such that we must go on to let the affair drop.

That my wife had felt a certain bitterness toward Miss Jeremy, and jealousy of her powers, even of her youth, had not dawned on me. But when on Sunday in her new humility, she suggested that we call on the medium that afternoon, I realized that, in her own way, she was making a sort of atonement.

Miss Jeremy was out riding with Sperry, but arrived shortly after we got there. Sperry was glad to see us.

It was not hard to see how things were with him. He helped the girl out of her wraps with a manner that was almost proprietary and drew a chair for her close to the small fire which hardly affected the chill of the room.

Sperry looked at the girl and smiled.

"Shall I tell them?" he said.

"I want very much to have them know."

He stood up, and with that unconscious drama which actuates a man at a crisis in his affairs, he put a hand on her shoulder. "This young lady is going to marry me," he said. "We are very happy today."

My wife, to my surprise, kissed the girl.

Tea was brought in by Hawkins!

I knew him immediately but he did not at once see me. He was evidently accustomed to seeing Sperry there, and he did not recognize my wife. But when he had put down the tray and turned to pick up Sperry's overcoat to carry it into the hall, he saw me. The man actually started. I cannot say that he changed color. He was always a pale, anemic-looking individual. But it was a perceptible instant before he stooped and gathered up the coat.

THE TWO GREATEST NAMES IN GASOLINE UNITE TO GIVE CANADIANS THE WORLD'S FINEST MOTOR FUEL
CYCLO-ETHYL

To the supreme quality of Cyclo Motor Fuel there has now been added Ethyl, the celebrated "no-knock" fluid. Ethyl Fluid is not a gasoline—it is a scientifically developed ingredient, which, added to gasoline, takes out the knock that develops under high compression. Cyclo gasoline is the world's finest motor fuel, and developed by an exclusive process. Its superiority has long been acknowledged. Can you wonder, then, that the addition of Ethyl fluid to Cyclo gasoline has resulted in a motor fuel—CYCLO-ETHYL—that we confidently believe will open a new era of engine performance.

THE NEW WINTER GRADE MARATHON
"BLUE" GASOLINE

From now on you will find at all Red Indian Stations and dealers a newly developed Winter Grade of MARATHON "BLUE." The use of MARATHON "BLUE" this winter will make for quick starting and a shorter warming-up period.

This winter grade MARATHON "BLUE" is extra in everything but price.

Extra starting power—extra anti-knock quality—extra fast pick-up—extra miles per gallon, and all at the price of ordinary gasoline.

3 cups rolled oats
2 1/2 cups flour
3 teaspoons Magic Baking Powder
1/2 cup milk
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 cup brown sugar
1/2 cup butter
1/2 cup lard

Put rolled oats into a bowl. Sift flour, baking powder and salt together; add to oats. Melt butter and lard, add to dry mixture with milk. Mix all together; roll, cut with round cutter and bake in moderate oven.

Fill with following mixture: 1 pound chopped dates, 1 cup brown sugar, 1 cup hot water. Cook well and put between cookies.

Or finish cookies as illustrated. Have filling ready when you make cookie dough; when cookies are shaped with small cutter, cut centres from half the round, place a spoonful of the thick date filling on uncut rounds, put the open ones over the filling, pinch edges together well and bake at moderate heat.

LESSON-SERMON ON "SOUL AND BODY"

Among the passages comprising the Lesson-Sermon for Nov. 22nd., morning and evening, in all Christian Science Churches are the following from the Bible: (11 Corinthians 5: 1) "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." (Psalms 84:4) "Blessed are they that dwell in thy house: they will be still praising thee."
The Lesson-Sermon also comprises the following citation from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "Man's Privilege at this supreme moment is to prove the words of our Master: 'If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death.' To divest thought of false trusts and material evidences in order that the spiritual facts of being may appear, this is the great attainment by means of which we shall sweep away the false and give place to the true. Thus we may establish in truth the temple, or body, 'whose builder and maker is God.' (page 428 lines 6-14).

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

PAUL IN ROME

GOLDEN TEXT—I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 25:1-12; 25:16-31

PRIMARY TOPIC—Paul in the Great City of the World.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Paul's Life-long Ambition Fulfilled.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Prisoner Proclaims the Gospel in Rome.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Paul's Ministry in the World's Capital.

1. Paul Appeals to Caesar (25:1-12). In order to appreciate this action on the part of Paul it is well to get a synthetic grasp of the experiences which forced him to make this appeal.

1. His trial before Felix (Acts 24). The officials of the Sanhedrin were represented by Tertullus, a Roman barrister. He brought a fourfold charge against Paul:

a. A pestilent fellow (v. 5).
b. An inciter of rebellion (v. 5).
c. The ringleader of a sect (v. 5).
d. A profaner of the temple (v. 6).

To this charge Paul replied in a clear and dignified manner, setting forth the facts of his life, and demanded that his adversaries bring proof of their accusation. Felix was greatly moved by Paul's testimony concerning Christ, but postponed decision, expecting to receive a bribe from Paul.

2. Trial before Festus (25:1-12). Festus was the successor of Felix. Two years had elapsed, but the Jewish hatred had not abated. Paul's foes in Jerusalem sought to have him brought there for trial, intending to lie in wait and kill him on the way. Festus, willing to please the Jews, proposed to send him to Jerusalem for trial. For this Paul rebuked him, declaring that he very well knew that he was innocent. Seeing that it was impossible to get justice at the hands of Festus, he made use of his right as a Roman citizen and appealed to Caesar. Festus was taken by surprise and found himself in an embarrassing position, as he was unable to explain to Caesar as to why an innocent man should go to Rome for trial.

3. Trial before Agrippa (25:13-26:32). This was occasioned by the visit to Festus of Agrippa and Bernice. Upon their arrival, Festus told them of his perplexity. Therefore, they expressed a desire to hear Paul. Paul gladly made his defense before them and appealed to them to accept Christ.

11. Paul's Journey to Rome (27:1-44). 1. The ship (v. 6). It was in a vessel of Alexandria sailing from Myra to Italy.

2. The company (vv. 2, 37). Two of Paul's friends, Aristarchus and Luke, were permitted to go with him. Besides these three there were 273 in the ship.

3. The storm (vv. 14-20). The ship made little headway on account of unfavorable winds. Paul advised that they winter in Fair Haven (vv. 9-12), but his advice was unheeded. In verses 14 to 20 we have a most graphic description of the storm. Tempestuous winds as well as soft breezes await God's faithful ones.

4. Paul's serene faith (vv. 21-26). God is as near to his faithful ones on a stormy sea as in the quietude of the home. Paul was not only calm, but bade the people be of good cheer (v. 22). He promised them safety though the ship would go to pieces.

5. The ship's crew safe (vv. 27-44). All turned out as God had promised.

111. Paul's Ministry in Rome (Acts 28:15-31).

1. Welcomed by the brethren (v. 15). They met him at the Appian forum, a distance of about forty miles from Rome. This was the first time he was thus welcomed.

2. Paul's lenient treatment (v. 16). He was allowed to hire a house and live apart, being guarded by a soldier.

3. Conference with the leading Jews (vv. 17-22). He allowed himself only three days to rest. His object was to have a fair understanding with the Jews. He explained the reason for his being there. The result was that the Jews took neutral ground, but expressed a desire to hear what Paul could say in defense of a sect which was evil spoken against.

4. Paul expounding the kingdom of God and persuading concerning Jesus (vv. 23-31). He pointed out a real kingdom, the Messianic Kingdom, with the historic Jesus as the King. The kingdom to Paul meant a definite reign of a definite person, not merely an improved state of society. This he showed from the Scriptures. He went through the Old Testament, carefully showing the kingdom teaching to be in harmony with the law and the prophets.

Personal Consolation
There is also need of a clear understanding of what consolation means. It is not an indulgence in pious yearnings and smug phrases. It is the willingness to face facts squarely, to deny one's self in behalf of others, to give, to work with one's heart and soul that God's kingdom may come upon earth.

Pleasures Not Lasting
The pleasures of this are but for a season, but the punishment of unpardoned sin is everlasting.

Town Council.

An adjourned meeting of above Council was held on Tuesday evening last to hear the report of referendum taken as to whether the ratepayers were in favor of using the sum of $24,000 which the town were authorized to spend on public works to relieve the unemployment situation.

The vote was an open one and although the poll stood 128 to 127 for proceeding with the work, the total of valuation was against executing the work at the present time and the large number of men assembled in anticipation of getting busy rather than looking for extension of charity were again subjected to disappointment. The majority of valuation was $324,081.25.

From present appearances it looks as if the town is to be faced with quite a serious problem this winter in the matter of unemployment. For some considerable time past the council have been at variance on the waterworks question, and while admitting something must be done to improve our present system, the fact remains that the good weather has gone and the council were indisposed to assume responsibility for tackling the job with the prospects of winter drawing in. Many expressions of opinion are that it is cheaper to extend charity to those present taking the dole when these public works could have been proceeded with.

It is to be hoped that our council will get together, and devise some means whereby many of our unemployed may be put to work. As already suggested, we have the necessary machinery for crushing stone for use on our roadwork and is no justifiable reason why that could not go ahead without further delay.

Once again our thoughts are turning towards Christmas and the mind finds much to engage its attention. In the midst of present distress, many are doubtless having misgivings & doubts as to whether the season will live up to the traditions of the past. There are quite a number within our borders who are feeling the pinch of real poverty, some of whom have the natural pride that prevents their making their true condition known. Those who bestir themselves on behalf of our less fortunate citizens will learn as did Good King Wencelas, that to bless is to be blessed.

Wherefore Christmas men be sure, Wealth or rank possessing Ye who now shall bless the poor Shall yourselves find blessing.

THE CAPTAIN'S WEEKLY LETTER.

Dear Boys :-

Well you will be reading this week the opening Chapter of Our School and Home Story. I hope you will like it and have as much joy in reading about Eric, the coming of Timothy and all the other boys you will meet in "The Coming of Timothy".

How are you getting on at School? On looking at the Calendar this morning I was astonished to see how near Christmas was. Already some of you must be thinking about the holidays!

Of all the seasons of the year, I think that Christmas is the best. Especially if you happen to be at home, surrounded by those you love and who love you. Don't slack off your school work because the term is ending. Put on a big spurt and end up. WELL. Then your holiday will be a really happy one because of good work done without thought of self or pleasure!

Don't forget our poor Kiddies in the big cities, and try and put a little amount on one side for them. Till next week then

Ever your affectionate friend, THE CAPTAIN.

THE STAMP CORNER

As I promised you last week I will tell you about the stamps of Finland. In describing this stamp you will see there are wavy lines which represent the ocean and in the middle is a unicorn which means unity. The value of the stamp is in the corner as in the Japanese ones I spoke of last week.

If some of you stamp collectors are in any difficulty regarding your stamps I will try my best to help you if you will write to me care of the Captain.

Your friend, ARTHUR NEWTON, M. B. C.

"The Return of Timothy"

A Story of School and Home by CAPT. O. J. ALDOM.

Chapter I.—Eric's Home.

"And England's Sons; how far they roam, Winning Success on lessons learnt at home."

It was late afternoon of a warm summer day in August. Already the sun was beginning to set in a glory of golden color, which would quickly cast its shadows on the tall trees and wide green lawns belonging to one of the most beautiful Country homes of England.

The wide stone steps which led up to the noble entrance of Wallingford Grange, were flanked on either side by large prancing lions, carved out of huge blocks of grey stone, a material which had been freely used in the construction of this imposing building; the home of Andrew Selincourt. For generations his family had owned Wallingford Grange and the nearby villages of Great and Little Wallingford. Nobody seemed to remember the time when the Grange had been occupied by any other than the Squire's family; and to many it would have been nothing short of tragedy, had strangers come to take up their abode in the house. Great Elm trees assisted to protect this beautiful home by the wonderful foliage of their leaf-laden branches. In summer sleek and gentle deer roamed the stretches of park land that extended for hundreds of acres, right and left of the large lake that was justly renowned for its beauty through out the South of England.

Further back, behind the house, one could see the edge of the wood. Here the swift hare, timid rabbit, sly fox as well as partridges, pheasants and other members of the feathered tribe had their home and here Eric, only son of the Squire, and one of the heroes of our story, was never happier than, when, tucking his air gun under his arm, he would seek for some victim that would prove to his little sister, that he was indeed a famous and courageous hunter. Not that she needed any proof for already Mary was convinced that nobody could possibly equal her brother in anything he chose to do. True she was but seven years of age, but that made no difference.

At the time our story opens, indeed on this very day of August 17, 1926, Eric was celebrating his 12th. birthday. He had never been to school but had been taught his early lessons by a governess and on his ninth birthday been promoted to a Tutor, under whose care he had been trained in those virtues which make for honesty, truth and manly conduct. How far he had observed this knowledge we shall discover as we follow his adventures. Week by week. But this day had a further reason for being important, where Eric was concerned. Early that morning his father had taken him into his study and told him he was to go to school, as soon as the next term started, which would be one day in the coming month. This had come as a great surprise. First because he did not think that boys so young as he was, were sent away from home, and secondly because his Tutor had never mentioned anything about it. However, after the first astonishment had passed and as soon as he had finished his breakfast, he took up his fishing rod and ran down to the lake, of course accompanied by Mickey his favorite dog. He hoped that as a reward for his labour several large trout would soon be laying at the bottom of his basket; but after an hour's fruitless effort he flung down his rod in disgust. "It's no good Mickey," the fish don't seem to be hungry which is really too bad after trying so hard." Sprawling on the grass, Eric called his dog to him, and the little animal came quickly to his side, resting his brown shaggy head on his Master's arm. The little boy pulled the dog's long ears. "Don't you know Mickey, he said sadly, "I am going to school and I shall have to say good-bye to you."

CAPTAIN.

AUNT DI'S LETTER.

My Dear Chicks :-

When I was in the city last week I could not help noticing how all the shops are beginning to get ready for Christmas! And after all how near it is! Only about five weeks and you will all be getting excited about hanging up your stockings for Santa Claus.

I expect a great many of you are thinking about Christmas Gifts for other people, too, and so I just thought that for the next few weeks I would tell you, in my letters, how to make little presents which cost only a few cents. And if you are careful the things will look quite dainty and people will like them all the more because you have made them your very own selves. Won't they?

Now here is the first one. Take a length of rather thick, soft rope, about three-quarters of a yard will do. Double it into two and tie the double ends firmly just about six inches from the cut ends. Then take some gaily coloured ribbon, or wool, or raffia and carefully bind above the place you have tied and finish with a pretty bow or knot at the top. You leave your six inches at the cut ends free, and then fray them out, and you will have a pretty little brush for dusting! Try to make this. It is so easy!

Best Wishes from

Your loving, Auntie Di.

SEA-SNAKES

When Peter was in England in the summer, he was certain he saw some sea-snakes, so he just insists upon telling you about them.

One night when I stayed up till ten,
We walked beside the sea, and then
I saw the little harbour light
Winking its red eye in the night.

And little fishing boats I spied,
Bobbing and swinging with the tide,
Riding at anchor on the swell,
And they had winking lights as well.

And then I saw a marvellous sight!
It really gave me quite a fright
To see great sea-snakes, fiery red,
(The lights' reflections, Mother said.)

But I'm as sure as sure can be
That SNAKES were wriggling in the sea,
And when I am a man I'll get
A boat, and catch them in my net!

Peter Pickle.

TRUDY'S TEA-POT TALES

Trudy had just put down her cup when Peter came just rushing at her.

"Oh, hurry up Trudy dear!" he begged, "I thought you would never finish your tea! And I am just dying for a Tea-pot Tale, and so are the nephews and nieces."

So Trudy and Peter settled themselves comfortably on the rug in front of the big, log fire in the dining-room and Trudy told her tale. This is it.

All About Marjory-Ella.

These stories are about a little girl called Marjory-Ella, and sometimes about her friends. If any of the stories seem to be very long they will have to be told in parts, just like a serial, you know. But the first tale is just about Marjory-Ella herself, because she was mostly in bed when it happened, and so she could not very well have her friends with her. (Peter would interrupt just here and said that he didn't see why the friends could have slept with Marjory-Ella, but Trudy said that the bed was not nearly large enough for four friends, so then Peter kept quiet for a little while.)

Well, this story happened in the early Spring-time, and Marjory-Ella went to bed quite as usual one night, wishing and wishing that Spring would really come with all its flowers and warmth and greenness, because just then it was only the very, very beginning of Spring. And as she was wishing she actually saw a star, which was peeping in at the window, WINK! Marjory-Ella gazed quite startled, thinking perhaps it was only just an ordinary twinkle. But no, the star winked again and again, till Marjory-Ella fell asleep thinking of it.

The next thing she knew was that her little room was very bright with sunshine so she jumped out of bed and ran to the window. As she did so, the church clock struck. One! Two! Three! Four! Five! it chimed.

"Only five o'clock in the morning," laughed Marjory-Ella as she looked out of the window, "Why, I've never been up so early before, except when I had measles, and that doesn't really count because I wasn't up, only awake!"

She quickly dressed and ran softly down stairs, unbolted the back door and tripped into the garden. And there, in the little flowerbed right underneath the kitchen window was a very first daffodil! "Why, you pretty thing," said Marjory-Ella you weren't here yesterday!"

Then to Marjory-Ella's surprise, the daffodil shook its staring, yellow head, and a little sweet voice just like a little bell said, "No little girl, I wasn't, and yet you have seen me before!"

"Oh, but how could I, if you were not here?" protested Marjory-Ella.

Don't you remember the star that winked at you last night? asked the daffodil. "Well, I was that star! You wished for Spring under a winking star, and those who wish under a winking star find that their wishes come true. I tumbled out of the sky, and became the first daffodil, and if you run out into the woods you will find that Spring is really here!"

"This is wonderful!" cried the little girl, "And now I can see, pretty daffodil, how just like a star you are."

And now I'm off into the woods to see that Spring has see, pretty daffodil, how just like a star you are!

And just at this moment Sunday saw that it was Peter's bed-time, so although he grumbled, he has to wait for the end of the story, and so must you, Chicks!

Sight Unseen

By MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Sperry turned to me when he had gone out. "That was Hawkins, Horace," he said. "You remember. Don't you? The Wells' butler."

"I knew him at once."
"He wrote to me asking for a position, and I got him this. Looks sick, poor devil, I intend to have a go at his chest."

"How long has he been here?"

"More than a week, I think."

As I drank my tea, I pondered.

After all, the Neighborhood Club must guard against the possibility of fraud and I felt that Sperry had been indiscreet, to say the least.

From the time of Hawkins' service in Miss Jeremy's home there would always be the suspicion of collusion between them.

I did not believe it was so, but Herbert, for instance, would be inclined to suspect her.

Suppose that Hawkins knew about the crime? Or knew something and surmised the rest?

I was uneasy all the way home. The element of doubt always so imminent in our dealings with psychic phenomena, had me by the throat.

How much did Hawkins know? Was there any way, without going to the police, to find if he had really been out of the Wells house that night, now almost two weeks ago, when Arthur Wells had been killed?

That evening I went to Sperry's house, after telephoning that I was coming. On the way I stopped in at Mrs. Dane's and secured something from her. She was wildly curious, and made me promise to go in on my way back, and explain. I made a compromise.

"I will come in if I have any thing to tell you," I said.

Sperry was waiting for me in his library, standing by the fire, with the grave face and slightly bent head of his professional manner.

"I wonder," I said, "if you kept the letter Hawkins wrote you when he asked for a position."

He was not sure. He went into his consulting room and was gone for some time. I took the opportunity to glance over his books and over the room.

Arthur Wells' stick was standing in a corner and I took it up and examined it. It was an English malacca, light and strong and had seen service. It was long, too long for me; it occurred to me that Wells had been about my height, and that it was odd that he should have carried so long a stick. There was no ease in swinging it.

From that to the memory of Hawkins' face when Sperry took it, the night of the murder, in the hall of the Wells house, was only a step. I seemed that day to be thinking considerably about Hawkins.

When Sperry returned I laid the stick on the table. There can be no doubt that I did so, for I had to move a book-rack to place it. One end, the handle was near the ink-well, and the ferrule lay on a copy of Gibson's "Life Beyond the Grace", which Sperry had evidently been reading.

Sperry had found the letter. As I glanced at it I recognized the writing at once, thin and rather sexless, Spencerian.

Dear Sir: Since Mr. Wells' death I am out of employment. Before I took the position of butler with Mr. Wells I was valet to Mr. Ellingham, and before that, in England, to Lord Condray. If you need a servant at this time I would do my best to give satisfaction.

(Signed) Arthur Hawkins

I put down the application, and took the anonymous letter about the bag from my pocket-book. "Read this, Sperry," I said. "You know the letter."

Mrs. Dane read it to us Saturday night. But compare the writing."

He compared the two, with a slight lifting of his eyebrows. Then he put them down. "Hawkins!" he said. "Hawkins has the letters!"

The question now is to whom was it written?

We pondered that, to no effect. That Hawkins had certain letters which touched on the Wells affair, that they were probably in his possession in the Connell house, was clear enough. But we had no possible authority for trying to get the letters, although Sperry was anxious to make the attempt.

"Although I feel," he said, "that it is too late to help her very much. She is innocent; I know that. I think you know that, too, deep in that legal mind of yours. It is wrong to discredit her because I did a foolish thing." He warmed to his argument. "Why, think, man," he said. "The whole first sitting was practically coincident with the crime itself."

It was true enough. Whatever suspicion might be cast on the second seance, the first at least remained inexplicable, by any laws are recognized. In a way, I felt sorry for Sperry. Here he was, on the first day of his engagement, protesting her honesty her complete ignorance of the revelation she had made and his intention to keep her in ignorance, and yet betraying his own anxiety and possible doubt in the same breath.

"She did not even know there was a family named Wells. When I said that Hawkins had been employed by the Wells' it meant nothing to her. I was watching."

So even Sperry was watching. He was in love with her, but his scientific mind, like my legal one was slow to accept what during the past two weeks it had been asked to accept.

I left him at ten o'clock. Mrs. Dane was still at her window, and her far-sighted old eyes caught me as I tried to steal past. She rapped on the window, and I was obliged to go in. Obligated, too, to tell her of the discovery and, at last, of Hawkins being in the Connell house.

"I want those letters Horace," she said at last.

"So do I. I'm not going to steal them."

"The question is where has he got them?"

"The question is, dear lady, that they are not ours to take."

"They are not his, either."

Well, that was true enough. But I had done all the private investigating I cared. And I told her so. She only smiled cryptically.

The following day was Monday. When I came downstairs I found a neat bundle lying in the hall, and addressed to me. My wife had followed me down, and we surveyed it together.

It was my overcoat! My overcoat, apparently uninjured, but with the collection of keys I had made missing.

The address was printed, not written, in a large, strong hand with a stub pen. I did not, at the time, notice the loss of certain papers which had been in the breast pocket. I am rather absent-minded and it was not until the night after the third sitting that they were recalled to my mind.

At something after eleven Herbert Robinson called me up at my office. He was at Sperry's house, Sperry having been his physician during his recent illness.

"I say, Horace, this is Herbert."

"Yes, How are you?"

"Doing well, Sperry says. I'm at his place now, I'm speaking for him. He's got a patient."

"Yes."

"You were here last night, he says. Do you happen to have noticed a walking-stick in the library when you were here?"

"Yes. I saw it."

"You didn't by any chance, take it with you?"

"No."

"Are you sure?"

"Certainly I'm sure."

"Suppose we'll see you to-night?"

"Not unless you ring off and let me do some work," I said irritably.

He rang off. I was ruffled, I admit; but I was uneasy, also. It was that day that I discovered that I was being watched.

I did not tell my wife that evening.

After dinner I went into our reception room which is not lighted unless we are expecting guests, and peered out of the window. The detective, or whoever he might be, was walking negligently up the street.

As that was the night of the third seance, I find that my record covers the fact that for which reason we had not been asked to dinner, that my wife and I dined early, at six-thirty, and that it was seven o'clock when Sperry called me by telephone, and asked me to accompany him to the Wells' house to see if we could find the other overcoat.

He slipped an arm through mine when I joined him, and we started down the street.

"I'm going to get to the bottom of this, Horace, old dear," he said.

"Remember, we're pledged to a physic investigation only."

"Rats!" he said rudely. "We are going to find out who killed Arthur Wells, and if he deserves hanging we'll hang him."

"Or her?"

"It wasn't Elinor Wells," he said positively. "Here's the point: if he's been afraid to go back for his overcoat it's still there. I don't expect that, how ever. But the thing about the curtain interests me. I've been reading over my copy of the notes on the sittings. It was said you remember, that curtains—some curtains—would have been better places to hide the letters than the bag."

I stopped suddenly. "By jove, Sperry," I said. "I remember now. My notes of the sittings were in my overcoat."

"And they are gone?"

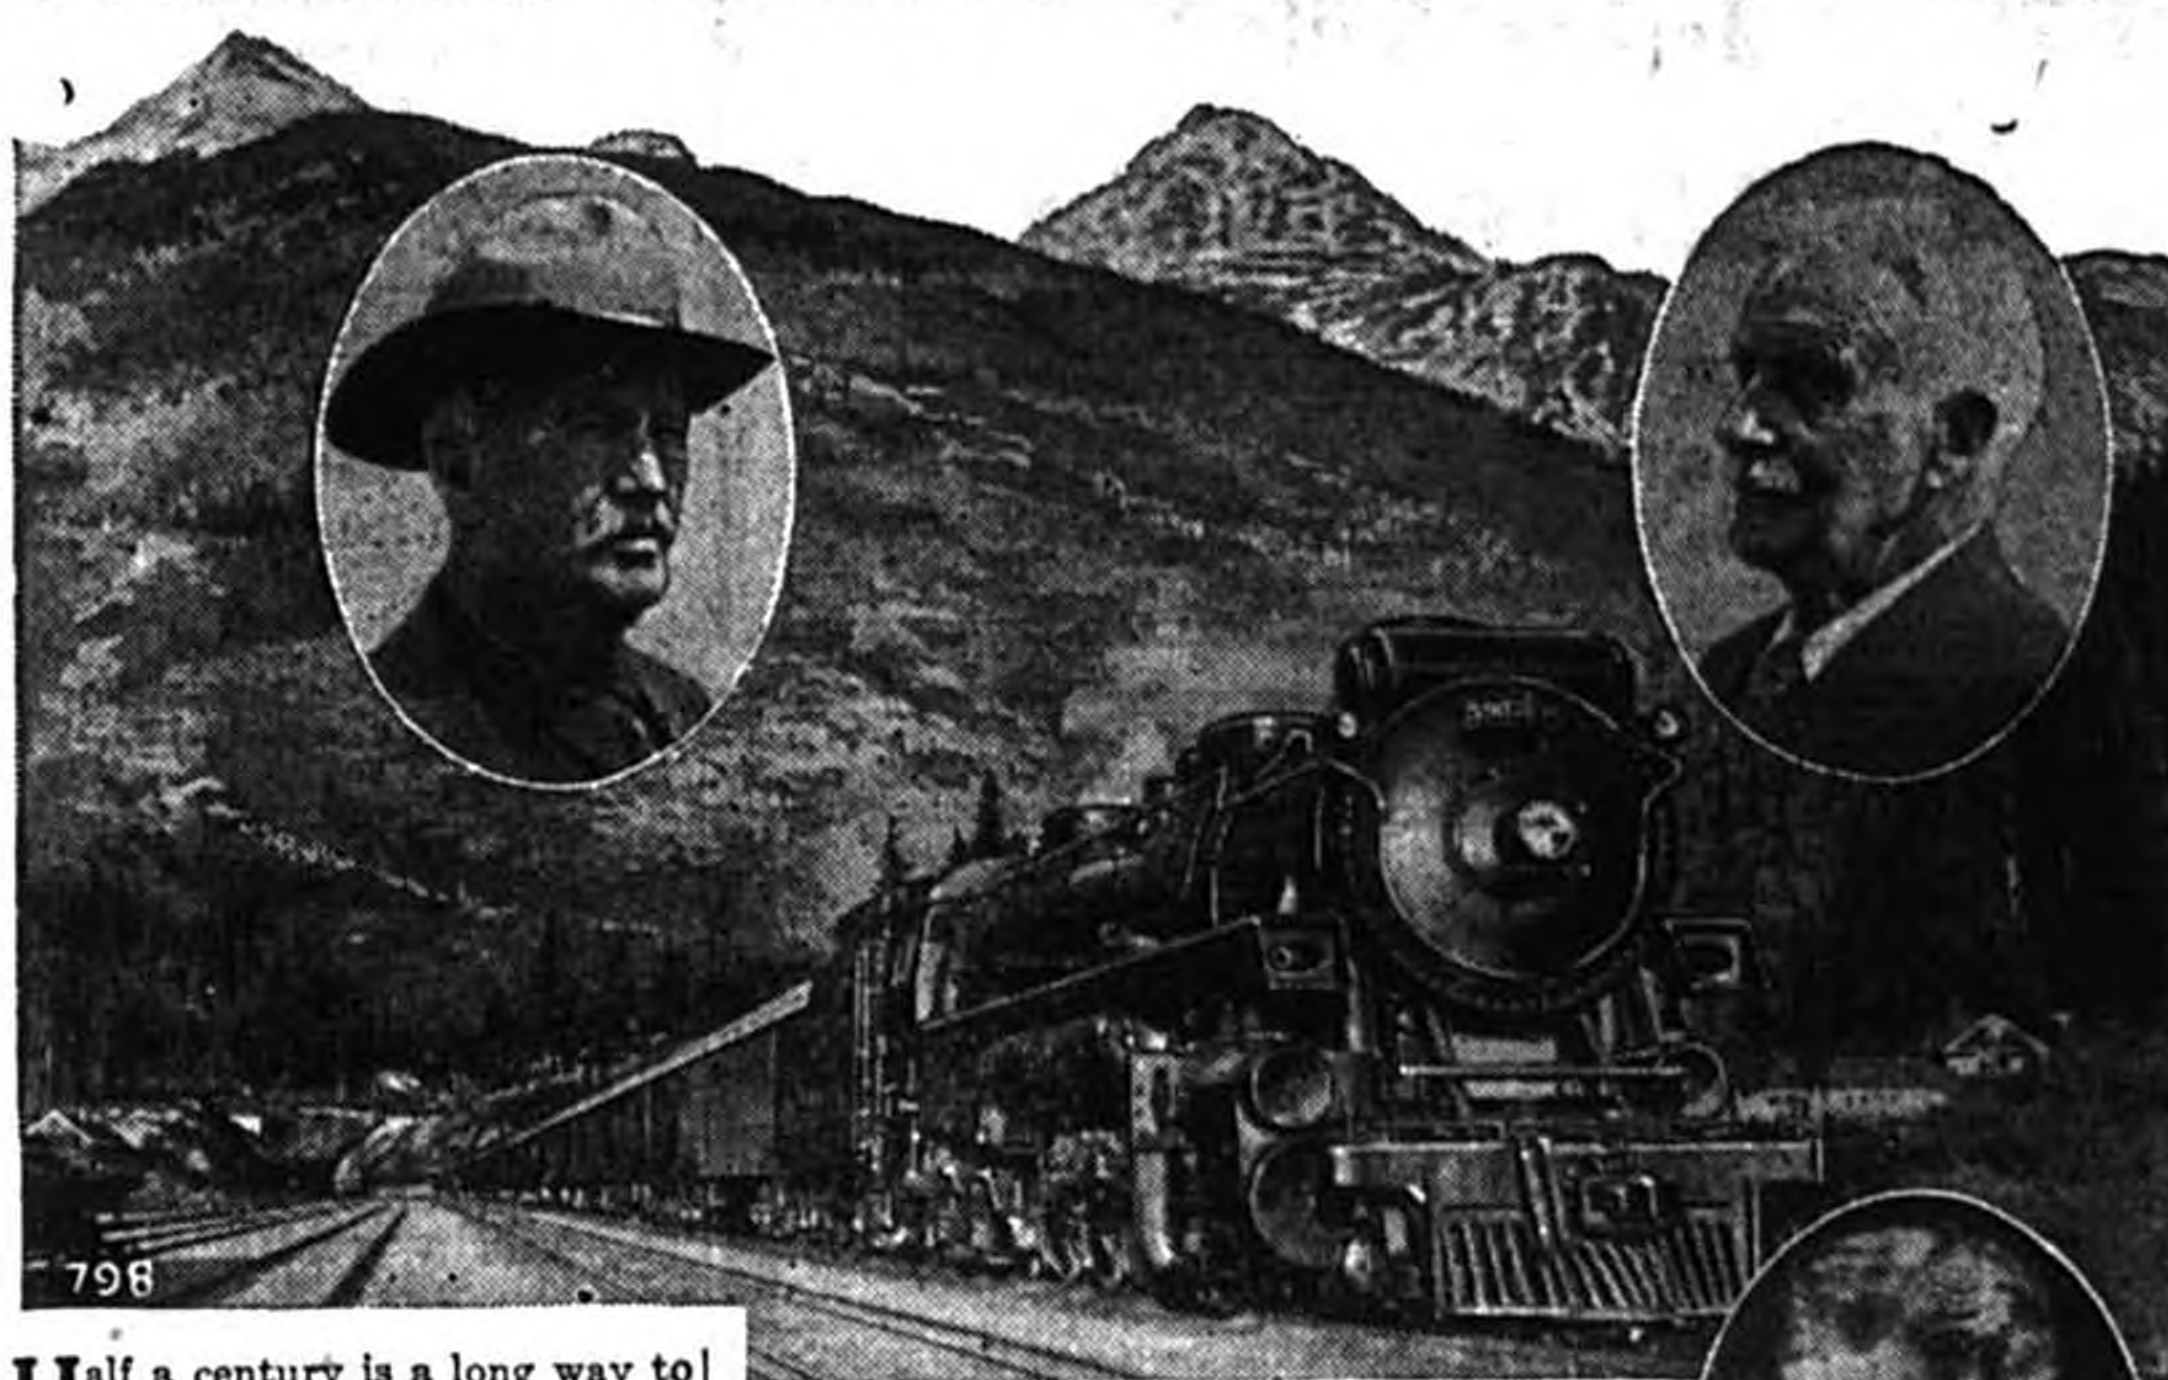

"They are gone."

He whistled softly. "That's unfortunate," he said. "Then the other person, whoever he is knows what we know!"

"Just where does Hawkins come in, Sperry?" I asked.

"I'm damned if I know," he reflected. "We may learn to-night."

PIONEERS MEET AFTER HALF CENTURY

Half a century is a long way to look back and when Charlie Shaw (right) met Tom Wilson in the grounds of the Banff Springs Hotel last autumn, it was an occasion for both of them. Tom is a well-known character at the famous Rocky Mountain resort. He is the sole survivor of the Canadian Pacific's first exploration party of 1881, and was the first white man to see Lake Louise. Shaw, who makes his home in Keremos, B.C., is the sole survivor of the survey party under C. E. Perry, C.E., which located the line across the Alberta prairies. The pair met, for the only time in their lives till 1931, in 1883, when Tom was working under Major A. B. Rogers, after whom Rogers Pass is named and Charlie was with Sir Sanford Fleming's memorable expedition through the Kicking Horse Pass. What this gallant pair of veterans must have had to say to each other when they renewed their acquaintance! From the days when they toiled over mountain and plain, blazing the way for the great steel girdle which now binds the provinces of the Dominion together, down to the present day, is history. Their cheery determination has been, and is, reflected in the story of the world's greatest transportation system. The mantle of responsibility has passed from Mountstephen to Van Horne and from Shaughnessy to the broad shoulders of E.W. Beatty, chairman and president of the system. Many progressive improvements have been made. But the spirit which sent Tom and Charlie across hundreds of miles of unexplored territory remains unchanged, for the excellent reason that none better can be found.

Here's why it lasts longer

THE NORTHERN ELECTRIC-ABC WASHER is bound to give you long years of satisfactory service, because the vital driving machinery is built to reduce friction... the cause of wearing-out... to a very minimum.

Enclosed down under the tub is this marvelously quiet, power-saving mechanism. Anti-friction metals are used for moving parts; the gear-teeth slide smoothly together with precise accuracy; and the lubrication is so excellent that it needs attention only once in three years. This friction-free action means cheaper operation as well as less wear... and, hence, longer life for the ABC.

Northern Electric has remarkable technical facilities for testing even the unseen parts of the appliances which it sponsors. The ABC Washer has been subjected to the most rigorous tests in every respect before being awarded the Northern Electric "SEAL OF APPROVAL" which this made-in-Canada washer bears.

"I AM STILL RICH"

(Roy L. Smith in The Blue Bell)

Another view point as to Riches is given by Roy L. Smith and it strikes a note that we may all take well to heart. There is a wealth of truth in what he says and while but few sections of the world have not been effected we can profit by the lessons it has taught us and lend ourselves to more readily perform that task of life with a more grateful spirit and greater servitude to our fellow man.

We have passed through a panic, suffered from a crash on the stock market and are now more than half way through the depression and I am still rich.

It may be true that I have much less to live on than I had a year ago, but it is certainly true that I have just as much as ever to live for. The real values of life are unshaken and solid.

The stock crash cost us much that we never had—paper profits which never got nearer our pockets than the financial pages of the daily papers. The market failed but nothing else did. Prices went down, but not one acre lost its fertility and all the electrons, protons and ether waves went on working in their accustomed ways. When the depression came I was compelled to take an invoice and soon discovered that I was still rich. All my capacity for the enjoyment of life was intact.

My two-hundred-thousand-dollar eyes are just as good as they ever were. Every landscape and sunset is mine if I want it. Twenty-thousand dollar scenes and views are added to my collection almost every week. A hundred-thousand dollar sense of hearing is still unimpaired and by it I become an heir to a world of beauty and inspiration.

Then there's my million-dollar stomach a half-million dollar appetite. No doctor has sentenced me to spinach for the rest of my life. Better to have plain food and an appetite than to sit down to a banquet with no appetite. No man can be rich who is compelled to take orders daily from his stomach.

The depression has not lowered the value of a single friend ship. Neighbors still greet us in the same old cordial way, business associates believe in us and our sons hold us in high respect. The wife's welcome at the close of the day has not depreciated in the least and our daughters continue to lavish their affection upon us with the same old extravagance.

My faith in the goodness of the universe is unimpaired. By that faith I am emboldened as I face defeat and despair. The prayers my mother taught me and the faith in God instilled in me by a devout father remains as priceless treasures no depression can touch.

No nation becomes great by becoming rich. Neither does a man find enduring satisfaction in life by owning something—only by becoming something. The most degrading poverty is that which results from killing the spirit that the body may be served.

This depression has cost us some of the things we created but it has robbed us of none of our power to create. We may lose some beautiful things, but we have lost no love of the beautiful. It is a challenge, not a catastrophe. A generation that has conquered the air and sent giant planes circling the globe, which has plunged into the depths and disported on the ocean's floor, which has climbed above the clouds and lived in the stratosphere, is now faced with the challenge to rise above its dependence on mere things and seek an emancipation of the spirit of man.

The last six months have been for many men a thrilling spiritual adventure through which they have discovered their real wealth. Bereft of dividends and profits they are discovering the sustaining powers of a strong religious faith; the abiding values of courage, heroism, honor, charity and trustworthiness.

The investments we made in ambitious youth, hospitals, crippled children's camps, colleges, and service institutions go on paying dividends. The deepest satisfactions of life—those which come from sharing and serving—remain secure.

I am still rich because I am independently rich—none of my wealth depends upon business conditions or market reports.

ST. ANDREWS EAST

Miss Elizabeth Wales spent the week-end at her home here.

Mrs. J. Dowling, of Montreal, is the guest of the Misses Pitcairn.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Fraser spent several days in Montreal last week.

We are glad to learn that Mr. Arthur McGregor has recovered from his severe illness.

Dr. Maude Abbot spent the week-end here, after returning from medical conventions at Boston and Ottawa.

Mrs. Jas. Armstrong, of Lachute Road, has returned home, after a week's visit with her daughter in Montreal.

The Junior Red Cross, given by the pupils of the St. Andrews East Consolidated School was a huge success. The class room was crowded with relatives and friends of the children. Great credit is due to the Misses Waldron, Snow and Leroy for the excellent showing made by their pupils. This event is taken not only as an exhibition of the proficiency of the children but as a great agreeable entertainment for a greatly interested audience; and besides this the collection ($18.50) puts Canadian Junior Red Cross troop in necessary funds for some weeks.

Miss Abbott, Assistant Superintendent of the Canadian Junior Red Cross Society for this Province, presented to Mr. P. Doig, as president of the local branch, an honor certificate showing five years active work.

St. Andrews had a rare treat Friday evening in the lecture of Dr. (Miss) A. V. Douglas on The Signs of the Zodiac, in the Presbyterian Church Hall. The subject was one of great interest, carrying us back in matters astronomical to the very beginnings of astrology.

The Zodiac appears to be a great clock with a twelve figure dial of big stars stretching all around the heavens. And before the days of accurate astronomy, calendars and Einsteins, the signs of the Zodiac were the old reliable indications of Spring, Summer, Autumn and Winter.

You know that in the Bible the stars are said to have been created for "signs, and for seasons and for days and years." And Job wrote long before Newton and Kepler were born, "canst thou bind the sweet influences of the Pleiades, or loose the bonds of Orion? Canst thou bring forth the Mazzaroth in his season?"—and Mazzaroth was Job's name for the star clusters which constitute the twelve signs of the Zodiac. So those constellations have had a great interest for the people of earth from time immemorial and we are very glad to have had them so nicely brought before us by the lantern-slides and informative word painting. An engaging feature of the lecture was illustration by a little imitation "planetarium," a sort of hand power "movie," showing on the screen the sun, planets and moons of our solar system, in motion as near to the natural as well could be with the hundreds of millions of miles in space reduced to the dimensions of a small screen.

The lecture was not only clear and understandable, but after it the lecturer was ready to answer questions right off the bat, without a moment's hesitation.

Hugh Walsh, Popular Miller of St. Andrews East, dies in 94th year

Was closely related to Nelson and served in Navy before coming to Canada

The passing of Hugh Walsh of St. Andrews East, in his ninety-fourth year removes another link with early days. There was no figure more widely known throughout the Ottawa Valley. Mr. Walsh was the son of Robert Nelson Walsh, who was a pioneer in the Chateauguay Valley during the first decade of the last century. Nelson Walsh came of a military family in the North of Ireland, and was educated in Dublin. He was closely related to Lord Nelson and himself served in the navy before he came to Canada.

Hugh Walsh was born in Ormstown, Que., in 1838. He came to St. Andrews in 1883, purchased the flour mill, and built up a flourishing industry. The fame of the Walsh flour and breakfast foods attracted patrons from near and far, even from Montreal Island and the Glengarry country. Mr. Walsh introduced the roller process in the St. Andrews mill. His inventive genius and that of his son and partner in the flour industry developed many labor saving devices, which contributed to the quality of the mill products. The wide popularity of his brand of flour stimulated the growth of wheat throughout Argenteuil and the adjoining counties. The output capacity of this, the third largest flour mill in the province, was at one time two hundred barrels in twenty-four hours. In frosty winter weather, when the sledding was good, it was no uncommon thing to see a long line of teams, extending from the mill almost to the bridge, waiting their turn to discharge their loads. At such times the mill ran day and night.

Mr. Walsh was always a prominent figure in the life of the old town, being at one time its mayor and the chairman of the school board. He was a member of Chateauguay Lodge, A. F. & A. M. which he joined over fifty years ago, and a loyal supporter of the Presbyterian Church. He married Catherine Campbell, of Ormstown, by whom six children were born, his loving wife and three children having predeceased him. The early death of his only son, George, was a great blow to the family and to the community.

The funeral service of Mr. Walsh took place on Tuesday afternoon, Nov. 24th. At this service the old stone church was filled to capacity with friends from village and countryside, and from Montreal, Ormstown and Huntingdon, who gathered to pay their last tribute. The service was conducted by the Rev. Dr. Ballantyne, the resident minister, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Cousens, of Lachute. Mr. Cousens gave the funeral address which was impressive and appropriate. Mr. Walsh is survived by three daughters, Mary, Christina and Elizabeth, to whom is extended the sincere sympathy of a large circle of friends.

Extract from the Funeral Sermon of Mr. Hugh Walsh

Though we do not mourn as those who have no hope, nevertheless we mourn. If a man can be taken from the community, Church or family without being missed, it is a sad reflection on that man's worth. Certainly the passing from our midst, of the late Mr. Hugh Walsh, though expected owing to the ripeness of his years is deeply felt throughout the countryside where he was so well known and respected, but most of all in the community, the church and the intimate circle of his loved ones.

He was essentially a man possessing the pioneer spirit. To know him was to become acquainted with the spirit which has made Canada and especially the older and more established centres of it what it is to-day, and has left its indelible impression upon our commercial, social and religious life. It is the spirit which is not afraid of honest hard work; to face obstacles, difficulties, and adversity without flinching or complaint; that has the courage of its convictions and dares to stand for them; the spirit that lives and works with the hope of leaving the community better because of its efforts, and with the realization that others will reap the benefit of its labours. To the modern mind this spirit may appear as somewhat violent and hard, but we must remember the conditions they faced were not as soft and easy as to-day and required temper or hardness to meet them. These qualities when properly viewed do not lessen the worth of character but lend to it a lustre, an adornment and a value that the human mind is incapable of fully appreciating.

Certainly we will miss the inspiration which his familiar face and figure afforded, but to-day we will honor his spirit and its memory by facing our loss as he would face his and be thankful for the gain and the profit that is ours. We thank God for having placed such a man in the community, for the honor and the privilege of having known him, and for sparing him to us for so many years. This congregation will be long inspired by his memory. They will be reminded in times of discouragement and of tribute that the community needs the Church and religion, which has been maintained in this case at a tremendous cost of hard work and sacrifice, and if necessity demands they must do the same. If the community and the Church have memories for which they are thankful, we know that in the minds and hearts of his loved ones there are memories too sacred and precious to be touched, but will ever be a treasure house to which they will withdraw in gratitude and peace. Though his presence may be removed from us his spirit goes marching on in our midst, inspiring and encouraging us to be brave, to be industrious to be honest, and to trust in God and His gracious promises.

We tender to the bereaved our deepest sympathy in their sorrow and commend them to the care and protection and comfort of God our heavenly Father whose eye never slumbers and whose presence is ever near them.

The Late Jas. H. Morrow

It is with sorrow that we record the death of Jas. H. Morrow, son of the late Hugh Morrow, of Dalesville. Leaving home some thirty-five years ago he made his home in the Eastern Townships, where he was director and manager of the Cromwell and Rayside Lumbering Co. for some twenty odd years. He always took a great interest in Agriculture. He moved recently to Shelbourne, near Burlington, Vermont, where he has been carrying on fruit and dairy farming. About six months ago he took a stroke but in spite of the best medical care he passed away November 14th. and was buried in Shelbourne cemetery. The beautiful sprays and wreath from friends and organizations which he belonged to showed the respect in which he was held. The Masonic order of which he was a loved and respected member took charge of the service. He leaves to mourn his loss, his mother, Mrs. Hugh Morrow, of Dalesville; a loving wife, two sons and four daughters, also three brothers, William, Thos. and Austin, of Dalesville, and five sisters, Mrs. Jas. Murdoch, and Mrs. Archie Murdoch, of Mabel; Mrs. Walter Wert, of Ogdensburg; Mrs. Jas. Stephenson, of Dalesville, and Mrs. Albert Titley, of Thomas Gore.

"KEMPY" is the name of the play which is to be presented in the Auditorium on Friday, December 11th. Its full of fun and humor and will keep you in roars. Don't forget the date.

Why not learn to play music? Professor Boyce, of Montreal, will be at McArthur's Hall, on Saturday, Nov. 21st. from 1 p.m. till 6 p.m. and will give lessons on the Violin, Mandolin Ukelele, Guitar, Saxophone, etc. Come in and get full particulars N-20-1-c.

Making of Success For New National Service (Canada) Loan

It is confidently felt in high financial circles that all the elements required for success attend the current flotation of a loan for $150,000,000 by the Dominion of Canada, through the Department of Finance. That all the money required by the Government to carry on the affairs of the country, without resort to outside markets, will be provided by investors is not questioned. As a sound investment in five and ten year 5 per cent. bonds at attractive prices, is one which investors will be glad to obtain, it is felt that it is only necessary to lay the facts before the country and that the rest will be attended to.

Confidence is returning throughout the country after passing through a trying period of two years, during which prices of both commodities and securities sank to abnormally low levels. There is serene conviction that the decline has run its course and that the tide already started will be running strongly in the other direction before a great while.

Evidences of a turn in the tide of business for the better, with an accompanying return of confidence, are to be found on every hand. There has been an appreciable recovery in the prices of some commodities. That in wheat is of paramount interest to Canada at the present time when there is a heavy outflow to overseas markets. This, and a better distribution of merchandise throughout the country, has been indicated in a substantial recovery in the earnings of the country's two great transportation systems. Earnings for the first two weeks of November indicate that trade and commerce is undergoing improvement, when compared with the gross receipts for the corresponding periods of the two preceding months. The figures show that the enormous decreases which have been shown for many months past are now dwindling to almost nothing, and unless all signs fail it will be but a short time before the railways will be running well ahead of the tonnage they carried in the past couple of years.

Business people everywhere are in a better frame of mind and looking forward to the resumption of business on a broader scale. Meantime the Government must do some financing and it is to the interests of all concerned to see the flotation of this new internal loan result in a great success.

The extent to which this is the case will be a measure of the public's confidence and a successful outcome will be of incalculable benefit to the maintenance of Canada's credit in the eyes of the world, where it has stood pre-eminent for many years.

During the past summer a large Conversion loan was successfully carried out by the Government to take care of maturities, some of which originated in the Great War period. The present loan is entirely different in character, inasmuch as it calls for the supply of new money for the running of the affairs of the country. No appeal could be made for this in the markets of the world, owing to disturbed international exchange conditions. It is up to Canadians themselves to make good this amount and there is no one of the realm of finance who entertains any doubts about the outcome.

That there is a great reservoir of wealth in Canada only waiting to be tapped by an investment offering the very highest grade of security obtainable, is indicated by banking and trust corporation returns, which shows large sums held in trust for the public. That these will be released in large volume seems unquestionable. The return of confidence is the only thing that could be depended upon to turn on the tap.

BRITISH FARMERS THINK WELL OF EASTERN TOWN-SHIPS.

It was not because they were tired of Canada that Mr. and Mrs. James Hargreaves left a few days ago to return to their home in Herts County, England but because they are winding up their affairs there, intending to return to Canada in the spring, this time to remain.

Mr. and Mrs. Hargreaves are travelling, having visited Australia and New Zealand, as well as different parts of Canada in their search for a rural home. Now they believe they have found it, near Woodland Bay, Lake Massiwiippi, in Stanstead County, Quebec. Here they have purchased a farm of four hundred acres and will, when winter is over, take up residence upon it. The young couple are enthusiastic about the beauties of the Eastern Townships, stating that they compare favourably with any they have seen in their travels.

PERLEY SEES CANADA AS ANGLO-AMERICAN INTERPRETER

Acting Prime Minister Presides at Banquet in Ottawa

Canada officially welcomed the United States Congressional party studying the Dominion sales tax system at a banquet tendered this week by the Canadian Government, from Right Hon. Sir George Perley, acting Prime Minister and Hon. E. B. Ryckman, Minister of National Revenue, who is actively assisting the American party in its inquiry, came the warmest words of greeting, friendship and assurances of co-operation.

"We in Canada are here as interpreters between Great Britain and the United States," Sir George Perley declared. "No duty could be more pleasant or more important than a task of interpreter, because I believe that with the British Empire & the United States holding together we can accomplish anything we like for peace and happiness in this world." It was a proud position that of interpreter as between Great Britain and the United States and this country believed in cementing the bonds of friendship between Canada and the American.

Every facility would be afforded the visiting party in its investigation of the sales tax system in operation in this country. "Come again we welcome you all," Sir George stated. "We believe in these visits as between Canada and the United States."

Formal Opening of United Church at Morin Heights

The Third Methodist Church burned down here in January last. But people were not discouraged. Insurance money grant from Finance Committee of Montreal, together with some help from the local and visiting friends, has again produced in meeting place—in some respects better than any of the former edifices. It is in the centre and is an improvement to the town. It is on the old, but repaired foundation. The structure designed by Mr. A. D. Thacker, of Montreal, is externally of Ham and internally of Gyproc. It is well and substantially built and will always be warm. The new building includes a basement for refreshment and social affairs. The old fittings including pews, organ and pulpit were saved from the fire.

On Saturday, the 21st., under the chairmanship of Rev. G. M. Pettigard, the Rev. Dr. Ritchie representing the Presbytery and Dr. Cruikshanks, Rev. McTaggart and Mr. J. B. Chellis, representing the Finance and Extension Board of Montreal, arrived and were the guests at a formal repast of Ham and Chicken in the basement. Altogether about 100 partook of the good things well served by the junior ladies. Afterwards, speeches by the visitors and an impromptu Concert in the "Upper Room". N. R. Anderson, D. C. Todd, R. H. D. Todd, Charles Duncan, John Gorman, Mesdames Bulay, Deacon and Todd came in from Lachute to lend a hand. We noted also Mr. and Mrs. Christie from Montreal; Miss Saunders and Mr. Alexander, from Shawbridge; and Mr. Scott, Mrs. Giles and Miss Murdoch from Lachute in the audience.

On Sunday, the 22nd. inst. at 3 p.m. a formal Dedication was held. Ritual by the pastor from Shawbridge. Sermon by Rev. Rosborough of Lachute; subject: "Be Strong in the Lord." Singing by the Visitors. The collection (including a cheque of $25.00) totalling $82.00. Good weather and good roads helped in the attendance, many coming in from the outside. The little flock is to be congratulated on the production of the new building. Time and eternity may show its utility.

Grain yields ranging from 38 to 70 bushels to the acre are reported in Northern Alberta, according to information reaching the Agricultural Department of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

A tree-planting plan on a large scale to extend over a ten-year period has been inaugurated in Saskatchewan. It will embrace the whole treeless part of the province and is to be started at once.

Establishing a new record for quick delivery, a shipment handled by the Canadian Pacific Express Company went from Southampton to Vancouver in nine days. It came over on the Empress of Britain to Quebec in less than five days.

The Royal York, largest hotel in the British Empire, recently staged the largest bridge tea and fashion show ever held when over 1,100 bridge tables were in operation and nearly 5,000 guests attended the function. It was held in aid of unemployment relief funds.

P. G. Wodehouse, world-famous novelist and humorist, will write his next novel aboard the Empress of Britain during the world cruise which starts December 3 from New York. It will be a continuation of the story of "Jeeves" who has already figured in several of his best sellers.

Butter production in Canada for the first seven months of 1931 increased 25,379,726 pounds or 15.5 per cent. over the production for the corresponding period of 1930. Exports in the same period were 5,149,600 pounds or nearly 4,000,000 pounds more than in the same seven months last year.

Certainly a seasonal, if not an all time, record for a lady big game hunter was recently established in New Brunswick when Mrs. Walter R. Peterson, of Nashua, New Hampshire, shot a moose, two buck deer and a bear during a hunting trip in the Serpentine section of the Tobique district of the province.

Catfish leather may eventually win favour with the lady of fashion for her handbag or shoes. Not until recently has a market been found for catfish caught in Nova Scotia, but a firm of leather manufacturers in the United States has found that a soft and pliable product can be made from the skins of catfish.

Radio is to be used for promoting correspondence school courses in Saskatchewan. This is believed to be an entirely new departure, though it has already been used as a medium of instruction for a prepared program by the Extension Department of the University of Alberta, for the past few years.

A free scholarship, entitling the holder to one year in Arts and four in engineering or to five years in architecture at McGill University is offered by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, subject to competitive examination, to its apprentices and other employees under 21 years of age, and to minor sons of employees. The candidate receiving highest marks in subjects required for admission to the University will be awarded the scholarship. (796)

Our Puzzle Corner

"It's a puzzle world." How do you regard "Our Puzzle Corner" in the "Watchman" each week. Are you one of those who glances at the caption and then passes on with some unexpressed observation about child's play or do you try to figure out the solution of the week's puzzle to provide yourself with a little mental stimulation. If you are one of the latter I congratulate you, if one of the former I want you to bear with me for just a few minutes, while I place before you some of the reasons why you should endeavour to interest yourself in the solving of our weekly puzzle. "There can be no denying the fact that we are surrounded on every hand by posers, some of which the intellect of man has mastered some which man has not yet mastered, and many which may be said to be impossible of solution. The curious propensity for propounding puzzles isn't peculiar to any race or to any period of history. It is simply innate in every intelligent man and woman that has ever lived, though it is always showing itself in different forms; whether the individual be a Sphinx of Egypt, a Samson of Hebrew lore, an Indian fakir, a Chinese philosopher, a mahatma of Tibet or a European mathematician makes little difference. Theologian, scientist, and artisan are perpetually engaged in attempting to solve puzzles, while every game, sport, and pastime is built up of problems of greater or less difficulty. The spontaneous question asked by the child of his parent, by one motorist of another by a cricketer during the luncheon hour, or by a yachtsman lazily scanning the horizon is frequently a problem of considerable difficulty. In short we are all propounding puzzles to one another every day of our lives—without always knowing it."

This week I give a puzzle that should interest Boy Scouts, and as it may be of use to Scout Leaders in their next paper chase, I shall be pleased to receive their solutions before mine appears next week.

An embezzlement at a bank a few years ago caused the sudden disappearance of two of the firm's clerks, and it was found that they had absconded with a very large sum of money. There was an exciting hunt for them by the police, and they were traced as far as a small town on the sea shore. Interest was at fever heat at the imminent arrest of the two thieves, when the police inspector reported that after examining an important clue, neither or the two men would again be found alive.

A well known Scout Master who happened to be in the district at the time asked the inspector if he could be of any assistance. The inspector being an old Scout himself offered to take the young man along and show him how "finis" was written to the chase. Arrived at the spot. "This is our stile in the distance" said the inspector. "This constable found beside it the pocket-book that I have shown you, containing the name of one of the wanted men and some memoranda in his handwriting. It had evidently been dropped by accident. On looking over the stile he noticed the footprints of two men— which I have already proved from particulars previously supplied to the police to be those of the men we want—and I am sure you will agree that they point to only one possible conclusion." They got over the stile. The footprints of the two men were here very clearly impressed on the snow. They followed the prints closely, and found that they led straight to the edge of the cliff forming a sheer precipice. "Here you see" said the inspector "that the footprints lead straight to the edge of the cliff, where there is a good deal of tramping about, and there end. The snow has nowhere been disturbed for yards around, except by the footprints that you see. The conclusion is obvious."

"That knowing they were unable to escape capture, they decided not to be taken alive and threw themselves over the cliff?" asked the Scout. "Exactly. Look to the right and left and you will find no footprints anywhere, and look over the cliff and you will be satisfied that the most experienced mountaineer that ever lived could not make a decent. "Utterly impossible" said the Scout "What do you propose to do?" "We shall withdraw the cordon and search the coast for the dead bodies" "Then you will make a fatal mistake" said the Scout. "The men are alive and hiding in the district" Just examine the footprints again. One pair is large and the other is small."

"Yes" said the inspector "one man was tall and the other was only a little fellow."

"I thought so" said the Scout "And yet you will find that the tall one takes a shorter stride than the other. Notice also that the small man walks on his heels while the tall man treads more on his toes. You may also observe that the tall man walked behind the smaller one. Because he sometimes treads on the small man's footprints though you will never find the small man tread on his."

"Do you suppose the men walked backwards in their own footprints?"

"No. That is impossible. No two men could walk backwards some two hundred yards in that way with such exactitude. You will not find a single place where they missed the print by even an eighth of an inch. Quite impossible. Nor do I suppose that two men, hunted as they were, could have provided themselves with flying-machines, balloons or even parachutes. They did not drop over the cliff." Now Boy Scouts how did the men get back from the edge of the cliff. Answer next week.

Answers to Last Week's Puzzles.

The simple lad who was so ridiculed for his opinion was perfectly correct; the Miller should receive seven pieces of money and the Weaver only one. As all three ate equal shares of the bread, it should be evident that each ate eight-thirds of a loaf. Therefore as the Miller provided fifteen-thirds and ate eight-thirds he contributed seven-thirds to the Manciple's meal; whereas the Weaver provided nine-thirds and ate eight-thirds and contributed only one-third. Therefore since they contributed in the proportion of seven to one they must divide the eight pieces of money in the same proportion.

The smallest possible number of eggs that the young farmer could have taken to town is 719. THE SPHINX.

PROTECTION OF BUILDINGS AGAINST LIGHTNING

What then is lightning? It is an electric spark of gigantic dimensions springing over the gap between cloud and cloud or cloud and earth. The earth and the clouds are always more or less charged with electricity, and normally there is sufficient intensity to cause a flash, and the presence of elevated earth-connected conductors which send off a steady stream of electricity, help therefore to ward off the occurrence of lightning. When however, the intensity is suddenly augmented as in stormy weather, lightning is created but the discharge takes the path of least resistance between earth and cloud, and so chooses elevated objects in connection with the earth where the intensity of electrification has correspondingly reached sparking voltage.

In traversing the conductors of which these elevated objects are the points, the currents is accompanied by its characteristic effects. Heat will in any case be generated in the conducting material, but if the thermal capacity is large, the temperature need not be excessive. Thus if an artificial path is provided by an iron or copper spire connected to the earth through a stout copper cable, the lightning may almost entirely follow this path, which short-circuits the building, leaving only a harmless proportion of the current to travel down a chimney stack and along a timber beam, the materials of which—because of their inability to bear the temperature generated by the full current—would be set on fire or otherwise injured in the absence of the metal conductor.

The virtue of the artificial metallic lightning conductor lies primarily in its being an elevated sharp point, and secondarily in its being connected to earth by a good conductor of material which is highly resistant to heat—that is what is commonly called fire-proof material, although no material is absolutely resistant to high temperature.

To be Continued next week.

PAUL'S LETTER TO PHILEMON

GOLDEN TEXT—There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.

LESSON TEXT—Philemon. PRIMARY TOPIC—How to Treat a Servant. JUNIOR TOPIC—A Servant Becomes a Brother.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Slave Made a Brother. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christ Transforming Social Relationships.

This letter is a private one. Philemon was a member of the church at Colosse. Onesimus, his slave, wronged him, and fled to Rome. At Rome he came under Paul's influence and was converted. Paul sent Onesimus back to Philemon with this letter—one of the most tactful, tender, and beautiful letters ever written, and the first anti-slavery petition ever penned.

I. His Salutation (vv. 1-3).

In salutation he refers to himself as a prisoner and links Philemon to himself as a fellow laborer in the gospel, having as his special aim to touch Philemon's heart. He makes mention of Apphia, Philemon's wife, and Archippus, the son, who had already enlisted as a fellow soldier.

II. Philemon's Reputation (vv. 4-7). Paul paid a fine tribute to Philemon's character, reminding him that he never prayed without bearing him up before God.

1. His faith and love toward the Lord and all saints (v. 5). It was Paul's hope and desire that Philemon's faith might bear fruit in Jesus Christ. With such an approach, the way was open to Philemon's heart.

2. His ministry to the saints (v. 7). Philemon was most generous in his ministry to the poor saints.

III. Paul's Request (vv. 8-16).

He requests Philemon to receive back Onesimus, the runaway slave, as a brother in Christ. Note the incomparable delicacy and courtesy with which Paul approaches Philemon.

1. He beseeches instead of commands (vv. 8-10). Though conscious of his right to enjoin, he pleads as the prisoner of Jesus Christ for love's sake.

2. He makes his plea on the grounds of grace (vv. 11-14). He admits that Onesimus has been unprofitable, has forfeited all claim upon Philemon, and that on grounds of justice his plea might well be rejected and yet because Onesimus was begotten in his hands (v. 10), was in a real sense a part of his own suffering nature (v. 12), he ventures to suggest that he should be accepted. Though Onesimus hitherto has been unprofitable to his master, he is now profitable to both Paul and Philemon.

3. Paul desired that Onesimus be received back, not as a slave, but as a brother in Christ (vv. 15, 16). Here is the real fugitive slave law. Paul never attacked slavery, but emphasized principles which destroyed it. Christianity changes the whole face of human society. The wise thing to do is to get men and women regenerated and thus transform society instead of seeking change by revolution. Social wrongs can permanently be removed by the creation of a brotherhood which can be realized only by faith in Jesus Christ. Faith in Jesus Christ brings the individual into connection with the source of life. In Paul's request for Onesimus you can hear the pleadings of Christ for sinners. All men have gone astray and have become unprofitable. Though possessing no merit, he has made us profitable. We have been begotten in his bonds. Through his passion, agony of heart, we shall be changed. We can see and hear him now pleading our cause before God's throne for love's sake.

IV. The Basis upon Which Onesimus is to Be Received (vv. 17-21).

The debt of guilty Onesimus is to be put to the account of Paul, and the merit of Paul is to be put to the account of Onesimus. This is a fine illustration of the atonement of Christ. Whatever wrongs we have committed, debts incurred, all our shortcomings are debited to him. Jesus Christ, on behalf of all mankind, has said to God, "Put that to my account. I have written with my pierced hand, I will repay." Onesimus was taken back, not as a runaway slave, but as a beloved brother in Christ.

V. Paul Requests Lodging (vv. 22-26).

He expected a speedy release from imprisonment and purposed to sojourn with Philemon. In all probability this was realized. What a welcome he must have received! Jesus Christ is saying to everyone of his redeemed ones, "Prepare me a lodging."

Yesterday, Today

As for the past, let it sleep if it can. "Sleep on now and take your rest," is the gentle voice of Jesus as to the past. "Rise, let us be going, to be that betrayeth me is at hand," is the next sentence. The past is past. Let that sleep if it can. But there is a future task right now to be done. Don't sleep over that.
