United Church Young People Present Good Play

Apple Blossom Time Scores
a Great Success

A very pretty little three-act play "Apple Blossom Time" was put on by the young people of the Lachute United Church in the Auditorium, last Friday evening, and drew unstinted praise from the large gathering present for the very clever acting of the cast in general, whose work was the equal of anything that has yet been given. All the characters were exceptionally well chosen and the humorous nature of the play kept the audience in roars of laughter from start to finish. The play was a delightful comedy with a bright and merry plot which gave ample scope to the players. When Bob Matthews flees to the crossroads village and assumes the name of Donald Clarke, he finds that he has also assumed the guardianship of a girl whom he supposes to be about ten years old. His first experience in the village is a violent encounter with an eighteen-year-old "impudent whirlwind of a girl" who upsets his dignity, rouses his ire to the boiling point, and then laughs derisively at his threats. Imagine his horrified dismay when he finds that this is the girl over whom he is expected to act as a guardian. With this beginning the plot spins merrily on. Cal, the village constable's attempts to court Polly Biddle, the cook; Spud McClosky and Mickey Maguire's race for the hand of homely Malvina Kurtz, the loud-mouthed Charlie Lawrence and coy Nancy Loretta Harris, the prettiest girl in the village; Anabel Spriggins, the village old maid; haughty Mrs. Forrest; Bob and whirlwind Betty Ann—all these scenes and characters

J. P. MacKIMMIE & SONS
INTRODUCE IMPROVEMENTS TO PLANT

The installation of a new bottling machine in J. P. MacKimmie & Sons' plant represents another advance in the complete modernization of the Bottling Works; and also embraces the Empire-Shopping principle, as this is a machine of English manufacture, imported from Manchester. It is, in fact, the only one of its kind in North America, and with a capacity of 70 cases an hour, fully automatic, ensures the last word in efficiency. Their Miller Hydro bottle-washing machine has the same speed, and when these devices are installed and operating to capacity, the proprietors intend opening their plant for a week of public inspection. The new bottling unit will doubtless attract interested and prospective purchasers to Lachute to view the machine in operation. J. P. MacKimmie & Sons are to be congratulated upon backing the agreeable quality of their drinks with efficient manufacturing methods.

LACHUTE BADMINTON CLUB

A mixed tournament was held in the Auditorium on Tuesday evening March 1st., in which some 20 members took part. The games were keenly contested, the winners being as follows:

A Section.—Miss Marsh and E. Middleton.

B Section.—J. C. Skuffham and C. Henderson.

The finals were then played, Miss Marsh and E. Middleton winning out.

Members are advised that on Tuesday, March 8th., another mixed tournament will be held at 7.30 p.m. in which all are invited to participate.

Since its inception here this winter, the club has proven quite popular there being at the present time some 42 members. Visitors will be made welcome and are invited to join.

County Mourns a Passing Landmark

Late J. W. McOuat was Prominent as Inspector of Schools

All too quickly the chain of stalwarts who have figured in the early history of this community is being shortened; and this week we are called upon to record the passing of one of our most honored and respected citizens, Mr. J. W. McOuat, whose death occurred at his home in the East Ward, on Friday last, at the age of 73 years.

His birth place was Inkerman Ontario. In his passing, not only the community in which he made his home continuously for over forty-four years, but also the province of Quebec, loses a man whose whole influence was for good in educational, social and religious life.

He received his high school education at Lachute Academy, took his Arts degree at McGill University, and assumed the principalship of Lachute Academy in 1886, in which position he worked without stint or measure for four years.

In 1892, he became inspector of public schools, a position which he held for forty years. During a large part of this time he was inspector of all elementary schools in the city of Montreal. To this new work he gave more than honest endeavour and produced many, many betterments inside the circle of his activities. For years he was a member of the executive of the Provincial Teachers' Association and was honored with its presidency. He was also a member of the Central Board.

In religious life, his genuine belief was shown by his many activities in church and other associated philanthropies. For several years he was treasurer of the Presbyterian Church and superintendent of the Sunday School. For over a quarter of a century he was Clerk of the Session, a position he held at the time of his passing beyond. In 1898-99, he took an active part in the union of the two Presbyterian churches formerly situated in the east end of Lachute town. The local Bible Society formed another of the useful works to which he gave unstinted support, while the cause of temperance was close to his heart.

In spite of a handicap in health which became more pronounced as he advanced in years his thoughts were always of others and their welfare—never of himself. His activities continued, his cheerfulness never waned. All these were maintained in extraordinary degree until the last—when he found rest beyond.

Inspector McOuat, whose wife Julia Anne Armstrong, went before, almost four years ago, leaves two brothers and one sister, to mourn his loss. Behind him he leaves, besides many other relatives, four sons, Egbert, Edward, Harold and Kenneth, and a daughter Grace, all deeply sorrowful but immeasurably grateful for the good he did and the life he lived.

Mr. McOuat has passed, but he leaves a fragrant memory of unselfish and devoted service, and the large gathering that attended the funeral service, held in the United Church on Sunday afternoon, bore evidence of true regard and affection. In the discharge of his duties as inspector, he had occasion often to visit the schools, where he sought at all times to inculcate those great ideals, the possession of which have meant so much to the young of this and our neighboring counties. His whole life stood for those ideals which may be summarized as "playing the game." Inspector McOuat's name will not be soon forgotten, and the sympathy of this community is extended to the bereaved family in their sad loss.

Away to a Good Start

Lachute Board of Trade addressed by Industrial Commissioners

The citizens of Lachute are determined to secure for their town a share of Canada's industrial growth. With this end in view an enthusiastic inaugural meeting of the Lachute Board of Trade was held in Desjardins' Hotel, on Thursday evening last where a goodly number of our leading business and professional men were present and listened most attentively to the practical addresses of Mr. F. W. Collins, Industrial agent of Montreal, representing the Canadian Pacific Railway and also Mr. R. F. Howard, representing the Gatineau Power Co., at Ottawa.

L. L. Legault, K.C., President of the Board occupied the chair and called on Mr. Collins, who addressed the meeting on the subject of Industrial development in the course of which he stressed the importance of having the active support of the citizens in the work of securing new industries to the town. A pride in the town's welfare and its future should be inculcated into the boys and girls and the men and women of the town in order that they may cultivate a keen interest in all phases of municipal life.

"We live in a growing nation and each community naturally wishes to secure its fair share of the National Growth," Mr. Collins stated. "This desire is only human, for we know that if we do not go forward, we must of necessity go back, and we also realize that if the community in which we live is growing, we, as individuals, will secure our share of the increased wealth which will be created. So that is why we are all interested, and as a business proposition, if we may treat it in that light we should be intensely interested, for by securing new industries, a national growth will follow, ensuring more employment, with greater possibilities for our merchants, better markets nearer home for our farmers and greater opportunities for the oncoming generation to carve out their futures in their own home town." The speaker referred to two instances of recent date, where the courtesy and enterprise of certain citizens in small towns were responsible for the location of two good industries. Such instance was that of an American firm who had decided to locate a branch in Canada and without advising any person in Canada they sent one of their representatives here to look into the situation. He arrived in the town in question on Labour Day and as the Municipal offices were closed he decided to take a walk about the town and look into its possibilities as a location for his firm and if he thought it suitable he would stay over another day and secure his data from the town officials before going on to inspect other centres. While he was walking about the town he approached a gentleman whom he thought might give him some useful information without divulging his business. It just happened that this gentleman, who had come out thirty years earlier from England, believed in his town and desired to see it grow. When the stranger asked him various questions about the town he immediately sensed that they were not just the commonplace questions, but he visualized beyond them and decided that here was an opportunity in which he could be of service to his community. He gave up his whole afternoon and accompanied the American gentleman around the town and

ARRESTED FOR CARRYING FIRE-ARMS

For carrying a loaded revolver without permit and threatening to shoot Mr. Desjardins, of the Lunch Car, on Main St., one Edgar Marchand, of Montreal, was arrested Tuesday evening and brought before Justices H. Coutu and E. Daoust, who exacted bail of $1,000 and showed him its good points. By this time he became on confidential terms with the man and learned his mission. The next morning he introduced the gentleman to the officials of the town and the outcome was that through his efforts the town secured an industry giving employment to a good number of men. This illustration simply goes to prove that a kindly personal interest taken in a man at first contact will do a great deal to decide his course of action. Those in charge of industries like to feel that they have or will have the loyal and active support of the citizens and this factor is often the deciding one in locating in a town or city.

The speaker enumerated the requisites necessary for those interested in Industrial locations such as Transportation Sites, Buildings, Power and Water Supply, Taxes, Housing conditions, Educational and Recreational facilities, Insurance, etc., and the natural resources in the immediate vicinity of the town which may be the means of inducing an industry to locate. Mr. Collins urged the necessity of keeping in close touch with the different agencies of the business departments of our Railways, Banks and Power Companies as well as the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Consulates.

"Canadian Pacific Railway has been a pioneer in Industrial work in Canada. It has from the very first day of its existence, been very much interested in securing industries along its rails. Our national growth is becoming more noticeable each year and our company is, as in the past, carrying the advantages of Canada to the four corners of the earth. We have, as you know, officers in every centre of importance in Canada, the United States, Europe and Asia. Our Industrial Department is only too pleased to co-operate with your Board in the securing of industries and we extend to you an invitation to avail yourselves of our services and advice. We have industrial offices located at various points across the country and also in London, England. These offices and especially our Montreal office will be only too pleased to assist you at any time in your industrial problems for we truly realize that any corporation, be it railway a bank or a Board of Trade, is great only as the service which it renders to the public is grate."

Mr. R. F. Howard spoke largely upon the Electric Power facilities afforded Lachute by the Gatineau Power Co., and dwelt extensively upon the necessity of the various municipalities doing their share in securing new industrial growth. Mr. Dansereau, M.L.A. assured the citizens of this hearty co-operation promising he would do all in his power to make effective the efforts of the Board.

Mr. L. L. Legault, as President of the Board of Trade, remarked that such enthusiasm and interest as was manifested at this meeting forecast that Lachute was entering upon a new era of growth co-incident with the period of quickened national development which is now underway throughout the Dominion.

A number of speeches were given by those present in which a general vote of satisfaction was sounded. A hearty vote of thanks was extended to the visiting gentlemen for their able and inspirational addresses.

bound him over to keep the peace for one year. Failing to secure the bail, the prisoner was sent to St. Jerome where he now awaits trial. When arrested by Constable Gagné, he was carrying a .32 revolver with two charges and two blanks.

Championship Still in the Balance

Lachute and Brownsburg Stand
Even in Finals

The third of the League playoffs, last Thursday at the Raymond Rink, gave a victory to Lachute, thus bringing Independents and Brownsburg back to an even place in contests for the local cup.

The Brownsburg officers did not accord with the referee's ruling which acceded the winning goal to Independents. It is a regrettable fact that Wm. MacKimmie as the referee, came in for much abusive criticism. While not wishing to spice our reports with any controversial comment, the Watchman points out—for the benefit of any readers with a misconception of local hockey arrangements—that Mr. MacKimmie, with a reputation for fair and impartial ruling as referee during this season's League fixtures, has given his services with no recompense whatever, and is entitled to the confidence of teams under his jurisdiction, regardless of his place of residence or of the results of respective matches.

Thursday's game was closely contested, bringing out the even merits of these two teams—Brownsburg with a well-coached and organized line-up—Independents with a strong individual performance, which has given them an even advantage with their opponents.

The match opened at a fast clip, and Cruise and Cousineau led out with two goals for Lachute, maintaining their usual brilliant game on the forward line. St. Onge and Seary followed up with two triumphs, thus evening the count at 2-2.

The second clash appeared even faster, and neither team could gain a lead, as each side scored two more goals on the count. Seary and Moncrieff slipped the rubber past Chiff for two goals in Lachute net, Drew and Lefebvre scoring for Lachute, thus closing the second period at 4-4.

The third and final set-to left nothing to be desired for speed, although the session closed very damply, in a dispute which quelled the healthy enthusiasm which these play-off games had aroused among the hockey fans. Giroux, from the Independents' defence, took a long shot, checked by Martin who passed to Seary, and Cousineau again secured the puck for Lachute. His shot was saved by Leclair in the 'Burg cage, but Lefebvre passed to Drew, who sent the rubber into the opponents' net, making the winning goal for Lachute. After the score, Brownsburg claimed an off-side. This was over-ruled by the referee, however, and after a fruitless dispute the 'Burg managers removed their boys from the ice. The remaining few minutes of the period found Lachute boys puck-chasing in centre ice, but they took no advantage of the wide-open spaces and empty net behind the opposing blue line.

Thus, an otherwise splendid game fizzled out in an unhealthy dispute. The decision stands, however, and the third game brought a triumph to Lachute. And, with the teams tying in the first, and Brownsburg victorious in the second—the championship awaits the winners in a final League play-off, which will take place tonight (Thursday) in Brownsburg, under a Montreal referee, and the victors will follow up in the Provincial play-downs.

Brownsburg boys staged a good co-operative game, which featured their usual keenness and training. Cruise and Jones also showed splendid team-work on the Lachute offensive. Drew was in good form; and Berniquier, who for some time had not appeared on the Independents' line-up, played a fast, spectacular game but was at times rather slow to co-operate.

Death of Andrew W. Muir at Lachute

of J. C. Wilson Co'y.

It is with deep regret we record the passing of another member of this community, who since his residence in Lachute has become a well-known and respected citizen. Mr. Andrew Wishart Muir passed away at his home here, on the night of Monday, 29th. ult., after a brief siege of pneumonia.

Born at Leslie, Fifeshire (Scotland) in 1867, Mr. Muir came to Canada and resided for many years at East Angus, Que., where he was a respected member of the Masonic and Oddfellow fraternities. He was married 38 years ago to Henrietta Elizabeth Allen who survives to mourn the loss of a devoted husband. One son and three daughters also remain, to whom sincere sympathy is extended by a wide circle of friends in their sudden bereavement.

Mr. Muir was a valued employee of the J. C. Wilson Paper Company, where he has been engaged for 6 or 7 years in the capacity of mill superintendent. He was an active and popular member of the Curling Club and loyal in his membership of the United Church.

The funeral was held at the late residence yesterday afternoon, March 2nd., in the presence of a large and representative gathering. Rev. Mr. Rosborough officiating. The pallbearers were Messrs. A. McOuat, Jno. Falconer, F. Brennan, R. McArthur, Jno. H. McFaul, and Harold McFaul. The remains were afterwards conveyed for interment in the Westbury cemetery of East Angus, Que.

The pallbearers were Wm. Scott, Geo. Armstrong, James Armstrong, Robt. Morrison and Jas. McKenzie.

The late Mr. Parker was born at Lakeside sixty seven years ago, where he lived and farmed the old homestead at Long Lake until twenty one years ago, when he moved to his present farm on Lachute Road. Here his death took place on Saturday Feb. 27th., following a brief illness. He is survived by his wife, his son Arnold and his daughter Freda, all residing at home. He was predeceased by his son Edwin, who died three years ago. He is also survived by one sister, Mrs. Norman Stewart, of Edmonton, and two brothers, R. J. Parker, of Montreal and Rev. Canon Parker, of Winnipeg, both being present at the funeral.

The deceased was always a member and loyal supporter of the Anglican Church.

The large number of friends and relatives attending the funeral testified to the high esteem in which he was held by all who knew him.

The Captain's Corner

THE CAPTAIN'S WEEKLY LETTER.

SIMPLICITY.

Dear Boys :—

Here is an interesting word. Yes I know its quite a common one and you are quite familiar with it, but stay a moment.—Are you ?

The great charm about so many of our English words is that they have so wide a meaning. They, in themselves, seem to contain so much.

Simplicity does not only mean being simple but it goes a great deal further than that. It expresses the state or quality of being clear, plain, unaffected. It conveys guilelessness, lack of cunning and wanting in deceit.

Now note carefully these are all GOOD QUALITIES and H. G. Wells, the famous English Author had this undoubtedly in his mind when he wrote that splendid book "KIPS" and named it "The History of a Simple Soul."

I wish we could leave it at that and say the word "Simplicity" means nothing else, but I have looked up the dictionary and find that there is another meaning to the word and it is "Lack of commonsense, lack of average ability to think or judge." So we are confronted with the BAD QUALITIES of our word and realize that it has two sides to it, right and wrong.

By the way, this word is a noun and as you know from your grammar book. A noun is the name of anything and an abstract noun (which "simplicity" is) is the name of a state or condition of mind. How then does this word apply to you ? I hope and trust that the first part of its definition contains everything where you are concerned and that the last division of the word's meaning does not interest you one little bit. "Simplicity" in its highest sense is the true sign of greatness, and you will find that after all the simple things are really those that matter most in life. Your affectionate friend, THE CAPTAIN.

"The Return of Timothy"

By this time Eric had almost fully recovered, had even with Henderson's assistance, been able to get into his clothes so that it was not long before all three of them were walking, slowly it is true, but none the less walking towards the school.

When the boys reached the School, the first matter that occupied their attention was to place Eric in the hands of the Matron in spite of his continued protests that he was now perfectly alright and did not require to be fussed over and put to bed. Mrs. Stevens, who had spent many years as Matron of St. Albyn's School, had however very decided opinions concerning the welfare of the boys, small and big, who were in her charge.

"And perhaps you will be good enough to tell me what you boys have been up to," she said indignantly. "If you do not know how to behave when you get a holiday, then all I can say is that holidays ought to be stopped. Going out in a boat is bad enough, but to get nearly drowned is ever so much worse. What do you think I can say to your parents if they came down to see you and found you were dead ? I am sure I don't know ? And as for Henderson, I am ashamed of you. Look at this poor little boy," she went on pointing to Eric, "and the sooner he is in bed, the better." On which she took hold of the little fellow, dismissing the others with a few final words of condemnation.

Eric, much to his disgust, was forced to go to bed while it was still daylight, which he considered to be a very unjust punishment after all he had gone through.

Kenrick and Henderson made their way to their class-room where they were received with a volley of questions as to where they had been and what they had been doing. But they found that there was a new excitement which was occupying the minds of their school-fellows and so forcing their own adventure into the background.

Bullinger, the head boy of their class and consequently one of the monitors, came up to them as they were wondering what it was all about. "Do you know," he said, with a grin on his face, "what has happened."

"No," replied Kenrick, "but everybody seems to be labouring under some mysterious influence. Perhaps you could tell us what it is all about."

"I can and I will," responded Bullinger with marked condescension. "But first tell me where your chum is."

"Oh, Sellingcourt, you mean," replied Henderson, "he won't be down again to-day. The matron is looking after him."

"Ah that's a pity," continued Bullinger, "because he will be missing all the fun."

"What fun, do tell us. What a chap you are for beating around the bush. To get any information from you is just like drawing a rusty nail out of the wall," exclaimed Kenrick.

Bullinger ignored this punt with a shrug of his shoulder. "Well if you must know and I suppose you must, Timothy has come."

"My hat ! and who on earth is Timothy," asked Henderson "and why should there be all this excitement anyway ?"

Bullinger grinned more broadly than ever. "I forgot, of course you fellows would not know about him. It is not to be expected but Timothy is the greatest chap in the world. He is the leader of every bit of fun that was ever thought of, the champion of them all at games and the terror of the Masters."

"What a paragon," murmured Kenrick underneath his breath but aloud he said, "Well where is this wonderful fellow."

"I do not know but I believe he is at the moment with the Headmaster, who will naturally be wanting to see him on his return," said Bullinger.

"Return," echoed Henderson, "then he has been here at the school before ?"

"Of course he has," replied Bullinger "and that is why there is so much excitement now. He was here just about a year and then for a reason that has never been given, he mysteriously went away."

Kenrick picked up his ears. "Mysteriously," he whispered, "how was that ?"

"Well," answered Bullinger now thoroughly enjoying himself on account of being able to give away so much information, "you see, he was not expelled as far as we know, neither did he leave at the beginning of the holidays like anybody else would but he simply vanished right in the middle of the term."

"Whew !" whistled Henderson. "Then it is a mystery after all. Do you think he will tell us why he went away like that ?"

"No," replied Bullinger, "you may make up your mind on that point anyway, because he won't. Splendid chap as he is as far as school is concerned, he is as close as an oyster about his own affairs."

CRIME BOOKS

The number of crime books that are read and the type of people who read them are always a surprise to me. Why is it ? What is the attraction ? It is not only people who read fiction without discrimination that enjoy detective stories but some of the keenest minds find their relaxation in reading them. Well everyone to their taste. It is not mine. I read most anything I can lay my hands on but pass up crime stories. It is only a case of sheer desperation when I read them. All the time I am reading I am cross at myself for wasting time. But once started I finish the book.

We all read as a means of escape from ourselves. It is because the crime book is such a contrast to the well-ordered lives of most of their readers, that they are so avidly read ? There certainly is some good reason for their strong appeal.

What effect will these books have on our young people ? There are many of them, such as spy stories and others of that like that are adventure stories and harmless. Then there are others that are so obviously impossible that they can have little effect. But what of the others ? One had had eight books from the library and out of that eight, six had crime of some sort in the title.

Thrillers everywhere. The serials in the magazines and papers are full of mystery.

WHIPPED CREAM DESSERTS

One of the nicest things about the cold weather is the fact that it helps cream to whip. Any kind of cream, not just whipping cream. When you have to buy whipping cream it makes the desserts rather expensive but the cost is much lessened when ordinary coffee cream can be whipped. I make a great many cream desserts but to tell the truth I do not think I ever use a recipe. I have a look at what is in the refrigerator, the cake box, and the cream bottle and make it accordingly.

Sometimes it is just a fruit whip. That is preserves folded into whipped cream. We are specially fond of Raspberry Whip. It is made very easily by whipping the cream and adding raspberry preserves. If canned raspberry is used it should be drained off juice. Strawberry whip is another favorite. These are rich desserts and require small servings. To lessen the richness and increase the quantity I frequently crumble cake or cookie crumbs into the mixture. This is an agreeable way of using up the left over cake or cookies. Lemon juice added to this is a decided improvement as it cuts the very rich taste and makes its slightly tart.

Chocolate wafers blend specially well with whipped cream. I mean the kind that you buy in tins or boxes. I usually try to keep a box on hand as they seem to fit in so well with these whipped cream desserts. I have told you before about the use of them for Chocolate Ice-box Cake and for individual desserts. If you have missed this and would like to know about it just write in care of this paper. When I wish to make a dessert in about five minutes, I whip some cream, & add sugar and vanilla then I crumble a few chocolate wafers, fold in some pineapple strawberry and raspberry, add lemon juice. Then I taste to see if it has enough sugar or lemon juice and put in a cold place until ready to serve. It can easily be done in five minutes. Remember, do not use large quantities of any ingredient. It is a case of a little going a long way.

Marshmallows are a decided improvement to a whipped cream dessert. Cut them in pieces with wet scissors & soak them in the fruit juice while you are whipping the cream. The use of wafers or marshmallows permits using cream which does not whip very stiff as they help soak up the unstiffened cream. If you have not tried these desserts try them, as they make acceptable desserts for either family or company.

Auntie Di's Letter

My dear children :

Well, how are you all ? Are you very anxious to know the latest news about Harigold ? Well, so am I, but I am sorry to have to admit that there has been nothing of him seen or heard for three whole weeks. You remember the last seen of him was in Mid-Atlantic, and I am afraid he has stuck to his plan of taking a tour round the world.

I think Marigold has quite forgotten him now, and is quite satisfied with her new playmate. So when Harigold comes back, if he ever does, he will be just like Peter Pan, who, you remember, ran away when he was a few days old because he did not want to grow up. Then one day he thought he would go back, but he found that his mother had another little boy. At least, that is what he said. If you have not read about Peter Pan, do so as soon as possible. Peter Pickle was named after him.

Well, Goodbye, chicks, be good children till next time.

Your loving Auntie Di.

Marjory-Ella goes to the Fair

"Do you remember, Peter," asked Trudy, that Marjory-Ella and the twins had just reached the police station when we were talking of them last ?"

"I remember Trudy," said Peter. Please hurry up and tell me the end !" So Trudy went on.

The big policeman turned into the entrance of the station, and Marjory-Ella noticed that there was a big red light over the doorway, on which she could read the words, "Police Station." The policeman paused and set the twins down in the hallway, and then ushered the three children into a nice little room, and told them to sit down and not be alarmed.

Marjory-Ella led the twins to a horse-hair sofa and sat down between them.

"Marjory-Ella," whispered Bunny, fearfully, "is this prison !"

"I don't think it can be," whispered back Marjory-Ella, doubtfully. "It looks too—too—comfortable for that !"

They could hear voices in an adjoining room, but for several moments they were left quite alone. Bunny's next question startled Marjory-Ella, and almost made Biddy cry again.

"Will they cut our heads off ?" Marjory-Ella, he asked and Marjory-Ella gave him a little shake as she answered.

"Don't be silly, Bunny, of course not. They don't do things like that in these days. And be quiet, you are frightening Biddy !"

Just then the policeman entered, and with him was the police sergeant, with a little black notebook. Both men smiled so pleasantly at the children that they quite forgot to be afraid.

"Tell me your names, children," said the sergeant, coaxingly, "and then we'll see about sending you home."

Marjory-Ella swallowed hard. It seemed so dreadful to have your name in a little black notebook, but she said in a determined, little voice, "I am Marjory-Ella, Mum, and the twins are Bernard and Bridget Rowe."

"Y-yes, sir," faltered Marjory-Ella. "And do you live in Rose Cottage, in Walling Lane ?" he continued.

"Y-yes, and Bunny and Biddy I live next door in Myrtle Cottage," said Marjory-Ella.

"My dear little girl," smiled the police sergeant, "I know your father quite well, and I am going to see that he comes and fetches you as soon as possible, or else I'll take you home myself. I can't think how you got yourselves into this pickle !"

Tears sprang to Marjory-Ella's eyes, but she said bravely.

"I am quite sure the twins did not take the man's watches, but—" Then Bunny broke in excitedly, "Marjory-Ella, it was a big boy gave them to us, and we were just putting them back. He told us to take them home, cos he had a lot of them. He told us he hid them in his garden an' I know where he lives, and so does Biddy !"

"Yes, I do," nodded Biddy, 'cos we've seened him lots of times going in his house !"

The sergeant sat down and took a twin on each knee. "Well, well, well !" he laughed, "that explains everything !" Why ever didn't you tell me this before ?"

"We did tell the man at the fair," said Biddy, "but he just shook us and shook us and we—we—were so frightened !"

"Poor little kids !" said the sergeant. "Now, look here, I'll take you all home, and you see if you can show me the house where this naughty big boy lives." "I know it," said Biddy. "So do I," said Bunny.

"Tell Peter," said Trudy, "the end of the story is that they found the big boy who took the watches, so that everything was quite all right !" "What did they do to the boy ?" asked Peter eagerly.

"I think they put him into a nice place where he could be taught not to steal," answered Trudy.

"What ! Not prison ?" exclaimed Peter, in a very disappointed tone.

No, Peter ! he was too young for that ! Now off you go to bed !" laughed Trudy.

"All right," grumbled Peter, "but I think the boy should have gone to prison !"

"Good night, chicks, till next time !

A CONTEMPORARY writer in the weekly press suggests that, by way of peace propaganda, all history books used in our schools should be revised, substituting for the pictures of victorious generals a few apt illustrations of wounded private war widows and fatherless youngsters.

History, as taught in the class room, has undoubtedly impressed our youth with the glory of battle, rather than with the privation and stark tragedy of war. A more accurate picture might truly create the desire for peace, and foster its preservation for tomorrow's citizenry.

Another suggestion concerns those red-eyed optimists who, never having fought or remotely suffered in wartime, believe the declaration of another war would stimulate industry and agriculture to prosperous times. Our contemporary writes, "Let us gather up all the blood-thirsty opportunities who think war would be a good thing for the price of pigs, and present them as a gift battalion to the Chinese Army, with our National compliments, hoping the belligerent experience may broaden their minds."

(Not a bad idea either. But according to last reports, the war is about to end.—Ed.)

AN INTREPID British motorist broke his own (world) record last week on Daytona sands driving at the incredible speed of 253.9 miles an hour. Malcolm Campbell's feat is gratifying to us of the red, white and blue, who rejoice in Britain's quiet progress in scientific development. Her proficiency in engineering is perhaps typified by the Blue Bird, an automobile with speed and endurance to carry its driver over the surface of this planet faster than man had ever driven. And Campbell himself may be said to characterize the quality of perseverance, having undertaken this new trial to establish higher claims, even though Britain's record was not at stake, for it had not been broken.

British sportsmanship itself is a source of pride and admiration. Its very humility is as remarkable as its fairness; and whether in victory or defeat, the Englishmen engaging in our international contests are sportsmen to the core.

The quality of humility is sometimes disparaged. In these days of aggressive competition, an unassuming attitude may be detrimental to success in Big Business. But for all that, Great Britain is not behind the times in industry.

While speaking of records, we might cite another instance, relatively unimportant, gleaned from an obscure item among the week's press clippings:

Some time ago a U. S. firm undertook to show how quickly a suit of clothes could be made from the sheep's wool. It succeeded in producing a suit in six hours and five minutes. Then the other day a Yorkshire manufacturing company and a Leeds tailoring firm started with the shearing of a sheep and finished a suit for the Hon. J. H. Thomas in exactly three hours and twenty-two minutes, or two hours and forty-three minutes faster than the United States record.

There were no headlines in the London Daily Mail.

B. Y. P. U. Sleigh Drive.

The young people of the Maple Ave. Baptist Church held a sleigh drive on Monday night. There was quite a good turn out.

After the drive came games and eats. There was a great silence during this procedure; and some were evidently in good practice as they know how to dispose of lots in a short time.

An enjoyable evening was spent, although some of those present are still husky from so called singing.

The services in the United Church next Sabbath, Mar. 6th., will be conducted by Rev. F. A. Robinson, M.A., Ph. D., of Toronto, the secretary of Biblical Missions, a noted evangelist. Dr. Robinson has spoken in many of the larger towns and cities of the Dominion and always with a gripping message of gospel truth and his work has been most highly commended by both press and pulpit. He is accompanied by Miss C. B. Grunert, of Chicago, a most versatile pianist, and the opportunity of hearing both is unusual to a village community. Miss Grunert combines a remarkable technique in her playing with a degree of versatility and original improvisation that are most unusual and the combination of preacher and pianist should make the services exceedingly helpful and inspiring. In the afternoon at 3 o'clock Dr. Robinson will tell the story of Old Ken's Round Up, one of the characters of the North West, and how the old reprobate became converted under the preaching of Dr. Robinson forms a narrative that is enthralling to its close. On Monday evening he and Miss Grunert will give "Customs and Costumes of Bible Lands", a sort of oriental pantomime, which is under auspices of the W. M. S. and commences at 8 o'clock.

Advertising for the Merchant of To-Day

conducted by
HAROLD S. EDGAR

A series of weekly articles on advertising and merchandising prepared for the merchants of Lachute District with the co-operation of the Watchman.

Much has been said and written about the National Advertising of the large Manufacturers, but little has been written about the advertising which the town and rural merchant can and very likely would do if he could feel that he was on the right track.

It is the purpose of this series of articles to deal with some of the various problems of the town and rural merchant and to discuss the different ways in which he can attract more business for his store and his community.

In order to prove to the manufacturer that we are in a worth while market worthy of a portion of his annual advertising appropriation, we must be willing to put forward our best efforts to improve our publicity, advertising, merchandising and salesmanship.

Advertising is not very difficult. The problem is to be yourself—have something to say and say it. Look around for opportunities to attract more sales.

The consumer of today will go where he or she is urged to go because of quality, value or service.

The merchant of today must not be content to open a shop and then sit down and wait for business to come. He can't afford not to advertise.

There are many ways in which we can advertise. Sometimes in an indirect way. Sometimes direct.

For the farmer specializing in dairying, every additional bottle of milk or cream and every pound of butter that people can be urged to use means money in his pocket.

For the farmer specializing in vegetables or apples the same is true.

All of us have something to sell, whether it be products of our farms, manufactured goods from our shelves or a service; and the more we can tell the people who pass our doors and gates about them, the further our sales are going to develop.

Let me enumerate some of the things we ought to check over to see if we are using them to the extent we should and in the right way.

Memories of Old St. Andrews

There is a spot on Carillon Hill impressive in its sylvan beauty, overlooking the "Grand River," that is crowded with the memories and associations of days long gone by. The stately pines of the "forest primeval" fit emblems of immortality, cast their shadows on unnumbered graves of the fathers of the hamlet, and five succeeding generations since the pioneers of the Lower Ottawa Valley found their last resting place.

This hallowed burial place, has been, and will ever be a veritable shrine to many a traveller from afar seeking the graves of his forefathers.

As the visitor approaches the centre of this beautiful cemetery (now sufficiently endowed to insure its perpetual care) he will notice a massive stone wall three feet high, capped by dressed cut stone granite and surmounted by a steel fence five ft. high, built over one hundred years ago, and so solidly built that the fence has never moved from its plumb. This interesting landmark of the old cemetery bounds the burial place of the Macdonnells. Therein lies the dust of Colonel Edward Macdonnell at one time Aide de Camp to the Duke of Wellington during the Peninsular War. Later as a Colonel in the British Army he was sent as Quarter-master General of the forces serving in Canada.

His son Colonel Charles Macdonnell who erected this memorial was the organizer of the Argenteuil Rangers, and was their commanding officer at the battle of St. Eustache during the rebellion of 1837.

The marriages of these Colonels are noteworthy. Col. Edward's wife was Ann, the eldest daughter of Sir John Johnson, and Col. Charles wedded Ann Turner the only daughter of John Turner, court jeweller to William IV, and a niece of the renowned landscape painter J. William Turner, who is conceded to be the greatest genius of all time in this branch of the painter's art, and whose wealth was estimated to be £140,000 (see Encycl. Brit.)

He was a great traveller in the interest of his Art and we are not able to narrate that this rich bachelor uncle ever visited his niece in her St. Andrews home, though his wealth may throw some light on the lavish expenditure of this colonial home. Had he visited St. Andrews, the scenic charm of the North River Valley might have figured in his famous "Liber Studiorum," or have adorned the walls of the Royal Academy. The Macdonnell residence was one of the finest of its day, and was a centre of much of the social life of the time. It still stands in perfect condition, the possession and home of our neighbour, Mr. Robert Jones who is still going strong in his ninety second year.

The late Miss Mary Howard in her ninety-seventh year has told the writer of her intimacy with Kitty Macdonnell, and in graphic speech pictured the convivial dinner parties when these teen-age lassies played their part on these festive occasions.

An interesting feature of this colonial house was the massive stone wall which surrounded the lot and hid the view of the pretty garden from the passer-by. How suggestive those old boundary walls were of the psychology and the exclusiveness of the aristocratic mind! Mr. Jones states that its original height was six feet before the present roof was added, and that the whole structure represented 6500 cubic feet of masonry, costing as much perhaps as the residence it enclosed.

Miss Howard was the daughter of Dr. Thomas James Howard, the trusted physician of a large circle in St. Andrews during the period when the town was at the height of its prosperity. His confreres at that time were Dr. Pike and Dr. Lawrence. After an adventurous career as midshipman in the Royal Navy, Dr. Howard studied medicine and practised as physician and surgeon in Devonshire, England. With a family of twelve children he came to St. Andrews during the summer of 1844 when Miss Howard was in her ninth year. His first home was the brick house built by Frederick McArthur, in recent years beautified by his grandson the late Ernest Larmonth. Dr. Howard afterwards lived in the house on the opposite corner, now the attractive home of Miss Christie McKeracher, another of our lively octogenarians. These century old houses overlook the old Market Square, the scene of events of historic interest, which will be told about.

New Brunswick will be selected as the training ground for the Boston Bruins Hockey Club prior to the 1933 N. H. L. season. About 40 players will go into the hunting camps some time around October 15.

Autumn sowing of all grains in Soviet Russia last year amounted to 95,400,000 acres, representing a decrease of 10.8 per cent from the official fall sowing programme mapped out by the government, according to a recent cable received by the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce.

Week-end trips, so popular last year on Canadian Railway lines, will remain in force this year after February 29, the date set for their discontinuation. The Canadian Passenger Association has reached this decision under pressure of public demand. Under this arrangement, round trip tickets between any Canadian stations for any week-end are offered by the railways at the rate of one and a quarter times the regular single fare.

Our Puzzle Corner

Sometimes people will try to bewilder you by curious little twists in the meaning of words. A man recently propounded to me the old familiar problem "A boy walks round a pole on which is a monkey, but as the boy walks the monkey turns on the pole so as to be always facing him on the opposite side. Does the boy go around the monkey?" I replied that if he would first give me his definition of "to go around" "I would supply him with the answer. Of course he demurred, so that he might catch me either way. I therefore said that, taking the words in their ordinary and correct meaning, most certainly the boy went around the monkey. As was expected, he retorted that it was not so, because he understood by "going around" a thing that you went in such a way as to see all sides of it. To this I made the obvious reply that consequently a blind man could not go around anything. He then amended his definition by saying that the actual seeing all sides was not essential but you went in such a way that given sight you could see all sides. Upon which it was suggested that consequently you could not walk around a man who had been shut up in a box. And so on. The whole thing is amusingly stupid, and if at the start you, very properly decline to admit any but a simple and correct definition of "to go around" there is no puzzle left and you prevent an idle, and often heated argument.

This week I give a puzzle with which school boys and girls can get some of their own back on their teachers. I have two cubes of solid silver, they measure two inches every way, each contains eight cubic inches of silver, and therefore the two together contain sixteen cubic inches. I want to get the exact dimensions for two cubes that will together contain seventeen cubic inches of silver? Of course the cubes may be of different sizes.

The answer to last week's puzzle is:

Though the cubic contents are sufficient for twenty-five pieces, only twenty-four can be actually cut from the block. First reduce the length of the block by half an inch. The smaller piece cut off constitutes the portion that cannot be used. Cut the larger piece into three slabs, each one and one-quarter inch thick, and it will be found that eight blocks may easily be cut out of each slab without any further waste.

THE SPHINX.

Two Alberta speed-skating records were smashed at the recent Banff Winter Sports Carnival. The 220 yards event was won by A. E. Hardy, of Saskatoon, in 20 seconds flat, 4-5 seconds better than the former Alberta record. The Three mile event was also taken by Hardy in 9 minutes and 2-5 seconds, being 23 and 3-5 seconds less than the former Alberta record. Miss Margaret J. Nicol, of Drumheller, was elected Carnival Queen and will reign over the Banff Winter Sports Carnival of 1933.

Travellers in Canada at Easter-tide will have the benefit of the same ticket privileges as were granted them at Christmas, according to a recent announcement made by the Canadian Passenger Association on behalf of the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways. This concession will be fare and a quarter for round trip generally to the travelling public, between Thursday, March 24 and Sunday, March 27 with return available up to Tuesday, March 29.

Fifty-seven 10-year leases of salmon and trout fishing rivers, lakes and streams in New Brunswick will be put up to public auction at the Parliament Building, Fredericton, April 7 next, at upset prices ranging between $25 per annum and $12,000 per annum, is the announcement of Hon. L. P. D. Tilley, provincial Minister of Lands and Mines. They represent the pick of salmon fishing facilities on this side of the American continent.

Miss Jessie Marie De Both makes her delicious

Apple Dumplings with Magic Baking Powder

WHEN a young housewife asks me what baking powder she should use," says Miss De Both, director of the famous De Both Home Makers' Cooking Schools, "this is my advice: Use the best—one that is pure, uniform and invariably dependable. You can't use second-rate baking powder and expect first-rate results.

"My experience with Magic has been particularly happy. I find that it never varies—that it is consistently reliable. And I know it is pure, and free from harmful ingredients." Statements by other well-known cookery authorities give whole-hearted support to Miss De Both's judgment.

In fact, the majority of dietitians and cookery teachers throughout Canada use and recommend Magic exclusively.

Apple Dumplings
1 quart flour 1 1/2 cups milk
2 teaspoons Magic Sugar
Baking Powder Cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon salt Apples
2 tablespoons butter

Sift into bowl flour, baking powder and salt. Rub in the butter. Add cold milk to make soft dough. Turn out on to a floured board and roll into a sheet. Cut in squares. Peel and core the apples. Place an apple on each square of dough. Fill the core with a small piece of butter, sugar and a little cinnamon. Fold the dough over, taking care that there are no openings, as the steam inside dumplings cooks the apple while dough is baking. Brush dumplings with a little cream, and place in greased pans. Bake in moderate oven at 400° F. about 40 minutes. Serve with cream or hard sauce.

THE MASTER MIND

Novelized by Marvin Dana,
Author of "Within the Law,"
From the Successful Play
by Daniel D. Carter

"A true lover should never be discouraged," came the cryptic reply. As he spoke, Andrew opened the door, and motioned that his visitor should leave the room. "Till 2 o'clock," he said.

CHAPTER X. "Family Affairs."

AS Creggan, the thief, went out of the door opened for him by Parker, Walter sought Andrew and addressed him jocularly.

"That guy's my visitor. I'm hep. What?"

"He asked for you—yes," Andrew conceded. "He will call again, later, to verify certain information I have given him."

"Being some more of that stuff that's none of my business, eh?"

"Your powers of discernment show a decided improvement, Walter," the Master Mind said dryly.

"Come into the library a minute," the thief suggested. "I've got something for you, you know." Then, when they were alone together in the room, Walter took a sheaf of banknotes from his pocket, and gave them to Andrew.

"There's four hundred more I got from sister Lucene. Say, she's sure easy. Same old story. Told her I had to have it—was in trouble. And you see they're marked, like the others. Wainwright is getting wise, that's a cinch. Did you notice, he only began marking the money two weeks ago? Say, Andrew, what's the lay, anyhow? Put me next."

"It doesn't concern you, Walter," was the sharp answer.

"Oh, the devil!" the thief exclaimed, in exasperation. "You make me sick. Well, anyhow, that makes forty-six hundred I've got from her, and given to you in the last month."

"You shall be reimbursed, sir, tomorrow," Andrew promised, gravely.

"Oh, there's no haste," Walter rejoined carelessly.

"Really, you are improving greatly," the butler said commendingly. "Environment has worked wonders in you. It's rather a pity that you cannot remain here to complete your sadly neglected education in the niceties of breeding. You go tomorrow."

"Tomorrow!" Walter repeated the word with an infection of incredulous dismay.

"Yes. You and the Blounts have been the guests of the Wainwrights now for a month. There is such a thing as abusing hospitality."

"But—but where am I going?"

"Wherever you please," Andrew turned curtly toward Parker as the servant entered the room.

"Mrs. Wainwright wishes to see Mr. Andrew."

Walter interposed excitedly.

"I say, Parker, just tell my sister I'd like to see her for a minute first, will you?" Then as the servant withdrew he faced Andrew eagerly. "Look here, he urged desperately. 'I don't want to quit just yet. I've come across for you. Now I want you to come across for me. Won't you? I want to marry Helen.'"

The Master Mind contemplated his puppet with a supercilious stare.

"You grow ambitious, Walter. Mr. Wainwright's sister—a child?"

"The kid's dippy over me," the young man contended warmly. "Any how, she's sixteen. Of course I know Wainwright would be sore on the game. But I believe the kid would slip out to the parson with me at the drop of the hat if only Lucene would pass the word. Now, I want you to speak on my side to Lucene. Be a good pal, won't you, Andy?" He clasped Andrew familiarly on the shoulder.

The Master Mind started back as one would retreat from some noxious pollution.

"If you please!" he said. His tone was dangerous.

Walter cringed abjectly. "I'm sorry. I forgot," he stammered.

Without another look toward him the Master Mind went out of the room.

Lucene entered.

"You wished to speak to me?" she inquired indifferently.

"I want to speak to you about Helen."

"It is absolutely useless, Walter," Lucene declared promptly, with weariness in her voice. "The idea is absurd. Helen is only a child."

"She's old enough to know what she's doing, anyhow," Walter argued.

Lucene shook her head emphatically.

"That's just it," she said, resolutely. "She isn't." She welcomed the coming of Mr. and Mrs. Blount, which put an end to this intolerable tete-a-tete.

Mrs. Blount spoke to Lucene with a half serious playfulness:

"He's such a naughty boy! Has he been worrying you, dearie?" Suddenly her greedy eyes fell on a bracelet that the young wife was wearing for the first time. "Oh, what a lovely bracelet!" she exclaimed, and now her tones were wheedlingly soft and sweet. She placed a hand on the ornament caressingly, but the slender, skilled fingers were busy.

Lucene, however, was in no mood to be patient under the impositions of this woman. She drew her arm away quickly.

"No, you shan't have it," she declared spiritedly.

"Why, dearie?" Mrs. Blount cooed placatingly, the heavy lids drooping low over her big, slumberous eyes. "I only wanted to—"

Lucene was ruthlessly frank.

"No, I tell you. You've taken almost everything I have already."

The husband fairly glared at his wife.

"You told me she gave 'em to you!" he growled bitterly.

"And you did, didn't you, dearie?" the wife persisted, alarmed.

But any hope of help from the girl as an ally was dissipated on the instant.

"I did not!" Lucene exclaimed with a vehemence rare in her.

The cold voice of Andrew sounded dominant through the room:

"Mrs. Blount!"

All turned to face the speaker where he stood just within the doorway, but the woman he addressed turned much more slowly than did the others.

Blount, nevertheless, made bold to speak up manfully in behalf of his erring spouse.

"Oh, that'll be all right," he declared, with an effort toward assurance.

"She'll give them back, of course."

Andrew, however, made no answer. For that matter, he was no longer giving attention to the woman or her husband. He was, instead, listening to the dialogue between Walter and Lucene, for the young man had seized this opportunity to continue his pleading with the girl.

"Say, if you'll do this for me," he was urging. "I'll never bother you again. Come on now! Won't you?"

"No," was the steadfast answer. "I will not. During the last month you have made my life miserable by forcing me to get money for you from my husband to save you from disgrace, and incidentally myself. But you may threaten me as much as you like—you shan't have Helen. No, no!"

"Why not, I'd like to know?" Walter demanded blusteringly.

The reply was explicit:

"Because you're not fit."

The contemptuous words caused the thief's fury to pass all bounds.

"Oh, I ain't eh?" he stormed. "Well, I'd have you know I'm just as fit for Helen as you are for Wainwright. See? And, if you don't help me, why, my fine lady, I'll just—"

Andrew's voice broke off the half spoken threat.

"That will do, Walter," he commanded. "Lucene is right."

The young man protested.

"But I only want to marry Helen."

"It is impossible," Andrew retorted. Walter stared again.

"So, that's the game, is it?" he sneered. "Well I don't go tomorrow!" the thief cried, wrathfully.

Andrew turned blandly toward Blount.

"When you go out will you be so good as to send Parker here as your son will wish to give some orders about his packing. By the way," he added carelessly, "you and Mrs. Blount also will be leaving tomorrow. Have you by any chance an objection to make?"

"Objection? No!" Blount said vigorously. "Lord, we'll be tickled to death to go home."

Blount led her from the room. But before the pair had quite reached the door the Master Mind called again to the westerners:

"Oh, Blount! And tell Parker also to send Mr. Marshall here."

Lucene sank down wearily in a chair. But Walter approached Andrew again.

"Now, look here!" he exclaimed true enough. "I don't scare worth a cent, and I'm advising you that you'd better go light too. I know a thing or two." He grinned evilly.

Andrew regarded his rebellious tool with undisguised disgust.

"Very well, Walter. When Mr. Marshall comes we are going to allow you to confide in him at your pleasure."

"Aw, let him come!" Walter declaimed valiantly. "What do I care for him? Where does he get off, anyhow?"

Then Andrew replied in a whisper.

"Mr. Marshall is a detective—in the Pinkerton service."

Walter was unable to control a start, and a cigarette fell from fingers that trembled. Andrew stooped and picked it up, and as he returned it to the young man he added in his most subservient manner:

"Pardon me, sir. Was it my awkwardness, or are you perhaps a little nervous, sir?" Again, he changed his tone and spoke now as the Master Mind, turning toward the watching girl, "I think that it is possible Walter will, after all, decide to depart before morning." He faced his victim and lashed the thief with scornful eyes.

"I said, 'Walter.' I should have said, 'Diamond Will!'"

The thief's hand caught at his tormentor's arm in agonized appeal.

"No, no, Andrew!" he cried huskily. "I'll do anything you say."

"It may be too late."

Walter's face was white with terror now.

"Don't give me up, Andrew," he begged. "Oh, for God's sake don't give me up! Lucene!" he called in despair.

Her heart was moved.

"Let him go, Andrew," she interceded. "I don't want any trouble for my own sake."

The Master Mind made no direct answer to her plea. Instead, he turned and spoke to Parker, who appeared in the doorway, following the message he had received from Blount.

"I think it was Mr. Walter who wanted you, Parker," Andrew said in an expressionless voice.

Walter assented with feverish haste.

"Yes, Parker. I'm going away in the morning early. I want you to help me pack."

Lucene, left alone with Andrew, gazed at him with miserable eyes.

"Oh, those dreadful people!" she cried distractedly. "I can't understand how you—"

She checked her outburst with an effort out of respect for the man she esteemed so highly.

Andrew walked to her and stood looking down commiseratingly at the delicate face, in which just now the blue eyes shone a little more dimly than was their wont. He regretted profoundly that the necessities of his vengeance must thus involve in suffering the girl whom he had come to cherish very fondly—more fondly than any other living thing. Sometimes even there stirred in the man's heart a suspicion that perhaps he was growing to lavish on her a love like that he had borne his brother. But always he crushed back the thought as something wickedly disloyal to that brother who was dead—dead at the hands of an enemy who must pay the penalty, though it were to wring this girl's heart, though it were to destroy her every hope of happiness.

"I'm sorry you have been annoyed, more sorry than I can say. But don't waste a thought on Walter. He's not worth it."

"It is all horrible," the girl exclaimed. "Sometimes I—give up—hope. It is all so false."

Andrew viewed this emotion with alarm. At whatever cost this instrument of vengeance must be controlled now, when the hour of victory was close.

"It's true," he confessed, with evident contrition in voice and manner, "that I've been greatly imposed on by these persons. You see, my dear, I couldn't be too particular about the sort of folks I engaged to play a spurious part like theirs. Tomorrow they shall all be gone, and you'll be left to yourself in peace."

"In peace?" Lucene repeated wistfully, and her face was very sorrowful.

"I wonder. Oh," she went on in a burst of feeling. "I know, Andrew, that it was wrong not to tell Cortland everything at the beginning. This secrecy between him and me is a poison that must eat out the heart of our happiness."

"Perhaps it was wrong," the Master Mind agreed unhesitatingly. "In point of fact, I am beginning to regret I advised you as I did." He added very gravely, "I am afraid that now, after all, you may be compelled to be quite candid with him."

The sudden possibility of having to do what she had so dreaded, yet desired for conscience's sake, filled Lucene with terror. She stared at Andrew. The color flowed from her cheeks and left them ashen.

"What do you mean?" she panted.

The Master Mind hesitated for a little, from sheer pity for the stricken creature before him, whom now he must hurt again. He had need to recall all his love for the dead brother to strengthen his will in order to strike the next blow on the already bruised heart of this woman toward whom all the tenderness of his nature streamed.

"Do you remember Creggan?" he asked significantly.

A shudder shook the girl.

"Creggan?" she gasped.

"Yes," Andrew went on; "Jim Creggan of Chicago. I see that you do remember him. Well, he has discovered that you are Mrs. Wainwright, and he is coming here tonight."

A cry broke from the pallid lips.

"Here? What for?"

"Robbery." The single word came laden with horror to the girl's ears, the proclamation of her own degradation.

"No, no!" she protested in despair. "It can't be true! It must not! I won't believe it!"

Andrew maintained an attitude of sympathetic regret as he stood, a little bowed, before her. Under the piteous pleading in her eyes he felt his resolution slipping from him. He would fain have taken her in his arms, to comfort tenderly as might a father. But he braced himself to resist, though he suffered grievously at having to continue her torture on this rack of his own devising.

"I have never misled you, Lucene," he lied, firmly.

CHAPTER XI.

On the Rack.

WE must consider this thing carefully for safety's sake. Suppose this fellow, Creggan, should be caught." He paused to give his conclusion its full intensity of significance. "To save himself he might say he knew you as Maggie Flint."

"Oh, my God!" It was a wail from the anguished woman. Dry sobs shook the slender form.

"Yes," Andrew went on, his own voice vibrant with emotion, "the situation is critical."

LAKEFIELD

The death of Inspector McOuatt is greatly regretted in Lakefield as well as throughout the entire district. Mr. McOuatt, by his sympathy with pupils and teachers; as well as by his readiness to help in every possible way; endeared himself to all with whom he came into contact. A personality as powerful, as modest has passed away, and will be greatly missed.

Quite a few of our local folk attended the funeral of the late James Parker, of Lachute Road. Although Mr. Parker had been away from Lakefield for a considerable number of years; his family was one of our best known and respected in the place. In a quiet and unobtrusive way, Mr. Parker was genial as well as reliable in all the walks of life. As husband, father, citizen, and Churchman he was always found faithful to his duties. His widow and family have the sincere sympathy of all.

Friday, March 3, 1882.

It will be seen in today's issue of the Watchman, that application is to be made to the Quebec Legislature for a charter to build a railroad branch of the Q. M. O. & O. Rly. to go through the township of Wentworth. This is a good move; if this railway goes through, and at St. Andrews too, this coming summer, it will make times lively in Argenteuil.

It appears the report of an Indian uprising in the North-West arose from difficulty between settlers and squatters, the latter opposing the attempt of settlers to take up land.

Sir George H. Perley on Limitation of Armaments

Speech at Geneva Conference

An issue of verbatim records from the Geneva Conference has been received here this week, in which Rt. Hon. Sir George H. Perley's speech appears in the report of general discussion.

Propounding the Dominion's present status in armaments, and her views on the disarmament situation in relationship to national security, Sir Geo. Perley's address is reproduced below for the interest of readers—particularly to readers in this County, of which Sir George is the much-esteemed representative in our Federal Parliament.

The Dominion of Canada, which has a deep and abiding interest in the Reduction and Limitation of Armaments as a method of ensuring world peace is united in urging with all the power at her command, that something practical and concrete should be done toward this end at the present Conference. Her delegation will be proud to carry out its instructions to give any assistance within its power in the achievement of this much-to-be-desired result.

Canada is conscious of the fact that the solution of the problems before the Conference is of direct and vital importance to her, as indeed it must be to every State, no matter what its position may be. There is no country which can escape the result of what this Conference may do, or refuse to do at this time. On every country represented here, there is a solemn obligation taken to do what lies within its power to make the result one of benefit to humanity. Nowhere is this obligation taken more seriously, either by the Government or by the people, than in the country which I and my colleagues have the honour to represent here. In no country is the interest in this Conference, or anxiety for its success, greater than in the Dominion of Canada. The presence here of our delegation of two Ministers of the Crown and the President of our National Council of Women of Canada is an indication of the importance that our Government attaches to it. The Canadian petitions that have been laid before you numbering over half a million out of a population of ten million are a witness to the intense interest of our people in your deliberations. Those petitions are no meaningless lists of names, but the living expression of the public opinion of our Dominion on this question of disarmament. A half million of our citizens, no small proportion of our population, representing every class and every section, have made this declaration for peace through reduction of arms. In the dark days of 1914-1918, the Canadian people put all their energy into war; they are happy now to be able to devote that energy to peace. We take this Disarmament Conference very seriously, because its success will provide an alternative to war and we have been forced to take war seriously.

His Majesty's Government in Canada is convinced that the time has now come for a general limitation and reduction of armaments, and we believe that for this purpose, the draft Convention now before the Conference, though it includes details which require further examination, provides a suitable basis for discussion and consideration.

We appreciate, of course, the relation between armaments and national security, but our experience has taught us that reduction of armaments can itself be a source of security. The two are, indeed, interrelated and interdependent. Certainly,

Hon. G. A. Gordon had Meant no Reflection on Prime Minister

Claims His Address Misrepresented

He had been misled by information which came to him from a source he had considered reliable, Hon. G. N. Gordon, K.C., Peterboro, told a Parliamentary committee when apologizing for statements he had made at a political meeting in Hamilton on January 6, last.

Mr. Gordon's statements at that time, as reported in the Toronto Globe, had charged that Major W. D. Herridge, brother-in-law of the Prime Minister, had been in the pay of the Canadian Government as legal advisor, and was appealing a case for the Canadian Government before the Privy Council, during the time he was abroad on his honeymoon.

Mr. Gordon testified in evidence before investigation that his statements had been misconstrued by the Globe and that, further, he had discovered his facts to be misleading, and had made a public retraction and apology at Cobourg on January 15.

The investigation committee concluded the taking of evidence last Friday, and an official report to the Commons is pending.

Compares Banking in Canada and United States

No failure in Dominion Since 1923, but 2,290 in United States.

Washington, D.C.—Comparison between the banking systems of Canada and the United States to the disadvantage of the latter has appeared in the report of the treasury appropriation bill.

Comptroller of Currency, J. W. Pole told a congressional committee there had been 2,290 bank failures in the United States during the calendar year 1931 and none in Canada since 1923.

"It is a sad commentary on our system," he said, "when we realize that with an imaginary line running between Canada and the United States, where the same character of people live and where the same economic conditions prevail, there is this great difference in banking conditions."

Frank O. Woodman, of Westmount, who was found dead in his home garage this week, a victim of carbon monoxide poisoning, had been a visitor in this vicinity over the week-end and had only returned to Montreal on Monday. While in Lachute he was a guest at the Berniquier Hotel. Mr. Woodman was a frequent visitor to these parts, and spent last summer in residence at Miss Haggart's cottage on Clear Lake.

Radio License Fee to be Increased to Two Dollars

Searching around for new revenue to meet the economic conditions of the day, the government, it is stated, has hit upon radio licenses as a productive source. Announcement is expected at once of the decision to increase the radio license fee from one dollar to two dollars per year. The number of licenses so far issued is near 600,000 and by the end of the month, when the fiscal year ends, it may be close to 700,000. Doubling of the license fee, without involving any great hardship, will therefore mean a material increase in the revenue from that quarter.

Dr. Robinson Stirs Interest in Brownsburg Meetings

The visit of Dr. F. R. Robinson to Brownsburg was fraught with real interest and blessing to all who attended his services. On Sunday his addresses were very helpful and spiritual, with a certain basis of humor and natural commonsense that gave them spice and piquancy, and rendered their truths most effective.

The address in the afternoon on "Old Ken's Round-Up" was exceedingly entertaining. Dr. Robinson adding to his strong abilities as a preacher the art of narrative very few possess, and few still to the degree of captivating interest in which his stories abound. The story of Old Ken is a classic of western mining Missionary experience and sounds like a romance of evangelism, which indeed it is.

The playing and solo work of Miss Grunert were most delightful and a source of real spiritual uplift to her audience. Her playing is accompanied by a fine technique, and in the accompaniment and interpretation of Gospel hymns her touch and improvisations are a revelation.

On Monday evening in the United Church Dr. Robinson put in his demonstration of Customs and Costumes of Bible Lands, with a display of paraphernalia of great variety. The evening, though stormy, gave a good attendance and the address was listened to with the greatest interest. There was also a table of curios and exhibits which was the object of wonder to all who examined it.

Miss Grunert's playing was again a feature of the evening. The whole program was most helpful and instructive and the information on Palestine and the dress and customs of its people was highly illuminating. Should Dr. Robinson ever return to Brownsburg he will be assured of a large and appreciative congregation.

Automobile Taxes Lowest in Ontario

Quebec is High by Comparison

Car owners in Ontario save considerably more than those of other Canadian provinces. Not only do their licenses cost less, the highways in Ontario are superior to those elsewhere in the Dominion. The license fees in the several provinces cost as follows: For a Ford in Ontario, charge is $7, in Quebec $17.20, in New Brunswick $25.00, while in all the other Provinces the price is higher than in Quebec but lower than in New Brunswick. For a Chevrolet 6, the price in Ontario is $12.00, in Quebec, $18.95 and in New Brunswick $28.00. For a La Salle 8, one of the higher priced cars, the license in Ontario is $20.00, in Quebec $32.50, in New Brunswick $44.50, while in British Columbia it is $56.05. The higher the price of a car the higher is the license fee, the view probably being taken that those who can afford a high priced car can afford to pay for the luxury of driving it.

The New Northland Returns From Successful Trip

Canada's exhibition trade ship, New Northland, the beautiful vessel of the Clarke Steamship Company, has returned and its safe arrival marks the completion of a venture which is bound to result in a permanent extension of our Dominion's trade with Bermuda, British West Indies, and British Guiana.

This section of our Dominion may well feel proud, that the woollen industry was represented by our local firm of Ayers Limited, with an elaborate and colorful display of its products, which have been seen to advantage in many points of Canada and also at the Wembley Exhibition in London, England, in 1924. Since that time this firm has made remarkable advancement in its lines of manufacture—blankets, rugs, overthrows etc., which are now of world-wide repute because of the "Quality" mark that symbolizes all the output of Ayers production. Its enterprise is such that large extensions have taken place in the establishment and new looms installed to take care of their ever-increasing business; and while perhaps there was not much to be personally gained by Ayers Limited in the display of woollen goods through these warmer climes of the Northland's trip, yet their desire to co-operate is in keeping with the spirit which dominates this firm, in continually bringing Lachute to the fore in the industrial world.

The cruise represented something of a new departure for Canada and it has aroused among West Indian merchants a new and more lively interest in the possibilities of trade with Canada.

The New Northland, with her spacious saloons attractively furnished with exhibits, and with a representative number of Canadian business men among her passengers, sailed from Halifax on the 8th. of January, making her first stop at Bermuda on the 11th. The cordiality of the welcome extended to the Canadian visitors and the interest manifested in the exhibition on shipboard at Bermuda, were followed without interruption by similar demonstrations wherever the New Northland made her appearance, including ports in the Leeward Islands, Barbados, Windward Islands, Trinidad, British Guiana, Jamaica and the Bahamas. Cuba, the only non-British country visited, has been commercially well-disposed toward Canada for some years, and was keenly interested in the trade ship.

Empire Gathering Set For July 18th

Ottawa to be Site of Great Economic Conference

July 18 is announced for the opening of the Imperial Economic Conference at Ottawa. Intimation to this effect was made in highest official sources this week.

Great Britain, the Irish Free State, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Newfoundland and India will send delegates to the conference in the Canadian Capital.

The question of the agenda is now expected to be considered. This matter will be dealt with by cable communication with the different countries.

In the past, the Imperial Conference has occupied from four to eight weeks. The coming conference will probably last from four to six weeks.

Intra-Imperial preference will be the dominating note of the conference; and the general expectation is that from the conference will come trade arrangements between the different parts of the Empire carrying out this principle.

League Championship Disappointing to Hockey Enthusiasts

Brownsburg Wins Cup by Default

Friction among the management prevented a satisfactory conclusion to the local cup contests last Thursday. One cannot attempt to follow complications within the League during the past week, but the hockey-going public is generally deploring the fact that two good teams have been curbed, and an excellent game prevented, through lack of business organization. For spectators have seen Brownsburg and Independents on the ice together frequently this season, and have witnessed among the players themselves a good quality of hockey and a fair sporting spirit.

Independents were billed to meet Brownsburg last Thursday in the conclusive finale of the League play-offs. But that game was never played. Lachute forfeited any claim to the championship, by default, and Brownsburg team holds the cup as victors. Up to date, there appears no other arrangement and the keen season's rivalry has fizzled out in a manner unsatisfactory to players and spectators alike.

LACHUTE VS. ST. JEROME

On local ice last Saturday, Lachute handed a heavy defeat to a visiting team from St. Jerome, in a clean but one-sided game.

Lachute line-up was in good form, displaying a brand of hockey scarcely needed to win the laurels from this weaker team. Lachute's heavy offensive, with Giroux defenceman frequently to the fore, found an inadequate check in the visiting goaler. And even though St. Jerome's strength seemed concentrated in their defence, Lachute boys broke through for some dozen goals, St. Jerome scoring only twice in the local cage.

Line-up:
Lachute: Church, Lefebvre, L. Cruise, Cousineau, P. Lefebvre, Lachute Subs:—W. Drew, H. Jones, C. Drew, Beauchamp.
St. Jerome Subs:—Robert, Millette, Allard.

ACADEMY VS. HAWKESBURY

Lachute Academy team continued their successful season of hockey, with many triumphs but no defeats to their record, in a game with Hawkesbury High School played here last Saturday. The victory was decisive, with score at 10-3.

Previous Saturday's game, arranged with Montreal West High, was unavoidably postponed. This match was being keenly looked forward to, opponents being a team closely matched with our Academy boys; the earlier encounter had been indecisive, resulting in a tie.

Despite all indications of a premature Spring, heavy snowstorms this week have plunged us again into the atmosphere and appearance of Winter. The mild weather of recent weeks had led folks to believe we had blessedly emerged from winter, but the weather proves itself once again an unreliable indication of the seasons.

Weather, seemingly, abides by no rigid rule, nor conforms to any human whim or prophecy. This time, the Fickle Jade seems to have deceived the instincts of our migrant birds, for crows are reported to have been seen over these parts.

Gala Day at Ladies' Curling Club

Social Day Ends Busy Season

Gala Day at the Club Rooms was a pleasurable event for Lachute's Lady Curlers, when members assembled last Tuesday for official closing of the season's activities on the ice and for presentation of awards.

A splendid luncheon was served, followed by a session of Bridge, concluded by the presentation of prizes. A much-appreciated feature was the donation by Mrs. (Rev.) Rosborough of a handsome silver cake plate as Junior Bonspiel trophy.

Winners of the Club Trophy were—Mrs. Ardill, Miss B. McOuat, Mrs. J. Anderson and Mrs. J. Drew (Skip).

Winners of the President's Prize (Mrs. J. Gall) of silver cake plates, were—Mrs. G. Deacon, Mrs. Rice, Mrs. Bothwell, Mrs. W. Cottingham.

Vice-President's Prize (Miss G. McOuat) of silver bon-bon dishes, for doubles, was awarded to—Mrs. J. Rice, and Mrs. S. McFaul.

St. Andrews Congratulates Popular Resident

The friends of Mr. William F. Drysdale, B.Sc., tender him their congratulations upon his being appointed to the position of Vice-President, Sales, of the Montreal Locomotive Works Ltd., and of all its subsidiaries.

The community of St. Andrews wishes him success, not only in this position, but in all his enterprises. One does not forget what Mr. Drysdale has done for St. Andrews, when things were at a standstill and nothing in sight to provide employment for men. He purchased the Moses Simpson property and farm, thus furnishing men with work for two or three years. Then followed the purchasing of land for the construction of a Golf Course, in which one was fortunate to secure the services of the well-known Golf Course Architect, of New York, Mr. H. Strong, who has since had the triumph of designing the Manoir Richelieu Course. Mr. Strong laid out the St. Andrews course with the idea in mind that it would be the Championship Course in Canada. So far nine holes are completed. The amount of work involved so far in making this course what it is, can only be appreciated by those who saw the nature of the ground before operations commenced.

About seventy-five men were employed daily for the first three years. This has meant considerable to the village of St. Andrews. Life's worries were immensely lightened, for many who had families to support, and the local merchants were afforded greater business.

Mr. Wm. F. Drysdale has been an enthusiast in helping others to earn an honest living, and every appreciation and good wish is extended for his success in future ventures.

The Captain's Corner

THE CAPTAIN'S WEEKLY LETTER.
TWO BOYS SINGING

Dear Boys :

It was my pleasure the other Sunday in Church to listen to two boys singing. Not much you say in this but wait I think there is more in it than just appears on the surface.

Singing is a good thing at all times, and is very largely the sign of real happiness. "Give me the fellow with a song on his lips and you have a man," was the remark passed by a famous soldier during the great War, and this is just as true in times of Peace.

There are of course times when you cannot sing, when it is hard even to whistle, and that is perhaps why Lord Baden Powell, the Chief Scout said thus a boy should "Whistle under all difficulties." Possibly he had in mind that if you could whistle it would not be long before you were singing !—

I have often heard the children singing out in the open on Fletcher's Field in Montreal, under the leadership of Mr. Murphy, the Kiwanian, and one look at their happy faces would convince the most obstinate that singing was a good thing and should be done.

Our two boys sang !—That was good, but even better was the fact that they sang together, each taking his part correctly, the one not encroaching on the other. This was team-work at its best, and here we have a most valuable lesson—which is that by co-operation the best results are obtained.

They sang together and they sang well. Why ?—Because each had confidence in the other. There was the spirit of comradeship, I do not know if they were actually brothers. I would have liked to have asked them, but even so, it would have made no difference because they were closely related in the bond of mutual effort while they were singing.

And they sang in public—No easy task for young boys. They might have been nervous perhaps they were but after the start they were NOT. Again Why ? Because in the spirit of song there is no place for nervousness or fright or shyness—only happiness ! I knew they were happy because I saw them smile.

That's the beauty of singing, it makes you SMILE. Try it and see for yourself.

Your affectionate friend, THE CAPTAIN.

The two chums were going to ask further questions but just then Mr. Lawrence came in and immediately everyone had to start their evening preparation for although Saturday was a holiday, lessons had to be prepared read for Monday morning.

In the meanwhile, Eric was having a fairly lonely time. As the little chap lay in bed in the long deserted dormitory with strict instructions that he was to stay in it under penalty of severe punishment if he disobeyed and not being able to fall asleep at this early hour, he had plenty of time to turn over in his mind the events of the day and those first experiences of his school life.

He did not dare to dwell long, even in his thoughts, on his narrow escape that day but he did feel a deep sense of gratitude to a wonderful affection for both Kenrick and Henderson.

It is splendid he kept on saying over and over to himself, to have two such fellows like that for my friends, I do not think I need ever be afraid of school life while they were with me.

Then as the sun was sinking and the shadows began to fill the corners of the long narrow room, the thoughts of the little fellow took a new direction and they dwelt lovingly around his Father and Mother, his little Sister and the beautiful home that was his. Being alone as he was, he did not hesitate to let the tears run freely and he looked up at the ceiling and half whispered, "Oh Mother, if only you were here."

After a little while, he must have slept because when he again opened his eyes the room was in complete darkness. Suddenly he sat up quickly with the feeling that all was not as it should be and he glanced fearfully around. What was that fog or mist that seemed to sway backwards and forwards between where he lay and the window and worse than this, why did his eyes smart so and how was it that he did not seem able to breathe properly. Then with a cry of terror, full realization of what was happening came to him. What he saw was smoke. The school was on fire and he was trapped alone up here away from everyone.

He crawled out of bed and found that he could hardly stand so that he was forced to cling helplessly to the iron framework of the bedstead. Dizzy and sick and because his legs were not able to support him, he started to crawl feebly towards the door through that blinding curtain of choking smoke.

Oh ! he thought. It would have been better if I had drowned in the open sea rather than to be choked and suffocated, like what is happening to me now. He then felt a burning pain and looked back to see a small bright flame playing round his bare feet and with a cry of anguish, he threw himself as far as possible away from the fierce heat of those burning planks, for the floor was on fire.

Suddenly a new sound came to his ears and he wondered if it was but a further terror that he had to face but now nothing mattered and he only prayed that if he had to die it would be soon. However above the roar of the flames and the excited shouts of the boys far down below, the noise which Eric had heard, rapidly drew nearer to him and took the form of rushing hurrying footsteps and then there was a crash as the door of the dormitory burst open to admit a tall slim figure of a boy.

Unheeding the smoke and ignoring the flames as if they did not exist, the newcomer strode quickly to where the little boy lay in a huddled moaning heap, stooped, picked him up in his strong arms and just as firmly as he had entered, he retired with him to the iron staircase which was the only means of safety left.

He had not even troubled to give more than a casual glance to the boy he was carrying and whom he had placed like a sack across his shoulders before whistling a gay tune, he made his descent from the burning building. In a few moments he had reached the playground where eager hands sought to relieve him of his burden and something like a cheer went up at his plucky action.

"Here you," he said to those who were nearest, "you had better see what you can do with him. If he is not burnt to death, he is choked and as I hear that he has been already half drowned, I reckon there has not been much left of him anyway." And with a look of the most imperfect indifference upon his face, he strode away without even a backward glance.

Auntie Di's Letter

My dear children :

I wonder how you will like the new "Marjory-Ella" story ? It is the very largest that Trudy has ever told to Peter, and I expect it will take quite a lot of tea-times to finish it !

We have all decided that we shall never see Harigold again, although of course there is a chance that years and years from now, a sadly-changed, greatly-aged little goldfish will come slowly and wearily back again. Tired of his wanderings, he may be only too glad to be popped back into his old bowl. But of course by that time he cannot expect any fuss, least of all, Marigold, to even remember who he is ! So perhaps he may just as well continue his travels and stay in "foreign parts" for the rest of his life.

I expect, dears, you are all looking forward to your Easter Holidays. Such a relief to get away from the stuffy old school, and the grumpy teachers for a while, isn't it ? Yes, I think so too !

Good-bye, Chicks,

Your loving Auntie Di.

TRUDY'S TEA-POT TALES.
THE PATRIOTS

Are you going to tell me some more about Marjory-Ella and Mickey and Danny and the twins ?" asked Peter at tea-time.

"Yes, Peter," answered Trudy. "I am going to begin a fine brand-new story about how they showed that they were very patriotic."

"That's a hard word," said Peter. "What does it mean ?"

"It means loving your King and Country, Peter," explained Trudy. And that's what the children really meant to do, only somehow it didn't work out quite right !

Then Trudy began.

The two elongated exclamation marks that were Marjory-Ella's black stockings legs that twinkled out of the school gate and up the lane to the little row of cottages that stood at the top of it. Her satchel & books bumped up and down on her back as she ran, her thick curls tossed in the breeze, and her face was scarlet with haste and excitement. She reached the gate of the first cottage at last, dashed through it, flinging down her hat and satchel on the little front lawn, and ran through the little green gate at the side entrance into the long back garden. Ah, there was Danny, in his owl garden, standing tow-headed and freckled in the May sunshine.

"Come on, Marjory-Ella," he yelled as he caught sight of her, and Marjory-Ella completed the last stage of her journey by wriggling through a small gap in the hedge which separated the two gardens.

Danny bent and helped her through and without a word the pair scampered hand-in-hand to the big shed at the end of Danny's garden. They paused, panting, while the boy fished a key from the pocket of his flannel shorts. "Is it really done?" gasped Marjory-Ella.

"Yes," replied the boy, with an assumed coolness, "an its got four wheels !"

"Oo-oo, crooned Marjory-Ella, and Danny unlocking the door at that moment, they stepped inside.

In the midst of a litter of shavings and oddments of wood stood a large soap box, mounted on four wheels, and having two long handles and a smart coat of green paint.

They surveyed it in silence, Danny proudly, for it was his own handiwork, and Marjory-Ella raptuously. She made a movement as if to touch the long handles.

Advertising for the Merchant of To-Day

conducted by
HAROLD S. EDGAR

A series of weekly articles on advertising and merchandising prepared for the merchants of Lachute District with the co-operation of the Watchman.

One of the first things to consider in your search for opportunities for better advertising is buildings and store fronts.

The opinion any people have of a store and its business is the impression they get from the front. It expresses the personality of your store. If the store front is old-fashioned — a dingy unattractive affair people will unconsciously figure that the business is run on the same principle.

Many old stores are entirely too conservative—the fronts are dead. They were designed in the time of bustles and side whiskers and are hopelessly out of date today.

There are three important services for the store front to render.

- (1) To give character to the store.
- (2) To display merchandise.
- (3) To invite and bring people into the store.

We will deal with the first of these functions only in this article.

The cut rate store naturally wants a front that "talks out loud." They get this by wide open doors, the front painted red and the windows plastered with signs which say "Look—Stop," etc.

If a merchant wants to be a bit daring and not appear too conservative, he can use a tricky front painted in a bright shade such as orange, yellow, blue or some other non-conventional color.

The majority of stores desire to be fairly conservative. They are the kind that cater to the average Canadian farmers, home owners, mechanics, and their wives. These will want to follow fairly conservative lines in their store fronts. The modern store front strives to be live and inviting yet dignified.

Mr. Merchant—What is the condition of your store? Stand across the street and look at it. Does it look inviting enough to attract you or your wife if you were shopping. Does it need a fresh coat of paint? Are the colors chosen in relation to the colors used by others? Is yours a distinctive color or is it likely to be known as "Just another store?" What is the condition of the part of the building above your store? Does it detract from the appearance of your own property? Are the windows making sales? Is the building plastered with other people's signs? These items will be dealt with in future articles.

Mr. Farmer—you too have a store. It is your buildings. A well painted group of buildings on your farm is an advertisement in itself. Is the name of your farm and your own name painted on the barn? Are you specializing in dairying? If so you should say on the side of the barn. You should also help to create a wider use of dairy products, by the use of some phrase directed to the consumer, because every additional dollar spent by the consumer for dairy products means more money in your pockets.

Our Puzzle Corner

When you have grasped the conditions of a puzzle, always see if you cannot simplify them, for a lot of confusion is got rid of in this way. Many people are puzzled over the old question of the man who, while pointing to a portrait, says, "Brothers and sisters have I none, but that man's father is my father's son." What relation did the man in the picture bear to the speaker? Here you simplify by saying that "my father's son must be either 'myself' or 'my brother'." But since the speaker has no brother, it is clearly "myself". The statement simplified is thus nothing more than "That man's father is myself" and it was obviously his son's portrait. Let people fight over this question by the hour.

I called into the club the other night and was just in time to hear some of the newly joined members expounding riddles for a party of the older frequenters. This member wanted to be informed "Why is a bung that hath been made fast in a barrel like unto another bung that is just falling out of a barrel?" As the company promptly answered this easy conundrum, the member went on to say A lady was one day seated in her private chamber when her son entered. Upon receiving the parental command "depart my son and do not disturb me" he did reply "I am of a truth thy son; but thou are not my mother and until thou has shown me how this may be I shall not go forth." This is not likely to give the reader much difficulty, see the answer next week.

Answer to last week's puzzle.

There is no limit to the number of different dimensions that will give two cubes whose sum shall be exactly seventeen inches cubic. Here is the answer in the smallest possible numbers. One of the silver cubes must measure approximately 2 1/2 inches along each edge and the other must measure approximately 2 1/4 inch. If the reader likes to undertake the task of cubing each number (that is multiply each number twice by itself) he will find that when added together the contents exactly equal seventeen cubic inches.

Ski Runners of the Canadian Rockies

With a field of activity unequalled the world over the new winter sports association the Ski Runners of the Canadian Rockies, is rapidly coming into prominence among skiers and winter sports enthusiasts generally. The new organization is patterned largely after the famous Trail Riders and its locale, unequalled for scenery and facilities on this continent and probably without a rival even in Europe, is Banff, in the heart of the Rockies, with runs and trails varying from one to ten days in duration and covering such world-known objectives as Mount Assiniboine, Simpson Pass, Shadow Lake, Lake Louise, Ptarmigan Valley and Pass, Bow Lakes and Pipestone Pass. Ski-ing over some of these passes is in full swing as late as June when visitors are enjoying golf and tennis, fishing and hiking, in the valleys below. But the sport begins in November each year.

A thousand feet above Banff and about an hour out from the town is the ski lodge built on the pass between Mounts Norquay and Stoney Squaw. From the club house runs radiate in all directions with cabins and shelters at strategic points for rest and refreshment. There is a 50-metre jump at Buffalo Park and every year in February (this year February 7-14) a tournament is held where the pick of Canadian and outside jumpers compete.

Lay-out shows (1) Ski track across virgin snow with Mt. Assiniboine, 11,800 feet high, in background; (2) Canadian Pacific Bungalow Camp at Magog headquarters for ski-ing at Mt. Assiniboine; (3) Mount Norquay Ski Lodge, 1000 feet above Banff, overlooking the Bow River, with dog team in foreground and (4) The Towers, on Wonder Pass, near Mt. Assiniboine, one of the finest winter scenes in the Rockies.

CHURCH UNION

The present depression is having a great many of unexpected slants. It is affecting so many things in unusual ways. One of these is church union. Church union did many of the things hoped for, but in many towns, it just added another church to the already too numerous number. The depression has brought actual church union closer than it ever has been. Many churches are finding difficulties in financing and they are listening to ideas of actual union with a much more open mind than they ever had before. When the pocket is touched, there you will find interest.

In parliamentary discussion last week, on the subject of Canadian currency and credit, Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett showed himself as an authority on this very intricate matter. His speech revealed a keen insight into the technical side of banking and the economics of the gold standard, and what is more unusual it evoked an unwonted admiration from members of the Opposition benches.

Mr. Cameron R. McIntosh, Liberal member for North Battleford was true to his usual outspoken style, and did not seek to veil his compliments to Mr. Bennett—either upon his speech or upon his handling of the Canadian credit situation during the recent precarious times.

Mr. McIntosh said, in part: "I listened with a great deal of attention to the Prime Minister discussing this very important problem of Canadian banking and credit, and I am free to say that I think he made one of the best speeches I ever listened to in the house so far as he is concerned. After abstracting from it any politics that hon. gentleman opposite might have thought entered therein, I make a candid admission that he gave a really fine exposition of the subject under review. I do not think it does any harm to make an admission of that kind in the house, in a matter of such moment. There should be a good deal of credit coming to the Prime Minister for standing on the financial bridge of the ship of state and directing Canada, during the last few months, in such a way that the credit of the provinces has been taken care of and the credit of the dominion, by his firm stand, maintained in the markets of the world."

Disarmament Conference

every page of history proves that no permanent security can be found in armaments alone, for every effort made to achieve that form of security means insecurity for some one else. Your security becomes your neighbour's insecurity, and he, inspired by considerations of fear and self-defence, builds up his own armaments. The vicious circle has begun, to which there is no end until the sword cuts through.

Our own country is, we have the right to say, relatively without armaments. We are more than ten millions of people, and the fifth trading nation in the world, but our armaments, as the figures which we have published show are calculated only for the preservation of internal order and for the performance of the obligations imposed on us by international law. In no conceivable sense could they be considered as a menace to any State. Nevertheless, we feel secure.

We admit that this security is in some measure the result of a happy combination of historical, political and geographical circumstances. Canada is one of the self-governing countries which compose the British Commonwealth of Nations. On the east and west, we face the ocean on the north, the arctic seas. On the south, we have as our neighbour a great and friendly nation, with whom we have developed machinery for arbitration and conciliation, the successful functioning of which is causing the peaceful settlement of disputes between us (and we have many of them) to become a habit rather than an event. Our experience in this regard has brought us the conviction that the best insurance against war is the friendship and goodwill of your neighbours. We do not deny that in respect to our own situation, then we are one of the most favoured of countries. Yet we make bold to declare that armies on our frontiers or warships on our inland seas might prejudice the beneficent effect of that fortunate situation.

In respect to the organization of peace, the importance of which we appreciate, we recognize the value of the many agreements that have been made during the last twelve years, and we are convinced that those agreements should already have resulted in a marked reduction of armaments, rather than in the disturbing increases which, in many cases, the published figures show. We think further, that this organization of peace can best be achieved at this time by emphasizing the prevention of conflict, rather than the punishment of the aggressors; by building up machinery for conciliation, rather than providing for sanctions; by using the league of nations as a channel through which international public opinion can express itself, rather than by developing it into a super-State. In adopting this view, which we genuinely consider to be a constructive one, we are convinced that we are serving, not merely our own interests, but the true interests of all nations as well.

Interesting X-Ray Lecture

A very interesting lecture was held in the Auditorium on Tuesday evening, when Professor Reilly, of McGill University, was the guest speaker. He had for his subject "X-Rays."

In his opening remarks, Professor Reilly stated that he wished to treat of the subject, under three headings,— "What are X-Rays? How are X-Rays produced? Some of the applications of X-Rays."

Professor Reilly briefly traced the history of X-Rays. The first experiments were tried in 1705. This primitive experiment consisted of a tube which contained mercury. The tube was invented, so as to make the mercury run freely. It was then noticed that there was an effect of a glowing light. This was the first X-Ray.

Later developments ensued. Tubes were made to connect ends to friction machines. During the period from 1850 to 1860 marked the greatest development. However, it was not until 1895 that X-rays were perfected to take pictures. The founder of this was Rontgen.

Professor Reilly then presented a number of lantern slides, showing various kinds of tubes.

Professor Reilly further aroused the interest of his audience with his X-Ray machine, with which he performed several experiments.

It is interesting to note, as Professor Reilly stated, that McGill University, had carried on a remarkable research work in this branch of physics, for it was believed that the first X-ray pictures on this continent had been made and developed there.

BROWNSBURG

(Too late for last issue)

The choir of the Brownsburg United Church were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. Chambers, of Chatboro, on the evening of March first.

They proceeded there by sleigh arriving about 8.30 p.m. A varied entertainment was arranged which met with great approval. Several delightful items were rendered, our youthful soloist singing "The Birdie's Song," two of the male section reciting very effectively, one of the ladies presenting a brilliant pianoforte solo. Other appreciable items also were given and games were played. Supper was then served at 11.30 p.m., and after encircling the host and hostess in a ring and singing, "For they are jolly good people," the choir boarded the sleigh at midnight, bound for the 'Burg and home—tired? maybe; but very happy after a delightfully spent evening.

"He should be home by this time"

Mrs. Fowler was worried. Her husband had gone to town for the day but he was to be back in plenty of time to feed the stock. And now it was getting dark.

Then the telephone rang: "Sorry, Mary", came her husband's voice, "I can't get home till late. Better telephone George Bothwell and ask him to help us out."

So the stock was fed and Mrs. Fowler's worry was ended. No wonder she said: "It's lucky we have a telephone."

Jack Frost—King of Architects

Jack Frost, nature's greatest architect, completed yet another wonderful job, at Banff, on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway through the Rocky Mountains, this winter, when he designed and built the columns of the ice-castle of the Carnival Queen. As is easily seen by the picture, the two great pillars are the outstanding features of the palace. They were built by putting into play, one month before the opening of the great event, two vertical streams of water. Then, more men got busy and built the connecting wall of gleaming transparent ice-blocks, between the two pillars, and set in front of it the great throne of ice, from which the ceremonies of the Carnival were conducted, in the presence of thousands of spectators from all parts of Canada and the United States. Snow and ice contests of all kinds, winter sports in profusion, including the Alberta Provincial Skating Championships, went to make up the programme, which terminated in the election of Miss Margaret J. Nicol, of Drumheller, Alta., well-known as a tennis and hockey enthusiast, as Carnival Queen for 1933. Her picture is shown inset.

PERPETUAL SUNSHINE

There is no subject more constantly discussed than the weather, and frequently we may hear it said, "The sun did not shine today," or, "The sun is hot," or, "There seems to be no warmth in the sunlight," when all the while we know that although at one time its rays may seem to diffuse little heat and at another the same rays scorch there is little or no variation in our great luminary.

In human experience one day may seem dark, circumstances against one, and everything appear to be going wrong. Another day, all appears bright, joyous, and propitious. Perhaps we complain of the weather, and think that the sunshine of our happiness is withdrawn. Yet we should know that the difference between one experience and another really lies with the mental atmosphere which each individual carries with him.

It may be claimed that some are more happily endowed than others in the matter of disposition; but all may attain serenity of character by learning that, whatever human conditions may seem to be, the great facts of being abide. There is always a reason for rejoicing in the goodness of God, who is the same yesterday, to-day and forever, and in the birthright of spiritual man, His reflection. Cheerfulness and gratitude must inevitably result from gaining the assurance, that fluctuations can seem to be only in human thinking; that they do not proceed from God, and do not affect in any way the harmony of His universe.

TAKE THE BOTTLE AWAY

One of the greatest causes of digestive disturbances in babies is allowing them to keep the bottle indefinitely at one feeding. From fifteen to twenty-minutes is long enough for one feeding and then the bottle should be taken away. Some mothers allow the baby to keep the bottle as long as it has anything in it. This is a great mistake. Over-anxiety on the mother's part is often the reason for doing it. Perhaps the baby is not eating enough and the mother is so anxious that it get all its food, that she defeats her own ends. If the baby is allowed to keep the bottle and take a little at a time, the stomach is over-worked, and instead of being empty and ready for the next meal, it has not emptied and there is no appetite for the next feeding.

The best way to feed a bottle-fed baby is to hold it in the arms as one does a breast-fed baby. This gives a time for the legitimate cuddling which is the birthright of all babies. Then when the baby has finished the bottle completely or finished as much as it will take in twenty minutes, the bottle is taken away. If the baby is troubled at all with gas as so many babies are, then an opportunity is given to hold it over the shoulder for a moment before putting it down to sleep. If the baby has fallen asleep while taking the bottle most mothers hate to pick it up to get rid of the gas and consequently the baby's sleep is disturbed.

Holding the baby while being fed is good for the baby and for the mother too. It gives the mother an enforced rest, if she must sit for twenty minutes to feed her baby. Most mothers go too hard and anything which makes them rest is good.

If the baby is not taking its entire bottle, look to the nipple. Sometimes the hole is so small that the baby cannot get the milk out in that time. Then it may have to work so hard to get the milk out that unless it is a very strong vigorous baby (and bottle babies are not so apt to be), after getting enough to satisfy it a little, it just gives up the attempt. Then in a little while it gets hungry and cross. Milk should flow easily from the nipple when the bottle is held up, drop by drop. If it will not do that, the hole is too small. If it flows in a steady stream, the hole is too large. Nothing can be done with a nipple that has too large a hole, except to get rid of it as quickly as possible, as the too rapid flow will cause indigestion. If the hole is too small, it may be enlarged by using a hot needle.

Never, never, let the baby have its bottle longer than twenty minutes. This cannot be too much emphasized, as it is the frequent cause of indigestion and disturbed feeding in infants.

A MIRROR IN THE KITCHEN

Have you a mirror in the kitchen? Is it in a conspicuous place where you cannot help but see yourself, a dozen times a day? If you haven't make a point of looking at yourself and you will be due for a shock. Housework seems to play havoc with our appearance and an occasional sipping up through the morning won't do us any harm.

Any woman who has a full length mirror is lucky. That is providing it is placed so that she can't avoid catching glimpses of herself. I have gone out thinking that I looked fairly respectable and then saw myself in a store mirror and was due for an enlightenment. What I thought was all right was all wrong.

Do you remember the days of that awful atrocity, the boudoir cap? I never could understand how, self-respecting women could wear them about their housework. I plead guilty to a good many lazy habits, but that was never one of them.

Women certainly do look better around the house than they used to. One reason is that they no longer wear out old clothes in the kitchen, but wear house-dresses designed for kitchen use. There is no need to look sloppy or untidy in the morning, the price of house-dresses being what it is. Take a look at yourself and see if there is room for improvement.

THE MASTER MIND

Novelized by Marvin Dana,
Author of "Within the Law,"
From the Successful Play
by Daniel D. Carter

"I have here," he said, "just a little less than $5,000. That should suffice." The girl shrank back.
"I am afraid!" she whispered.
"Think!" the Master Mind commanded, with a note of sternness. "Think what depends upon it." His voice dropped. "Lucene, if you do not fall tonight your troubles will be over." She shook her head slowly in dreary negation.

"No," she answered forlornly, "they will never be over. I have learned the lesson at last. You were wrong in what you tried to teach me. I know it now, when it is too late. I should have followed my conscience." She threw herself back and sat huddled in utter dejection. "It would have been better," she murmured brokenly, almost inaudibly, "better for Cortland and me, if we had never met again."

The Master Mind perceived that for the time being her feeling had carried her beyond his control. He waited patiently until the violence of her grief should have spent itself. Then after a time he assailed her ruthlessly from a new point of attack. The very difficulty of his task provoked him to harsher endeavor, unweakened by sympathy.

"Lucene," he said earnestly, "if it were to become necessary in order to save your husband from public disgrace you would be willing to do something otherwise wholly repulsive to your every instinct, would you not?" The girl opened her eyes and looked up at him with a new questioning of dread in her gaze. "If there were no other way to save him from disgrace you would even pretend to go away with this fellow Creegan, wouldn't you?" There was a long pause, in which she continued to stare at him with an ever increasing horror as a vague understanding of his meaning crept into her consciousness. "Wouldn't you? I mean if it should be absolutely necessary in order to stop Creegan's mouth. Why, with ten words to the newspaper reporters about you and the Blounts he could ruin your husband's whole political career. Think, Lucene: is your love strong enough to rise to that supreme height of martyrdom wherein you would not only sacrifice yourself in silence, but so blacken your character that he would gladly let you go? Is your love so strong, Lucene?"

There was no answer. The distracted girl remained cowering under a crushing weight of horror. And yet, despite the despair that flamed in her breast, some secret prompting stirred her toward acquiescence. That single word "martyrdom" had set her spirit fermenting for sacrifice. In the heart of her was the eternal yearning of the woman to give where she loved, the maternal instinct of total self abnegation for the sake of the one beloved, the willingness to yield all, to suffer all, to dare all, to live or die for that beloved's good. Subconsciously, already she realized the truth that she would

At last accept the martyrdom thrust on her by hideous fate—accept it for his sake. And finally she spoke, very softly, gaspingly, as one wholly spent.
"To save him from disgrace—yes, even that."

Andrew persisted.
"You would not falter?"
The leader voice came:
"No, I am sure."

Then, at last, the Master Mind permitted himself the luxury of a doubtful comforting.
"It may be," he said gently, "that this supreme sacrifice will not be necessary. But if it should be—well, here is the money."

The Card Was Black.

Again he heard the swear or hiss, and how the girl put out a languid hand, took them, and hid them in her bosom, her face masquerade-like in its misery. "As nearly as I have been able to learn," Andrew continued, in a brisker voice, "Creegan will make his attempt here about 2 o'clock tomorrow morning. Of course, he will come directly to this room, as he has doubtless acquainted himself with the general plan of the house and knows that the safe is in this alcove. You will meet him here when he comes."

"Yes," The word was spoken in a lifeless tone.
Nothing mattered now. She went from the room slowly, with dragging steps.
For a long time after Lucene was gone from the library Andrew stood as she had left him, with moody eyes staring unseeing into space, and the intensity of his emotion was shown in the harsh grimace of his face.
But at last that expression vanished in an instant. In place of it there was revealed a malignant exultation—a frightful to see. The black hate of him glowed from his face, burned cruelly from his eyes. He hurried stealthily to the large table where was lying a book he had seen Wainwright reading often, a book of love poems.

The Master Mind took from an inner pocket a card of pasteboard, blank, which he placed between the leaves of the book, in such fashion that it protruded noticeably, and so left it lying there. For a long minute he stood looking down in sinister gloating; then, with a sardonic chuckle, he turned and went out.
The card was black.

Marshall, the Pinkerton detective engaged by Wainwright to ferret out the mystery of the cards by tracing them to their source, had wholly failed in accomplishing anything whatever in that direction.

Tonight he had come to the mansion under the guise of a participant in Wainwright's campaign work, as he had done frequently hitherto, in order yet once again to review with his principal the facts of the case in a final desperate hope of chancing on some neglected item that might suffice as a clue to definite information.

"Well, what do you think of it?" Wainwright demanded in his library.

The detective's face, too, indicated a like depression of spirit.

"Might as well be frank," he said reluctantly. "I must confess, Mr. Wainwright, that this thing has got me stumped."

"Can't we get any help from the post-office inspectors?" Wainwright suggested.

"They've been doing what they could," Marshall replied, "but they haven't got anything yet."

"It's been two months now since the coming of the red card," Wainwright mused.

"The longer the better," the detective exclaimed energetically. "It's beginning to look to me as if the chap's nerve might be petering—as if you'd never get that black card, the one to mean real business. Take it from me, Mr. Wainwright, it's just one of those cranks that are always annoying public men. Why, it stands to reason when you come to think of it. You see, the sender of those mysterious cards claimed to be Henry Allen's brother. Well, now, that fits in with my theory, because nobody ever heard of Henry Allen's brother at any other time. If there really had been such a brother he would have appeared to aid Henry at the time of the trial."

Wainwright was not in the least convinced. He remembered the fact that the unknown enemy had in fact used every endeavor in Henry Allen's behalf before the trial and throughout its course.

Marshall, content that his theory had proved acceptable, changed to another phase of the subject.

"And as I remember you got the warning red card the next day after your nomination for governor."

"Well?"

"Perhaps there's nothing significant in that fact," the detective admitted; "but I wanted to verify my memory. Now there's one other thing I must speak of." Marshall hesitated, with evident embarrassment. "It's a delicate point to touch on with a man," he explained, "but I've got to do it."

Wainwright nodded consent.

"It's about your wife," the detective declared constrainedly. "She's worried about something."

For a moment stern displeasure flashed from Wainwright's clear gray eyes; then the expression died as swiftly.

"Ah, you've noticed that," he exclaimed. A troubled frown bent his brows. "Yes," he said dully, at last, "it would seem so, perhaps, I too, have noticed—something."

"Have you ever told her about the cards?" Marshall inquired.

"I did not wish to worry her."

"Have you questioned her?"

"Yes, I shall not tell you precisely what answer she made. It would have no bearing. It is enough for you to know that it was merely a pretty little sentimental reason—one that seemed natural enough too."

"Well, we still seem to have nothing definite to go on," the detective grumbled. "Anyhow, I'm much inclined to believe the thing is actually done with."

Wainwright moved uneasily in his chair and dropped one hand carelessly on the table beside which he sat. His fingers touched the book of poems from which he had been reading recently. He picked up the volume idly.

"Then, you really think," he continued listlessly, "that the gentleman who sends the cards is just a harmless crank?"

"Yes," Marshall said confidently. "I think that's really just about the size of this game of yours. It's been summed up long ago as the Master Mind. The chap will never go any further." Wainwright listened courteously, but the detective's words carried no conviction to him. He was reflecting on the fact that an ordinary harmless lunatic would be little likely to display the ingenuity and the resource and the pertinacity that had characterized his enemy in the matter of following him everywhere with the cryptic cards. The timing of the sending of the cards, one to reach him at the time of his triumph of love, another at the time of his triumph of ambition, was enough to proclaim the diabolical cunning of his foe and to augur ill of his abilities for the future. At the thought of the red card Wainwright moved nervously. The fingers that gripped the book closed tightly on it. In the movement their tips touched something that projected beyond the leaves. Mechanically, without any curiosity whatsoever, he glanced down. Then, very slowly, he stiffened in his chair, staring fixedly toward the volume. His face lost its clear coloring and set in new lines—lines of dread. "Why," Marshall continued, "I once knew a very similar case, in which"—He halted his speech abruptly, for he had chanced to look up at the man opposite him and was astounded. "Good God!" he cried. "What's the matter, man?"

Wainwright made no answer in words; only raised the book and drew forth from between the leaves a blank black card and rested motionless, holding it stiffly in front of him.

CHAPTER XII The Unmasking.

THE detective and Wainwright now sat rigid and staring in a silent wonder, touched with an almost superstitious fear. For long minutes there was not a word between them, nor any movement.

It was Wainwright who at last took the initiative. Of a sudden he aroused himself to cast the terror of dread from his spirit. He was a brave man, and he had only contempt for the weakness into which he had been surprised by this uncanny trick in the presentation of the black card. Here finally was a new point for concentration of his intellect on the mystery. He felt a curious sense of relief as the thought occurred to him, and forthwith his keen mind began to concern itself with the facts in the event and to reason from them.

He relaxed his posture and looked up at the detective sharply. His voice was crisp.

"Marshall," he said rapidly, "just before dinner I had this very book in my hands, reading from it a certain quotation. The black card was not there then." He laid the card within the volume. "See?" he continued. "It is longer than the leaves. It must project beyond them. Had it been in the book I must have seen it."

The detective nodded agreement.

"So, then, my enemy has been here in this house, my own house—tonight. And this card means that the end is at hand. Yes, and the man himself is here to fulfill his promise to me. In my own home—tonight!"

"But how? What do you expect?"

"If I knew that I might plan to prevent him," Wainwright answered shortly, "in whatever thing his evil mind has plotted. But I am half convinced of one thing—that he does not mean to kill me outright. Murder has never been committed by him as far as any one knows."

"Just the same," Marshall suggested, "it's well to be prepared." He took an automatic pistol from his pocket and held it out.

"Very well." The pistol was accepted and bestowed in a pocket just as the butler entered the library.

"Did you ring, sir?"

"No," was the concise answer.

"Pardon me, sir," Andrew said. "I thought I heard the bell, and, as I knew Parker was busy upstairs, I"—

"Quite so! Yes, I see, Andrew." Then he introduced the vital subject: "Has anybody been in this room to-night except the members of the family?"

"Yes, sir," was the reply, which Wainwright had by no means expected. "A person called to see Mr. Walter, though I did not see him myself."

"Then Walter Blount saw him?"

"No, sir," Andrew explained, "he did not. But he said he would come

The house of Mr. Jas. Lavigne came very near being destroyed by fire last Wednesday morning. A blaze started in the upper story at about ten o'clock while all the family were downstairs. The first they knew of the danger the smoke was pouring down the stairway. The local fire brigade, the gallant Bucketters, responded promptly to telephone calls, and soon had the fire under control. The furniture was quickly removed and we believe there was little loss except damage to the house. And now it occurs to us that those gallant Bucketters ought to be organized into a regular Fire Department, with a chief, a foreman and perhaps a paymaster. That would make some jobs and have a good effect on the unemployment situation.

But probably nothing will be done about it till the Conservatives get in. The Conservatives (now), out of office, seem very liberal, and the Liberals in office strike us as altogether too conservative.

An editor was dying, but when the doctor bent over, placed his ear on his breast and said: "Poor man! Circulation almost gone!" the dying editor shouted: "You're wrong! We have the largest circulation in the country!"

Fire in Government Garage

Unusual Circumstances of Outbreak

The Roads Department garage in the East End was the scene of a fire on Friday afternoon. The unusual coincidence of a water-hose functioning almost on the spot at time of the outbreak, averted more serious results.

M. Constantineau, an employee of the Department, was about to fill the radiator of his truck. Pulling a hose across the floor for that purpose, he overturned a pail of gasoline standing nearby. The fluid ran over the cement floor to the vicinity of a Quebec heater and immediately caught fire.

The flames spread quickly, but Constantineau played the hose on the scene and slowly subdued the outbreak. Meanwhile an alarm had summoned the fire brigade, but they arrived to find the fire almost extinguished.

The damage to the building and fixtures was estimated at around $200.00.

To Maintain Quality of School Education

Quebec Dept. Warns against Salary-Reductions as Short-sighted Policy

With the courtesy of the public press (—writes Mr. Cyrille F. Delage, superintendent of Quebec Dept. of Education) I desire to bring to the attention of the ratepayers of the Province certain difficulties confronting the school boards at this period of the year, when they are making arrangements for engaging the school staffs for 1932-33.

The economic situation of the world at large has affected many essential public services in all countries, and the educational systems of various provinces of Canada have not been left untouched. In consequence, there have been widespread endeavors to curtail the expenditures upon education. Information which has reached my Department shows that, in different parts of this Province, pressure is being brought to bear upon the school boards, by ratepayers, to lower the salaries of teachers or to shorten the school terms below the legal ten months. This pressure has been most marked in the rural centres.

I fully recognize the serious difficulty which the farmers in many districts have to contend with at present in the marketing of their products. They are undoubtedly seriously affected, in common with the industrial and commercial interests. Economies have to be exercised by everybody until such time as the clouds of world depression have lifted.

But in the meantime there are two services whose activities should not be curtailed: that of Religion and that of Public Education.

As we all know, the work of the churches has greatly increased, especially in the industrial centres, by the calls upon them for the relief of the unemployed. It is a supreme satisfaction, indeed to know and recognize the unobtrusive but effective service that the churches are rendering in this respect.

As for the support of the schools, I am appealing, first of all, to the owners of real estate, as it is they who are taxed for that support. Permit me to point out two essential facts in regard to the taxation: (1) the school rates are not, in general, excessive, but rather moderate; (2) the numbers contributing in each municipality make the average contribution a moderate sum. The bulk of the taxes is

Pioneer W. I. Annual Meeting

The Annual Meeting of the Pioneer Branch, Q. W. I., was held at the home of Miss Ruth Todd on Tuesday evening, Mar. 15th. Upon the resignation of the retiring President, Mrs. L. M. Hooker, who has executed a most faithful two years' work for the branch, Mrs. Jas. McKenzie was elected President, Mrs. Robt. Morrison, 1st. Vice-President; Mrs. Alfred Parker, 2nd. Vice-President; Mrs. G. S. Armstrong Secretary; and Mrs. Robt. Bradley, Treasurer.

A pleasing feature of the evening was the presentation of a Life Membership as a birthday gift, to Mrs. Jno. Cooke, of Beech Ridge, who celebrated her 80th. birthday on Sunday last, and who is still hale and hearty and taking active part in the Institute work. The occasion was further recognized with a pretty birthday cake made by Mrs. R. Bradley. Mrs. Cooke was one of the members of the first Institute organized in Argenteuil County in 1914. She served her time as President, also as Vice-President, and has been a faithful worker ever since. Mrs. Cooke responded to the presentation made by Mrs. Bradley, in a pleasing manner.

After the drawing for a quilt made by the members, the lucky winner being Miss Forbes, of Montreal, and the proceeds amounting to $21.00, refreshments were served and the evening was brought to a close with the National Anthem. This Branch reports an exceptionally good year's work.

Farmers May Shoot Sheep-killing Dogs

Magistrate's Ruling

Sheep-killing dogs may be killed by farmers whose flocks are worried by these animals, it was ruled by Magistrate Metayer in Murray Bay, when he dismissed an action brought by Armand Bellefeuille, farmer of that district, against a neighbor Ernest Beaulieu for $50 damages for the death of his dog.

Beaulieu admitted having shot the police dog, stating that it had chased his sheep in their pasture, and that he did not know who owned the animal, while evidence was introduced to show that a number of his sheep had been killed and eaten during last summer. Bellefeuille's dog had been seen chasing Beaulieu's sheep last December.

Magistrate Metayer, in dismissing the case, held that defendant had been quite justified in shooting the dog.

expended on the salaries of the teachers. These salaries are not excessive. While much progress has made in the past twenty-five years in respect to teachers' salaries, the standards are still less than they should be, and it would be a regrettable retrogression to lower them now.

So much for the practical side of the question.

But I have spoken above of the lifting of the clouds of depression. They will lift, and perhaps sooner than is expected. All history, all economic history goes to show that the worst depressions are followed by great revivals. When the clouds lift, we must be prepared intellectually for the expanded activities which are to follow. All Canada, including the Province of Quebec, will have its share in the world revival. What we shall make of the newer conditions will depend largely upon our educational preparation for them. If, during the Great War, we were advised to keep the home fires burning, so now we shall be wise to keep the schools more active than ever, rather than to slacken our efforts in respect to them. It is a time for courage.

Stabilization

Agricola Discusses Interchangeable Currency, Foodstuff Stabilization and — the Government.

St. Andrews East, P. Q., March 7th., 1932.

Editor of The Watchman,
Lachute, P. Q.

Dear Sir:—

About my letter in regard to an interchangeable money system which you kindly published in the Watchman of February 20th., some of my friends suggest that this is a very inopportune time for increasing the number, or "denomination" of legal tender coins: what we need is some plan by which there will be more coins to be jingled in the pockets. The dollar system is very satisfactory when we are getting enough of the dollars: we want them in our own pockets, and any quantity of shillings and pennies that we cannot reach will not help us.

All this is very true and my system is not intended to be immediately available as an unemployment relief scheme. I believe however that its establishment would have such a good effect upon inter-dominion trade, and trade with the United States, that more money would very soon be in circulation—more would be in the coffers of the merchants and manufacturers; and slowly but surely some of it would find its way to the pockets of their employees.

The interchangeable Money System would not only be a most convenient medium of exchange between the countries concerned, but it would, to an appreciable extent, have a favorable effect on business in general within the limits of its usefulness—Britain, the United States and the Dominions.

Still, no gold standard system can, of itself, supply a reliable unit of values.

A $5.00 gold piece is worth a lump of gold, which a few months ago was about equal in value to ten bushels of potatoes, and today its worth would be nearly equal to the price of twenty bushels. The fixing of the value of an ounce or a pound of gold is useless because so few of us really want any gold. No stability is gained by a law stating that a $5.00 gold piece shall be worth a certain weight of the gold metal. You cannot stabilize the value of anything by fixing the price of it in relation to its own metal (or other) contents.

I feel quite sure that a system of exchange can be arranged whereby the prices of the most used and most needed commodities could be brought within a very small margin from stability.

As a starter, say the Canadian government goes into the wheat business; agrees to buy from farmers, corporations, or wheat growers of any ilk a certain amount of wheat of specified grades at the end of the next wheat harvest. Licenses, agreements or contracts must be arranged in the early spring so that, when the harvest is gathered, no one will offer the government more wheat than it is anticipating. Offerings must be in (say) 100 bushel lots, and not more than stipulated in the license, or agreement.

An Explanation of the League Finals

Editor of The Watchman,
Dear Sir:—

Being the organizer of the Argenteuil Hockey league, and Manager of the "Lachute Independent" team, I have endeavored to give the public a real brand of hockey, and have (I believe) contributed to one of the most attractive hockey seasons in Lachute. But I refused at the last minute to play the last game of the play-offs, and I must as every gentleman should do, give to our supporters and to the public in general, the exact reason why I took such an attitude.

To analyse the complete facts, one must examine the first organization of the League and its rules and regulations, as included in the Minute Book of the Executive as follows:—

MOVED BY M. Aurele St. Onge, Vice-President, seconded by Mr. Cecil Staniforth, Treasurer, that the play-offs would be played between the 1st. and 2nd. teams, 2 out of 3 games, the third game to be played where are the biggest gate receipts, if a third game is necessary. The leading team will have the preference of the ice.

The first game was played at Brownsburg and the final result was 3-3. That game was declared null by the League.

The second game was a victory to Brownsburg and was played on Lachute ice the score being 5-4.

So it was clear that a third game should be played, as called for by Mr. St. Onge, in another motion seconded and approved, on the ice of the team who had the larger attendance of the two first games played.

After the second game Messrs. St. Onge and Maitland, the two Managers of the Brownsburg team declared publicly that a third game was not necessary for they had won the Cup by points. These two gentlemen forgot very quickly that the League had to abide by its regulations.

After information was obtained by President Lahaie of the Q.A.H.A., orders were given to the Brownsburg Directors that a third game must be played, and according to regulations, as we had the larger attendance of the two previous games, Brownsburg then visited the "Independents."

The latter team was victorious in this engagement by the score of 5-4, after nine minutes overtime, after Brownsburg had tried to contest the decisive point which was the final decision of referee MacKimmie (chosen by Mr. St. Onge.) Brownsburg, having refused to finish this game, it necessitated a trip to Montreal, by our friend Mr. St. Onge, the Vice-President, from which he came back disappointed, as it became necessary to play a fourth game.

Before playing this third game, and according to an understanding of the league, we gave our opponent team half of the 60% proceeds that the two teams had attracted and received; it was then decided that, if it was necessary for the 4th. game to be played, 30% of the proceeds should be given to us, this being a verbal agreement. However, I was confident of receiving what was promised, but found my confidence was misplaced. They

Re-assuring the Assured

The pronouncement by Mr. Bennett, when as Prime Minister he was asked that a parliamentary committee of investigation be appointed to look into the business transactions of the Sun Life Assurance and the North American Life, should lend confidence to the shareholders of these companies and set their minds at rest.

During these disturbing times many ugly rumors have been afloat, not the least of which are statements issued in the Journal of Commerce, Toronto. Such aspersions as these, Mr. Hon. R. B. Bennett has characterized as "malignant and malicious," and he declared on the responsibility of the Government both companies to be solvent.

LACHUTE EXPRESS vs. ACADEMY

The Academy hickory-boys lined up last week against the team of Lachute Express, and suffered a narrow defeat in a friendly and interesting set-to, with closing score of 5-4. The game was fast and clean, with Referee Prevost in charge, and a good crowd of supporters present at the Raymond Rink.

The teams were as follows:

Lachute Ex.	L. Academy

B. Patrie	Goaler
Patrie	Defence
Lefebvre	Defence
Brisbois	Centre
Campeau	Wing

INDEPENDENTS vs. HAWKESBURY

Independents met Hawkesbury last Saturday on home ice, the former team winning the laurels in 6-2 victory. Fast ice and a keen spirit contributed to a clean and interesting game, which—regardless of the closing score—was not the least one-sided.

Most of the scoring took place in the first clash, taking Lachute into a sure lead with five goals to two. Hawkesbury concentrated on their defence in the second period, and no goals were scored, in spite of a heavy barrage from Independents. Continuing in the third session the local sextette broke through and landed the rubber in Hawkesbury cage for the final count of 6-2. Wm. MacKimmie handled the whistle, and spectators agreed it was an interesting match throughout.

Ladies' Curling Club Bridge

On Tuesday afternoon the members of the Ladies' Curling Club were entertained by the Officers to a very enjoyable bridge and afternoon tea. 1st. prize being won by Mrs. A. E. Cockfield; 2nd. prize, Miss Bessie McQuat.

Young People's Sleigh Drive

In spite of the severe weather the Y. P. S. of the Lachute United Church enjoyed their annual sleigh drive last Monday evening.

The refreshment committee, under the leadership of Mrs. Rev. Rosborough, was right on the job when the teams returned to the Church Hall with the hoarse, but happy and hungry crowd. Games and a sing-song brought to a close another long anticipated annual sleigh-drive.

Oysters at Men's Curling Club

Match-Committee in the Stew

A weakness for Oysters was the downfall of the Match Committee of Lachute Curling Club on Tuesday, and eight stalwart veterans of the Roarin' Game went down, unglorious in defeat. With an oyster supper in view the Committee, all top-notchers on the ice, ranged themselves into two rinks and challenged all comers—the losers afterwards to provide the spread. The challenging rinks comprised:

Messrs. W. J. Deacon, H. M. Gall, F. A. Brennan, J. A. McGibbon, Skip.

Messrs. R. Hamilton, G. Valois Roy Fraser, J. W. Gall, Skip.

The challenge was promptly accepted and Messrs. R. Richardson, Robt. Todd, Dr. J. M. Drew and Geo. Fraser set out to beat the first-named rink of all-too-confident challengers—and alas, the latter lost out in a 10-end contest, to the final count of 5-8.

Meanwhile, on the opposite ice the second team was undergoing a change of countenance and looked rather dejected as they figured out the price of Oysters. Here, Messrs. Geo. Muir, S. Campbell, Jno. MacKimmie and J. R. Charron were administering a hearty defeat, and in the last end the challengers sank to a doleful tune of 3-21!

There remains no question as to the appeal of Oysters to the masculine palate. Neither is there any doubt as to who most enjoyed the supper following these games.

ACADEMY DEFEATS MONTREAL WEST HIGH SCHOOL

Academy Seniors were elated in handing a defeat last Saturday to their old rivals, Montreal West High. Playing on home ice, the local school sextette staged a fine game, but not meeting with the close equality of contest which they had expected, from previous encounters with Montreal West High.

First period was evenly matched, giving a score of one goal to each team. But opening the second period, Lachute promptly took the lead and held it throughout, closing the final session with a score of 9-2. This adds another triumph to the Academy's high record, in their intermediate scholastic fixtures throughout this season.

The Captain's Corner

"MAKE BELIEVE"

Dear Boys :-

This week I want to ask you a question. How many of you have played the game of "Make Believe"? There are no rules and it seems that all you have to do is just to sit quiet and day-dream.

Once I knew a little lad who did this. He would be ever so quiet with an unopened book in front of him—and with a far away look in his blue eyes, and never a word would he speak until perhaps a member of his family would say, "What's the matter with you Jackie? upon which he would kind of wake up and answer, 'Oh nothing I was just thinking.'" Everyone seemed quite satisfied with this answer and the matter was forgotten as of little importance. To them it was so of course but to little Jackie it was a real big thing, because for at least half an hour he had been thoroughly enjoying himself in the old time game of "Make Believe."

He had lived during that time in a world all his own, peopled by beloved figures of his imagination. He had walked through a country over which he had supreme power, and in which his will alone had control. His very precious and particular world from which he could keep all the unkind and cruel things; banish all the shadows and back himself in a warm and continual sunshine of happiness.

It was only a game, but to our little friend a very real and precious one. Now listen, not everyone can play it. There are some of you that even wouldn't want to, what a miff you say, he ought to play ice hockey, baseball and manly games. Stop a minute please, for as it happens Jackie does join in with all these and plays them well, perhaps better for the reason that he knows how to Make Believe. The same power of imagination that he has used while ruling in his own particular country of unreality, he brings to bear on the common things of everyday life and it gives him vision—so that he can see further, plan better and possess self-confidence, than you fellows who have never taken a part in the happy game of Make Believe.

Is it wrong to dream dreams? I don't think so provided of course that we do not make the doings, so the main thing in our lives. Through these day-dreams of the future we obtain ambition, enthusiasm and a love for the higher and better ideals. Without which life itself would be but a very poor thing indeed. Remember what we read—"And his brother's conspired against him and said, 'Behold the dreamer cometh.'"

None the less, the dreamer became their ruler, to whom they owed their very lives.

So I think that it is very good for you young and even older people to indulge in this game of "Make Believe" out of which we can surely obtain very much happiness.

A world of fancy where our hopes but bring
The choicest gifts that well befit a King.

Your very affectionate friend,

THE CAPTAIN.

"The Return of Timothy"

"Just like Timothy," said Bullinger almost contemptuously. "He goes into a burning building, saves the life of a miserable new kid without turning a hair or putting himself out any more than if he were taking a cup of tea."

"Not so much," replied another boy, "because I have seen Timothy lose his temper when his tea was not sweet enough."

But the subject of their remarks had gone off to the little study which had been set aside for his use in the school and on arrival had firmly and quietly closed the door. Moving over to a little desk, he drew out from one of the drawers a letter, which seating himself at his table, he read through very carefully from beginning to end. Then he took a pencil from his pocket and started to write. Every now and again he looked around as if seeking for some inspiration that would assist him in his task and he frowned as if his thoughts were far from being pleasant ones. After a little while, he put down his pencil, and lay back in his chair, closing his eyes as if worn out with intense weariness and was still in this attitude when a sharp knock sounded on his door. Startled into a waking position, his hand instinctively shot out to his paper which he quickly folded and put in his pocket, then with a hasty glance around the room, he arose slowly and unlocked the door.

On the threshold stood Mr. Lawrence. A very slight color spread over the boy's face and his voice trembled a little as he said, "Won't you come in Sir?"

Mr. Lawrence nodded and entered taking particular pains to close the door again. After he had done so and when he had seated himself, bidding Timothy with a wave of his hand to do the same, he said quietly, "Well Timothy, have you anything to tell me?"

"Nothing Sir," was the stiff reply.

In no way put out by this curt response, a slight contemptuous smile which was almost a sneer, appeared on the Master's face.

"I am not surprised, because I hardly expected anything else from you," he went on quickly, "but I think you owe it to me to give an explanation why you have the audacity to come back here after you left in such a disgraceful way."

Timothy's eyes hardened and from the way he clenched his hands, it was easy to see that he was using all the powers of self-control.

"I have nothing to explain," was all he permitted himself to reply.

Mr. Lawrence immediately got up. "There you are making a mistake, my boy. You have a great deal to explain and one day you will be compelled to tell the truth."

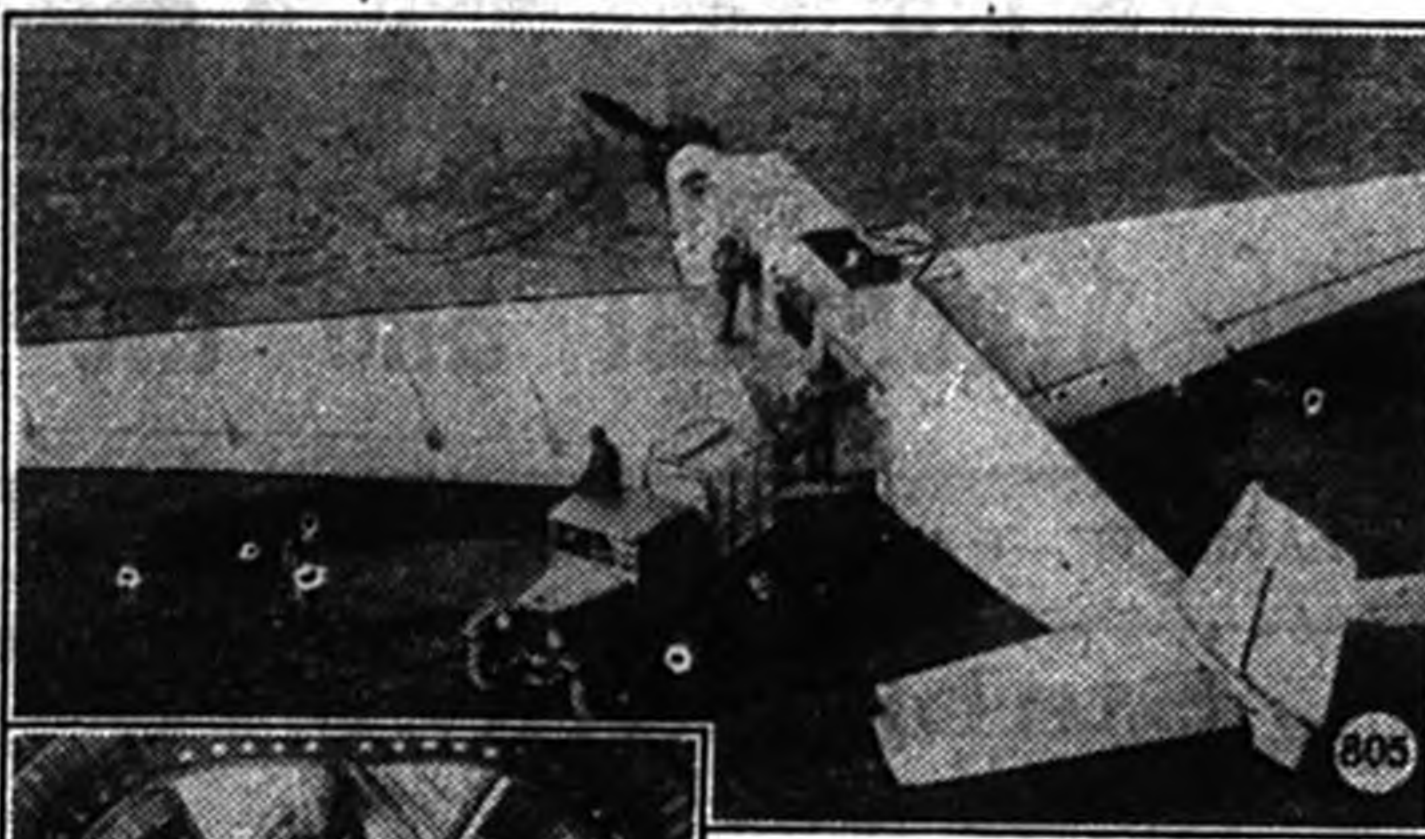

Suddenly his manner changed and he went over and placed his hands on the boy's shoulders.

"Timothy will you confide in me and let me be your friend?" and anyone who had heard Mr. Lawrence speak as he was now doing would have been amazed; for the general opinion concerning him among the boys of St. Aubyns, was that he entirely lacked sympathy and never by any possible chance showed his feelings. Even Timothy was affected for his lips trembled but with a supreme effort he pulled himself together while his voice sounded almost harsh as he replied.

"I am sorry Sir, but this is my business and does not concern anyone else."

The Master turned away with what might or might not have been a sign of regret and making for the door passed through leaving Timothy alone. For a second or two, he remained motionless and then with a broken cry of despair, he buried his head in his hands.

A Freight Car on Wings

Built to carry a load of 5,850 lbs for a distance of 500 miles with a crew of two and having a normal flying range of 932 miles in 9 1/4 hours flying time, the Ju 52, recently brought from Germany aboard the Canadian Pacific freighter "Beaverbrae" to the order of Canadian Airways Limited, will revolutionize air traffic in Northern Canada.

This flying box car will transport large pieces of mining equipment, machinery and supplies to the Far North, right up to the Arctic Ocean and will help open up new territories, new resources of incalculable mineral wealth to effective exploitation. James A. Richardson, president of Canadian Airways Limited, believes that north of steel, deep in the heart of the North-West Territories and beyond, there lie untold resources which some day will make Canada one of the richest countries in the world. The Ju 52 is his contribution towards the man-sized job of unrolling the map of Canada and of giving to the Canadian people the most efficient air travel system with the least delay possible.

It has a single cargo space of 690 cubic feet occupying the top part of the fuselage which can be loaded from an autotruck backed up to a large side hatch, having internal measurements, 70.90 by 49.54 inches, located in the rear-most bay and provided with a substantially built platform for a maximum load of 1,453 lbs. Another large hatch on the roof can be loaded from a crane in the same way as freight is lowered into a ocean-going vessel. For further convenience there is a door opposite the side hatch on the other side of the fuselage; a side door in the foremost bay and four loading flaps in the second and third bays.

An important innovation is the Double Wing Junker patent which permits larger and heavier machines to be landed on smaller aerodromes.

CUSHING

Mr. John Douglas, Jr., spent several days in Montreal last week.

Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Gaston were guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. Watson of Point Fortune on Sunday last.

Mrs. T. Boyle left on Saturday morning for a short visit with friends in Montreal.

Mrs. Geo. Hodgson of Montreal, is the guest of her daughter Mrs. Frank Fuller at present.

Miss Catherine Cooke was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Smith for a few days last week.

Miss Eleanor Owens of Ottawa spent the week end of Mar. 5th., with her mother Mrs. D. W. Owens.

In spite of the storm, the missionary meeting at the home of Mrs. A. Graham was quite well attended and those who came, heard some very interesting papers on the Annual Presbyterian Meeting in Montreal, from Mrs. L. M. Gaston and Mrs. Irving Fuller.

Miss Alice Davidson left on Thursday to spend a few days in Montreal with friends, before proceeding to Kingston where she will take up residence in the Y. W. C. A.

Miss Davidson will be very much missed by her Cushing friends, and she has their very best wishes for health and happiness in her new home and new work.

Miss Doris LeRoy was appointed by the Ladies Association of St. Mungo's Church to succeed Miss Davidson as the Church Organist.

BOYS TRAINING AS FIRE-

Last year 673 Canadian the training was started 19,698 also decided to call for a "neutral" referee, who was to be chosen by the Association, to which I agreed, in as much as neither Mr.

St. Onge or myself would know who would be the referee.

On Thursday I heard, accidentally, a telephone conversation, between Mr. St. Onge and one of the members of the executive of their team and learnt, much to my surprise, that this gentleman appearing to be ignorant of the referee had been again to Montreal and arranged to get the services of someone through the co-operation of the Frontenac Brewery Co., through Mr.
Gaulin, who no doubt wished to render a service to Mr. St. Onge, his client. On the refusal of the 30%, and the injustice that this gentleman was giving to Lachute, also the contradiction of his own words, I decided to send the team only when their Directors would allow me the stipulated price, as had been practised previously.

I was waiting with the team at the Skating Rink, when an offer was made me that Brownsburg would pay the expenses of the referee, but we would have to look after our own transportation, and receive nothing else. Then my determination was unshaken, as they not only wanted to laugh at us but refused to pay us 30%; and further, they paid $25 to the Hawkesbury club for an exhibition game when some 500 people had paid to see the game between Independents and Brownsburg. They announced on the ice, that the Lachute team did not want to play the game, but gave no reasons, evidently afraid they would have to make refunds of the entrance fee. They denounced the Independents, having the audacity to say that we were afraid of defeat, and that we had refused to play on account of the sickness of Mons.
Giroux, who was incidentally quite well, as were also the rest of the team. The contradiction to their statement lies in our defeat of St. Jerome by a score of 11-2, a team which had previously beaten Brownsburg 8-5 on their own ice.

Afterwards, I saw a letter which confirmed the conversation heard in the afternoon, concerning the referee. I had many persons read same, so that its authenticity could not be denied, and after having taken a duplicate, I publish this letter as follows:—

Mons. A. St. Onge,
Brownsburg, P. Q.,

March 2nd, 1932.

Dear Sir,—

Following our telephonic communication of this morning, I communicated with Mr. Therrien, the Secretary of the Association and he accepted Mr. J. C. Pedneault as referee for the game tomorrow night.

Mr. Pedneault will take the 5.40 train tomorrow night at Viger Station, and you will see that someone will meet him at the Station at Lachute, as understood in our agreement.

The conditions are $5.00 for the game, plus his travelling expenses.

Hoping that everything will be to your satisfaction,

I am, Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) J. C. Gaulin,

Frontenac Brewery Co.

I deeply regret that the season was ended in such a disagreeable and unsportsmanlike manner, both for the people of Brownsburg and Lachute. I sincerely appreciate the good sport-

Agricola Discusses--

The government must have immense elevators, or receiving stations at suitable points, such as Vancouver, The Pas, Winnipeg, Montreal and other places. The price allowed by the government might be a few cents more at one station than at another (to be stated in the agreement) to cover railroad or truck haulage and handling.

On receipt of 100 bushels of wheat from a farmer, or any wheat raiser, a receipt would be issued for the agreed price, perhaps somewhere about 60 cents a bushel a price arranged by inter-dominion agreement, and that receipt would be good for the amount named at any bank, or it could itself be used in place of a bank bill.

A farmer or wheat raiser, before sowing a seed, might know pretty accurately how much his crop would be worth, and how much he could afford to pay for labor and other necessary expenses. He could ship his wheat by rail or truck and get immediate returns for it—no middle man—no Farm Board—no wheat pool, and no two billion dollar banking concern to deal with.

No farmer then would need to be suffering from this depression. He could know what his wheat would sell for before the blades came through the ground. The government would be expected to make agreements with small farmers for purchase of small lots of grain. If more was offering than they could handle safely it would be the large farming concerns that would be limited to an acceptable quota. After a year or two the government would be able to estimate requirements very accurately.

Now suppose a small farmer gets a contract to raise 1800 bushels of wheat for the government, and the amount harvested turned out to be 127 bushels over and above his seed requirements for the next year. The government would be under the obligation to buy his extra 127 bushels, although they might sometimes do so if it suited both parties. The farmer can feed the extra 127 to his hogs, or chickens, sell to a miller or to a neighbor, or make any use of them that suits him, except that no one but the government will be allowed to export wheat from the country.

The farmer has had a sure market for 1800 bushels and that should keep him out of the poor house, or the bread lines.

The government will not be able to guarantee bountiful harvests, but they ought to insure, and must insure, a living to every farmer who produces a crop.

If certain farmers are in actual need of funds while the crop is growing, it would be a safe proposition for the government to make small advances—up to, say, one quarter of the value of the expected yield.

That takes the farmer out of the unemployed, or needy class, gives promise of an immense future army of small farmers —just what Canada needs. They would be the very life of the country.

But, what would the government do with the overflowing elevators and storage bins at receiving points? Well, they would have to go into the grain business as vendors as well as collectors. Millers would have to buy from them, and likely contracts with the mills would be made as early as agreements with the growers. Grain dealers and breakfast-food firms would be among their customers.

The government would handle all exports of wheat and agreements, or quotas, could be arranged with Britain and other countries, before the crops were grown, or even contracted for.

The government would not be expected to deal in the wheat at a profit: perhaps the country would even stand a moderate loss without losing temper.

The government will, of course, have to charge a little more per bushel than they pay to the farmers—enough to cover cost of handling, storing, insurance etc., but a profit is the part of the plan.

The very fact that the price of one article of commerce could be fixed for a season, or for a term of years, would have a stabilizing effect on other commodities.

manship and friendliness of the Brownsburg players and also thank the members of the Argenteuil League, who had lent their efforts to the success of the enterprise. I thank La Tribune d'Argenteuil for the hospitality of its columns and also The Watchman for its courtesy and the justice of its reports of our games. To the supporters who never failed their teams; to the proprietors of the Skating Rinks, (Messrs Carriere & Raymond,) who received our teams with courtesy during the season; and to Mr.
Jos. Raymond for donation of the Cup, emblem of the Championship; also to the referee, who accepted an ungrateful task to please and give justice—to all of them, I give my thanks.

I also thank the Directors and the members of Ayers Ltd team for their co-operation and the good disposition they have always shown. I wish to thank specially, Mr. Paul Lahaie, the President of the League, for his good work on behalf of the sport.
I wish to say that Mr. Lahaie had nothing to do with the arrangements with Frontenac Brewery, who acted solely through their representative in Montreal and Mr. St. Onge. This was all done without the knowledge of Mr. Lahaie, who, I am sure, regrets very much, all that has happened.

I seek the pardon of all (and especially "Little Joe,") if at times I have been too quick; but this was due to my utmost wish to make our team a credit to the people of Lachute, and to contribute a clean chapter to the history of Hockey in this town.

Pulling down the curtain on the season 1931-32, I sincerely thank everyone until "next year,"

Say wheat has been selling at 60 cents a bushel and potatoes at 75, when it is found that as much food value can be had from three quarters of a bushel of wheat as from a whole bushel of potatoes, the price of the latter is bound to come down without any interference of any kind. And so the price of potatoes will range around a figure that will be fair and just. And that price will come pretty near to being stabilized.

Then take the matter of farm labor. The farmer will know all the time what he can afford to pay. If the government increases the price paid for wheat at the elevator the farm hand will know that he ought to have a part of the increase—if the price at elevator is lowered he will take a cut in wages as a natural consequence. And so the price of farm labor will be, in a measure, established notwithstanding any meddlesome action of a labor Union, which at most can have only a temporary effect.

The price of wheat affects the cost of the loaf and of other items of food. If food costs are low the shoe maker and the cotton worker cannot expect the high wages paid when eats were more costly.

And so, the fixing of a price for wheat will have its effect on all kinds of business and employment.

Oats, corn, coal, oil, and in the U. S. cotton, could all be treated in the same manner as wheat, and then the prices of about all our necessities would be stabilized, and the government would be a useful appendage to our great Dominion statehood.

And it would be a good thing if our statesmen, who are now adorning rows of desks at Ottawa making and repealing laws could instead be given jobs as grain handlers and clerks. As clerks they would be valuable, but as statesmen—well, I think, we have no use for them.

If the country will not adopt a Christian Socialism scheme this is the best I can offer in the place of it.

THE SPIRIT OF COMPE- TITION

Huntingdon points to Lachute

We have read with a great deal of interest the editorial leader, which appeared in our Contemporary, the Huntingdon Gleaner, of Wednesday, March 9th, under the heading "Let us Rival Lachute—", and we are glad of the opportunity given us of replying to this friendly challenge.

Whatever may be said to the contrary, the spirit of Competition moves the wheels of the prosperity machine, and so marks out the road of progress. This truth is very clearly demonstrated in the business world, where directors of great undertakings have to be continually one step ahead of their competitors, both in the quality of the products they sell and in their marketing methods.

If this is an accepted fact in Commerce, it appears equally well to such organizations as "Towns and Cities." Every community has something to sell in the facilities it can offer to industry, thereby to persuade some commercial undertaking to establish a plant in their own particular district.

Suitable sites, with cheap power and low freight charges; convenient approach to large centres where there are ever-open markets for all kinds of production; opportunities for Community Welfare and recreation; well built homes and up-to-the-minute sanitary conditions, which make for the health of the workers. And if, to all this is added low and reasonable taxation—we have but enumerated a few of the main saleable assets which the town or city of real importance can offer to prospective industry.

However, it is the concluding paragraph of our contemporary's article that brings out the most salient point of all; for we have to bear in mind that all salesmanship whether by individuals or by organizations, must possess as its basic principle the giving of worthwhile information and creating a courteous spirit of mutual goodwill.

Impressions, particularly first ones, count. So we recognize in Huntingdon and its neighboring towns many attractive features as drawing cards to further industries. The first indications of a trade and industry revival, appear on every hand. If this new era advances, every community stands to benefit materially in growth; and competition will be accordingly keener between our towns.

The fact that Lachute has increased its population to our 4,000, (according to the recent census) indicates that we have forged ahead. Also, granted our heritage of facilities and conveniences equal to other communities, this advancement may be taken as a credit to our progressive spirit in the past. Yet we are not quite satisfied. In all humility, we believe we could have advanced considerably further. Had our instinct of civic salesmanship been more keenly developed, we believe we might today have become a bigger town industrially; for the settlement of La Chute counts many decades in its history.

Even so, the genial editor of Huntingdon Gleaner will pardon our conviction that Lachute, with 4,000 odd, is a great little burg, and infinitely better than many towns with 8,000 population. If our progress has helped to inspire Huntingdon to rival us, we are glad. We even wish that town success in its effort to attain to our present status of development..... trusting our friend the Editor, in that happy day, will not be discouraged to find that Lachute has advanced several leaps still further ahead.

LESSON-SERMON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

"MATTER" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science services Sunday, March 20.

Golden Text: Psalms 46: 10.
"Be still and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth."

Among the selected citations, comprising the Lesson-Sermon are the following from the Bible (Isiah 51: 6) "Lift up your eyes to the heavens, and look upon the earth beneath; for the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment, and they that dwell therein shall die in like manner: but my salvation shall be forever, and my righteousness shall not be abolished."
Also (Psalms 46: 1, 2) "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the earth removed."

There are mysteries that have never been solved in many branches of puzzeldom. Let us consider a few in the world of numbers—little things the conditions of which a child can understand, though the greatest minds cannot master. Every-body has heard the remark, "It is as hard as squaring a circle," though many people have a very hazy notion of what it means. If you have a circle of given diameter and wish to find the size of a square that shall contain exactly the same area, you are confronted with the problem of squaring the circle. Well, it cannot be done with exactitude though we can get an answer near enough for all practical purposes, because it is not possible to say in exact numbers what is the ratio of the diameter to the circumference. But it is only in recent times that it has been proved to be impos- sible, for it is one thing not to be able to perform a certain feat but quite another to prove that it cannot be done. Only un- instructed cranks now waste their time trying to square the circle.

John was caught in the act of stealing wine from the monas- tery cellar, that was forbidden him, and brought before the Lord Abbot for punishment. He pleaded for forgiveness saying the Evil One tempted him and that he had taken it often before and hadn't been found out.

"Rascal said the Abbot. How much wine hast thou taken?"

"Alach-a-day There were 100 pints in the cask at the start and I have taken a pint every day for the past thirty days, and if my Lord Abbot can tell me to a nicely how much good wine I have taken in all, let him punish me as he will."

"Why knave, that is thirty pints."

"Nay, nay; for each time I drew a pint out of the cask, I put in a pint of water in its stead." How many pints did John drink?

Answer to last week's puzzles:

It is explained that a bung that is made fast in a barrel is like another bung that is falling out of a barrel because one of them is in secure and the other is also insecure.

The little relationship poser is readily understood when we are told that the parental com- mand came from the father (who was also in the room) and not from the mother.

BROWNSBURG DEFEATED IN PLAY-OFFS

On Tuesday night, before a large crowd, the Brownsburg made the gallant effort to defeat "Jarry Freres", city commercial league champions and advance in the provincial finals. However they were defeated by a much heavier team which did not hesitate to use their weight on every occasion, and were inclined to carry high sticks, with the result that at times the calibre of hockey was often spoiled by deliberate roughness on the part of both teams.

The first period was exceptionally fast, both teams endeavouring to run up an early lead. After a series of long shots on the home team's nets, "Jarry Freres" scored two goals in the initial period. Brownsburg tried hard to retaliate, but strong defensive work prevented them from scoring.

The play continued to be fast throughout the second period. Brownsburg team threatened to draw on even terms when Omer Gagnon skated the length of the ice for one of the best-scoring efforts of the night. The second period ended 2-1.

The third period opened with Brownsburg determined to even the score and "Jarry Freres" resorting to defensive hockey. However the break soon came and when "Jarry Freres" again scored they were able to hold their lead, increasing it one more to make the final score 4-1.

BRITAIN SHOWS THE WAY

Six months ago many people were saying that Great Britain was bankrupt and nearly down and out but old John Bull has shown the world that he is fast coming back. The new government in a few months has balanced the budget, carried a substantial sum over, and paid interest due the United States and France, six months in advance, truly a most remarkable feat. Business is improving rapidly and the unemployment situation is being relieved. The old Mother Country is setting the world a glaring example in the way back to normal times.

PIE!

Who said pie? Just mention it and you cause a stir of interest. The one thing that everyone likes. At the time that I started writing this column for the Watchman, I decided that I would save writing about pie until some day when I was short of material—and I haven't written about it yet. I certainly am not short of material but I am going to write about it anyhow, and do my bit for more and better pies.

One of the most important things in pie making is the handling. You have heard it said that Mrs. So-and-so has a light hand with pastry. That expresses it exactly. A light hand. And as little handling as possible.

Now as to ingredients. Pastry flour should be used if possible. Bread flour makes tough pastry. Household flour is better than the bread flour but not nearly as good as the pastry flour and this variety should be kept on hand. There are several choices for the shortening. Butter, lard, and vegetable shortening. All have their followers and good pastry can be made with any of them. Many women find it difficult to make pastry with butter as it is inclined to be tough. A mixture of butter and lard makes pastry makes a very tender pastry and of good flavour. Lard, alone, many like to sacrifice flavour to be sure of tenderness. I am old-fashioned enough to use butter and lard, but I have eaten delicious pies made with other shortenings. If you have trouble getting your pastry tender, try omitting the butter.

Water is not considered to be a very important ingredient, but when it comes to pastry, it certainly is. The very smallest quantity that will hold the paste together is, should be used. If we had to buy water by the drop, it would be good for our pastry.

Temperature has its part to play. All ingredients should be cold. Very cold pastry should be put into a very hot oven. It improves pastry to be kept for some time in a cool place before making into pies. I usually make enough to do more than one day and leave it until I am ready to use it. If I want to use it the day it is made, I try to make my pastry immediately after breakfast and then tuck it away tightly wrapped in waxed paper until later in the morning when I am ready to use it. I like to have pastry on hand to use when and how needed. It keeps for several days, perfectly, and improves with keeping. This is partly due to the thorough chilling it gets and due partly to the evaporation of a little of the water. In winter, pastry sometimes is left in too cold a place and is so hard to roll that the paste is toughened. Pastry should be handled and rolled as little as possible. I would rather patch a pie any time than to roll it twice. This is the quantity I find convenient to make up to use as desired. If you are accustomed to making a supply of pies at one time, try making your pastry and roll out your pastry as needed. You will find many interesting ways of using a scrap of pastry if it is on hand.

4 cups pastry flour
1 teaspoon salt
Water
¾ pound shortening.
1 teaspoon baking power.

Sift the dry ingredients. Rub in the shortening with the fingers, or cut in with knives. Add as little water as will hold the pastry together, adding it a few drops at a time. Chill. Roll very likely. Bake in a hot oven. Pie shells require an oven of 500 degrees; double crust pies an oven of 450 degrees; custard pie type an oven of 450 degrees for ten minutes, then reduce heat to 350 degrees until cooked.

LEMON PIE

Grated rind and juice of one lemon

7-8 cup sugar
1 cup water
2 tablespoons corn-starch
1 egg
1 tablespoon butter

Bring the lemon-rind and juice, the water, sugar and butter to the boil. Mix the corn-starch with enough water to moisten. Separate the egg. Beat the yolk and mix the moistened corn starch with it. Slowly add some of the boiling mixture to the egg yolk and corn starch stirring steadily. Return this mixture to the rest stirring it all the time. Then cook slowly until thickened, then cook for two minutes longer, stirring all the time. Pour this into a cooked pie shell. Beat the egg white until stiff, then add two tablespoons sugar and beat again. Put this meringue on the lemon by spoonfuls. Bake for about 1 minutes in a slow oven of 300 degrees. Serve cooled but not chilled.

BUTTERSCOTCH PIE

1 cup brown sugar
¼ cup water
2 tablespoons butter
1 egg
2 tablespoons corn starch
2 tablespoons water
1 cup milk

Boil the brown sugar, water and butter for 5 minutes. Mix cornstarch with two-tablespoons water. Separate egg and beat egg yolk. Mix cornstarch and egg yolk. Heat milk and add hot milk slowly to egg and cornstarch, then add butterscotch mixture slowly, stirring steadily. Cook until thickened, then cook two minutes longer to thoroughly cook the starch, stirring all the time. Pour into a baked pie shell. Beat the egg white until stiff add two tablespoons sugar and beat again. Put this meringue by spoonful on top of the butterscotch filling and bake in a slow oven 300 degrees until nicely browned.

STONEFIELD

Stonefield is still on the map, and expects to be more in the limelight in the future.

Mr. and Mrs. Ross Matthews called upon Mr. and Mrs. Dewar and Mrs. Conway on Sunday.

Mrs. J. Canning entertained the Junior Mission Band at a meeting and tea on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. Stanley Dewar spent the week-end in Montreal, visiting friends and taking in St. Pats' Parade and a Hockey Match.

The cold snap has tightened up the maple trees, and sugar makers will be having better results. Like Better Times and Better Prices, syrup making is just around the corner.

The teacher, Miss P. McOuat, is with us again after three weeks of sickness, and the Community welcomes her return, as scholars are all doing well under her care.

Cold weather and snowstorms during the past week have taxed our auto drivers to the limit. They carry a shovel among their equipment, for safety, and one sees them exercising on various parts of the road.

Mrs. Rev. McConn is having splendid results with the Sunday School in Stonefield, which was opened only after the New Year. There are now 20 to 25 attending, and this is a welcome feature, in helping to make better Canadians of the younger generation.

From last week's report of the Stewards' Supper at Cushing, one much-appreciated item of the programme was omitted, viz the violin selections and piano accompaniment by Mr. & Mrs. T. Gourley. Their music was enthusiastically received & greatly enjoyed.

Speaking in the House of Commons last week, the Hon. Dr. Manion was praising the government relief work, saying there is no partisan politics mixed with this work—which is right, if true! But the worthy Dr. needs to come down here to the Grenville canal works, and alas, he will see p.p. at its best.

NOTES ON IMMIGRATION.

It has been said that in prosperous times when employment is plentiful, a large immigration is considered a favourable business factor, since it adds to the domestic market for goods. Under present conditions public opinion takes the reverse view. New population if self-sustaining, would mean a welcome increase in the home market for goods; but immigrants require wages for their support and employment is not adequate for the present population.

Nevertheless it is reported that the subject of immigration may provide important discussions before the Imperial Economic Conference to be held in Ottawa this summer. Significant remarks were made very recently in both the British House and in the Canadian House of Commons in this connection. At Westminster, Rt. Hon. J. H. Thomas, Secretary of State for the Dominion, said,

"In my opinion immigration is definitely associated with the prosperity of the dominions. If we can evolve a scheme which restores their prosperity then the question of migration becomes relevant and must be considered in that light." The minister told the House of his intentions to bring the question up at the conference. In Canada the tendency of late has been to restrict immigration to the minimum but W. A. Gordon, acting Minister of Immigration, recently sounded a note indicating that this policy would not be permanent. He said, "By reason of our projection of railways across the country, whether we like it or not, we must get over the positive side of immigration because we must have more people if we hope to pay off a debt with which ten million people are loaded at present, by reason of the railway problem on our hands.

Settlement of Canadian families with agricultural experience on Canadian farms will be continued during 1932 by the federal Department of Immigration and Colonization, and the Colonization departments of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways.

In the period from October first 1930, to December thirty, 1931, the two railways and the department have been instrumental in settling on the land 6,343 families from Canadian cities and in placing 12,990 single men in employment on farms and giving them an opportunity of receiving subsistence from the land and a corresponding relief of unemployment conditions in the city.

Miss Ethel Chapman makes this novel LUXOR CAKE* with Magic Baking Powder

"My advice to all housewives, both skilled and inexperienced, is: Use Magic Baking Powder. Then there is no uncertainty about your baking," says Miss Ethel Chapman, Editor of the Home Section in the Ontario Farmer.

This unqualified statement is particularly impressive because thrifty Canadian home makers have learned that Miss Chapman's advice is invariably practical.

Other well-known food experts and cookery teachers in the Dominion share Miss Chapman's high opinion of Magic. In fact, the majority of them—and housewives, too—use Magic exclusively. No wonder Magic outsells all other baking powders combined!

Miss Chapman's recipe for "LUXOR CAKE"

1 cup fine granulated sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1/2 cup egg yolks
1/2 cup lukewarm water
1/2 teaspoon Magic Soda
1 1/2 cups pastry flour (or 3 tablespoons less of bread flour)
2 teaspoons Magic Baking Powder
1/2 teaspoon salt

Sift sugar. Measure out 2 tablespoons, pour on vanilla extract and set aside. Add water and soda to egg yolks beat with egg beater until foamy. Add sugar a little at a time, beating in well. Add flavored sugar and beat. Sift together flour, baking powder and salt. Fold carefully into mixture; pour in ungreased angel cake pan. Bake in moderate oven at 350° F. for 40 to 45 minutes. Invert pan and let stand until cake is cold, when, with the aid of a spatula, it will slip from pan. Remove all crumbs and moist crust from surface and cut in three layers. Spread Lemon Cream Filling between layers. Ice top and sides with Marshmallow Seven Minute Frosting. (Recipes for filling and frosting are in the Magic Cook Book—see free offer below.)

FREE—Send for the Magic Cook Book to use when you bake at home. Address: Standard Brands Ltd., Fraser Ave. and Liberty Street, Toronto, Ont.

AN EASY $20.

A new customer entered a grocery store and bought 50c. worth of sugar. He handed out a $20. bill and received $19.50 in change. Later another man walked into the store, showed a detective's badge, and asked the grocer if he had taken in a $20 bill from a stranger. "Yes," said the grocer. "Well, it is a counterfeit," declared the badge wearer. "Let me have it and I will give you a receipt for it. I want to take it to the Police Station, I'll return it later. He got the bill. Sometime after the merchant telephoned the station about his $20. and learned that Station, I'll return it later." He had been worked by a pair of crooks.

"Yes, I'll admit times are a bit slow with me but I'm hoping for the turn of the tide." Waiting for their ships to come in has spelled disaster for all too many Canadian merchants. Don't think along the lines of the man above. Advertise!

THE MASTER MIND

Novelized by Marvin Dana.
Author of "Within the Law."
From the Success ul Play
by Daniel D. Carter

"And no one else has been here except members of the family?"

"No, sir; no one—except myself." The very fact that in the final phrase the butler had omitted the customary "sir" caught Wainwright's attention. It was suspicion that suggested his next question:

"Was the person who called left alone in this room?"

Andrew met the issue with the enormous audacity that was characteristic of him—when it did not run counter to his scheming. Now, according to his plans, the hour for unmasking was come. He spoke tranquilly:

"No, sir. He was not alone in this room at any time. I am quite sure, sir." He paused to give emphasis to his question. "Why, sir? Has anything been taken?"

"No," Wainwright replied carelessly. "Nothing has been taken."

But Andrew was not yet content with the situation. He was, in fact, minded to implicate himself more explicitly, though not by a distinctly overt act. He selected as his agent in this the detective, who had been scrutinizing the butler with professional closeness.

"May I venture an observation, sir?" Andrew asked his employer. Then, as Wainwright nodded assent, "It's only this, sir, that the next time Mr. Marshall sees me he will be sure to know me." With the saying he went softly out of the room, while the detective sat staring, aghast with indignant surprise at the impertinence.

Wainwright spoke in a low tone, yet most emphatically:

"Marshall," he said, "the next time your brother officers boast of their acquaintance with prominent men you may say that, face to face, you have met the Master Mind."

Marshall said not a word, only regarded the speaker with amazement. He threw a quick glance toward the doorway through which Andrew had disappeared.

"You don't mean—him?" he exclaimed.

"Precisely."

In a second Marshall was on his feet, his eyes snapping with eagerness, all energy and alertness.

"It's the chance of my life!" he exclaimed gleefully.

"What do you intend to do?"

The detective grinned triumphantly. "What do I intend to do?" he repeated. "What do I intend to do?" he repeated.

"What do I intend to do?" he repeated. "What do I intend to do?" he repeated.

"What do I intend to do?" he repeated. "What do I intend to do?" he repeated.

"What do I intend to do?" he repeated. "What do I intend to do?" he repeated.

"What do I intend to do?" he repeated. "What do I intend to do?" he repeated.

"An enemy—yes," she cried, in indignation. To her, who worshiped him, the bare idea seemed preposterous, absurdly impossible.

"Yes, an enemy," Wainwright repeated, with added energy. "Didn't you know it?"

"No, I never guessed anything of this," she said, now thoroughly frightened at the thought of peril for him. "How should I know anything of it? You never told me!"

Wainwright answered frankly.

"I have told you already, Lucene, that I sometimes feared lest you had some anxiety you kept secret from me. You explained the cause of your distress to me. Yet I thought there was a remote possibility that you might be able to tell me something more."

The wife watched her husband as he thus spoke with an astonishment into which blended reproach.

"What is it you wish to know?" she said, with a trace of bitterness in her tone. "I know nothing of any enemy, but I am ready to tell you whatever I do know."

Wainwright shook his head. "Since you know nothing of my enemy," he said, "it would be vain to bother you with questions. You can not help me." He turned and went toward the door, but halted as his wife called to him.

"But you haven't told me," she exclaimed. "Who is your enemy?" she asked tremulously. She sprang up and advanced a little toward him, then paused to look at him with fear dilated eyes. "What is the danger that threatens you?"

"Marshall, the Master Mind will strike tonight."

Wainwright spoke very softly.

"I mustn't tell you now, dearest," he said. "Later on, I will."

"Now—now," she begged.

The husband, however, persisted in his refusal.

In the library he spoke to the waiting detective in a voice cautiously restrained, but with sharpness:

"Marshall, the Master Mind will strike tonight."

In reply to the astonished inquiries of the detective he explained the manner in which he had arrived at this conclusion as to the plans of his enemy.

"This man, Andrew," Marshall ventured, "is the Master Mind, as you believe—and I, too, for the matter of that. Now, he has arranged to leave here tomorrow, along with his real employers as they pretend to be. Mr. and Mrs. Blount, and their son, Walter. It seems likely to me that there's some close relation here between this Master Mind and the Blounts. He's not the man to be really a servant to folks like that, eh? And so there's your wife, their daughter. They all seem to be mixed up together in this thing."

Wainwright turned away with a brief good night.

"But surely," Marshall exclaimed, greatly astonished, "you're not going to bed?"

"Why not?" he questioned, with entire sincerity.

"But, good Lord!" Marshall ejaculated. "You must take precautions. You yourself know this man is dangerous—deadly!"

Wainwright shrugged his shoulders. "I can't very well hide from the fellow in my own house," he objected.

"I'm going to arrest him at once," was the gruff announcement.

Again Wainwright shook his head.

"We can do nothing whatever until he shows his hand. Good night."

Marshall was still staring at the doorway through which the master of the house had disappeared when he was startled by the sudden coming of Andrew.

"Well, what do you want?" Marshall demanded.

Andrew answered in a way that was disconcerting to his questioner.

"I was afraid I offended you a little while ago, when I was here before, sir. So I have come, sir, to ask your pardon. And there was another thing, too, sir," he continued more briskly, at last raising his eyes and meeting the other's wondering stare with inscrutable gaze.

"To be quite frank, sir, I am aware that you are a detective."

"Well, what of that?" Marshall demanded, still brusquely, but with a lively curiosity as to the outcome of this strange interview between him—

"I am aware that you are a detective," self and the celebrity of the underworld who masqueraded as a butler for the ensnaring of an enemy.

"Well, sir," Andrew went on serenely, "since you are a detective and in this house tonight, I would advise you to watch that safe in the alcove there."

He pointed toward the curtained recess.

ness. "I specially, say, at about 2 o'clock in the morning."

"Now, what the devil are you driving at?"

"I mean the Wainwright jewels, sir," was the reply. "They are in that safe, as perhaps you know. At least it is no secret."

The detective scowled at the butler standing before him, apparently quite unconcerned. "Is it an attempted robbery you're hinting about?"

CHAPTER XIII.

An Admission.

MARSHALL, the detective, attempted a diversion and replied to Andrew:

"You can hardly expect me to place much confidence in the statement of a person who is a total stranger to me," he objected.

"Of course, sir. It is true that I am practically a stranger to you," Andrew admitted without the change of a note in his monotone to give warning of the supremely audacious speech to follow. "You're known to me only since Mr. Wainwright told you who I was a few minutes ago. But I have known you for a long time, sir."

The detective glared with round eyes at this amazing man, who dared flaunt the helplessness of the law in its very face.

"Oh, you have, have you?"

"Yes," came the placid answer.

"You were an obscure detective when you recovered those bonds in the Fourth National bank case. Your present excellent position is really owing to that besides the medal you received at the time and also the $10,000 reward paid to you. But through it all you said nothing of the anonymous note you received advising you of the facts in the case and giving you explicit directions as to how to capture Denver Jones."

Marshall sat spellbound.

"Then it was you who sent the letter?"

Andrew bowed.

"I simply mentioned it, sir," he continued sedately. "In order to show you that when I give information my motives are by no means always selfish. Good night, sir." The butler's voice was still that of the excellent servant trained to a becoming humility. But before he had reached the door he was arrested by the voice of the detective.

"One minute. Why did you double cross Denver Jones, and what made you pick me for that Fourth National capture?"

"Well, you see, sir," the Master Mind explained blandly. "Jones had the misfortune to offend me. Besides, sir, I knew that on account of your success in this case you would be promoted to a high place in the detective service, and as I was then situated it was not well for me to have skillful men in high places. Good night, sir."

Marshall was at pains presently to seek Wainwright, whom he found on the point of retiring, and to make known the information he had received from Andrew concerning the projected burglary. It was agreed between them that the detective should maintain a strict secret watch over the whole establishment throughout the night, with the twofold object of being ready for any move on the part of the sender of the black card and of felling the expected effort of the robber against the jewels in the safe.

Wainwright was to hold himself in readiness for a summons at any time, but chose not to share directly in the watch. It seemed certain to both men that the Master Mind would be aware of their conference. Undoubtedly he had intended that his announcement of the visit from a thief should be passed on to Wainwright, as it had been. Yet the exact reasons for his course defied analysis.

Meanwhile Lucene was in despair because of the desperate situation with which she was confronted. A just judge must have taken into consideration her youth and inexperience, her feeling of devoted gratitude and reverence for the man who guided her choice, and the judgment must have been lenient, though it might find her guilty. But she had no mercy toward herself. She had come to know the truth at last—the truth she had voiced to the Master Mind—that it is impossible to build happiness on lies. She had lived a lie, for the hoodwinking of the man who loved her, who had honored her above all women, who had given into her keeping his honor by making her his wife. Thus she had foully betrayed his faith. Whatever the penalty for truth at the outset, the truth should have been told. She understood now. Her conscience had warned her. She had stifled conscience at the dictation of the man whom she esteemed for his goodness to her, Andrew. Now realization of her passive guilt was fully hers. But the ruin had been wrought. It was too late to undo the evil accomplished by her treachery. There was nowhere any hope of redemption. She had sinned; she must do penance with a life of agonized mourning for the bliss she had lost. There was left to her only the ability to spare her husband in some measure. That she must do, though her heart broke.

It was just five minutes before the hour of 2 when Andrew, in his cupola room, extinguished his light, which had shone from the tower windows like a beacon. Creagan, lurking within the shadows of clustered shrubberies a hundred yards from the mansion, heaved a sigh of relief. Then, as the calm of the place remained unbroken, he began stealthily to make his way toward the massive bulk of the house.

Marshall had established himself in a window seat of the library, from which he had an extensive view of his surroundings.

SIGNS

There are two types of signs we want to take up in our little discussion this week,

- (1) Your own Signs.
- (2) The signs which the manufacturer puts up on your building.

Let us deal first with your own signs. What signs have you on your store now? Do they look bright and fresh? If not, they are a detriment rather than a productive advertisement. I know of some signs that you would have to hunt up a crossword puzzle fiend and ask him to fill in the missing letters. Signs which are puzzles are not making sales.

There are still some stores without any signs whatever, or else they are too high up to be of any use. We would not consider an advertisement complete without a name, or a letter without a signature. Neither is a store complete without its proper sign.

In the old days of the horse and buggy a small sign over the door seemed sufficient, but today it is a different story. There are three views to consider. The view from up the street, the view from across the street and the view from the sidewalk in front of the store.

If the sides of the building are visible for a considerable distance, they offer an opportunity for a well painted sign. If, however, the building is closed in on both sides, then we must make the best we can of the space in front.

With regard to size, shape and type of sign, I can only generalize here, as the need of each individual store would require a separate study, and the amount of money to be spent would depend on how much the business (present and prospective) would warrant.

Types of hanging signs range anywhere from plain board signs to the very latest in flashing neon electric signs, each one serving its own purpose and locality. The widening use of electricity makes it advisable to include electric signs and lighted signs in our discussion.

Other signs include painted panels across the top of the store, strips around the top of the windows, lettered windows, and separate panel signs inside the windows.

The most important points to remember are that they must be visible from a distance, they must be easily read, they must contain a sales appeal and they must be kept in good condition if they are going to bring results.

It is a wise policy to have them lighted either by overhanging lights or using electric signs, so that they can be seen at night and be an advertisement even when the store is closed.

As to what shall be the wording on the signs, it depends on the space available.

If the store has a trade name, the name of the proprietor should also be placed on at least one of the signs. And as I said above, they should contain a selling appeal regarding some of the lines handled. Don't use small letters that are hard to read.

Now with regard to the signs which the manufacturer puts on your building—if you are handling gasoline or paints and varnishes you can very likely get the co-operation of the manufacturer or distributor in obtaining a sign which will serve the purpose of both advertising his products and be a name sign for your store. In this case give careful consideration to what message you have him paint in your section of the sign or you may waste a valuable opportunity for good advertising. If you make use of this type of sign, you must see that it is repainted frequently, because it is just the same as a sign of your own.

Have a policy regarding the signs which manufacturers' salesmen want to tack up all over the sides and front of your store, or you may find that instead of a front that looks dignified you will have one that looks like "Joseph's coat of many colors." Don't permit them to duplicate signs in the same location, as the same sign repeated many times side by side detracts from the appearance of your building and does not increase the advertising value.

Lesson for March 20

JESUS DIES ON THE CROSS

LESSON TEXT—John 19:17-22, 25-30.
GOLDEN TEXT—For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Gives His Life for Us.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Gives His Life for Us.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus Dies for Us.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Why Christ Died.

This lesson presents the greatest tragedy of all time. No record in the annals of history approaches it. It is in a real sense the climax of all history. Though unique in its blackness, from it flows streams of life and liberty for all the world. It is highly important that every teacher have the personal experience of Christ's death for himself and then endeavor to get his pupils to see that Christ's death was instead of their own death. We escape judgment because the judgment we merited fell upon Christ.

I. The Place (v. 17).

It was on a hill called in Latin "Calvary" and in Hebrew "Golgotha," which in shape resembled a skull. This hill is a few yards outside Jerusalem. This is a most significant name for the place where man's redemption was accomplished. The skull is an apt picture of man's condition as a result of sin—life and intelligence gone, leaving only the dark empty cavern.

II. His Companions (v. 18, cf. Luke 23:28).

Two malefactors were crucified with him. Their names are not given. This was in fulfillment of Isaiah 53:12, "He was numbered with the transgressors." He was sinless, but became sin for us.

III. The Inscription over Him (vv. 19, 20).

It was customary to place an inscription over the cross, stating the crime for which the victim suffered. Although Pilate did this in bitter irony and contempt, he uttered a great truth, affirming more than he intended.

IV. Gambling for the Garments of Jesus (vv. 23, 24).

This was a fulfillment of the scripture, "They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture." Ps. 22:18. This is an exhibition of how men's hearts may be as calloused as to plan an act for present gain under the shadow of the cross of Christ.

V. Utterances from the Cross (vv. 25-30).

1. "Behold thy son—"Behold thy mother" (vv. 25, 26). In this crucial hour he forgot his own bitter anguish and interested himself in those he loved. This is a fine example of human sympathy, and especially of filial love at its best.

2. "I thirst" (v. 28). As the sinner's representative, he suffered not only untold agony of mind, but of body as well.

3. "It is finished" (v. 30). While no one can fathom the depth of meaning in these words, they no doubt indicate a. That the calamities and indignities heaped upon him were at an end. His trial was grossly illegal. False witnesses were employed to incriminate him.

b. His awful sufferings were at an end. The penalty of the unnamable and indescribable sins of the world were resting upon him, wringing from him the pathetic cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

c. The fulfillment of every type and prophecy.

d. His life of perfect obedience.

e. The great work of redemption. "Finished" means more than ended. It means "accomplished." All that he started out to do was now completed.

f. The judgment of the world and the casting out of Satan. (See John 12:31.)

"From this point on there was no more humiliation, insult, or outrage. From the moment when the spear-thrust made it certain that he was actually dead, no cherished infant form could be more tenderly taken in arms, wrapped in clean linen with aromatic spices, and laid at rest in a faultlessly clean chamber. Neither was he ever again seen by an unfriendly eye. Truly, as to all sorrow and suffering and vicarious agony, it was finished."

VI. His Death (v. 30, cf. Luke 23:44, 45).

His death was voluntary. It was unlike any other death in all history. By an act of sovereign will he dismissed his spirit. No one took his life from him. He had power to lay it down and power to take it up again. So shocking was the crime that nature herself threw around the Son of God a shroud to hide him from the godless crowd. Darkness was upon the land at noonday.

SOLEMN THOUGHTS

Tact comes as much from goodness of heart as from fineness of taste.—Endymion.

Reserve is the truest expression of respect toward those who are its objects.—De Quincey.

"As time passes, the sinner will center in self and become more selfish, and a Christian's life will center in God and become more Christ-like."

Impressive Rendering of "Crucifixion" by Choir

Both eloquence and sympathy were manifest in a rendering of Stainer's sacred cantata, The Crucifixion, by the augmented choir of Lachute United Church last Sunday. The interpretation also evidenced the much painstaking practice, necessary to a perfect mastery in this difficult rendering.

The cantata was sung at the close of the regular evening service at United Church, and the large congregation which remained in their seats were well rewarded by an impressive musical hour. The power of Stainer's immortal work, and its effective rendering by this choral group, were witnessed, most noticeably perhaps, in the spell which they cast among their audience—even among those to whom the structure meant nothing. For, as the theme developed through the beauty of sublime pathos, to the triumph of kingship, fading again to the sweet utterance of humility and resignation—there was no question of the grip in which all listeners were held. Many eyes were dimmed with tears, as the eloquence of pipe-organ and harmony of human voices blended to portray the more heart-rending scenes of the Sacred Passion.

The chorus, "Fling Wide the Gates," with its ring of triumphant jubilation, presented a marked contrast to the haunting and soul-stirring appeal of the Anthem, "Is it Nothing to All Ye that Pass by?", during which it was not difficult to conjure up a vision of the Sacred figure, bearing His cross on that last journey. Yet with perfect control and modulation, or with powerful and crashing harmony, the choir adapted itself with fitting expression through all phases of the oratorio.

Perhaps one of the most beautiful movements was a quartet rendering of "God so Loved the World," which required the same sympathy control, as the voices at times were subdued almost to a whisper. This item was sung without accompaniment, the expression and the accuracy of note being well upheld. The solo and duet work was also admirably executed throughout.

Recognition is due to the conductor, Mr. C. L. Duncan, by whose untiring efforts, the choir was so perfectly prepared for this difficult undertaking. And to our congratulations of the entire choral gathering, must be added an appreciative comment for the musical accompaniment by Principal Hall, who presided at the organ with the skill and understanding of a true musician.

This memorable evening will remain long in the minds of all those who were fortunate in being present.

Lecture at St. Andrews

An interesting lecture on Canadian Birds was given in the United Church on Friday evening last, under the auspices of the Good Fellowship Circle. The speaker was Prof. Harrison L. Lewis from the Department of the Interior, Ottawa. The beautiful plumage of our birds was wonderfully portrayed by coloured lantern slides. Mr. Lewis explained that one of the reasons why we should be so anxious to cultivate and preserve the bird life is the fact that our feathered friends destroy annually many millions of harmful worms and insects. A post mortem examination revealed that one bird had five hundred mosquitoes in its little inside. We should certainly cultivate them around St. Andrews, not only for the charm of their song and beauty of their colours, but also as mosquito eaters.

Sir George Perley Honored

Received at Buckingham Palace

London, March 22.—His Majesty this afternoon granted an audience to Sir George Perley, Minister without portfolio in the Canadian Government and leader of the Canadian delegation to the world disarmament conference at Geneva.

Sir George was a visitor to the House of Commons this afternoon, and afterwards was received by Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald and J. H. Thomas, Secretary for the Dominions, in the Prime Minister's room.

Annual Meeting of W. I.

The annual meeting of the Upper Lachute and East End Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. R. Robinson on Friday evening March 4th.

A large number of members and guests were present and the meeting was enjoyed by all.

The retiring President thanked the Convenors for the work done in the various branches.

Encouraging reports were read by both the Secretary and Treasurer.

During the year six speakers addressed the meetings on various subjects and two lantern slide demonstrations were provided.

A goodly sum of money was raised, which was expended in charitable work. A large quantity of used garments were also donated to the Western Bales. A quilt made by the members, realized $19. for their funds, the lucky number being held by Mrs. T. Morrison of Hill Head. A demonstration of Handicraft was also a feature of the evening, some of the members bringing beautiful hand-made rugs and quilts for exhibition. There was also a novelty sale which added to their funds.

A number of new members were added to the roll, making in all 33.

The Officers for the coming year were elected as follows:—

President, Mrs. J. S. Gordon, Vice-President, Mrs. Wm. McQuat, Secretary, Mrs. A. Nicoll, Treas., Mrs. Wm. McFarlane.

Dainty refreshments were served by the hostess, bringing the evening to a successful close.

Phases of Women's Institute Activities in Argenteuil County

Survey of Season's Work in County Branches

Reporting on the work achieved by Quebec Women's Institutes throughout the winter, Elizabeth McCurdy, Provincial Convenor, notes the following activities among branches in this County.

Frontier Branch made it possible for an ailing child to have medical examination and necessary attention. The branch members are working on quilts for use wherever needed. Jerusalem Bethany Branch has also included sewing in its winter activities. "What it means to be a Canadian" was the subject of study. Morin Heights planned medical attention for a needy child and assisted an aged man with a cash donation. Social gatherings were successfully conducted by this branch. "The care of a Pneumonia Patient in the Home" was the subject of a talk in Pioneer Branch meeting. Sewing for families in need has been industriously carried on in this Branch during the Winter months.

Italy's unemployed at the end of February totaled 1,147,000, a new high and an increase of 96,000 in a month. One fourth of that number receive government aid.

St. Patrick's Day proves very Profitable for St. Simeon's Church

Favoured with an ideal day for their annual St. Patrick's Tea, the Ladies' Guild of the Lachute Anglican Church, was well pleased with the splendid financial results obtained from their efforts on Thursday afternoon last. The usual high standard of eatables was evident at the festive tables, and efficient smartly dressed "colleens" acted as waitresses. The proceeds of the tea amounted to $85.00.

During the evening, the St. Simeon's Club Players presented "My Irish Cinderella" a four act comedy, and the Auditorium was packed to full capacity with an appreciative audience.

Act I opened with a scene in Mother McGee's woodshed, a dilapidated room with very little furniture and mother McGee, a plain Irish woman, is busy doing her weekly washing. In her care is Peggy, a pretty Irish girl of about eighteen, who had been brought up in the poor house, and had later been subjected to the cruelty of her guardian. The only true friend she really had was her pet Robert Emmett, a bantam hen and Father Donohue, the village priest.

Mansfield, a private detective, arrives on the scene, just as Mother McGee is giving Peggy a usual whipping, and demands to see the burly washerwoman alone, explaining that he is in search of a poor-house brat, whose father was killed during action at the front, and that he had traced her to her abode. Not being impressed with the happenings, Mother McGee objects, saying that Peggy was too good a worker, but soon changes her mind when she learns that the "poor-house brat" was supposed to be a grand-daughter of Lord Lonsdale.

Earl Wingate, nephew of the English Lord, who had employed Mansfield, arrives on the scene, and arranges for the Irish girl to leave for England. In the second act, Lord Lonsdale and Margaret Wingate are planning a hearty welcome for the missing child, wondering what kind of a character she is, and receive a severe shock when she arrives. Clifford Morgan, a handsome wealthy American, who was a friend of the Lonsdales, just happens to visit at the time, and takes rather a liking to the wild Irish Colleen. Lord Lonsdale plans for the education of his new charge, engaging several learned teachers and Professors. Peggy receives her first experience of education from her music teacher, Monsieur Antoine, and promises him a "foine toime". Not being favorably impressed with her first lesson, she demands an Irish Reel and forces Burton the butler to dance an Irish Jig, much to the disgust of Lord Lonsdale, who arrives in a terrible rage, and fires the teacher on the spot.

During the next scene, Peggy has benefited from her tutors, and develops into an attractive girl whose charms attract young Morgan, much to the annoyance of Margaret and her brother Carl Wingate, the latter having planned to marry Peggy, so as to have the enormous estates. After being rejected, the Earl threatens to tell Lord Lonsdale that Peggy is an imposter so as to force her hand, and the threat is overheard by the Lord, who immediately orders Peggy to leave the house.

In the final act, Lord Lonsdale is away on a vacation, and Peggy hides in the house, suffering mental agony caused by the grief of recent affairs, but enjoys the care of Annie the maid and Burton.

Morgan, who was still very interested in Peggy, and hopes to prove her innocence, successfully finds Mansfield and Mother McGee, brings them to the Lonsdale estate at the same time as the peer returns, and there, Mother McGee proves that Peggy was innocent of what had really happened, and produces a picture of Peggy's father, who after all was the son of Lord Lonsdale.

Mrs. John MacKimmie as Peggy, did exceptionally well in her clever portrayal of the Irish Colleen, and Mr. Chas. Henderson was indeed up to his usual easy manner on the stage. Lord Lonsdale interpreted by Gerald Taylor, had a most difficult role to perform, and is to be highly commended. Mrs. S. Holt, as Mother McGee, played her part in a very realistic way, although it was her first appearance on the stage. Earl and Margaret Wingate, acted by Cyril Gillard and Jennie Valpy respectively, were very natural for the parts, while George Miles as Mansfield also did very well. Mrs. T. Idon as Annie the maid, Herman Stansfield as Burton, and Jack Gorman as Monsieur Antoine, furnished a few amusing incidents, and Frank Scott with Arthur Ashworth took the parts of "The Workman" and "The Boy" respectively.

Mrs. G. Y. Deacon and Mr. C. L. Hall assisted the players with their generous help, which added greatly to the success of the play. The furniture was kindly loaned by the Legaré Co., which is greatly appreciated by the St. Simeon's Club.

Irish Music was rendered by Miss Rhiannon Roberts and Mr. Mr. Alex. Clark of Brownsburg, which added much to the brightness of the evening, and Messrs. Fred. Stansfield and Ben Maiden pleased the audience with a step dance during an intermission.

Proceeds for the play amounted to $207.00, making a grand total of $292.00 which will be given to the church wardens for support of the church.

Huntingdon Goes "Wet"

Seven out of ten municipalities in Huntingdon county voted last week against prohibition, the majority for the "wets" being 230 votes.

Voting in the various municipalities was held on Friday and Saturday and the results were made known on Monday. There were no disturbances and everything was reported quiet.

It is announced that each municipality will have to vote again before May 1, to decide whether they will want liquor licenses or not. No date for this voting has yet been fixed.

New Con. Member Only 29

Davies, Youngest Man in Parliament, To Take Seat Shortly. Ottawa, March 23,—

Percy R. Davies, young Conservative, who has carried his party's colors to victory over Liberal, U.F.A. and Communist candidates in Athabasca, will have the distinction of being the youngest member of the House of Commons. He is only 29 years old. Heretofore the youngest member of this Parliament has been Dr. J. L. Duguay, Conservative, of Lake St. John.

Mr. Davies was born in Edmonton. His father was mayor of Strathcona before it merged with the city proper. He is a graduate of the University of Alberta, where he won prominence as a debater. He was one of the team that met the Oxford University team when it visited Canada a few years ago and has been active in the student movement. Mr. Davies was admitted to the bar of Alberta two years ago and practises law at Clyde in the constituency which has just returned him.

He will take his seat in the House in about three weeks. In a remote, far-flung constituency such as Athabasca, the official declaration is always delayed because some ballot boxes have to be brought in from near the Arctic Region.

Fort Chipewyan, was the last important poll to report on this federal by-election and gave Mr. Davies 65 votes. Final results are, Davies, Cons. 4,878; Doze, Liberal, 4,557; Normandeau, U.F.A., 3,420; Axelson, Farmers' Unity, 2,294.

French "Baby" Car to be manufactured in Montreal

The "Microne" to be All-Canadian

A novel automobile will shortly appear on the Canadian Market, if plans materialize for the establishment of a plant in Montreal, by the Compagnie Anonyme Microne of France. The proposed factory will cost about $100,000 and will employ approximately 2,000 persons. All material for manufacture will be purchased right in Canada.

The so-called Microne is a baby model and an advance exhibition by Henri Jany, its inventor attracted much attention at the Sherbrooke Street Motor-dome.

The Microne, a one-cylinder car, with front wheel drive weighs 700 lbs. fully equipped. It has three "French" Horse power and can drive 65 miles to a gallon of gasoline, with a maximum speed of 45 miles an hour. It is expected that manufacture of the car with a one-piece steel frame will be started within a few months. Every part of the automobile will be "produced in Canada," with as much as possible in Quebec.

Saturday's Hockey Report Independents Beat Papineau

Papineau team, with two old Lachute boys on the line-up—Dunn and Blackburn—arrived from Montreal on Saturday to give the Independents a few pointers on Big City Hockey.

And the same Papineau boys were mildly surprised on being handed a 13-5 defeat by Lachute.

The encounter was clean and friendly, only one penalty being handed out by Referee MacKimmie who was in charge of the game. The Papineau team opened with a smart series of co-operative manoeuvres, which gave the first impression of a line-up superior to our home town Independents. But as the game advanced, the Lachute boys evidenced a better showing in fast hockey, goal tending and individual stick-handling; nor were they backward in the matter of team-work. Giroux staged many of his invincible rushes from the defense line, and spectators seemed unanimous in expecting something Big, whenever he took charge of the rubber. The play featured a number of spectacular scoring efforts, but closed in a series of easy—too easy—goals for Lachute. Heavy body-checking brought many of the lighter weight players to the ice. Raymond of St. Andrews, a new man on the Lachute defense, showed great possibilities in a fast and solid defensive game, but his hockey lacked polish.

The first period gave a 5-4 lead to Papineau, and the play appeared very even. In the next session however, Independents turned the tables and took a decided lead, which gave them in the final score a 12-5 victory. During the closing 5 minutes, Papineau concentrated on the offensive and worked hard for a goal. But a well-managed defensive and a continued run of good luck, prevented any further scoring in the Lachute cage. Independents carried their full quota of substitutes, but Papineau appeared somewhat short on the reserve line.

HUNTINGDON, CHAMPIONS IN RURAL SCHOOL SERIES

The final game of the Eastern Townships High School Hockey League was played in Montreal between Huntingdon and Granby, winners in their respective sections of the league. The game was enthusiastically attended, and a 3-1 victory gave Huntingdon High School the championship honors, in the provincial rural school series.

Our own Academy team are playing the Champions in Montreal to-day (Thursday) and the game should prove an excellent exhibit of hockey, as the 'Home' boys have a splendid record this year.

New Presbyterian Church

Tenders as recently called, for the building of a new Presbyterian Church on the present site were duly opened and considered, when it was decided that the Stuart Construction Company of Sherbrooke, would be awarded the contract.

The building will be of Granite Stone, which will be obtained from the Quarries at Brownsburg.

The new structure has been made possible through the monies bequeathed by the Roger Brothers of East Settlement, who have donated the money in memory of their sister Margaret for whom the new edifice will bear the name of

"Roger Memorial Presbyterian Church."

The Captain's Corner

Happy Easter ! From Auntie Di and the Captain

THE CAPTAIN'S WEEKLY LETTER.

Dear Boys,—

This week I want to have a little chat with you about 'silence.' Most of us like to talk and this after all is natural. Events are continually happening in our lives and in the lives of others and because they may be something out of the common, strange, and exciting, we are ever so keen to talk about them to the very first person we meet, all of which is perfectly right and proper, within certain limits!

There is however, a defining line beyond which it is neither proper nor right that we should exercise our power of speech and where the rule 'SILENCE IS GOLDEN' is the only one to obey.

We do not live entirely to ourselves, but in a community. The people who are around us have in their lives many private joys and sorrows, hopes and disappointments, that are entirely and in a most sacred manner their own. These do not, and ought not to concern us in the least, and into their "house of personal and intimate memories" we have no right of entry and should not seek for it. Should we, by accident, hear of anything that so entirely belongs to them in this way we must be careful that no word of ours, however unthinkingly spoken may be the means of adding to their sorrow or clouding their happiness.

It is difficult to estimate the distress that is brought about by words spoken at the wrong time and without reason, and it is well to bear in mind the fact that what YOU say in a careless and most innocent moment, may be repeated with exaggeration by someone else to the dire hurt and detriment of the individual concerned.

On this matter of repeating things, a very old and favorite story is told as follows. A worthy old Professor, one day mislaid his book—a classical one called HOMER and he gave out that he had lost his HOMER. This was repeated over and over again until in the end it was definitely and clearly stated that Professor ——— had lost his HONOUR. This also was repeated until finally the absolutely innocent University Teacher was compelled to resign his position and died in want and despair.

So then let us choose our words. Keep well within the clearly defined line of courtesy and good breeding. Never let ourselves be led away by senseless and ill natured remarks, and bear for all time in our minds the very true saying, "A still tongue maketh a wise head."

Ah! What a lot of trouble would be avoided if people only had the sense not to talk TOO much.

Your affectionate friend,

THE CAPTAIN.

"The Return of Timothy"

The excitement of the fire in the school, which had caused but little damage, very soon subsided and although talked about as a subject of great interest for a while, was soon forgotten in the routine of school life.

It required however, a longer period to enable Eric to overcome the serious injuries which threatened to undermine his constitution, and, which would cause his first term of school life to remain forever in his memory.

For a few days his condition was so unsatisfactory that it was thought advisable to send for his mother and the arrival of Mrs. Sellingcourt brought great relief to Eric as it enabled him to confide in one whose loving sympathy he was certain of receiving as soon as his physical condition enabled him to do so.

Naturally it came as a great shock both to Mr. and Mrs. Sellingcourt to learn of the danger that their little son had been in, both from the risk of drowning, and later from the fire, and when the telegram from the school had reached them early one fine summer morning, the only observation made by Mr. Sellingcourt was "We must have our boy home immediately."

This decision was modified as Eric made such quick recovery and begged so earnestly that he might be permitted to continue at the school until the end of the term.

"You see Mother," he pleaded, "if I go home now, I shall miss all the fun that is bound to take place when we break up, besides I want to know what is happening up at the school. It is very good of you to be with me in this little cottage by the side of the sea and I love to have you with me, but I long to see Kenrick and Henderson and then of course there is Timothy. You don't know how much I want to thank him for saving my life. He just put me down on the ground and just walked away without saying a word. I worry about that because I cannot understand it," and there sounded a wistful note in the little lad's voice.

Mother and son were alone together in the front garden of the little cottage that Mr. Sellingcourt thought it wise to get during his son's convalescence in order that he might have perfect quietness and rest away from the noise and excitement of the school. For he said, "If you do not want to come home my boy, I insist on you being alone with your Mother under these conditions," and so it had been arranged.

It was a warm afternoon, warmer even than usual for that time of the year and Eric in response to his earnest request had been brought out into the front garden, where lying in a long and low chair, he was able to feast his eyes on the sea, watching the waves as they lazily rolled up onto the beach. Already the trees were beginning to show the first signs of spring and the warm south wind gently touched the cheeks of the sick boy helping to bring back to them the colour of health and renew the sparkle in his deep blue eyes.

Mrs. Sellingcourt wrapped a rug more closely around his feet and said, "Don't worry dear, I am sure that both Kenrick and Henderson will be down to see you very soon and even Timothy will probably pay you a visit to find out how you are getting on. Do try and have patience and then you will soon get better."

"I do try," replied the little lad, "but you do not know, Mother, how hard it is to have to be here day after day, and not be able to run about and ———"

"Does Mrs. Sellingcourt live here," interrupted a quiet voice, as the tall slim figure of Timothy came through the side gate of the cottage.

Eric would have sprung to his feet but for the restraining hand of his mother and the visitor's quick step forward to prevent such an action.

Mrs. Sellingcourt stood up and extended her hand to Timothy. "What can I say to the rescuer of my boy, because I feel you must be the one they call Timothy." And then she hesitated, "I don't know your other name, nobody told me that."

"They wouldn't," replied the boy with a slight flush on his face. "They wouldn't do that. You have nothing to thank me for, Mrs. Sellingcourt. It did not take much to go into a room and bring your little boy down a few steps and," he went on glancing at Eric, "I hope that he is getting better."

"Oh yes," replied that young man eagerly. "I am coming back to school in a day or two and Mother, now that Timothy is here won't you let him stay to tea, do please."

Mrs. Sellingcourt smiled, "Of course, Eric, we shall only be too glad to have Timothy if he will stay, but perhaps he would rather go up to the school?"

"No! No! Mrs. Sellingcourt, I would far rather remain. That is, "Timothy went on hesitatingly, "if you really do not mind. You see, very few people ever ask me to stay with them. I am not at all popular," and the boy's voice trembled a little, while a close observer might have noticed that the tears were not very far away from his eyes. Perhaps Mrs. Sellingcourt was one of those close observers because there was extreme kindness in her voice as she replied.

"You must not talk like that to me, Timothy, after what you have done for Eric and for myself. Perhaps there is some way that I can help you and if there is, you may be sure I will do everything that I can."

Our Puzzle Corner

We can never measure exactly in numbers the diagonal of a square. If you are laying a foundation for your house and have each side exactly 30 feet, there is the distance from corner to corner staring you in the face, yet you can never say in exact numbers what is the length of that diagonal. The simple person will at once suggest that we might take our diagonal first, say exactly 41 feet, and then construct our square. Yes you can do this, but then you can never say exactly what is the length of the side. You can have it whichever way you like, but you can't have it both ways.

The next step in puzzlement is magic squares. You know what a magic square is. The numbers 1 to 9 can be arranged in a square of nine cells so that all the columns and rows and each of the diagonals will add up 15. It is quite easy and there is only one way of doing it, for we do not count as different the arrangements obtained by merely turning round the square and reflecting it in a mirror. Now if we wish to make a magic square of the 16 numbers, 1 to 16, there are just 880 different ways of doing it, again not counting reversals and reflections. But how many magic squares may be formed with the 25 numbers, 1 to 25, nobody knows, and we shall have to extend our knowledge in certain directions before we can hope to solve the puzzle.

When we started this little corner in the Watchman almost six months ago, we stated that it might serve as a pleasant recreation during the long winter nights. We hope it has. Now that the winter months are going out and we will be hieing away to the fields for soft-ball, base-ball and sports of many kinds, there will be very little time left for puzzles, whose proper environment is beside a cosy fire.

The answer to last week's puzzle is as follows,—

There were 100 pints of wine in the cask, and on thirty occasions John the Cellarer had stolen a pint and replaced it with a pint of water. After the first theft the wine left in the cask would be 99 pints; after the second theft, the wine in the cask would be 9801 divided by 100 pints (the square of 99 divided by 100) after the third theft there would remain 970299 divided by 10000 (the cube of 99 divided by the cube of 100) and after the thirtieth theft there would remain in the cask the thirtieth power of 99 divided by the twenty-ninth power of 100. This by the ordinary method of calculation gives us a number composed of 59 figures to be divided by a number composed of 58 figures.

But by the use of logarithms it may be quickly ascertained that the required quantity is very nearly 73.97 pints of wine left in the cask, consequently the cellarer stole nearly 26.03 pints.

To get the quantity to a nicety as the wily cellarer stipulated, by a simple process of calculation I have ascertained that the exact quantity of wine stolen would be 26.029962661171957726998490755 etc. (sorry but we have run out of figures) pints, and the man who would involve the monastery in a fraction of fifty-eight decimals deserved severe punishment.

THE SPHINX.

Ed. Note.—Many thanks for the interest you have taken in giving our many readers something to think about and amuse themselves with during the winter months. Trust you will have a most pleasant summer and to hear from you again later.

ORGANIZATIONS WITHOUT A PURPOSE

It is a peculiar thing the way that things come in bunches. Hear one woman say a thing and you are almost sure to hear something similar several times. This time it is woman's organizations. An active member of one of the women's societies in the church said that she had lost interest as they seemed to be doing no special work—had no real objective. The meetings were interesting enough and she was glad to see the other women, but she often felt that it was a waste of time. The next in the list was a member of the Women's Institute, also a hard worker. She was complaining that their Institute meetings were very enjoyable but that the Institute was doing no actual Institute work that was worth doing. The third came from a Home and School Club. She said almost the same thing—that the programmes were interesting enough, but that the Club was not doing anything to help the school and consequently did not justify its existence. The moral of this is, to keep your members working for some definite objective, if you want to keep your members interested.

Condensed Milk as an Infant Food.

Condensed milk is used to quite an extent as an infant food and under ordinary conditions, should not be used in preference to cow's milk; but, there are times when it is advisable to use it. Sometimes it is impossible to obtain clean cow's milk and in that case condensed milk is preferable. It is used sometimes in very hot weather when it is not possible to get ice and there are no facilities for keeping of milk. Condensed milk keeps better than fresh milk but it too needs care as it will putrify. Women frequently put their babies on condensed milk when they are travelling, which is of course a wise measure. There are babies with weak digestions who can take condensed milk when they cannot digest fresh milk. They should be given condensed milk under a doctor's direction.

Condensed milk babies are fat and rosy looking. The mixture is a sugary one and children are usually very fond of it. The milk has a deficiency of protein and fat and has too much sugar. Babies fed on condensed milk alone, while apparently healthy looking are anemic, lethargic, and almost invariably rickety. This condition comes on slowly and while the mother is very proud of her fat baby, it really is not in a healthy condition.

Add Other Foods

It is quite possible to bring up a healthy baby on condensed milk—but not on condensed milk alone. If you must feed a baby condensed milk, it should have cod-liver oil to add fat and vitamin D, orange or tomato juice to prevent any tendency towards scurvy, and egg-albumin to give the extra protein.

Variety in Desserts

A reader was complaining because she found it so hard to find variety in desserts. She said she seemed to be making the same thing over and over. I kept track of the desserts we had for a couple of weeks or so and I am going to give you a list of them. There is nothing new or novel in them but there is variety. Cut this list out and use it as a guide to making your desserts. Often it is easier to make the dessert than it is to decide what to make. These are all simple desserts requiring only a short time to prepare and are not expensive. Excepting the pie and the whipped cream desserts, they are all suitable for children.

Caramel pudding, Raspberry Whip (whipped cream, raspberry preserves, lemon juice.) Cottage pudding with Caramel Sauce, Date Tapioca, Trifle (left-over cottage pudding, raspberry preserve, bananas and whipped cream.) Orange Pudding (cornstarch over sliced oranges.) Apple Pie, Bread Pudding with Strawberry Preserves, Lemon Pie, Coconut Pudding (cornstarch pudding with coconut,) Butterscotch Pie, Chocolate Pudding, Apple Whip (Apple-sauce in beaten egg-white) served with custard sauce made from the egg yolk, Cottage Pudding with whipped cream, Lemon Sponge with Custard Sauce, Hot Gingerbread with Hard Sauce.

Moulded Custard

One tablespoon gelatine, 1/2 cup milk, (cold) 2 cups milk, 1/2 cup sugar, 2 eggs, 1/4 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon vanilla. Soak gelatine in cold milk 5 minutes. Heat 2 cups milk until scalded, add sugar, then pour over beaten egg yolks and cook over slow heat until slightly thickened, stirring steadily. Fold in the beaten egg whites and pour into wet moulds.

Jelly Roll

Three eggs, 1 cup sugar, two tablespoons water, 1 cup flour, 1 teaspoon baking powder, 1/4 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon vanilla. Beat egg whites, fold in sugar, beat yolks until thick and lemon colored and add to whites. Stir in water. Sift in flour, baking powder and salt. Add vanilla. Pour in a shallow pan. Bake in a moderate oven 325 degrees for 25 minutes. Turn out on a damp towel. Spread with jelly and roll. If the edges are cut off, it rolls easier.

EASTER

Easter approaches. In the store-windows one observes the lilies, the milinery, the emblems of a festival—apart from which the modern world, we fear, finds little practical significance in Easter; and the occasion is observed in a beautiful but remote reverence.

Yet Easter is very real to-day, and just as significant as that first Easter, when Christ arose in victory and everything it symbolizes from the Grave.

But what does Easter mean to you? Is it just a day when you go to church as a matter of course, wear your new spring clothes, visit your friends, exchange gifts,—or is it to you a day of spiritual awakening, a day when you read again the story of the Resurrection and find within you a new faith, a new strength and a new courage to endure the burden life has laid upon you?

For most of us have our burdens. Most of us carry a cross which at times seems intolerable in its weight, in the pain and suffering and shame it has forced upon us. Happy indeed is that soul who has never lifted his eyes to heaven and cried in torture, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me!"

It is to all those who have knelt in Gethsemane that Easter brings its message of hope and joy. If you have climbed your Calvary with slow and difficult steps, faltering under the burden of your cross, does it not comfort you to know that there is One who said "Cast your burden upon me, and come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavily laden, and I will give you rest."

To cast aside the grave-clothes of old sins, to roll away the stones of doubts and fears, resentments and jealousies, hatreds and wrongs and to stand free, resurrected and redeemed, in the glorious light of the two men in dazzling apparel who said, "Why seek ye the living among the dead?"—that is our blessed privilege this Easter-time; that is the immortal inspiration of the Resurrection and the living Christ.

Let us take to heart this beautiful message of Easter, and put its lesson to a practical and lasting application.

INCREASED TAXATION

The proposed increase of the amusement tax is causing a decided opposition from the many theatre owners, especially in the small towns where the various taxes are now prohibitive and during the past few years some 140 odd theatres have gone out of business in the province. The argument is that the amusement tax discriminates on investment as against other forms of industry and is a further addition to the poor man's burden.

OTTAWA VALLEY

SEED FAIR

The fifth Ottawa Valley Seed Fair opened in Hawkesbury last week, was the largest Seed Fair ever held in the Ottawa Valley, the total number of entries being 374. This was over 100 more than at the Seed Fair held in Pembroke last year.

The outstanding feature of the show was the red clover entries, the total number constituting an all time Canadian Record, with the extraordinary total of 123 exhibits in competition. The great majority of the red clover entries were produced in Prescott and Russell Counties. There was marked competition in all classes; barley entries numbered 58; wheat 48 and oats 73.

World Wheat King

Herman Trelle of Peace River, third time winner of the world hard wheat championship, and permanent holder of the trophy, photographed in Windsor Station, Montreal, when he paused to admire the model of the Empress of Britain. Mr. Trelle was subsequently congratulated on his success by Mr. E. W. Beatty, chairman and president, Canadian Pacific Railway.

Improving the Health of Scholars

School health work is a development of the urge felt all over the world for better health. All educationalists recognize that there is a definite relation between physical health and mental progress. Given equal mental capacity the rested, well-nourished child, free from physical defects can accomplish more school work, in less time, and with less energy expended, than the frail, tired little bit of humanity with an aching molar or perhaps with much reduced amount of vision and hearing. Such defects must be removed before the child can respond to any kind of instruction and their correction is the first step toward health improvement. A constant break in school attendance will cause a child to have to repeat its grade and is expensive to both the parents and school system.

Spectator's Analysis of Hockey

Hockey, as an outstanding game, is a combination of football, golf, soccer, prize-fighting and tug-of-war.

It is a crime wave on ice. If one man dashes into another on a slippery street, knocks him down and bashes him between the eyes with a crooked stick, it is unpremeditated assault. This, done in a rink is what is called first-class hockey.

Sporting enthusiasts who like their thrills served fresh every second and who consider any sport dull when any of the contestants are in an upright position have found what they ordered. Here, at last, is a game played while every contestant is in the act of falling through space.

It makes baseball seem like a casual exercise prescribed by the doctor for old gentlemen with stiff joints. Beside it, football looks like something thrown into the nursery to keep the children out of mischief.

It is played between 2 teams of five men each, none of whom cares a single thing about his physical future.

A small black rubber heel is what the battle is over, the aim of each team being to deliver it into a cage, guarded by a youth whose people evidently never gave him any good advice.

When it is time for a hockey game to commence, the referee skates to the centre of the ice and rings a bell. This is a signal to all physicians, nurses and internes to get ready for business. He then drops the rubber heel and flees for his life. The heel is then battled for on the basis of an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth and a broken nose for a try at the goal cage. During the carnage the busiest individual in the place is the goal tender, who has to stop more missiles than the City of Rheims stopped German shells.

After the end of the final period, surgeons examine the goal tenders, the game being awarded to the side whose goal tender has the best chance of recovery.

TORNADO IN ALABAMA

Estimates of the terrific suffering experienced in the storm swept districts of Alabama are coming in with startling figures. The death toll exceeds the 300 mark; injured run as high as 2,500 and the homeless are estimated at upwards of 7,000.

Although food, medical supplies, temporary homes in shelter tents and other immediate needs of the stricken people are being provided, Governor Miller, citing the suffering of the community, has issued an urgent call for assistance.

"Quick... the barn's on fire"

Dick Johnson's wife was making pies when she glanced out the window and saw smoke curling up from the barn. And Dick was over at the Blay's helping with a load of hogs!

She ran to the telephone. Dick rushed home with Fred Blay and in a few minutes they had stamped out the smouldering hay before the fire got really started.

"That was a close shave", Dick said. "We might have lost everything. It's lucky we've kept our telephone."

Much to the disgust of some of them a number of farmers of this vicinity have been summoned to appear at St. Jerome, on the beginning of next month, to act as jurors on the Court of King's Bench, now in session there. The present is a highly inconvenient time for farmers to absent themselves from the scenes of their activities and more especially to those who own sugar-bushes. Loud, but doubtless, unavailing, protests are heard.

Congratulations to the Stonefield scribe, whose pungent contribution to the columns of the Watchman last week were much appreciated and very timely.

Advertising for the Merchant of To-Day

conducted by
HAROLD S. EDGAR

A series of weekly articles on advertising and merchandising prepared for the merchants of Lachute District with the co-operation of the Watchman.

PERSONALITY OR PRODUCT—STORE OR STOCK

Whether one's advertising shall be of goods and goods alone, or of the store as a premier appeal the merchant is frequently puzzled as to just what plan to adopt. He hesitates to appear egotistical and overwork the personal pronoun "I" and for that reason probably many retail advertisers put all their emphasis on the goods, and in order to make the subject interesting, they talk prices to the exclusion of quality. Generally speaking, a judicious blending of prestige building for the store, quality emphasis on the goods and price information makes for most profit building publicity.

There are other cases where personality or the store, linked up with service, must be the first appeal and almost the only appeal.

Let us take for instance the case of an insurance agent, whom we shall call Frank Brown, handling all types of insurance; accident, life, fire, theft, live stock insurance, and all the twenty or more other varieties of property insurance. Frank represents a half dozen or more companies and could not very well advertise Aetna Fire Insurance or the People's Mutual Fire Insurance, or the Alliance Insurance all of which he represents. He represents a group of companies because no one of them wishes to carry too much liability in any one territory, and because no one company handles every type of insurance.

Frank, therefore cannot advertise any specific brand of insurance exclusively, so that in his case he advertises suggesting that the customer talk to "Brown." Any Insurance man in this district can use personal publicity in this way to his profit and to the benefit of his clients.

"FRANK BROWN FOR INSURANCE"

A similar case,—William MacArthur, located in a small town in the centre of a very fine farming district, has built up a nice comfortable business selling heavy hardware, barn paints, roofing materials, agricultural power machinery, etc. Mr. MacArthur raised the question as to how he should advertise. This was again a case of where advertising of a personality was the best way out. Mac sold three types of motive power machinery: Windmill, Gasoline Engine and Electric Motor, and it is manifest that he could not advertise all three to advantage. He was recommended to use the slogan

"SEE BILL MAC ABOUT IT"

For instance heading an advertisement,

"SEE BILL MAC ABOUT YOUR POWER NEEDS" and in a very few short pithy sentences say what he handled, suggest some types of need and his being in a position to fit the power to the need. Further advertisement would be headed

"SEE BILL MAC ABOUT HEAVY BUILDING HARDWARE" another,

"SEE BILL MAC ABOUT BARN ROOFING" and

"SEE BILL MAC ABOUT DAIRY EQUIPMENT"

In the complete series of advertisements running in rotation during the year, giving a picture of Bill Mac's activities, such a slogan backed with a personality that the advertising would fittingly represent, would build up a reputation of the Manufacturer's Trade Mark in the wider market.

Next Week,—Distribution of Effort.

SCOUT NEWS

Whistling VS. Smoking

During the recent newspaper "whistling nuisance" debate, Lord Baden-Powell confessed to being one. "Carrying out the Scout Law," he said, "when angry, or in difficulty I whistle, and likewise when I am particularly enjoying life and feeling uppish. Also for me whistling provides a substitute for smoking,—for, like a pipe, it gives satisfaction to me and annoyance to everybody else."

An Emergency Guard of Honor

An interesting inside story of the role played by a Boy Scout Guard of Honor is told by President D. P. Cruikshanks of the Minto Skating Club of Ottawa. The occasion was the last visit of Viscount and Lady Willingdon to the annual skating carnival, the "Minto Follies", accompanied by distinguished members of the diplomatic corps and several provincial lieutenant-governors.

To facilitate the approach of the party to the vice-regal box a strip of carpet had been placed upon the ice. A few minutes before the arrival of the guests the director, on a final tour of inspection, stepped upon the carpet. It slipped under him.

Immediately came visions of a catastrophe.—His Excellency or Her Excellency, or the Japanese Consul General, or the U. S. Minister—possibly the whole distinguished party in a heap on the ice! And even broken bones!

The director thought rapidly. Smartly dressed uniformed Scouts were scattered about the auditorium on various duties.

Hastily he called them together. Quickly he explained, and placed them at intervals along the carpet, each boy's toes firmly clamping the carpet-edge to the ice.

Their Excellencies and guests passed through the erect line of Scouts, smilingly appreciative of the youthful guard of honor,—and reached their box in safety.

A Prominent Canadian's

Tribute to Baden-Powell

"No individual man has exerted such a world-wide influence for good on such a number of people of all nations as Lord Baden-Powell. His name and example will be remembered when the memory of many of his contemporaries have faded into oblivion. It is indeed a privilege for any man or woman to be associated with such a movement."—Hon. Lieut.-Col. J. H. Woods, Managing Director, The Calgary Herald, and Provincial Commissioner of the Boy Scouts of Alberta, at a Baden-Powell birthday banquet.

Scouts for Hudson Bay Co.

Old Country Rovers of several years' Scout experience are being sought by the Hudson Bay Company for apprenticeship posts in Canada. Ten or more have been in touch with Dominion Scout Headquarters. A recent typical letter from a Scottish Rover tells of two months alone as cook with his factor on an Ungava island, awaiting the freeze-up, then Eskimo visits, the making of igloos, the hunting of seals and trapping foxes. All these young Scout adventurers write cheerfully, reflecting the true Scout spirit under conditions that at times must be lonesomely trying.

THE MASTER MIND

By Daniel D. Carter

Further down the room toward the rear the alcove, in which the safe, showed its draperies of portieres along the line of the opposite wall. Facing him, a little further toward the front, was the wide doorway into the hall, through which was to be seen a part of the stairway. The softly burning light cast its illumination over the stairs and hall itself, and shone through the doorway into the library, though the radiance here was dimmed so that objects were only barely visible in shadowy wise. From time to time the detective had undertaken a cautious round of the house to make sure that nothing of a nefarious sort was anywhere under way. But as the appointed hour of Andrew's promised burglary approached he held his position immovably in the window seat, where the drawn hangings hid him well while permitting his espionage. Then a faint sound from the stairway caught his ear, and he peered forth in anxious expectancy.

Presently a soft noise near at hand caught the attentive ear of the detective. A gentle creaking sound followed and Marshall was speedily aware, out of his professional experience, that the window further down the room was being skillfully opened.

Then, after an interval of silence, a pencil of light, the beam of an electric torch, shone from between the hangings of the rear window. The light moved slowly to and fro, taking its survey of the room with a leisurely thoroughness that again provoked Marshall to appreciation of the marauder's adept methods. Then, at last, the radiance rested for a second time on the alcove, and there continued for an appreciable period. The light vanished. There was no sound, but Marshall knew that the thief was stealing on silent feet through the shadows of the room, that he had come to the safe, that he was ready to—yes, a glow of light became faintly visible within the recess.

The detective prepared for action by pulling a blackjack from his pocket. He parted the curtains, and would have issued from his retreat, when again his attention was held by a wisp of sound. He waited, in tense silence, his eyes roving, for he was uncertain as to the direction whence the noise had issued. Then his glance caught sight of a form moving slowly on the stairway. In the first instant he perceived with a start of astonishment, that the new intruder on the scene was a woman. In the next, as the face was lifted so that the feeble light of the hall lamp fell full on it, he recognized Mrs. Wainwright, and his earlier feeling of surprise was lost in total dismay.

For the woman's manner was plain proof of guilt—of what guilt the spying man could hazard no guess, but guilt none the less. Her guilt was not merely slow, it was stealthy, with the awkward stealthiness of one wholly unaccustomed, and the gaze that darted here and there so hurriedly was furtive, laden with fear of discovery. These evidences were reinforced by the shudder that now and again shook her visibly. Marshall was appalled by this latest development in the mystery that beset the man he sought to serve.

The soft gleam in the alcove became discernable to her. At first glimpse of it she halted, and a smothered gasp of terror broke from her lips. She stood rigid, looking straight before her with dilated eyes. Then, at last she swayed a little, tensed swiftly and went forward again. When she was come to the alcove, she pushed the draperies apart and resolutely stepped within. The portieres closed behind her. Marshall crushed back an oath of amazement.

Yet for a brief season the detective was held inactive by stark bewilderment. Then to his astonished ears came a hushed sound of whispering from beyond the curtains of the alcove. It was incredible, monstrous that this should be. Nevertheless the truth was palpable. There was no outcry, no shriek for help from the woman, no flight by a safety seeking housebreaker. Instead there was only whispering, this secret conference in the dead of night between the thief and the mistress of the mansion. Suddenly another idea flashed into his brain impelled him to immediate endeavor: Was it necessary after all that Wainwright himself should ever know the whole hateful truth. Perhaps even, there might be some explanation of the wife's guilt that fell short of infamy.

Firm of purpose at last, Marshall crept slowly across the room to the alcove. Now he could hear the two within more plainly, and he listened eagerly, but the words were unintelligible. Convinced that longer effort at eavesdropping would avail naught, the detective, with his weapon ready, put forth a cautious hand and parted the draperies.

Notwithstanding all his painstaking, something betrayed this new presence to the senses of the burglar. As the portieres moved slowly apart under Marshall's careful fingers there came a sudden flash of light full in his face. Blindly he sprang forward and found himself in grapple with the thief. A sudden flash from the woman. The torch fell to the floor, to be crushed a moment later under the feet of the man. The woman shrank in a corner, half swooning. The men writhed and tottered to and fro, scuffling over the pile of velvet. The weapon of the detective gave him an advantage. One fierce blow struck the back of Creagan's head, and the man lurched heavily to the floor.

Marshall, after an instant's pausing pause, got out his own torch and turned its light on the scene. He saw the woman crouching miserably against the wall. On the floor the thief was moaning faintly. Then the detective's eyes caught sight of another object on the floor. He bent and picked it up—a sheaf of bills of large denomination. Here was more mystery. But there was no time now to bother with it! He thrust the bills into his coat pocket. Marshall stepped to the main electric switch and flooded the whole room with radiance. Once again Lucene stifled a cry as the brilliant illumination blinded her. The stricken burglar stirred and groaned, and then unclosed his eyes and lay blinking dazedly for a few seconds. But soon he sat up, very clumsily, and put a wavering hand to his head. He brought away the fingers all bloody, and regarded the stains with disgust.

"He'll do well enough now," Marshall stated, as he looked up and met the alarmed gaze of the woman. Creagan, following the direction of the detective's glance, turned his head weakly and perceived the girl, where she stood against the wall. His coarse face twisted into a grin. "Hello, Maggie!" he mumbled. "Say, the bull near croaked me."

"But you will be able to go in a minute," Lucene urged, wringing her hands in desperation. "Oh, please! You must! Mr. Marshall will give you the money. He picked it up."

"I'll take you along when I go," Creagan snarled. "What do you mean?" she gasped. But Marshall interrupted roughly. "Here, you!" he snapped at Creagan. "You get a hustle on yourself." He seized the burglar by the collar and jerked him to his feet. "Go on and get out of here! Didn't you hear what the lady said?"

"Gimme back that roll she give me!" he commanded surlily. "You stand a fat chance of getting that," Marshall exclaimed with a sneer. Then, as the thief moved a little: "None of that side stepping, either!"

"Oh, I ain't trying to beat it," Creagan declared. "I don't have to."

Marshall rested wordless, stupefied by the colossal impudence of this criminal, caught in the very act of burglary. Then the woman darted to him: "Oh, Mr. Marshall, please let him go!" she besought him frantically. "Give him the money and let him go. Oh, you must."

The detective however, could no longer accept this way out of the tangle of events. His first instinct of desire to shield the woman for her husband's sake if not for her own, was over come by the responsibility involved by such a course. "It is impossible!" he said. "Oh, if you only knew," she breathed.

Marshall remained unshaken. "Madam," he said coldly, "I am in your husband's employ."

She twisted his argument in her own favor. "But it would be doing him the greatest possible kindness to let this man go." She made a despairing gesture.

"Oh I know just how strange it must seem to you, but it's true, true. Marshall found that it required all his strength of will to withstand her supplication.

"You mean, without your husband's knowledge," "Yes, Yes," was the instant answer. "He must never know—never! I can't tell you why—I can't, I can't. If I only could—But I swear to you, on my honor as a woman, that my husband's happiness, his career, his honor even,

"Cut that out." Then he faced his employer somewhat doubtfully. "You see sir," he explained, "I caught him trying to take this money away from Mrs. Wainwright." He drew the bank notes from his pocket.

"It's a d—d lie," Creagan bellowed ferociously. "She give it to me."

"Shut up." The detective poised as if about to spring on Creagan. But Wainwright interfered. "Marshall," he directed shortly, "leave the man alone. Lies don't hurt if they are lies." He put forth his hand and took the money. Briefly his eyes ran over some of the bills, scrutinizing them closely; then he bestowed the packet in a pocket. For the first time he let his gaze go for an instant to his wife, who in frightened grief watched his face unremittently.

"Say, this wife, and I love him. It's for his sake that I beg of you to let this man go." She made a slight gesture toward Creagan. "He'll go—if you will let him. Yes, he'll go, and never come back again." She glanced for an instant into the brutal face, as she added her question confidently: "You will go, won't you? Tell him!"

"Sure thing!" was the harsh answer. The thief's small eyes, bloodshot now, were leering. "Sure, I'll go fast enough if you'll go with me, Maggie."

Lucene seemed not to hear the vile utterance. Certainly she gave it no apparent heed, only persisted in her wild petitioning.

"Don't you see, Mr. Marshall, no one will ever know—not a living soul—over!"

The voice of Creagan sounded. "Say," he cried to the detective, "are you such a bonehead you can't see that me and the lady was going away together?" Marshall made a threatening movement. Creagan spoke again, reckless of the menace. "Aw, cut it out, cull. Just ask the lady."

Marshall looked down into the face of the trembling woman. But the denial for which he longed did not burst from her lips. Instead, she stood in mute abasement.

"Did you hear what the man said?" Marshall asked. "Yes," came the muffled syllable. "Of course he lies?"

There was a pause, pregnant of a hateful possibility. And then, at last, there came from the girl the word that was the seal of her degradation: "No." It was hardly a breath of sound.

CHAPTER XIV.
In the Alcove.

THE spirit of mistaken martyrdom which had driven Lucene to this confession for the sake of the man she loved now again served her to struggle in his cause.

"And now," she cried, "you'll let him go! Won't you? Yes, yes! You must!"

There came an interruption which turned the eyes of the three to the archway of the alcove, where a tall figure stood contemplating the group. The woman uttered a faint cry that was rather a moan and shrank away as if in mortal fear, for the tall form, with the face set so sternly, was that of Wainwright. His voice came with a dominant severity:

"What have we here?"

Marshall answered:

"I caught this man monkeying with the safe. Guess I'd better get him out of here." He scowled at the thief.

"Come along, you!"

Creagan returned the scowl.

"I won't go!" he shouted. "I won't trying to crack no safe. I told ye I come here 'cause the lady!"

Marshall fairly throttled the thief for a moment.

"One more peep from you and I'll make you wish you'd never left jail."

"Who is this fellow?" Wainwright demanded.

"He's a cracksmen, all right," the detective replied. "I caught him as he was going to work on the safe here but beyond that, I don't know anything about him, though its certain he's a professional."

Wainwright put his next question directly to the criminal.

"Who are you?"

But for the time being Creagan had become subdued under the buffeting he had just received. So now he did not venture to answer.

"Are you deaf?" the sleuth rasped.

"Well if you want to know so bad," he replied sullenly, "why I'll just tell you. My name's Cregeen, and I'm from Chicago."

"You seem to have wandered a considerable way from home," Wainwright commented dryly.

"Ah," Cregeen said with an attempt at airiness, a guy'll go further than that to please a lady. What?"

Marshall broke in.

"Cut that out." Then he faced his employer somewhat doubtfully.

"You see sir," he explained, "I caught him trying to take this money away from Mrs. Wainwright." He drew the bank notes from his pocket.

"It's a d—d lie," Cregeen bellowed ferociously. "She give it to me."

"Shut up." The detective poised as if about to spring on Cregeen.

But Wainwright interfered.

"Marshall," he directed shortly, "leave the man alone. Lies don't hurt if they are lies." He put forth his hand and took the money. Briefly his eyes ran over some of the bills, scrutinizing them closely; then he bestowed the packet in a pocket. For the first time he let his gaze go for an instant to his wife, who in frightened grief watched his face unremittently.

Lesson for March 27

JESUS RISES FROM THE DEAD

LESSON TEXT—John 20:1-29.
GOLDEN TEXT—But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that sleep.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Living Again.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus the Conqueror. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Loving and Serving the Risen Lord. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Fact and Meaning of the Resurrection.

I. The Empty Tomb (vv. 1-10).

John does not enter into a description of the resurrection of Christ or give any proof other than that the tomb was empty, and that Jesus had repeatedly manifested himself after the tomb was found empty. To see the body of Christ with a spear-thrust and nail prints and the empty tomb was all that faith needed.

1. The testimony of Mary Magdalene (vv. 1, 2). This woman, out of whom Jesus had cast seven demons (Mark 16:9; Luke 8:2), announced the fact of the empty tomb to Peter and John. Prompted by great love to him for his kindness to her, she went early to the tomb even "when it was yet dark."

2. Personal investigation by Peter and John (vv. 3-10). The news of the empty tomb which Mary brought with breathless haste so moved John and Peter that they both ran to investigate. When John came to the empty tomb, he gazed into it, but when Peter came he entered it. This investigation convinced them of the reality of the resurrection. The removal of the stone from the sepulchre, the arrangement of the grave clothes, convinced them that the enemy could not have done this.

II. The Manifestations of the Risen Lord (vv. 11-29).

1. To Mary Magdalene (vv. 11-18).

a. Mary weeping at the empty tomb (vv. 11). Peter and John went home, but Mary could not. She stood weeping. Home was nothing to her while her Lord was missing. Earnest love need not to weep long for Jesus is found of those who love him. She should have been rejoicing that the grave was empty, for the empty tomb was eloquent proof of his messiahship and deity.

b. Mary questioned by the angels (vv. 12, 13). Through her tears, she saw angels at the tomb, who inquired as to the cause of her sorrow.

c. Jesus revealed himself to Mary (vv. 14-16). She first saw the angels and then her eyes lighted upon the Lord. She did not recognize him in his resurrection body, but his voice was familiar to her. As soon as he called her by name, she recognized him and fell at his feet weeping.

d. Jesus forbade her to touch him (v. 17). This showed that she was coming into a new relationship to him.

e. Mary's testimony (v. 18). She told the disciples that she had seen the Lord.

2. To the disciples (vv. 19-29). He appeared to several of his disciples at different times during the day. This is the first appearance to the disciples as a body. The rumors of his several appearances on that day caused the disciples to assemble to talk over the matter. For fear of the Jews, they met in a private room and barred the door. While they were discussing the strange happenings of the day, the Lord mysteriously appeared to them.

a. When Thomas was absent (vv. 19-23).

(1) His message of peace (v. 19). This revealed his attitude toward them. He did not come with censure for their failure and desertion.

(2) He showed his hands and his side (v. 20). Having calmed their fears, he gave them unmistakable evidence of his resurrection.

(3) He commissioned them (v. 21). "As my Father hath sent me even so send I you." This commission was not simply to a class, as the eleven, but to all Christians (Luke 24:33).

(4) He bestowed the Holy Spirit upon them (v. 22). This was their equipment. Only as empowered by the Holy Ghost can one go forward as a successful witness for Christ.

(5) The disciples' authority (v. 23). This authority was not by virtue of office, but by virtue of having the Holy Ghost. This spiritual gift gave spiritual discernment to know who had or who had not repented and consequently to pronounce pardon or withhold it.

b. When Thomas was present (vv. 24-29).

(1) The victory of sight and touch (vv. 24-28). The Lord graciously supplied the evidence which Thomas needed. The Lord does not rebuke those who sincerely seek light.

(2) Greater blessing for those who believe, not having seen (v. 29).

WORDS OF WISDOM

Kind words produce their own image in men's souls, and a beautiful image it is.—Pascal.

Blessed is the man who, having nothing to say, abstains from giving us wordy evidence of the fact.—George Eliot.

A Great War! A Great Pestilence! A Great Depression!

ALL within twenty years. Could there be a more gruelling test?

Yet life insurance stands invincible. During that whole period it paid every obligation promptly and fully—as it has ever since the Dominion was formed.

The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada itself paid to policyholders and beneficiaries in cash during these periods—

The War (1914-1918)

The Flu (1919)

The Depression (1930-1931)

—over $226,000,000. It has paid to its policyholders and beneficiaries since formation nearly $600,000,000.

In prosperity, life insurance is valuable; in adversity it is indispensable. The protection of your home, the security of your business, the comfort of your old age, depend first on adequate life insurance.
