Sudden Death of Mrs. Chas. McKenzie

The sad news of the death of Mrs. Chas. McKenzie, who passed away on Monday evening last after a short illness, came as a great shock to her many friends.

Deceased lady was born in Rockland 50 years ago, daughter of the late Alexander S. Edwards and Elizabeth Roe. Her early life was spent at home, after which she graduated from Vankleek Hill High School, passing on to Toronto Bible College to finish her education. For four years she took charge of the summer camp at Rockland, teaching during the winter months at Roussillon French Protestant School. Nine years ago she married Chas. McKenzie, of Brownsburg, who now mourns the loss of a loving and devoted wife.

Early in life Mrs. McKenzie was converted, baptized and became a member of Rockland Baptist Church and has been from that time an active and zealous worker. Since coming to Brownsburg she has taken great interest in the Baptist Church, having been President of the W. M. A. for several years. A woman of sterling character and deep convictions, and also highly gifted and esteemed by all who knew her, she will be greatly missed. Besides her husband she leaves to mourn her loss, three sisters and one brother, Mrs. Church, of Oyen, Alta.; Mrs. Thompson, of Thurso; Miss Edwards and Mr. Jos. Edwards, of Rockland.

A largely attended funeral took place on Thursday afternoon at the Lachute Baptist Church, conducted by Rev. L. Hisey, who spoke many comforting words to the bereaved family, after which the body was placed in the Lachute vault for interment at Rockland.

"God takes our loved ones from our home, but never from our hearts."

Funeral of the Late Rev. William K. Thomson

The funeral of the late Rev. W. K. Thomson was held in Erskine Church, Edmonton, Alta. The Rev. J. A. Caldwell, minister of Erskine Church conducted the service, assisted by Rev. Dr. Mitchell, Rev. Robert Lytle, and Rev. D. K. Allan. Miss Violet Cummings, sang "Crossing The Bar," a favorite hymn of Mr. Thomson's. The pall bearers were Messrs. A. R. McLennan, Wm. Dale, W. L. Cameron, M. Sillars, L. T. Miller and Alex. Cullens.

Beautiful floral tributes were received, testifying to the esteem in which the deceased was held.

He leaves to mourn his loss his wife and two children Jean and Jim, also his mother and two sisters in Scotland, and one brother Alex. and a sister in Windsor, Ont.

Huge Montreal Amphitheatre

A huge new hockey amphitheatre will be built in Montreal to house the Canadian team, according to Leo Dandurand, Secretary and Managing Director of the Canadiens. The building which is expected to cost $3,000,000, will be centrally located and is to afford accommodation for 18,000 persons.

The new building, which will be the largest of its kind in Canada, will be located at the corner of St. Alexander and Dorchester Streets, fronting on the latter. The required land has already been purchased and work is expected to commence early this year.

The new rink, will be used as a garage at first, with a capacity for 3000 cars.

Mrs. Albert Fuller passes away in Hoosier, Sask.

Mr. John Douglass has received the news of the death of yet another sister on Friday, Mar. 25th., Mrs. Albert Fuller, of Hoosier, Sask. Mrs. Fuller who was formerly Mary Douglass, of Chaboro, was 72 years of age and until the last 21 years resided in this vicinity, being a member of St. Mungo's Church, and was loved by all who knew her.

She was of a gentle, kindly disposition, and for many years a wheel-chair invalid, bearing her infirmities with cheerfulness and patience. She will be much missed by her family and the many friends she had made in her Western home as well as in Cushing.

She leaves to mourn her loss her husband, one daughter Mrs. Thompson, her son Gordon, five grandchildren; her brother Jno. of Chaboro; James, of Hamca, Alberta; and two sisters, Mrs. Brasher, of Vancouver; and Mrs. Ernest Cousins, of Montreal.

Stevens Tells About Finding New Markets

Canadian Goods Seeking Outlets to Replace U. S. Demand

In spite of the conditions with which international commerce has been confronted marked improvement can be noted in several branches of Canada's external trade under the leadership of the Government, according to a statement issued Saturday morning by Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Trade and Commerce.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce reviews the Government's problem of finding new avenues for Canadian products to replace to the Hawley-Smoot tariff.

"We inaugurated a 'Produced in Canada' campaign which has had a marked effect upon the increased consumption of Canadian farm products," the statement points out. "At the same time we carried on an intensive effort to increase the consumption of our goods upon the British market with very satisfactory results."

Taught Self-Reliance.

The statement quotes figures which prove conclusively, the minister says, that as a result of the Government's policy there has been a great deal accomplished in the direction of assisting the Canadian farmer by a huge increase of Canadian consumption of animal products and by not only increasing Canadian exports to Great Britain, but other Empire countries as well.

"As a people we have been taught a newer and greater dependence upon self," states Mr. Stevens. "The balance of trade has been referred to frequently of late. It is of extreme importance in international trade and financing. When the present Government came into office it was faced with a serious adverse balance that had to be overcome if we were to meet the various trading countries on even terms. For the first 11 months of the fiscal year 1929-30, the unfavorable balance was $82,002,000 yet nine of these months were in the very prosperous year of 1929."

"Two years afterwards in the months of 1931-2, our favorable balance is $25,491,000."

Show Great Improvement

"That is an actual betterment of over $107,000,000. If it were possible to give complete figures of volume, the betterment would be very much greater than the figures indicate. Our favorable balance with Great Britain is $69,000,000."

Lachute Academy's Decisive Victory over Huntingdon-- Prov. Rural High Schools Champions

Lachute Might have led the League, but were Unadvised of its Formation

Those of the citizens of Lachute who journeyed to Montreal on Thursday, March 24, to see the game between Lachute and Huntingdon were treated to a fine exhibition of what the local boys can do on a large sheet of ice. Huntingdon Academy sent a strong squad to the metropolis, hoping to return with another victory. Having played the team from Granby High School in the Forum on the twelfth, and having practiced there previously, they were familiar with the ice, and stepped confidently into the game from the minute the first bell sounded. The Lachute lads, however, were on the Forum ice for the first time this year, some of them for the first time in their lives. Thus they were not at first able to cover the ice and play the fast game they developed as the match progressed.

Huntingdon pressed hard at the beginning of the game, but were prevented from scoring more than one point by the stalwart Lachute defence and the sterling work of the Lachute goalie. The first score in this period was made by Campbell. Huntingdon scored a few minutes later when Kenney, on a rush from the defence, sent the puck past Langille from the corner of the ice. The first period ended 1-1, with little to choose between the two teams.

In the second period, however, the Lachute boys had become more familiar with the ice, and were in better playing trim. This period began with what proved to be Huntingdon's last tally, scored on a rebound by Chambers, Huntingdon's fast left wing. Then Lachute's sturdy right, Lloyd Canning, placed the puck in the Huntingdon net twice in quick succession. These two scores were both due to the quick combination plays of the Drew-Denault-Canning forward line. From this point on Lachute maintained an easy lead, and the period ended 3-2.

The Lachute boys were now feeling quite at home on the large ice, and had recovered from any symptoms of stage fright which they might have shown at the beginning of the game. They played a strong defensive game throughout the third period, and the Lachute goal was only once in real danger. This was when Kirby, Huntingdon's fast-skating centre got through Lachute lines and had only Langille to beat, "Mel", however, rose to the occasion, and made an almost miraculous save. The Huntingdon boys strained every effort, to tie the score, but did not break through Lachute's strong defence again. Towards the end

"We have an unfavorable balance with the United States, but it is diminishing rapidly. For the 11 months ending February 1930, it was $277,184,000 and at the end of February 1932, it was $90,636,000. I expect that the Canadian dollar will remain close to the present discount in New York until there is further expansion of our favorable trade balance. The trend, however, is unmistakable."

"The approaching Imperial Economic Conference is pointing the way to us. We have the thrilling example before us of the vitality of the British people, illustrated by the United Kingdom herself. Great Britain will soon be in a position to resume her old status of international leadership in of the third period, when Huntingdon was attacking in full force, Winston Drew, Lachute's speedy Captain, got the puck, and leaving all forwards behind him in front of the Lachute net, skated the full length of the ice, dodged the Huntingdon defence, and planted the puck squarely in the Huntingdon goal. This was easily the most brilliant single play of the game and it called forth the applause of both sides of the rink.

Soon after this the bell sounded and the teams gave their School Yells, cheered each other and left the ice.

The game was well handled by Gordon Crutchfield, of McGill, and the puck was faced by "Jimmy" Ward of the Montreal "Maroons".

The play was clean and fast throughout, the penalties being very few and none of them majors. In commenting on the type of play, one may well quote the passage which appeared in the Notre Dame de Grace "Monitor" in the course of its remarks on the game played here on the twelfth, between the local boys and Montreal West. "One remarkable feature of these games is the fine spirit which exists between the two teams."

The Huntingdon Academy team had previously won the championship of a league consisting of the teams from twelve of the High Schools of the Eastern Townships and the surrounding districts. This league was limited to twelve High Schools. The officials of the Lachute Academy team had no knowledge of the existence of such a league until the reports of the games were published in the press. The fact that the winners in this league were called the champions of the rural High Schools of the Province of Quebec by some of the papers has led to a certain amount of misunderstanding, and many have asked where Lachute Academy stands and why it has no place in the play for the provincial championship among rural High Schools. For this reason the team from Lachute Academy challenged the leaders of the above-mentioned league, allowing them choice of ice, date and officials, and decisively defeated them.

world finance. We ourselves have regained our lost position as the fifth greatest exporting country of the world, and I anticipate that the present successful trend of our trade will be hastened by the great Ottawa convention."

In the Arkansas Ozarks there is a lone cabin in the woods with 3000 books free to all. The library is never locked, has no attendants, no card is needed. One walks in, takes a book, signs, returns it when ready, signs again and that's that. Which is a library method that speaks volumes for the honesty of people as a whole and the Ozarkers in particular.

Wedding at Isle aux Chats Boyd - Taylor

On Saturday last, March 26, there was a very pretty wedding at the home of Mr. and Mrs. David Taylor, Isle aux Chats, when their youngest daughter Helen E., was given in marriage to Hector Joseph Boyd, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Boyd, of Lachute.

The bride looked charming in a gown of light blue flat crepe with silver trimmings, and carried a huge bouquet of pink roses and lily-of-the-valley. The bride who was unattended, was given away by her father. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. Macaskill of the St. Andrews United Church. There were between twenty and thirty guests present from Vankleek Hill, Lachute and other towns. After the reception the bride and groom left for Montreal, followed by the congratulations and best wishes of their many friends. They will take up their residence in Lachute.

Lachute and District Bowling Activities

Now that the Hockey season is finished, Bowling has come in to its own, as evidenced by the games played this week and the crowds that turn out to watch their favorite teams. Monday night a strong team came down from Brownsburg to play a pick up team here and a good game was played ending in a win for Brownsburg by 35 pins. Again Tuesday a league game was played between Independents & Lachute Rangers, resulting in a win for the former by 88 pins. Brownsburg again won on Wednesday by 53 pins, a large crowd witnessing the game. An oyster supper was given by Mr. Jos. Berniquer, proprietor of the Alley, to which all were invited.

Lachute Mourns the Loss of Mrs. John Martin

With the death of Mrs. John Martin on Wednesday evening, March 23rd., Lachute and vicinity mourns the loss of another of her old and much loved citizens. Though Mrs. Martin was born in Inverness, Scotland, the greater part of her life was spent in Canada, many years of which were lived at the Seignior and Lachute, where she brought up her family of seven children, five of whom are still living.

Her death was entirely unexpected until stricken with a fatal illness of about a week's duration as she had enjoyed a long life of unbroken good health, and it came as a severe shock to her relatives and large circle of friends. She was of a quiet and retiring disposition, never anxious for leadership but always ready to support any cause which she believed to be just and useful. The Church and School were two institutions outside of the home to which she gave her cheerful support, recognizing their value to the community in the making of good citizens.

She was a member of the Lachute Presbyterian Church at which she was a regular attendant. Here also she will be sadly missed.

The funeral was conducted by her minister, the Rev. Henry Cousens, B.D., assisted by the Rev. E. Morrison, an old friend of the family, on Saturday afternoon, March 26th., at her late residence on Bethany Street.

The deceased leaves to mourn her loss, her husband Mr. John Martin; two daughters Mrs. R. S. Clark, of Brownsburg; and Mrs. P. MacVicar, of Dunany; three sons William and John, of North Dakota, and Hugh, of Lachute; two sisters Miss W. Fraser, of Montreal, and Mrs. A. Younger, of Ottawa; and eight grandchildren.

The Late Mr. F. Harcourt of Montreal

Much regret was felt when the news was heard of the sudden death of Mr. Fred Harcourt the popular brakeman of the C. N. R. local who expired at St. Benoit Station on Thursday evening as the train was coming up to Hawkesbury. Mr. Harcourt has been an employee of the C. N. R. Hawkesbury line for a number of years and by his geniality and kindness had made himself very popular with all with whom his duties brought him into contact and genuine sorrow is felt at his sudden passing, the cause of which we learn was heart failure. His home was in Montreal where the funeral took place on Saturday morning last.

Legation Building for France

It was announced by the French Minister to Canada that the appropriation of approximately $80,000 has been passed by the French Government for the purchase of the site and the erection in Ottawa of a Legation Building and Minister's residence.

The Captain's Corner

THE CAPTAIN'S WEEKLY LETTER.

BOOKS.

Dear Boys:—

Let us have a little chat about Books. Just try and think for a moment of the thousand and thousands of books that there are in the world, and more are being published each year! Have you ever thought as to the reason why there are so many?—Well, these books are written for a purpose—Some of them merely to interest you like just Stories of Adventure, that thrill and carry you right along in a world of imagination all your own. Others there are which are full of useful knowledge on many subjects; these we call books of reference, and may be found in many libraries. In addition to these we have the works of great Philosophers and Poets, containing wise thoughts and beautiful ideals on the real meaning of life. When you are older the time will come I hope during which you will very much appreciate books of this kind. Then perhaps, best of all, we have those books called "Biographies." In them we can read for ourselves the life and work of many of the famous men and women who have gone before us. If we have the will to understand, and the inclination to study well those printed pages, how truly they will help us to become, if not as great, just as good and useful citizens as they were.

Books are the best friends we can have. They never fail us or disappoint us. They are the companions of all our moods. When we are tired they are ever ready to speak to us and cheer us with their interest and humour and at the end we can throw them on one side without fear of offence or of hurting their "feelings."

Books have rightly been called the treasure house of knowledge, for they contain such a wealth of information, without which life itself would be but a very poor affair indeed. Finally all of us can have books. They are not the monopoly of the few but the privilege of all who desire them. I always think that there is something very much worth while in a boy who collects books, and possesses a small library. The other day, a young friend took me up to his room and proudly pointed to two shelves which he had made himself, and on them, arranged in neat order were his books.

"Don't you think they LOOK fine?" he said, "They do" I replied glancing at the well worn covers and then added "Some seem very old friends."

He smiled. "I should say so. 'Why you would not believe me perhaps but most of them I have read two or three times and will again.'"

I agreed, for have I not done the same thing myself.

Why have I written you this week on the subject of books?

Well! Well! Yesterday was Easter Sunday and as I walked out of Church, there was a little fellow in front of me, holding hard on to a red covered book. I could not see all the title, but it began "The Adventure of—"

As he vanished it came to me that he also had started on an adventure, the biggest perhaps of all, that of a lover of books.

Your affectionate friend,

THE CAPTAIN.

"The Return of Timothy"

Timothy had been standing all this time, which fact Eric noticed and the little boy begged him to sit down with them, making from for him to occupy his long chair.

"That will be disturbing you," said Timothy. "See, I can lay down here on the grass near you so that you can tell me all of the wonderful things you are planning to do when you are well."

It was a happy little party that gathered around the tea table which was placed a half hour later near-by the great Elm tree in the garden. Even when the meal was finished, no move was made to go indoors. The glory of the wonderful sunset lingered in the sky and was reflected on the surface of an almost motionless deep green sea.

The stillness of a perfect early summer evening seemed to cast a spell upon them all especially Timothy, who with a sudden impulse said, "Mrs. Sellingcourt, would you mind very much if I told you something?" and there was a whole world of pleading in the young voice.

In answer he felt a hand placed very gently on his head as he lay quiet on the ground.

"I am listening Timothy, just tell me everything you like. Look, Eric is sleeping so we are quite alone, dear lad."

"Perhaps," went on Timothy, "I had better begin by saying that I, I am a thief," as he uttered the last word, he half turned around as if expecting to hear an exclamation of disgust, instead of which he felt the hand of his friend's Mother once more placed upon his head.

"It happened like this," he went on hastily "my father is the Duke of Winchelsea and I have a brother just a year older than myself, who is a cadet at Sandhurst College. I love him and would do anything for him. I was sent here to school a year ago and had been only a month doing my lessons when my brother sent me a letter saying that he was in trouble and wanted five pounds at once. He wrote me because our father always gave us ten pounds each at the beginning of school and he thought that I would have plenty of mine left. As it happened, I spent nearly all on a new bicycle so that I had very little left and knew it was no good for either of us to dare write home and ask for more. I thought and thought what I could do and when I remembered that I had seen Mr. Lawrence put some money in his desk and went and found it," and here his voice dropped a little, "I took it. After that I became frightened and ran away. It does not matter how I reached my brother but eventually I did get to him and gave him the money he wanted and he promised me never to get into trouble again."

"Then not knowing what to do, I went home and told my Mother that I had run away from school because I did not like it. Later on she gave me some money, I did not tell her what it was for, but sent it to Mr. Lawrence and then after a few months, my father insisted on my going back to school and now it is worse than ever." Timothy stopped speaking and buried his head miserably in his hands.

Mrs. Sellingcourt then put her hand on the boy's shoulder and said, "What do you mean by saying it is worse now, dear Timothy? Please tell me everything because I want to help you so much."

"You want to help me when you know I am a thief?" was the amazed reply.

"Dear Timothy, you must not use that word ever again, because I am sure that you never meant to steal. You love your brother don't you?" Mrs. Sellingcourt asked gently.

"I love him more than anything else in the world and I know that if our father could know what he had done, we should be separated and that I could not bear." Timothy replied with a sob in his voice.

"Tell me, what did your brother do and what trouble is he in. I am sure it can't be so bad that we cannot help him out?"

"He gambled with his money," explained Timothy with a sigh "and lost it and more besides. That is why I had to help him and now I have had a letter which says that he owes another 50 pounds and unless it is paid, he will be disgraced and sent home and then—then—" and the poor boy, all reserve broken down, burst into a fit of weeping.

Suddenly the stillness of the evening was broken by the sound of a boy's voice singing:

"Joys and sorrows of such a day,
When happy feeling round us cling,
It's then, of course, we're bound to sing."

At the conclusion of this made-up atrocious rhyme, its composer was rewarded with a shout of laughter.

"Oh Henderson," mocked Kenrick, "you bring disgrace upon the school, the cap of which you wear. But stay, stop your singing now, for here I am sure is the cottage where Eric lives and we will enter to pay our respects, if you can but compose your features."

Trudy's Teapot Tales

By AUNTIE DI

"Careful," warned the boy. "The paint's not quite dry yet. You're the first to see it."

Marjory-Ella's priority proved to be short-lived however, for at that moment a wild whoop assailed their ears, and three children just released from school clattered up the garden path shedwards.

"Is it done?" yelled three voices simultaneously.

Danny nodded grandly and waved them into the precincts of his treasure.

"Coo-oo! Four wheels!" gargled Mickey, who was a younger replica of Danny.

"Yes, four wheels!" echoed Bunny and Biddy, the Rowe twins.

"Well," said Danny, waving all the children towards the shed door, "I thought maybe it would be safer. Now, come on, let's go and have tea, and meet Marjory-Ella in the wood afterwards. 'Can't you come, Marjory-Ella?' he asked, turning to her, as the two younger boys and Biddy dashed away into the cottage. "Yes, Danny, I'll be there," replied Marjory-Ella, as with a dive like a seal's from a flat rock she regained her own side of the hedge; and retrieving her hat and satchel, disappeared into the house.

Half an hour later the slim black legs were twinkling up the lane, past the row of cottages, to the thick green woods that seemed to fill the whole horizon. The Rowe children had arrived first, as usual, and they were all calling to Marjory-Ella to hurry. So the black legs twinkled faster still and a few moments later the wood swallowed the five children.

Their objective was their usual meeting-place, a kind of rough hut formed of wooden branches. Nature had provided a roof in the shape of some closely entwined boughs and Danny and Mickey had supplied three walls. The front of the hut had been left open to form an entrance. Many a delightful day had been spent there during the previous summer, and to the children's delight the little edifice had survived the winter. Now a setting May sun filtered through the greenery on to the little circle, the children squatting, hugging their knees, and gazing expectantly at Danny. From his lips they knew, would presently issue forth their plans for the morrow—a Saturday, the day which the children always spent together in the open air, weather permitting.

Danny began ponderously.

"Tomorrow—"

"It's Saturday," shouted little Bunny.

His elder withered him with a glance, and continued. "It's Empire Day!"

He looked round after this announcement to gauge the effect. The twins looked a little blank, and Pat somewhat disappointed, but Marjory-Ella said.

"Yes, Danny, of course. But what's that got to do with our plans for the day?"

"Everything!" announced Danny firmly, and four little faces, glowing in the sunset turned towards him in puzzlement.

"I've been thinking," continued Danny, "about what teacher said at school today about showing our patriotism."

"Oh yes," replied Marjory-Ella, "we heard about that too, but I don't see—"

"What is pat-pat what you said, anyway?" put in Mickey "Never mind," returned Danny, "you just listen. Now we've got the cart," he continued, his honest blue eyes sparkling with the thought of it, "I thought we might use it tomorrow, and have a kind of procession, all marching along, with flags, an'-an', well, you know," he ended lamely.

"What's a per-per?" began little Bunny, but Marjory-Ella hushed him, and she and Mickey nodded their approval of the scheme.

"You mean, of course," ventured Marjory-Ella, "that one of us will ride in the cart."

"Yes," said Danny eagerly, "it could be a kind of May Queen procession as well as a patriotic one."

"Who's to be in the cart?" pursued Marjory-Ella demurely.

"Why you, of course," replied Danny. Marjory-Ella's enthusiasm was now well-kindled.

"I'll wear my petal frock that I had for a fancy dress last year, shall I?" she asked.

"Yes, dress up a bit," conceded Danny, "like a May Queen, you know, flowers an' all."

"And what do I do?" demanded Mick, who felt that he had been left out of the proceedings long enough.

"You help pull the cart along with me," said his brother, "and the twins can carry flags, and placards, with patriotic notices on them."

"You'll have the best time," muttered Mick to Marjory-Ella, but not unkindly. "If you or the twins get tired you can have a ride in the cart," Marjory-Ella hastened to assure him in a whisper, whereat the twins gurgled delightedly, this being the first part of the plan they had really understood so far. "Well," said Danny, rising to his feet, "since that's all settled we'll be getting along home. The sun's gone in, Marjory-Ella."

The children filed out of the hut chattering and laughing, and sauntered down the lane rather unwillingly. It always seemed too early for bed, somehow.

COME ! Let us reason together

By MAYOR ALLEN, of Ottawa

"Come, let us reason together".

Mark Twain once said, "Everybody talks about the weather but nobody does anything about it."

Everybody is today talking "depression," but the great mass of us are doing nothing about it.

Are we not just accepting it as an unpleasant fact, waiting and hoping for something to turn up to improve conditions?

Are we not depending too much on government action, taking it for granted that we can't do anything as a people to help ourselves?

Admitted this is a world depression and that we must depend upon our statesmen to adjust a lot of international questions that will continue to affect the situation until settled. Is that a sound reason for concluding that the people of Ottawa or Canada are in just the same plight as the rest of the world, or that we are incapable of restoring a measure of prosperity in our own community or in our own country?

Facts of course are stubborn things. This depression is a very real one. Our manufacturers are having a hard time of it. Agricultural interests are hard hit. Retail business is suffering seriously. Capital has taken heavy losses. Unemployment of labor has become a most serious problem.

All the more reason why we should face this situation and come to a realization of another fact—that we must do all in our power to remedy it. We can if we will.

How?

Put our money to work.

The employment of labor is dependent on the employment of money. Manufacturers can't employ labor unless they have a demand for their products from the jobbers and retailers. Retail merchants can neither employ labor nor give orders to factories if the people continue to "put off" buying their normal requirements. Contractors cannot buy materials or employ labor so long as the needed house or property improvements are deferred until "good times" are here again.

How can "good times" return until we start the cycle by putting our money to work?

Start the ball rolling!

Every dollar put into circulation now for merchandise of any kind or for building construction goes the round, revives industry, gives employment, makes for reasonable prosperity and happiness to all.

You may say money is scarce.

Is it? At the end of January this year there was $1,328,000,000 in our savings banks alone.

You may say that a lot of our people are unemployed and have no money and that a lot more have lost most of what they had.

Unfortunately this is true but on the other hand there must be at least 80 per cent or 85 per cent of our working population who are still working and with the same purchasing power as always. There must still be thousands who can still afford to spend as generously as they did previous to this depression.

Canada is far from bankrupt. Ottawa is far from bankrupt. There is no good reason why this city of all cities in Canada should not be carrying on almost as it did in more normal times.

Isn't the main reason why most of us are not "carrying on" as formerly just this? We have become as insanely pessimistic as we were insanely optimistic in 1928 and 1929.

Is it not time to adjust our minds and take a more hopeful and courageous attitude and determine that we will unite wholeheartedly, as we did during the war, to overcome our present difficulties?

The Corporation of Ottawa has been doing its best to make employment and to assist those in need. There is a limit to what we can do as a corporation.

As Mayor of this city, I now call out the reserve force, all you who compose the great body of our citizens, to make a united drive against fear and pessimism, to buy all you can, to go ahead with any work plans you have been deferring and even to play all you can. Do this and the clouds of depression in Ottawa will be ours.

I have faith, great faith, in the citizens of Ottawa, in your courage, your loyalty to our city and in your readiness to help make this city the most prosperous in Canada.

A CHILDREN'S PARTY

Holiday time brings parties in its wake, and the child who is lucky enough to have a birthday come in the Easter holidays is sure to want a party. Children's parties should be simple and they need not be successful. Mothers will thank you from the bottom of their hearts if you will keep your refreshments simple. So many mothers complain that their children are always upset after a party. I do not think ours were ever actually sick after a party, but I do know that they have been cross and hard to get on with, the following day. One little boy that we knew was sick after every party, so finally his mother used to bribe him to stay home. Too rich food, and too much excitement. Children's food should be simple but attractive.

Children love to get something at a party and to have it to take home to show. Candy is always appreciated and if it can be taken home intact so much better as then it may be eaten under mother's supervision. Baskets filled with small candies are easy to make & always liked. Children enjoy things that are dolled up, a little. Favors may be made from suckers. Have a sucker for each child and sketch a face on the paper (luckily, children are not severe art critics), then thrust the stick in a rosy apple and place one at each child's place.

An old-fashioned bouquet may be made from the very small suckers. You can get them all the same color or you may have varied colors and put the sticks through the centre of a paper doily and arrange as a bouquet.

The chief thing to remember about favors is that all should be alike. It is fatal to the success of your party to have a variety, as there are sure to be envy and heartburnings. They may be as simple or as elaborate as you like but do have them identical. The only variety that may be permitted is to have one kind for the girls and another for the boys. Even that has proved dangerous.

Children adore a little decoration. One of the simplest ways of decorating your table is to use animal crackers. They are inexpensive and the youngsters get a thrill out of eating the decorations. To make them stand up, use a dab of icing on a plain home-made cookie, or a vanilla wafer, a graham biscuit or some simple biscuit of that type. You may have an animal in front of each place and by using an icing tube you can write each child's name on a cracker and they may be used as place cards. If you wish they may parade across the table, one by one, or they may come ark-fashion—the animals they came two by two. I have even seen them on the cake. They need only to be stuck in the icing. Anyway you like to use them, you may be sure the children will like them.

Have you tried putting the birthday candles for the cake in gum-drops? They are easy to arrange and the colored candies add to the decorative qualities.

Refreshments for the children's parties should be simple, as I have said before. To most children, the refreshments are 'the party', so they must be interesting. A little work and ingenuity with simple foods will give the children plenty of thrills. Sandwiches are always popular. Can you tell me a child who does not like sandwiches? Most youngsters like egg sandwiches and they certainly are safe. Children adore color and sandwiches made from cottage cheese or from a white cheese and colored are always liked. Colors may be purchased in either paste or liquid forms and are quite safe to use. But remember that a little coloring goes a long way, so be sparing in its use.

If you wish to serve something else other than sandwiches, Golden-Rod eggs have proved a success. These are made by adding the chopped egg-whites to a cream sauce and pouring this over toast. Then sprinkle the crushed egg-yolks over the top. Looks attractive, tastes good, and is a simple food. What more could you ask? If the children are very small it may be wise to cut the toast in inch squares to simplify eating.

The dessert is the high-light of the child's meal. Ice-cream is a treat always. Have you ever used those little candies sometimes called "hundreds and thousands" for decorating. They are effective on either desserts or cakes. If you are using them on ice cream add them at the last minute or the colors will run. Chocolate shot is another easily added decoration.

Jellies may be made decorative, by moulding in flat pans and cutting in inch cubes. Jellies of two different colors are attractive used in this way. A rainbow jelly may be made by using three different colors of jelly powder. Mould them in layers and let one layer harden before adding the next. This may be made in a loaf pan and served in slices by way of variety.

If lemonade is the beverage, color it with some cherry juice from your canned cherries and put a cherry in the bottom of each glass. If cocoa is the beverage, make it without sweetening and put a marshmallow in the bottom of each cup. The cocoa will melt it and it acts as a sweetener and makes a fluffy drink. These things are easily done but add to the allure of common foods.

DATE AND ALMOND MACAROONS

1 cup sugar
3 egg whites
1 cup dates
½ cup almonds.

Stone the dates and cut in pieces. Blanch the almonds & place in a slow oven until slightly browned, leaving the nuts whole. Beat the egg whites until stiff adding the sugar gradually. Cook in the double boiler until a crust forms on the bottom. Fold in the other ingredients and drop on a greased pan by spoonful. Bake in a moderate oven of 325 degrees.

Rub ½ pound almond with a clean cloth but do not blanch, then put them through the grinder. Beat two egg whites until stiff adding gradually two rounding cups icing sugar. Reserve a scant ½ cup of this meringue for icing. Add the ground nuts and mix. Roll a half inch thick, using icing sugar in place of flour to prevent sticking. Cut into desired shape, top with a little icing and cook 20 minutes in a slow oven. These are delicious, unusual, and will keep indefinitely.

KIDNAPPING IN THE STATES

If the kidnapping of the Lindbergh baby has arrested the attention of the world, it is not, however, because kidnapping is rare in the United States. On the contrary, it is prominent in the list of crimes in that crime-ridden country. The New York Times states that in the last two years there have been no fewer than 2,000 cases of persons abducted for ransom in that country. It has become one of the leading "rackets", and millions of dollars have been paid to secure the liberation of the persons seized. The Lindbergh case has attracted special attention because of the prominence of the baby's parents. People are worrying over the fate of the Lindbergh baby who were not at all agitated over the kidnapping of other babies who were just as precious to their parents. The hope has been expressed that the general horror over the occurrence will stir the people of the United States to a realization of the extent to which they have permitted racketeering to develop and to a definite effort to clean out the gunmen, the gangsters, the racketeers and other criminals that have made their country a byword among the nations.

Memories of Old St. Andrews

The Treaty of Ghent, which brought to a close the War of 1812-14, was followed by a steady tide of emigration from the British Isles to Canada. Sir John Johnson, during his possession of the Seigniory of Argenteuil (1814-1830) was ever on the alert to invite the attention of the new comers to the advantages and the attractions of his domain. In Montreal there were few who could sway such an influence. He played a large part on the stage of its public life, and was much in evidence at civic ceremonies. In his capacity as Grand Master of the Masonic Order, he laid the corner stone of the Montreal General Hospital, June 6, 1821. He just missed the appointment of the Lieutenant Governorship of the Province. As Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs, and as Brigadier-General of the Colonial Militia he was in close touch with the military magnates of the time. All this with his lavish income, gave him a commanding influence, and fully accounts for his success in attracting so many families of wealth and distribution to St. Andrews.

During that eventful half century St. Andrews could boast of an aristocracy that well deserved the name. The families from Old England brought with them a culture, a point of view, and a mode of life, that wealth and leisure made possible, and which made an interesting contrast to that more primitive and elemental New England culture that the American group brought from Massachusetts, and from the very precincts of Old Harvard.

While these two currents of community life ever ran in distinct religious, social and political channels, their relationships were neighborly. The democracy welcomed the contribution that their wealthy fellow-townsmen brought to the commercial and industrial prosperity of the town, and fully appreciated the fame of these retired army and navy officers whose names figured large in the military annals of colonial days.

How reminiscent is even the mention of their names! Commissary General Forbes built "Bellevue" on the hill overlooking Carillon in 1827. The narration of his adventurous career reads like a romance. At the time of the rebellion of 1837 he was appointed the advisor of Sir John Colbourne. Lieut. Col. George Taylor, whose remains lie beneath the altar of Christ Church, St. Andrews, was Aide-de-Camp to His Excellency the Earl of Dalhousie. Col. Taylor served with honor and distinction in the American Revolution. Captain Francis Cunningham (afterwards Sir Francis) built "Milne-Crag," which Lady Cunningham made a center of colonial hospitality. Captain John Wainwright, of "Silver Heights," the old sea captain of the British Navy, made another center that added much to the social enjoyment of the neighbourhood. The Church of England Priory, on the hill overlooking St. Andrews, was built by the Rev. William Abbott—"the genial clergyman of the Parish, without whom no festivity in the neighbourhood was complete." The Priory property is now in the possession of Mr. John Allan, of Montreal, who has built a handsome home on the brow of the hill and has made the old ruin into a sunken garden.

Nor should we forget the McLeods, the Howards, the Fenwicks, the Mayrands, and the Stikemans of "Milton Cottage" who were included within the circle of this interesting society. Milton Cottage, the quaint and picturesque home of the Stikemans, with its gothic windows, and its two vine-clad porticoes half hidden in the evergreen grove, has an interesting history, and is well remembered by the present generation. Twenty years ago it became the possession and the home of Mr. Edmund Neve, who rebuilt it into a modern and attractive residence. It was built during the early years of the second decade of the century by Dr. William Caldwell, an Edinburgh graduate, who had been a surgeon in the 13th regiment of Dragoons, and a veteran in the Peninsular war. After leaving St. Andrews for Montreal in 1819, he became one of the four of the first Medical Board to found the Montreal General Hospital and the Medical Faculty of McGill University, in which he became the first lecturer on the Principles and Practice of Medicine. Dr. Caldwell was the first regular physician to practice medicine in St. Andrews, with one exception: Dr. Beach, who was the brother-in-law of Benjamin Wales, they both having married daughters of Squire Benedict. Dr. Caldwell's career in Montreal was also noted for the famous duel he fought with a Mr. O'Sullivan, who opposed the petition presented by the inhabitants of Montreal to the Government on Feb. 19, 1819 for a public hospital. Notwithstanding this dramatic incident, Dr. Caldwell was regarded as a gallant Christian gentleman with a very kind heart.

The threshold of Milton College has been crossed by a multitude seeking medical aid, for it was the home of a succession of St. Andrews physicians—four if not five, in number. Dr. Abner Rice, the great-grandfather of the late Dr. Francis Shepherd, professor of Anatomy at McGill University, succeeded Dr. Caldwell in the St. Andrews practice. He had an interesting romance to relate of his elopement with the niece of Bishop Hobart of New York, and of her horse-back ride on a pillion behind him all the way from Boston to Montreal. Later came Dr. Archibald Rae, an Edinburgh graduate of high standing and polished manners, followed by Dr. McCallum, another gifted graduate of Edinburgh. Both of these men were very successful and much admired. Their early deaths were due to the hardships they endured.

In later years Milton Cottage was the home of Dr. Mayrand. St. Andrews was indeed fortunate in its physicians. Dr. Fenwick (a brother of the noted surgeon of McGill) was held in high repute. His confrère, Dr. William Robertson, the deaf doctor, is affectionately remembered by our older citizens for his devotion to his patients. How he rejoiced over their recovery! How hearty was his laugh; "But for his deafness, he would have been on the McGill Medical Staff"—so said Dean Campbell to the writer, at the time a medical student at McGill. Dr. Robertson was succeeded by his son, Dr. Patrick Robertson, who was equally esteemed, and of whom it was often said; "If Dr. Pat. cannot help you, it is useless to go elsewhere."

St. Andrews in its heyday boasted of five flourishing protestant churches. In number of members and adherents the Church of England surpassed them all. The ringing of the old bell called three hundred worshippers to crowded pews and galleries. The bell bears the date 1759, and was the gift of Sir John Johnson. At the centenary celebration of Christ Church in 1921, Dr. Maude Abbott contributed an historical sketch replete with interest. Her eloquent description of the society of early days would enrich any history of Old St. Andrews. In the present sketch some of the data connected with the earliest period are taken from the History of Medicine in the Province of Quebec by Dr. Abbott, for which we here make due acknowledgement.

MEMBER TELLS ORIGIN OF THE NAME MANITOBA

During the course of a discussion in the House of Commons, J. H. Stitt (Cons., Selkirk) painted a glowing picture of the past, present and future of his province and, perhaps, most interesting of all was his story of the origin of the word

"Manitoba."

The first inhabitants, the Indians called their conception of God, the Great Spirit, "Manitou." The so-called "Narrows" on the Manitoba Lakes, the Indians called "Woban."

Chevrolet Now Builds a Complete Line of 2-TON HEAVY DUTY TRUCKS

The Old and the New

The two models have been showing at the Chateau-de-Ramezay, Montreal, recently in an exhibition of a century of locomotives. Right, is the "Dorchester", operated in 1836 to 1850 on the Champlain and St. Lawrence Railroad between St. John's and La Prairie, Quebec, the first train to run in Canada. Left, is the 2300 type Canadian Pacific Railway locomotive, a model of the great machine that draws modern passenger trains across the Dominion.

Comparison of the two locomotives will bring home the immense development in the past 100 years. The four driving wheels of the "Dorchester" were 48 inches in height. The six driving wheels of the 2300 type locomotive are 75 inches in height. Engine and tender weight of the "Dorchester" was just over 10,000 lbs.; of the 2300 it is 648,300 lbs. Tractive force of the "Dorchester" is not given, but it must have been greatly less than the 45,000 lbs. of the Canadian Pacific engine. Engine and tender of both locomotives had respectively eight wheels and twenty wheels. A further indication of the vast spread in operation values between the old and the new is seen in the figures of the latest and most powerful Canadian Pacific engine, the "8000" type, capable of pulling a freight train of 150 cars, or over a mile in length.

Canadian National Expects Much Traffic Out of St. Lawrence this Summer

Montreal, April—There will be fifteen more opportunities for passengers to take ship at Montreal for Bermuda and the British West Indies this summer than last.

The Canadian National Steamships announced that the liner Lady Rodney will omit the last of her winter schedule of sailings from Halifax and will sail from Montreal April 22 for Bermuda, the Bahamas & Jamaica.

This liner will be followed by the freighter Canadian Skirmisher, leaving Montreal April 29 with a score of "vagabond cruise" passengers bound for Bermuda, Porto Rico, Guadeloupe, Martinique, Barbados, Trinidad, British Guiana, Trinidad again, Barbados again, Montreal. She will be followed throughout the summer by the Canadian Pathfinder and the Canadian Transporter—all three freighter-cruisers.

The Canadian National also announced a reduction of about 10 per cent in the fares for the Lady Somers and Lady Rodney plying this summer between Montreal and Bermuda, the Bahamas, Jamaica and, by connection, British Honduras.

"We look forward to much holiday traffic both ways over our Canada-Bermuda-West Indies route," said Thomas Cree, Passenger Traffic Manager of the Company. "Many visitors from the tropical colonies will doubtless take the opportunity of seeing Canada this summer and trying some of the many tours offered by the Canadian National System all over the Dominion."

Mr. Geo. Moncrieff was engaged in sawing wood for the farmers last week, and many of them have nice large piles ready for next winter.

Mr. Gordon Hampton has over 600 chicks just hatched and report says a few of them are lame and otherwise disabled by the blasting in the canal, near his home, during their incubation.

The twelve good men and true who are called on the jury do not like the idea of going to court so late in the Spring, as the busy season is just commencing. But as everything on the farm is so low in price, the extra remuneration will be welcome to some of them.

It was with deep regret that the many friends of Mr. Harcourt, the genial trainman on the C. N. R. milk train, heard of his sudden passing away while on duty, last Thursday. He will be greatly missed by all and his friends extend their sincere sympathy to his sorrowing family.

This most unseasonable weather is reminiscent of a Spring in the early eighties, when the first week of April brought a three or four days' snowstorm. Four feet of snow fell, in as many days. Your correspondent remembers, as a boy, digging his way to the woodshed for the daily supply of fuel—he wonders if other readers can recall that year.

A series of weekly articles on advertising and merchandising prepared for the merchants of Lachute District with the co-operation of the Watchman.

conducted by
HAROLD S. EDGAR

DISTRIBUTION OF EFFORT

The merchant in business in our smaller cities, towns and rural districts must play the role that is filled by many men in the stores of the larger centres. Under one man's hat has to be the buyer, the sales manager, the merchandising or stock control, the advertising manager and that of floor walker or chief salesman; and he is frequently put to it to handle even passably all those jobs, and yet each must receive a necessary minimum of attention if the business is to prosper.

There are some of these particular duties he likes, while others he almost hates, and he may easily become one-sided in his store management through favouring the line of activity that he prefers, or being forced through pressure of circumstances to place too much emphasis on one or more activities, neglecting the others.

There is no merchant that has not to eternally guard himself from becoming one-sided in his business management.

He may love selling and on that account wants to be on the store floor most of the time, and this leads him frequently to take away a customer from an assistant, which belittles the clerk, kills his or her initiative, to the detriment of the store spirit. He plans the advertising in the odd moments that he can steal, erroneously deeming the talk with one customer on the floor of more importance than a talk through his local paper to the thousands of homes of the district.

Presidents, owners, and managers of our biggest businesses today pay most particular attention to the two twin activities of sales and advertising, and no man in business can afford to neglect this most vital phase of his business.

While the advertising should represent the personality of the store and should appear as though it was written by the owner one of the partners, there is no absolute necessity that it should be written by them, for frequently there is on the staff a smart young woman or young man, who if given a little encouragement and the opportunity of reading the advertisements in the papers from out of town could develop advertisements that, being written without the distractions of the business, flow more freely and with more originality, and carry more weight than those advertisements written by the boss himself. The Big Chief should see the advertisements before they are ordered in the paper, alter anything that is not quite correct as to statement, but outside of keeping to the line of policy and guarding against definite inaccuracies he should use the blue pencil very sparingly, as in this way he will develop the initiative of his assistant.

John Wanamaker, whose personality always dominated the advertising of the Philadelphia store and who wrote it in the early development of the business, found that Manley M. Gillam wrote better Wanamaker advertising than Wanamaker ever wrote and yet it was the same general style. And when Wanamaker bought the old A. T. Stewart store in New York becoming "John Wanamaker of New York," the New York advertising written by another man still followed the ideals, theme and spirit of the copy originally written by the founder of the business.

PROTECTING AND IMPROVING THE HEALTH OF SCHOOL CHILDREN

School Health work is a development of the urge felt all over the world for better health.

All educationalists recognize that there is a definite relation between physical health and mental progress. Given equal mental capacity the rested, well nourished child, free from physical defects can accomplish more school work, in less time, and with less energy expended, than the frail, tired little bit of humanity with an aching molar or perhaps with much reduced amount of vision or hearing.

Such defects must be removed before the child can respond to any kind of instruction and their correction is the first step toward health improvement.

A constant break in school attendance will cause a child to have to repeat its grade and is expensive to both the parents and school system.

Under-nourishment is an all too common physical defect, nearly every school showing a few cases of general nervousness, listlessness and some only underweight for age and height.

Poor choice of food, rather than insufficient quantity, and lack of control as to habits are outstanding. The hours of sleep, the amount of fresh air in sleeping rooms, regular daily elimination of body waste and freedom from physical defects are equally important.

Health teaching presented in such a way that it influences the health practice of the child, is the only sure way of making a permanent improvement in health.

Habit formation in their children is one of the tasks to which parents should give scientific attention, and as the parent is the most important trainer of youth our organized efforts to educate the parents along health and social hygiene lines, is an important function in social hygiene education.

TWO HUNDRED MILES THROUGH THE ROCKIES

Glacier Trail Ride from Jasper Connects Two Great National Parks

Jasper, Alta., March—Tourists who like their touring along the trails and out of the way places not generally followed by their fellowmen have a treat in store for them this summer. They will have the opportunity to take one of the most unique and scientifically beautiful trips to be found in North America. The journey is a two hundred mile saddle trip through the heart of the Rocky Mountains, between Jasper and Lake Louise, Alta., under the personal guidance of Jack Brewster, internationally known guide and outfitter of Jasper, Alta.

Although the trip is over trails that are little frequented by the average tourist, the journey itself will be one that will afford the maximum of safety and comfort, coupled with beauty and interest. Mr. Brewster, who is well known and much in demand to hunters who annually visit the Rocky Mountains in search of big game is one of the best informed men on this section of the Rocky Mountains. Mr. Brewster has been acting as guide and outfitter for tourists and hunters ever since his youth and his knowledge of the territory is remarkable.

The tour itself will take twenty days to cover the distance between the two points. It will leave Jasper on July 3rd. and will arrive at Lake Louise on the 23rd. The return trip will get under way July 31st. and will arrive in Jasper August 20th.

The entire tour will be made along the British Columbia-Alberta boundary, which is also the water shed of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. The route in many places will traverse the Continental Divide which is the backbone of the Rocky Mountain System.

The largest and most impressive mountains will be seen in the Glacier Lake and Mount Forbes section of the Columbia Icefields (the most extensive area of ice and snow to be found

Highway Problem of a Century Ago

(By Fred Williams)

DO YOU KNOW that in England a century ago they were beginning to be worried about traffic on the roads? The stage coach was still the chief mode of conveyance, but the railway had arrived in 1825 when the Stockton and Darlington railway was opened, with the intention that it should be operated by animal power, but which was actually operated by George Stephenson's steam locomotive. It was not, however, until 1830 that the Liverpool and Manchester railway finally established the supremacy of the steam locomotive on rails. Long before that self-propelling vehicles had been tested out and operated a primitive steam carriage had been tried in France by one Cugnot in 1768-70, but it was not until 1802 that the first British steam vehicle was run. It was operated from Camborne to Plymouth by Richard Trevithick and attained a speed of nine miles an hour on the level. The next year he ran a steam coach on the streets of London, 103 years before the modern motor bus. He had many imitators and in 1830 the steam vehicle was playing such havoc with the stage coach and the new railways that the House of Commons was asked to protect the ancient mode of transportation, save the highways for the stage coach, already menaced by the potentialities of the railway.

A select committee was appointed to consider the whole question of transportation. That committee reported just a century ago.

1. That carriages can be propelled by steam on common roads at an average rate of ten miles an hour. 2. That at this rate they have conveyed upwards of fourteen passengers. 3. That their weight, including engine, fuel, water, and attendants, may be under three tons. 4. That they can ascend and descend hills of considerable inclination with facility and ease. 5. That they are perfectly safe for passengers. 6. That they are not (or need not be if properly constructed) nuisances to the public. 7. That they will become a speedier and cheaper mode of conveyance than carriages drawn by horses. 8. That as they admit of greater breadth of tire than other carriages, and as the roads are not acted on so injuriously as by the feet of horses in common draught, such carriages will cause less wear of roads than coaches drawn by horses. 9. That rates of toll have been imposed on steam-carriages which would prohibit their being used on several lines of roads were such charges permitted to remain unaltered.

This was more favorable to the steam carriages than public opinion warranted and found no response in parliament. On the contrary, various laws were enacted against the steamers until in 1865 the ridiculous law was passed that every road locomotive should be preceded at least 100 yards by a man on foot carrying a red flag, and should not exceed four miles an hour in speed. This, of course, crippled a great industry and deprived the community of a valuable means of transport. This is more remarkable because the London steam coaches alone had travelled over 4,000 miles without serious accident and had become extremely popular. It is worthy of record that one of the vehicles inspected by the Commons committee mentioned above attained a speed of 35 miles an hour on the level and was run 800 miles over roads which would today be considered very poor, without a breakdown. By 1865 the railways had eliminated the stage coach by the suppression of the steam road vehicles they secured a monopoly, none foreseeing the day when the tables would be turned and the railways the world over, would find themselves menaced by self-propelled vehicles that can travel anywhere at a minimum of cost.

anywhere on the American Continent.) Excellent facilities for the exploring of this wonderful region will be afforded by a three day lay-over at Castle-guard Camp. Such peaks as Mount Columbia, The Twins, Mt. Bryce, Mount Kitchener, Mount Spring-Rice, Mount Saskatchewan, Mount Athabaska, and Mount Forbes can be seen as can also the Lyall Group and many other unnamed and unconquered peaks of the Selkirk Range.

Recipe for BISCUITS

1/2 teaspoon salt 4 teaspoons Magic
2 cups pastry flour Baking Powder (or 1 1/2 cups 2 tablespoons bread flour) shortening
1/2 cup milk, or half milk and half water

Sift together flour, baking powder and salt. Cut in the chilled shortening. Now add the milk liquid to make soft dough. Toss dough onto a floured board and do not handle more than is necessary. Roll or pat out with hands to about 1/4 inch thickness. Cut out with a floured biscuit cutter. Place on slightly greased pan or baking sheet and bake in hot oven at 450° F. 12 to 15 minutes.

MIND

Novelized by Marvina Dana.
Author of "Within the Law."
From the Successul Play
by Daniel D. Carter

Immediately he gave his full attention again to the criminal.

"Why should my wife give you money?" he inquired.

Creagan wriggled uncomfortably.
"Well, I guess the game's up, gov-nor," he whined. "I guess they ain't outlin' to say, except you got me and the lady dead to rights."

Marshall interposed.
"Ah, say, Mr. Wainwright," he protested, "what's the good listening to this crook's pipe dreams? Come on, you!" He strode to the thief and caught him by the shoulder.

But again the detective was stayed from his purpose by the command of Wainwright:

"Wait!"

Now finally excess of fear goaded Lucene to the bravery of despair. She straightened, held forth her arms im-pudgently.

"Cortland," she said falteringly, "I beg you not to ask him any more questions. Let him go—please! Oh, for pity's sake! I can't stand it! I!"

She broke off, panting.
Her white face was drawn in agony, for Wainwright gave no least heed to her prayer. He contemplated the thief and spoke quietly.

"Who sent you here?"

"Aw, nobody sent me," the man replied flippantly. "I was invited."

"By whom?" Wainwright persisted.

"Ask the lady," Creagan's grin was frozen by the cold fury of the husband's low spoken phrase:

"You lie!"

"I do, do I?" he sneered. "Well, just take it from me. I don't. I knew her a long time before you ever did. Pipe that, mister! Aw, say! Don't kid yourself. What was she doin' down stairs by the safe at 2 o'clock in the mornin'? Eh? Havin' a cup of tea?
Hub?"

Wainwright was dead white from the fury of his passion. His hands clenched.

"Take him away!" he ordered.
The wife dared a forlorn hope, crying out her plea wildly:

"Oh, Cortland! Let him go!"

Wainwright repeated his command.

"Take him away!"

Wainwright's face had settled into a mask of coldness as he turned to address his wife. But before he could speak his intention was halted by the surprising change that came over her within an instant. Where she had been shrinking, pallid, seeming even near to collapse from the misery that afflicted her, she now suddenly stood alertly upright, and a color burned hotly in her cheeks, and her eyes, flamed by suffering before, shone in their full diolet radiance, unveiled again. Her hands were abruptly reached forth in a gesture of welcoming, Wainwright, following the movement of her arms, took in the figure of Andrew, standing motionless just within the doorway of the library. At sight of him there was a harder compression of Wainwright's lips. His voice, as he spoke, was suave.

"Ah, I was expecting you."

Andrew was undaunted.

"Pardon me, sir, but may I ask a question?" he inquired.

"Oh, certainly," Wainwright retorted.

"Do you intend sending to prison the man whom Mr. Marshall just captured?"

Before Wainwright could answer the question put by the Master Mind there came an interruption by Lucene. It was despair that found tongue.

"Mr. Andrew, Mr. Andrew, what have you done to me?" she wailed.

"Oh, what have you done?" Her voice broke in a storm of sobbing.

If a slight shiver touched the man under the clasp of the girl's hands it was imperceptible, arrested ere it began by the iron away of his will. He spoke gravely.

"Mrs. Wainwright will excuse me. I know, if I say that I must speak with you alone," he said to Wainwright.

At this saying Lucene lifted her head and stared desperately into the granite face. The assured voice carried conviction to her.

"I am quite sure that she will trust my judgment in the matter." Ostensibly the sentence was spoken to Wainwright. In effect, it was directed to Lucene. She went slowly out of the room.

When she was gone the Master Mind, with a swift movement utterly unlike his usual placidity of behavior, darted to the door and shut it. Then he faced his employer, standing fully erect, a smile of triumph bending his lips, at last. The humility of the trained servant was vanished. In its place was a dominant personality, boldly proclaimed.

Wainwright met the transformation fairly.

"Well, Mr. Allen?" he remarked.

His tone as he spoke the name that explained his knowledge of the other's identity was a challenge.

"That is quite correct," Andrew replied, with an enigmatic smile. "Incidentally this is the first time in twenty years that I have been addressed by my own name."

"The full name is Richard Allen, I believe?"

"Precisely."

"Alias, the Master Mind?"

I believe that name has been given to me by some," Andrew replied, with unconcerned egotism. "I might even say by many."

"It is rather an ostentatious title."

Wainwright commented indifferently.

"At least, it is not of my choosing," was the retort. "I merely adopted it after it had been given me by others."

"You had a brother," Wainwright suggested.

A spasm of emotion contracted the features of the other.

"My brother," he said in a husky voice, "was Henry Allen, whom you sent to the chair. You—you!" The fury of hate vibrated in the voice.

"No," Wainwright declared sternly; "not I, but the law."

Andrew shook his head.

"You!" he repeated, with the emphasis of a supreme wrath.

Wainwright disdained insistence.

"May I ask why you so constantly reminded me of your enemy throughout of a young girl. It was done either crudely, perhaps, but it was done with sincerity and with a certain effectiveness. I found also some entries in an old journal which explained that face. Then I began to hope. We searched, you and I, for the same girl, and I found her. I found that the circumstances of this girl, who was the original of the portrait and of the entries in the journal, were ideal for my purposes. The essential thing is this:

I desired you to marry her. In order to bring that to pass certainly it was necessary to prepare her, by education and experience of the world, to be your fitting mate. That was done. In due, sir, you married her precisely as I had planned that you should."

"Yes," Wainwright agreed heavily.

"I married her. I understand. Go on, please."

"And now," he went on, with a drawing contentment in his utterance,
"you have just surprised her here in the act of leaving the house with her —well, let us say, with the young friend of her earlier days—Creagan."

The voice of Wainwright came roughly.

"What do you mean?"

Andrew's smile was taunting.

"It's clear enough, isn't it?" he leered.

"You!" In a gust of rage Wainwright remembered the revolver offered to him by Marshall that same evening and accepted. His hand went swiftly to his hip pocket. There was no responsive contact with the weapon.
As he stood astonished Andrew's voice sounded again with a vast entertainment derived from the circumstance.

"Your servant, Parker—my servant,
Parker—is really very capable. You did not observe when he thoughtfully removed the weapon Mr. Marshall had provided." Then abruptly the mocking tones were filled with virulent hatred.

CHAPTER XV.

The Martyr.

"WE have here a close parallel,

Mr. District Attorney," went on Andrew, "to the case of my brother. He killed his man under the influence of a sudden passion—justifiable passion too. Just now you would have killed me under the influence of passion—quite unjustifiable, however—had I not taken the precaution to have the weapon removed from you. But all this is beside the mark. The point of immediate interest is this: First loves are hard to forget. Mr. Wainwright, it is for this reason that Mrs. Wainwright, your wife, has planned to go away with our young friend Creagan."

"It is a lie!" Wainwright's voice was overweighed with quick rage.

"Since you doubt, why, call her!" He went to the door and swung it open.

"Lucene!" he called. This use of her name so familiarly for the first time in the presence of the husband was in itself a revelation. "Come, Lucene," he cried; "come!"

The wife entered almost at once, for she had been waiting in the hall in an agony of despair.

It was the husband who addressed her with a fierce entreaty:

"Lucene, this man—he has been saying"—He choked.

Andrew continued:

"I have been trying to show your husband how useless it would be to attempt to prevent you from going out of his life as you had already planned.
I have also—"

Wainwright was furious.

"He said—he said that you—you were going away with this man Creagan.
Tell him he lies!"

"She will not do that," Andrew declared, "or I am much mistaken."

"Lucene!" The husband's voice rang forth in a loud tenderness.

She spoke in a level voice, apathetic from the burden of a consummate torment.

"There's no use of any more fuss, is there?" she said pitifully. "Oh, I'll go there!"

Andrew grinned malevolently.

"With pleasure!" he declared. There could be no doubt as to the sincerity
of joy with which he pronounced the trite phrase. It summed the culmination of weary years through which he had toiled for hate's sake to this end.
Yet he hesitated still for a little before he began the elucidation of his scheming to compass the ruin of the man before him. "For every human action worthy of the name, Mr. Wainwright," he said at last, speaking with a new formality, "there is a motive. Mine, as you must already understand, was to avenge the death of my brother at your hands."

Again Wainwright interposed.

"At the hands of the law," he said quietly, yet determinedly.

"We'll not quibble over terms," Andrew said arrogantly. "It may seem odd to you, but I loved him. He was only a boy—a boy whose heart was broken—because he had loved one unworthy. He was the only thing that I cherished, the only creature life had given me to care for with all my affection, with all my soul. When he,
for no fault, was condemned to die I—I—well, I—suffered!" Presently he
pression. "I swore then to make you suffer as he had—as I had. You presented to me a very difficult case,"

Andrew continued. "You were rich, honest, intelligent. You did not speculate. Your relations with women, even, were beyond reproach of the most scrupulous. For a time, I confess, I almost despaired of you—despaired of finding your weakness, your vulnerable point. Yet, not quite! You went abroad. It was a simple thing for me with my resources to gain access to your apartment. I went there and made it my dwelling place until I had gained all that I needed. I searched your private papers. One day I noticed in your study a portrait—the out all this time since the trial of your brother, which, one might suppose, would have no other effect than to put me on my guard?"

Andrew admitted the implied statement as to Wainwright's freedom from petty cowardice.

"Exactly," he agreed. "I meant it to put you on your guard." Again he revealed his massive egotism. "To one such as I there could be no triumph in victory over a sleeping victim."

"Triumph!" Wainwright repeated the word thoughtfully. To his logical mind the inference was precise. "Then you think that you have triumphed?"

"Yes," came the confidential reply.

"Indeed!" The ejaculation of the word was replete with skepticism.

Andrew responded with fierceness.

"Yes, yes, Mr. Wainwright," he cried savagely. "It is well that you should understand the truth at once.
This night you are delivered into my hands, bound and helpless—into my hands!"

"Very well," Wainwright returned calmly. "In that case suppose you give me the details." There was to him a considerable relief in the arrival of this hour when there must be explicit evil, something real and tangible, in the stead of vague, imaginary horror, of the sort that had striven to haunt him since the receipt of the first white card.

Andrew grinned malevolently.

"With pleasure!" he declared. There could be no doubt as to the sincerity
of joy with which he pronounced the trite phrase. It summed the culmination of weary years through which he had toiled for hate's sake to this end.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for April 3

GOD IN CREATION

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 1:1-5, 26-31.
GOLDEN TEXT—In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.
PRIMARY TOPIC—In the beginning—God.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God the Creator.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Maker of All Things.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—God in Creation.

Genesis, the book from which the lessons of the quarter are taken, as its name indicates, is a book of beginnings. It contains the only reliable information we have of the origin of the heavens and the earth, plant and animal life, human life, human institutions, and human relations. Without it we would be absolutely ignorant as to the origin of these fundamental things. The first chapter of the book from which our lesson is taken is one of the most wonderful in the Bible. Indeed, it is the key to the whole Bible.

I. God (v. 1).
He was before all things. He had no beginning. Everything but God had a beginning. God, the uncaused cause, is the cause of all things. "Before the mountains were brought forth or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God" (Ps. 90:2).

II. The Origin of the Universe (v. 1).

It was created by God. All things came into being by the will and act of a personal God. The Hebrew word translated "create," according to reliable authority, is the strongest word which the Hebrew language has to express the idea of the origination of substance. The first four words of the Bible exhibit the one fundamental, all-pervasive principle of philosophy of every right life. In the beginning of all science and philosophy—God. In the beginning of every life—God. In the beginning of every year—God. In the beginning of every day—God. In the beginning of every business—God. In the beginning of every human relationship—God. In the beginning of every thought—God.

III. The Degeneration of the Earth (v. 2).

Between verses one and two is a clearly marked interval of perhaps long duration. The earth which was created by God was later overtaken in a cataclysmic judgment. The Hebrew word for "was" might just as well have been translated "became." Instead, therefore, the earth having been created a void or chaos, we see that it became chaos through a judgment. In Isaiah 45:18 the prophet expressly declares that God did not create the earth a waste, but that he formed it to be inhabited.

IV. The Regeneration of the Earth (vv. 3-23).

As previously noted, the second verse of Genesis does not describe the state of the earth when it first came from the Creator's hands, but a changed condition which took place subsequent thereto. The following verses reveal a new effort of creative power by which the earth is again fitted up for the habitation of man. The power active in this reorganization is the Holy Spirit. On the first day the voice of the Almighty was heard saying, "Let there be light," and the darkness was dispelled by the light. In the second day the expanse or firmament was made which separates the waters above the firmament from those below it. The third day dry land appeared clothed with vegetation. The fourth day witnessed the appearance of the light-bearers, the sun, moon, and stars. They were not created then, but set free from darkness and ruin. On the fifth day fish and birds were created and on the sixth day cattle, creeping things, beasts of the field, and man.

V. The Origin of Man (vv. 26-31).

He was created by God. This precludes the foolish idea that man ascended from or through the brute. He came into being through a special creative act of God. This image and likeness is not physical or bodily, but intellectual and moral (Eph. 4:24; Col. 3:10). God's likeness is reflected in man's three-fold nature. Man is spirit, soul, and body (1 Thess. 5:23). As there is a trinity in God so there is a trinity in man. Spirit is that part of man by which he has the power to know God. Soul is self-conscious life, the seat of man's emotions and desires. The body is the seat of the senses, enabling man to have world-consciousness. God made man to be a personality capable of having fellowship with himself, and with whom he could share his glory.

Song of Peace

The bellies of all Christendom now roll along the unbroken song of peace on earth, good will to men!—Long fellow.

Paths to Triumph

"God's trials nobly borne in obedience to his righteous will are the paths to victorious triumph."

"UNREALITY" OF EVIL IS EXPLAINED

"UNREALITY" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches for Sunday, April 3.

Golden Text: Psalms 119:89, 104. "For ever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven..... Through thy precepts I get understanding: therefore I hate every false way."

Among the scriptural passages comprising the Lesson-Sermon are the following (Job. 5:8, 19): "I would seek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cause..... He shall deliver thee in six troubles: yea in seven there shall no evil touch thee."

The following correlative passage from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy is also included in the Lesson-Sermon: on page 76. "Suffering, sinning, dying beliefs are unreal. When divine Science is universally understood, they will have no power over man, for man is immortal and lives by divine authority."

At the regular Wednesday evening meeting testimonies of healing through Christian Science may be heard.

A charity bridge was held on Friday, March 18, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Macdonell. There were forty five people present.

Last Thursday evening Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Bradley entertained their Lachute Rd. friends Euchre and Lost Heir were played at six tables. The prize winners were Mrs. A. F. Bothwell, Mr. W. Watson, Mrs. W. J. Rodger and Mr. George Armstrong.

Last Sunday, owing to the illness of the Rev. J. Macaskill, Mr. Sherwood, a student from the United Church College, occupied the pulpit in the United Church at both services. He gave a very inspiring Easter message on the Risen Christ. The new organ and the beautiful array of cut flowers and potted blooms added to the Easter spirit of the worship.

Last week-end looked very much like a "back home" celebration judging by the number who spent the Easter holidays at their homes here. Among them were the following: Misses Libby Walsh, Kathleen Bradley, Alison Rodger, Gladys Hyde Bessie Rodger, Hazel Brown, B. Woods, Elizabeth Wales, and Messrs. Jack Muir, Lloyd Muir, Willie Gates, John DeWitt, and Keith Pitcairn. We were also pleased to see nearly all the houses on the river shore occupied during the holidays.

Mrs. Robinson and children return to Montreal next week.

Mr. Edwin Greene is going as delegate to the Anglican Synod next week.

Mr. Norman Doherty is suffering from a bad cold, but is improving.

Mr. Carl Seale has returned home, after spending a few days in Montreal.

There was good music by a United Choir at the United Church on Sunday afternoon.

Miss Ethel Seale spent Easter the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jos. A. Seale.

Miss Vera Bennett, of Montreal, is at present visiting her aunt, Mrs. F. J. Watson.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Kennedy were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Jack McCullough on Monday.

Dr. Victor Jeckel and Mrs. Jeckel were the guests of Mrs. Archie Hamilton for the week-end.

Mrs. Jack, Kennedy accompanied by Miss Reta Doherty visited friends in Shawbridge this week.

The teachers, Misses H. Shaw S. Scott and R. Simon are spending the holidays visiting their parents.

Miss Eva Campbell and Mrs. J. Ward spent the week-end the guests of their mother, Mrs. S. Campbell.

We were grateful to the C. N. R. for improved service on Good Friday. From all appearances it paid.

Miss Annie McCullough has returned home, after spending some time visiting friends in Montreal and Hudson.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bell spent the Easter holidays visiting Mrs. Bell's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Rufus McCullough.

An enjoyable evening was spent at a surprise party, given Miss Ailsa M. Seale, at her home on Friday, March 24th.

Mr. John Davis made a business trip to the city this week. He is preparing for sales and service for the coming season.

Miss Hannah Campbell entertained a number of the young people at her home on Friday night, a good time was reported by all.

At the Laurentian Rest Inn there are quite a few resident guests just now, and if the present weather lasts, their numbers will increase in all our local hotels.

The Bridge Club met at the home of Mrs. J. E. Seale's this week. Mrs. R. Kennedy and Mr. Edgar Boyd were the prize winners.

We all rejoice at the continuance of the beautiful snow. The skiing is much better than in February—and what shall we say of the glorious sunshine! Sure everybody's happy.

The usual Holy Service on Easter Morn at the Anglican Church; with Vespers at Evening.

The loose collection in the morning was larger than at anytime in the Churches seventy-one year's existence; best of all, number of communicants exceeded any previous Easter. There were special services during the week.

Dunany Loses a Beloved Citizen

Late Stewart Boyd was Twelve Years Mayor of Wentworth

The sudden death of a life-long and esteemed resident, on Wednesday night, March 30th., came as a severe shock to the community of Dunany, when Stewart Boyd passed away at 11.30 after retiring in apparently perfect health.

Mr. Boyd was born at Dunany 69 years ago in the family homestead, where—with exception of a few youthful years spent in the U. S.—he had passed his entire life. Thus, associated with the early life of that community and growing up with its increasing developments, he was active and interested in all phases of its welfare, both social and administrative. For twenty-four years he had acted on the Wentworth Council, and had been the Mayor of that township continuously during the last twelve years. He was also Chairman of the School Board, Justice of the Peace, ardently connected with Anglican Church work and unceasingly interested for the progress of Dunany and its extensive summer population.

Stewart Boyd was married to Miss Isabella Morrison, of Shrewsbury, who survives to mourn her deep loss, together with her two sons, Nat, of Lachute, and Melvin at home. Two sisters also remain—Mrs. Proudlock, of Montreal, and Mrs. Val Swail, of Arundel.

The funeral service, conducted by Rev. J. A. Lackey, was held at Louisa Church on Saturday afternoon; the large attendance, from near and far, and the beautiful floral tributes, bore testimony of the love and high esteem for a useful life well spent. The remains were tenderly borne for interment at Louisa Cemetery, Messrs. Robt. and F. Gain, Thos. Boyd, S. Watchorn, Jas. and Ed. Morrison acting as pall-bearers.

Among those attending from a distance were Mr. Sidney Boyd, of Magog, Que., and Messrs. L. McRobie, Meighan, Haldimand, Sutherland and Garth Fish, of Montreal.

Lachute Town Council

The regular meeting of above council was held on Wednesday evening, with Mayor P. Dobbie presiding. There were also present Aldermen J. A. Rice, J. P. MacKimmie, C. Miller, Joseph Speight, Dr. Rodrigue, W. A. Morrison, J. B. Raymond and O. Laurin.

Minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

The finance committee's report was received and amounts voted.

Mrs. Vaillancourt was granted assistance of $10. per month for the next three months.

Tenders were called for the collection of garbage during the summer from first week of May until the last week of October, on a motion of Alderman C. Miller, seconded by Alderman Raymond.

Two tenders were read for repairs and alterations to the Town Hall, one from Messrs. Lalonde and Lafleur for the sum of $2,384 and one from Mr. Stanislas Laurin for $1,535, the latter being accepted on motion of Alderman Miller, seconded by Alderman Raymond, the work to be executed under supervision of Alderman Rice, MacKimmie and Raymond.

Notice of motion was then given by Alderman MacKimmie that at the next meeting he will introduce a by-law to make a loan by bond issue for the purpose of extending the water-works intake to Pollock's farm.

Getting Down to Business

The Board of Trade held their monthly meeting on Thursday last, and from the interest manifested by members we may certainly expect results from their deliberations. Their desire is to work in close co-operation with the town council and endeavor to bring about remedial measures that will work to advantage for the town's interest. The two hours spent in general discussion gave much food for thought and it is gratifying to know that our business men are coming together with the progressive object of building a better and larger town.

Prominent C.P.R. Employee Killed by Train at Ste. Agathe

Mr. George C. Wells, aged 66, was killed on the C. P. R. Mont Laurier line between Ste. Agathe and Prefontaine on Tuesday, when struck by a train which he failed to hear approaching. Mr. Wells was well known in Canadian Pacific passenger traffic departments, where he had been employed since 1892 and last year was promoted to the position of supervisor of the tariff and ticket bureau.

Open Verdict in Bergeron Fatality at Rockland, Ontario

A jury enquiring into the death of Leo Bergeron, 27 year old farm hand of Rockland, Ont., after a two-day inquest stated on Tuesday that the victim died from wounds inflicted "by a person or persons or by being trampled by horses." The jury found that William Larocque and Emanuel Lavictoire, previously arrested and jailed, made no effort to save Bergeron's life, but the enquiry failed to hold anyone directly responsible for the fatality.

Ocean Rates Reduced

Further reduction of 20 to 50 p.c. has been effected in steamship travel with the varied companies plying the ocean. This follows a series of reductions last year which had little effect towards increasing traffic.

Some of the steamship companies were reticent upon accepting the cut rate of 20 p.c. at this time.—Better, from their standpoint, a series of bargain rates on special sailings, similar to the railroad excursions recently developed, which have proved to be a new source of revenue. Yet other prices have come down, and the new Atlantic fares should encourage more than a few people to take that European trip they have promised themselves so long.

Civil Service Salaries Compared

This week, the Assistant Secretary of the Civil Service Commission, C. H. Bland, placed before the members of the parliamentary committee investigating the operations of the Civil Service Act a table concerning salaries. The table showed the salary ranges in the service, the number of employees and the percentage in each range.

The first thing that must have struck outside observers about this compilation was that once again statistics have gone to show that the federal employees of Canada are, for the most part, only moderately remunerated. There are exaggerated notions about the salaries of public employees. Yet the table proved that 73 per cent receive less than $1,980 a year and 36 per cent less than $1,500. Only 5 per cent are receiving $3,000 or more.

Examination of public reports relating to civil service salaries here and elsewhere disclose some further interesting and revealing figures. From reports of the Bureau of Statistics and statements of the Civil Service Commission on salaries, the following facts (for 1930-31) are gathered:

Federal
No. of Employees	Payroll	Av. Sal.
Permanent	32,756	$55,967,000	$1,708
Temporary	13,383	14,198,000	1,060
Total	46,139	70,165,000	1,520

In Ottawa there are approximately 8,000 permanent civil servants and they are paid $15,000,000, which means an average salary of $1,940. But in the Capital are concentrated the deputy ministers, commission chairmen and most of the top-salaried government officials. As Mr. Bland's table showed, only 1.65 per cent of all employees receive more than $4,000.

When we look into provincial reports concerning public employees, some rather unexpected results are found. The auditor general's report for Quebec gives the following figures:

Quebec
No. of employees	Payroll	Av. Salary
1,999	$3,467,800	$1,736

Ontario
No. of employees	Payroll	Av. Salary
3,290	$5,929,500	$1,772

Thus it will be seen that federal salaries are lower than in either Ontario and Quebec—lower by $200 a year, and that does not include postmasters. We leave the figures for public inspection. They speak plainly for themselves.

The late Olga W. Bradford

Cushing suffers a deep loss this week in the death, at the Civic Hospital, Ottawa, on Monday, of one of the community's brightest young people, Miss Olga Winona Bradford, only child of Mr. and Mrs. John Bradford.

Miss Bradford lived her entire life in Cushing up to within a few years ago, when she accepted a position in Ottawa with the Special Delivery Office in connection with the G. P. O. Here she had remained as a faithful employee, until the time of her death. Miss Bradford, who will be much mourned by her many friends, was in her twenty-eighth year and was talented as a musician. The sympathy of the entire community and of her friends in the surrounding districts is extended to the bereaved parents in their great loss.

A largely attended funeral was held Wednesday afternoon, at the late residence, Rev. J. W. Maclean of St. Mungo's officiating. The remains were taken for interment to Chute-au-Blondeau Cemetery (Ont.) Floral tributes were both numerous and beautiful. Messrs. Russell Bradford, Allan and George Graham, and Henderson Townsend acted as pall-bearers.

Seventy-Eight Years Young

Mrs. Kate Massiah, Lachute Resident and Pioneer Newspaper Woman, Celebrates Birthday Today

"It would be a dull world if one didn't keep in touch with things, and what an interesting world it is when one does."

Thus spoke Mrs. Kate Massiah, of Lachute, a tiny, little lady just 4 ft. 10 in. who has the distinction of being one of Canada's first newspaper women. Mrs. Massiah, celebrates her seventy-eighth birthday today, April 7th.

A newspaper representative was keen to trace the history of Mrs. Massiah's career and particularly anxious to know just what led to the adoption of journalism as a life work.

She Met Dickens

"I was only fifteen when my father, who was a publisher in Manchester, England, took my brother and myself to hear Charles Dickens speak at Owens College. I was delighted with Dickens' talk—I had a great admiration for him, having read a number of his books—and my delight was intensified when after the lecture my father introduced us to the famous author. Dickens was a charming man with what in later years became known as 'personality' in abundance.

Manchester Guardian

"It was the custom in our family to have the morning paper brought to the breakfast table and Father usually read the most interesting items. I think the paper was the Guardian—and you know what that paper means in Manchester in all England, I might say,—that he read to us that morning and one of the first things we listened to was an account of Dickens' lecture. 'But Father,' I said, 'that report is incorrect. Look here, and here, and here!' I pointed out inaccuracies and my Father laughed. 'Well, Kitty, see if you can write a better account," and child that I was, I did. My next step was to the office of the editor of the paper. I was a bit nervous as I entered his room, but he was a kindly gentleman and seemed really pleased that, as he said, I'd taken an interest in his paper. Next day my account appeared in print and this, my first taste of success in the writing field, I am sure, and nothing else, led me to adopt journalism as my life's work.

VANKLEEK HILL AYRSHIRE BREEDERS HOLD MEETING

Vankleek Hill, March 31.—The Ayrshire Breeders' Association held a very successful meeting at William Newton's farm last week. Over forty-five farmers from the surrounding district were present. D. Hunter, Ayrshire field man, was present and gave a very instructive lecture.

After several members of the club had spoken briefly on the importance and advantage of pure-bred cattle to the average farmer, a number of junior farmers were then called upon to judge the different types. This series of meetings which has just been organized is already proving very satisfactory by the interest the junior farmers are taking and by the large attendance of farmers. A similar meeting was held at Dr. Smith's farm.

"Two years later in 1871 I came to Canada, and since my brother was editor of the Montreal Herald, I settled in Montreal. The first Sunday I was there I attended a service at the Dominion Square Church and was asked to write an account of the sermon delivered. I continued contributing regularly to the Herald and the Witness, and in 1873 I was offered a position by P. O. Vickery, who was then publishing a series of magazines in Augusta, Maine. But I must have been a true Canadian right from the beginning for I hesitated to leave Montreal and make my home in the States. Here's a little verse I wrote:—

"Have faith in Canada.

The faith that mountains move
That faith by work not words
In your own person prove,
Forego the pronoun I
Let us united stand—
And make of Canada a Country great and grand."

House of Commons

"My most interesting experiences were in the House of Commons at Ottawa. My husband, C. W. Massiah, a well-known journalist of nearly 60 years ago, whom I married in 1878, was 'covering' the House for a Toronto paper—the Mail—and also for a number of American dailies who were then, as now, intensely interested in Canada. I volunteered to help him and I have no hesitation in saying that I was the first woman to report sessions of Parliament. It was more difficult to report speeches than it is now. We had no shorthand. There were no typewriters and one had to be extremely quick and accurate. I shall always have the most pleasant memories of Sir John A. Macdonald and of his kindness to me, for it was through him and with his permission that I was allowed to sit in the gallery of the House of Commons.

"The smallpox epidemic of 1885 robbed me of my husband and shortly after my brother and I co-edited the Lachute Independent. I continued to live in Lachute, and contributed regularly to Canadian and American papers and in 1914 I pleaded the case of Lachute vs. the Canadian Pacific Railway—a public cause—before the Railway Commission in Ottawa. I

Continuing The Watchman's Series of Reminiscent Articles by B. N. Wales

There are no brighter memories of our boyhood days than those of the holidays spent tenting on the old camp ground at the head of Jones' Island. This favourite spot gave a commanding view of the "Grand River," that great highway of commerce for the populous basin of the Ottawa River, before a railway connected Montreal and Ottawa. It was very much alive in those days, with river-craft of different kinds, from tugs and tow-boats to freighters and fine passenger steamers. Or the scene might be varied by a tow of twelve or fifteen barges, laden with lumber bound for the New York market, via the Richelieu and Lake Chaplain, to swell the fortunes of the lumber kings of Ottawa. Or there might be in sight a raft of square timber on the way to Quebec, the raftsmen chanting their chansons to the rhythmic splash of the oars when striving to escape a headland or threatening shoal.

It was "Victor" who kept these memories from fading, for our party was never complete without him. Victor was half Indian by descent, and altogether Indian by instinct. He loved the haunts of nature, and he knew its secrets—the eddies where the lusty bass and pickerel could be caught, and the coves where the wild ducks could best be decoyed. To have Victor with us meant a holiday to be remembered for he was an expert in camp-craft. What couches he could prepare with evergreen boughs, where we could rest, inhaling the balm of cedar and fir-tree. What savory bouillon he made for hungry hunters. One summer day, in later years, the old man was missed, sought for, and found lying beside his canoe on the bank of the North River; but his spirit had fled. With lamentations he was carried to his grave by his seven sons, but his burial casket should have been his canoe for voyaging to the Happy Hunting Ground of the spirit world. Dear old Victor!

Requiescat in Pace.

Isaak Walton had no more ardent devotee than Mr. Melancthon Seymour, of Montreal. A familiar scene on the North River was the old gentleman seated in a cushioned chair under an ample sun-shade, in the stern of the Harrington skiff; and always Victor was the guide and oarsman, for a day's fishing. Their return at sundown often meant a fish dinner for village dames, for Mr. Seymour was very generous with his trophies.

Victor Paquette should not be forgotten, for he well deserves a place in the sporting annals of Old St. Andrews.

believe I am the first and only woman to have this distinction.

"During the war I compiled 50,000 booklets of short stories from magazines for the soldiers in France and received the most gracious letters of thanks from Sir Douglas Haig for my work. In 1918, I had prepared special Christmas cards for the boys in the fighting zone but the Armistice was signed before they reached them and I was pleased to know they were used as place cards at a special Christmas dinner. They did bring Canada into the spotlight, because I had plastered maple leaves, scenes of our beautiful land, and other Canadian symbols all over them."

Mrs. Massiah's most recent journalistic work was as editor of the Plattsburg Star.

Votes for Women

"What is your opinion about the women of the province of Quebec and the vote?" a reporter from the Daily Star asked Mrs. Massiah.

"I've never seen a suffragette, but I do think women generally speaking are equal to men in intelligence, and I think they have the 'jump on them' when it comes to common sense. I think the women of Quebec make a mistake, however, in pleading for the vote simply on the grounds that the women in the other

TEACHERS' SCHOOL WILL OPEN JULY 4th.

Final arrangements have been completed by the director of Protestant Education of the Province for the second annual summer school for teachers to be held at Macdonald College, under auspices of the Department of Education from July 4th. to July 30th. inclusive.

The school is open to all teachers holding elementary and intermediate diplomas valid in the Province of Quebec.

The "Safe Driver" radio talks over CFCF, conducted under auspices of Quebec Safety League, are worthy of serious attention and consideration, in the interests of a safe season on the highways. One might particularly note an urge that all horse-drawn vehicles be equipped with lights after dark—this in spite of the lack of provincial legislation to compel such precaution.

The Captain's Corner

THE CAPTAIN'S WEEKLY LETTER.

Dear Boys :-

Here is a word that means a great deal. Everyone is looking for it, all are striving towards getting it. There are also many who say, "If we can gain SUCCESS, we gain correct."

WHAT IS SUCCESS? Each one of us has his own particular definition regarding it as we endeavour to bring about this most desired end. For myself the word SUCCESS has a very wide meaning and SUCCESS in what we are striving for can very often be disguised.

How often we hear the remark passed, "See, after all my trying I have failed." So what is the good anyway? Believe it or not in many an instance failure has been far away from you and instead success right at your elbow. How can that be? you ask and I could answer that because you have conscientiously tried your best, worked diligently to make a good showing and used your efforts to accomplish that which you have set your heart upon. You have gained a knowledge and an experience which of itself will prove to be the greatest possible value and something which is beyond all price. Having this, how can you dare to say that you have failed and the only alternative to failure is SUCCESS. So if you will consider the matter carefully, you will now be able to see for yourself that all the time SUCCESS, though possibly you may not have recognized it as such, has been with you.

I have been hearing a great deal this week of examinations and on one occasion, a small boy has informed me that he will never be any good because the figures which he has obtained, have not enabled him to receive the very much longed for certificate that all the winter has been the one great desire in his mind. Because he has not been granted 50 marks and only been given 47, he considers that he has absolutely and finally failed but he forgets what that 47 means. It represents the plucky effort to carry out a duty that has been set aside for him to do and no three small marks will ever be able to take away the result of a foundation well and truly laid and upon which he will be able to build with larger credit, than he has ever hoped for or expected, in the future.

Do not let us be deceived. SUCCESS is just like OPPORTUNITY. It may be simply waiting for us around the corner. Let us go out and look for it.

Your affectionate friend, THE CAPTAIN.

"The Return of Timothy"

By the time that Kenrick and Henderson had both entered the cottage, Timothy had so far recovered as to show no signs of the distress he had undergone in making his confession to Mrs. Sellingcourt.

"And how is the young man to-day?" inquired Henderson taking hold of Eric's hand and shaking it far harder than he ought to have done. "I think that he likes his present easy sort of life far better than working hard at lessons for Mr. Lawrence."

"Now just listen to that," broke in Kenrick, "anybody would think to hear him talk, that Henderson was a worker, whereas he may consider himself lucky if he does not get put down at the end of the term."

"Ah!" chimed in Eric, now wide awake at the coming of his friends and showing his pleasure at their arrival. "That is what I am afraid of, it is certain that I shall be put down after missing school so much."

"Not you," answered Henderson encouragingly, "you will be alright. You were well up in the work of the class when you came so there is no need for you to worry on that score."

Eric threw him a grateful glance. "Do you really think that Henderson?" he inquired eagerly. "OH, how grateful I should be if only I could remain in the same class with you."

At this moment Mrs. Sellingcourt, interrupted the conversation, "It is getting cold dear," she said addressing Eric, "and I think you must be getting in now if your friends will excuse you," and she nodded meaningly to Henderson and Kenrick Turning to Timothy, lowered her voice so that the others should not overhear, she added, "Thank you dear, for telling me all your troubles. Please promise me that you will not worry any more about it for I am sure that I can help you and your brother as well."

Timothy looked up at her as she spoke, and although there was still signs of unshed tears in his eyes, he had already a brighter and happier look on his face as if the fact that he had found one to whom he could unburden himself was even now having a good effect upon him. "Thank you Mrs. Sellingcourt," he said gratefully. "We had better be going," and he walked on quickly to join the others who had already said good bye to Eric.

The walk to the school proved of little interest both to Henderson and Kenrick on account of the complete silence of their companion. They made one or two attempts to draw him into conversation but without success, so eventually they left him to himself and on reaching the school entrance, they gave him a curt nod of farewell and made their way to their own quarters.

"I can't understand Timothy," said Henderson as they talked over the events of the afternoon. "I do not know that I very much like him. Too much mystery about him to please me and I never did like mysteries."

Kenrick nodded in agreement but added with a wish to be perfectly fair. "I suppose you are right, but all the same it was a very plucky thing for him to rescue Eric in the way he did. I do not know that I would have done it myself?"

Henderson did not answer but was evidently turning the matter over in his mind without coming to any satisfactory solution to the problem. "Oh bother," he said at length, "let's forget him anyway, we have got that arithmetic to do for Mr. Lawrence and I am depending on your help, old man, and in return I will help you with your latin."

A little while later the two friends were busily engaged on these unpleasant tasks.

In the meantime, Mrs. Sellingcourt was thinking over very seriously what Timothy had told her. Apart from the fact of which his bravery in saving her son's life, she felt very much drawn towards this lonely and unhappy boy. First one plan and then another suggested itself to her by which she could help him. None of them seemed practical and she felt almost in despair when Eric himself quite unconsciously pointed out the way.

"Don't you think, Mother, that you had better call and see Mr. Lawrence about my going back to school?" he asked as she was putting him to bed. "You know I shall be well enough to return the day after to-morrow and I would like him to know about it. Perhaps if you went up now, you would ask him to give me some work to do so that I shall not be so far behind."

"That's a good idea, son," replied Mrs. Sellingcourt. "This will be a good time to see him so if you think you will be quite safe left all alone, I will do so."

Eric laughed, "I don't think anyone will interfere with me or want to kidnap me but if I am asleep when you come, mind you wake me up and tell me what Mr. Lawrence said."

Trudy's Teapot Tales

"THE PATRIOTS" by Auntie Di

"Ten o'clock tomorrow morning at the hut, Marjory-Ella" were Danny's parting words as they reached their gate.

Empire Day dawned bright and sunny, and very warm fortunately for Marjory-Ella, since only on such a day could a flimsy fancy dress be worn. The frock proved to be decidedly short for Marjory-Ella, and fitted a little tightly, but after all, as Danny said comfortingly when she arrived at the hut, she would be sitting in the cart, and it really wouldn't be noticeable.

The Rowe children had spared no pains to make the procession a success. Bunny and Biddy wore cockaded soldiers' hats of strong scarlet paper, and their plump middles were encased in Union Jacks. Biddy carried the Tri-Colan, and Bunny a black flag upon which were displayed in white the skull and cross bones. Both Danny and Marjory-Ella were very doubtful as to the patriotic significance of these two emblems, but the twins had found them in their top cupboard and pleaded so hard to be allowed to retain them that the two elder children relented. Danny and Mick wore placards across their fronts,—"God bless Our Empire," and "God Save the King" respectively while one side of the card displayed proudly, "Buy Empire Goods," and the other "The sun never sets on the British Empire," with an enormous red sun painted by Mickey. A low stool was placed in the cart to form Marjory-Ella's throne, upon which she seated herself, somewhat gingerly at first. "Here's your crown," announced Danny, producing a wreath of artificial flowers from a large paper bag. "Put it on, Marjory-Ella."

Marjory-Ella pulled it on to her thick curls gleefully. "Is it straight Danny?" she asked, preening herself. "And don't you think I ought to have a sceptre?"

"A sceptre—oh, you mean a sceptre—a kind of wand, you mean," corrected Danny, gravely. "Soon get one, Marjory-Ella."

He bounded off and a few moments later returned with a stick crowned by a posy of freshly-pulled hawthorns.

"Oo-oo, lovely cooed Marjory-Ella, and held it gracefully in her right hand: "Guess we're ready to go, aren't we?" asked the Master of Ceremonies, gazing round at his little band of patriots.

The twins had been gazing round-eyed at the occupant of the cart since her coronation.

"I think," said little Bid, softly, "that you look just like a real princess, Marjory-Ella."

Marjory-Ella's happiness was complete. "And you all look simply grand, and ever so patriotic," she smiled graciously.

"Well, are we gonna go?" demanded Mick impatiently. He saw no sense in standing there paying compliments. "Yes, all serene. Quick march!" commanded Danny, grabbing his handle of the cart while Mick grabbed his. The ensuing jerk almost upset Marjory-Ella's balance, but she managed to keep steady by holding the side of the cart with her disengaged hand. The little cavalcade made its way carefully out of the wood, the two bigger boys pulling in front and the twins trotting one each side of Marjory-Ella.

By common consent the children avoided the district where they were likely to be known, for they were really a little nervous of displaying their patriotic principles in the immediate neighborhood. So they made a wide detour by cutting across some fields where only the cows stared at them lazily, and went on chewing their cud unconcerned with the importance of the British Empire. It was rather bumpy going just here for Marjory-Ella, but she was thankful to think they had met no-one, and a halt was called in the last field but one to rest the pedestrian element of the procession. From here they could see the cluster of houses and shops and the church which formed the village to which they were going, and after about ten minutes pause they continued their march, not stopping until they turned into the village main street.

"I got here
just in time"

Tom Walker's wife was taken ill so suddenly that there was no time to take her in to town, so Tom hurried to the telephone and called the doctor.

The doctor was out on his calls, but Tom finally located him at a neighbor's on the next concession, and he came right over.

"It's pleurisy," the doctor, told Tom. "She'll be all right, but I got here just in time. It's lucky you have a telephone."

How It Works

One of childhood's choicest queries has ever been and ever will be: "How does it work?" and it seemed a wholly enthralling idea to two young passengers, who recently travelled from Nottingham, England, to Lemberg, Sask., when Engineer Fred Munt, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, invited them into the cab of his huge "2800" type locomotive. The young travellers were Walter and Willie Wilson, aged 12 and 10 years, who journeyed alone from their grandmother's home in the Old Country to join their mother. They crossed the Atlantic in the Canadian Pacific liner Montclare and the Dominion on C. P. R. lines, making many friends and seeing many absorbing sights en route. Pictures show the interested pair and their kindly tutor in a brief explanation of the mysteries of the gauges of the great engine. And what boy, either in Canada or England, would not envy them?

If your dog has fleas, give him a bath in sand; rub him down with alcohol. The fleas get drunk and kill each other throwing stones.

Bert: "I love her, although she isn't pretty. She has that indefinable something." Bill: "Oh, I know! My girl's dad is rich, too."

"Here's something queer," the dentist said. "You say this tooth has never been filled before, but I find small flakes of gold on my drill."

"I think you have struck my back collar-stud," moaned the miserable victim.

A small boy, leading a donkey passed an army camp. A couple of soldiers wanted to have some fun with the lad. "Why are you holding on to your brother so tightly, sonny?" said one of them. "So that he won't join the army," the youngster replied.

It happened in Montreal.

The Montreal Star is authority for the following narrative of big-city life: "A man stood up in a street car and offered a woman his seat. She fainted. When she recovered consciousness she thanked him. Then he fainted."

Railways of the Future

Coaches to run on rail and road.

"The truck and bus have smashed tradition, railways must do the same," declares Sir Henry Thornton, K.B.E., Chairman and President of the Canadian National Railways, in a striking article on "The Future of Railroads," published in the Saturday Evening Post.

It is possible, Sir Henry believes, that soon motor vehicle manufacturers will be asked to revise their ideas and work on plans for the production of machines that will run on road and rail, and of a passenger rail bus to run with the frequency of the road bus, but wider, higher safer, and swifter. The road bus, Sir Henry points out, has to meet road traffic on an equal basis, but the rail bus would not be subject to such delays or inconveniences.

France, he says, is already considering the introduction of the rail bus to all its branch lines, and in Canada, although only occasional experiments have been made, surprising things have been done by construction gangs with old motor cars fitted with flanged wheels. These cars have carried loads far in excess of highway possibilities, and safe speeds have been attained, much greater than those possible for work trains on new tracks.

There is no reason, asserts Sir Henry, why the railways of the future should not be able to offer smoother, swifter, transportation, make more use of roller bearings and achieve 100 mile-an-hour speed. There should be no need to open railway carriage windows, for the air would be conditioned so that in winter carriages would be warm without stuffiness, and in summer cool and fresh. On night journeys every passenger would have some form of private compartment to himself.

The salesmanship of the railways of the future should have the same degree of excellence, says Sir Henry, as that of the best department stores, and a passenger with proper commercial rating, should be able to buy his ticket by telephone and pay for it by bill and cheque according to the usual usages of commerce.

In dealing with freight, the railways of the future will have to effect shipper-to-consignee delivery without intermediate handling. The motor truck is able to do this, and now that inventors are turning back to the railways, it should not be impossible for railways to achieve the same continuity of delivery.

Irony of Taxation

If a man loaf around and lets someone else feed him he is asked for no taxes. If he gets busy and earns $800 a year and spends it all on himself he again pays no taxes. If he reforms, saves his money and puts it into a home, and property, he is at once fined to the extent of a municipal tax, a business tax, a school tax, an old age pension tax, a fire tax, a skating rink tax, community hall tax. He is taxed if someone goes to jail and taxed if he stays out. If he gets sore and sells his property and puts the money into the bank, or a mortgage company, or a mail order store, he escapes all these taxes, and his share of taxes is levied on property owners who are patriotic enough to stick it.

—Crystal City Courier.

Quebec W. I. Emphasise Need of Country Planning in Canada

M. Elizabeth McCurdy, on the Publicity Committee of Q.W.I., writes to the Watchman as follows:—

The question, "Will town and country planning ever come to be seriously considered in Canada?" is often in the minds of a few far-sighted people, who, judging from a study of the experience of older and more congested countries, realize that in the future it may become imperative to give the matter practical attention.

This class of thinkers in Great Britain believes that the time has now come in that small and densely populated, as well as highly industrialized country, to take official notice of the situation. To this end a Town and Country Planning Bill was introduced to the late government, asking that the powers of municipal or local authorities be not confined to undeveloped land, but extended to sites already built upon, as well as to rural areas. The new Government, however, has been so occupied with pressing economic questions that the fate of the Town and Country Planning Bill still hangs in the balance.

The increase in the human population of the world has been set at twelve millions per annum. Naturally, in the coming years, the problem of location for the increase will become a serious and perplexing one. To divide up lands and to build without due consideration of the importance of the laying out of country and town districts is to add greatly to this problem in the future.

Other than merely commercial considerations must enter into any successful scheme of town and country planning. It is not enough that houses and buildings should be set in prim rows on straight lines, or that water power or convenience in shipping should be the sole deciding factors as to where and how human beings should be grouped and arranged in the homes which are the units of national life.

Beauty in grouping and arranging should be considered; natural taste should be given an opportunity, the conventionalized plan and the stiff and wearisome uniform avoided as much as possible. Convenience, simplicity and space should be factors in planning towns and in laying out country areas.

The airship is used in many ways to cover ground on a large scale quickly. Why not here? Plans for landscape gardening of a community could be outlined by this method effectually, in the same manner as forest estimates are made, forest fires detected and averted, lost travellers located and many another feat attempted and accomplished by that most modern of all modern creatures, the "bird-man." Not only geographical advantages of a situation, but beauty of arrangement, prevention of waste land and avoidance of congestion could be quickly deduced from a bird's-eye view of land to be settled.

THE PAST WEEK or two in Federal Parliament has seen a deplorable impediment to the progress of the session, in the Opposition's determination to obstruct an extension of expenditures, for the relief of unemployment and similarly unavoidable demands. The Liberals' criticism, based upon so-called "constitutional" grounds, represents nothing more or less than an expensive delay to the business of legislation and a futile tirade of abuse against the Bennett government.

Realizing the absolute need of assistance, where unemployment has prevailed to the distress of our citizenry,—and in view of the Opposition's running criticism of methods adopted to administer this relief—there comes through the Ottawa Journal one news despatch, from Quebec, which is decidedly refreshing. The item reads:

Quebec, March 30.—To a delegation of mayors of cities and towns in the province of Quebec, who requested in an interview to-day that the time limit for the completion of unemployment relief works be extended, Premier L. A. Taschereau said: "Take your request to Ottawa and we will endorse your action. In the matter of unemployment I wish to pay this tribute to the Bennett Government: they have done all in their power to relieve unemployment. I might add, the provincial governments have been equally active."

Such approval of Government methods is doubly assuring, coming as it does from a staunch Liberal and a 100 per cent Canadian, in the person of our Quebec Premier.

THE TORONTO GLOBE comes forward as a friend and champion of the weekly newspaper. And on every hand, it is gratifying to find recognition of the important part our weekly newspapers are playing in public affairs, and of their influence in helping to direct public opinion. Collectively, the weekly newspapers cover the territory more thoroughly than do all the daily newspapers. Not only that, but the weekly newspapers are more carefully read, their editorials more thoroughly discussed, and the influence on public opinion more subtle than those of any daily newspaper. To confirm this statement any editor has no end of evidence. Sometimes the force of this statement is not as pleasing as the editor could desire, for, when an editorial is published that conflicts with the set partisan opinions of some subscriber he is told in no uncertain tone that he is either a fool or doesn't know what he is talking about! But obviously an editor cannot expect his opinions to meet with universal approval.

Few weekly newspapers possess a number of reporters, sufficient to cover the local ground as closely as the city daily, with its large news and editorial staff. Nevertheless, the editor of a weekly newspaper is in far better position to get in closer touch with public opinion. His association with the community is more personal; he meets on friendly terms the leading men of his township, and discusses with them not only the affairs of the community, but affairs of state. He does not jump on conclusions, because he has time to consider carefully the various problems of the day.

And in spite of the honaier aspect of our country weeklies and their less orthodox, perhaps less efficient, presentation of the current news—the Toronto Globe is right in attributing to the weekly press a closer contact and a more subtle influence with the Canadian public.

CUSHING

Flaky Pie Crust

The secret of making good pie crust is: "Use Purity Flour—and keep the dough dry!" Try this recipe—for 2 shells:

3 cups Purity Flour 1 cup lard
1/2 teaspoon salt 1 cup cold water.
METHOD: Mix the flour and salt, cutting in half the shortening until the mixture is like fine meal, gradually adding exact quantity of water but not a drop more. Use less water, if you can, and the pie crust will be even better.

Turn out on board very lightly sprinkled with Purity Flour, roll about 1/4-inch thick. Spread balance of shortening over dough, fold over three times and roll again to required thickness. Bake in hot oven (450°).

STEWART BOYD, J. P. An Appreciation

In the passing of Stewart Boyd, Mayor of the township of Wentworth, the County of Argenteuil has lost a valuable citizen and the people a true friend.

For the past twenty-four years, Stewart, as he was affectionately known by his many friends, acted as councillor and for the last twelve years as Mayor of Wentworth.

Elected to the school board in 1901, he was chosen as its chairman in 1917 and has occupied that important post ever since.

Of a kindly disposition, strictly honest and just in all his dealings, with a single eye to what he considered right and fair to all and in the best interests of Wentworth as a whole, Stewart held the scales of justice as between man and man and as between one section and another, and with even hand, patient argument, and gentle persuasion, reconciled the interest of one with the other. His jurisdiction extended over a territory of 40 square miles, but no distance was too great and no trouble too much for Stewart Boyd if he could settle a difficulty.

He sleeps under the shadow of his beloved mountains. His daily task is done, but his memory will remain long with us.

ST. ANDREWS EAST

Mrs. R. P. Reid, of New York, is spending a few weeks with her parents Mr. and Mrs. E. Neve.

We are glad to learn that Mrs. Patton is back with us again after spending a few months in Montreal.

Mr. and Mrs. Gagnon and little son visited Mrs. Gagnon's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Rodger last week.

Mrs. W. N. Brown and children returned to Montreal last Friday after visiting Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Balantyne.

Rev. E. J. Judge, of Montreal, was in charge of all the services at Christ Church last Sunday.

Mr. C. W. Pease has returned home, after spending several days in Montreal. Mrs. Pease is remaining awhile longer.

Last Wednesday afternoon a few members of the United Church W. M. S. packed two boxes of clothing and a crate of eggs which were sent to Welcome Hall Mission.

Messrs. Walter Brown, Percy Burwash and Harold Cairns left the early part of this week for St. Jerome, where they will be on the Petit Jury.

The Young People of the Presbyterian Church are busy preparing for a debate "Resolved that country life affords a better opportunity to the development of character than life in the city." Miss Snow, Ernest MacQuat and G. M. Rodgers are on the affirmative, and Miss R. Bradley, Lloyd Muir and Willie Gates for the negative. Date, Friday, April 15th.

The Concert formerly announced for May 7th., will be held on April 14th. in the Town Hall. This concert is under the auspices of the Women's Guild of the United Church. The entertainers will be Tom MacDuff Copeland, of Queen's Hall, London, Eng. and Henry Duff, violinist. See notice under "Coming Events."

Miss Mabel Carroll, a missionary who is home on furlough from West China, was the speaker at an open meeting of the W. M. S. last Friday evening in the United Church. Her address was very interesting and was illustrated by lantern slides of unusual clearness and color. One of the striking features of the missionary work in China, is the fact that they have erased denominational lines and organized all groups into what they call "Church of Christ in China." Miss Carroll last week received her re-appointment from this church. At the close of the meeting Mrs. Macaskill announced that Mrs. Dr. B. N. Wales had been made a life member of the W. M. S.

The Reading Circle met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Pitcairn last Friday evening. Col. Hooker gave a very interesting paper on "Reparations". The next meeting will be held on April 15th., when Mrs. Pitcairn will give a paper on the "Riddle of the Pacific" and an "Atom."

A 10c package of Rugby gives you enough tobacco for 25 mild, fragrant cigarettes. Free Chantecler cigarette papers with each package.

Community Medical Contract Scheme

Cardston, Alta., has adopted a co-operative medical service scheme, in which 145 families have contracted to date. According to an outline of the idea in Municipal News, these families have paid $25 into an association which will give them general medical service, including minor and major operations, confinements, and service for the whole family during sickness. Cases of injury, except such as require a specialist, are covered in the contract. The contract also covers periodical medical examinations, for the idea is as much to "keep the community well" as to cure its people's ills after these develop. $36000 in cash has been paid into the health association and deposited in the bank. Additions to the list of contracts will be accepted in groups of ten, but not singly. The $25 gives the family general medical service for a year. They may choose either of the two doctors co-operating in the scheme.

MYTHS OF THE ARCTIC

Many School-Book Teachings of Far North and Eskimos Are Wrong, Says Noted Explorer.

Dr. Vilhjalmur Stefansson, noted Canadian explorer, leader of four Arctic expeditions, holder of degrees from seven universities and of gold medals from eight geographical societies, a native of Manitoba, who has been publicly thanked by the Canadian Government for his services in adding thousands of square miles to the territory of Canada, claims to be an explorer only "by accident," for he was once a teacher and taught the very things which he is now disproving.

"My own teachings were not only wrong, but absurd," said Dr. Stefansson in the course of a lecture. "I used to teach that the North Pole was the coldest place on earth—the last word in chilliness. I thought that no trees nor vegetation grew there. I thought that the Eskimos lived in snow houses. I thought that they drank oil. And I went farther—I even believed that they liked it."

"The North Pole is a place as small as my finger-tip. The ice there is about five feet thick and is continually being broken up by the sea. There are pieces of ice there as big as a table. Some are as big as a farm, some as big as Prince Edward Island, and some, but not many, as big as Nova Scotia. The water is all the time moving. If it were really very cold that water would be frozen and the ice would be very much more than five feet thick. I don't believe that it has ever been colder at the North Pole than 55 degrees below zero.

VILHJALMUR STEFANSSON.
(From a splendid bust by Emanuel Hahn.)

"Going south for 300 miles inland, leaving that great radiator, the sea, behind us, we find a temperature of 79 below zero which obtains for 600 miles more, down to the Peace River district. So, here in Canada, it is about 27 degrees colder than on the north coast, and about 25 degrees colder than at the North Pole. It is often colder in Dakota and the Rocky Mountain states than it is on the north coast of Canada."

Returning to the Eskimos of the "frozen north," the speaker declared that it was by no means an unusual sight in summer to see them fanning themselves with bandana handkerchiefs in a temperature of 90 degrees in the shade.

"The school books also tell us that the Eskimos live in snow houses," he went on. "Of the 15,000 Eskimos in Greenland, 14,700 have never seen a snow house. And more than half of the Eskimos in the world have never heard of a snow house, unless they have been to school."

He had only once seen an Eskimo drink oil, and then it was at the request of a tourist, who paid a dollar for the privilege of seeing the "custom" exemplified by a boy with an eye to business.

CHECKING THE ALARM CLOCK.

Correct time to one-hundredth of a second is essential for many purposes of geodesy and geophysics, according to C. C. Smith, Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada. To obtain this accuracy the Dominion Observatory at Ottawa daily checks its clocks by observation of the stars and comparison of the clocks of observatories throughout the world.

Oyster Bed Gives Valuable Return.

From an oyster bed of 600 acres in a little bay in Prince Edward Island, which is only one-fifth of the whole area, and taking only one-quarter of the maximum yield, there is an annual production of 1,200,000 barrels of oysters, representing a return of $10,000,000, and the oysters have won the reputation of being among the finest in the world.

Roumanian Bachelors Taxed.

There will probably be a rush on the marriage license bureaus in Roumania in view of a recent measure considered by the Roumanian Parliament. A bill has been passed which provides for an additional tax of 20 per cent. on the incomes of all unmarried persons between the ages of 30 and 45. Both men and women are included in this tax.

Membership of Trade Unions.

Since 1924 the membership of all classes of organized labor bodies in Canada has been steadily rising and in 1930, according to the Department of Labor, Ottawa, the total reached 323,449. This is still about 56,000 less than the peak of 379,047 reached in 1919.

An Aid to Imagination.

"If he sleeps at all," say a writer of a man infected with the golf germ, "he dreams of a succession of figures that start at two and never get higher than a five." In other words, golf is an aid to the imagination.

A Special Demonstration of the STERLING OIL BURNER

Monday and Tuesday, April 11 and 12

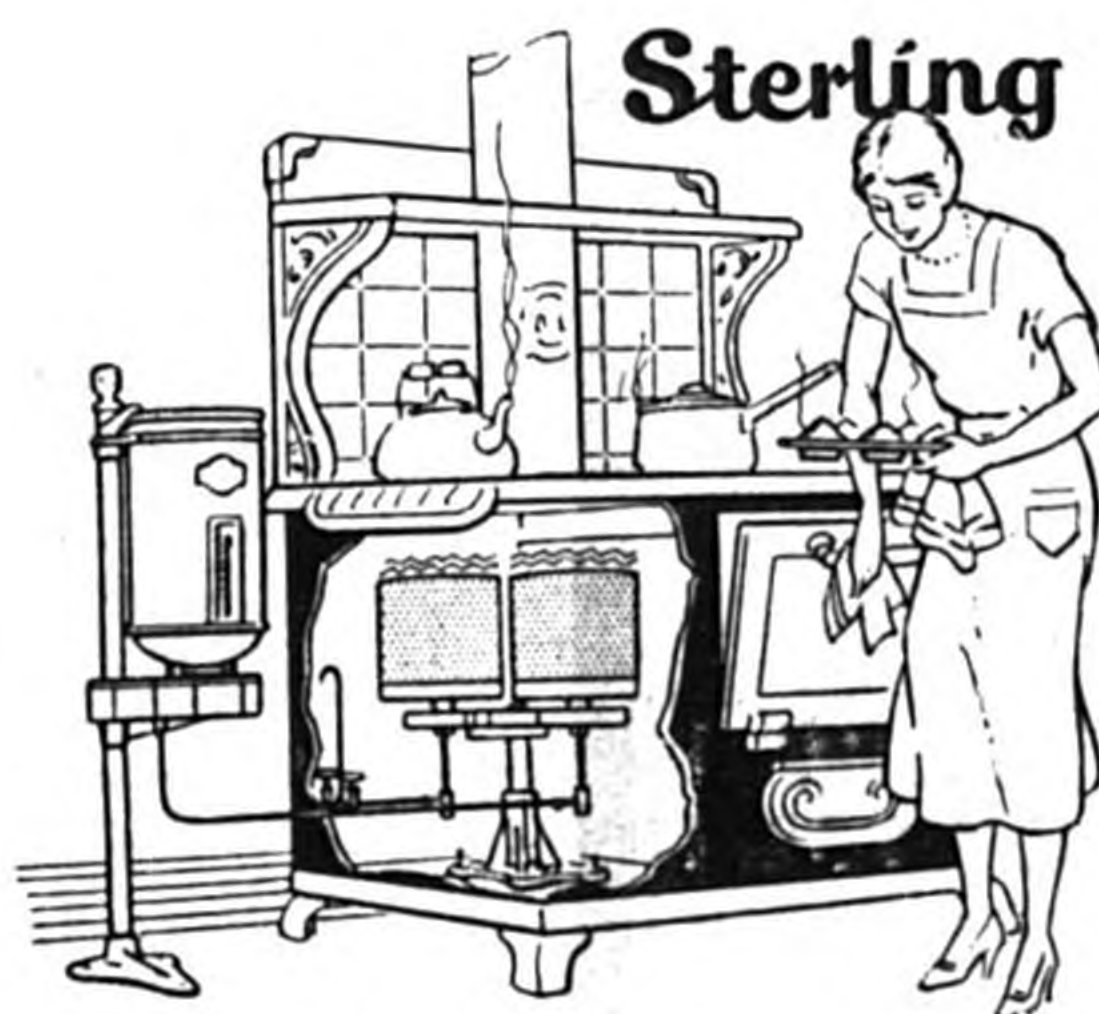

-- -- at 9 a.m. until closing -- --

The Seven Points of Sterling Superiority:

1. Metal Containers, not likely to be accidentally broken or cracked by the heat.

2. Specially designed Filters, durably built and assuring proper filtering of oil.

3. Extra fine Filter in valve-base insuring extra protection against dirt and other matter causing carbon.

4. Safety Valve Lock which prevents opening valve further than required for perfect results.

5. Special Alloy Steel tested to 2,000 degrees Fahrenheit...a lot more than ever required.

6. Reinforced Metal Supports that will prevent the wicks from curling up.

7. Large oil passages, not likely to be blocked by carbon, so insuring steady free flow of clean oil.

Do not fail to take full advantage of this demonstration to learn for yourself how the use of oil for cooking and heating does away with all the dissatisfaction, dirt, work and nuisance of burning coal or wood.

Come in and let us show you why these burners are so economical in operation, so safe and easy to use, and why you can depend on them for years of carefree, enjoyable service.

There is a correctly designed Sterling Oil Burner for every type of Stove, Range, Heater or Circulator, and every installation is backed by a definite, far-reaching guarantee.

Easily and quickly installed—no more cinders to sift or ashes to move, and full freedom from harmful dust.

You will be surprised how little it costs to install one of these truly modern oil burners and how really effective they are for all heating and cooking purposes.

In business and manufacturing plants and on steamships Oil has long been given preference. Now it is brought to your home—at the highest point of efficiency by the STERLING OIL BURNER.

C.P.R. Cheap Excursions

Ottawa, Three Rivers and the Eastern Townships will be the objectives of three bargain rate Canadian Pacific Railway excursions on the week-end of April 16, according to announcement made by the passenger department of the railway to-day. The first will be to Ottawa and Hull and return; the second to Three Rivers, Shawinigan Falls and Grand'Mere and return; and the third to Sherbrooke, Magog and Lennoxville, and return, with connection with other points in the Townships.

The occasion is noteworthy for the fact that this will be the first time that excursions will have been organized, in a series covering widely separated points in and outside this province, all starting and returning on the same week-end. It is an innovation that will be welcome, not only to Montrealers, but also to inhabitants of the other cities who have friends & relatives in the metropolis. Apart from visiting, the pleasures of "sugaring off" will also be available to the travellers, since April 16 marks the height of the maple sugar season.

The specials for Ottawa will leave the Windsor Station at 120 p.m., April 16, arriving in the capital at four o'clock. Departure from Ottawa will be at 9.30, Sunday night. There will be ample opportunity to visit Hull and other places in the Gatineau Valley.

For Three Rivers, Shawinigan Falls and Grand'Mere, the specials will leave the Place Viger Station at 2 P.M., April 16, and Park Avenue at 2.20. Arrival at Three Rivers is scheduled for 4.20 p.m.; Shawinigan Falls at 5.15 p.m. and Grand'Mere 5.30 p.m. Return trains will leave Grand'Mere Sunday night at 8.35; Shawinigan at 8.50 and Three Rivers at 9.40, arriving in Montreal about midnight. Travellers will have plenty of time to take in a trip to the shrine at Cap-de-la-Madeleine.

For Sherbrooke, Magog and Lennoxville the excursion will leave the Windsor Station at 1.15 p.m., April 16, reaching Sherbrooke at 4 p.m. in time to make connections with the Quebec Central train leaving Sherbrooke at 4.10 p.m., for East Angus, Woodon, Black Lake, Thetford Mines etc. The Quebec Central is also offering special rates for these trips. Special trains will leave Sherbrooke at 9.30 Sunday night, reaching Montreal about midnight.

Here and There

There are over 450 miles of motor highways, 100 miles of roads, 2,492 miles of trails and 1,100 miles of telephone lines in the twenty national parks of Canada, which cover an area of over 13,800 square miles in different parts of the Dominion.

San Francisco was en fete recently when the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Britain arrived there from Honolulu for a two day stay on her 128-day winter cruise of world ports. About 80 additional passengers joined the ship at San Francisco and another fifty at Los Angeles for the last lap of her voyage through the Panama Canal to New York.

"The Mineral Position of the British Empire" is the suggestive title of a paper by Dr. Charles Camsell, Deputy Minister of Mines, which will be the leading topic for discussion at the annual meeting of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, in Montreal on April 6, 7 and 8. This same topic will provoke much discussion at the forthcoming Imperial Economic Conference.

Belief that economic conditions were gradually improving and that the forthcoming Imperial Economic Conference at Ottawa would be one of the big historical events in the development of the Dominion, was expressed by Senator Gideon Robertson, former Minister of Labor, who sailed on S.S. Montcalm from Halifax recently as Canada's chief delegate to the 16th annual conference of the International Labor organization at Geneva.

Canada's rapid change from an exporter of raw minerals to an exporter of finished and semi-finished products will be well set forth at the annual meeting of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy in Montreal on April 6, 7 and 8. A number of important papers will describe the new smelters and refineries that have effected this change.

With five steamers in service between Port McNicoll and the head of the Lakes during the coming season, the Canadian Pacific Railway announces that they will now accept shipments of freight at eastern points destined to points in western Canada, via Port McNicoll, Ont., and their lake and rail route subject to delay at Port McNicoll pending the first sailing.

Changes in the management of Maritime Province summer hotels of the Canadian Pacific Railway will shortly become official. Joseph A. Cashman who managed the Lakeside Inn, Yarmouth, N.S., and is at present in charge of the Place Viger Hotel in Montreal, will become manager of the Algonquin Hotel, St. Andrews, N.B., and he will be succeeded in the management of the Lakeside Inn by Jeremiah Daley, Jr., now chief clerk at the Cornwallis Inn, Kentville, N.S.

Among deeds of heroism at sea, the rescue of the 27 men of the salvage ship Reindeer by volunteer seamen of the S.S. Montcalm recently will rank high. Ably seconded by Captain Rothwell who steered the Montcalm to make a lee for the lifeboat, and with very heavy seas running, the men under Second Officer Knight put through "as pretty a piece of work as one could wish to see," was the comment of J. G. Ross, of Moose Jaw, former M.P. for that city, who was a passenger and witnessed the rescue from start to finish. (331)

LIFE insurance benefits... can be Proved while you are still ALIVE!

LIVING policyholders of the Sun Life were paid in benefits during 1931 $68,000,000—THREE TIMES as much as beneficiaries of deceased policyholders.

This was due, partly, to the fact that trained Sun Life representatives, when selling insurance, counsel their policyholders how to secure a dual advantage—the maximum benefit to THEMSELVES, and the greatest protection to their DEPENDANTS.

The insured no longer have to "die to win."

The wisest insurers vigilantly protect their policies and allow nothing to impair them. The Sun Life enjoys a remarkable record for the persistency of its business—largely the result of sound advice and expert service to its policyholders, by its representatives.

Sun Life representatives sold $528,000,000 new paid-for insurance last year, making the Company's total business in force over Three Billions—an impressive reflection of public confidence.

To-day prudent men are not only taking on MORE life insurance; they are doing so after consultation with competent representatives of such a company as the Sun Life.

An Old Man in Spats

By JANE OSBORN

THERE was once a young woman named Margaret Abadie who grew weary of paying half her meager income for the rent of an ill-ventilated studio apartment in the big city, and went to live in a near-by village. Margaret had a deft hand with paint brushes but no decided talent, so she made her small income patiently decorating lampshades for a large gift shop in the city. The village she chose was a small one with a wide-shaded main street on which were huddled the few shops that supplied the villagers' needs. Most of them were combination shops that carried on oddly assorted lines of business. The little shop where you bought newspapers, magazines and tobacco was furnished with a long oilcloth-covered table and six wooden chairs where ice cream was served at all hours—as well as "hot meals" at noon and supper time.

At about six o'clock every evening Margaret went down to this little shop to buy the evening paper, and it was there that she noticed the old man in spats. He seemed always to be sitting there at the oilcloth-covered table at that time waiting for his evening meal. The immaculate spats and his polished rimless eyeglasses struck Margaret as rather odd.

Seeing him there every evening and pitying his loneliness emboldened Margaret to bow to the old man. Later she said good evening and before a month had passed she felt as if she were well acquainted with this extraordinary old man in spats. One evening feeling lonely herself she asked the old man if he wouldn't like to come and have supper with her. She had made up her mind that he was a sorry old widower who preferred eating these untempting meals to sitting alone at home. The next evening the old man in spats came to her little lod-furnished cottage. There was no doubt as to the old man's enjoyment of the meal. He came again a week later and soon after that he asked Margaret if he might come every evening. He offered her a dollar for each supper and would agree to no less. Margaret was delighted with the arrangement. First it provided this homeless old man with a really good meal once a day. Association with her for that hour every day seemed to break the spell of his loneliness. Moreover, it broke the spell of her own loneliness. Naturally shy, Margaret had met with no great cordiality on the part of the villagers among whom she lived. Lately they seemed to have grown even less friendly towards her.

Margaret became really very fond of her old man in spats. He never spoke of his own affairs. All that Margaret knew of him was that his name was Mr. Baker. Once she asked a neighbor about him.

"Oh Mr. Baker," said the woman with an unpleasant note in her voice. "I dare say you know a great deal more about Mr. Baker than we do. It's quite true that he has a pile of money—which is no doubt what you want to find out."

Then one day a young man in an expensive car drove up to Margaret's cottage. A tall, well-dressed young man; he was Mr. Charles Baker. He said he thought it was only fair for him to talk with her. It was a matter of neighborhood gossip that—here he hesitated—she, Margaret, had become very friendly with his grandfather. Of course, it was none of young Mr. Baker's business what Margaret did nor in a way what his grandfather did. But his grandfather's wife—his own step-grandmother—a woman some years younger, had got word of the gossip, and had worried herself quite ill over the matter. Of course they all realized that Mr. Baker was not quite responsible. If he had been entirely normal he would never have gone to Vamoost's to get his meals. Annoyed at some trifling remark of his wife's at dinner some months ago he had stalked out saying he would never eat at home again.

"You mean that you and your step-grandmother think that I am trying to vamp Mr. Baker?" Margaret at last managed to ask. She laughed at the very absurdity of the thought and then explained exactly what had happened. Margaret and the young Mr. Baker talked then of a number of things. Charles from the first admired her, and when he left Margaret made a promise. "Not only will I give up my nice boarder but I'll get him to leave Vamoost's, too. I'll persuade him to eat at home tomorrow." Charles suggested that it might be easier to accomplish that if Margaret promised to dine with them, too.

Mrs. Baker was a good actress. When she met Margaret she never showed that for awhile she had felt nothing but jealousy for her. Frankly she liked Margaret from the first—and by this time Charles was in love with her. Old Mr. Baker found it rather pleasant to be home again—but he found it even more pleasant when a few months later Margaret took a permanent place at his board as the young bride of his grandson.

Gentlemen:—

Read our proposition very attentively, and study the benefits deriving from it, which are enumerated below. Think specially of these of which the amounts are replaced by the question marks:

1. Reduction of two (2) cents per gallon of gas. Average annual consumption, 300 gallons, Saving $6.00
2. Reduction of twenty (20) cents per gallon of oil. Average, 10 gallons per annum, " $2.00
3. 5% Discount on tire and 10% on tubes and accessories. Average purchase $30. per year, " $3.00
3. Complete Alemite greasing (including Spring bath), regular price $1.00, reduced to 75c. Average greasing eight times a year, " $2.00
5. Free 10 minute service, at our station " ?
6. Free changing of tires within city limits " ?
7. 10% discount on all repairs above $1.00 " ?
8. Free delivery of gasoline for members stalled on the road within a radius of 5 miles (10 miles round trip), minimum, 5 gallons, at regular price " ?
9. Free towing within a radius of 20 miles from our station (40 miles round trip) " ?

The membership fee being $10.00 per year, a member not only saves this amount, but indeed much more, for it goes without saying that the above figures are based on below-the-average expenditures.

I am interested in the A.A.A. Association. Without obligation on my part, please send your representative.

Advertising for the Merchant of To-Day

conducted by
HAROLD S. EDGAR

We stated in a previous article that the second duty of a store front was to display merchandise. So much can be written about this that we can only take up a few of the points in our little chat this week.

The records of sales made through the effective use of display windows are astonishing, and are too valuable a part of any store to be overlooked. A properly kept window in a small town can be just as much a sales producer as its big brother in the larger city.

Many merchants' windows are still only performing their ancient duty of admitting light to the front of the store (and even that inefficiently) or are being used to store piles of boxes or packages. Thus a valuable advertising medium is being allowed to slip through their fingers.

The first item to consider is construction. Are your windows properly built? Some details, of course, depend on the size of the store and on the type of business. If the articles to be displayed are of average size, the floor of the window should be about two feet below eye level. This floor should be level and the effect of built up displays obtained by the use of various accessories which will be dealt with in a future article.

Below this floor level you may have a basement window, which can be used with profit for additional display. If there is no window there now you could easily make one by cutting into the panel below the main window. A small display window can be built here, as shown in the sketch above, and with the proper illumination it will attract a lot of attention.

Or perhaps your windows are very high. Here is an opportunity for a further advertising effort. People walking along the opposite side of the street cannot see into your display windows if there is a car parked in front of your store. But if you build a double decked window as shown in the sketch at the top of this article, you can use the top section to display items which can be seen from across the street.

A well illuminated window attracts people. A well lighted window is a prominent feature of any street at night. Particular care must be taken in the selection and location of the proper method of lighting windows is to conceal the lamps in reflectors at the top of the windows. Well mirrored reflectors should be used to get the greatest reflection possible. Conceal reflectors from view outside the line of vision. In building a new window, reflectors can be set in the ceiling so that the bottom of the reflector is flush with the ceiling. Or a valance across the top of the glass will conceal the lighting source from the customer standing outside the window. This valance may be a painted strip across the glass and this space can be used to good advantage for a sign lettered on the glass.

The lighting unit is generally placed just inside the glass about seven feet from the base. A light suspended in the window is very satisfactory. Lighting units should not be allowed to become dingy, but should be cleaned with soap and water every month. It is unwise to pay for light you do not get. Neither is it economical to use lamps that have lost their effectiveness. They should be replaced. A dirty, smoked, bluish looking lamp, while it may still burn, uses more current and gives less light than an efficient one.

Proper lighting is one of the most important factors in making our modern store attractive—the kind of store that people will like to buy in—and the kind of store that will make money for the owner.

Grippe has been notably prevalent during the past few weeks. The overdue snow-flurries and changeable weather are more typical of March than April. The elements however cause us no surprise, for the whole season has run at variance with custom and human expectations.

provinces have it. Why don't they do something to prove they really deserve it? I regret to say that education in the rural districts is sadly neglected. Let the women do more for education and then they should demand the vote.

"How does the newspaper of today compare with that of fifty years ago?"

Mrs. Massiah smiled, "That's hardly a fair question. Perhaps I'm a bit biased, but it seems to me there was more solid matter in the papers of long ago. Newspapers and magazines of today carry such a lot of silly stuff. Sometimes I think the standard of thought has been lowered. It's like comparing jazz to classical music, but I may be wrong. I hope I am."

No interview with a lady who was "young" a good many years ago seems to be complete without asking, "What do you think of the younger generation?" So the reporter ventured that question.

"I have little to say about that. Young girls didn't drink or smoke when I was young, but I don't doubt that though their manners are different the youngsters of today will make as good citizens as we did and they undoubtedly make the best of mothers. They seem to study their children's health so carefully." Incidentally, Mrs. Massiah managed to raise a family here in Lachute, as well as attend to her work.

"There is one thing I'd like to be quoted on and that is the St. Lawrence Waterways scheme. I'm dead set against it and principally because it would leave us without protection on our boundary line. Our railways would undoubtedly suffer and our chief line of defense would be gone. Canada cannot afford to allow this."

Mrs. Massiah has made a host of friends in and around Lachute, during her long residence and association with these parts. Her name and articles from her pen have appeared frequently in the columns of The Watchman and we are proudly confident that she has a soft spot in her heart for this town and a more-than-passing interest in its newspapers, since she took active editorial hand in one of its earliest publications, The Independent.

Mrs. Massiah is presently, perhaps, best known for her active interest in community welfare efforts, and her old friends of Lachute, together with The Watchman, unite in their hearty congratulations on her birthday and their sincere wishes for her future years.

Town Locals

BOOK CHILDREN

I heard an author who writes books for teen-age girls talk about her books. Someone asked her if it was not hard to manage the children in her books. Her reply was that it was not nearly as hard to manage her book-children as it was to manage her real children. She could decide what was best for her book-children and then could make them do it. But when it came to her family, that was another matter. She could decide what was best for them to do, but how to get them to do it? Most of us with children know the exasperation of coming up against a stone-wall of actual opposition or, what is perhaps more maddening, indifference, when nothing we say really penetrates. We can console ourselves with the thought that if our children were soft as putty and we were able to mould them at will, that they would not have sufficient independence for their own good.

POTATOES

Potatoes are one of the most important foods. Important, because most of us eat them at least once a day. If they are so generally used there must be a reason for it. So let us go on a hunt for them. What the oatmeal is to the Scotch, so is the potato to the Irish. Many of them live for considerable stretches of time on potatoes and milk, chiefly. In order to do this, we realize that potatoes must have considerable food value.

Potatoes consist chiefly of carbohydrates, that is sugar and starches, and because of this they are good energy providers. They contain some protein. Vegetables as a class contain very little protein and are of little value to build up the tissues or for growth. The potato is an exception as it contains a small quantity of protein. Vegetable proteins are often of no biological value—that is they cannot be assimilated by the system. Potatoes however provide protein which can be used, even though the quantity is small.

We must have minerals and vitamins in our foods and the potato provides both these in considerable quantities. It contains both vitamins A and B.

Potatoes have a reputation for making people fat. They are fattening if eaten in large quantities, but are better than white bread. Weight for weight they are less fattening than bread. White bread has lost all its minerals and vitamins but potatoes contain them. They satisfy, that is they stick to the ribs, longer than white bread. This is an important point when considering a reducing diet. When eaten with meat they add to the satisfying value of the meat.

The largest proportion of minerals lies near the skin and as a result is very often wasted. Boiling dissolves some more of them and they go down the sink instead of into our tummies. Baking, of course, is the best way to cook potatoes. Do you ever use the liquid in which the potatoes are boiled? If you have a soup kettle going be sure and add the potato water. Have you ever tried adding this water to your gravy? It improves the flavor and is more nutritious. Some of the bad name that potatoes get for fattening is due to the fact that they are often smothered in gravy or eaten with lots of butter, both of which are fattening. Potato parings may be added to soup stock.

Potatoes cooked in milk are an excellent food for children. I always have a feeling of satisfaction when I am getting scalloped potatoes ready. Lots of milk and butter added to the potatoes make a good nourishing dish. Cheese added to scalloped or creamed potatoes makes a good supper dish.

To my way of thinking scalloped potatoes are nicer when made without flour. If they are cooked in a hot oven the milk will be absorbed and no flour will be necessary to prevent them from being juicy. When the oven is hot enough, the potatoes invariably boil over and the oven smells to high heaven. After years of dumpy putting up with this, and having to clean the oven, I decided there must be some way to prevent it. There is. It is so simple that I am disgusted with my dumbness in not thinking of it long before. I put a drip pan containing a little water in the bottom of the oven and put the potato dish on the grate. Any milk that boils over goes in the water in the pan and there is no smell, nor dirty oven to clean up afterward.

Some of us are trying to fatten one member of the family and reduce another on the same menus. Salads are good for everyone, but specially good for the reducers to fill up on. Here is one of my little tricks. I add a good generous portion of potato salad to the leafy salad for the thin ones and make the fat ones do without. A little chopped cucumber pickle or gherkin is one of the best ways to add flavour to the rather insipid potato salad.

POTATO ROLLS

Season mashed potatoes with a little scraped onion & a pinch or two of thyme. Add a beaten egg and mix. Make in small cylinder-shaped rolls, flattening the ends by hitting them gently on the table. Roll in fine bread crumbs. Place in a buttered baking dish and bake in a moderate oven for one-half hour.

POTATO CHEESE PUFF

1/2 cup milk
1/4 lb. grated cheese
2 egg whites
3 tablespoons butter
2 egg yolks
3 cups mashed potatoes
Salt and pepper

Heat milk in double boiler. Add cheese and butter and stir until dissolved. Beat the egg yolks with a small amount of milk and add to milk and cheese. Add these to mashed potatoes & whip until light and fluffy. Add beaten egg whites. Pile roughly in a buttered baking dish and sprinkle lightly with cheese. Bake in a hot oven of 400 degrees for 25 minutes.

SCOUTS NEWS

By provincial order-in-council the Scouts of Saskatoon have been given a long lease on an 118 acre camp site on the South Saskatchewan river.

N. S. Scouts Plant 80,000 Trees
As reported by Provincial Chief Forester Schierbeck, Nova Scotian Boy Scouts in 1931 planted 80,000 trees in Scout reforestation areas in various parts of the province.

A Good Turn in Ham and Eggs

Close to 900 dozen eggs were collected as their Special Easter Relief good turn by the Scouts of St. Johns district, Que and distributed on a basis of 6 eggs per person to needy families. Eight hams also were distributed, and other foodstuffs. Scouts in other places put on similar Easter Relief campaigns.

New Prairie Pheasants Thrive

That the Mongolian and Ring-necked pheasants distributed in southern Alberta are thriving is indicated by reports made by hiking Calgary Scouts to the Fish and Game Association. Most of the reports note the birds as in fine condition, and apparently finding suitable food in the kink-kink and juniper berries and grain picked up in stubble fields.

Hospital Operation Removes Gloom

A new and successful operation for the removal of gloom was recently performed at the Red Cross Children's Hospital, Calgary. No anaesthetic was used. The patient, in a sun-treatment loincloth, was placed in a circle of his fellows and received on his breast the ink-stamped outline of a wolf cub's head,—the emblem of the junior Boy Scouts, which he had just joined. There was nothing to which to pin the badge, hence the "tattooing." Scout units are now adjuncts of most of our children's hospitals, for the value of the cheery "scouting atmosphere."

Miss Ann Adam's Recipe for Bran Muffins

1/2 cup bran 1/4 cup sugar
1/4 cup flour 1/4 cup milk
1/2 teaspoon salt 1 egg
3 teaspoons Magic Baking Powder 1/4 cup melted shortening

Mix the bran with the sifted fine dry ingredients. Make a well in the centre and pour in the milk and well-beaten egg. With the fewest possible number of strokes, blend these ingredients and stir in the shortening. Half fill greased muffin pans and bake in a hot oven 400° F., 15 to 20 minutes. A few chopped dates, lightly coated with some of the measured flour, may be added.

Miss Ann Adam bakes her famous Muffins with Magic Baking Powder

"When selecting ingredients for my recipes," says Miss Ann Adam, cookery authority of the Canadian Home Journal, "I consider three points—economy, health value, and successful performance."

"Magic Baking Powder meets them all. I use and approve Magic, because I know it is pure, and free from harmful ingredients, and because experience has taught me that I can count upon successful results with Magic every time."

Magic Baking Powder is used exclusively by the majority of cookery experts, dietitians, and housewives throughout Canada. In fact, Magic outsells all other baking powders combined!

FREE COOK BOOK—When you take at home, the new Magic Cook Book will give you dozens of recipes for delicious baked goods. Write to Standard Brands Ltd., Fraser Ave. and Liberty St., Toronto, Ont.

THE MASTER MIND

Novelized by Marvin Dana, Author of "Within the Law," From the Successful Play by Daniel D. Carter

What do you want to know?
Andrew again interrupted, very blandly now:
"You wish to know about the money, perhaps?"
"About the money?" Wainwright repeated.
The wife hesitated.
"It was for Jim," she said feebly, for the soul of her revolted almost beyond endurance. "It was for him—Creegan. Oh, you've been good to me in your way, Cortland. But your way isn't my way, and—and now it's over."

Wainwright spoke with an infection of half amused tolerance:
"You are making it very easy for me to let you go. Do you know that?"

The wife blanched.
"And why not?" she responded, with an effort toward brazen assurance. "Haven't you heard what Mr. Andrew said? And, now?" Her voice was tremulous, then broken with the burden of feeling. Yet she finished bravely. "And now I'm off."

Andrew added his word of corroboration, with a certain dreadful, mirthless jocoseness:
"Yes, the game's over!"

Wainwright was contemplating his wife with a strange intenseness. He approached her closely and spoke in a voice that seemed pleasant to her control.
"I see," he said slowly. "When do you wish to go?"

The answer came in a great gasp of despair:
"Now—at once!"

Of a sudden some delicate phase of expression in the beautiful face before him caught the attention of Wainwright, diverted it to a new understanding not complete yet, but enough for guidance in this time of crisis.

"I see," he said softly. "But, Lucene, you've overlooked one rather important thing."
His wife stared at him uncomprehendingly.

"Have I?" she questioned mechanically.
"Yes," Wainwright answered. "Of course, I dare say, it's a matter really of no moment to any one except myself. But the fact is you've made me love you."

There came from the girl a tiny burst of sound, indeterminate, yet fraught with emotion. The husband continued with a curious severity of expression:
"You had forgotten that?"

"The wife gasped. Her color flowed to and fro in her face, so that she was pallid and fevered in the same instant."

"No, no!" she breathed.
"But—hadn't you?" Wainwright persisted. "Hadn't you forgotten, too, how you feel toward me?"

Lucene shuddered visibly. But her resolve of martyrdom, formed under the specious arguments of Andrew, still held. She would not yield to the love light in her husband's eyes—the enveloping caress in his voice.

"No, no!" she cried, with a hysterical vehemence. "Don't you see? That was all a part of the game—my—"

Wainwright smiled inscrutably. Something in the manner of his wife was convincing toward comfort.
"Oh, yes, to be sure!" he said smoothly. "All a part of the game! And that—that is—"

Lucene faltered, shrank, could not meet his searching eyes.
"That," she said despairingly—"that is—"

Wainwright went slowly toward his wife. There was something compelling in his aspect, something that beat upon her heart and bent it to his will, despite her struggle against him. Blindly she saw an imperative gesture from Andrew, bidding her go. She gave no heed to it. Her whole soul was absorbed by the man she loved, who came close to her, and looked down on her with eyes that searched within the innermost recesses of her soul.

"Look at me!" he commanded. She made no answer; only stood downcast before him, tremulous, longing, fearfully reluctant. "Look at me!" Again the command smote her, moved her strangely to obedience, despite everything.

"Lucene!" Once again, his voice was wholly masterful. "Look at me!" Then, at last, she yielded her eyes to his, and the piteous sacrifice in those depths taught him something of the ghastly truth that lay beneath her surface reluctance.

He went to the door leading into the hall and called sharply:
"Marshall, Marshall!" There came an indeterminate sound that he translated into an answer. "Bring Creegan here!" was his command.

A moment later the detective appeared with a manacled thief at his side.

"Take off the handcuffs," Wainwright directed briskly.
After one glance at the set face Marshall obeyed the order. Then Wainwright spoke again, to the prisoner:

"Creegan, my wife tells me that she and you had planned to go away together."

"That's right, gov'nor," Wainwright turned his eyes full on his wife, and spoke easily, almost lachrymally:

"Well, here she is, Creegan. Take her—"

The thief stared wonderingly. "Sure—sure!" he exclaimed.

Wainwright nodded toward Creegan and then looked toward his wife.

"Come, come!" he exhorted. "There's your man. Take him and be off." He went to her, took her hand, drew her forward, and placed her hand in that of the thief, holding the two together. The touch of the ruffian's hand on hers broke the bonds of her self control. She drew away with a shrill cry of horror.

"No, no, no!" she repeated fiercely. "I can't, I can't, I can't!"

"Lucene!" Wainwright's voice was surcharged with tenderness. But the woman was become genuine now—self sacrifice forgotten under the driving of natural repulsion.

"Oh," she cried despairingly. "I'll go; yes, I will go! But not with him—not with him! Oh, I couldn't; no, I couldn't! I'd—I'd kill myself first!"

Suddenly a smile curved the lips of Wainwright.

"I thought so!" Without any haste he turned to Marshall. "Take him away!" he directed, with a curt nod toward the thief.

"I'll keep him safe, no fear!" the detective joined.

But Wainwright shook his head. "No, not that," he commanded. "Turn him loose—let him go!"

As the two disappeared Lucene uttered a broken cry and sank to the floor, huddling in helpless weakness. As she fell Wainwright leaped to her, caught her in his arms, drew her to his breast.

"Oh, my dear—my dear!" he said tremulously. "I knew it! Yes, I knew it!"

Then presently there came a whisper from the wife, a merest breath of sound, which told him loudly of her truth:

"Oh, Cortland, but I meant to go!"

For the time being Wainwright felt himself the conqueror. He understood in some measure the device by which the Master Mind had plotted to make Lucene the instrument of his vengeance. He turned to Andrew with a smile of exultation at the utter discomfiture, as he deemed it, of his ingenious foe.

"I shall dismiss you now, Andrew," he said, rather superciliously.
The Master Mind, however, showed no trace of the humility of defeat.

"You are to learn, Mr. Wainwright, that I am not quite so easily dismissed."

Wainwright frowned disdainfully. "What do you mean?" he demanded. "What has passed?" Andrew remarked, "is merely an incident. Now we come at last to the real issue between us."

Wainwright was plainly perplexed. "The real issue?" he repeated.
Andrew's eyes flashed ominously and in his utterance had a new toxic quality.

"Do you suppose that, after four years of careful planning, I would place the issue in the hands of a mere child?"

"Yet it would seem that you did commit just that folly."

"Not so!" Andrew's denial was spoken with angry vehemence. "I have my chief resource against you still in readiness, and I shall employ it. Listen, sir! You aspire to high office, Mr. Wainwright. The opposition to you is strong, and it is unscrupulous. You have threatened the corporations. They know what to expect from you. Now, if in the newspapers were to appear the story of certain peculiar talents of your wife's relatives, together with a sketch of your wife's life—"

"My wife's relatives!" Wainwright exclaimed.

It was Lucene who seized the opportunity for explanation. Little by little, now that the period of most frightful stress was past, she had been gathering some idea of the truth as to the manner in which she had served the vindictive spirit of the man whom hitherto she had regarded with a reverential gratitude. Though the whole matter was not yet clear to her by any means, she nevertheless perceived beyond the shadow of doubt that Andrew hated her husband and that he had maneuvered elaborately for revenge, and that she had been entrapped by his wiles into the playing of a part against the man she loved. There was to her a wonderful comfort now in the fact that her husband had remained convinced of her faithfulness despite all appearance of evil. That he still loved her she knew, and the knowledge revived her spirit to revolt against the monstrous pretense induced by Andrew. She felt that now, at last, there was indeed an end to hypocrites between her and her husband. The secrecy and deceit of the past had been punished enough already, perhaps, in the misery of the present. For the future there should be only truth between them. The love of the man, she had learned, was big enough to forgive the wrong she had done him out of girlish weakness, treacherously beguiled by the deft leadings of one whom she esteemed as her kindly guardian. So at Wainwright's bewildered exclamation, she cried out eagerly:

"Oh, let me be the one to tell you, Cortland. Please—please!" She clung to him in tender beseeching and felt a new strength from the fond glance of his eyes. "Yes," she went on, with a catch of her breath, "it's all true about me. I did wrong—oh, horribly wrong! I know now. My conscience told me the truth always, but I fought against it because he said I must. I let you think my name was Lucene Blount and that all these awful people were my relatives. Mr. Andrew said that it was the only way. I let him guide me. I honored him and loved him for all he had done for me, and I was sure that what he told me must be right, even when it seemed wrong to me."

me. Of a sudden her face whitened, and the mouth drooped in fear. "Oh, I'm afraid I can't make you see, and, if I can't I shall die. You know, Cortland, I trusted him. Why, he has been like father and mother to me. And then he said he'd bring me the man I loved and explained that all this fraud about my life and relatives was the only way. He said, if you knew I was a poor girl with a bad record you never would care for me. And, because I longed so for you I let myself be persuaded and did everything as he bade me."

"I shall dismiss you now, Andrew," he said, rather superciliously.

"Of course, dear, I see! But these persons—who are they, really, then?"

Andrew interrupted, with a gibing infection in his question:
"Perhaps you still fancy that the Blounts are actually relatives of your wife?"

"Why should I not?" Wainwright retorted.
"Your reputed brother-in-law, Walter Blount," Andrew explained, with evident relish. "Is William Blount, alias Diamond Willie. Your reputed mother-in-law is Milwaukee Sadie, an ex-shoplifter. I may add incidentally that there are indictments out against her in Chicago in connection with the white slave traffic."

"It seems to me," Wainwright objected, "that you are talking nonsense. I myself have talked with persons who know the Blounts perfectly well."

"Those individuals were from Laramie," Andrew replied. "They have known the Blounts, so called, for the last four years in Laramie. During that period of time the Blounts have in fact lived respectably out there on the proceeds of their crimes."

Curiosity prompted Wainwright's next question:
"And my father-in-law?"

"He is Henry Morgan, alias Black Hank, a crackman wanted in three cities," abruptly Andrew's face took on its most malignant aspect. "And now," he said, with savage emphasis, "your wife!"

Wainwright stiffened himself. "Well?" he inquired quietly.
"Your wife, Mr. Wainwright," Andrew declared, with unconcealed exultation. "Is Maggie Flint. That is her real name. She has been convicted of theft—served time. She was, however, a first offender and was soon freed by influence under a suspended sentence. You will find the facts duly set forth in the criminal records of Chicago."

Now, again, Lucene broke in on the conversation. Her musical voice was harsh, high pitched, from anxiety.
"But I was innocent!" she cried to her husband. And then to Andrew: "You know I was! Say it!"

"Yes," Andrew admitted without the least reluctance; "that is true. You were innocent."

Wainwright's professional caution compelled a question.
"How can you know that?"

Andrew smiled cruelly. He spoke in a tone of placid contentment.
"Why, as to that, it was necessary according to my purpose for her to have a record. I therefore arranged to give her one."

For a few moments Wainwright was filled with fury over this revelation of heartless cruelty against the woman he loved. He looked down again at Lucene and saw that she was staring at Andrew with distended eyes.

"You didn't know?" the husband questioned.
"No, no!" the wife panted. "Why, it is horrible! All that frightful misery—and he did it—and I—I loved him!"

Andrew's face grew tense under the denunciation, and his eyes fell for the first time. But he lifted them resolutely to meet Wainwright's as the latter spoke in crisp interrogation:
"Well, then, just what is your purpose?"

"You are a candidate for governor, but tomorrow will witness your formal retirement from public life forever!"

"You are mad!" Wainwright exclaimed contemptuously.

"I shall dismiss you now, Andrew."

me. I never dreamed that he was your enemy—never! Oh, Cortland, say that you see! Say it!"

"Poor child!" Wainwright murmured. "Of course, dear, I see! But these persons—who are they, really, then?"

Andrew interrupted, with a gibing infection in his question:

HOW SIN BEGINS

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 2:15-17; 3:1-8.
GOLDEN TEXT—Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation; the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Garden God Planted.

JUNIOR TOPIC—How Sin Started.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Overcome Temptation.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Our Responsibility for Our Sins.

A look out upon the world proves that man is not what he should be. It is not reasonable to suppose that man is now what he was when he came from the hands of the Creator, much less an improvement. The only way of accounting for this is by the historic fall of man as given in the Bible.

I. Man's Probation (Gen. 2:15-17).

1. The place (v. 15). It was in the beautiful Garden of Eden. Man's environment was suited to his nature.

2. The necessity (v. 16). This grows out of man's constitution. Adam was created with the possibility of character, but not with character. Alternative choice makes character possible. Freewill was what made Adam a real man.

3. The means (v. 17). It was most simple, just one prohibition. The tree of the knowledge of good and evil was forbidden. Alongside of this small restriction was placed a large privilege—the tree of life.

II. Man's Temptation (3:1-5).

1. The method (vv. 1-5). Satan, a personal, malicious being, appeared in the guise of a serpent. Notwithstanding the growing unpopularity of the doctrine, the fact remains that there is a personal devil. This is proven both by the Scriptures and experience. He did not appeal directly to the man. He chose to appeal to the woman through the serpent, and through the woman to the man.

a. He found the woman while alone.

b. He insinuated doubt into Eve's mind as to God's word and love. This is his method today. He tries to get people to doubt God's Word and then to doubt his goodness. He persuaded Eve that God was withholding from her something that was good. He today induces men to say that God is cruel, harsh, and unjust. He gets young people to think that father and mother are too exacting. As soon as one doubts God's word, he begins to criticize it and to disobey it.

c. To get Eve to doubt the penalty of sin. There is much flippant jesting about eternal punishment. Be it remembered, however, that this does not change its reality.

d. He appealed to innocent appetite. He argued that there would be no harm in eating, but great advantage.

e. Eve gazed upon that which God had forbidden and lusted after it.

2. The fall (vv. 6-8). The steps in the fall seem to have been rapid. From doubting God's love, Eve went to doubting his word. From gazing upon and lusting after that which God had prohibited, there was but a short step to indulgence. Eve not only disobeyed, but involved Adam in her sin.

III. Man's Judgment (vv. 9-24).

God's holy nature is such that when men sin he at once manifests himself. God called Adam and Eve to account the same day.

1. A disturbed relationship with God (v. 8). The introduction of sin marred man's familiar intercourse with the Almighty. Adam and Eve not only hid from God's presence, but when summoned by him began to make excuse and Adam even laid the blame on God.

2. The degradation of the serpent (v. 14). He henceforth became the type of sin and Satan (Num. 21:9; John 3:14; Rev. 12:9).

3. The undying enmity between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent (v. 15). This bitter enmity has continued from that day to this.

4. The ultimate victory of the woman's seed (v. 15). Satan's seed has harassed the woman's seed through the centuries, but on the cross the final stroke was made which crushed his head (John 12:31; Heb. 2:14; 1 John 3:8). This is the first gleam of the glorious gospel of Christ.

5. The judgment upon the woman (v. 16). This relates primarily to her as a wife and mother.

6. Man's new relationship to the earth (vv. 17-19). The earth was cursed on his account.

7. Death (v. 19). This includes spiritual and physical death.

8. Expulsion from the garden (v. 24). When man's nature was changed by sin, out from the beautiful garden he must go.

RANDOM SAYINGS

Apparent need is not always real need. He is our best friend who helps our real need.

It is a higher exhibition of Christian manliness to be able to bear trouble than to get rid of it.

If you have something good to say to a man better look him up and say it now. He won't be able to read his tombstone when he's dead.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE LESSON-SERMON

In all Christian Science services Sunday April 10, the subject of the Lesson-Sermon is "Are sin, disease and death real?"

Golden Text (Psalms 68: 20): "He that is the God of Salvation and unto God the Lord belong the issues from death."

The following passages are among the scriptural citations comprising the Lesson-Sermon: Romans 8: 2, 31: "For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death," and "What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us who can be against us?" Also from Psalms 119, 68: "Thou art good and doest good."

Among correlative statements from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, included in the Lesson-Sermon, are: "Do not believe in any supposed necessity for sin, disease or death."

Mr. and Mrs. Archie Hamilton were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Jos. A. Seale on Sunday last.

Chester Pollock has received the Contract to operate Mail Route No. 1 for the next four years.

Mr. Abe Stapleton commenced on April First to drive the mail from Piedmont, three times a week.

The saw-mill started up for a few days on Monday, having still the soft wood to cut, and quite a few railway ties on order.

The Bridge Club met at the home of Mrs. H. Paquette, on Wednesday night. Mrs. Greene and Mr. Paquette were the prize winners.

Mr. Jack McCullough and Mr. Thomas McCullough, who have been confined to the house with the grippe, are sufficiently recovered to be out again.

A meeting of the Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. J. E. Seale on Tuesday, with twenty ladies present. Mrs. R. J. Ivall gave a splendid paper on Canadianization and National Events also a paper on Canadian Industries, which were enjoyed by all present.

On Friday, April 1st., the Women's Institute Members held a social evening at the home of Mrs. R. Kennedy, to which they invited husbands and a number of friends. Games were played in which everyone joined heartily; also the singing of several old songs. Afterwards refreshments were served. A very enjoyable evening was reported by all present.

ST. PHILIPPE

Hello "Montreal" !!!
Is our little corner really so interesting that you missed us when we were gone?

The moving season has begun already, as Mr. Fred. Desforages and family are moving to Grenville. We are sorry to lose them and wish them success in their new home.

The new butcher, Mr. M. Guay, has arrived in town and reports good business.

Many of our residents are suffering recently with "La Grippe." We are pleased to learn that Mrs. J. Patton has recovered, but Miss Margaret Byrnes is still on the sick list.

Mr. Omer Desforages of Grenville spent Sunday with friends here.

Death has again claimed one of our young men in the person of Mr. William Aubin, who passed away at the early age of 33 years. The funeral service was held on Monday morning in St. Philippe Church.

Messrs Fred and Albt. Brown spent Sunday with friends in Brownsburg.

The friends of Mr. and Mrs. John Bradford extend their very sincere sympathy to them in their recent sad bereavement.

School Extension: The people of Lachute Mills have long wanted a school, and the Commissioners at their last meeting granted the privilege of a school which will be opened at once.

Efforts are being made to have the Wentworth railroad branch tap the Main Line at Lachute, and if our public men would bestir themselves this might be done, as it is the shortest and most easily built line.

It is said that nearly 100 Argenteuil men were summoned to St. Scholastique last week to attend to road prosecutions before the Court there.

Mr. Marcott, who purchased the Hotel property now occupied by Mr. Marvil, at Lachute Mills, has given a contract for building a large three storey brick building. Mr. Noe Larose is the contractor.

One thing our Local Legislators unanimously agree upon, eliciting no debate or division—that is their voting $10,000 to pay themselves for services while attending Parliament.

The new Victoria Foundry at Lachute Mills is being rapidly put up, and extends 75 ft. along John Street by 48 feet towards the river. The situation and appearance of this building will add considerable interest to the place.

The services held in Olivet Hall every Sunday by the Primitive Methodists are largely and enthusiastically attended.

A party of capitalists, farmers, and others sailed in the steamship Circassian from New York en route to Winnipeg, Manitoba. Their total capital is estimated at $125,000. The general impression is that not less than 100,000 people will find their way to Manitoba and the North West this year.

....A case before the court at St. Scholastique for forty-five cents, is said to have cost some $400 and is not settled yet.

It is said that the trade in Petroleum stands a chance of a great increase by the not improbable adoption of that article as fuel for railway engines. A train was lately run on the Long Island Railway with petroleum as fuel at a saving of 2-fifths of the cost of coal; but we imagine it will burn out the engines much quicker than wood fuel.

BROWNSBURG

Mrs. W. White and son Alex. spent a few days in Montreal last week.

Mrs. John Turney is quite ill, a victim of the Grippe. Mrs. T. Anderson is also on the sick list.

With the recent fine, sunny weather some very fine syrup has been made.

Mr. Wesley Doran of Brownsburg, will soon have the pleasure of being joined by his brother George for some time, as he has been fortunate in securing work at the plant.

Several friends of Mrs. Enlow gathered at her mother's home recently to celebrate her birthday, an enjoyable evening being spent.

The many friends of Mrs. R. Moore are pleased that she has returned home from hospital, and is on the road to recovery.

25 Years Ago

Friday, April 12, 1907.

Mrs. Harlow Giles spent the Easter Holidays in Ottawa.

Mr. Archie McGibbon has moved to his beautiful new residence on Millway Street.

Messrs T. McQuat & Son have moved their hardware store to their new and commodious building across Fish's Bridge.

The many friends of Miss K. MacGibbon of Paisley, Ont., will be pleased to welcome her return to town. She is at present the guest of her sister Mrs. Palliser.

The new steel bridge over the West River, erected by Mr. Beauchemin of St. Jerome, was opened to the public on Saturday. The bridge was put to the test by a strain of something over twenty tons. Most of the councillors and a number of our townsmen were present to witness the event.

On Saturday evening Mr. Wm. Hinton (an old Lachute boy) gave a pleasant evening's amusement in Victoria Hall with his Kinetoscope. The entertainment was high class in every respect, the Destruction of San Francisco, which portrays the sad havoc wrought by fire and earthquake, being especially interesting. There were other pictures including "The Lost Child" and "The Life of an American Fireman."

Mr. Geo. E. Bampton, K.C., presided over a concert last Friday in the interests of Lachute Hockey Club. The programme featured a song "Asleep in the Deep" by Fred J. Walland. Miss Violet Kennedy gave an excellent description of "A Yankee in Love," followed by "My Ain Folk," song by Mr. J. W. Raitt. Mr. Chas. McBurney, Principal of the Academy then gave one of Drummond's best selections, "De Stove-Pipe Hole"; Mr. C. Sheppard of Montreal, performed tricks of magic and mystery; and Miss Elise Palliser sang "Rags" in a very pretty manner repeating the last verse as an encore. This was followed by Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Giles giving "Sam and Tildy's Courtship."

A very pretty dialogue was rendered by Miss Winnie Riddell and Masters Harold McQuat and Robbie Giles, entitled "I want to go to Mauro," and an excellent Flag Drill was performed by the pupils of Miss Moore, namely the Misses E. Fraser, M. Slater, W. Riddell, N. Ivall, V. Kennedy, and Masters R. Giles, H. Giles, H. McIntyre, J. Calder and H. McQuat both numbers being greatly appreciated.

The inquisitive old lady turned to inspect the boy at her side and said: "Why is it you're not in school today?"

"Oh," he said, "I've got the measles."

Lachute Fair Directors Complete Arrangements for June Exhibition

Bumper Exhibition Assured for this Year

The directors of Lachute Fair met in the Town Hall on Saturday and had a busy afternoon. Owing to the Federal Government withholding its grants, in keeping with the general policy of curtailment during the present crisis, the directors set themselves the task of adjusting their budget to meet these conditions. In consequence the prizes are not quite as generous as those previously offered; but as they now stand, they are still quite attractive and offer good compensation for the keenest of rivalry.

One thing is certain; the directorate is fully decided on upholding the high standard of the Lachute Fair, and to this end the public may be assured that everything possible will be done and the same care exercised in putting on our 1932 Show.

Splendid Live-Stock exhibits including good harness horses, and fast racing each day; renowned Band of Montreal, excellent Grand-stand performance including fireworks display, and an enlarged Midway, are among the many attractions.

The ladies of the Red Cross have again consented to look after the Dining-room and Booths, which means much to the general success inasmuch as the public are assured of good meals well served, and at popular prices.

The prize lists are now in the hands of the printer and will shortly be mailed to members of the Society and those interested.

Canada Retains Hockey Championship

Toronto Team Upholds Tradition of Canadian Sport

Canadian sport fans are exultant over the Toronto Maple Leafs' capture of the World Hockey Title, in three straight victories over the New York Rangers. There was keen disappointment in this particular territory, as the two Montreal teams, Canadiens and Maroons, each dropped out of the contest for International Championship. But the Toronto team, rallying from a poor start early in the season to a brilliant continuance of hockey in the final series, staged a sweeping triumph over the American team, climaxed by Saturday's 6-4 victory which won them the coveted Stanley Cup.

The Maple Leafs' performance not only brings glory upon their own youthful line-up, but represents another triumph for Canadian hockey. Every patriotic hockey fan breathes a sigh of relief as the season ends, and pays tribute to the boys who upheld a national record and retained the emblem of world hockey championship for this Dominion.

Taffy parties are the order of the day, and one hears of many such, where the young and old enjoy the fun of sugaring the syrup, and the freely running sap heralds the approach at long last—of Spring. From reports we learn that there has been a good run and much syrup made. The process of gathering the sap every few hours from the pails hung on the maple trees, its passage to the camp and the period of boiling before it becomes syrup, are a process well known to every Canadian schoolchild. Although strangely, there has been little change in the method of obtaining the syrup from the time of the Indians, so historians state, it now ranks fairly high among the industries of this Province.

Cushing Suicide Victim Dies in Hospital

Tragedy at Cushing C.N.R. St'n.

In the early hours of Tuesday morning, a young man named Sidney Levy, aged 21, thought to have been despondent over his failure to find work, shot himself through the chest, in the C.N.R. depot at Cushing, where he had sought shelter. Levy had walked out from Montreal presumably to seek work, and was alone at the depot when the shot was fired.

The shot was not immediately fatal, and the tragic circumstance only became known when the victim, dragging himself to the residence of France Lafleur nearby, knocked and begged for water. He then collapsed on the floor, and Mr. Lafleur summoned neighbors to his assistance, notified the Chatham authorities and called a doctor.

Meanwhile, Mr. Leclaire, the station agent, opening the depot at 5 o'clock, had discovered Levy's coat, together with a Smith and Weston revolver.

The victim was shortly removed by automobile to the Notre Dame Hospital at Hawkesbury. When questioned he refused to give his name, but stated his mother was living in a small town in New York State. The doctors found that a bullet had perforated the left lung and passed through into his arm. In spite of every effort to save his life, Levy expired at five o'clock in the afternoon without giving any further information.

Hospital officials, however, found papers which led them to telegraph to the young man's relatives, resident in N. Y. The body was returned to Cushing, where an inquest under Coroner B. N. Wales on Wednesday morning resulted in the verdict of Suicide. The remains were afterwards taken to the undertakers' parlors in Hawkesbury.

PEOPLE IGNORE THE BRIGHT SPOTS

It is curious how people look on the dark side of things and ignore the bright spots in the news. Consider these items in the papers:

1. In 1931, Canada, in the matter of export trade, moved into fifth position among the nations of the world, is exceeded in the field of exports by only Great Britain, United States, France and Germany.

3. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics estimated that Canada's national wealth is now in the neighborhood of $30,840,000,000, with British and foreign investments in the country representing only slightly more than 20 per cent. of this amount.

Truly, as the Ottawa Journal comments, the gale seems to be abating. If the newspapers are carefully read it will be found that there is little justification for much of the gloomy talk people seem to delight in.

A Bankrupt City

The following scathing review of the financial position of Chicago is from a London journal: "Chicago is in the position of some Balkan village. Her school teachers have had no pay for nine months. Her debt is $60,000,000 and the mayor is trying to get the well-to-do citizens to subsidize the city. Schools are closing and as a last touch of tragic farce, the parents are told that their children can get their education from American broadcasting.

"While Big Bill Thompson was insulting King George and burning British classics, the important citizens of Chicago enjoyed the joke. There is nobody in Chicago now to make a joke about it, for the lesson is too plain that civic virtue is the foundation of fortune and success.

"We may not be as slick as they are in Chicago, but our rogues, at least have to be more clever than theirs."

Sir George Perley is Further Honored

Made Privy Councillor and Given Audience by King

Sir George Perley, our County member in Federal Parliament and Minister without Portfolio in the Canadian Government, was further honored, on Saturday of last week, in audience with King George at Windsor Castle. Sir George was sworn into the Imperial Privy Council, and will consequently fill an honored roll in affairs of Empire administration.

The personal friends and the constituents of Sir George, in this County of Argenteuil, rejoice in the honors deservedly accorded to him, through a record of unselfish and tireless devotion towards national progress and international well-being. His elevation to one of the highest positions of Empire statesmanship, now commands the keenest admiration for our esteemed representative.

Further Reductions for Milk Shippers

Local Dairymen Meet to Discuss Conditions

A meeting of Milk Shippers was held in town on Saturday evening to hear reports and discuss the milk situation for the coming summer. Mr. David Black was present and gave a timely report of conditions since the meeting held last fall.

The consensus of opinion, among those present, was that, in consideration of the cost of feed and the extra care required in handling of city milk, it should not be deemed necessary to make any reduction on the price, which was now altogether too low. However, a further meeting with the dealers in Montreal was held Monday, and after discussing the situation from every angle, the price of $1.35 per cwt. for 3.5 milk was finally agreed upon, but for no stated time, and it was understood with the dealers that the amount of surplus milk be cut down to the lowest point possible.

On the Price of Pork

Current Viewpoints on Government and the Agricultural Markets

An agriculturist from our district of Morin writes The Watchman, taking exception to a statement of Hon. H. H. Stevens quoted in these columns. The minister of Trade and Commerce reviewed the Government's problem of finding new avenues for Canadian products, and in the course of his comment, claimed that the Government's policy, including the minister's Produced in Canada campaign, "had accomplished much in the direction of assisting the Canadian farmer, by the huge increase of Canadian consumption of animal products, and by not only increasing Canadian exports to Great Britain, but other Empire countries as well."

It is not the purpose of this editorial to confirm the minister's claims; his original statement gives figures which prove conclusively that production and consumption of farm products have increased, to the benefit of agriculture collectively. One can, on the other hand, sympathize with our farmer correspondent, who points to the low price of his products as an indication of his waning prosperity. In reply, The Watchman publishes a communication from another practical member of the farming community, a letter written to the Cornwall Freeholder and appearing in its columns under the caption of The Bright Side of Farming. This opinion may reassure our agricultural reader of his own position, and its consolations, in this time of universal depression; it may also serve in part to exonerate the "present government" of blame for all our prevalent ills and ailments—blame which invariably falls upon the heads of Government.

The Bright Side of Farming

"From time to time in your paper, articles have been printed, calling attention to the dark side of farming and the farmer's sad lot. I notice no one has been bold enough to contradict or challenge these statements.

"I see in your recent issue an advertisement calling attention of the farmer to a book written by D. J. McIntosh, in which he is a modern Moses who is going to lead all who read into the promised land. As a farmer, I wish to ask these men a few questions.

"First. If farming and farmers are in such a sad state financially, how are they going to raise the price of the book? If, as they have been telling us for a year or so, we are down and out and can't pay, why are they so selfish as to charge for the good word? Why don't they publish it through the press or send their spokesmen through the country to preach the truth to those they have been so industriously stirring up to rebellion against laws, customs and institutions? We have had this trick played on us before, for whatever temporary and cheap popularity they may get out of it.

"Second. Do these men really believe what they preach, that farming is going to the dogs? What proof have they that such is the case? If this is so, why, I (as a farmer) would like to know. If these men were real farmers they would have enough in these strenuous times to occupy their time and talents at home, on their farms, I have my hands full doing just that. They wouldn't be going up and down the country finding fault and blaming the other fellow for their real or imaginary woes.

"Third. Why do they attack our fiscal system as being unsound and the real cause of some of the farmer's problems. of today, in principle and practice, our present system has proved the best in the world, although not entirely foolproof. The principal reason, for most individual farmers in the past few years, has been too much credit.

"Fourth. How are we farmers, being where we are, going to dodge our just share of taxes? Didn't we ask for and get this extra expenditure, wise or otherwise? Now that we are asked to pay, even if prices are low, is there any good reason why we should not pay, or try to pay? Or are we farmers a bunch of quitters, as these men are trying to lead us on to believe we are? Are we going to scrap everything and be held up before the next generation to scorn, because we laid down on the job?

"I, as a farmer, do not think so. I hope and know there are enough right-thinking men among us to see that this does not happen.

Auto Thieves Again Busy in Lachute

Car Taken from Private Garage

A Buick sedan, the property of Mr. Robt. McArthur, was stolen from the garage beside McArthur's Hall, in the early hours of Wednesday morning.

The theft was discovered on Wednesday, but there was no apparent clue as to the identity of the marauders. Evidence was later found, however, to indicate attempts had been made upon other cars in the neighborhood. Four or five private garages had been similarly broken into, but the visitors had met with difficulty, in starting these cars, and had moved on in search of another.

Mr. McArthur was unfortunate enough to own a car which presented no difficulties to the stranger, and although traffic authorities and provincial police were immediately notified, through Constable Gagné, there has been no trace found of the automobile.

Suspicion rests upon three transient visitors, to whom the hospitality of our Town Hall had been extended overnight, as has been customary through the cold season. These men left at 1.30 a.m., supposedly to "jump" the Ottawa-bound freight—according to information received by the town constable. It is thought however, they changed their minds and took the open highway in preference to the C.P.R., with result that one of our citizens is inconvenienced in the loss of his automobile.

JOHN BULL IS DRINKING LESS AND IS MORE HAPPILY MARRIED

Family Ties Strengthened and Annual Drink Bill in Old Land is Cut Almost in Half.

John Bull is both more happily married and drinking less.

Four thousand replies to 50,000 questionnaires issued by the London school of economics revealed many novels of real life. "One hardly ever gets any accounts of unhappy families except now and again from a widow or widower," said Sir William Beveridge, director of the school, reviewing the results.

"There has been a loosening of the family ties of authority—and a strengthening of the real tie," Sir William added.

And the annual review of the drink bill issued coincidentally by the United Kingdom Alliance shows the per capita expenditure on alcoholic liquors in 1931 was under £6—15 shillings, or $28 at par, and this was $22 per capita lower than in 1930.

Beer consumption dropped approximately 100,000,000 bulk gallons, although the reduced consumption of beer is attributed partially to the increase in the tax.

Masons Entertain

D.D.G.M. at Lachute Lodge

On Monday evening last, Argenteuil Lodge, No. 67, A.F. & A.M. held their regular monthly meeting and were honored by an official visit from the District Deputy Grand Master, R. W. Bro. F. F. Wells, of Temiscaming, Que. During the evening degree work was exemplified, in a very pleasing manner, and complimented on by the host.

Later, retirement was made to the banquet hall, where a dainty spread was prepared, and a most pleasant time spent, in listening to a very inspiring address by the D.D.G.M. A number of familiar and always welcome members of neighboring Lodges were also present. Several vocal selections were rendered and the meeting brought to a close by the singing of Auld Lang Syne and God Save the King.

The Rev. J. W. Silcox of Eden, Ontario, dies in his 87th. year

Was One of Pioneer Baptist Ministers of Western Ontario

The death occurred on Wednesday, April 6th., at his home in Eden, Ontario, of the Rev. J. W. Silcox, a former pastor of Lachute Baptist Church, whom many of our people will doubtless remember both as a citizen and minister.

At the age of 70 years Mr. Silcox retired from active work in the ministry. He is survived by his widow, one son, Roy, of the Hydro-Electric staff, Toronto, and his daughter, Miss Minnie, of New York City. The funeral services on Friday were held in Eden Baptist Church, conducted by Rev. Mr. Moore, the pastor, who at the time Mr. Silcox was here in Lachute was student-pastor at Dalesville. Among the many attending the funeral were Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Symonds, of St. Thomas, formerly of Lachute; and at the cemetery at Waterford, Dr. Jno. Calder, of Brantford, also formerly of Lachute, was among those who paid their last token of respect to this stalwart of the Baptist denomination.

Mr. Silcox had not been in robust health for some years, but nevertheless had exerted an active interest in the community where he passed his later years. A few days' illness of pneumonia, following an attack of bronchitis suffered in the early part of this year, was too great a strain for him to overcome, and he passed away on the 6th. inst. Mr. Silcox was born in Southwold Township, Elgin County, in 1846.

Women's Institute Group is Organized

A number of our town ladies invited Miss McCain, of Macdonald College, who is superintendent of Women's Institutes for Quebec, to meet with those who might be interested in the forming of an Institute for Lachute. About thirty ladies met with Miss McCain on April 7th. and were delighted with the possibilities which are opened to them through the Institute program. The result was with the unanimous consent of those present, a new institute was organized with the following officers:—President, Mrs. F. Brennan; 1st. Vice-President, Mrs. A. Bothwell; 2nd. Vice-President, Mrs. J. Mason; Secretary, Mrs. F. MacGibbon; Treasurer, Mrs. Robt. McFaul. The executive are anxious to have the program started as soon as possible and so invite all ladies of the town, interested in this work to meet in the Victoria Hall, on Friday, April 15th., to elect a convener for the various departments under which the work is operated.

CORRESPONDENCE

April 10th., 1932.

Mr. Editor:

Would you be after giving me a little space in your paper, to express my warm appreciation of the many kindly things that have been written, and said, to and about me.

It is true that Community Welfare has been my life aim, and I am fortunate enough to have lived to see some of the seeds I have sown in faith, grow up, and bear fruit. It is—

Together, together, marching along,
Shoulder to shoulder, steady and strong,
United and fearless, facing each foe,
Together, together, to victory we go.

Thank you all.

KATE S. MASSIAH.

THE CAPTAIN'S WEEKLY LETTER.

"SOAP"

Dear Boys:—

Here is a homely subject to talk about this week.

There are some of you who like SOAP and appreciate its good qualities while alas there are others (though I will admit that they are not possible readers of this letter) who, wretched little grubbers, dislike this article immensely. However, this may be, SOAP has many fine qualities and is well worthy of our consideration. Just think for a moment about the cleansing powers it possesses and what we would all be like if we could not find a piece of soap when we wanted it.

When I was living in Egypt, it became part of my duty to learn as far as I could the language of the Arabs, in order that I could converse with those with whom I came in contact.

My native servant, not understanding English and only knowing his own language of Arabic, I naturally endeavoured to make myself understood by speaking to him in his own tongue until one morning I needed a piece of SOAP; but though I looked up the dictionary to find this word, discovered that they had no use for the article. I went out to a store and bought some which I handed to him forgetting to say what it was for. An hour or two later, I returned and found that he had eaten it.

Naturally he was very upset but not more so than myself, as I had immediately to toil out in the burning sun in order to obtain a fresh supply. One good thing about this however, was the fact that though I had to lock up everything else that belonged to me, my SOAP for ever afterwards was very carefully left alone.

Still on the matter of SOAP, I am reminded of a well known picture which advertises this useful article. It is that of a baby having a bath and the SOAP is on the floor out of his reach which evidently makes him angry because we see from the picture he is crying and making no end of a bother. Underneath the artist has written, "He WON'T BE HAPPY TILL HE GETS IT."

Why have I taken this subject of SOAP for my letter this week? Well I paid a visit the other day to a house of a friend in which lived a boy—a very nice boy—of ten years of age. He had a wonderful home, good clothes, everything that could make a boy happy AND A DIRTY NECK.

I don't think I need say anything more, you can see if you are sensible, what I mean.

Your very affectionate friend,
THE CAPTAIN.

Continued

So it came about that Mr. Lawrence, while busily correcting the large number of exercise books belonging to his class, received a quite unexpected visitor. "It is very good of you to pay me this visit, Mrs. Sellingcourt," he said after being made aware of who it was who had broken in on his privacy, "what is it that I can do for you? Won't you sit down?"

Mrs. Sellingcourt complied, occupying the only really comfortable chair in the master's otherwise cosy little room. "I really came at my son's request," she said quickly, "because he was anxious for you to know he was coming back to school the day after to-morrow and he also wanted you to give him some lessons, if you will be so kind."

"That's really splendid news you have brought," was the kindly reply. "I think your boy is a splendid little chap and although he has not been with us very long, there is no one who will not be glad to see him back after his adventures. As regards his lessons, tell him not to worry about them until he really joins us. Judging by his intelligence, I am sure that he has not lost much by his absence."

Mrs. Sellingcourt looked pleased at this tribute to her son but felt that the hardest part of her visit was yet to be overcome.

"Mr. Lawrence," she said suddenly, "I want to ask you a question if I may," and then she hesitated hardly knowing how to go on.

A rather surprised look came on the master's face, but he answered courteously, "Certainly Mrs. Sellingcourt, what is it?"

"It's about Timothy," was the nervous response. "You know of course that he saved my son's life and for that very reason, he must naturally be very dear to me. You also know of course that he is in trouble."

A hard stern expression swept over the face of Mr. Lawrence, while the tone of his voice became much colder as he answered, "I know that Mrs. Sellingcourt. Timothy has no place either in my affection or respect. He performed an act altogether unworthy of the high tradition that we try to maintain here at St. Albyn's and while I will admit that he showed pluck in the saving of your boy's life, this does not and can not in my opinion condone so serious an offense of which I happen to know him guilty."

There was silence for a few minutes and then Mrs. Sellingcourt gently inquired, "Don't you think Mr. Lawrence, you are making a great mistake over Timothy by being just a little too hard on him? He does not seem to be the kind of boy to do an unworthy action. Have you ever tried to win his confidence?"

With an exclamation almost of impatience, the master pushed back his chair, rose and going over to the mantle-shelf took up his pipe.

"Let me tell you something," he said harshly. "When Timothy first came here, he was put under my care. I respected him, nay more than that, I liked him. I gave him of my best, working with him harder possibly than with any other boy and in return he robbed me. I do not expect or hope for such things as gratitude where boys are concerned but at least, I am entitled to have my property respected. As regarding winning his confidence, I have since his return here questioned him but he has as good as told me to mind my own business."

For the first time in the interview, Mrs. Sellingcourt felt inclined to smile for she could well imagine Timothy telling this hard, stern faced man to do just that very thing.

"You asked him to tell you his troubles didn't you?" asked Mrs. Sellingcourt.

"Yes!" was the reply "and that was when he said he had nothing to say."

"Well, he told me," answered Mrs. Sellingcourt happily.

"He told you," asked Mr. Lawrence amazed and astonished. "You don't mean to say he explained the reason he left?" I can hardly believe this is so."

"That is the case," retorted Mrs. Sellingcourt, "and my real reason for coming up this evening was to tell you so and to beg of you to not only forgive all that Timothy did, but to help him. I think that after you will permit me to do so, I will tell you all that happened."

Then Mr. Lawrence heard from one whom he had least expected to be in a position to give him the whole story of Timothy's distress and unhappiness.

By the time Mrs. Sellingcourt had finished, the sun had long set and the stars had already appeared in the sky and it was in the light of a full moon that Mrs. Sellingcourt walked on her return journey to the cottage where Eric was eagerly awaiting her.

For a little while she wondered if she had done Timothy any good and then with a sigh of relief remembered the warm pressure of Mr. Lawrence's hand in bidding her farewell and his parting words. "Thank you Mrs. Sellingcourt for all you have said. I can see things differently now and you may be assured that I will do all I can to help Timothy in the future."

Trudy's Teapot Tales

A very fat butcher stood outside his shop at the beginning of the street. His hands were clasped behind his back, and he was rocking idly back and forth on his heels, while flies buzzed busily about the meat on the marble slab. The procession saw him first and Danny and Pat endeavoured vainly to feel unconcerned at the prospect of an audience at last. The twins were quite unembarrassed, being too young to feel self-conscious, and Marjory-Ella drew a deep breath and showed her little white teeth in a fixed smile, in the manner of great personages she had seen on the "movies." She was just preparing to give a gracious bow when the cart drew abreast of the butcher's shop, and the fat man turned his head.

He gazed, unbelievably for a moment, then opened his mouth twice, gasped, and shut it again. Then he threw back his head, and burst into a loud guffaw, slapping his great thighs with his fat red hands. The smile froze on Marjory-Ella's face and Danny and Mickey dropped the cart-handles and looked as if they were going to bolt in sheer fright and leave the May Queen high and dry.

The fat man stopped laughing at last, to the children's intense relief, and ejaculated, his round face wreathed in smiles.

"Wall, I be jiggered." Then, "Hi, Martha, hi, quick!" he called, turning his back to the procession for a moment and looking into the back of the shop. Marjory-Ella took this opportunity to let her face relax, and had just prepared for a fresh effort when Martha, as fat as her husband, appeared, and waddled out to the door of the shop.

"Wall, now," she said, "and she rested her hands upon her ample hips and beamed on the children. Here was encouragement, and Danny left off kicking his feet in the dust and smiled shyly at Marjory-Ella. Marjory-Ella was just bowing regally to the butcher and his wife, her smile now in full force.

"A rare purty little gel," nodded the butcher. "Buy Empire Goods! Tehe, tehe, she's the goods, all right, ain't she, Martha?"

Marjory-Ella had not thought of the slogan on the cart being applied to her personally, so she smiled harder in an endeavour to appear unconcerned.

"Them boys look hot, Martha," went on the fat butcher. "Get 'em a drink, Martha."

Martha waddled off into the back regions of the shop and a few moments later all five children were gratefully gulping home-made lemonade. After shy thanks to the butcher and his wife they continued slowly up the village street, now bathed in the hot noon sun.

The butcher watched them depart with kindly interest. "Them two little 'uns is game, too," he remarked to Martha, as they saw the twins, now greatly refreshed, goose-stepping valiantly and holding their banner high.

As the procession proceeded "life awoke in the village. Wide-eyed children peeped over gates, while comments, complimentary and otherwise, passed from one aproned matron to another. A large black cat, sunning himself on a fence, jumped down in front of the cart, then turned away, tail in the air, and walked off disdainfully. It was with a breath of relief that Danny and Mickey turned a friendly corner, proceeded a few yards, and put down the cart-handles to mop their brows. Quite near, standing well back from the road, was the little grey church, and the only house near was the rectory. The two boys grasped the cart handles once more and stepped out bravely on the homeward journey, only to be confronted almost immediately by the village clergyman, who came out of the rectory gate, and peered at them shortsightedly.

WITH THE BOY SCOUTS

TORONTO'S MAYOR ON SCOUTING

"We would have fewer misfits in the world today if all boys had the advantage of Scout life," declared Mayor W. J. Stewart of Toronto recently. "The boy who has been a Scout becomes a man with definite, developed capabilities, who does not walk the streets looking for pick and shovel or routine office work." The mayor's son Billy is a Scout.

TORONTO SCOUTS BOOST ONTARIO APPLES

That the Boy Scouts of Toronto could do more in one day than the provincial department of agriculture could do in a month to make Toronto "Ontario apple conscious" was affirmed by Hon. Thomas L. Kennedy, provincial Minister of Agriculture. He referred to a Scout Apple Drive held April 1st., incidental to a district Scout financial campaign.

SLEEP OUT AND LIVE TO BE 100

Writing the Editor of "Camping" to deny a statement that he had given up sleeping out of doors, Lord Baden-Powell, world head of the Boy Scouts demands, "What has 'over 70' to do with it? I've learned wisdom in my 75 years, and that tells me that if everyone slept out we should all live to be 100 or more. But as this would overcrowd the clubs it is perhaps just as well that some should sleep in and die early—say at 90. But for me to sleep inside! Not if I know it!"

SCOUTS GOOD WORK AT SHANGHAI

Reports from Shanghai record work by Boy Scouts during the recent Sino-Japanese outbreak that reminds us of the siege of Mafeking, where the service idea of Scouting originated in 1900. The first call was for 12 Scout cyclists. Soon 90 boys were on duty in shifts at various relief headquarters and municipal bureaus of the international settlement, as messengers, guides, phone operators, hospital orderlies, etc. The boys came from troops of many nationalities, — British, French, German, American, Russian, Jewish.

"As a class and individually, in these difficult times, we farmers are a lot better off than other classes of misplaced humanity. Go into any town in this country and what do we find? First, large groups of idle men walking the streets; factories running on part time or closed altogether; merchants and business men at their 'wits' end to know how to get the wherewithal to keep going; municipal bodies harassed and driven to distraction by an increasing mob of unemployed, cold, hungry and growing desperate in their demands."

"This section of the society, this mob of misplaced humanity is our greatest problem, and when that problem is solved or partially disposed of, we will return to normal times."

"Let us stop here for a moment and take a look at another class that has been bitten by the same dog. Take a walk or drive down any concession road in this part of Ontario or any rural farming community and what do we find? Idleness? No. Hunger and cold? No. Talk of quitting or moving to town? Well hardly. We find the same amount of hard times talk, as there was when cheese sold for 25 cents, pork at 20 cents and eggs at 50 cents per dozen. Now, with cheese at nine cents, pork at 4½ cents and eggs only 23 cents, we are carrying on just the same and doing business as usual, planning and preparing to raise another crop, figuring how we can stave off or pay the tax collectors, save a dollar here and a few cents there, raising the wind somehow and pulling through some way."

"We have been extravagant and wasteful in the past, and we are taking a licking now, and with very few exceptions we are taking it standing up. We won't forget it and, if left to our own resources, we will pull through. Don't worry about the farmer. In the distant past, we asked for little and got nothing, and past depressions never touched us. In the near past, we asked and got too much. We have to play now and will learn our lesson. We will gradually learn to help ourselves."

"The big question with every farmer now is—What can I do by my own efforts, with what I have, to pull through? I am not going to give advice or to dictate in any way, I am going to state facts and figures which I have found to be correct and which go to prove that farming as an occupation is sound and as means of livelihood and as a means of providing against old age and sickness, etc., is second to none. As an investment at the present time, there is nothing to my way of figuring that is more sound or sure. I am in the market right now for an extra piece of land, I need it in my business, and my business is just farming. It is paying me a fair profit, has been for 25 years and will continue to do so as long as I think that way. If when I am through, anyone can tell me or show me what I think or believe to be wrong, I want to know it, I doubt if anyone can."

COMPUTING COSTS

One of the hardest things to do is to accurately compute cooking costs. Some of the apparently simple dishes are really expensive and some of the things that we are apt to consider luxuries are really not so expensive after all.

The other afternoon we were at a friend's house for tea and she served a very delicious Angel Cake. One of the women there, who is not noted for her tact, remarked "aren't you extravagant, giving us Angel Cake"? Our hostess made no answer, but I could see that she was hurt, as she is trying very hard to economize these days. After the rest were gone she asked me if I thought she had been extravagant, so for her comfort, we computed some cake costs.

The Angel Cake had required the whites of 8 eggs, but no butter. The yolks of the eggs were added to some more eggs and were scrambled for supper, so that the 8 egg whites, were 8 half-eggs, or equivalent to four whole eggs. Eggs were selling at 24 cents a dozen, so that four eggs cost 8 cents.

Butter cakes take from ¼ to ½ a cup of butter and two eggs. With butter at 27 cents a pound, ¼ cup would cost 4½ cents; 2 eggs would cost 4 cents. Milk was selling at 8 cents a quart, so a cup of milk would be two cents. The cost of the milk, butter and eggs for the ordinary cake would be about 10 cents. The Angel Cake required neither butter nor milk, and the cost of the eggs was 8 cents. So that in reality the Angel cake was the cheaper. In addition to this, the icing on an Angel cake is a much cheaper icing and put on in smaller quantities than the icing of the average cake. Most people use a larger quantity of butter than ¼ cup in their cakes so that would make the cake even more expensive. Of course if the egg yolks had not been used in an economical way, the cost of the cake would have been much higher.

It is a wise plan to occasionally count the cost of the foods you serve and you will find that you are due for some surprises. Cost reckoning should be made on the cost per portion.

ORANGES

A reader asks why there is so much stress put on orange juice and none on oranges; and are the oranges not as good for you as the orange juice. The answer to that is that the oranges are better, really than the orange juice, as they contain all of the juice and the cellulose besides. However oranges are messy things to eat and most people will not be bothered eating them whereas orange juice is so easy to take. Orange juice is valuable for its vitamins and minerals but specially for vitamin C which must be obtained from fresh foods. Tomatoes are the chief exception to this as canned tomatoes are rich in vitamin C. Tomato juice may be substituted for orange juice.

Orange juice should be extracted fresh, and should not stand over-night.

HAVE YOU A SPECIALTY

I have come to the conclusion that we worry to much about getting variety in foods for our entertaining. If we make one thing well that everyone seems to like, it is advisable to stick to it.

One of my friends makes most delicious Whipped Cream cakes and usually serves them. The other afternoon she had a party and there were no Whipped Cream cakes. The cake she had was very nice but somehow we were disappointed. One of her very good friends said, "here we are all looking forward to Whipped Cream Cakes, and you disappoint us." The hostess said that she was through racking her brains for something new to make as every time she did someone was sure to ask for her specialty. After this we might just expect to get Whipped Cream Cakes. We all agreed that it suited us.

Another friend makes wonderful Tea Biscuits and usually serves them for afternoon tea. We were there this week and instead she gave us most delicious sandwiches. On the way home the friend that I was with said "you know I was disappointed when we did not have Tea Biscuits this afternoon. I always look forward to having them at Mrs. — So there you are. What is a bewildered woman to do?"

I wonder if I can tell you why these foods are so specially good. The Whipped Cream Cakes are very fresh Cup Cakes with a round piece cut out of the top, then the cavity thus made is filled generously with sweetened and flavored whipped cream. The round piece cut out is put back on the top and makes a decoration.

The tea biscuits are made very soft, so soft that they can barely be handled (this is the secret of good biscuits, to make them very soft.) The Biscuits are so soft that they will barely hold their shape, so she bakes them in small muffin tins. And I tell you they are good.

MOULDED CUSTARD

- 1 tablespoon gelatine
- ½ cup cold milk
- 2 cups milk
- ½ cup sugar
- 2 eggs
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1 teaspoon vanilla

Soak gelatine in cold milk for 5 minutes. Heat 2 cups milk until scalded. Add sugar, then pour over the beaten egg yolks and cook until slightly thickened. Fold in the stiffly beaten egg-whites and pour into individual moulds. Chill until set.

Try Maple Syrup :

1. On plain boiled rice.
2. On sliced bananas.
3. Put a tablespoon for each serving in the dish before baking custard.
4. Rub into ham fat before baking, instead of using brown sugar.

USED CARS GO TO CHINA

Four Wheels and an Engine Essential, Accessories Unimportant

China is the great car market of the world, according to G. Findlay Andrew, F.R.G.S. The Chinese are not at all critical of paint jobs, age or previous condition of servitude of automobiles. Motor cars, which over here would be considered fit only for the junk pile, in China are made to go through two and often three, additional lifetimes. Mr. Andrew was the leader of the expedition which a year or so ago rescued two British women missionaries who had been captured by brigands. The means of transportation used in bringing about the rescue was a light truck.

"I have seen far better cars on junk piles," Mr. Andrews said, "but it took us there and back."

The great demand for used cars in China comes not from choice, Mr. Andrew continued, but because "China demands C-3 goods at C-3 prices and not A-1 goods at A-1 prices."

IN PARLIAMENT

If the present session of the House of Commons gains no other distinction it will probably be remembered as one in which invective was more abundant than usual, writes an exchange among our contemporaries. Hardly a day goes by that does not see some member call another by a name or names the propriety of which is the basis of an appeal to the speaker.

The speaker's duties are many and delicate, but one of the most delicate must be that of ruling, off-hand, whether a term is "parliamentary" or not. Sometimes such rulings led to a measure of puzzlement in the minds of laymen. For example, it was ruled that the word "demagogue" was not parliamentary.

In this instance the speaker was perhaps on the safe side, because the word "demagogue" has degenerated from an ancient and classical meaning into an epithet of abuse. By all appearances, the word "politician" is in for a similar metamorphosis, for it is gradually becoming a term of opprobrium, too. Yet "demagogue" seems harmless beside some other choice language used in the House.

In another recent instance one member said of another (the prime minister) that "he often exhibits the manners of a Chicago policeman and the temperament of a Hollywood actor." This elegant specimen of polite abuse was also made the subject of an appeal to the speaker. Unfortunately the appeal was not pressed, and so passed without being classified as parliamentary or otherwise.

While doubt may always exist as to the propriety of terms delivered in parliamentary debate, there is no doubt whatever that this growing use of questionable language adds neither to the dignity of the House nor to the prestige of its exponents. From observation of recent proceedings at Ottawa, it may also be emphatically added, that this indulgence of personal spite and invective is irrelevant to the legislative demands of a dignified Dominion; it moreover represents an expensive hindrance to government, invoking the disapproval of every sane citizen and taxpayer.

NEWSPAPER IS "BEST CLERK"

The director of a well-known chain store describes the local newspaper as "our best clerk." He explained that it sees more people, gets more of their individual time, works longer hours and tells its story with more accuracy than any quick clerk they can employ. These papers are going into the homes of people and are assured of their friendly attention. This is proved by the tremendous growth in importance of the press in the last few years, according to the director who declares that to-day the local newspaper is the backbone of any constructive sales effort.

NEW BRANCH MANAGER

Announcement is made by the Bank of Montreal that Thomas K. Haller has been appointed manager of its Lachute branch to succeed C. M. Hamilton, who has been promoted to the management of the Claremont Ave. and Sherbrooke Street branch, Westmount, Que.

Mr. Haller has been manager at Arnprior, Ont., for a number of years, first going to that branch in 1919, when he remained for a year, and then in 1923, since when he has continued in charge up to the time of his present appointment. He began his banking career at Chatham, Ont., in 1906 with the former Merchants Bank of Canada and has been employed at various branches in that province. He was appointed manager at Lyn in 1914 and three years later was transferred as accountant to the Sparks and O'Connor Sts. branch in Ottawa. He remained there a year, when he went to Arnprior, serving his first term as manager at that branch until 1920, when he went to the Rideau Street branch in Ottawa for three years.

While in Arnprior Mr. Haller was a director of the Arnprior Golf Club. His chief recreations are golf, curling, hunting and fishing.

HARRINGTON

We are sorry to know that Mrs. J. Marshall Sr., Mr. Douglas MacTavish Sr., and Mrs. C. Morrow are sick with the flu, the community wishes them speedy recovery.

Mr. D. MacTavish Jr. and Mrs. N. MacCallum were in Lachute, on Saturday, attending the funeral of Mr. Stewart Boyd.

All the young students of this vicinity have returned to their duties again, after spending a very pleasant holiday.

The regular service of the Harrington United Church was held at 2.30 p.m., on Sunday last and was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Conn.

BROWNSBURG

Miss Jean Townsend, of Brownsburg, spent the weekend with Miss Ruth Anderson.

Mr. and Mrs. Ted Zimmers, of Montreal, are guests of Mrs. Zimmers this week.

Mrs. Wm. Birch, who has been seriously ill with pneumonia, is well on the way to recovery.

Mrs. Wm. Cooper was hostess at a Miscellaneous Shower, in honor of her niece, Mrs. D. Beers, formerly Miss I. Hazel, who leaves for Lachute and will reside at 19 Chatham Street. A pleasant evening was spent, and the gifts were both numerous and useful.

WORLD'S LONGEST FENCE

Australia Has One Over Eleven Hundred Miles in Length.

Australia has the longest fence in the world. It is 1,139 miles in length, and is known as the No. 1 Rabbit Fence of Western Australia. Altogether, the rabbit fences of Western Australia alone extend 2,023 miles and cost over $1,750,000 to erect. They are constantly patrolled by boundary riders.

There is another great fence separating New South Wales from South Australia. It sometimes happens that great rains fall on the side of the fence where there are no rabbits while a great drought exists on the other side. Then a vast migration begins.

A vast host, hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of rabbits are on the move. And that is where the six-foot fence, topped with barbed wire comes in. Along one side of the fence the ground is alive with racing rodents seeking a way through into the country where not a rabbit is to be seen.

—An interesting event will be held on April 21st., in the form of a Card Party, under the auspices of the Victorian Order of Nurses. A large attendance is expected, in support of this organization and its splendid work in this town. See announcement under Coming Events.

At a time when the housing problem was even more acute than it is to-day, a man heard that a friend of his had been drowned, and at once went to the agent and applied for his friend's house.

"You're too late," said the agent.

"But my friend was only drowned an hour ago."

"I know that; but I've let the house to the man who pushed him in."

Up and down they rush till the sun kills them. They die in hundreds every minute. Emaciated by a hundred-mile trek, famished for water, the fence balks and the sun kills them. They die at the foot of the fence. Still others arrive in battalions in divisions, in army corps, as though there was no end to the stream. They die on the top of their dead comrades until there is a swathe of dead rabbits two feet deep and a yard wide, stretching perhaps for fifty miles.

Yet in spite of this terrific death-rate, the rabbit population of Australia remains a menace.

MORE ABOUT DISPLAY WINDOWS

The previous articles dealt with the construction and lighting of display windows. Frequent washings of both the inside and outside of the glass fronts are necessary to make the window displays fully effective. In winter the glass must be kept clear of frost. This can be accomplished in a number of ways:

1. Holes bored in the bottom of the window frame to allow the cold air to come up inside the glass and to prevent inside moisture from concealing on the glass.
2. One or more electric fans blowing against the inside of the window will prevent frost from forming.
3. A chemical of fifty percent glycerine and 50% methol hydrate applied with a small sponge is an effective method.

The Floor of the Window. A real good looking floor is an asset. You may keep the floor brightly varnished and polished or you can cover it with a solid color linoleum. The effect can be varied by using large squares of insulating board, some painted black and some painted white and laid as a tile floor. This makes a very effective stunt flooring but is not one to be used as a permanent floor. Stunt window displays are worth while if in keeping with the character of the store, but the whole idea must be carried through if an effective display is to be the result.

Backgrounds. In some stores it may be necessary to use the light coming through the front windows as a part illumination for the store and if this is so it may not be possible to close in the back of the window. Sometimes it is possible to build a closed in window with a top portion of glass which will permit considerable light into the store. One effective method is made from small sized piping and covered with a loose cloth drape which can be removed when building a display or for cleaning.

Another method is to use a number of movable screens which will make your window adaptable to many sizes of displays. They can be placed under the back of the window to feature large items or brought forward when the display is meant to feature a number of small articles. These screens can also be used to divide a window into sections to permit the display of a number of unrelated articles.

Accessories. Probably the most important is the pedestal. They can be bought in a wide variety of styles and sizes, or easily made by anyone handy with tools. The common packing case when properly covered or draped makes a most useful accessory. Pieces of plate glass of various shapes and sizes will form attractive shelves and can be supported by either bottles or canned goods.

Neat window cards and price tags help to make a window display more effective but unless they are properly used, a window would be better without them. To overcome the difficulty of propping these cards against some article displayed in the window, little stands can be made to hold them so that they can be placed to show off to the best advantage. Various lengths and sizes of half-round moulding with a slot cut along the top will serve as support for the cards. An additional brace may be necessary to prevent the large cards from falling over.

To attach small cards to the window or to support glass shelves next to the window there are on the market little suction cups of rubber which will help to give variety to your display.

The shape of the window, the construction, the accessories and the products displayed are nothing without the use of effort and brains to make the window effective.

WEIR

Mr. and Mrs. John Schippel spent the past week in Montreal visiting friends.

Mr. Lloyd Larose spent a few days in Montreal and Joliette last week.

Miss Amy Williams returned to Montreal on Monday morning, having spent the past two weeks at her home here.

Mr. E. J. Craig, who spent the winter at Noranda, Que., returned home on Sunday.

Mr. Delmar Rumbolt was in Montreal visiting friends during last week.

Miss Elsie Hardy, was a recent guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. P. Larose.

The dance which was held at Round Lake House on Friday night, under the direction of the W.H.A.C., was a great success in spite of the condition of the roads and the prevalence of la grippe in this vicinity.

The Monthly Meeting of the W. A. was held in the hall of the Church of the Redeemer, on Thursday last, with an attendance of eleven members. The most important business transacted at this meeting, was the opening of the thank-offering boxes, from which a nice sum was realized and was sent to aid in missionary work in the West. Also, instead of sending the usual bale of clothing, a collection was taken and the money sent to help in feeding the unemployed. The hostesses of the meeting were Mrs. J. Kerr and Mrs. H. A. Glassford.

"Is she upset about her broken engagement?"
"Completely unmanned!"

THE LATE

MRS. ALBERT FULLER

Hoosier, Sask., Mar. 29th.—A shadow of gloom has been cast over the Hoosier community, by the death of Mrs. Albert Fuller, who passed away at her home on Good Friday, after a long and painful illness.

Mrs. Fuller, (formerly Miss Mary Douglas) was born at Chatboro, Que., in 1860, and was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Adam Douglas. She was married in 1886 to Albert Fuller, of the same place, and to this happy union two children were born—Gordon and Beatrice.

In 1911 the family came West taking up land near the Hamlet of Hoosier, where the deceased resided until her death.

Mrs. Fuller had been an invalid for the past twenty years, suffering from rheumatism, but she bore her burden of suffering with cheerful patience and Christian fortitude, which were a source of wonder to all who knew her. She neither murmured nor complained, being always more thoughtful of others than herself. Her familiar form, in her wheel chair, will leave a vacancy in the home long to be remembered.

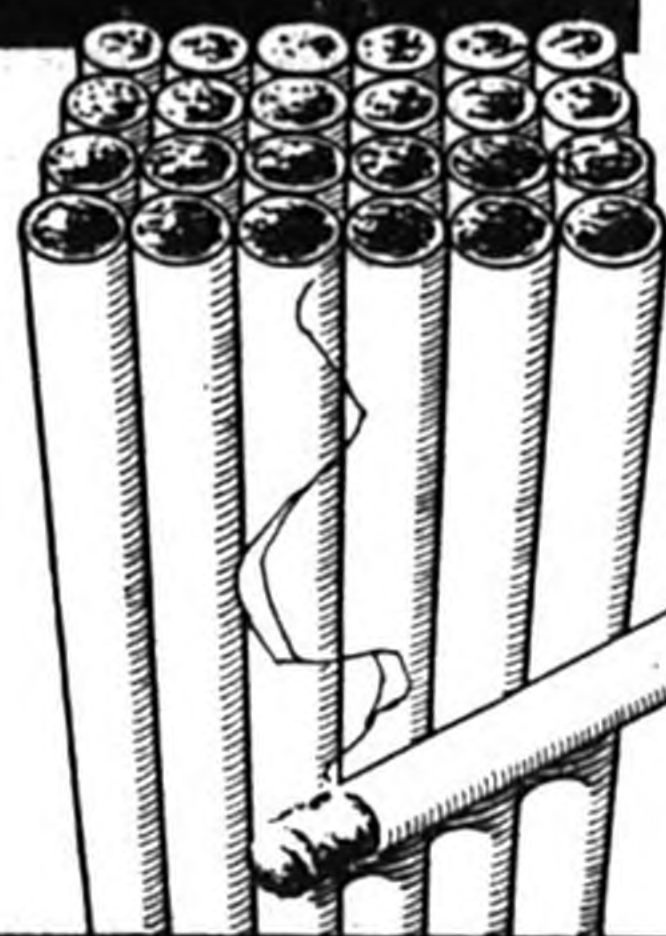

She was a member of the Presbyterian Church and an active worker in her earlier years. Of later years, although an invalid, she was keenly interested in all matters pertaining to the good and welfare of the district, and even willing to support and contribute to such. She leaves behind an example of cheerfulness, unselfishness, kindness and sympathy seldom witnessed.

"No one knows how much she suffered Only those that watched her well,
Earth has lost her, Heaven has won her,
Jesus doeth all things well."
The funeral was held on Easter Sunday from the family residence, service being conducted by Rev. W. Banks, pastor of the United Church. Favorite hymns of the deceased were sung, Rock of Ages, and The Great Physician Is Nigh. The Hoosier Quartette sang "In the Valley of Peace" and Mrs. Stanley Doyle, by special request, sang "Good Night" as a solo.

There were many floral tributes in silent token of sympathy from the friends of the family. Interment took place in Loverna Cemetery, the pall-bearers being Alex. Thompson, Parke Finlay, Russell Kendall, Emerson Cooke, Adam Thompson, John Tomalty.

Mrs. Fuller is survived by her husband, her son Gordon, her daughter, Mrs. Alex. Thompson, and five grandchildren, at Hoosier, also by two brothers James Douglas, of Hanna, Alta., and John Douglas, of Chatboro, Que., and two sisters, Mrs. Brashear, Vancouver, B.C., and Mrs. E. Cousins, of Montreal.

THE MASTER MIND

Novelized by Marvin Dana,
Author of "Within the Law,"
From the Successful Play
by Daniel D. Carter

CHAPTER XVII. The Last Menace.

YOUR retirement from public life for all time," Andrew persisted, with sinister enjoyment in the reiteration. "Come, come, Mr. Wainwright!" he went on, with malignant mockery. "When this little story is published abroad do you suppose the people of this state will have you, a dupe, a laughing stock, for the governor? I think I'll leave you to meditate on the situation. Or, perhaps," he suggested, "you would prefer to hand me now your resignation as a candidate for governor?"

Wainwright was thinking rapidly. "Must you have your answer now?" he demanded. "I will receive it any time before daybreak," the Master Mind conceded. "Suppose we set the time at 5 o'clock this morning."

"That will suit me very well indeed," Wainwright agreed.

"That hour makes a particular appeal to me," Andrew went on smoothly. "It was something less than four years ago, at about the hour of 5 in the morning, that my brother whom I loved sat in a stone cell—waiting—waiting for the dawn, the coming of which should end his life. So, now, I leave you—waiting for the dawn—and me—waiting for the end of something you hold dearer than life. I think—the end of your public career. Until 5 o'clock, Mr. Wainwright!" The Master Mind wheeled quickly and went out of the room.

Alone together husband and wife gazed long into each other's face. He bent and kissed the tender lips. When the caress was done she spoke pathetically:

"Oh, Cortland, darling, what have I done to you?" "There, there, dearest!" he answered soothingly. "You are not to be blamed in any way, not even by yourself. You were caught in the meshes of a devil. You had no chance against the vindictive sagacity of the Master Mind. Go to the telephone in my study," Wainwright directed briskly, with the precision of one who has exactly determined his course, "and call up 114—party J."

He kissed her again hurriedly, but very fondly, and put her from him. Marshall returned.

"Creegan's miles away now, by the rate he was going," Marshall replied. Wainwright snapped. "Find Parker. You'll have to rout him out of bed, I suppose. Have him wake up the Blounts and herd them together for an interview with me right away. You keep an eye out for Andrew that he doesn't interfere." Lucene's voice came down the stairway in a summons to her husband, and he hurried to answer. At the telephone in the study, where his wife had left the receiver lying ready for his use, he put it to his ear, and called:

"Is this 114—party J? Yes? Dr. Forbes. You? Ah, doctor, listen! This is important."

Wainwright hung up the receiver at last, and turned to his wife with a smile of satisfaction. "Well, at least, that much has been arranged," he said. "Dr. Forbes has promised to come over here at once. Thank heaven, now we have a chance to win in this struggle."

"But I do not understand just what you mean to do," the wife exclaimed wonderingly. "You told him that Andrew had developed a strange mania, unmistakable symptoms of insanity; that you wished the man put under restraint for a period of observation. But you didn't tell the doctor the truth. And you will have to do that when he comes."

Wainwright shook his head. "No," he said resolutely. "I shall convince the doctor that the man is mad." Lucene welcomed the distraction of movement, when Wainwright suggested that they should descend to the library, to await the appearance there of Dr. Forbes. Indeed, the two had hardly more than settled themselves in rather impatient expectation when Marshall entered the room, and behind him trailed Mr. and Mrs. Blount, and their putative offspring, Walter.

At once, when the others were within, Marshall, in response to a gesture from Wainwright, shut the door. "Look here, Cortland!" Blount stormed, his big voice rumbling hoarsely. "What the devil does this fellow mean by routing us out of bed at this unholy hour of the night?"

Mrs. Blount, too, and Walter added their querulous complaints. "Shut up—the lot of you!" Wainwright commanded fiercely.

Wainwright had turned his gaze full on the westerner at the beginning of the outburst.

"You were saying, Mr. Morgan—" he began.

Blount shrank as from a blow, and his ruddy face grew gray.

"Wh—what? What's that?" Wainwright was explicit enough.

"I said, Mr. Morgan—Mr. Henry Morgan, to be exact—alias, Black

Blount mopped his forehead with a handkerchief that became quickly wringing wet with the perspiration that had gushed forth at this open mention of a name that made audible all his terror of the law's vengeance against him for many offenses against it. "I have no idea as to what you are talking about!" he answered.

Wainwright smiled with scorn. "Perhaps," he remarked dryly, "your wife may prove more intelligent than you appear to be."

"Me? Why, the idea!" she cried hysterically. "Me? The idea?"

Wainwright regarded the excited woman with eyes in which there was no pity. His voice as he addressed her again was metallic:

"Yes, you, Sadie!" The woman winced perceptibly.

"That is a respectful way for you to speak to your mother-in-law, ain't it, now?" she demanded indignantly, with a disdainful toss of her head. "You ought to be ashamed of yourself, Cortland. So you should. 'Sadie,' indeed!"

Wainwright permitted himself another smile.

"Yes, 'Sadie, indeed!'" he agreed whimsically. "I might say Milwaukee Sadie, in fact!"

"Oh, rats!" she cried. And, having so said, she dropped down into a chair which creaked complainingly. Between sobs her voice sounded lugubrious. "And just when everything was going so nice too!"

Walter thrust out his jaw in proclamation of the strong will power he did not possess and essayed a tone of rather haughty remonstrance.

"Say, Cortland, I am shocked and surprised—greatly surprised. Honest to God, I don't know what!"

Wainwright's eyes sparkled angrily. "Oh, so you don't know, eh?" he said idly. "Well, I do, Mr. Slocum."

The collapse of the fellow was almost ludicrously swift. He could only mumble a feeble attempt at a question, while his gaze shifted furtively, downward.

"M—Mister what?" "Mr. Slocum," Wainwright retorted, with clear emphasis, that suggested no doubt as to the fact; "alias Diamond Willie."

Blount, criminal though he had been for most of his life, was nevertheless a man and possessed of a man's spirit. The westerner spoke with a certain plain sincerity that became him.

"Well, Mr. Wainwright," he said gruffly, discreetly relinquishing the more familiar form of address, "what are you going to do with us? Give it to us straight now. There's no use in beating about the bush. What are we going to get?"

There came a little lightening of Wainwright's face as he listened. His answer was prompt, but cryptic:

"It all depends."

"Mr. Wainwright, for God's sake, sir, give us the chance!" cried Blount.

"It is not impossible that I shall do so," was the answer. "Certainly I shall give you the chance you ask for—on one condition."

The weather-beaten face of the westerner shone radiant.

"It is simply this," Wainwright went on, including the three in a searching glance. "I require the services of all of you just for tonight. I am about to put in operation a plan that will be materially assisted by your co-operation. You three must stand by me tonight. That is all of my condition. Afterward you will be entirely free to go where you will as far as I am concerned, and I shall give no information to any one concerning you, and I shall guarantee the like restraint on the part of Mr. Marshall here, since he has only come in contact with you and learned your identities while in my employ."

Marshall gave a grunt of reluctant assent, but consoled himself by frowning violently at these offenders against the law.

"It is necessary," Wainwright went on in a colorless voice, "that you should stand by me tonight against—him." A slight pause before the final pronoun gave it significant emphasis.

Each of the three gave a perceptible start, then rested rigid. It was Mrs. Blount.

"Well!" he exclaimed sharply after a long pause. His imperious look fixed on Blount and remained there. The westerner spoke hesitatingly.

"How do you mean?" he asked.

Wainwright proceeded with his instructions as though unaware of the apprehension under which the three were laboring.

"A gentleman will soon be here," he said briskly, "whom, I believe, you have all met already. In his presence you will continue to be what I have hitherto thought you to be. In other words, you are to appear as your usual robes as my relations by marriage as the family of my wife."

At this simple elucidation of the primary requirement, the agitated criminals plucked up a little more spirit. Walter voiced the feeling:

"Hub! That's a pipe!"

Wainwright continued with undiminished complacency in his manner: "In addition to this you will hold yourselves in readiness, all of you, to substantiate, when called on, whatever I may say."

"Sure, we'll do that!" Blount exclaimed, cheerfully. "But you say it will affect him—Andrew?"

Wainwright nodded assent. "Yes," he agreed. "It will be about him I shall do the talking. You will understand fast enough when the time comes. All you have to do will be to allow my lead. There will be no trouble about it—there can be none."

Blount agreed, with emphasis. "We'll to just as you want us to, and that goes!"

Wainwright nodded his head in acceptance of the assurance. And then, very gently and slowly the door opened and Andrew stood smiling tolerantly on the threshold.

CHAPTER XVII. At the Bar.

IN the interval of time that elapsed after his interview with Wainwright, Andrew had chosen to shut himself in the seclusion of the cupola room, where he held communion with his thoughts while awaiting the appointed hour for the rendering of his enemy's decision. As to what that decision would be the Master Mind had small doubt, nor did he feel any concern over the result should the improbable occur, and Wainwright refuse thus to give up his political career.

In such case the effect would be secured none the less.

There was no means by which Wainwright would be able, so far as Andrew could surmise, to prevent publicity. And publicity would be enough. The Master Mind would be at pains to secure the widest notoriety for the reports most likely to do his enemy harm. His work would be eagerly aided by Wainwright's political foes, who were many and powerful. The victim

Madame Lacroix's delicious CHOCOLATE LAYER CAKE

3/4 cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 cup milk
2 1/2 cups pastry flour (or 2 cups and 3 tablespoons of bread flour)
3 teaspoons Magic Baking Powder
3/4 teaspoon salt

Cream butter; add sugar, a little at a time, beating until light; add beaten yolks and flavoring; add flour, sifted with salt and baking powder, alternately with milk. Fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. Bake in 3 greased layer cake pans in moderate oven at 375° F. about 20 minutes. Recipe for Chocolate Icing and Filling is in the Magic Cook Book.

Why Magic Baking Powder is used exclusively at this Montreal School of Domestic Science

"We teach our students only the surest methods," says Madame R. Lacroix, Assistant Director of the Provincial School of Domestic Science, Montreal. "That's why I always use and recommend Magic Baking Powder. Its high leavening quality is always uniform. You get the same satisfactory results every time you use it."

And Magic Baking Powder is the unquestioned choice in the majority of cooking schools throughout the Dominion. Cookery teachers—and housewives, too—prefer Magic because of its consistently better results.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(© 1932, Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for April 17 THE CALL OF ABRAHAM

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 12:1-9.
GOLDEN TEXT—And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Abram Leaving Home.
JUNIOR TOPIC—God Calls Abram to a Great Adventure.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making Life an Adventure.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Conquering Power of Faith.

I. His Separation (v. 1).
The new era inaugurated with Noah as head ended in a colossal failure in the impious attempt of man on the plains of Shinar to set himself free from God's government. In view of this failure, God turned aside from the race as such and called Abram and placed him at the head of a new nation which he would train for himself. This call involved

1. A great sacrifice. It meant the severance of three ties:

a. His country in the widest range of his affections.

b. His place of birth and kindred which came still closer to his heart.

c. His father's house as the inmost circle of all tender emotions. All these must be cast off before the Lord could get him into the place of blessing. This is a call that is much needed today. The Lord is continually saying, "Come ye out from among them" (II Cor. 6:16-18).

2. The performance of heroic tasks. For Abram to go into a strange land and take possession of it, for God called for heroism. The life of separation from the world costs much, but it is the only way to have God's favor.

II. God's Promise to Abram (vv. 2-3).
The demand for separation was followed by a seven-fold promise—a gracious engagement on God's part to communicate unmerited favors and confer blessings upon him.

1. "I will make of thee a great nation" (v. 2). This was fulfilled in a natural way in the Jewish nation and in Ishmael (Gen. 17:20); also in a spiritual seed embracing both Jews and Gentiles (Gal. 3:7, 8).

2. "I will bless thee" (v. 2). This was fulfilled.

a. Temporally (Gen. 13:14-17; 24:35). Abram was enriched with lands, cattle, silver and gold.

b. Spiritually (Gen. 15:3; John 8:50). He was freely justified on the grounds of his faith. The righteousness of Christ was imputed unto him, also he had the exalted privilege of talking face to face with the Lord.

3. "And make thy name great" (v. 2). Going out from his father's house, he himself was to have a great name. He was to be the head of a new house which would be venerated far and wide. He is known as the "friend of God" (James 2:23).

4. "Thou shalt be a blessing" (v. 2). We now pass from the lower to the higher phase of the promise. It was a great thing to be thus honored and blessed by God, but to be the medium of blessing to others was greater still.

5. "I will bless them that bless thee" (v. 3). Abram and the nation which came forth from his loins became the very touchstone of God. Since he is God's friend, he regards acts performed toward him as toward himself. This has been strikingly exemplified in all ages since. The nations that have used the Jews well have been blessed.

6. "And curse him that curseth thee" (v. 3). The nations which have turned against Abram and the nation of which he was head have never prospered. While God at times used the surrounding nations as scourges for his people, he in turn punished them for it.

7. "And in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed" (v. 3). This has been fulfilled in

a. The Jewish nation being made the repository of the oracles of God. Through them the Bible has been given to the world.

b. The bringing of the Redeemer into the world. Thus they became the channel through which God's richest Gift came into the world.

c. A future time when Jews shall be God's missionaries in carrying the good tidings to the ends of the earth.

III. Abram's Obedience to God (vv. 4-8).

Abram at once departed out of his own land. He proved his faith by his obedience. He went out not knowing whither he went. He was a typical believer. He renounced indulgence and idleness. He separated himself for a testimony by his altars of witness. He entered into Canaan and accepted a pilgrim life.

"DOCTRINE OF ATONEMENT"

The subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science churches Sunday, April 17th., is "Doctrine of Atonement."

Golden Text (Heb. 9: 28): Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation.

Among the Bible passages to be studied are the following: Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; And deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage...that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. (Heb. 2: 14, 15, 17.)

From "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, the correlative citations are: Atonement is the exemplification of man's unity with God, whereby man reflects divine Truth, Life and Love. Jesus of Nazareth taught and demonstrated man's oneness with the Father and for this we owe him endless homage.

MORIN HEIGHTS

The monthly meeting of the Anglican Women's Auxiliary was held at the home of Mrs. Rufus McCullough. One new member was received, and a considerable amount of work was accomplished, followed by the usual enjoyable supper.

Rev. Mr. Baugh returned last Thursday from Montreal, where he was attending the annual Synod Meetings. He reports a considerable attendance among whom he met many old acquaintances, including Mr. Caffling, who was formerly in business here.

Mr. Wesley Doherty went to Montreal on Monday to undergo special examinations. The doctors announced he had a fracture of the jaw-bone, and will suffer prolonged discomfort.

Mons. Courchaine resumed his old place in Seale's store on Monday, and everybody is glad to welcome "Rosie" back.

Miss Hazel Watson has been unwell with the prevalent cold but is now better.

The late Mayor Boyd of Wentworth, had many friends in this vicinity, and Morin will share the grief of his loss.

The weekly "Bridge" met at the home of Mrs. Archie Hamilton, prize winners being Mrs. E. Greene and Mr. Hamilton.

Mrs. Samuel Campbell is much improved in health, as is also Mr. Ival Sr. at Christieville.

It is expected that the motor road to Montreal will be open all through by the beginning of this week. The road through from Lachute is passable as far as Lakefield and is opening to Morin rapidly.

Mr. James Dawson of the Valley Road is slowly recovering and was able to visit with his daughter this week at Cambria.

The farmers from Mille Isles have new Maple Syrup for sale in these parts.

The vast number of farm products now being imported from the West have lowered our prices on butter, eggs, and poultry. Provincial barriers next?

The Watchman acknowledges receipt of a letter from correspondent in this district, complaining (among other things) that the market for farm products today is hardly consistent with the millenium pictured in campaign platforms of conservative election-candidates. This letter was being held for publication and comment in this issue but unfortunately it became mislaid. The substance of the communication, together with an editorial reply, will be found on our front page this week, under heading, The Price of Pork.

LAKEFIELD.

Mr. Naylor Mount spent the week-end in the city.

Messrs. Ross Evans and Charles Andrews motored from Montreal.

Cars are running once more between Lakefield and Lachute, to our great satisfaction.

So far the Maple Syrup Harvest is very poor in this locality but, there is still the possibility of improvement.

Quite a few attended the funeral of little Gordon Richard Woods last Saturday. Mr. and Mrs. Hazel brought the body from Montreal for interment here.

The Easter Service in Holy Trinity Church, postponed on account of the illness of the minister, will D.V. be held on Sunday, April 17th., at 10.30 a.m. A good congregation is hoped for.

This winter has been a banner one for generous contributions of wood, for heating the church. The large wood-pile bears silent testimony to kind hearts and willing hands of these cheery donors, and, is a real help to the management at this time.

It is hoped that the bright spring weather will aid in restoring to perfect health our many neighbors and friends who have been ill during the winter. Besides those who have been sufferers for some time, many have been laid aside by the heavy cold or 'flu so prevalent of late; but, so far, there have been no serious complications.

ST. ANDREWS EAST.

Miss Beaulah Weightman, of Montreal, spent the week-end with her aunt, Mrs. Macdonell.

The Ugoigo Club sent a contribution of $33.00 to the Salvation Army, Montreal, last week, for relief work.

Mr. Willie Simpson and his two sons, William and Rowan, were here over the week-end.

Miss Gertrude McOuat spent the week-end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry McOuat.

We are glad to see Mr. and Mrs. Robert Elder back with us again, after spending the winter months in Montreal. Their two sons John and Robert spent the week-end with them.

Mr. Melville Ballantyne was the guest of his parents, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Ballantyne, over the week-end.

Miss Evelyn Wales, who was recently appointed Verdun School Nurse, spent the week-end with her parents, Dr. and Mrs. B. N. Wales.

St. Andrews is sorry to lose Professor and Mrs. Gruner, who moved to Montreal this week. We understand they intend to spend the summer at Lake Louise.

Dr. Will Pitcairn spent the week-end with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Pitcairn.

Mrs. C. Pease has returned home, after spending a few weeks in Montreal.

The Pioneer W. I. met at the home of the President, Mrs. Jas. McKenzie, last Tuesday evening. After the business meeting, taffy-making was engaged in, and small cakes of sugar were sent to each of the sick members of the branch.

Miss Jean Tedford is spending a few weeks with her aunt, Mrs. K. de la Ronde.

Mr. George Simpson was here during the week-end.

STONEFIELD.

Thanks, Cushing West! We were beginning to think we were the only ones left over since 1885—but thank goodness there are others, and we feel as young as we used to be. (It's the arteries that count.—Editor.)

Miss H. McOuat, of Brownsburg, was the week-end guest of her sister, Miss P. McOuat, teacher in Stonefield.

Mrs. G. Angill, of Penn. U. S. A., and daughter Marion arrived in Grenville on Friday to attend her mother, Mrs. Curran, who, we regret to say, is very ill.

Mr. H. Bigham was the guest of Mr. G. C. Conway on Sunday evening.

The young people of Stonefield, and district had a Surprise Party at the home of Mr. J. Densmore, on Friday evening, and spent an enjoyable time.

The syrup season has not been a great success, so far, on account of excessive east winds. But, the run has not yet finished.

Miss Cuno, teacher of Rawcliffe, was the guest of Mrs. W. Dewar over the week-end.

CUSHING.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Weir, of Montreal, and Capt. J. D. Weir, of St. Anne de Bellevue, were the Sunday guests of Mrs. T. Weir Sr.

Mr. Edward Hickey, who has been spending the winter months with his sister, Mrs. R. Evans, left for his home in Baltimore on Monday.

Mr. D. W. Candlish, of Montreal, visited friends in Cushing on Sunday.

Mr. R. J. Graham of Lachute, was the guest of his mother, Mrs. Andrew Graham Sr., on Sunday.

Messrs. Grant Nugent of Berwick; W. Johnston and Mr. Helmer, of Ottawa, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Bradford on Thursday.

The Women's Missionary Society of St. Mungo's Church held their monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. O. E. Leroy on Tuesday.

The Misses V. and M. Bryerton, also Messrs. A. and G. Bryerton, of Verdun, were week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. Bryerton. Mrs. I. Fuller was also a guest on Sunday.

Mr. John Bradford was in Ottawa, this week for a few days.

The Lachute Aqueduct Co., purpose extending their system westward as far as Lachute Mills as soon as the weather permits. This will prove of great advantage to the West Enders, the water (we believe) being much purer than the water in the River.

W. S. Todd will open the premises formerly occupied by Mr. Joseph Patenaude, on the 1st. of May, with an entirely new stock of goods at low prices, which he will dispose of for cash only.

Triplets.—Mr. Jas. Armstrong of East Settlement, has a ewe which gave birth to three lambs this spring.

There is no doubt we shall receive in Canada a much larger number of immigrants this year than we have ever had during the past 20 years. The Parisian has probably the largest number on board of any steamer coming to Montreal; she has sailed with 100 saloon and 900 steerage passengers, nearly all English, whose destinations are Manitoba and the North West.

Mr. John Hay, President of our Agricultural Society, has purchased the bull which took first prize at the Fall Provincial Exhibition in Montreal last September. Mr. Hay deserves the recognition of farmers in this County for his progressive public spirit.

Arundel.—Stephen Bevan returned from the shanties in time to save the houses of two neighbors from being destroyed by fire.

The Brownsburg Annual Tea-meeting was held on Tuesday evening. Rev. R. W. McKechnie took the chair, and an excellent programme was given by the Brownsburg Choir under leadership of Mr. Morrison with several instrumental solos by Mr. Fish of Lachute. Rev. Mr. Mackie of Lachute and Rev. Mr. King of Dalesville, delivered appropriate addresses. Proceeds amounted to $35.05, which will go towards repairing the church.

News has been received from Stanley, far up the Congo River, in Africa, reporting his expedition all well.

CUSHING WEST

Dr. H. B. Cushing of Montreal, accompanied by his daughter Miss Marjorie Cushing spent Sunday at his residence.

Mr. Eddie Whelehan of Montreal, spent the week-end with his relatives here.

Mrs. Gagnon, of Montreal, was a guest of her sister, Mrs. T. Ranger, at Greece's Point, over the week-end.

Young Men of the West End have organized a foot-ball club with Mr. F. Walland as captain. The club opens with a membership of 18, the following having been appointed officers: Mr. J. McDiarmid, Pres.; Mr. C. James, Vice-Pres.; Mr. G. Marshall, Sec.-Treas.; Committee—Messrs T. Carpenter, J. Combie, S. Caron, N. Beers, and E. Carpenter.

We are much pleased to see that the heroic conduct of Miss Katie Campbell, who graduated from our Academy a couple of years ago, is being duly recognized, and tonight on behalf of the County, the Hon W. A. Weir will present her with a gold medal for her bravery in saving all her pupils in the Hochelaga school fire.

Cushing.—A number of young ladies of the vicinity spent a pleasant afternoon at a "quilting bee" at Mrs. W. Canning's on Wednesday.

Cushing.—An old and respected resident of this place passed away in the person of Geo. Bradford sr., at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Jas. McAllister, Chute-au-Blondeau, on Wednesday morning, at the advanced age of 93 years.

The Storm of last Sunday will go down in history as the severest which has struck this section so late in the season, since the memorable one of '85.

Rev. W. P. Boshart will deliver a lecture in Cushing, on the subject of China, illustrated by lime-light views. Admission, 10 cts.

Lefebvre - Lalonde. A very pretty wedding was solemnized in the Roman Catholic Church on the 16th. inst., when Miss Leona Lalonde was united in marriage to Mr. J. W. Lefebvre of this town. Miss J. Lavigne played the Wedding March. The wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's uncle, Mr. Jos. Lavigne, and the happy couple left on the morning train for Ottawa amid showers of rice and good wishes.

Presbyterians in Brownsburg propose to erect a new church, plans of which are now being drawn up.

Town Council

A meeting of the Town Council was held in the Council Chamber on Tuesday evening. There were present Mayor Dobbie, and Aldermen MacKimmie, Miller, Rodrigue, Morrison, Ledoux, Raymond and Laurin.

Mr. H. M. Gall appeared before Council, on behalf of the Presbyterian Church, requesting permit for the erection of their new Church. Plans were submitted and the permit granted, on motion of Alderman MacKimmie, seconded by Alderman Miller.

Tenders for collection of garbage for the summer were received from Messrs. Burke, Beaulne, Prevost and Braney, and on motion of Alderman Miller, seconded by Alderman Raymond, the contract was awarded to J. Braney for the sum of $22 weekly.

An account for $100 was received from Miss Leger, for injuries sustained in falling on the sidewalk, comprising physician's bill of $50 for treatment and $50 for compensation. The council felt that they had done everything possible to keep the sidewalks in good shape during the changeable weather, and Alderman Miller, seconded by Ald. MacKimmie moved that the account be left over for further investigation.

No action was taken on an application of Romeo Chartrand to be appointed as chimney sweep.

It was unanimously agreed to let the Red Cross Society have the free use of the Auditorium for their card-party on Thursday night.

It was also unanimously agreed that the Auditorium be granted to the Presbyterian Church on Sundays for the holding of divine service, during the building of their new church.

Alderman Raymond spoke of the bad condition of the roads and the necessity of shouldering the sides with crushed stone which he thought would prove to greater advantage by the town crushing their own, rather than purchasing the crushed stone. The roads committee was authorized to look into this matter and report at next meeting.

Practical Lecture on Aeronautics

Professor A. S. Eve at Lachute Auditorium.

The last of the season's series of practical lectures, under auspices of the Literary and Dramatic Society, was held on Tuesday evening at Lachute Auditorium, when Dr. A. S. Eve, of McGill University gave an interesting address on Flying and Flight. The speaker was introduced by Principal Hall, in the presence of a considerable audience, and the elementary and semi-technical principles of Flight were outlined in a clear, practical manner. Dr. Eve's humorous and illuminating style commanded the interest of his listeners and left a lucid conception of the essential points of his subject. From the purely scientific and experimental stages; through its destructive war-time activities; to the commercial and topographical functions of present-day aviation, Flying has become a subject on which the layman seeks a rough working-knowledge, in his desire to keep in touch with world essentials. Dr. Eve's address afforded just such an insight, and gave lasting impression of the basic facts of Flight.

The address was generously illustrated with photographic slides, showing both war-time and commercial flying-craft, and with diagrams showing the efficacy of streamlining in overcoming wind-resistance.

Mr. Hall tendered a vote of appreciation to Dr. Eve, and the gathering closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

St. Andrews Opens

Golf Course Comes Through Winter in Good Shape

The St. Andrews Golf Club, St. Andrews East, opened for play Saturday and full facilities will be available May 1. The course has come through the winter well, owing to the sandy nature of its soil, and is reported in splendid condition by directors who have inspected it recently.

A highly successful season in 1931 was reported at the club's annual meeting. The complete slate of officers was re-elected.

Construction Commencing on New Presbyterian Church

The Lachute Presbyterian Church, erected in 1882, which served as the Methodist Church until purchased by the Presbyterians at the time of the Union, has now been torn down to make room for the new edifice, made possible through the generosity of Mr. William Rodger, of East Settlement, in memory of his sister Margaret who died two years ago. The church is to be constructed of pink and grey stone from the Brownsburg Quarries and will be 100 ft. long by 33 ft. inside. The present Church Hall is being turned around to face the Manse, and with an additional 20 feet added will give a hall approximately 60 x 25 feet; this will adjoin the main edifice. This Church will hold 300 people and is expected to be ready for occupancy about September 1st. It will be known as the Margaret Rodger Memorial Presbyterian Church. The work is being executed by the Stuart Construction Co'y. of Sherbrooke.

Activities of Chatham Women's Institute

The Monthly Meeting of the Chatham Women's Institute was held in the Canadian Industries' Club Rooms, on April 7th. An interesting address on Agriculture was given by Mr. Alex. Bothwell, County Agronomist. On May 3rd, the Women's Institute will hold a social evening. A paper on Canadian Industries will be read also a short programme will be given. Refreshments will be served. Admission 25c.

On May 5th., the regular monthly meeting will be held, paper for the day being Home Economics. For the first week of May the local branch of Quebec Women's Institute is sponsoring a display of "Made in Canada" goods in all the local shop windows. This is to further the interests of our Home Industries.

Robbers Again Active in Brownsburg

Many Dwellings Broken Into

The mania for stealing cars in this district is apparently growing and Mr. Wm. J. Graham, of Brownsburg, was the latest victim in the loss of a Plymouth car early on Wednesday morning last. Other minor thefts were made from the restaurant of Thos. Carpenter, the thieves helped themselves to eatables afterwards quenching their thirst at St. Onge's Hotel. Although the car was locked the culprits managed to connect the switch and realizing that the car would also need liquid refreshment stopped at Stevenson and Doran's Garage where they filled up with Gasoline, after breaking the lock. Provincial police were immediately notified but to date nothing has been heard of either thieves or car. When and if caught they should be made an example of and severely punished.

Town Hall Undergoing Renovation

The much needed alterations to Lachute Town Hall are well under way, and when completed will command a little more respect for the official quarters of our City Fathers, while our energetic secretary will also have a more congenial place in which to perform his duties. It is true that the exterior of our Town Hall is not very imposing but there is no reason why the interior should not be tastefully and conveniently arranged, so that when visitors have business to transact or discuss with our town officials they can do so with due privacy and in quarters befitting the status of our town. There may be some who, doubtless, will criticize the expenditure, but the improvements were badly needed and the action of the Council in instigating such repairs is most commendable.

Memories of Old St. Andrews

Continuing The Watchman's Series of Reminiscent Articles
by B. N. Wales

To continue the story of the Ottawa, from the Watchman of April 7th.—An outstanding figure on the Ottawa River at that period was Pierre Sauvé, the retired veteran steamboat pilot. He commenced his career on this river at fourteen years of age, and for forty years was the trusted pilot of the finest steamers on the Ottawa. For twenty-eight years he was with the Shepherd Company, running the Lachine Rapids, with out a mishap, except on one occasion when the rudder chain of the Steamer Sovereign broke in mid-rapids. At this critical moment he rushed his assistants to the stern tiller, and he, with signal flag at the bow, guided the boat into safe waters.

Mr. Sauvé is still hale and hearty in his eighty-second year and every morning during the past winter, storm or shine, he took the two mile morning walk before his breakfast, to attend morning mass at the parish church. Mr. Sauvé is the head of a family of seventy-nine descendants, including fifty-nine grandchildren and nine great grandchildren.

No sooner had steamboat navigation passed the experimental stage on the St. Lawrence, than enterprising merchants in St. Andrews, determined that the time had arrived when Judge Macdonnell's Durham boats should be replaced by boats run by steam.

As early as 1826-27, they, in co-operation with Montreal Merchants built, owned, and operated the first two steamboats that plied the waters of the lower Ottawa, viz. the "William King" under Captain DeHertel of St. Andrews and the "St. Andrews" under Captain C. J. Lighthall, of Carillon, to run from Lachine to St. Annes, and from St. An-

Quebec Will Not Give Moratorium

Premier L. A. Taschereau announced yesterday that the Province of Quebec would not grant a moratorium in connection with mortgages on properties in the province as had been requested by a delegation from Montreal. "My Government will certainly not consent to such a moratorium as it would result in stagnation in connection with building and construction," said the Premier "If a moratorium was instituted financiers would not be prepared to loan money on mortgages and the result would be very detrimental to the business life of the province."

Arundel Farmers Successful Pork Producers

During the fall months of 1931 the farmers in Arundel marketed 352 hogs through their local farmers' club. These hogs were all shipped to Montreal via truck and sold on a graded basis, 94 graded select bacon, 134 bacon and the remainder into other market classifications. The 352 hogs weighed 66100 lbs. and sold for over $4000.

The Annual Meeting of this club was held in Arundel on Friday, April 15, when plans for the coming year were outlined. Mr. Alex. Bothwell, District Agriculturist, was present and distributed $273.50 as prize money amongst the members for the 1931 competition. This prize money was provided by the Federal and Provincial Departments of Agriculture.

Seeding Will Be Late

Seeding will be two or three weeks later than last year in the province of Quebec, according to information which has reached Hon. Adelard Godbout, Minister of Agriculture. Experts of the department, however, say that 1931 had an exceptionally early spring and that the farmers will start at quite an advantageous time to produce another bumper crop.

"Dollar Day" on C.P.R. Local

Bargain Excursion to Montreal this Week-End.

Meeting the competition of the highways, our railway systems are now offering trips at a rate which is less than the cost of gasoline for the distance of travel. The Ottawa-Toronto excursion last week-end at $5.00 proved highly popular, and the previous Montreal-Quebec trip at $3.00 was similarly well patronized. It is said that these excursions are proving highly profitable to both the C. N. and C. P. Railways, which are jointly endeavoring to provide cheap trips to the most strategic points in Quebec, Ontario, and the Eastern Townships.

In continuance of this "good business," the Canadian Pacific announces a Dollar Day of particular interest to residents in Argenteuil County, who are offered a round trip to Montreal by special train from Lachute 3.35 p.m. on Saturday (Staynerville 3.21, Grenville 3.04, Calumet 2.59 p.m.) and returning from Montreal Sunday night. The $1.00 fare prevails from the four points above-mentioned and circulars with full details of this trip may be procured from C. P. R. agents.

Discourage the Out-of-town Pedlars

(Huntingdon Gleaner)

The transient pedlar is quite often a general nuisance and sells his wares to the household at a price beyond that asked by local stores. The pedlar sells his goods at a handsome price, gets the cash and does the town no good. This is the time of year when pedlars visit these rural parts, many as agents, claiming to be "The-Man." What does that mean? He—just takes your order and delivers the goods at a later date. It's a mild way of evading being called a pedlar, and also a way of evading paying a business tax to the municipality. The next time you have one of these individuals call at your door turn him a deaf ear, and at the same time tell him to sell his merchandise to the local merchants and that you will buy it from them.

Death of Former Lachute Resident

The Late Mrs. Isaac McRae

The funeral of the late Mrs. McRae, widow of the late Isaac Cleland McRae, took place on Saturday, April 16th. The funeral service was conducted in St. Simeon's Church, Lachute, by the Rector, Rev. J. A. Lackey.

Mr. and Mrs. McRae had lived for some years in Lachute, where they had made many friends, but latterly they resided at Three Rivers, Que., with their son, Mr. Frank E. McRae. Mrs. McRae's husband predeceased her two or three years ago. Her death was the result of a fall, on the cement walk at the rear of her son's residence. She died soon afterwards, not having regained consciousness. The sudden death was a great shock to all her friends. Mrs. McRae was in her 78th year, and had been enjoying good health to the time of the accident.

Wedding of Interest Here

Hewis-Yelland

The wedding of Eleanor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Yelland, now of Montreal, to Mr. Clarence Hewis, of Ottawa, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Hewis of Nelson, B.C., took place in Trinity Memorial Church on Saturday afternoon, April 16th. Archdeacon Almond officiating.

Miss Yelland was formerly resident of this town, and has many friends in Lachute and vicinity.

The bride wore an ensemble of pencil blue with matching hat and a white fox fur, and carried a bouquet of Ophelia roses with lilies-of-the-valley. Her sister, Miss May Yelland, who was her only attendant was in a costume of Spanish crepe and her bouquet was of sweet peas. Mr. Brian Gillene acted as best man and the ushers were Mr. James ("Jimmie") Yelland and Mr. Charles Miller, brother and cousin of the bride.

The bride was given away by her father, Mr. James Yelland, formerly a popular citizen of this town.

Mr. John Stuart sang "O Promise Me" during the signing of the register. A reception was held following the ceremony at the residence of the bride's parents. A toast to the bride was proposed by Mr. Gillene; and following the reception the happy couple left for 'parts unknown.'

Among the relatives in attendance were Mrs. Watson, great aunt of the bride, her son Mr. John and Mrs. Watson, and Miss Watson, Mrs. Robt. Miller, Misses Annie, Lulu and Catherine, Mr. Chas. and Bobby Miller, Mrs. Harry Wooding and Mrs. A. Perley Carruthers, of Ottawa; Mrs. Huggins and daughter; Mr. James Beech and Mrs. Beach, of Montreal.

Among other guests were Mr. and Mrs. Daniels and Alice; Mr. and Mrs. Bramley, Mrs. Spears, Mr. and Mrs. Stansfield and Miss MacKimmie, of Lachute; and Mr. Jas. Lockwood.

The presents were various and beautiful and testified to the esteem in which the bride and groom are held.

The groom was born in Sheffield, England, and is popular wherever he is known.

Mr. and Mrs. Hewis will reside in Montreal West.

Lachute Academy Soon to Extend its Activity

To be the Most Up-to-Date
Rural School in the Province

For a long time now, the question of enlarging the Academy to meet the needs of consolidation has been engaging the attention of our School Board, and the fruits of their thought and labor will shortly be seen in the erection of a fine large wing added to the present structure, which will furnish eight additional rooms as well as a commodious assembly hall. The building is to be absolutely fire-proof and when completed will be one of the most up-to-date in the Province. The consolidation will mean the closing of seven schools, comprising the Parish of St. Jerusalem, East Settlement, East End School, Upper Lachute, Hill Head and the Seignior. It is expected that Thos. Gore will still be retained, but operated under the Lachute School Board.

The new board of Messrs. J. W. Gall, F. A. Brennan, G. Y. Deacon, Dr. Drew with Dr. J. Mason as chairman, have been energetically working and gathering information for the carrying out of the project. It has meant much sacrifice and effort and the architect is now working on the plans, which when completed will be immediately put into execution as the work must be carried through at the close of the school term.

The Captain's Corner

"BEETLES AND OTHER INSECTS"

Dear Boys :-

Do you like Beetles? I am tempted to ask you this question because now that the brighter days are coming and we are looking forward to summer, we are bound to meet these creatures along with many other insects that seem to take a delight in crossing our path during the warm sunny days.

I asked this question once of a little girl, because I am just as pleased at times to see little girls as I am to pay visits to little boys, but she screwed up her face with an exclamation of disgust and told me that I was a very wicked man to talk about such ugly creatures.

I don't suppose that many of us care very much about INSECTS and yet we must remember that unpleasant as they may be they have their use.

Along with BEETLES who keep very much to the ground, is the FLY who perhaps is only more tiresome because you never know where he is going to settle, which reminds me of a very funny story.

Two flies, one very old and very young, were crawling along the top of a bald headed gentleman and the more experienced insect was giving of his knowledge to the younger one. "Ah! my boy," he said earnestly, "I can well remember when there was a well divided path over the place where we are now travelling."

While I am on stories of this kind, I may as well tell you another one.

An explorer was out in India and one night he put up his mosquito net over his bed in order to save himself from the vicious attacks of those insects. He got into bed, under the impression that all was well, but after he had been asleep for a little while, he felt a stinging sensation and opened his eyes immediately to see that there was a tiny little hole in the mosquito net which only permitted one insect at a time to get through. To his utter amazement he saw a long row of mosquitoes lined up already to take their turn of a bite at him.

Do you like BEETLES or any other INSECTS? Perhaps not but as I have said before they have their use, though its hard to believe it from the stories I have told you above.

Your affectionate friend,

THE CAPTAIN.

Continued

For the next two days Eric made such progress that at the end of that time he was strong enough to join his companions and take up once more his school life. One of the first places that he visited, after being released from lessons, was the scene of the fire from which he so narrowly escaped and as he looked at the blackened walls, he could not help but feel grateful to Timothy for what he had done and he at once made up his mind to go and look for him. He was just about to inquire of some one who might be able to tell him where Timothy was to be found, when Henderson arrived on the scene whistling a gay tune.

"Ah! the wanderer has returned I see and I behold him gazing earnestly upon the scene of his exploits. Why so serious Eric?" he went on patting his friend affectionately on the shoulder. "What great thoughts are troubling your mind this bright and sunny morning. Cheer up my boy, tomorrow like the birds you see around you, we immigrate to our homes but unlike them we bear with us the laurels we have nobly won in our battles over lessons."

Eric looked up with a smile at his irrepressible friend. "Oh, Henderson I can hardly believe that school will be over this afternoon for a whole two months. Isn't it splendid, at least splendid for you because you will get some prizes but none will come my way because of all that," and he pointed to the half burnt out block.

"You forget that, Eric," said Henderson firmly, "and hope for the best. I do not think Mr. Lawrence is going to forget you anyway you have more brains than I have and think of all the wonderful things you are going to do in the future. By the way where is Timothy?"

"Just what I was thinking," answered Eric eagerly, "I do want to find him because I will tell you a secret. I want ever so much to persuade him to come and stay with me at home these holidays. Do you think he will?"

Henderson looked at Eric with a comical expression on his face. "So that is the great idea. I suppose for the future you will never feel safe unless Timothy is with you. Are you expecting to be in any more fires? It seems to me that with such a warm welcome we shall all be getting to-morrow there must be a fire some where or perhaps you may be going fishing, you may need him to hold your hand in case you fall out of the boat."

Eric could not help laughing but he also felt a little indignant and said, "You are making fun of me, Henderson, I feel inclined to fight you."

Henderson struck an attitude and said,

"Oh, valiant knight with eyes of flashing scorn,

He watched his foe with courage newly born,

And said, you laugh, you jeer...."

and interrupted a voice,

"You coward disappear."

Both boys looked round to see that Kenrick had just come up.

"Been looking for you all over the place," said the newcomer with a grin and would not have found you but I heard Henderson spouting his vile poetry upon the gentle Eric. OH, shame Henderson do you want to send him back to a sick bed again but let me tell you the news. Timothy, the great Timothy, has asked for your presence. We are, I believe, to celebrate by a tea party at the close of the afternoon's lessons Eric's recovery from the burning fiery furnace."

"Oh, joy!" that young man exclaimed, "are we really going to have tea with Timothy. Oh splendid! Oh, I am so glad," and he seized hold of Henderson's hand in his excitement.

"Steady now young man," rejoined that maker of bad rhymes, "You know what I told you, he has only asked you to come in order that he can hold your hand and save you from further disaster."

Trudy's Teapot Tales

Continued

"Why, what have we heah?" he queried, beaming at the children over his spectacles.

Danny and Mickey halted again, with scarcely perceptible sighs, whereupon the worthy cleric made a closer inspection of the cart and its contents. "What a charming pitchah!" he exclaimed at length, folding his hands across his vest. "And are you deah children of my parish?" he continued, patting Biddy and Bunny on their heads. All were tongue-tied except Marjory-Ella, summoning her most regal smile she said in her clear little voice, "Oh no, we've only just come here to show our patriotism."

"A charming ideah, indeed," beamed the rector, nodding, this time transferring his attentions to Mick's and Danny's heads much to their embarrassment. "It is indeed delightful, de-light-ful,—to meet with such originality. Well, well, children, I must be going. Good-bye—good-bye," and he put his hand in his pocket and pressed something into Mickey's hand as he hastened away, still murmuring "De-light-ful! De-light-ful!"

The children crowded around the red-faced Mickey, who opened his hand and displayed a bright shilling. "Well!" began Danny.

"Oh", burst in Marjory-Ella, flushing with distress, "I hope people don't think we are doing this for money!" Mick grinned.

"Come on," he said, "perhaps we'll get some more," and the twins giggled happily.

Marjory-Ella regarded them with queenly disapproval.

"That shilling," she said firmly, "must go into the hospital box. Danny, you take care of it."

Mick scowled as he surrendered the coin, and the twins' faces fell. Marjory-Ella weakened. "Well," she amended her royal edict, "we'll see!"

The procession once more set off upon the homeward road. They were not seeking the solitude of fields now, but were taking the direct route back to the woods. Their way now led them past a number of prosperous looking country villas, and they could see quite a number of people in the road and the pretty front garden.

The children had walked a considerable distance during the morning, and at this last stage of the journey the twins showed decided signs of fatigue. They lagged behind, and held a conversation in whispers. Marjory-Ella looked round questioningly.

NOTICE TO MOTORISTS

T. McQuat & Son are now equipped for replacing broken wind shields and windows. No longer necessary to go to Montreal, for these can now be replaced while you wait.

"Are you looking for something in men's clothing, sir?" said the shopwalker to a harassed-looking customer.

Certainly not," was the reply. "I'm looking for something in women's clothing. I've lost my wife."

$40 profit from one Telephone Call

The local dealer had offered Jim Ross a price for his fat steers, but Jim was canny. He thought he ought to get a better price.

So he telephoned in to the stockyards — and found that beef had gone up two cents. He took his steers in that day and made $40 extra profit. The telephone call cost him 35 cents.

No wonder Jim said to his wife that night when he got home for a late supper: "It's lucky we've kept our telephone."

WEALTH IS NOT MONEY

In the scramble we all make to accumulate a good share of this world's wealth, is it after all worth while? The accumulation of money does not bring happiness. The recent happenings give ample proof of this assertion. Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, who could without hesitation put up $50,000 or more for the return of his baby, has for the past five weeks been put through agonizing torment for the safety of the child. Ivan Kreuger, the Swedish match king, ended his own life and the reason put forth is that he was carrying a super-human responsibility. George Eastman, the millionaire kodak manufacturer of Rochester, committed suicide after a year of ill-health. Money has its compensation and its place in this old world, but the accumulation of wealth does not bring happiness. Greater treasures are a baby's laugh about the home, and good health. These things are only of the nature that wealth cannot procure but are much more to be desired.

"What have you got in the shape of cucumbers this morning?" asked the acidulated lady in the market.
"Nothing but bananas, ma'am!" replied the vendor cheerfully.

Hints for Homebodies

Specially written for Readers of The Watchman.
By JESSIE ALLAN BROWN

WHO IS RIGHT?

Queer, the difference of opinion people have. Oh well! That helps to make life more interesting. Wouldn't it be appalling if we all thought the same? I heard two Collegiate principals express their opinions on the same subject. This time it was about books and reading. One said that he did not encourage his pupils to read much because if they did they were apt to pay too much attention to their reading and not enough to their school work.

The other one said that he thought one of the most important things they did in their school was to encourage the love of good books. They had a school library and a very efficient librarian who had great success in moulding the reading taste of the pupils. His idea was that if children were not encouraged and trained to enjoy good books before they were ready to leave high school, they were not apt to develop into readers at a later date. He felt that one of the best things that they could do for their pupils was to give them a taste for good books.

I am inclined to agree with the later principal. One of the best things he can do as an educationalist is to inculcate a love for good books, and the malleable teen-age is the time to do it. It is a most important part of their education. We are too prone to look on passing examinations as the one-all and be-all of education.

DOING AWAY WITH EXAMINATIONS

Ontario has taken a further step in abolishing examinations. Those who do sufficiently well in the term exams in the Middle School will not have to try departmental examinations at the end of the school year. Both the above principals report a very decided improvement in the term work this year. The principal of the largest school mentioned above says that in all his teaching experience he never had anything like the good results that he had at the term examinations at Christmas. Anything that encourages work throughout the year instead of cramming for examinations is to be commended. Promotion without examinations has dangers with unscrupulous teachers. But these are few and far between, as the teaching profession has a high standard of honor. In any case the good done by encouraging work throughout the year will more than balance the occasional pupil who gets by without the proper foundation.

POOR PRUNES

Have you ever cooked prunes that instead of being soft and luscious all over, had tough hard spots? Did you think it was because they were poor prunes? Maybe they were. But more likely it was the fault of the 'poor prune' who did the cooking. It took me a long time to find out what was wrong, but at last I have discovered the trouble. You know that prunes are often stuck together when they come out of the package. If these prunes are put to soak, still stuck together, there will be parts of the prune that are not hydrated, or to put it more plainly, properly soaked. These parts of prunes will be tough after cooking. If you want your prunes to perfection, be careful to separate each prune before soaking. Prunes should be soaked overnight, then cooked slowly in the water in which they were soaked. When they are tender add the sugar and continue cooking for a little longer. Prunes require long slow cooking.

TO WASH SPINACH

Spinach is a tricky vegetable to clean. You think you have every particle of sand out and then when you eat it, you find that there is still some grit present. As one little lad said, he knew there was iron in spinach because you could taste it.

The easiest way to wash spinach is to use two dishes and lift the spinach from one to the other. When the spinach is washed the dirt falls to the bottom. If you pour the water off you send the dirt back through the spinach, but if you lift the spinach out into another dish, you leave the dirt in the bottom. You will find that you will lighten your work and have cleaner spinach into the bargain, if you use this common-sense method.

Spinach requires no water to cook it, other than the water that clings to the leaves after washing it. Start it cooking slowly and you will find that there is sufficient water. Save the spinach water to put in the gravy. It gives it a delicious flavour and saves the precious minerals that otherwise go down the sink.

TOMATO CONSERVE

1 pint canned tomatoes
2 cups diced apples
Juice of 1 lemon
3 cups sugar
Mix ingredients and boil gently until thick, stirring frequently. Bottle while hot.

SPINACH SOUFFLE

1 cup cream sauce
1 cup grated cheese
1 cup spinach
3 eggs
Make a cream sauce, using 2 tablespoons flour, 1 cup milk, salt and pepper. Add cheese and spinach to cream sauce and stir in the beaten egg yolks. Beat the egg whites until stiff and fold them into the mixture. Bake in a moderately hot oven of 375 degrees for 40 minutes.

Farmers Attention!

According to law all syrup cans must be labelled with your name and the net weight of contents. The Watchman Office has prepared an attractive 2-color label, and can be supplied in any quantity at reasonable prices. They are neatly printed in green and beside advertising your product add much to the appearance of the can. Phone your orders to the Watchman Office.

SALES TAX INCREASED PROFESSIONAL COLUMN

Another two per cent, on the sales tax, making it now six per cent, and only two short years ago we were expecting to see it wiped out altogether—comments the Granby Leader. It is no fun for the printer to be obliged to collect from his customer $5.30 for a $5.00 job. Of course he has the option of absorbing the tax himself, but in these days of close figuring no printer can do this and pay his bills. And if he cannot pay his bills how is he going to stay in business? The real hardship, however, is that the job printer has no more right to be classed as a manufacturer than the custom tailor. This was so ruled by one judge, but the government of the day promptly picked out another judge who ruled otherwise. So all we have to do is to collect the tax and plug along through the present depression until we find some day, sooner or later—and we trust it will be sooner—that the saying is still true that "It's a long lane that has no turning".

NO CHANGE!

"It is amusing to read the Opposition journals finding fault with the Government for their determination to push on the business of the House to a speedy completion. A little while ago they found fault with Ministers for their tardiness, while they (the Opposition) were doing all in their power, and are still doing, to frustrate and prolong legislation."

The foregoing item might aptly describe parliamentary tactics in the present session at Ottawa. Strangely, however, it is taken from The Watchman file of 1882 and is an editorial comment just 50 years old. Parliament is evidently bent on upholding its traditions; and even the vital demands of this fast-moving age, cannot eliminate the creaking and the friction of our legislative machinery.

TELLING ALL ONE KNOWS

One day recently a group of town ladies were deploring the lack of what they called "real news" in this paper. They thought half a dozen ladies could dish up more "real news" in half an hour than you could get in this paper in two weeks. May be they were right, at that.
There is a legend about there once being an editor who decided to tell the whole truth about everything, and also tell all he heard. He did it for one issue of the paper. A few hours later the editor mysteriously disappeared, and hasn't been seen since.

NOVEL METHOD STOPS ROAD-RAIL CONFLICT

South Africa's way of eliminating the competition between road and rail transport is quite simple. The trunk lines and good roads are built at right angles, so the roads become feeders to the railways. According to Mr. P. Cotton, of the transportation department of the South African Railways, who was recently in U.S., there are roads running alongside the railways, but their condition does not invite competition. A case was instanced where competition had occurred, but immediately the road was declared closed to such competition by the transport board.

Montreal, April 19.—Visitors from Perth and Smith Falls, and from the north shore of the Ottawa River are expected here during the coming week-end, on special bargain excursion trains run by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Popular demand has been so great from these areas that the movements promise to be well in line with the successes already achieved in other districts in point of numbers.

The hotels are making special rates for the visitors, who will be identified by the return portion of the excursion ticket, which is in itself an inducement to travel. The special from Perth will leave at 12.30 p.m., Saturday, April 23, reaching Smith Falls at 12.55. Fare from both these points will be $2.50 return, while from Merrickville; Bedell; Winchester and Chesterville, it will be only $2.00 for the round trip. Montreal will be reached at 3.50 p.m., with stops at Montreal West and Westmount on the way in.

Returning, the special will leave Winsor Street Station at 9 p.m. on Sunday, April 24, reaching Smith Falls at 11.50 p.m. and Perth at 12.15 a.m., Monday, April 25.

From the Ottawa Valley, the excursion originates at Hull, the train leaving at 1 p.m., stopping at all stations as far as Lachute, which is reached at 3.35 p.m., and pulling into Place Viger Station at 5 p.m. Return will be made leaving Montreal at 8.30 p.m. on Sunday.
Stops will be made at Park Ave.
Station in both directions and the special will reach Hull, with stops at all stations beyond La-chute at 12.30 a.m., Monday 25.

Rates for this excursion are:
from Hull, Gatineau, Buckingham Junction, and Thurso, $2.; round trip; from Plaisance, Papineauville, Montebello and Pointe au Chene $1.50; and from Calumet, Grenville, Staynerville and Lachute $1.00.

Return tickets on both of these excursions will be honored on regular trains on Sunday, but it is anticipated that most of the travellers will avail themselves of the special trains, run at hours to suit their convenience.

TENDERS FOR COAL

SEALED TENDERS addressed to the Acting Chief Purchasing Agent, Department of Public Works, Ottawa, will be received at his office until 12 o'clock noon, (daylight saving), Thursday, May 12, 1932, for the supply of coal for the Dominion Buildings throughout the Province of Quebec.

Specifications and forms of tender can be obtained from the Acting Chief Purchasing Agent,
Department of Public Works,
Ottawa; G. S. Gingras, 150 St.
Paul St., West, Montreal; and Arthur Pouliot, Customs Building, Quebec.

Tenders will not be considered unless made on the forms supplied by the Department and in accordance with departmental specifications and conditions.
The right to demand from the successful tenderer a deposit, not exceeding 10 per cent of the amount of the tender, to secure the proper fulfilment of the contract is reserved.

Experts See No Futurefor Hemp Production

Hemp, once a profitable crop in this country, has dwindled in importance, and the vehicle through which it has lost its market was the principal market in former years. It is estimated that in the early Colonial days it took the product of 1,000 acres of hemp to make the ropes necessary to outfit a single sailing vessel of any size.

Now ships bring fute from India and this importation, due to its much lower price, has driven hemp from the market to a large extent. In spite of this loss of market, glowing pictures of prosperity to be had from hemp growing are painted for farmers who have had no experience with the crop. Agents with something to sell have induced many farmers to attempt crops, but little hope of success is held out by Department of Agriculture officials, who point out that by no means is the general run of land suitable for hemp production. Even if it were, there still remains the fact that the demand for hemp is more than filled by present sources, with the result that the prices are too low to make a crop an attractive proposition financially for the grower.—Washington Star.

Iguassu Falls One of Wonders of the World

The Iguassu falls of Brazil are said to be the most wonderful in the world. In the Wide World Magazine R. Halliburton writes: "Half a mile away a vast mass of water seemed to flow forth from the sky. It was a river, which, after wandering quietly through the forests of Brazil, had come at length to the edge of a great plateau. There it girds itself for a grand climax to its career—a climax so spectacular that no one who sees can ever forget that this river surpasses all others in the sublime beauty of its passing, leaving behind one of the wonders of the world. With one mighty charge along a front 10,000 feet in length it hurls over the brink, in superb 200 foot cataracts of foam. Niagara may have greater volume, Victoria greater height, but for artistry and coloring Iguassu stands alone."

Historic Eastern Spot

Shimoda, on the eastern coast of the Izu peninsula, came into the American spotlight in the middle of the last century, when a treaty was ratified there which first opened Japan to foreign trade.

In 1853 Capt. Matthew Galbraith Perry, United States navy, sailed up the bay of Sagami to Shimoda, went ashore with 300 men and delivered letters from President Fillmore to a representative of the Japanese emperor. In the spring of 1855 the first treaty between America and Japan, providing, among other things, for the opening of Shimoda to American trading vessels, was proclaimed.

America's first diplomatic representative to Japan resided at Shimoda. It was a tidal wave and earthquake that caused the diplomatic offices to be removed from Shimoda to Yokohama in 1859.

Pretty Indian Legend

The custom of sacrificing a beautiful maiden by setting her over Niagara falls in a canoe was practiced by the Indian tribes about the falls. The maiden selected paddled a white canoe, filled with fruits and flowers, over the falls. It was counted a great honor to be chosen as the sacrificial victim. Once the only daughter of a Seneca chief was selected by the gathered tribes. Her father loved her dearly, yet he showed no sign of grief. The revels continued during the whole day, and when night came and the moon rose the girl paddled her canoe toward the falls, amidst much tumult and shouting. Suddenly another white canoe darted from the opposite bank. It contained the chief, her father; the canoes met, and together they went to their death over the falls.

English Official Mark

The "broad arrow," used as a distinguishing mark on British government property, was the "cognizance" or heraldic symbol of Henry, Viscount Sidney, who was master-general of the ordnance from 1693 to 1703, says an article in the Montreal Family Herald. In time it came to be used by other government departments besides the ordnance board (now the war office), with which it first was associated. Curiously enough, the "broad arrow" was a symbol of power and authority among the ancient Druids. It is felony to obliterate this official mark.

Not a Major Crime

A soldier walked rapidly from a railroad train in London, gazing nervously down at a suitcase he carried. A railway detective looked at him for a moment and then leaped in pursuit. Blood was dropping from the bag. A few days later the soldier was found guilty by court-martial. The charge was stealing six pounds of fresh meat from the company kitchen.

Careless Pedestrians

In Nuremberg they seem to have hit upon a plan which secures some lasting results. Any person who drops a paper or an empty cigarette box in the street is liable to a fine of one mark. A watchful policeman steps up, names the offense, collects the quarter and hands over an official receipt for it. The streets of Nuremberg are astonishingly free from litter.

Coming Events.

IN MEMORIAM

ASHE,—In memory of a dearly beloved wife, (Cecelia Delavigne), who passed away on the 17th. April 1930. Sadly missed by her many friends.

BEERS,—In loving memory of my dear daughter, Lila, who passed away April 25th. 1930. 'Tis lonesome here without you, There is such a vacant place, For we never hear your footsteps Nor see your smiling face. As we loved you, so we miss you, In our memory you are dear, Loved, remembered, longed for always, Bringing many a silent tear. Mother.

BEERS,—In loving memory of my dear sister, Lila.

She heard the voice of her Saviour say, Come unto me and rest; Longing to live, yet willing to die,

She knew the Lord meant best And well prepared for her eternal home Peacefully departed and left us alone,

Oh! how lonesome you have left us, How we miss your loving face;

But in the heaven we hope to meet you And share your joy in the blessed place

Jessie.

BEERS,—In loving memory of my dear sister Lila, Mrs. Donald Beers, who departed this life, April 25th., 1930.

In the graveyard softly sleeping Where the flowers gently wave,

Lies the one we loved so truly, In her lonely, silent grave.

Mary.

BEERS,—In loving memory of my dear sister Lila.

A sweet memory always with us A heartache that never grows less.

Gladys.

KEARNS,—In loving memory of a dear husband and father. Hubert Kearns, who passed away April 19th., 1926. Ever remembered by his loved ones.

WITH THE BOY SCOUTS

Would You Live to be 100?

All are familiar with the exponents of long life who credit their full years to smoking, or not smoking; to a drink a day, or an apple a day, or an onion a day; or to being blessedly single or blessedly married. The newest recipe, and promising a full hundred years' reward, comes from an authority from whom it seems we should have heard previously,—Lord Baden-Powell head of the world Scout Movement.

The promise is made in a characteristically breezy letter to the Editor of 'Camping', incident to denial of a rumor that the hero of Mafeking had discontinued sleeping out of doors.

Writes B.-P.

"Dear Mr. Editor,—I am sorry but I'm going to have you up for libel, slander and malicious persiflage, seeing that in the February issue of CAMPING you make two definite statements about me which are terminological inexactitudes of the first order.

"1. I haven't had a severe cold—I never catch cold. I did get a touch of the 'flu round about the middle region for a few days, but it wasn't what you would call a 'cold.' People who sleep out of doors don't catch colds.

"2. As to my advancing years making it unwise for me to sleep out of doors, they would make me look darned silly if they succeeded in driving me indoors to sleep. My goodness! Whatever put that idea into your—why, man,—I—me—sleep in a nasty, stuffy house! Not I.

"What has 'over 70' got to do with it? I've learned wisdom in my 75 years, and that tells me that if every one slept out—and especially on these jolly frosty nights—we should all live to 100 or more; but as this would overcrowd the club it is perhaps just as well that some should sleep in and die early—say at 90 or so. But for me to sleep in! Not if I know it!

Yours, BADEN-POWELL.

A Dog Show by Mail.

A dog show by mail was a unique event recently staged by the Lone Scouts of Ontario. The dogs were not mailed. The boys were in snapshots and a 200-word description indicating breed (if any), size colour, work done on the farm, tricks, and general character. There was keen competition.

Melba Approved Whistling.

During the recent newspaper "whistling idiot" debate Lord Baden-Powell recalled a Scout concert given at Albert Hall by Madame Melba "at which there was some excellent chorus whistling." B.-P. declared the art should not be allowed to die "because of the scarcity of tunes in modern music."

Disturbed Game Birds are Found.

CORRESPONDENCE

The Editor,

Lachute Watchman,

To the Liberals of Argenteuil

Again, through the columns of your paper, I appeal to the people of my party. By the members of the Liberal Committee, at their various county assemblies, I have been called a traitor, a trouble-maker, and termed "out of order." I should like my accusers, with their Squatters' Sovereignty, to come out with proof of these assertions. For they have never yet proved such accusations; yet seemingly they do not know enough to publicly rescind them.

I have repeatedly clamored at our gatherings for rotation of office. But I am told that "this is not the time or place for such things." In the columns of your paper, Mr. Editor, I again ask these gentlemen kindly to reply, and tell me precisely when, in the last quarter of a century, has the "proper time and place" been afforded to the people of this County to ask for their rights when the freedom of speech cannot be denied?

Irrespective of the constitution of Great Britain, which grants this privilege to every man, whether clad in tarpaulin or broadcloth,—the usurpers at our public meetings deny us this freedom of speech, which our very ancestors fought and bled for. Daniel-Webster said freedom of speech is a "fire-side privilege," a "home-bred right"; and the word Liberty is meaningless when the right to utter our opinion in public ceases to exist.

Asking for the minutes of our former meeting, we have been told publicly "There is no Minutes before the floor". Be it known, the minutes of our public meetings are the very history of our country, and should be sacredly guarded as references. Let the man who said "No Minutes before the floor" come forward; I should like to meet him, for he who denies me the rights of a British subject when there is no writ of Attainder against me, denies the right of a British subject to himself.

Are we going to stand by and excuse a palpable outrage on the rights of speech, by implying that only a particular type of person should exercise that right? It would be no vindication to assert that certain gentlemen of distinction, eminent for their learning and ability, are permitted to express their opinions. This would add insult to injury. There can be no freedom of speech when any man, however, elevated or however humble, however young or however old, is over-ruled by force and compelled to suppress his honest sentiments.

Equally clear is the right to Hear. To suppress free speech violates the right of the hearer as well as that of the speaker. It is just as criminal to rob a man of these rights as it is to rob him of his money. And when a man is allowed to speak merely because he is rich and powerful, it only aggravates the crime of denying that right to the poor and humble. Principle must rest upon its own proper basis, and until the right is accorded to the humblest as freely as to the most exalted citizen, freedom is a mockery; for the simple quality of Manhood is the basis of this right.

So down with the domination of private interest over the public good!

"If all is not false, then I advance
A fool must now and then be right, by chance."

C. F. KAINS.

POST OFFICE REGULATION

If the Secretary of State for the Dominion of Canada insists in putting into force a recent Federal Order-in-Council it will hasten the day of the disappearance of the rural postmaster. The order decrees that postmaster shall be his only job. He cannot make ends meet by store keeping, trading horses or doing anything else on the side. Perhaps the day is coming when every part of Canada will be so honey-combed with rural deliveries from large central post offices, that the "half-way" rural P. O. will become unnecessary; but that day has not arrived yet so maybe the soft pedal will be put on the Order-in-Council.

LEARNING TO ECONOMIZE

The incomes of most of us have been seriously reduced, salaried people, business people farmers and wage-earners many are quite up against it with no income at all, and have to live on the surplus of former years. During the days of prosperity money came easily, and we became careless in our spending and extravagant in our imagined needs. What were regarded as luxuries but a few years ago, we have come to regard as necessities. Now with our reduced income we must give up many things, and it is interesting to observe the reactions of different persons to the enforced economy. Some become bitter, and blame the social order, the government, and everything but their own lack of foresight in not providing for the rainy day. Some are unable to readjust their spending to their reduced income, and are trying to carry on their old schedule, until the bills come in, and the bank account is exhausted and necessity compels them to call a halt, and there are those who actually get a good deal of fun out of budgeting their reduced income. They consider and weigh values plan what is necessary and find that after all a lowered income need not effect the lasting fundamentals of a happy home.

BRITISH PLANTS IN CANADA

The establishment of branch plants by British and foreign firms continues to be an interesting feature of the Canadian industrial situation. A wide range of products is handled by these new industries, including vegetable products, animal products, textiles, wood and paper products, iron and iron products non-ferrous metals, non-metallic minerals, and chemicals and allied products.

The preponderance of United States over British branch plant is, naturally, strongly marked, and it is expected that this will continue to be the case for some time to come. United States industrial firms are keenly alive to the value of the Canadian branch plant as a means of access to outside markets. But according to an observer closely in touch with British industry and with conditions in Canada, British interest in the Canadian industrial field may be expected to become an increasingly important factor in the situation during the next decade. According to this authority, more British firms will investigate Canada with a view to branch plant establishment during the next two years than ever before and more British plants will actually be established during the next decade than has been the case heretofore.

CHICKEN SHORTCAKE

2 cups pastry flour
(or 1 1/2 cups of bread flour)
3 teaspoons Magic Baking Powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
4 tablespoons shortening
1 egg 1/2 cup water

Sift dry ingredients; add shortening and mix in thoroughly with a steel fork; add beaten egg and sufficient water to make soft dough. Roll or pat out with hands on floured board. Cut out with large floured biscuit cutter, or half fill greased muffin rings which have been placed on greased baking pan. Bake in hot oven at 475° F. about 12 minutes. Split and butter while hot, and fill with hot creamed chicken. Makes 6 shortcakes.

THE MASTER MIND

Novelized by Marvin Dana,
Author of "Within the Law,"
From the Successful Play
by Daniel D. Carter

shameful death. Yet somehow, now in the hour of his victory, there was something less poignant in his emotion than ever hitherto. Andrew marvelled at this with a curious feeling of alarm over his own lack of sensibility. He could not understand how the great passion of his life should be thus lessened. True, there had been years intervening since first death broke in on love and turned its vital forces into hate against another. Yet the mere passage of time could not explain this change, for his hate had not moderated in the same period. On the contrary, it had increased even, never losing sight of its virulence, rather adding always to it. Still, Andrew puzzled over this startling problem. It was inconceivable that in the moment of conquest the very motive itself of all his struggles to this end should show a weakening. It was inconceivable, indeed—nevertheless it was true. The Master Mind felt a sickness of heart as he searched himself anew for some clue to an understanding of the thing that had come to pass, for he knew that somehow his own soul had betrayed him.

The thoughts of the Master Mind turned presently to Lucene. The subject was strangely distasteful to him now, yet he held to it, as if its fascination were superior to a will hitherto indomitable. He recalled his first purposes concerning this girl, the project of making her available as a weapon against his enemy. He had never faltered in that purpose. His first plan had been accomplished in its entirety—save the consummation, and that was now at hand and sure beyond peradventure of doubt. But, while the primal intention had been thus achieved, there had been so much more—oh, vastly more! He had become the creator of a radiant personality where had been only a very pretty, illiterate waif. He had caused the delicate fashioning of a woman refined and beautiful far beyond the ordinary. He had found delight in his responsibility toward her. He had had pride in a result that had not been save for his direction. The gratitude of the girl warmed his heart. The warped egotism of the man did not permit him accurately to gauge the depths of his injustice toward her in making her life a pawn in his game of hate. On the contrary, he was able by some singular quirk of intelligence to take full satisfaction for himself in all his favours to her and to disregard almost completely the ultimate ruin of her life that must be his handiwork. He failed utterly to appreciate his own guilt toward her where the very development of her nature which he had wrought would make her final grief most dreadful, an anguish infinitely beyond the capabilities of torment possessed by Maggie Flint. I have said that he failed utterly. That is not quite true. He failed, indeed, but not utterly. Sometimes an instinct toward the truth flashed on him, but he shut his mental eyes to such illumination. He preferred the darkness rather than the light—that chiefest sin—and the might of his will gave to him as he chose.

But tonight the Master Mind found it difficult to hold his eyes shut. Since he had seen the wife in her agony over what had come to pass through his machinations he was unable to ignore as before this wretchedness of his making for her. He could not escape realization of what all this must mean to her.

In his perception now he learned, too, as never yet in the years of association with her, how dear she was become to him. He altered no whit in his resolve of vengeance on the man whom he held responsible for his brother's death, but at least he was forced to admit the torment it must inflict on her and as well the distress to himself that her suffering must cause.

And was hate itself left in all its former savagery? The Master Mind shrank appalled from that question, which offered to make a mock of all his toll. He thrust it from him, shuddering. He jumped up and strode to and fro in a revolt against all things. Then presently he recollected his energies, set firm control over his emotion and determined to go forward undeviatingly as if none of these strange things had entered at the eleventh hour to turn the apples of vengeance to Dead sea fruit. So, with a curious businessness that was foreign to him, out with no least weakening of his purpose, he descended the stairs, went to the library door, opened it gently and stood on the threshold, smiling tolerantly on the assembly before him.

It was Wainwright whom Andrew first addressed, speaking in accents of cynical amusement.

"Ah, I see! You are engaged in that occupation so familiar to those of your profession, tampering with the witnesses. It must seem to you quite like old times, I fancy. You can almost fancy yourself district attorney again." Then his gaze went to the three criminals, who refused steadfastly to encounter his eyes.

It was Blount who afforded an unexpected diversion. He stood up and faced the Master Mind angrily.

"You've got no kick comin'," he snarled. "You ain't been on the level with us, see?"

Andrew assumed a manner of patience.

"How so?" he inquired.

Walter broke into the conversation. "Hub—you!" he ejaculated, wrathfully. "And with a Pinkerton right here in the house every day."

Andrew, however, received the triple accusation with equanimity.

"Have you as yet," he asked generally, "suffered any evil consequences from the presence of this Pinkerton in the house?" Of a sudden he threw off the pretense of mildness. His eyes flamed; his mouth drew into cruel lines. His voice was grating, surcharged with menace. "And so you think you can desert me with impunity, do you? You—desert me, at the bidding of this man here!" He made a contemptuous gesture toward Wainwright. "Oh, you poor, blind worms!" "Well, what could you expect?" Walter exclaimed. "You double crossed us, didn't you?"

"No, I did not," was the impetuous reply. "Why"—Andrew checked himself abruptly, as if disdainful of yielding to anger because of such as these rebellious tools whom he despised. "But I'll not attempt to reason with fools," he continued arrogantly. "In three words, I could make you see that no one on earth could save you from the consequences of my wrath—least of all this incompetent protector whom his own folly has provided for you, Mr. Wainwright. But you have made your own beds—now you shall lie on them. Understand that, please! I have said it—I, the Master Mind."

CHAPTER XVIII.

A Lunatic.

AT that name the three criminals blanched and trembled. Abruptly, then, they knew why it was that they had been so subservient to the man of mystery—it was the inevitable tribute of the outlaw to the chief, the instinctive yielding of homage from their kind to the supreme in crime. It never occurred to them to doubt the truth of this revelation. Wainwright had avoided any explanation to them concerning Andrew's identity.

"Don't be frightened by a name," he cried, sharply. "Why, you're as silly as children scared by the bogey man. He has determined already to throw you to the wolves. But if you still stand by me, between us we shall send him where he can no longer injure you or me or any other human being."

It was evident that the force and conviction with which Wainwright presented his plea were not without a considerable effect on the alarmed trio.

"It is really a farce," Andrew said. "And you actually expect to do this thing, to dispose of me thus completely, with the aid of these persons here assembled—this imposing array?" He pointed scornfully at the trio of criminals, who winced despite their new access of courage. "Well truly I am interested," he continued, jeeringly. "I am, in fact, so much interested that I am disposed to give you all the assistance in my power. And let me add, Mr. Wainwright, that I await your pleasure in this proceeding with all the more anticipation of agreeable entertainment because I know out of my own experience how accustomed you are to dealing with crooks to further your own ends."

"I venture to promise that you will not be disappointed," Wainwright rejoined, with mordant emphasis. The entrance of Parker halted him, who said:

"Dr. Forbes is here, sir."

Now a little gleam of triumph shone in Wainwright's eyes, which Andrew, watching narrowly, detected.

"One moment, Parker," Wainwright directed. Then he regarded the Master

CANADA RECEIVES VARIETY OF WEST INDIES NATURE PRODUCTS

Halifax, N. S., April—A peculiarity of the fruit and vegetable crops of Bermuda and the West Indies are their successive dates of maturity. The tomato crop of the Bahamas in the western group of the West Indies Islands is about done for the season, but tomatoes from Islands in the eastern group, Montserrat, Antigua and St. Vincent, will continue to arrive by Canadian National Steamships until the middle of May. By this time Bermuda will commence shipping tomatoes and it is expected that island will have a good crop. Bermuda is now making heavy shipments of carrots and heavy shipments of cabbage and beets are also expected. The Bermuda onion crop is estimated at 30,000 crates, an increase of 50 per cent over last year, and the island will also have about 40,000 crates of celery, the first arrivals of which may be expected early in May. The Jamaican orange season is about over but grapefruit is still arriving from there and also from Trinidad and Dominica. The grapefruit is of the finest quality and from reports is selling well.

Lesson for April 24

ABRAM'S GENEROSITY TO LOT

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 13:5-15.
GOLDEN TEXT—Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honour preferring one another.
PRIMARY TOPIC—A Generous Uncle.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Abram Divides With His Nephew.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—An Adventure in Friendship.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Too Generous to Quarrel.

Apparently a famine was sent upon Canaan soon after Abram entered it. Because of this famine, he went into Egypt. Doubtless the famine was sent because of the wickedness of the Canaanites, but it was so timed as to develop the graces of Abram's heart. He needed to be taught the fact of his own weakness in order to fully realize God's power and faithfulness. It would have been far better for him to have remained in Canaan with its famine, knowing that he was where the Lord had led him, than to go into Egypt.

1. Abram and Lot Go Out of Egypt (vv. 1-4).

1. Thrust out by Pharaoh (v. 1 cf. 12:18, 19). By prevarication Abram deceived the king concerning the relation of Sarai to himself, but when the truth was known that she was his wife instead of his sister, Pharaoh thrust him out. This is not the last time that a child of God was rebuked and thrust out by a man of the world.

2. His wealth greatly increased (v. 2). Although Abram was away from the place to which God had called him, his temporal possessions increased. Increase in riches is no sign that a man is in fellowship with God.

3. He went back to Bethel (vv. 2, 4). Although he had declined from the pathway of faith and had suffered shame and humiliation before a heathen king, when thrust out he had the good sense to go into the place of the altar, where his tent had been at the beginning. It was here that he called upon the name of the Lord. There is no record of his having done so while in Egypt. His Egypt experience cost him much spiritually, though he became rich there. He seems even to have lost his influence over Lot.

II. Abram and Lot Separate (vv. 5-13).

1. Strife between their herdmen (vv. 5-7). The goods of both Abram and Lot greatly increased. This increase in goods threatened strife between Abram and Lot. When they attempted to settle down, trouble arose between their herdmen. This is the first record of relatives quarrelling over financial matters. Riches often interfere with friendship. They engender greed and selfishness in men, and kindle jealousy and strife between them. For the chosen of God this to quarrel is utter folly, and criminal, especially when the enemies of the Lord's people look on.

2. Abram's magnanimous behavior (vv. 8, 9). He made to Lot a generous proposition which relieved the disagreeable situation. Lot was allowed his choice. Though he owed everything to Abram, he was allowed to choose that which suited him best. Abram's behavior in this case is a fine example of the art of living together peacefully.

3. Lot's selfish choice (vv. 10-13). His selfish heart prompted him to grasp for the best. His action shows that his stay in Egypt was ruinous to him. One cannot go into Egypt without being affected by it. This was a fatal choice for Lot. Though he for a while prospered and even was elevated to high official position, it was an expensive undertaking for him.

III. Abram Delivers Lot (14:11-16). Lot, with all his goods, was taken away when the confederate kings came against Sodom. Though Lot's trouble was the result of his selfish choice, Abram's magnanimity of soul expressed itself by taking up arms to deliver him from the oppressor.

Lot is an example of one saved so as by fire (1 Cor. 3:11-15). He is an example of the man who allows the world to get the better of him. He set his affections upon earthly things, and the time came when he had to separate from them. The world and its lusts pass away, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever (1 John 2:17-17). Once his money and his family were in Sodom, he endured its wickedness while longing to escape from it (II Pet. 2:6-8).

In contrast with Lot who suffered from his evil choice Abram was greatly prospered. He grew rich in temporal things while at the same time he was rich toward God. Abram's whole life shows that those who make obedience to God first get the needed worldly things (I Kings 3:5-13; Matt. 6:33).

GEMS OF THOUGHT

No man is hurt but by himself.—Diogenes.

Education does not commence with the alphabet; it begins with a mother's look, with a father's nod of approbation.

Souls are made sweet by taking the acid fruits out, and by putting something in—a great love, a new spirit, the spirit of Christ.

Weekly Press Convenes in Montreal

Visit Paid to the Sun Life and to Beauharnois

Among the numerous questions discussed in the Mount Royal Hotel by members of the Ontario-Quebec division of the Canadian Weekly Newspapers Association gathered at their fourth annual meeting, was that concerning the prices of printing. A fair representation of the 80 members present gave their ideas on the subject, most of them contending that the time is not yet ripe for a reduction in prevailing printing costs.

The one-day meeting opened with the registration of members, the reading of the minutes of the last meeting, and the submission of various committee reports. The question period in the afternoon, however, saw the members getting down to business and discussing leading questions of interest to their profession.

A pleasing feature of the morning session was the kindly invitation extended by the President of the Sun Life, Mr. T. B. Macaulay for the party to be his guests at luncheon in the beautiful new home of the Company on Windsor Square, now almost completed. At the close of the luncheon the host took occasion to impart certain information about the building, and the guests were later taken on a tour of inspection, which proved undoubtedly a revelation to the visitors, as they went from floor to floor in the second largest building in the British Empire.

Mr. Macaulay said they had built for the future, although at the present time their staff only numbered 2500 at the head office. But they have 29 other branches throughout the Dominion. This building the President informed us was absolutely fireproof and the Company have over $200,000,000 invested in the Dominion in which they pay upwards of $600,000 annually in taxes.

A feature of the afternoon meeting was the presentation of an oil painting to William C. Riddell, retired publicity director of the C.N.R. at Toronto. The presentation was made by Malcolm MacBeth, of the Milverton Sun, and president of the Ontario Education Association. Mr. MacBeth paid glowing tribute to the work done in Ontario and Quebec by Mr. Riddell and to his splendid co-operation at all times with the newspapers.

The open forum in the morning was in charge of W. C. Walls of the Barrie (Ont.) Examiner and that in the afternoon under the direction of Adam Sellar, of the Huntingdon Gleaner.

A. W. Marsh, president, of the Amherstburg Echo, was in the chair.

Hon. Athanase David, Provincial Secretary, made a brief appearance shortly after the opening of the afternoon meeting. The Minister paid a glowing tribute to the work being carried on by the weekly newspapers and stated that their importance could not be minimized. The men engaged in the weekly newspaper business were all experts, he averred, and were to be congratulated on the high standards they had set themselves and which they were rigorously following out despite the present hard times.

The election of officers which brought the afternoon session to a close resulted as follows: Honorary past presidents, D. Williams, of the Collingwood Bulletin; George Legge, of the Granby Leader-Mail; A. W. March, of the Amherstburg Echo; president, C. Labranche, of the St. Maurice Valley Chronicle, Three Rivers; vice-president, C. V. Charters, of the Conservator of Brampton; secretary-treasurer, Adam Sellar, of

Lachute Academy Receives Hockey Cup

A cup presented by Mr. Albt. G. Giles to winners in the High School Hockey League for Lower Ottawa Valley, has been awarded to Lachute Academy as champions in this series, and now stands on view in Geo. Y. Deacon's Show-window. It is a handsome silver cup, suitably engraved, and will be open for competition each year. If won by the same team successively for three years, it will then remain in permanent possession of that team.

Mr. Albert Giles, one of the representatives of our local firm of Ayers Limited, is an old Academy scholar. The fact that his former school should have won the cup in its first year of presentation is gratifying, both to the winners and to the donor of the award. It is hoped that Lachute will follow its good start, holding the lead again in subsequent seasons. The Academy's record in competitive sport is becoming, regardless of material awards and trophies, a source of pride to all interested. Every encouragement towards the boys' higher accomplishment in sport is duly recognized and appreciated, including this last presentation for the winter's success in hockey.

Mother Dead and Son Seriously Burned

Disastrous Fire Destroys Calumet Farm Home

A sad fatality occurred at the farm of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Sugars on Tuesday, when their home was destroyed by fire and Mrs. Sugars was burned to death.

The farm is situated about three miles north of Calumet. It appears that the family had retired as usual, and in the early hours of the morning they were awakened by heavy smoke and going downstairs they found the kitchen ablaze. The flames spread quickly and in efforts of rescue, both father and son were severely burned, the injuries to the son William being such as to necessitate his removal to hospital, where he is still in a critical condition.

New Hydrants Effective in Town

A test-out of the pressure obtained from the new Hydrants which now connect with a six inch pipe into the 8 inch main instead of a four inch connection as previously used, proved very satisfactory when made on Wednesday last. A much stronger and higher stream was obtained.

The town has also purchased a site from Mr. L. Barron, which will be used as a Quarry so that the machinery now on hand will be put to use and crushed stone now imported will be made here, thus giving further work to our town men.

The Huntingdon Gleaner.

The day was brought to a successful close by the annual banquet, over which the newly-elected president, C. E. Labranche, presided. Guest speaker for the evening was H. Grattan O'Leary special editorial writer on the istic activities in and around the staff of The Ottawa Journal.

Mr. O'Leary whose journal-Parliament buildings, at Ottawa date back to 1911 gave an informal talk on the subject, "A few memories of 20 years in the Parliamentary Press Gallery." He signalled the fact that in 1911, when he first went to the

Impressive Address at Oddfellows' Annual Service

Members of Laurentian Lodge No. 14, I.O.O.F., attended Divine Service on Sunday last, marching from their Hall to the Lachute Auditorium, where the Rev. H. Cousens gave a stirring sermon, taking as his text (Mark III, v. 21)—And when his friends heard of it they went out to lay hold on him: for they said, He is beside himself.

When a man acts differently because he thinks differently from the average run of men, it is not uncommon to have them consider him either eccentric or a fool. Thus it was that Jesus was considered eccentric. From the poor, the sinners, and the outcasts, whom he made his friends—enemies claimed that he must be out of his mind.

The speaker did not go so far as to aver that Jesus was the first Oddfellow, but he identified Christ's idealism, His eccentricity, with the three outstanding ideals of the Order.

The Stigma of Insanity

Eccentricity and foolishness are synonymous terms with many people who are superficial observers of life. But this is by no means right, as a man may be eccentric and yet a long way from being a fool.

An eccentric person is one whose centre of interest is different from that of another with the result that his activities describe an altogether different arc or circle from other people's. Yet it is from these eccentric people that most of the mechanical and scientific progress of the world is due.

Some of the great names in history represent eccentricity. Moses, Plato, St. Paul, Capernicus, Galileo, Christopher Columbus, Martin Luther, Abraham Lincoln, David Livingstone, Pasteur, Einstein, Edison, etc.

To be different from the common run is not a mark of foolishness; it is a mark of greatness. To do blindly what other men do is a mark of weakness.

Jesus was an eccentric, the circle of His interest and activity was so much different from the common run that when His enemies suggested to Mary His Mother that He was possessed with a devil she readily believed them and desired to induce Him to leave His work and return home.

(a) He had a peculiar taste in the choice of His friends. He chose twelve of the most common and unprepossessing individuals to share the sanctity and inspiration of His friendship, and to be the object of His careful and especial instruction.

He did not hesitate to associate with the untouchables. He dared to defy the taboos of the recognized social and religious orders. He dined with publicans, he defended weak sinners, and knowing what they were he dared to permit them to give public demonstrations of their affection.

Whatever else may have aroused the hostility and enmity of the of the ruling classes, His choice of friends was sufficient to condemn Him.

Akin to His friendship was His remarkable love which moved in a different direction from the usual and common course.

Material wealth, political power and social prestige did not interest nor attract Him.

He lived close to the heart of nature and loved the things that God made. He saw and loved the beauty of God's handiwork.

God made man, so He looked for the beautiful in man and found it in the most unlikely of places. Among the rich and affluent He found good and beautiful souls, also among the poor and outcast. He endeavored to break through the scale of social and religious formality.

Children were not rated as very important outside the natural love of their parents yet Jesus loved them because He saw the qualities of simplicity and sincerity.

The lilies of the field stirred the soul of Jesus more deeply than the vision of Solomon in all his glory. He enjoyed sitting at the lakeside and watching the glorious sunset. It formed a

Lachute Golf and Tennis Club

Directors Plan for Active and Enjoyable Season

A meeting of the Directors of Lachute Golf and Tennis Club was held last Thursday the 21st. for the purpose of making necessary plans for an active Golf season. The officers in charge this year are the following: President, Mr. W. J. Bryant; Vice-President, Mr. L. L. Legault; Sec.-Treasurer, Mr. P. G. Roy; Captains, Rev. H. Cousens and Mr. W. J. Bryant; Manager Mr. J. R. Charron. There is no change on the Board of Directors.

The Membership Fees for 1932 are as follows:—Men $10; Ladies $5; Juniors $5; School and College Boys and Girls $5; Socials $3; Family $30; Green-Fees $1; Guest-Fees 50 cents.

Persons wishing to join are requested to pay their fees to the three following members, who are authorized to collect and issue membership cards, viz: J. R. Charron at the Provincial Bank; J. E. Middleton at the Bank of Montreal and P. G. Roy at the Dominion Shuttle Co., Lachute Mills.

Men are presently working on the course, and the playing of Golf will commence shortly.

The date of opening will be announced later. On account of the exceptionally low rates for this year a large membership is expected and there is no doubt that every member will enjoy a good season of Golf and Tennis at very little expense.

Quebec Farmers Claim Exemption

New Bankruptcy Measure Will Work Hardship, Says Godbout

Objections by Quebec farmers to the new Bankruptcy Act were expressed before a special committee of the House last week by Hon. A. Godbout, Minister of Agriculture. It was asked that Quebec farmers should be exempted from the act.

Mr. Godbout told the committee that the great majority of the farmers are against the Bankruptcy Act on the ground that it operates as an impairment of their credit. Even if a farmer went into bankruptcy, he would not be discharged in full. Mr. Godbout took the view generally that Quebec is in a different position from the other provinces. It operates under the Civil Code. Moreover—and this point was stressed particularly—the Quebec farmer is accustomed to borrow money on his personal, moral credit from small lenders or rentiers, and not from banks or business people. The local lenders are often scared by the Bankruptcy Act and will not lend money at all.

As the act was held to operate generally to the impairment of the farmers' credit, Mr. Godbout advocated that so far as Quebec is concerned, farmers might be excluded, and pointed out that, while a farmer cannot be forced into bankruptcy, he can assign voluntarily. He had heard of trustees offering a commission of $100 to handle such a failure. Mr. Godbout answered a number of questions by members.

John Hackett, M.P., committee chairman, pointed out that

New Bank of Montreal Manager

In paying a visit to the editor of the Watchman Mr. G. Maxwell Sinn, of Westmount, who is well-known to the people of this district, through his efforts in connection with the proposed power development at Carillon, a few years ago, made reference among other things to the appointment of Mr. H. K. Haller, manager of the Bank of Montreal at Arnprior, Ont., to the same position in this town.

Mr. Sinn spoke very highly of Mr. Haller, not only as a banker but also as what he termed an all round citizen. "I have known Mr. Haller from the first day of his appointment as manager at Arnprior, and that is some years ago. And I have had occasion, through business association, to keep in touch with him ever since, and in all cases he gave the same attention and courtesy as if I were doing business on a large scale. I am not surprised that the business men of Arnprior paid Mr. Haller a farewell banquet, in which they deeply regretted his departure, and took the occasion to wish him continued success and promotion with the great organization in which he is employed."

"Lachute is to be congratulated upon the acquisition of Mr. and Mrs. Haller as residents," concluded Mr. Sinn, "and I feel sure, that they will prove just as valuable to your town as they have done during their years of residence at Arnprior."

Urges Pooling of Operation of C. N.R. and C. P. R.

J. T. Hackett Suggests Eighty Millions Might be Saved Yearly

Pooling of the operations of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways, with a resultant saving of possibly $80,000,000 a year, was the suggestion thrown into the budget debate in the House of Commons recently by Hon. J. T. Hackett, (Cons., Stanstead.) The appointment of an operating board to run the two systems as one, with consequent elimination of waste and duplication, was held up as a possible temporary solution of the serious transportation problem with which Canada is faced. While operations would be pooled, the roads would remain as distinct entities. The properties would stay just as they are today.

Full Trains on C.P.R. Excursion

The C. P. R. week-end excursion to Montreal, was well patronized, two special trains, with full complement of passengers being run to accommodate the rush. Many hundreds of trippers from this County, and along the line, and also a number from across the Ottawa River, took advantage of the low fares. In addition to appreciable business attracted by the railways in these recent excursions, the hotels and business houses of Montreal have doubtless also profited by out-of-town patronage.

In Quebec there is a class of people—rentiers—who are little known in other provinces. A farmer, getting on in years, sells his farm or gives it to his sons and moves to the village where in small amounts, he lends the few thousand dollars that he has accumulated. The loans go mostly to farmers. The Bankruptcy Act tends to underline this source of credit.

Hon. Ernest Lapointe agreed that, as a matter of general principle, Federal laws should be of general application. But the position of Quebec being peculiar he agreed with the Provincial Minister that farmers there might be exempted from the provision of the statute.

Death Removes Former Residents

THE LATE MRS. KETTYLE
After ailing for some little time, affected by heart trouble, Mrs. H. Kettyle, passed away on April 22nd., at the home of her daughter, Mrs. R. Tipping, of Midland, Ont. She was formerly Miss Jemima Morrison, and was born on the old homestead at Jerusalem, on August 31st., 1870.

After her husband's death, some two years ago, she had lived with her daughters, Mrs. L. Morris, of Lachute, and Mrs. R. Tipping, of Midland, who are left to mourn her loss, along with one sister Louisa Morrison and two brothers Thomas and Charles, of Lachute.

The remains were brought to Lachute for interment, service being conducted by the Rev. H. Cousens, on Sunday, at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. L. Morris, amidst a very large circle of friends and acquaintances.

The pall bearers were Messrs. Allan Paul, Wm. Cleland, Wm. Jackson, E. Kettyle, Jas. Morris and Jno. Cunningham.

THE LATE MRS. W. JONES.

The death occurred at Munroe Memorial Hospital, Ocala, Fla., on April 21st., of Mrs. W. Jones, formerly Elizabeth Jackson, third daughter of the late Thomas Jackson, of Lachute. Deceased lady was born in Chatham in 1844, and educated in the East End School and Academy where classes were then held in the basement of Henry's Church, taught by the Pastor. She spent several years in Burlington and Randolph, relieving and nursing in her sister's family, prior to her marriage in 1897 to Rev. N. W. Jones, who predeceased her many years ago. She was a devotee member of the Methodist Church, in which her interests centered in Sunday School work and contributing to calls for help of the poor and needy. She loved her Northern home and though often in much weakness made her annual visit here. She retained her mental faculties to the last.

One sister, Mrs. Katherine Fraser survives to mourn her loss.

The remains were brought to Lachute where interment took place on Tuesday, April 26th.

ALBERT MacKIMMIE PASSES AWAY AT STRATFORD, CONN.

Mr. Jas. P. MacKimmie received a wire on Tuesday morning announcing the death of his brother, Albert Edward, who passed away quite suddenly at Stratford, Connecticut, in the early hours of Tuesday, April 26th.

Deceased was the fourth son of the late Simon MacKimmie and was 60 years of age. He leaves his beloved wife and only son, as well as two sisters, Mrs. Wm. Wilson, and Mrs. Jas. Elliott, of Prescott, Ont., and brothers John, of Aurora, James of Lachute, Simon of Calgary, and Tom, of South Haven.

Mr. MacKimmie and his sons left the same evening to attend the funeral, which takes place on Friday, April 29th.

THE LATE

MRS. FINLEY MACARTHUR

There passed away at the Homeopathic Hospital, Montreal Mrs. Finley MacArthur, aged 67 years. Formerly Miss Janet Lindsey Smith, she was born at Beech Ridge, but later moved to Montreal, where she has since resided. One son Grant, two sisters Mrs. Chidlow and Mrs. Adams, of Montreal, and one brother Thomas Smith, of Aurora, Ill., are left to mourn her loss. Service was held in the St. James United Church, the remains being later brought to Lachute for interment. The pall bearers were Messrs. Grant MacArthur, Frank Lovell, R. Chidlow, Gordon and Stuart Smith.

The Captain's Corner

"ON THE MARCH"

Sackville, New Brunswick.

Dear Boys :-

I am writing you this week from far away, New Brunswick — and from a University that dates back to 1843. It is called Mount Allison, after a Mr. Charles F. Allison who thought that the boys and young men of this part of Canada should have the advantage of Education. You see from this, that what you yourselves are striving for every day in school is no new idea! Indeed, Schools and Colleges, in the older part of the world go back for hundreds of years.

What you are doing then, every time you go to school, is simply Marching! You are on the march along the way of progress—a long and different road, but a very well-used one. Over this same trail have travelled your fathers, grandfathers, THEIR fathers and grandfathers, and we could go back even further than this.

Why did they do so?—Because they realized that above and beyond anything else, Education,—the training of mind, hand and soul—was a very real necessity if they were to succeed in life.

Every morning here I walk down steps well-worn through the tread of many feet, belonging to one-time boys. Many of these are still living and as men holding important places in the life of the Nation whose sons they are. Others who used to run up and down these same stairs, with a smile on their lips, and laughter in their eyes, have now passed on into the Great Beyond; but not before they have done good work and received honourable recognition from their fellow men.

So this long line of Happy Warriors marched along the road of progress, and as they passed out of activity their places were taken by others—by YOU.

This morning I was asked to speak to the Cadet Corps on parade. They were all ready to march away to a distant field for various exercises. All the boys present, about 150 of them, were members of this really famous school and lived their daily lives amid surroundings that constantly reminded them of those great, true men who had gone before on this self-same road.

That wonderful line of the great poet, Rudyard Kipling, came fresh to my memory—

"But the glory of the Garden lies in more than meets the eye."

Its meaning I tried to explain to them. I believe and hope they understood. Heads went up; shoulders were squared; a keener, brighter light came into their eyes; and as they marched away to undertake their work it seemed to me that out of the shadowy past a new inspiration had been given them: May I repeat.

"But the Glory of the Garden lies in more than meets the eye."

Your affectionate friend,

THE CAPTAIN.

"The Return of Timothy"

Continued

Appealingly Eric turned to Kenrick. "Do stop him," he pleaded. "He talks a lot of nonsense and is trying to tease me."

Kenrick grinned. "He does talk nonsense but he does not mean to tease you. Hurrah here is the dinner bell and it is pudding and treacle to-day. I will sit next to you Eric so if you are not hungry you can give me your share."

Henderson gave a sigh of resignation. "Oh, greedy beast!" he murmured. "Oh, Kenrick, I grieve that you are so depraved. I feel inclined to break out into song."

But Kenrick had seized Eric by the arm and had hurried him away leaving their friend to follow at his leisure.

Timothy had also heard the bell and was making his way to the dining hall but his thoughts were quite different from those of his companions. In lessons that morning, he had been not a little surprised at the change of attitude adopted by Mr. Lawrence towards him. Only twice had he come under that gentleman's notice during lesson period when on both occasions he had to stand up in class to construe and he could not fail to notice that instead of the usual stern and contemptuous remarks on his lack of understanding, he received both encouragement and help. Further at the close of the period, he was told that he had done much better and had been evidently trying to improve.

For this reason and because he felt that in some inexplicable way Mrs. Sellingscourt would help him, a spirit of happiness took hold of him. The natural result being that on catching sight of Kenrick he had on the spur of the moment issued the invitation for a tea party which had caused as we know so much astonishment. He had to admit to himself that it was rather strange that he should do such a thing but anyway his inclination prompted him to see more of Eric, of whom in spite of his off-hand attitude to the little lad, he had become very fond.

I suppose he said to himself it is no good worrying any more. We go home to-morrow and what will happen when I get there I do not know. By this time he had reached the dining hall and though as usual most of his school fellows looked at him as he took his place none of them could guess what his thoughts were as he wore his usual expression of cold reserve and aloofness.

The main topic of conversation all round him was of the breaking off party to-morrow and the speculation as to who will be there from among parents and friends. Very little work was done that afternoon and around four o'clock Timothy walked down to the small village store in order to purchase some eatables that he thought would most appeal to his young guests. Remembering with quiet amusement Henderson's partiality of jam tarts. On his return to his private room at the school he took no little pains to lay out the good things on the table and instruct little Gordon of the second form into the mysteries of boiling a kettle and making tea.

Once in a midst of preparation the little boy looked up at Timothy, his big eyes wide with wonder and said in a voice of awe. "Did you say that only Henderson, Kenrick and Sellingscourt were coming Timothy, only three?"

"That's right, only three youngsters. What do you mean?" replied the host opening a jar of jam.

"But—but," stammered the little chap, "you have enough food here for twenty."

Timothy burst out laughing. "You just wait and see. I am doubtful if there will be enough, not even to leave anything for you."

"Then," was the quick answer, "seems I better have some now. May I Timothy?"

"What a greedy little beast," responded the boy. Punctuality to the minute our three heroes arrived with

"Hallo Timothy got plenty of grub. Out of my way kiddy you are obstructing the view", from Kenrick.

and from Henderson, "Oh, glory be, I see jam tarts upon the tea. You eat the rest but leave them for me, How glad I am to come to tea."

"and," interrupted Kenrick, "you won't get any of it. I think you fellows here deserves punishment for that, don't you? Here, throw me a cushion Eric. Ah, that's fine," as Henderson received that article on the back of his head. "My word, let's get him now, and with a rush they were on him."

"May we walk behind?" piped little Bunny. Oh, if you like," said Danny, without turning his head. "Only don't lag behind too much." Danny was feeling quite tired himself.

"Have a rid in the cart, suggested Marjory-Ella kindly. "Oh no, thank you, Marjory-Ella. The twins were quite emphatic over their reply.

So they went on fairly slowly for the sake of the two little ones, and even then the twins often lagged several yards behind. Danny and Mick strode on sturdily, heads down, and did not trouble to look round. Any way, the twins knew their way, even supposing they were left behind altogether.

Marjory-Ella, a little stiff and weary, sat back in the cart. No one had spoken to them in this part of the journey, though several stout old gentlemen in whitish jackets and Panama hats, beamed at them from their gardens, and some of them, and ladies as well, came right out of their gates. Many of the folks passing up and down the road paused and smiled, and Marjory-Ella smiled back, although she felt that the queenliness had gone right out of her smile by this time.

At the end of the road a short grassy path led them back to the woods. How cool it seemed after the hot dusty lanes! As the cart came to rest before the hut an excited giggle broke from the twins.

"What's up?" demanded Danny. "Nuffin, giggled they, and then Marjory-Ella noticed that the scarlet soldier's hats were tucked under their arms.

"Why are you carrying your hats?" she asked them. "Our heads was so very hot," said Biddy innocently.

Danny looked at them a moment "Come on," he commanded, "let's sit in the hut and rest."

All five children filed into the hut and plumped down wearily. From the twin's corner there came a sudden chink. Two soldiers' hats, turned simultaneously upside down, cascaded a veritable shower of coins upon the grassy floor of the hut.

Danny rose to his feet, with an exclamation of anger, and seized a twin's arm with either hand. He gave them both a shake. "What do you mean by this?" he shouted.

"Marjory-Ella knowed we was collecting, I b'lieve," whimpered Mickey.

"Well," admitted Marjory-Ella slowly, "I did think I heard something chink. And I certainly did notice people kept putting their hands in their pockets. But honest, Danny, I never thought they had all that!"

Danny released the twins. His face worked for a moment, and then he burst out laughing, and the other children joined in with relief.

"Anyway," said Marjory-Ella, "we could put some of it in the hospital box."

"Let's count it," suggested Mick who was always practical. The children crowded round the spoils on the hut floor.

"Fourteen pennies, that's one and tuffence," said Danny. "And here's six ha' pennies, that's one and five," went on Marjory-Ella. "And that shilling the clergyman gave us, that's two and five."

"And here's a sixpence," chimed in Mick eagerly. Two and eleven pence altogether!"

That afternoon five drowsy, repleted children sat round the remains of a large bag of that delightfully crunchy sugar candy that has a string through the middle.

Marjory-Ella idly dangled her last piece—she could not really eat it—by its string.

"How much have we left for the hospital box, Danny?" she enquired.

"The shilling we got from the clergyman," replied Danny with his mouth full.

And the twins gurgled happily and went on scrunching candy.

Restore
an Estate

ARE you among the thousands who have suffered from the great depression? Have you had to make a hurried survey of your financial position only to find that you are worth less by thousands of dollars than you were? Do you realize that death compels a liquidation of securities at current values?

How can that situation be met?

You can instantly restore your estate to a healthy basis by taking out more insurance. The same way is to insure to the point of safety... at least.

Over five hundred million dollars of life insurance was taken out in the Sun Life Company last year—much of it by level-headed men who balanced their accounts by this simple method.

AN APPRECIATION

THE LATE
REV. P. A. McEWEN

Through the kindness of Mrs. Ida McEwen, the mail brings this week a biographical booklet by C. J. Cameron, in appreciation of the late Rev. P. A. McEwen, B.A., B.D., who is warmly remembered here for his genial and uplifting personality during pastorate of the Lachute Brownsburg and Dalesville Baptist Churches several years ago. Rev. P. A. McEwen was born of a notable family, whose record of spiritual service among the Baptists of Ontario is probably without equal. Himself imbued with energy and optimism, his career among the Baptist pulpits counted many lasting triumphs, although his ministry featured nothing spectacular or sensational in its quiet appeal. His pastorate was truly and literally a pastorate; and Mr. McEwen is perhaps best remembered in these parts for a paternal charm and consideration, which made him popular among his charge and notably successful among the younger generation.

"Wherever he went he carried the good cheer of a sunny nature. He was the most approachable of men. The kindness of his eye and the graciousness of his manner were a perpetual invitation to friendship and intimacy."

Lachute was Rev. P. A. McEwen's last field of active ministry before retiring to less strenuous labors. Indeed, it was here that the first sieges of ill-health foreshadowed a curtailment of his efforts, although zeal and interest never failed him, through out his final years spent among his family and friends in Ontario.

Those who knew him best throughout this district can sincerely endorse Rev. C. J. Cameron's tribute of appreciation and share with Mrs. McEwen, in gratitude, her memory of this "true hero of the faith."

WHEN TO START NEW FOODS

Some infant-feeding questions have come in and as many of you are interested in this subject, I am going to answer them through the paper. This woman says that she is bringing up a grandchild and that the methods of feeding have changed so much since her children were small that she is bewildered. She says that they seem to start giving them vegetables and things so young. And so they do. When your baby gets a little bit older you will be glad of it because it will most likely like all the vegetables.

Now for the time of adding the new foods. If it is possible have your babies feedings under the direction of a doctor who has kept up-to-date in the matter of Foods. Unfortunately, they all have not done so. These hints will be of value to you, I hope. One of the chief things to remember is to start new foods in very small quantities. One-half teaspoonful is enough for the first few feedings and then very gradually increase the quantity. I would give new foods every other day rather than every day in succession.

Cod-liver oil is the first thing to be added to the diet and at the end of the first month give 5 drops a day. Fruit juices are given in the third month. Either orange juice or tomato juice (new or canned) may be used. Strain and give one teaspoonful well diluted with water to begin with gradually increasing until at last two tablespoonfuls are given.

Cereals are started when the baby is six months. They should be cooked for two or three hours in a double boiler, and during the first year should be strained. Start with half a level teaspoonful and increasing the amount every other day until about 3 level tablespoons are being taken at the end of the seventh month. The child will be taking a half-cupful by the end of the year.

Vegetables may be given the eighth month. These are put through a fine strainer. Such vegetables as spinach, carrots, peas, string beans, asparagus tips, and cauliflower are given. Potatoes may be started about this time. Baked potatoes thoroughly mashed are best.

Bread is given by the seventh month. It is best toasted in a slow oven until it is thoroughly dried, or zwieback may be used instead. It is a good plan to tie the bread to the baby's wrist with a strong clean thread. Then the baby may hold the bread in its own hand and it cannot drop on the floor. A baby should not be allowed to eat anything which has been on the floor.

ed unless made on the forms supplied by the Department and in accordance with departmental specifications and conditions. The right to demand from the successful tenderer a deposit, not exceeding 10 per cent of the amount of the tender, to secure the proper fulfilment of the contract is reserved.

By order,
N. DESJARDINS,
Department of Public Works,
Ottawa, April 15, 1932.
A-30-2-c.

A telephone operator can make few words go a long way.

"You seem to enjoy watching your son play football?"

"Oh, yes!" answered Farmer Giles. "If he ever gets into the habit of working as hard as that we may make the old farm pay yet."

Butter may be added by the ninth month. Just a very little scraping at first, then about one third of a level teaspoon to a one-third slice of bread. Butter is a good food because of its vitamin content.

Cooked fruits such as apples, prunes and peaches may be strained and given by the ninth month. Fresh fruits such as apple, pear, or peach or thoroughly ripe banana may be finely scraped and given in this month.

Beef juice is given by the 6th or 7th month. Egg yolk may be given earlier. If the baby is anaemic or has rickets it may be given egg-yolk as early as the third month. Egg white is not usually given the first year. Scraped beef is given at the end of the first year.

This covers most of the foods and I hope may be of help. Doctors differ on some of the details but most of them feed normal well-babies in very much the same way. Milk of course is, and continues to be their chief food.

YORKSHIRE PUDDING

One of the easiest ways of putting variety into the menu is to vary the accompaniment to the meat. Roast beef and Yorkshire Pudding are too well known to need mention. However if there are any brides who have never made Yorkshire, we will tell you how to do it, so that you can add another dish to your repertoire.

1 cup milk

1 cup flour

2 eggs

1/4 teaspoon salt

Sift the flour and salt and add the milk very gradually to make a smooth paste, free from all lumps. Beat the eggs until very light and add to the mixture. Cover the bottom of a hot pan with fat fried out from the beef roast and pour in the mixture having it about a half-inch deep. Bake in a hot oven for twenty minutes, basting it with more of the hot fat after it is well risen. Cut in squares and serve. This may be made in muffin tins if preferred.

YORKSHIRE PUDDING AND SAUSAGE

This dish is sometimes elegantly called "Toad-in-the-Hole." Grease a flat baking dish (preferably one which may be sent to the table) and arrange a pound of smallish sausage on it. Pour the Yorkshire Pudding mixture around the sausage and bake about 25 minutes in a hot oven of about 450 degrees. Mashed potatoes and Spinach are favorite accompaniments. Plan to serve a light dessert as this is a "hearty" first course.

MRS. THOMAS EARLE

PROFESSIONAL CARDS

The funeral of Mrs. Thos. Earle, who passed away at her residence in Cornwall, Ont., on April 16th., was held at that place on the 19th. inst., and interment made in Woodlawn cemetery. Rev. Frank Coop conducted the service, and the pall-bearers were her three sons, Everett M., W. B., and Frank E. Earle, of Lachute, and James Hay, Thomas McGregor and Peter D. MacPherson.

Mrs. Earle's death came as a great shock to her many friends, as it was entirely unexpected. Born in this community, eighty years ago, Mrs. Earle was a daughter of the late James McGregor and Helen Hay. Her maiden name was Helen Mason McGregor. She was united in marriage to Thomas Earle at Lachute 55 years ago and her husband predeceased her by four years. Mrs. Earle had been a resident of Cornwall for the past 55 years.

Surviving her are her three sons and three daughters, Mrs. Peter D. MacPherson, Cornwall; Miss May Earle, Cornwall; Mrs. Aubrey D. Atkinson, Cornwall, as well as three brothers, Thos. McGregor, of Lachute; George, McGregor, Windsor, and Robert McGregor, South Haven, Kansas.

GASOLINE SPOILS CREAM

On a good many farms today the cream separator is operated with a gasoline engine, and the strictest precautions must be taken to avoid a gasoline flavor (carbon monoxide) in the cream and butter. Butter having this defect is very objectionable and is placed in third grade.

CONTEMPORARY TOWNS AND CONTEMPORARY NEWSPAPERS

Members of the Ontario-Quebec division of Canadian Weekly Newspapers Assn. were pleased to notice, among those present at last week's Montreal convention, Mr. George Legge, editor of the Granby Leader-Mail. His presence signified a recovery from several weeks of ill-health, and his genial personality was welcome again among the highlights of this gathering.

The Editor at Granby had for some time been confined to bed with an ulcerated leg. But although his activities were temporarily suspended in the press-room, editorially Mr. Legge has been right there, of late. His pen has been notably active—one might say brilliantly active.
And during physical difficulties, it is to his credit that the Leader-Mail has maintained the same editorial good humor and revealed the same cheerful optimism behind the scenes.

Mr. Legge, has had time to think, and time to write. The Watchman, however, is feeling the pressure of business. Its editor has no ulcerated leg; its staff has no idle hours in which to concentrate and write intelligent articles. And this week we crave the indulgence of our Granby confrere, in printing a generous item from his columns.

Like Granby and Huntingdon —and like most ambitious Canadian towns—Lachute is considering ways and means to attract new industries into its midst.
(Incidental among the Editor's late activities, has been just this form of angling on behalf of La-chute.) The spirit of competition exists among our eastern municipalities. One town watches another, with interest in its progress, and maybe, a desire to learn something new.

It is Granby's observation of Huntingdon which affords us the following article. Mr. Geo.
Legge, in his columns of the Leader Mail furnishes a last-flash report of The Industry that Got Away . . . Our sympathy is with Huntingdon in its loss—as also with Mr. Legge in his recent indisposition; and The Watchman wishes better luck to both.

THE DEAL IS OFF

Our neighbors over in Huntingdon have been up against a peculiar proposition recently.
When the Beaumont Cheese Co. pulled out from their town they left the citizens of Huntingdon with a perfectly good factory building on their hands and naturally, they have been anxious to see it filled up again with some other industry. They were not content with casting their lines just over the U. S. boundary, but they tried angling for industries in sunny Italy, where the people are supposed to float around in gaily-painted gondolas, under azure skies, without worrying much about where the next meal is coming from. After a while they hooked a felt hat making concern and had the directors, with their families, and a number of skilled operatives all lined up on the dock, singing the Italian aria "O Canada, We're Coming!" all ready to step on the gangplank of an outwardbound boat. But here Mussolini muscled in with a peremptory order
"They shall not pass!" and that was that. If the few of our citizens who are not going bareheaded want to wear Italian hats they must cross the ocean and buy them over the counter and not try to kidnap the hatters, who must stay in their own backyard. How things have changed. Time was when we could import Italian organgrinders, with their monkey and an occasional dancing bear thrown in, in carload lots. But Mussolini, who is always right, said such traffic detracted from the dignity of the nation, and he stopped it. That is why the hurdy-gurdy man, with his lively little monkey, has vanished from the land and the poor kiddies, who are barred from the movies, have no diversions left.

Well, to sum up, the factory building at Huntingdon is still vacant and we have all learned that it is no use trying to transplant industries from Italy.

A GLIMPSE AT BEAUHARNOIS

From Personal Observation

The investigations that have been made into the Beauharnois power project have created wide spread interest, not only throughout Canada, but across the border and even in England. But after all, industrial success of this huge power undertaking does not depend upon who is named for excessive financing by insiders, but upon the electric energy that will go out from its great turbines to be consumed in business development and electric lighting.
The recent turn of events at Ottawa have apparently detracted public attention from the origin and prime purpose of the whole undertaking; but whatever the ultimate outcome may be, the Beauharnois power plant will, in our opinion, serve a national purpose and greatly augment the industrial efficiency of Eastern Canada.

To one who knows the location, and the expanse of water this development is harnessing it would have seemed impossible that such enormous power could have been secured. The visionary minds which first conceived the scheme, and which have so far successfully materialized their dream, should not be forgotten. While the names of certain men interested in its financing may be scorned by every fair Canadian, yet the parties who tackled the construction of such a plant have served a good purpose and accomplished a gigantic undertaking.

One might mention, for those who have not followed the work of development, the entire plant when completed will have a capacity of possibly two million horse power, a figure far beyond the fondest imagination.

It is, we understand, intimated in official circles that by next autumn the first unit of 500,000 h.p. will commence generating in that great power house, distribution through the country. This will be followed from time to time by further production, as necessity demands, until the entire plant has been developed to its fullest capacity.

A more reasonable view of this undertaking will enable the public better to appreciate what its development means to the country. Time, we believe will prove its justification and place it as one of the big undertakings in the power world.

It is to be hoped that further finances will be forthcoming, to complete the units, and develop to the full this new source of energy in Eastern Canada.

WEEKLY PRESS CONVENES IN MONTREAL (Con't.)

Press Gallery, Parliament took itself less seriously than it does today. He would not assert that the bar now extinct, but which in those days did a thriving business had anything to do with this, but one thing of which he was certain, was that it had the effect of spurring on the members to more eloquent if more virulent oratorical outbursts.

He related anecdotes and told of his contacts with many men who have created enviable niches for themselves in the history of Canadian politics, among them, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Rt.
Hon. Arthur Meighen, Sir Robt.

STOLEN CAR RECOVERED

Mr. W. J. Graham, whose Plymouth Car was stolen a week ago, received word on Thursday that it is safe and sound in Montreal, under Police protection. Stealing cars and after riding to the city, leaving them on the street seems to be a popular mode of travel these days.

Borden, Sir Sam Hughes, Henri Bourassa, Hon. William Pugsley, Hon. Charles Murphy, Dr.

ter, Senator Rodolphe Lemieux, and a host of others.

He wound up his address by expressing the belief that throughout the world today the most prevalent pastime seemed to be that of "debunking".
He urged his listeners not to go in for this game, particularly as applied to the glory and majesty of the English tongue, which he thought was being automatically despised when people showed an utter disregard for Parliament and parliamentary orators.

TEST IS BEING MADE

Quebec Trying Out New Road Surface Composition

Quebec, April 27.—Engineers of the Quebec Roads Department are experimenting with a new composition for surfacing roads, a material called bitumuls said to have been used with much success in the State of Maine. A test is being conducted on a five-mile section of the Jackman road. If the covering proves successful in this climate it will mean a saving to the department of between $10,000 and $15,000 per mile in road building. Bitumuls cost only $1,500 per mile as against $15,000 per permanent paving. The new composition had been found to last five or six years on Maine highways, where, however, the climate is milder. Bitumuls is said to provide a fine surface when laid over gravel roads and if it stands up under frost, will be adopted by this province for paving purposes, department officials say.

SENT TO HIGHER COURT

Larocque and Lavictoire to Be Tried for Murder

Rockland, Ont., April 27.—Charged with the murder of Leo Bergeron, 27-year old farm hand, William J. Larocque 56, and Emmanuel Lavictoire 51, were committed for trial by Magistrate G. R. Boucher here this afternoon.

The committal ended a three-day preliminary hearing during which more than a score of witnesses were heard. The accused will be tried at the November session of the Supreme Court of Ontario to be held at L'Orignal.

Larocque and Lavictoire were the only witnesses to the death of Bergeron, who was reported to have been trampled by a team of horses in the Larocque barn, near here, on March 18. When it became known Larocque was the beneficiary in a $10,000 insurance policy, held on the life of Bergeron, police, investigation followed with the charge of murder being made against the men.

FINAL GAMES IN LEAGUE

The closing games of Argenteuil Bowling League were staged this week and the season's scores showed a high count and good quality of play. Between Independents and All Stars, the two leading teams, there is a difference of only 1,000 points, while Canadiens and Maroons follow closely in order.

The season will wind-up in a Supper, to be announced shortly, when prizes will be awarded, and it may be generally expected "a good time will be had by all."

The inclusive scores of the six respective teams, for all 1932 games, stand as follows:

Independents	22,001
All Stars	21,225
Canadiens	20,895

SWAIL.—In loving memory of a dear wife and mother Sarah Swail, who departed this life on May 2nd., 1931.

Some day, some time our eyes shall see,
The face we loved so well.
Some day our hands shall clasp in hers,
And never say Farewell.
The flowers we lay upon her grave,
May wither and decay,
But love for her who sleeps beneath,
Will never fade away.

Advertising for the Merchant of To-Day

Conducted by
HAROLD S. EDGAR

Can a man conduct a 5c. - 10c. - 15c. - $1.00 store profitably in a town of 2,000 people? Where can I secure supplies?

If instead I decide to combine boots and shoes and dry goods—how should store be laid out—where could I purchase supplies—what colours to use on signs.

Reply in detail has gone forward by mail giving names of jobbers—the following is repeated for the benefit of readers of this column generally.

A town with a population of two thousand usually has an equivalent population in the rural sections surrounding making a total of four thousand.

5c. - 10c. - 15c. to $1.00 stores of this kind are operating in some towns of this size.

General store covering dry goods and shoes—Layout—if the store has a door in the centre with windows on both sides, would place Shoe department on the left side, Dry Goods on the right side, with staple lines at the back. If a narrow store with one window—it might be Dry Goods at the front, then Boots and Shoes. This can be planned more definitely when store and stock is decided upon.

Windows—Would dress windows frequently with goods of the type that are seasonable. The articles appearing in our paper under the title of "Advertising for the Merchant of Today" will give you, each week, information that will be of assistance.

Signs—Five and Ten Cent Store—sign for store—red back ground, black letters. Dry Goods Store—royal blue back ground, letters yellow with red edging.

In deciding on a town in which to locate it is well to consider the type of people and how your personality will fit in—the other stores located in the town—the competition in the town and from larger towns within trading distance. Consider also what newspaper circulation is available as an advertising medium.

Unless there is an outstanding opening for the business you contemplate in the town of your mind, and you have a personal connection that will be of considerable assistance to you, you might well consider the advisability of locating in a larger town or a good town with a larger population in the countryside.

It is usually preferable to go after a larger market, and a small store well managed can be successful even in competition with larger stores, and making a success in the smaller store, you have a better opportunity to expand.

In the larger centre also you are likely to have a stronger paper with a more wide spread circulation, and advertising or the opportunity of telling your story to your possible customers is one of the first essentials of a successful retail business.

Good goods bearing well known trade marks—suited to your customers needs—sold at fair prices and advertised by you to those customers—is half the battle of building a successful business.

Next Week—Shopping by sight.

INSTALMENT PLAN FOR BRITISH TAXPAYERS

The instalment plan was definitely adopted by the Government last week to aid income-tax payers.

Although the 1932-33 budget did not offer any relief for income tax payers, the Board of Inland Revenue announced arrangements by which large numbers could pay their taxes in instalments rather than by two lump payments. The instalments may be collected monthly.

EDITOR GETS $5,000

Editor Wm. McDonald of the Chesley Enterprise has received his cheque for the $5,000 he won in the Family Herald and Weekly Star guessing contest as to the population of Canada by the new census. His guess was the exact number, 10,374,196. A man in Newfoundland was the next nearest being only two wide of the mark, and won $2,500. The third prize went to a woman near Thessalon in Algoma, the fourth of $500 to a Nova Scotia woman, and the fifth to a man in Newfoundland, these being only three, four and five off the correct number. Mr. McDonald says that so far he has had about a score of letters for donations or loans to individuals all the way from Lennoxville, Que., to Yorktown, Sask. The total amount of these requests is over $10,000 or twice as much as the amount of the prize.

ODDFELLOWS' ANNUAL CHURCH SERVICE

fitting call to worship as he ascended to the hillside for His devotions.

He loved generosity, the open hand and willing heart. He immortalized the widow who cast in her two mites. His own mother being a widow; he appreciated the extent of her sacrifice.

He loved hospitality and even though He had not a place to lay His head, He loved to make the poor people happy by gracing their homes with His presence. He didn't want the fuss and fancy of an artha, He just wanted to be made feel at home as one of the family circle.

He was different from the common people in His attitude towards truth. To them God had revealed His will to Moses and the prophets and that was the end. "Finis" had been written. They could expect no more.

To Jesus, Truth was a book that was written with sealed pages and as man expanded and developed, the seals would be broken. The truths of the Patriarchs and Prophets were but part of the truth, more was to be revealed.

Man had much more to learn about God than was contained in the Old Testament; much more to learn about his fellow-man; much more about how to live and to love.

I am not saying that Jesus was the first Oddfellow, but the people of His day certainly considered Him an oddfellow. He was so much different from anyone they had ever met or heard of before.

In those days to be odd or eccentric was not simply to be foolish but to be crazy. To be insane was to be possessed with a devil and not fit company for decent people.

In their stigma was a sting. They hoped by saying "He is beside Himself" to turn the people against Him and to break down His pride and influence.

However the term Oddfellow came into existence, One knows not, but One feels certain that it was chosen as a mark not merely of recognition but of distinction, and the choice itself is an indication of strength and of courage. For even today, it requires courage to be different from one's fellows.

The emblem of the three links is a distinguishing badge, but if they only rest upon the lapel of one's coat and are not symbolic of the principles of one's life, engraved on the heart, then a man does not deserve the name of Oddfellow, for there are many people ready to wear any emblem to catch the eye, but not willing to possess a principle to captivate and stir the heart.

There is nothing new nor has any one a monopoly of the virtues represented by the three links, Friendship, Love and Truth. They are virtues essentially Christian, and must be practiced by men and women if they are to be Christian. The failure of so-called Christians to practice these virtues made it necessary to form organizations outside of the Church that would. And as a person cannot be a Christian who does not practice these virtues neither

Devil's Food Layer Cake

¾ cup butter
1½ cups sugar
3 eggs
1 cup milk
2½ cups pastry flour (or 2 cups and 3 table-spoons of bread flour)
¼ teaspoon salt
3 teaspoons Magic Baking Powder
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
3 sq. unsweetened chocolate, melted

Cream butter thoroughly; add sugar slowly. Add beaten yolks; mix thoroughly. Add flour sifted with baking powder and salt, alternately with milk; add vanilla and melted chocolate. Fold in stiffly beaten egg whites. Put into 3 greased layer cake tins and bake in moderate oven at 350° F. about 30 minutes. When cool, put together and cover thickly with Chocolate or White Icing (recipes are in the Magic Cook Book).

Miss Gertrude Dutton tells why she makes her

Devil's Food Layer Cake

with Magic Baking Powder

"I know from experience," says the cookery expert of Western Home Monthly, "that Magic makes most baked dishes look and taste better. Its uniform leavening quality gives dependable baking results."

And Miss Dutton's praise of Magic is seconded by the majority of dietitians and cookery experts throughout the Dominion. They use Magic exclusively because they know it is pure, and always uniform.

Canadian housewives, too, prefer Magic. In fact, Magic outsells all other baking powders combined. For luscious layer cakes, light, tender biscuits, delicious pastry—follow Miss Dutton's advice. Use Magic Baking Powder.

THE MASTER MIND

Novelized by Marvin Dana,
Author of "Within the Law,"
From the Successful Play
by Daniel D. Carter

Marshall Moved to a Place Near the Door.

Mind for an instant contemplative. "It is not yet too late for you to withdraw," he suggested. "I give you that option." Yet he had no hope of winning this easily, and the result justified his lack of confidence, for Andrew ejaculated only a single word, incoherently:

"Proceed!"

Andrew moved to an inconspicuous position by the wall across the room from Wainwright. His manner was wholly unconcerned, save for a mere flickering light of anticipation, which Lucene observed apprehensively. Marshall moved to a place near the door, in obedience to Wainwright's order. The others remained as they had been, but all exhibited something of new alertness, for now, at last, the crisis was come. Soon the door was opened by Parker, who stood aside to permit the entrance of Dr. Forbes. The physician advanced quickly to the master of the house, who, with Lucene, rose to greet him.

Dr. Forbes bowed acknowledgment of Lucene's invitation to a seat, as she herself returned to her chair, but he chose to remain standing, while he glanced about the room over the ill-assorted group with an expression of professional expectancy.

"What is the trouble?" he questioned. "As a matter of fact, doctor," Wainwright explained, "we've had rather a lively evening—or night, I might better say—here in the house. The thing has been a bit bothersome, taking it first and last. I shall give you the full details as to all that has occurred in due course; but now I would take too much time. The upshot of the whole matter is that we've got a lunatic in our usually quiet and respectable home. Naturally, we want you to take him off our hands."

"A lunatic, eh?" he said. "I had hardly anticipated anything of the sort, since I have some acquaintance with you all. Some stranger, I suppose."

Wainwright shook his head emphatically. "No," he said decisively, "not a stranger—not by any means a stranger." He raised his arm and pointed toward Andrew. "There he is!"

The physician's first astonishment now became an unqualified amazement, as his eyes followed the direction indicated by his friend's gesture. "What—Andrew?" he demanded. Wainwright nodded regretfully. "Yes," he said.

Andrew himself was standing motionless, in a posture of particular humility. His eyes were downcast, his hands were clasped as if in mute appeal. The expression of his countenance was shamefaced, with a feeble, varying smile of deprecation. Dr. Forbes surveyed the unexpected patient for a full minute, scrutinizing the dejected attitude, the disconsolate face. "Is he violent?" he asked first.

"Well, no; he hasn't shown any symptoms of a violent sort as yet," Wainwright admitted. "But, as is natural, I think Mrs. Wainwright is afraid he may get dangerous at any moment, and I must confess for my own part that I, too, feel nervous concerning the matter. Lucene has noticed that he has been acting very oddly for some days. I've been so busy with the work of my campaign that I failed to pay much attention to him myself. But the others of the family, being less occupied, have observed his peculiar actions, and tonight the thing came to a head."

"Ah, I see!" the physician remarked noncommittally. "Now, Cortland, I wish you to explain to me as accurately as your untrained mind will enable you to do the exact details of the disorder displayed by our unfortunate patient here."

"Why, as to that," was the answer, "the poor man seems to have the most extraordinary notions about the character of my wife's relatives. That would be strange enough by itself. But it is worse than that. His delusion even goes so far that he has the like monstrous ideas about my wife herself in spite of the fact that hitherto he has appeared devoted to her not he himself actually believes these absurd hallucinations. My brother-in-law, I believe, was the first to notice this feature of his insanity. Perhaps you would wish him to tell you himself." Wainwright fixed his glance imperatively on Walter and addressed him by name, with a veiled note of menace in his tones. "Please tell Dr. Forbes what Andrew said about you."

"Who, me?" she gasped.

"Oh," Walter explained jauntily, "I've noticed the old chap looking kind of queer for several days now!" He turned toward Blount boyishly. "You remember my speaking to you about it, don't you, dad?"

"Why, yes, son," he replied. "Now, let me see, that was"—He paused meditatively as if searching his memory.

"It was the day before yesterday at luncheon. I spoke of it as soon as Andrew was out of the room," Walter declared glibly.

Blount grunted affirmatively. "That's right, son," he agreed. "That was the time you spoke of it, and then you had it out with him, you know."

"Yes," Walter resumed. "Why, he actually had the nerve to accuse me—me of being a jewelry thief!"

"Indeed!" Forbes ejaculated. "Yes, and what's more," Walter added, encouraged by his success thus far and becoming recklessly audacious, "he had the colossal nerve to say he knew I had done time in Sing Sing."

"Um! Singular!" the physician commented.

"He said things to dad too. Tell what he said to you, dad."

Blount crowded back his fears. "Why," he exclaimed, "the fellow called me a bank burglar!"

"Most extraordinary!" Forbes declared.

Blount shot a glance toward his wife. "You heard him, Sadie," he said, with a significant intonation.

Mrs. Blount, standing beside Lucene's chair, started.

"Who, me?" she gasped, alarmed. Blount scowled at her.

"Yes, you! I say you heard him. Didn't you? Sure you did—sure you did!"

When she observed the mandatory stare of her husband she deemed it the part of prudence to do his implied bidding.

"Oh, yes—I remember now," she said airily in her rich voice, in which was no tremor. "Sure I heard him. And you just ought to have heard what he called me. The very idea!" Her face set in lines of virtuous indignation.

"Oh, doctor, really it was too terrible! Why, he had the audacity to say that I was a—shoplifter from Milwaukee! And all I ever knew about Milwaukee was what I've read in the beer advertisements!" she exclaimed again indignantly.

CHAPTER XIX. Not Madness.

WAINWRIGHT addressed the physician confidently:

"You see, now, Harry, how it is. The thing came to a climax tonight, when I began, with the kindest intentions, to ask him some questions concerning his health. He just glared at me, as if I were trying to do him some injury instead of really wanting to help him in his trouble. And then, all of a sudden, he proceeded to make the most preposterous demands you could possibly imagine. First he repeated all these strange imaginings of which you have been hearing here tonight, and then he even was so wild as to tack on one in which he stated that my wife, too, had been convicted of theft and been sent to jail."

"To tell the truth, doctor," he continued, "I couldn't make head or tail out of his maunderings. And Lucene got so worried that, finally, as you are an examiner in lunacy, with the power of commitment, I thought the best thing would be to get you over here and let you take him away and put him safely under observation for a while."

"Andrew, come here, please," the physician ordered.

"Yes, sir." The answer was uttered with the utmost respect. The Master Mind immediately advanced to a position just in front of Forbes, where he remained standing patiently.

"You have heard what was said?"

"Oh, yes, sir. To my great surprise, sir."

"Ah! to your great surprise, eh? Why did you say these things?"

"I don't remember saying them, sir. Really, sir, it doesn't seem possible to me that I could ever have said such dreadful things about the family of my employer."

Quarter Century

When W. G. (Billy) Chester, of Winnipeg, retired after twenty-five years service as general chairman of the Canadian Pacific section of the Order of Railway Conductors, something of the character that had won him the esteem of not only the men for whom he acted as chief spokesman, but of the company with which he negotiated was revealed by Grant Hall, senior vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, when he said:

W. G. CHESTER

"I have been associated with Mr. Chester for many years. Never once has he broken his word. We often differed in our views, but I always knew that when he told me something, he at least was sincerely convinced that it was right."

Speak to the conductors whom he represented so well for a quarter of a century and one learns that "Billy" Chester was "a square shooter," than which in the ranks of his kind there is no prouder title.

Chester is sparing of words and always has been. Throughout his career as head of his order he has maintained the balance of a keen loyalty both to his men and to the Canadian Pacific Railway, with a realization that discipline was as important for the protection of the former as the latter. He knew how to be firm when what he thought were the rights of his men were at stake, without creating ill-feeling in the minds of company officials with whom he might be negotiating.

This is what Chester himself has to say of these relationships: "My relations with the members of the organization and with the general officers of the company have been most friendly and satisfactory and the boys on the road have always given me a fair break. I have had the same treatment from the company's officials. I have tried to reciprocate."

Mr. Chester began railroad work away back in 1881, and had 25 years with the company before entering the service of his Order.

Here and There

Forty British sportsmen will make up five parties which have arranged to fish trout and salmon on the Miramichi River, N.B., during 1932, according to announcement by the provincial director of information and tourist travel.

Canada shipped more than 5,000,000 pairs of rubber and rubber-soled boots and shoes valued at approximately $4,408,100 to more than 80 countries during 1931, according to information given out by the Dominion Department of Trade and Commerce.

Travelling Canadian Pacific across the Dominion from Detroit and visiting Niagara Falls, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal and Saint John prior to sailing by S.S. Melita for their home countries, eight European Ford Motor dealers were lavishly entertained at all cities they stopped at.

Lesson for May 1

ISAAC AND HIS WELLS

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 26:12-25.
GOLDEN TEXT—A soft answer turneth away wrath: but grievous words stir up anger.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Isaac Follows His Father's Example.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Isaac Follows His Father's Example.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Stop Quarrels.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How World Peace is to Be Established.

Isaac was a child of the covenant and was given in the time of the old age of Abraham and Sarah, in fulfillment of God's promise. His name means "laughter." As to character, he was gentle, meek, meditative and peace-loving. He was a remarkable contrast to his father Abraham. Two things may have affected him to his disadvantage:

1. The shadow of an illustrious father. Sons of great and rich men commonly do not make much of life. The necessity of struggle is not forced upon them.

2. He was brought up as the only child of his mother. The tendency in such a case would be to shield him from the necessity of self-effort, so that he would be unable to meet life's stern realities. Every child should be compelled to think for himself and to fight his own battles.

1. Isaac in Gerar (vv. 12-17).

1. The appearance of the Lord unto him (vv. 1-5). Because of famine in the land, Isaac went into the country of the Philistines. The distress upon the land should have moved him to call upon the Lord (James 5:13). It were better to suffer in the land than to go among the enemies of God's people. The Lord graciously appeared to him there and directed him not to go into Egypt, thus avoiding the error of his father. He was permitted to sojourn in this land because it ultimately was to belong to his seed.

2. His lapse (vv. 7-11). He yielded to the same temptation as did Abraham many years before (Gen. 20:12, 13). This proves that it is not a good thing to dwell among the enemies of God's people. It was when Peter warmed himself at the fire of the enemy that he was tempted to deny his Lord.

3. His prosperity (vv. 12-17). Isaac did not intend to make Gerar his permanent place of abode. He intended only to sojourn there. While there he sowed and reaped bountifully. This prosperity was no proof that God approved of his course. God sends his rain upon the just and the unjust.

11. Isaac's Enemies (vv. 18-22). He was not permitted long to enjoy this fruitful land. His prosperity incited the envy of the Philistines. They could not stand to see his increase in flocks, herds, and servants. Success in any calling of life will provoke envy. They demanded that Isaac should leave them. Wherever envy has begun its deadly work, there must be separation. The Philistines took as their method of getting rid of Isaac the stopping up of the wells. Isaac did not contend for them but peaceably withdrew to another place where he proceeded again to dig the wells of his father. He called them by the same names as his father had given them.

1. Eek, which means "strife" or "contention." Instead of struggling with them, he removed from them and digged another well.

2. Sitnah, which means "enmity." The Philistines strove for this well also. The name given shows that there was increased bitterness of feeling.

3. Rehoboth. Because of the bitter opposition, Isaac removed from them and digged another well which he called "Rehoboth," meaning "there is room." The third time he digged wells there was no strife. The way to have peace is to wear out our enemies with patience.

111. Isaac in Beer-sheba (vv. 23-25). Immediately following Isaac's going up from among the Philistines, the Lord appeared to him. Our fellowship and privileges as sons and daughters of God are dependent upon our separation from the world (II Cor. 6:14-18). Following this visitation, Isaac built an altar and called upon the name of the Lord. As soon as a meeting place with Jehovah was established, Isaac pitched his tent there. Following this Isaac's servants digged a well. There is no use of going among the Philistines to get water.

After Isaac was established in Beer-sheba, Abimelech came desiring to make an alliance with him. This shows that he gained influence by peaceably withdrawing from the Philistines. His behavior proved to them that he was the friend of God.

RUNNING A NEWSPAPER

The thing that makes it hard for a person to run a newspaper is his friends. When a friend things something ought to be kept out of the paper he doesn't hesitate to ask it as a personal favor. An enemy doesn't ask any favors. But a friend thinks the conduct of a newspaper is the personal matter of an editor when as a matter of fact he is largely in the position of a man serving a public trust.

A philosophical old fellow once said to the writer, "A newspaper that doesn't make you angry once in a while isn't worth the subscription price."

To make people angry isn't the chief province of a newspaper, but if it's going to be one worthy the name, it must print the news without fear or favor.

This paper has been threatened with, and indeed has suffered, business reprisals, not once but frequently. These things must necessarily be borne in silence.

The reading public which a newspaper serves is not interested in the personal difficulties of the editor or public.

ST. ANDREWS EAST

The W. M. S. met at the home of Mrs. McEwen last week.

Miss Elizabeth Walsh spent the week-end at her home here.

Mrs. Kenneth de la Ronde spent the week-end in Montreal.

Miss Evelyn Wales, of Montreal, spent the week-end at her home.

Mr. Keith Pitcairn was a week-end guest of his parents in St. Andrews.

We are glad to see the home of Mr. Norman McGregor opened for the summer.

Mr. J. DeWitt spent the week-end in Montreal, attending the funeral of his aunt, Mrs. DeWitt.

Mr. Kenrick Dorion and family of Montreal, arrived last week to spend the summer months in this place.

The Guild of the United Church held their meeting last Thursday in the Church hall, a good attendance and considerable business being transacted.

Mrs. Morris, teacher in our school has the sympathy of all in the death of her mother, Mrs. H. Kettle. The funeral took place on Sunday at her old home in Lachute.

Mrs. Jas. Weightman, Mr. Douglas Weightman and Mr. J. Stephens spent the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Macdonell, returning to Montreal on Monday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Simpson and family motored up Saturday morning and spent the week-end at "Pinelm" their beautiful summer home on the North River. Mr. Dave Trotter was their guest over Sunday.

(From another Correspondent)

On Wednesday afternoon last Miss Whelehan and Mr. Whelehan gave a very delightful taffy party to a goodly gathering of friends and neighbors.

The pupils of No. 2 School, with their teacher and many "young people of all ages," were able to indulge their sweet tooth to the limit, with the delicious taffy which was "done to a turn"

The children, after some fun and a romp together, finally dispersed, but a number of ladies were invited to remain to tea.

This very happy entertainment, only adds one more to the long record of charming hospitality, which has been dispensed by the family in this quaint old home, hospitality which has been and is still being enjoyed, by one generation after another.

Such simple pleasures and real kindness are appreciated, not only now, but they stand as happy memories in the later years.

One Who Knows.

ARUNDEL

Miss Mirium Patton, of Lachute, spent the week-end at her home here.

Mrs. C. O. Bennett spent a day in Lachute last week, visiting friends.
