Rev. J. A. Lackey Retires after Forty Years in the Ministry

The congregations of the Anglican denomination in Lachute and Brownsburg regret to learn the resignation of their esteemed rector, Rev. J. A. Lackey, who will shortly retire, owing to ill-health and advanced years.

Forty years ago Mr. Lackey was inducted into the Anglican Church, and one half of this long period has been devoted to service in Lachute and district. When he first came to this community, the Church of England in Lachute was only conducted along missionary lines, but with conscientious efforts and patient labors, along with many disappointments, the church has steadily grown to a self-supporting rectorate. Another creditable advance under Mr. Lackey's ministerial guidance, has been the building of the new Brownsburg Church of England, which represents untiring energy on the part of the minister, who now leaves it free of debt and financial encumbrance.

The Rev. J. A. Lackey is a man of high ideals, who has always exemplified the life of a Christian minister and has been ever willing to lend a helping hand, to the more unfortunate brother with whom he came in contact. For twenty years he has laboured in Lachute, and during that time has not only won the respect of his own congregation, but of every denomination established here, having always been ready to assist when the opportunity arose.

The Bishop of Montreal, on accepting his resignation, pays the following tribute:

"Mr. Lackey is now in his twentieth year of service in the Parish of Lachute, and has done excellent work there. The Parish was a Mission one when he took charge, and it is now a Rectory that is a very great help to the general work of the Church in the Diocese. He has also been the means of building that beautiful Church at Brownsburg, leaving it entirely free of debt, thus putting the Church in that village in a very strong position. It will be, I know, a great regret to the people of the Parish that Mr. Lackey should at this time resign. I have accepted his resignation as he has put it upon the grounds of his health."

Local Scouts Prove Good Swimmers

A group of Lachute and Brownsburg Boy Scouts, under command of Scoutmaster Davis are in camp at Tamaracouta, the Montreal district scouts' encampment near Morin Heights. A visitor to the camp reports the boys numbered some 275 over last week-end, all living a clean, regulated routine of simple life under adequate supervision. Tamaracouta Camp is splendidly situated for that purpose, and many hundreds of boys benefit materially every summer from this healthful and inexpensive mode of vacation.

In accord with the approved scouts' principle, to "Be prepared", it is ruled that boating on the lake is prohibited to boys, who cannot meet the specified swimming test. This consists in swimming the width of the lake, about 175 yards, the swimmer being tied to a life line and accompanied by the lifeguard in a boat alongside.

Scoutmaster Davis reports that all 14 boys under his care have successfully passed this test, an achievement which speaks well for the training of our local Boy Scouts.

Among the Lachute boys attending the camp are: Harry Ashworth, Lloyd Graham, Lloyd Creswell, Sidney Roberts, Sam Milnes, and Ken Falconer.

E. W. Beatty is Optimistic for Returning Prosperity

President of Canadian Pacific sees a Brighter Future, for Company and for Dominion at Large.

The news from New York that the Canadian Pacific Railway is now listed among the billion dollar corporations of this continent, must be very gratifying to Canadians in general; and it is indeed a compliment to the management of this company, that Canada's oldest railway has won such distinction. It is therefore not surprising that President E. W. Beatty, K.C., in a recent statement to shareholders of the Company, has referred optimistically to the business outlook throughout Canada. He expressed the opinion that financial and industrial conditions had seen their worst, and strongly advised patience and confidence on the part of the public, which would materially assist in bringing along better times.

The Canadian Pacific, Mr. Beatty pointed out, had, like all other transportation companies come through an extraordinarily difficult period. Notwithstanding stringent economies, the company's equipment was still maintained at a high standard, showing a higher record than the average of first class railroads in the United States.

After referring to the many difficulties met during the past year the President was pleased to point out further that benefits had accrued from its investments, particularly from the

This week has seen considerable progress in the school construction work. The steel girders for ceiling of the upper floor are now being placed, and brick-work is completed to that stage.

Marriage

DAVIES—MILLER

The marriage of Anna Mary Miller, eldest daughter of Mrs. Louisa Miller, of Lachute, to Henry Robert Davies, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Davies, of Toronto, took place at St. Simeon's Church on Saturday afternoon at 4.30 o'clock.

The bride, who was unattended, was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. Chas. Miller, and wore a channel blue frock with white accessories and a corsage of tea roses and lilies of the valley.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's mother, after which the happy couple left on a short motor trip. On their return they will reside in Montreal. Among the out-of-town guests were Mrs. H. W. Wooding, of Ottawa; Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Beach, Mr. and Mrs. J. Yelland and Mrs. B. Huggins, of Montreal.

"Watchman" Takes Prize in Better Newspapers Contest

Second Award for Weeklies of 1,000 to 2,000 Circulation

Gratifying comments upon the general improvement of this newspaper have been heard from time to time among our readers. The Watchman's success in a country-wide contest, held last week by the Canadian Weekly Newspapers Assn. in convention at Port Arthur, substantiates this impression, and justifies our efforts toward a better newspaper both from readers' and from advertisers' viewpoint.

The Lachute Watchman was awarded second prize for weeklies with a circulation over 1,000 and under 2,000. The Rose-town (Sask.) Eagle headed the list in this class and took the Charles Clark Cup.

Mishap at Vide Sac C. N. R. Crossing

Driving at a high speed on the Vide Sac road, now being used as a detour during repairs to the Montreal highway, a lady passenger in a powerful 16 cylinder car from New York suffered painful injuries at the C. N. R. track. The grade crossing at this point, located behind Muirs', is one well known to many local drivers, being badly graded and dangerous when taken at any speed. Mrs. Cary, the victim of a severe bumping when this heavy automobile crossed the track, was taken to Desjardins Hotel, Lachute. Suspecting an injured spine, the physician later ordered her removal to Montreal General Hospital, where it is reported no fracture was found and the patient is now progressing favorably.

Accident Victim Buried At Lakefield

Sad Fatality in Flint, Mich.

The largest funeral seen in Lakefield for many years was held on Wednesday afternoon, when relatives, friends and former neighbors gathered to pay their last respects to the remains of Melvin MacDonald, a young man who had spent his early years and was well known in that community. MacDonald was 28 years of age, having resided for some four years in Flint, Mich., and was the victim of an automobile accident in that city. He was driving on a "through" street with the right of way, when a motorist emerged from a side street, colliding with his machine and killing him instantly.

The remains were brought to Lakefield on Wednesday, funeral service being there conducted by Rev. A. E. Mount and Archdeacon Overing, in the Anglican Church; interment followed in the neighboring cemetery. The large crowd who witnessed the ceremony, bore evidence of the popularity of this young man and of the community's deep sympathy for those who survive his tragic loss. There remain a loving wife, formerly Miss Reta Tomalty, of Lakefield, and three small daughters, together with his parents Mr. and Mrs. Henry MacDonald, several brothers and sisters, and many relatives in Lakefield and vicinity.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Warwick and daughter Audrey, also Mr. and Mrs. Lyall Tomalty, of Detroit, Mich., attended the funeral. The pall bearers included Herbert, Leslie and Haddon MacDonald, and Robt., Lyall and Percy Tomalty. Many beautiful floral tributes decorated the church and casket.

"Speed Up"—is Unusual Advice from Chief of Traffic

Neighboring Highway is Congested by Sight-Seeers.

"Speed up on the Ste. Agathe road!" is the somewhat surprising advice issued by Aurele Lacombe, chief of the provincial traffic department. It is intended for Sunday drivers—or slow sightseers—who delay traffic and cause tie-ups each week-end over what is now considered the province's most important highway, and has long been recognized as one of the busiest routes.

Chief Lacombe has instructed members of his staff who patrol the Montreal-St. Agathe highway, to keep motorists moving at an average speed of 35 miles. "Several accidents have taken place on this road, but in the majority of the cases, they are due to motorists who slow up, and cause traffic congestions," Chief Lacombe stated.

Tunnel Worker Killed, Three Injured, at Buckingham

One man was fatally injured and three others suffered minor injuries when loose rock fell from the roof of the power tunnel running from Masson to Buckingham, on Wednesday, 27th. July. Edward Duquette, 29, who was the most seriously injured, died soon after he was removed to hospital. Another man had a fractured leg, while two others suffered severe bruises.

An inquest into the accident was held by Dr. Joseph Isabelle, coroner of Hull, but the cause of the falling rock has not been determined. The tunnel is being built by the McLaren Lumber Co. and is nearly completed.

Argenteuil W. I. Activities

Chatham Branch held a short course in Domestic Science and Practical Nursing, from July 5 to 8, instructor Miss Nish of Macdonald College, as well as a garden party on July 29. Their August meeting was on Canadianization, an interesting paper being read on that subject by Mrs. Albert Dixon.

Jerusalem-Bethany had interesting talk by Mr. G. Valois, who explained the corporation of the Institute; also arranged for a picnic and Grandmother's Day in August.

Frontier held an interesting Lawn meeting, and were favored with a very earnest address by Dr. Wales of St. Andrews East, on Children's Welfare. He took for his text, as it were, the Health Rules of the Junior Red Cross, particularly stressing the good work done by them and other Welfare Bureaux. The President, Mrs. D. Davis of Morin Heights, also gave a wonderful talk on the work of the busy mother in the home.

Lakefield heard interesting report on Macdonald College Convention, and united with the Farmers' Club in their August picnic.

Lachute catered to a large C. P. R. visiting picnic held in their exhibition grounds, also held a dance in the Auditorium.

Pioneer has had a busy summer sending fruit and flowers to the sick, interchanging ideas between their own institute and visitors from other branches. Held discussions on gardening, also a lawn social. Had delightful August meeting on Mr. Pringle's lawn surrounded with beautiful flowers, as they listened to a very interesting paper on "Immigration" by Mrs. J. S. Giles, of Lachute. That part of the entertainment over, the ladies gathered on Mr. Joseph Bradley's lawn and witnessed a Poultry Culling demonstration.

Weekly Newspapermen Convene at Port Arthur

E. H. McCoy Passes in 74th Year

The death occurred on Saturday evening last of Mr. E. H. McCoy who for some forty one years has been a well known and highly respected citizen of our town.

Born in Huntingdon in 1858, Mr. McCoy spent several years in California and was married to Louisa Arnott, who survives him along with four daughters, Mrs. Dr. Swaine, of Montreal;

Mrs. F. A. Brennian, Mrs. S. J. McFaul, and Miss Eleanor McCoy, of Lachute, and two sons, Lorne, of Ottawa, and George of Montreal, also one sister, Mrs. George Hunter, of Holyoke Mass.

Deceased gentleman had been Superintendent of the Carillon Canal for some twenty two years and for upwards of twenty years had rendered valuable service on the Lachute Academy School Board.

Having joined Argenteuil Lodge No. 67 forty-two years ago, he was the oldest living member and until his recent illness was always present at the masonic gatherings.

The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. Henry Cousens on Monday afternoon from his residence in the East Ward, and was very largely attended by friends and relatives.

The pall bearers were Messrs. L. McCoy, of Ottawa; Geo. McCoy and Dr. Fred Swaine, of Montreal; Ed. McCoy, of Huntingdon, F. A. Brennian and S. J. McFaul, of Lachute.

Another new commercial airline was opened when Canadian Airways put a plane on the Ottawa-Lucerne-in-Quebec run. The first machine covered the route on Saturday last piloted by Capt. K. F. Saunders. Among the passengers were: J. D. B. Ferguson, secretary of Right Hon. A. Neville Chamberlain and Major A. J. Muirhead, M.P. Parliamentary secretary to Sir John Gilmour.

Marriage

DAVIS — MARION

A very pretty wedding took place in the Church of the Redeemer, Weir, on Thursday afternoon last, at 4 p.m., when Mr. Marvin Clarence Davis was united in marriage to Miss Yvonne Dora Marion. The bride, who was given away by her father, looked charming in a mane satin dress, with white picture hat trimmed with mauve, and carried a bouquet of roses and sweet peas. She was attended by her sister, Miss Annette Marion; Mr. Leonard Davis, brother of the groom acted as best man. Rev. Gordon W. Phillips officiated at the ceremony and Mrs. Phillips played the "Wedding March". The happy couple left on a motor trip to Vermont, and on their return they will reside in Weir.

Although not as large in numbers as usual, the Convention held at Port Arthur on July 28-29 was most successful from both a social and business standpoint and vital questions, of import to the Association were ably discussed in the two-day conference.

Coming from East and West various means of travel were resorted to, some taking advantage of the Lake Boats, while others, such as ourselves, pressed for time, made the trip by train. In this connection the Canadian Pacific offered most speedy and comfortable travel. Leaving here on the evening train we joined the "Dominion" pulling out of Ottawa at 9.25 p.m. A good night's sleep with every comfort and attention, brings one into the rugged but yet picturesque scenery of northern Ontario. Winding along through rough country with huge cuts in the rocks and stone, we realize what sacrifices were made in the past that all the comforts of present day living and travel might be ours. Yet as we journey on, beautiful lakes and scenery are constantly before our eyes and while under ordinary conditions time would seem to drag, yet we leave the miles quickly behind us and by evening are entering the city of Port Arthur, which along with its twin city Fort William is considered as the "Gateway of the West." Here the huge grain elevators with a total Lakehead capacity of 95,000,000 bushels, cause one to stand in amazement, while the Paper Mills, Dry Dock and Ship-building Plants, Hotels, and Industrial Buildings and natural harbour, add much to the city's beauty.

At the Port Arthur Hotel various subjects pertaining to the printing and newspaper business were discussed and addresses given by prominent speakers. Competitions for better newspapers were held and we are pleased to report that the Lachute Watchman obtained second place in the class of 1,000 to 2,000 subscribers.

Maroon Hockey Player is Charged with Assault

Refutes Charge of Incident near St. Andrews East.

Dave Trotter, Maroon hockey player, will have to stand his trial at the next term of the Criminal Assizes, opening September 10, on a charge of assaulting Joseph Albert.

Trotter is accused of having assaulted Joseph Albert, war veteran, on the highway at St. Andrews East on July 10.

Pleading not guilty before Judge Monet in the Criminal Court when he appeared last week for voluntary statement. Trotter was ordered to stand his trial in Court of King's Bench.

At the enquete the complainant testified he was driving with the chauffeur of a motor truck of Strachan's bakery on July 10 when Trotter, accompanied by a woman, tried to pass at a narrow part in the highway. After some time Trotter was able to pass the truck and he signalled the driver to stop. Albert said. When the truck stopped Trotter, without any warning opened the truck door, took hold of Albert's leg and twisted it so hard he broke it in three places, it was alleged. Albert added that Trotter was prevented by the chauffeur from attacking him with an empty bottle that had been lying on the floor of the truck.

Philippe Brails, K.C., acting for the Crown, asked that bail be set for Trotter, who has been on parole since the complaint was laid. Bail was set at $150.

ST. MATTHEW'S CHURCH GRENVILLE, WILL CELE- BRATE CENTENARY.

At a largely attended meeting held in the Rectory, Grenville, recently, it was decided to celebrate the 100th Anniversary of St. Matthew's Church in a fitting manner on the 21st. of September next (St. Matthew's Day.) There will be a celebration of the Holy Communion in the morning, followed by a Dinner.

Afterwards there will be other events, details of which will be announced later. All friends of the Parish are asked to keep this date open, and any who have items of historic interest, or information regarding those early days are asked to communicate with the Rector. The Parish was founded in 1826, but the present Church building was erected in 1832 and is still in use.

The Captain's Corner

THE CAPTAIN'S WEEKLY LETTER

ON BEING FAR AWAY.

Dear Boys:—

It has been said that the man who is on top of the mountain can see more than he who lives in a valley. This thought came to my mind the other day when, passing through the wonderful scenery of the Rockies, and was followed by another. — Distance lends enchantment to the View. If you are in an Art Gallery and in front of a very beautiful picture of a landscape, you must, in order to obtain the full value of the Artist's skill and genius, stand some distance away from the work itself. Then the colors will blend one into the other; the golden gleam of sunset will merge itself into the deep purple of the distant hills; the blue waters of the Mountain stream will form a mirror in which will be reflected the darker blue of an evening sky; until every detail of the picture is lost in a glorious and harmonious whole. But go up close to it and what do you discover? Now you see nothing but harsh and crude outlines, made by the brush as it worked in various colors on the canvas; broken curves and crooked lines. True they have their meaning and are necessary in order to build up the vision which the inspiration of the Artist has willed to create; they do not mean and have no part in the magic grandeur of completed effort.

How often, while we are still at school and living at home, do we feel the irksomeness of the rules that are laid down for our conduct! How often do we say to ourselves, "Oh for the time when I can get away from all this and be Master of my own destiny!" And we are blind to the touch of the Master. Then the time comes when we have to leave the scene of our early training.

At first, because of our ignorance, we are glad. And then from the shadows of hope deferred, of unrealized ambitions, we look back. And though our vision may be still a little dimmed, we realize with wonder and unamazing knowledge that what we took to be our martyrdom and rough treatment, was but the initial stages of the picture beautiful. It is a good thing, dear boys, for us at times to occupy the position of Being Far Away, provided that when we are so, we have the eyes to see, the mind to understand, and the soul to believe, that all things work together for good and the Great Master never makes mistakes.

Do you fit into the picture? I hope so, very much.

Your affectionate friend,

THE CAPTAIN.

A TALE OF THE SOUTH SEAS

By Capt. O. J. Aldom.

Chapter 11.

Jack soon discovered that the putting on of his uniform meant hard and continuous work, and that Mr. Williams did not believe in having anybody on board standing around doing nothing. There were still cases of cargo which he had to check up in a large book, and as they lay far down in the hold of the ship, our hero was at times compelled to crawl under and over them, in order to read as far as was possible the trade markings on each one which denoted its contents. In addition to this he found that no small part of his duty was to be responsible for the issue of all stores for the cook's galley, and as the voyage was to be a long one, the most careful accounting was necessary in order that none would fall short of adequate food during the trip.

He was so busy that the morning seemed to fly and he was not a little surprised when a sailor came down to him and said, "It's twelve o'clock, sir, and you are wanted in the saloon."

Jack looked at his hands in dismay. "Where can I wash myself?" he asked.

The sailor grinned, "You go along to your cabin, sir", he advised "and you will find that Jim the steward has fixed all that for you."

Without hesitating another second he climbed up the steep ladder from the dimly-lit interior of the ship and made his way to his cabin. Here he found a can of hot sea water had been placed ready for him and he soon changed its color of pale green to a deep murky black. After he had brushed his clothes, he felt that he was fit enough to present himself in the saloon, and trusted that there would be a good meal ready, for his exertions of the morning had made him very hungry.

On entering he found to his satisfaction that his Uncle and Babs had arrived and were already having their mid-day meal with Mr. Williams.

"Well, well, Number 2, and how have you been getting on?" enquired his Uncle with a smile, while Babs gave him a surprised look to see him for the first time in his uniform. Jack, recognizing what being addressed as Number 2 meant, replied smartly, "Quite well, thank you, Sir, but very hungry." Captain Somerville gave a chuckle of satisfaction. "That's a good sign and promises well for the future, both as regards your health and obedience to orders. Now when you have finished your meal, Mr. Williams says he can spare you for an hour, during which time, I want Babs here, taken around the ship and shown everything." It did not take long for Jack to finish his meal, hungry as he was, because of his sister's impatience to go up on deck.

"And to think," said Babs, when they were walking the clean white planks, "that you are an officer of the ship, and can tell any of these sailors to do anything you wish."

Her brother laughed, "Not quite like that, Babs! True I am an officer alright, but at present my knowledge is so limited that if I were to give an order it would probably be wrong, and the sailor who received it would not carry it out!"

Very happily together they wandered all over the large steamer, visiting the engine room, the fo'castle, where the crew lived, entered the chart house and wireless room, until Jack, with an exclamation of real dismay, looked at his watch. "It's half past one Babs! I must be off to Mr. Williams. Do you think you can find your way down to the saloon by yourself?" "Of course I can. You go off on your old duty and tell Mr. Williams I think he is a very wicked man to give you so much to do and take you away from me so soon," and the tears came into the little maid's eyes, for though she would not permit anyone to see her distress, none the less she felt very lonely on this big ship and began to wonder if, after all, she was going to enjoy the voyage as much as she had thought she would. Just then, however, her thoughts were forced to take another turn, for suddenly sharp words of command were given, the gangway to the shore was taken aboard, huge volumes of smoke poured from the funnels, and the good ship Dauntless began very slowly to move from the dock-side. Babs looked round eagerly to say something to Jack, but found herself alone.

Looking over the side, her eyes gazed on the moving water. With ever-increasing speed, and headed for the open sea, the vessel tossed her bows and commenced her long voyage.

SCOUT NEWS

Between 15,000 and 18,000 Boy Scouts are camping this summer in various parts of the Dominion.

How many Scouts in Wales?

The last Scout census for Wales showed 6,822 Scouts, 153 Sea Scouts, 999 Rovers, 51 Rover Scouts, and 5,504 Wolf Cubs.

Canadian Uniforms in Falklands

The uniforms worn by Scouts of the Falkland Islands are procured from Canadian Scout headquarters Ottawa. Included is a special heavy 'windbreaker.'

Boy Scouts in the Holy Land

Since the visit of Jewish Boy Scouts to the world gathering in England in 1929 there has been steady growth of the movement in the Holy Land. The last census showed a total of 2,371 largely located in Jerusalem.

British Railroad Scout Societies

A Scout Society has been formed by Scout members of the Great Western Railway Staff at Paddington, London. Other important divisional points such as Swindon, Bristol, Newport, Birmingham and Swansea are organizing similar societies.

How many scouts in Ireland?

In Northern Ireland 2,602 Boy Scouts, 618 Rovers, 2,306 Wolf Cubs and 515 leaders—a total of 6,051. Free State:—1,025 Scouts, 303 Rovers, 128 Sea Scouts, 26 Rover Sea Scouts, 553 Wolf Cubs, 256 leaders—a total of 2,291.

Camp Good Turns.

In carrying out their daily good turn while in camp, Scouts have discovered some novel forms of service. One troop provided an all night guard for a girls' camp near which a suspicious character had been seen. Another troop "shaved an old gentleman." Numerous cars have been pulled from sand and mud holes, and one car was dragged from a lake. Many farmers have been assisted in various ways.

In business and manufacturing plants and on steamships, Oil has long been given preference. Now it is brought to your home—at the highest point of efficiency—by the STERLING OIL BURNER. It does away with all carrying of coal, bother of ashes and continuous stoking of fires, at the same time providing clean, uniform, healthful and economical heat.

The latest of home improvement devices, STERLING OIL BURNER easily ranks as the most useful of these, because most other recently adopted household appliances, such as vacuum cleaners, washing machines, etc., are used only a few hours each week, whereas STERLING OIL BURNER serves you from 10 to 24 hours per day almost every day in the year.

PREMIER ONCE OBSCURE TEACHER

Born in an obscure sea-coast hamlet in New Brunswick, and rising from that obscurity to the prime ministry of Canada by dint of an ability and capacity for work which even his opponents have never questioned, Rt. Hon. Richard Bedford Bennett is leading Canada's delegation into the deliberations of the Ottawa Imperial Conference.

R. B. Bennett was born in 1870 son of a Hopewell Cope ship-builder and a country school teacher. A quiet and precocious youth, he studied while his companions slept, and at the age of 17 was teaching school at Irish-town, near Moncton. Then he turned to law, going into the office of L. J. Tweedie, later premier of New Brunswick.

In 1879 Mr. Bennett accepted a junior partnership in the Calgary law firm of Senator James Loughheed, and threw himself with fervor into the growing and exciting life of the west. In spite of temporary setbacks he went from strength to strength in his business and political career.

His political life began with his election to the assembly of the North West Territories with in a year after he went to Calgary. He entered Dominion politics in the election of 1900, but was defeated by Hon. Frank Oliver. After serving in the Alberta legislature he again entered the federal arena, and was elected for Calgary on the reciprocity issue in the 1911 election. He did not contest the war-time election; was defeated in 1921, and entered parliament again in 1925. In 1927 a national convention elected him leader of the Conservative party. He became premier after the general election of 1930.

A wealthy man, with a strong, forceful and militant personality the premier never spares his mental and physical energies. He has few physical recreations, his only diversions being conversation and literature. He has never married.

Consolidated Mining and Smelting Co'y. which has alone contributed, over the past ten years an annual average of over $3,400,000 in freight payments.

"As has been stated on several occasions", added Mr. Beatty, "Your property in years of depression came, it would be of prosperity, was equipped and maintained so that if a period in a position to withstand siege even if protracted. The wisdom of this policy has been demonstrated within the past thirty months, during which the world has been visited by an economic storm of unparalleled violence."

A further statement is made that, notwithstanding the decline in gross earnings since the end of 1929, this has been largely met by the decrease in operating expenses.

Reference was made to certain competing agencies, but such competition was being successfully overcome by a more liberal reduction in fares to the public.

In viewing the crop conditions throughout the West, Mr. Beatty expressed the belief that conditions were exceptionally favorable, being better at this season than at the same time in any of the last three years. A wheat crop of from four to five hundred million bushels, which it seems now might reasonably be

NUMEROLOGY.

By M. V. Trayers,
Reprinted from "Studies"

Did you ever stop to think why it is, that some people will again and again draw the lucky number out of the lottery, or sweep-drum, turn up the lucky card, back the right horse without the slightest knowledge of "Form," plunge on the winning colour as the ball rolls, choose the highest hockey or baseball card, in fact get all the "breaks" whilst others are for ever doomed to lose, never buying a lucky ticket, never getting a break except to become "broke" through a perseverance of playing their luck or a sequence of losses on the law of averages.

Perhaps you did. For who hasn't at sometime or another watched the spin of a coin, or the roll of a ball with anxious interest.

But you answer you don't gamble. Very Good.

How often do we see hard working industrious people pursue a hopeful line of business with every augury of a promising and successful continuation go down to bankruptcy and ruin while a less favoured neighbor without apparent ability or energy continues muddling along to a successful bank account.

Or the fluctuations of the money market may provide you with an example of the vagaries of the fickle jade Lady Luck. You have seen the poor man's earnings swallowed into the gaping mouth of Mammon, while the lucky gambler draws his pile before the vortex opens. Some people who would not gamble do "business" on the stock exchanges which in many instances make the betting enclosure of a race-course look like a "plater" to the "Derby."

It matters not whether it be a sweep-stake or a church bazaar; a business or a stock exchange transaction; an automobile ride or a sea voyage; a marriage proposal or employment prospects; a short life or a long one; the elements of a gamble, of luck, of the law of averages, call it what you will, are ever present.

The fact that you try and try again and at last succeed, may be worked out on an average but there is something far deeper than the law of averages can explain in the sequence of losses or successes that attend the possessor of a particular name. A child may be born under an unlucky star and be a plaything and jest of fate unfortunate from the cradle, but the conspiring of events may in a measure be countered by the power of a good name. "What's in a name?" may be all right as a quotation from Shakespeare by people who have never heard of or studied the Quaballistic art. "Titanic" as a disaster or "Bobby Jones" as a victor should be sufficient to commend the study of naming to ship-builders and parents alike.

Doubting Thomas' should not allow materialism to so circumscribe their thoughts or limit their actions where obscure scientific subjects are concerned.

A study of the examples at the end of this article and the application of the Quaballah to anticipated, would be of incalculable benefit to the country as a whole.

There is also reason to hope that substantial benefit will accrue from the Imperial Economic Conference. "I have always held the view," said Mr. Beatty, "that the Dominions and the motherland have it within their power to effect a marked improvement in Empire trade. It is to be hoped that wise counsel will prevail and much good result from these deliberations."

Such expressions are certainly heartening, and will go a long way in restoring public confidence, giving encouragement to those who are still pessimistic as to the immediate future of this country.

names of the readers' own selection will quickly convince the most skeptical that there is quite a lot in a name.

That a rose by any other name would perhaps be quite a different flower. If we go back to the old Hebrew language we find that each letter had a corresponding number and very remarkable results were obtained by calculation of these numbers with respect to their corresponding letters. The process of calculation was determined from the formation of a table showing the relationship between numbers and letters. This table is called a Quaballah. Before using the Quaballah the value of the different letters as revealed by their numerical relative must be known. The following list denotes the fortunate and unfortunate numbers, but obviously a much more extensive reading than space allows me here is necessary if one is to obtain a more complete knowledge of the mystic property of numbers.

1. Fortunate. Denotes mental power, activity, harmony.
2. Unfortunate. Denotes trouble, enmity and death.
3. Fortunate. Perfect love, plenty and fruitfulness.
4. Fortunate. Endurance, accomplishing, immortality.
5. Doubtful. Denotes competition, struggle, fire light and justice.
6. Unfortunate. Vice, uncertainties, marriage, strife.
7. Fortunate. Victory, honour, triumph.
8. Unfortunate. Destruction, separation, terrors life.
9. Fortunate. Mystery, power, wisdom and rulership.
10. Fortunate. Luck, fortune and honour.
11. Indifferent. Fearlessness, violence, bravery, energy.
12. Unfortunate. Troubles, danger, sadness and changes.
13. Doubtful. Regeneration, transformation, death.
14. Unfortunate. Revolution, indecision trials and danger.
15. Unfortunate. Magic mystery and fatality.
16. Unfortunate. weakness accidents.
17. Fortunate. Beauty, hope and intuition.
18. Unfortunate. Treachery deception.
19. Fortunate. Success, esteem.
20. Doubtful. Life and impulse, hindrances, fatalities.
21. Fortunate. Truth, elevation success but not without hard work.

Large numbers must be reduced to a unit or distinct potency. For instance people have found that 116 is a bad house number. 1 plus 1 plus 6 equals 8, a bad number. The number 1 is all right but 6 destroys its influence. All large numbers should be similarly reduced.

To discover the numerical value of letters we must have a quaballah. Several are in existence but for all practical purposes the following is expedient and accurate.

A I J Q Y, equal 1.
B C K R, equal 2.
G L S, equal 3.
D M T, equal 4.
E N X H, equal 5.
U V W, equal 6.
O Z, equal 7.
F P, equal 8.

In conclusion we shall consider a few examples having regard to the particular fate connected with the word selected. T-4 1-1 T-4 A-1 N-5 I-1 C-2 equals 18.

18 is an evil number The Path of Blood, deception, bad judgment.

The "Titanic" disaster is regarded as the greatest shipping disaster of all times.

Napoleon equals 41 equals 4 plus 1 equals 5. Five whose symbol is the Magician is a number of fire struggle, etc.

Buonapart also equals 41. The combined name equals 10 whose symbol is the Wheel of Fortune. A number of virility, rise and fall power etc. The last we shall consider is the ill-fated Cymbeline which exploded at the Vickers dock in Montreal recently with such tragic results.

Cymbeline equals 28, a number of evil connection opposition injuries, to trade, disaster, loss of the results of work.

Entertainment as Big Factor in the Ottawa Exhibition

Directors Recognize Demands of Patrons. High Class Attractions Booked. United States Marine Band and Winter Garden Revue are Features.

Of the hundred and one features which combine to make the Ottawa Exhibition the big annual event of the Capitol, the entertainment factors appeal to rural and urban residents, both young and old. The educational part of the exhibition is always to the fore and prominence is given to live stock, agriculture, industries, child welfare, handicrafts and arts. At the same time it is recognized by the directors of the Central Canada Exhibition Association that the patrons of the exhibition look for amusement and entertainment. For this year their demands will be met as never before.

Outstanding will be the United States Marine Band, the first time in Canada. This famed organization of 75 musicians will give two concerts each day. Those who hear them on the opening day, Monday, August 22nd., doubtless will miss few if any of the programs on the succeeding five days.

Ottawa is also favored in that it will be the only city this year to have formation flying by the Siskin planes from the Royal Canadian Air Force. This concession has been made to the exhibition directors owing to the delegates to the Imperial Conference. This conference also resulted in the obtaining of government exhibits from all parts of the Empire.

The midway is always the Mecca for pleasure seekers and this year the very latest in shows and novel rides will be assembled. In front of the Grand Stand there will be horse races, vaudeville, sports and fireworks.

Topping the program for the evening will be the Winter Garden Revue, the most elaborate outdoor spectacle ever presented at the exhibition. There will be a big cast of Broadway stars, mostly girls, the costuming and staging will be on a gorgeous scale. It is to be a meritorious event, a work of art, replete with up-to-date song numbers, excellent dances, splendid lighting effects, beautiful shapely girls, all selected with the greatest of care, entrancing scenes and thrilling episodes, without a doubt to be produced on the

WHY THE BARBER'S POLE

People smile at many of the customs used by their forefathers, and yet the same people carry on these same customs in a modified manner according to an address on "Ancient Customs," given by a pupil of the General Amherst high school and reported in part as follows in the Amherstburg Echo:

"Why do barbers use red and white striped poles as a sign of their profession? Have you ever wondered? At one time barbers performed minor operations in surgery. During the era when bleeding was regarded as a cure for most ills, the people went to the barber to be bled. It was necessary for a patient to grasp a staff or pole and such a pole with a bandage to tie the patient's arm was always kept in readiness.

"When the pole was not in use, the bandage was fastened to it and both were placed at the door as a sign or symbol that the barber was proficient in bleeding. Later it became customary to use a pole with stripes painted around it rather than Red stripes were used to indicate blood-soaked bandages. Thus the red and white barber poles are relics of the crude staff and bandages used by barbers in ancient times during bleeding operations."

most magnificent and stupendous scale ever attempted in the history of fair amusements.

One of the most sensational features will be that of the exhibition of trained lions presented by Miss Mabel Starr, the world renowned animal trainer when she enters her den of fierce ferocious, forest-bred lions as an offering on the Schulz Animal Combination. Professor William Schulz has achieved a world-wide reputation as an animal trainer and can justly boast of having trained every type of animal, from the mouse to the elephant, wild or domestic. One of his feature offerings will be his elephant act, consisting of "Mighty" the mammoth mastodon, two small ponies, and three dogs, which are presented by Professor William Schulz himself, and his assistant, a very charming young lady. Most unusual will be the troupe of trained sheep, said to be the only such troupe in the world. These go through their paces in a way to please old and young. Beautiful Shetland Ponies, educated dogs, trained monkeys and other animals will make this act a real circus.

Hints for Homebodies

There are at least 57 varieties of rudeness, but one of the lowest forms is to talk through a Musical or while someone is trying to speak. If people are not prepared to listen, why do they come? It is extremely selfish as it spoils everyone's enjoyment within sound of the speaker's voice. There are times when people do not realize that they are disturbing others and other times when they do and do not care—one way of attracting attention! Do try to wait until the end of the selection before passing on your bright thoughts. If it was just you alone, it might not matter so much, but when several whisper at the same time it is exceedingly annoying.

Most of us know better, which makes it all the more inexcusable. Musicians are generally free from that type of rudeness, but not always. At a concert last month, one of the performers sat at the rear of the concert hall after his turn was over. He happens to be rather deaf, and like many deaf people, does not know how loud he talks; He talked volubly and disturbed everyone within sound. But, he, himself, was serenely unconscious of it.

One of my friends was at one of the Twilight Symphony concerts in Toronto. Some man immediately behind her talked steadily. Finally she turned around all set to glare. Instead of glaring she was frozen with astonishment because the offender was one of Toronto's best known musicians. Presumably he was discussing the music but he made as much disturbance as if he were merely gossiping.

The radio may help to make us careless, because it is obvious that we cannot always sit and listen quietly. Children should be trained to listen quietly to musicians and speakers and if the teacher makes an occasional opportunity for this sort of training in school, a lasting impression may be made.

DIGESTIBILITY OF EGGS

Modern ideas on the digestibility of eggs have changed from the old-fashioned one. It used to be thought that a raw egg was very easily digested, and it was one of the first things given to an invalid. In some forms of disease, such as tuberculosis, or consumption as it was called then, they were given literally by the dozen. Modern science has proved that a raw egg is more difficult of digestion than a cooked one. This is because a raw egg takes much longer to pass through the stomach than a cooked one and for that reason taxes the digestive powers. Hard cooked eggs (again I use the modern term instead of the old one of hard boiled eggs) are not difficult to digest if they are properly cooked. In fact the yolks are grated and given to babies. To cook an egg properly adds to its digestibility and the hard cooked ones must be cooked until there is no suggestion of wariness. They should not be boiled hard, as the high temperature makes them more difficult of digestion. The proper way to hard cook an egg is to cook it for twenty minutes in water that is simmering and not boiling hard. Cooked in this manner you need not fear the digestibility of a hard cooked egg.

Children are usually very fond of them and will often eat them in this way when they scorn them cooked in any other way. Doubtless, the fact that many think them forbidden as a food for children, adds to their attractiveness. Hard cooked eggs should be added to many summer salads as they provide the protein which is necessary for the properly balanced meal.

BOILED BACK BACON

Home cooked ham is usually a treat. However there are many families that find even a half ham too much. Back bacon makes an admirable substitute. Buy it in the piece in the size to suit your requirements. Cover with boiling water and cook twenty minutes to the pound with another twenty minutes for the pot. Do not let the bacon boil hard but keep it at a simmering temperature. Let cool in the water in which it is cooked. This slices nicely and is good either as a cold meat or in sandwiches.

American visitors usually enjoy Canadian back bacon as they say that they cannot buy it at home. Many of them take a piece back with them as a treat for their families, and a souvenir from Canada.

BLACK CHERRY CONSERVE

Two medium sized oranges, 1 quart of pitted cherries, juice of 2 lemons $3\frac{1}{2}$ cups of sugar. Cut oranges in small pieces; barely cover with water and cook until soft. Then add cherries, lemon juice and sugar. Cook rapidly until thick and clear.

RED CURRANT JUICE FOR APPLE JELLY

Have you ever kept red currant juice to add to your apple jelly? It makes a delicious combination both as to taste and to color. Cover your currants with water, cook until soft and drain as usual. Bring to a boil and bottle in sterilized jars. Store in a cool place until required. Then add to apple juice and proceed as usual for apple jelly.

During a scripture lesson a little girl was asked to describe the sufferings of Job.

"Job had one trouble after another," she replied. "First he lost all his cattle; then he lost all his children; then he had to go and live alone in the desert with his wife."

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Six bandits come aboard the steamer, Midnight Sun, while she is tied to the bank of the Mackenzie. Father Claverly and the other passengers on the boat are amazed at the sight of bandits in this Great Waterways country. A thousand miles north of Edmonton Jimmy Montgomery, who had spent years with the Canadian Mounted, draws his gun in the face of the covering rifles and fires upon the ruffians. He is shot through the heart by a half-breed. The bandits get away with gold dust and choice peltry.

CHAPTER II.—Corporal Bill Hard-sock brings the news of the crime to Sergeant Alan Baker at the Mounted Police post at Fort Endurance. After a brief dispute over plans with his incompetent superior, Inspector Haskell, Alan starts out after the bandits in the big police launch with the corporal and four constables.

CHAPTER III.—Reaching the Midnight Sun, they stop long enough for Alan to board her and consult witnesses of the crime. Alan asks the skipper to put Jimmy Montgomery's orphaned four-year-old daughter off at Fort Endurance and leave her in the care of Alan's fiancée, Elizabeth Saunders. At the MacMillan trading post on the Big Aloska, Joyce MacMillan is alone, awaiting the return of Dave, her father, from a fur-buying trip. She is thrilled when the police launch ties up there for the night, as she has not seen Alan Baker for months. Secretly
she had hoped to marry him; then she was stunned by the news of his engagement to Elizabeth. She is happy
now to perceive from his halting talk that the planned marriage is not definitely certain.

CHAPTER IV.—Larry Young, one of Alan's men, discovers in MacMillan's store a bale of pelts stolen from the Midnight Sun. The evidence in-criminate Dave so strongly that Alan is compelled to tell Joyce. She hotly defends her father. Alan leads his expedition up the Big Aloska.
Compelled by Haskell's foolish orders
to divide the party, Alan fails to capture the bandits. The police expedition returns to Fort Endurance
with Larry badly wounded.

CHAPTER V.—Haskell, who is Alan's active enemy and is trying to win Elizabeth, blames Alan for the failure and orders his demotion to the ranks. He flatly denies that he ordered Alan to split the police party in the charge and orders him to lead a second expedition against the bandits. Seeing only one way now to go after the bandits and clear Joyce's father from the charge resulting from the obviously planted evidence, Alan buys out of the Mounted. Haskell gives Alan his release on condition that he signs a paper to the effect that Haskell did not give the order to split the expedition.

"And you'll keep quiet about this, Bill? Don't tell Ped, Elizabeth, Drummond, anybody. If it ever gets out, I'd wreck the whole idea, and I'd probably land in a penitentiary."

"I'll keep quiet as a dead dog. I won't breathe a word. But Alan, why n—l, way we've hung together, why can't I be in on your trick?" Eagerly he pleaded. "Let me go along, Alan."

"It'd mean desertion for you. Has-tell would give you the limit. And you've got to watch after Joyce. My work is a one-man job anyway. We'll keep in touch, Bill. You write to me.
Lord knows but—that you and I sometime on ahead, might get together again."

They shook hands.
Alan hurried down the slope to the trading store. Factor Drummond had not gone to bed. The news of the patrol, of his old friend Dave Mac-Millan being arrested and faced with such overwhelming evidence of guilt, had upset him.

"What the devil, Alan?—civilian clothes!"
Alan was weary of people's astonishment. He wasted no time with explanations.

"Drummond, where's old Dad Pence?
I saw him here when we got back this evening."

Drummond pointed behind the counter. Alan walked around, up the narrow aisle, and there found old Pence asleep on a pile of wolf skins.

He had passed his three score and ten, old Dad Pence, at prospecting, trapping, water dogging, whatnot. He had made fortunes and guilelessly had lost them to men sharper than he. He had come down to the twilight of life penniless, homeless, childless. But old Dad Pence could still handle a rifle with the best of the youngsters; and a reputation for magic which he had acquired among the witch-killing Indians, still clung to him and put fear into primitive hearts. Altogether he was the man for Alan's purpose, if only Joyce would not mother him too much and make his existence thereafter too desolate by contrast.

Shaking him wide enough awake to understand what was wanted of him, Alan explained. He was to go back to the Big Aloska with Joyce and watch after her. He was to keep in touch with Bill Hardsock. Under no circumstances was he to wander off into the bush and leave Joyce alone.

Old Pence nodded. "I'll do it, b'y.
Just as you say. I'll try not to forget and wander off in th' bush. I'll look after Joyce, you don't worry."

Alan thrust a handful of bills into his pocket, and rose up and stepped back around the counter. "I want to buy your motor canoe, Drummond.
How much?"

"To buy it? You making a trip?
To ahead, take it and use it, Alan."

"But I'm not bringing it back. I'm leaving this country in it. How much?"

Drummond was all tangled in Alan's wif words. "That canoe isn't worth a lot. . . . You're leaving this country. . . . The motor cost me a hundred but it's three years old. . . .
You're not bringing it back? . . . I guess fifty dollars, Alan. But what in the name of sin—?"

Alan gave him the fifty and strode out the door.

Down the terrace at the steamer landing, Joyce was waiting for him, as he had asked her. Laying his pack in Drummond's canoe and untying the maulster, Alan stood holding it, hat in hand, for a few last words with Joyce.

He said slowly, lengthening these last moments with her: "Joyce, I'm going away. I'm going after those six men. Bill will tell you something about it. I arranged with him to visit you whenever he can, and old Dad Pence is going back to the Aloska to be company for you."

Though she asked no questions about his trip, her dark eyes were big with wonder. Alan was tempted to tell her all. He could depend on her not to breathe one word of it. A score of times he had confided police secrets to her, and she had given him invaluable information gleaned from Indians and breeds.

But his plan was a desperate gamble, and Joyce would surely recognize it as such. She might lose faith in so dubious a venture. And he thought:
"I'll be entirely out of the country, out of it for weeks and weeks. She mustn't know that: she'd feel too terribly alone; she might even come to believe I've deserted her, as I did last winter. But if she thinks I'm still here on the Waterways, perhaps working secretly, it'll help her keep up hope."

"Joyce," he instructed her, "I'd like for you, there at the trading post, to question those Indians and metis when they bring in peltry. You might pick up some information about those six men."

"I'll do it, Alan. And if there's anything else, to help you—"

"There isn't except to keep your courage up and be careful of yourself. Joyce, if you'll promise to take care of yourself there on the Aloska, I'll go away feeling a mighty lot happier. I'll be worrying about you."

"I'll get along, Alan," she said simply.

As she gave him her hand, wishing him good fortune on his venture, Alan had a vision of the lonely, fear-torn weeks ahead of Joyce. He was all sympathy and tenderness for her—no brave a girl, so loyal to her dad, so spirited and pretty.

He was shaken with the temptation to tell Joyce of the secret and powerful circumstances which had torn him away from her and made inevitable his engagement to Elizabeth. He had done Joyce a wrong; he owed her a confession and an explanation of his motive. But there were reasons that kept him silent. He had fought that fight in his own conscience; he had acted deliberately. To tell Joyce of it now would avail nothing. He felt that Joyce, however much she had loved him once, had gone back to a casual friendship with him now, and a resurrection of their intimacy would be painful to them both.

With a handclasp, a final word of cheer about her father, he stepped into the motor canoe, started the engine, headed the boat out from the shore. Looking back, he watched Joyce's slender figure grow more and more wraith-like in the mist until his eyes no longer could see her.

Over at the MacMillan trading post
Joyce was awaiting a visit from Bill Hardsock. A young Loucheux, John Tabanask, had brought a note from Bill, saying he would be along some time late this evening.

This last week had been a feverishly busy one for her. With no hesitation she was sacrificing the entire trading stock. Word of her good bargains had gone out by moccasin telegraph, and the peltry was rolling in beyond all her expectations. Her days were from twenty to twenty-four hours long. Hasty meals for herself and old Dad Pence. Sleep in broken as soon as she could snatch an hour of

it. Sorting and grading furs as ex-

It Was Work for Any Two Men and She Was Doing It.

actly as any man. It was work for any two men, and she was doing it long-handed, earning the four-dollars to fight her dad's battle.

Faithfully carrying out Alan's instructions, she had done a bit of detective work on her own account. But she failed to glean the slightest hint of information.

The mystery of the bandits' sudden appearance engrossed her, as it had Alan; and with good reason it made her keenly uneasy. Those men were hiding in the Thal-Azzah, not many hours distant. Knowing in her heart that her father was innocent, she believed that they had put that fateful pack of furs in the shed because of some animus against him. Their hostility might extend to her, his daughter; and they might make some attempt against her. There were times, when she thought of those vicious brutal criminals so near her, that she wanted to flee back to the safety of the post and the mothering of Mrs.
Drummond.

Before she left Endurance, Bill had told her that Alan had bought out and had severed relations with the Force for good and all. That was the news which Joyce had been brooding about.
Elizabeth had wanted him to get out of service. He was out now. Elizabeth had wanted him to take that Victoria job. He probably would take it now. Elizabeth had had her way with him. The thing which had held her and Alan apart no longer existed.

For more than a year Joyce had seen Alan Baker slipping away from her, little by little. She had fought for her secret hopes as one will fight in the face of death. She wanted Alan! her days were like a passionate cry for him. He was the meaning and purpose of life to her, and she could no longer bear up under her racking doubt. She, too, had come to the parting of the ways, and must take some irreversible step.

In the twilight she heard the drone of Bill's motor canoe down the Aloska. When the craft swung around a bend, she stood up and waved. Catching sight of her on the lutting rock, Bill glided in alongside.

He held a warm place in her heart.
He had a man's stubborn will power.
He was honest and open as daylight.
he was loyal clean through. Joyce knew that Bill loved her, in a dogged hopeless way, asking nothing more than to do favors for her and be always dependable when she needed some one. She was sorry for him, terribly sorry he loved her. For his sake she had several times rebuffed him; but it hurt Bill so visibly that she had stopped.

She invited him: "Bill, let's go up to the post. You're tired. And I'll get you a bite to eat."

"I can't, Joyce," he reluctantly refused. "I've got to light out for Endurance. I just wanted to drop past and see that everything is all right with you. How've you been making out?"

"Better than I even expected. I've taken in an awful lot of furs."

"That's good. But I mean, any trouble with these breeds or Smokies?"
He spoke rather belligerently toward a hypothetical enemy of hers.

"Not the slightest bit," Joyce assured him. That was not exactly true; a couple of incidents of the last week had been a little ugly. But she felt she could guard herself against those cowardly men.

She asked rather hesitantly, "Has anything happened at Fort Endurance, Bill?" She was thinking of Elizabeth waiting there; and that beating question crowded out even her father's trouble. It took an effort to speak of it. Bill knew more of Alan's plans than she did. He might know the answer to that question.

He said: "No, nothing much has happened. I moved up to Alan's cabin.
Haskell has made Whipple a corporal.
Imagine that! The new doctor for Hershell Island came past on his way down north, and looked at Larry. He couldn't do any more than Father Claverly has done. Larry's getting some strength back, and that chest wound is past the danger point; but his leg is all busted. The doctor said Larry 'ud be permanently crippled.
No hope of anything better."

"Have they sent— Is Dad still there?"

"Yes. We can't spare a man to take him out. He'll be there a week or ten days yet."

"You'll tell him about my good luck here, Bill? And tell him I'll be with him as soon as I close out this post?"

ONE AMERICAN VIEW-POINT

While the following letter from Edward Tiebirt Boyt, of Castleton, Vermont, in the New York Herald-Tribune, is of particular interest to American readers, it should be perused carefully by Canadians who do not realize the sacrifices made by Great Britain. It is becoming more and more apparent that thoughtful Americans are appreciating that if war debts are cancelled, they are not the only country to make sacrifices. Such letters are a fine antidote to the screechings of William Randolph Hearst. He writes:

"In viewing the sacrifices that the United States will be called upon to make in settling the war debts, since it is obvious that cancellation, or reduction, at least, is inevitable, is it not only fair to remind ourselves of the sacrifices of our British cousins across the sea?"

"It must be admitted that on the whole Great Britain had the least to do of all the European powers in perpetrating the Great War, and yet she is apparently the one that is paying the most for it. Her trade was tremendously curtailed by her war effort (much to our own advantage and in generously loaning money to her allies and in losing $4,000,000,000 in Russia; she has aggregated a national debt of $38,000,000,000, twice that of our own. When the war ended Great Britain was owed $2,000,000,000 more than we were and $8,000,000,000 more than she owed us. In spite of these facts, under the Balfour agreement, Great Britain only asked for her debtors what she needed to pay her creditors. Indeed, Great Britain has not only paid what she has received but $700,000,000 more and, while France has redeemed but $200,000,000 of her debt, Great Britain has redeemed $1,400,000,000.

"The heroic efforts and successes of the British people in balancing the budget, and meeting the obligations must demand our envy besides our admiration, and it would hardly be un-American or unpatriotic to forgive the debts of our mother country, from which we have drawn so much that is valuable and lasting in our culture and civilization and to which we owe much that is not found in the balance sheet of the dollar and the pound sterling."

The Debt Cancellation Conspiracy

Huntingdon Gleaner quotes Cold History in a Reply to Randolph Hearst.

In a Sunday paper which we purchased from the local newspaper dealer (says Huntingdon Gleaner) we have come across a two-column front page spread entitled "The Debt Cancellation Conspiracy." That article appeared in the Canadian edition of the Boston Sunday Advertiser, and, it is supposed that 90% of the U. S. Sunday papers that week-end carried the same article. It was the copy of a radio address delivered by William Randolph Hearst over a nation-wide network of the National Broadcasting Company and affiliated stations. It is therefore safe to say that its contents are known by half of the North American continent.

In his opening remarks Mr. Hearst mentioned of the appeal made by the Allies, of their entrance into the Great War, and of how "they won it." Continuing, he spoke of the thousands of millions of dollars loaned for the prosecution of the war and for the Allies to rehabilitate themselves after the war.

Hearst has the opinion that the world is trying to make the U. S. A. shoulder all the war debts in cancelling reparations. We quote:

"My friends, let us be altruistic, and even pacifistic if you please. Let us be patriotic, as we always are, but let us not be sentimentally idiotic, as we sometimes are. Let us consider this whole question of debt cancellation and subsequent taxation calmly and conscientiously logically and also loyally. Let us say that the first point of view in this matter of honestly paying debts or dishonestly cancelling them is the altruistic consideration of WHAT IS BEST FOR THE WORLD. Is it not best for friendship among nations that such friendship should be based on the solid foundation of honorable dealing and mutual good faith? How can friendship among nations, how can mutual confidence or mutual respect be built on any other basis. Who trusts a people that repudiate their debts. The worst thing for the welfare of any nation is the worthlessness of that nation's word and the worst thing for the stability and tranquility of the world would be the knowledge that the solid promises of England, France and Italy to pay honorable obligations were mere unrecognized scraps of repudiated papers."

As the speaker continued his address he continued to wax warmer and spoke of the European nations which had entered into

"what they call a 'gentleman's agreement'—to force their dishonest debt cancellation policy upon the United States. But how can there be a 'gentleman's agreement' between welters? How can there be a gentleman whose word is worthless? How can there be gentlemen whose HONOR is worthless?"

Great Britain's war debts to the United States are placed at four billions of dollars, and Britain has been repaying its war debts to the United States at the rate of approximately $180,000,000 per year.

Now, Mr. Hearst, in answer to your radio broadcast, repudiation of debts, and for the information of the general U. S. public.

Eight of the Southern States of U. S. A. raised loans in Great Britain in the last century and then defaulted in the payment of interest, Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Arkansas, and North and South Carolina are the defaulting States. Calculating compound interest, it is well over $1,000,000,000. Mississippi defaulted in 1841 and repudiated liability in 1852, so that the debt is no new one.

Successive British Governments since 1841 have considered

ed the question, but the difficulty lies in the fact that the U. S. Federal Government is not concerned with the financial responsibilities of individual States. President Roosevelt declared the action of the defaulting States to be a "painful and shameful page" in American history.

When it was first repudiated, hundreds of humble homes in Great Britain suffered severe loss, as a result of which the defaulting States ATTAINED IMMENSE PROSPERITY.

We hope to hear again from Mr. Hearst on solid foundations of honorable dealings, unrecognized scraps of repudiated papers, and WELCHERS. We might also ask, "How can there be gentlemen whose word and honor is worthless?"

Dominion census statistics show that there are 372,296 more males in Canada than females, which is quite a big majority in a population of 10,376,786. Curiously enough, the males predominate in every province and in the Northwest Territories. As regards numbers at least, Canada is a man's country.

The Late Mrs. Thomas Moore

A former and well-known resident of this vicinity passed away on Sunday, August 7th., in the person of Mrs. Thomas Moore. Deceased lady, who was in her 76th. year was born in Newfoundland, a daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Jacob Morris. She resided for some time in Lakefield and was married in 1901 to Thos. Moore, who predeceased her in 1926. Several years were also spent in St. Andrews, where Mr. Moore ran a Temperance Hotel. Of late years residence had been in Lachute until 1930 when Mrs. Moore went to Montreal to live with relatives. Four sisters, Mrs. Davies and Mrs. George Ellis, of Montreal; Mrs. Bolt and Mrs. John Collier, of Newfoundland, also two brothers, Ernest, of Seattle, and Fred, of Chicago, with four step-daughters, Mrs. Hector Mount, and Mrs. Dawson, Montreal; Mrs. J. Gauley, of Thos. Gore, and Mrs. Geo. Kercher, of Outremont, together with two step-sons, Ben and Charles Moore, of Montreal, are left to mourn her loss.

The funeral took place on Tuesday from the Anglican Church to the Lachute Cemetery, service being conducted by the Rev. J. A. Lackey.

Outstanding Artists will be Here Sunday

Sacred Recital announced at Lachute United Church

As we go to press, we receive the announcement that Lachute is to be favoured next Sunday with the services of three outstanding artists, in a sacred programme to be given after the regular evening service of the United Church. This recital will commence at 8.30 p.m., daylight saving time, and the artists will include the famous baritone "Tomasini"—locally known as Mr. Anlon Young; Dr. A. MacKay, renowned organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit; and Mrs. Thom, soprano soloist of St. Andrews United Church, Westmount.

The opportunity of hearing together three such talented musicians and vocalists in collaboration at one of our local services of worship, needs no emphasis. Their artistic quality is well known in these parts, both by experience and by repute; and it is anticipated that a large number will be in attendance to hear them next Sunday evening.

Norma Shearer Entertains Canadian Athletes at Los Angeles

Many members of the Canadian Olympic team deserted the Park at Los Angeles on Aug. 5th., for a brief visit to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. The visit and a tour of inspection were on the invitation of Norma Shearer, the famous movie star and former Montreal girl.

A presentation was made to Miss Shearer of a silk Montreal Amateur Athletic Association crest, sent by the club which she used to attend, and also an M.A.A.A. pennant, which had been sent specially by the son of Mr. "Jimmie" Rose, who is an old friend of Miss Shearer's.

Argenteuil Boys Lead

In the Inter-Club Live Stock Judging competition held at Macdonald College on Monday, Aug. 8th., Léodas Ouillette, L. Titley, Archie McKenzie and R. St-Jacques represented the County of Argenteuil. Some twenty clubs from various parts of the Province of Quebec took part in this competition.

Two boys constituted a team, and first prize was won by Léodas Ouillette and Titley. Ouillette also had the highest individual score, the prize being a Registered Ayrshire calf donated by the Saint Sulpice farm at Oka. Sports also featured on the programme, and Argenteuil was worthily represented by Archie McKenzie, winning five firsts.

Odd Fellows Entertain

Lansdowne Lodge, No. 9, I.O.O.F., of Montreal, paid a fraternal visit to Laurentian Lodge, No. 14, at Lachute, on Saturday evening last, when about 35 members from Montreal came here to join local members in a game of Carpet Bowling. The pastime was greatly enjoyed by those who took part. Following the game the visiting brethren accompanied their hosts to the banquet hall, where a pleasant hour was spent around the festive board. Speeches and song passed the evening all too quickly, until at midnight the gathering dispersed, all agreeing on a mutually pleasant and enjoyable visit.

Taxation

When I first started to write about Taxation I little knew the extent of my subject, or that volumes had been written on the subject already. But, as is always the case with human nature, opposition gives opinion strength; so thanks to my opponents I have given the matter considerable time of late, only to find that so far I really know next to nothing about my subject. Yet does it after all matter so very much how Taxation is levied? The money must be raised some way.

In or about 1800, a tax was imposed on windows in England, a tax which from time to time increased (in 1802 and 1808.) It was reduced in 1823 and remained in force till 1851. By reason of this unwise impost, windows in old houses were boarded or bricked up, and new houses were built with the fewest possible number of windows; many houses even now show traces of the evil effect of this window tax in England, for windows filled with brick or stone instead of glass let in no light and could not be opened for purposes of ventilation.

After the window tax came then the paper duty and the newspaper stamp duty. And it is not very hard to see its detrimental effects financially to the newspaper publishers, to say

St. Andrews East Presbyterian Church Receives Gift

St. Andrews Presbyterian Church, St. Andrews East, received a very handsome gift recently, from Mrs. Philip Seipp of New York City, a former member of the congregation. The gift is a Baptismal Font, made by the firm of J. & R. Lamb, of New York, and is executed in Sienna marble. It is hexagonal in design. On the front panel of the bowl the cross in a circle, is carved in relief, and in the front face of the hexagonal shaft, a semi-circular topped panel is sunk. It is a very beautiful piece of workmanship.

This font will be dedicated next Sunday morning, and the Sacrament of Baptism administered.

Pierced by Hay Fork

Painful Accident at Mabel.

A painful accident occurred on Tuesday evening to Percy Murdock of Mabel, who was pierced in the side by a hay-fork and although escaping serious internal injury, suffered a deep wound which required thirteen stitches.

Percy had been engaged on the school construction work in Lachute. Returning home somewhat earlier than usual on Tuesday, he had gone out to assist his father with the last load of hay. The load was a high one, and sliding down the horse-fork rope from the roof of the barn, which was in semi-darkness, he fell heavily on the handle of a hay-fork, which tore and pierced his abdomen.

He was removed to the house, and medical assistance was called. According to last reports, he is now progressing favorably.

Link Between Lakes Erie and Ontario Around Thundering Niagara Expected to Be Large Enough to Last for Many Years

The new Welland Ship Canal, Canada's greatest engineering achievement, was officially opened at Thorold, Ont., on Saturday last, by the Earl of Bessborough Governor-General of Canada, in the presence of Mr. R. B. Bennett, Prime Minister; Dr. R. J. Manion, Minister of Railways and Canals, and delegates from all the British Dominions attending the Imperial Economic Conference at Ottawa. Many thousands of people from New York State and Ontario attended.

Immediately following speeches by Lord Bessborough and others the Governor-General raised a fender guarding the southern entrance to East Lock No. 6 to allow the Steamship Lemoyne, said to be the world's largest grain carrier, to emerge from Lock No. 7 and move downstream to the strains of "O Canada", played by the Royal Canadian Regiment Band.

The new Welland Ship Canal is the fourth victory over the thundering cataract of Niagara in a little more than 100 years, and each succeeding attack upon the barrier has been necessitated by the impetuous growth of commerce and industry. Canal history began in 1824 when a private company, fired by the potentialities of an all-water route from the head of the Great Lakes to Montreal, a distance of 1214 miles, dug a small ditch from Port Dalhousie on Lake Ontario to Port Robinson on the Chippawa Creek, from which point vessels navigated down the creek to the Niagara River and thence ascended to Lake Erie.

It had 30 wooden locks, each 110 feet in length, 22 feet in width, with but eight feet of water on the sills. The day it was finished, in 1829, when two small schooners were towed through, there was loud rejoicing. But almost immediately the shipping interests were clamoring for something better and the Government of Upper Canada—now Ontario—was soon compelled to buy out the private company and start improvements that would provide for nine-foot navigation. The wooden locks were replaced by stone, reduced in number to 27 by increasing the lift of each and the canal re-opened in 1845. The Port Maitland branch opened up a new and shorter route to Lake Erie. Another foot of depth was added in 1853 by raising the banks and the walls of the locks, and the canal was considered satisfactory. It was—for nearly 20 years.

In 1871, however, a canal commission advised further enlargement of the Welland Canal, and behold fresh activity, which only ceased when there were 26 locks each 270 feet long, 45 feet wide and with 12-foot depth of water, later increased to 16 feet. This third canal left Lake Ontario at Port Dalhousie and climbed the escarpment east of the second canal to Allanburg, whence it followed the old route to Port Colborne. But satisfaction in this case was not so complete. Even before the enlargement was ready in 1887, vessels were being built on the upper lakes too large to pass through the locks.

This One Lasted 43 Years

For 43 years it filled its purpose in the face of increasing congestion of water-borne freight passing to and from the markets of the world. This freight had increased from 620,209 tons in 1901 to 7,439,617 tons in 1928, although it could not be carried by vessels more than 255 feet in length and 41 feet in breadth, and was due largely to the tremendous growth of the eastern movement of grain and iron ore and the western movement of coal.

And now it too has been discarded for the fourth and perhaps the last. For this canal, begun by the Canadian Government in 1913, not only dwarfs its fellows in size and efficiency but in several ways is unique among the canals of the world. Its route departs very radically from that of the previous canals, particularly on the lower Lake Ontario level of the peninsula.

It leaves Lake Ontario at a point about four miles east of Port Dalhousie, the Northern terminus of the others, and follows, in practically a straight line, due south along the valley of the Ten-Mile Creek to the foot of the Niagara escarpment at Thorold, then on through Welland to Port Colborne on Lake Erie, a distance of just over 27 miles.

The difference in levels between the two lakes, 325½ feet, is overcome by eight locks, each having the same 46½ foot lift. All these locks are of the same dimensions and provide a usable length of 820 feet and a usable width of 79 feet.

While a minimum of 30 feet of water is provided at all permanent structures, only 20 feet is presently available, at low water level in the upper lakes harbors and channels, and for the time being the ship canal reaches between lock structures are excavated to a minimum of 25 feet only. When the future demands of shipping necessitate this can be increased to the full 30 feet by the simple process of dredging the reaches for the additional five-foot depth without interfering with navigation.

The Late Mrs. Wm. S. Smith

At the home of her son Stewart Smith, on Aug. 8th., there passed away peacefully one of the oldest residents of Beech Ridge, in the person of Ellen J. Urquhart, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Urquhart, of Martintown, in her seventy-first year, and widow of the late Wm. S. Smith, who predeceased her some three years ago.

She leaves to mourn her loss two loving sons, Ross, of Lucky Lake, Sask.; and Stewart, of Beech Ridge; who has bestowed on her loving care in her ailing and declining years; she also leaves three grandchildren in Saskatchewan.

A devoted mother, and lifelong member of the Presbyterian Church, the late Mrs. Smith will be held in loving memory by her many friends and neighbors for her acts of kindness to all.

The funeral took place from her late residence Beech Ridge, to Lachute Cemetery, on Aug. 10th.

Invitations Issued for Academy Scholars Reunion

Ceremony to take place on September 2nd.

For the dedication ceremonies of the new addition to Lachute Academy, to take place on September 2nd., invitations have been mailed out to all former students. This in itself has entailed considerable work, in the effort to include them all. But of course it is impossible to reach every one, without unavoidable omissions, and if any of our readers who were former students have failed to receive an invitation, they will readily understand and it will be a kindly gesture on their part, if unable to attend, to drop a line to Miss Maud Dobbie of Lachute. This courtesy will enable her to have as complete a record as is possible. It may be some former pupils are too far away to avail themselves of the pleasure of this re-union; and if so they might kindly take the time to drop a line in recognition of former days.

RED LADY LOBSTER REPOSES AS AN OBJECT OF CURIOSITY.

Halifax, N.S.—They have at last caught a live red lobster. The lady was taken along the eastern shore of Nova Scotia recently, according to the Natural Resources Department of the Canadian National Railways. Arriving in a crate among a number of others, it was not noticed for some time, with the result that authorities are unable to identify the exact location from which it was taken.

The firm which has this unique specimen in its possession has been handling lobsters for over twenty-one years and this is the first time one colored red has ever been caught or ever heard of. The back is a pronounced red and underneath it varies from a shell to a decided pink color.

The girl who used to marry a man to reform him now has a daughter who figures that two can go to the devil as cheaply as one.

"THE FAT BOY WITH A HOLE IN HIS SHIRT"

Dear Boys:—

In my travels the other day I saw him—The Fat Boy with a Hole in his Shirt, and I did not like him! Now this is, as you may agree, very unusual, for there are very few boys whom I do not like; for though you are as a rule a "gang of troubles," individually you are good sportsmen and Play the Game Well.

Now this boy did not know I was looking at him, and he was slouching along the sidewalk, dragging one foot after the other, with his shoulders all bent and his head down. I could not see his eyes, for they were seemingly fixed on the ground, and I wondered much what he was looking for, or what he expected to find there.

Then, it came to me that here was something tragic, something very pitiful and sad, A Boy in Name but not in Spirit. He was living in the shadows and heeded not the sunshine of happiness which is the rightful heritage of early youth and boyhood. I wished very much to go up to him and say "Why do you look Down? Look Up! Pull back your shoulders, step out smartly on your journey, be Alert, and be no longer blind to the beauty that surrounds you. The glory of the mountains, and the lessons the eternal hills will teach you, if only you have the soul to grasp their meaning and the mind to understand." But before I could do so he had passed from my view, carrying with him his ungainly body that was covered in part by a shirt with a hole in it; and it appeared right to me that a cloud should then blot out the sun and the shadows follow in his course.

Now there are many who will tell you what was wrong with this boy. They will use many long words out of a dictionary and phrases that you will find hard to understand. The meaning of but three little words will explain everything: He was blind. Not physically, no; not even mentally; but spiritually. He could see everything around him and yet he had No vision. If you are always looking down you only see the little things of no importance, while you miss the larger and greater outlook, without which life has no meaning for you and no responsibility. If you remain in the valley you stay among the shadows, but if you reach for the mountain top you enjoy the glory of unlimited vision only bounded by an horizon beyond which God Himself dwells.

It certainly looks bad to have a hole in your shirt, but if your eyes are on the ground and your mind there also, well it does not matter very much after all, does it?—Poor boy; he passed from my view into the Shadows. Do You understand what I mean?

Your affectionate friend,

THE CAPTAIN.

By Capt. O. J. Aldom.

Chapter 12.

Dear Boy-reader, do you know what it is to be a night at sea? If you do not, then you have not yet had perhaps the most wonderful experience that can befall you. The good ship upon which you are travelling has left the land far behind and is ploughing its way steadily through the heavy waters, now and again tossing her bows and scattering the spray as much as to say, "Here I am, started at last, on my long voyage, and this is my element. Come on, you boisterous waves, we will play a game together until you are tired, ready to cry 'peace' and sink down into a deep blue calm." And it is night, with a clear sky, except maybe here and there a group of fleecy clouds which, missing the glow of the sunset, are playing hide-and-seek with the twilight shadows. Stars twinkle in their brightness and a great big yellow moon, which has appeared like magic from out of the sea, (not really so, of course, but seeming so to our imaginative mind) climbs steadily up into the sky until it hovers directly above our heads and sheds its silver rays along the snow-white deck at our very feet. Hovering all around as is the spirit of enchantment and romance. The night air is very still, only broken by the steady hum and throb of the huge engines, which constitute the heart and sinews of our noble vessel as it goes on its persistent way.

And there is music also, if our ears are only attuned to catch those harmonious notes of the night wind as it whistles through the rigging and passes far astern until the sound of it grows fainter and fainter and at long last is lost on just one plaintive sweet-toned note. Ah! what memories do thoughts such as these conjure up, of long sea voyages, of other half-forgotten days. When hopes were still young and ambition just a newborn sensation, the real meaning of which we were then only beginning to understand. Truly indeed is a voyage over the trembling waters like the more stern and practical Journey that we all of us are forced to take through life. It is not always the calm stillness of the summer night, as I have just been trying to describe. There are times when the storm-clouds gather in all their blackness and awe-inspiring appearance; when the cold, bleak wind brings its unwelcome message of cheerless days and more-than-hopeless dawns. Then it appears as if the sun had hidden itself so well, and has become so lost, that not even an eternity of effort will reproduce it in its old-time splendour and its healing power. It is at such time as this that we, who are battling through life as bravely as we can, endeavoring to keep control of our own frail barque and bring it safely back into the harbour, pass deep into the Valley of the Shadows. And but for our own brave hearts, our lessons in the school of experience, together with confidence and faith in the one Great Chart set for our guidance by the Captain of our destiny, we should surely perish. Have I taken up too much of your time, dear boy-reader, by writing in this strain? Do you feel impatient with me because I have so far interrupted our story to bring these few thoughts to your mind? If such is the case, pray accept my most earnest apology and assurance that I will not so offend again. Still it is good for us to pause now and again and to remember that—

Though we're young the years pass very soon,
And Life's a Journey, say what else we may;
We pass from brightness to the deepest gloom—
It's all the colors that make up our day,
We would not love the Sunshine as we do,
If first the shadows we had not passed through.

HASTY JUDGMENT

The sight of a pair of skis or a toboggan attached to an American tourist-car, bound northward to Quebec in mid-summer has become the subject of a standing joke—and one readily pounced upon by exploiting journalists. They delight to lavish their humor on such incidents, and to "box" them in a prominent front-page space. All well and good. But there comes from London, Ont., the case of a Virginian motorist whose intelligence has been uncharitably under-rated. Answering an enquiry as to the brand-new hickories protruding from his car, the American replied wearily, "I promised my little boy I would bring him back a pair of real Canadian skis."

BANK OF NOVA SCOTIA CELEBRATES HUNDREDDTH ANNIVERSARY

This month a great Canadian institution celebrates its hundredth anniversary. Founded at Halifax in 1832, The Bank of Nova Scotia has risen from a local Maritime institution (one of the first of its kind in Canada) to front rank among Canadian chartered banks. International in scope, it now ranks fourth in point of assets among all Canadian banks. Its 330 branches stretch from coast to coast in the Dominion and include Newfoundland, England, the West Indies and the United States.

The Bank first opened its doors to the public in a room in John Roman's building, on Hollis Street, Halifax, in August 1832. Halifax at that time was but a small British naval port of 15,000 inhabitants, whose muddy streets converged at the waterfront where seafaring commerce was carried on. Its only banking facilities were a private banking partnership started seven years previously and known as the Halifax Banking Company, which wielded a political and financial monopoly over the Province. It was in part to break this monopoly that The Bank of Nova Scotia was organized by a coterie of local business men headed by William Lawson, who held their first organization meeting at the Merchants Exchange Coffee House in Halifax in December, 1831.

Opposes "Family Compact" Monopoly.

The Bank of Nova Scotia was the first chartered bank in Nova Scotia, its charter being modeled on that of The Bank of New Brunswick (founded in 1820 and later absorbed by The Bank of Nova Scotia.) The Bank is proud of the fact that its charter was the first to include a clause providing for the double liability of shareholders—a provision which has now become a fundamental tenet of the Canadian banking system.

Paid Dividends Since 1833.

The Bank's first annual statement presented to shareholders in February 1833 showed but four liabilities: capital stock paid in £50,000; notes in circulation - £16,613. 10s.; deposits in the Bank - £18,943.13. 10 and net profits in hand £310.17.9. Total assets were £85,868. An item of £153.8.3. being the "balance in the hands of the Agents of the Bank in New York and London" reflects the dealings in foreign exchange early undertaken by Canadian banks. The Bank declared its first dividend on July 31, 1833, at the rate of 3 per cent per annum.

Early progress was slow

Branches, or agencies as they were then called, were opened in many parts of the Province in the first decade of the Bank's existence, but were closed subsequently from lack of business. It was not till a young Scotch banker named Thomas Fyshe took over the position of cashier in 1876 that real progress and expansion were evidenced, and by the time he left, twenty-five years later, the Bank had greatly widened its operations, with 37 branches throughout Canada extending as far west as Winnipeg and with a flourishing stake in Newfoundland, Jamaica and the United States.

General Office Moved to Toronto

Since that time also, the Bank has made notable development in foreign parts, extending its business outside Canada, Great Britain and the United States.

As a result of the development and growth of the Bank's business in central and western Canada, its chief executive office was moved to Toronto in March, 1900. This year it celebrated its one hundredth annual meeting by holding it in its new Head Office building in Halifax—one of the finest examples of banking architecture in Canada and embodying a new motif in Canadian architecture through the use of conventionalized forms of purely Canadian flora and fauna. In its one hundred years of existence the Bank has had but six general managers.

Important Amalgamations

Three important amalgamations took place under general management of Mr. H. A. Richardson, whose death occurred in 1923. In 1913 the Bank absorbed the Bank of New Brunswick whose history dated back to 1820, and which was at that time the second oldest banking institution in Canada.

In November 1914, just as the beginning of the war, the Metropolitan, a well-established Toronto bank, was absorbed. Founded in 1902 by a group of prominent Toronto business men the Metropolitan Bank had the distinction of being the only Canadian bank to start business with a reserve fund equal to its capital stock, its shares having been sold at a 100 per cent premium. The present President of The Bank of Nova Scotia, S. J. Moore, was President of the Metropolitan Bank at the time of the merger. This latter amalgamation gave the Bank a valuable banking connection in the Bank of Ottawa, and was Ontario.

The third merger was with consummated in 1919. Founded in 1874 by men who had pioneered in the lumber trade of the Ottawa Valley, this bank had built up a unique position in that locality and in addition had a number of branches in Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Reserves Equal to Twice the Capital.

The Bank of Nova Scotia in its last annual statement showed total assets of $262,496,000. Paid-up capital stock is $12,000,000 and alone among all Canadian banks it shows a reserve fund equal to twice its capital, namely, $24,000,000. Total deposits in the statement were over the $200,000,000 with cash resources nearly 11 per

ST. ANDREWS EAST

Mr. and Mrs. A. Young, has returned to Ocomin Cottage, after a two weeks' visit in Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnstone, of Toronto, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Lamb last week, and while in St. Andrews gave a song recital which was enjoyed by all who were privileged to hear them.

The Presbyterian Y.P.C. held a garden party on the Manse Lawn on Friday evening last. The evening's programme was arranged by the summer young people and took the form of an Inter-Collegiate Track Meet. The various items were keenly contested by representatives from each Collegiate group "Queens" carrying off the trophy.

Three charades, presented by the respective groups, were much enjoyed by those present.

The Presbyterian Church has been fortunate in the number of great organists they have heard. They will hear with much pleasure another St. Andrews East boy, in the person of Dr. Geoffrey Simpson, of Montreal, who will play next Sunday; and his brother Shirley will be the soloist. The Lachute Male Quartette will sing also. This group is very popular in St. Andrews, and will be heard with much interest.

George Flower, who has been the guest of Jackie Jeffrey, returned to Montreal on Monday.

LAKEFIELD.

Recent guests at "The Chateau" included Mr. and Mrs. J. Watson, Mr. and Mrs. R. Fulkens, Miss Cote, Mr. and Mrs. R. Kendrick, Miss Kendrick and Masters Grover and Freddy Kendrick.

Mr. Ross Evans of Montreal, is spending his holidays with his mother, Mrs. Robt. Evans.

Miss Hazel Evans and friend Miss Bessie Seaward, of Montreal, are visiting friends here.

Miss Hazel Day was a weekend guest of Mrs. Miles Copeland.

Mrs. W. W. Johnstone spent a few days in Montreal this week.

Mrs. Claude Richards has returned to Montreal, after spending two weeks' holidays the guest of Miss M. Kyle.

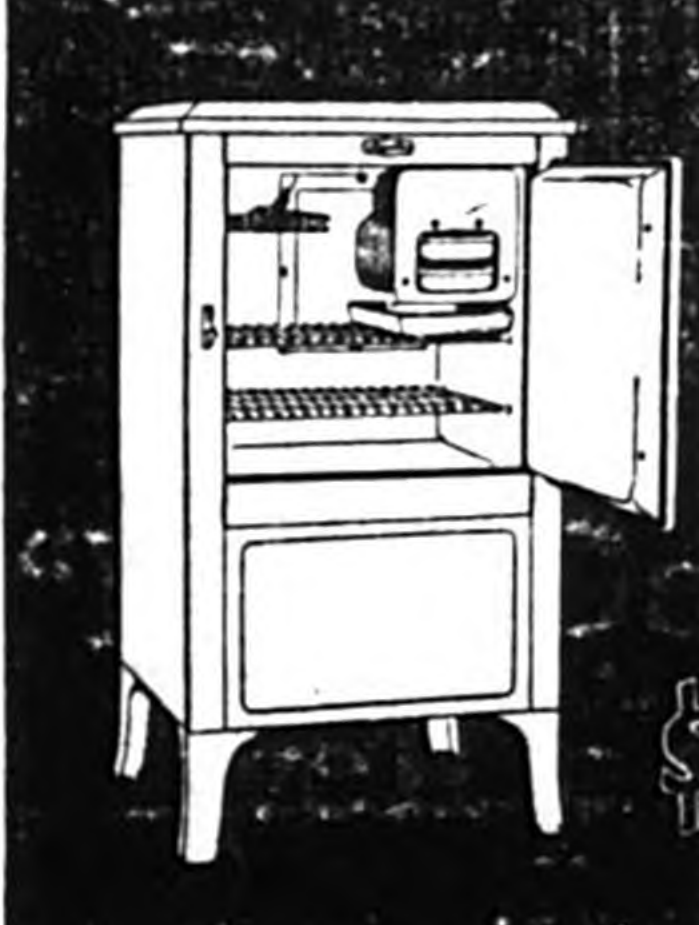

Simplified practices are being adopted by restaurants, according to the Department of Commerce. But boarding house hash has lost none of its complexity.

THE CAT AND THE AQUARIUM

Our aquarium is directly beside my desk and as it is in a south window, the desk is a favorite place for the cat to sleep. When it is thirsty it drinks from the aquarium. The fish are very curious and dart about, within an inch of the cat. They seem to be more curious than the cat, as it pays no attention to them whatever and is apparently concerned only in getting a drink. It much prefers the water from the aquarium than the water that is in its own drinking dish. Maybe there is a pleasant fishy flavour. Who can tell?

MEAT EATING IN SUMMER

Should we eat meat in hot weather? That is a dietary question which we often hear discussed. Some people contend that we should not eat meat at all during hot weather; a few benighted people (mostly men) want the same kind of meals the year round; the vast majority strike a happy medium.

Our own appetite and desires is a fairly good guide on summer meat-eating question. Unconsciously, most of us want meat less frequently than in cold weather. We turn away from the fats, too, and desire meat less frequently. We fill the protein demands with milk, hard cooked eggs, cottage cheese, and foods of that sort. Then after we have gone a day or two without meat, we find ourselves craving a bit of meat. Our system is asking for what it needs.

Hot weather slows up the movements of most of us, but there is a certain amount of wear and tear on the body, a necessary breaking down of tissue and this tissue must be replaced and only protein foods can do that. It is wise to replace meats to a certain extent with other proteids during the hot weather, but it is not wise to eliminate them completely. Men and women who have to work hard during hot weather will require more food than those who slacken up—that goes without saying.

MILK AS A SUMMER FOOD

More milk and less meat is a good summer slogan. Desserts are the best place to use milk as most people, children specially, enjoy desserts. Light fluffy puddings instead of thick stodgy ones should be the rule. Gelatine desserts of the Spanish Cream type are always acceptable. The importance of having the pudding thoroughly chilled cannot be emphasized too much. It is a wise plan to make next day's dessert in the cool of the evening. Then it is off your mind the next morning and it has a chance to be thoroughly chilled. Gelatine desserts have longer time to set. However, if you do not make them the night before do at least make them the very first thing in the morning.

The average child does not like warm milk, so if your child is objecting to drinking milk, be sure that it is well chilled. Very often that alone will turn the tide.

Here are some very simple milk desserts. I am stressing simpleness and ease of making as most women have neither time nor energy to do fussy cooking in hot weather.

ALMOND FLUFF

- 2 cups milk
- 1 tablespoon quick tapioca
- 1 teaspoon butter
- 2 tablespoons sugar
- 2 egg yolks
- 2 egg whites
- 1/4 teaspoon vanilla
- 1 teaspoon almond flavoring
- Speck of salt

Put milk, tapioca, butter, sugar and salt in he top of the double boiler. Cook for 20 minutes, stirring occasionally. Beat the egg yolks slightly and add slowly to the mixture in the double boiler. Beat the egg whites until stiff and fold in the mixture. Cook for two minutes stirring once or twice. Add flavoring and pour into a dish to chill thoroughly. Serve with cream.

SPANISH CREAM

- 3 cups milk
- 1/2 cup sugar
- 1 tablespoon gelatine
- 1-8 teaspoon salt
- 2 egg yolks
- 2 egg whites
- 1 teaspoon vanilla

Scald gelatine with milk in double boiler until the gelatine is dissolved. Add sugar and pour slowly over the beaten egg yolks, stirring steadily. Return to double boiler and cook until thickened, stirring. Remove and add salt, vanilla and fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites. Pour into a cold wet mould. Chill. May be served with custard sauce if desired, using the egg yolk that is left over. Crushed fresh fruit makes a delicious sauce.

- 2 cups water
- 1 cup sugar
- 1 tablespoon butter
- Juice and rind of one lemon
- 1 egg white
- 4 tablespoons corn starch

Grate rind of lemon being careful to remove only the yellow as the white part is bitter. Add 2 cups water. If the water is poured through the grater all the rind may be gotten out. Add sugar and butter and bring to a boil. Wet the cornstarch with enough water to moisten and add slowly to the boiling mixture, stirring steadily. Continue stirring until the pudding has thickened and cook for 3 minutes afterwards to thoroughly cook the starch. Fold in stiffly beaten egg white. Turn into a dish and chill. Serve with custard sauce.

CUSTARD SAUCE

Beat the egg yolk left from the above pudding slightly. Add 1/2 cup milk and 1 teaspoon sugar. Cook over a gentle heat until the mixture begins to coat the spoon, stirring steadily. Remove from the fire and add half teaspoon vanilla. Too much heat or too long cooking will curdle the mixture.

BRITAIN BUYS MORE CANADIAN TOBACCO

Shipments of Unmanufactured Leaf Double in Two Years

"The growing importance of Canada as a factor in the world's tobacco trade is illustrated by a new release of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, concerning Canada's exports to Great Britain. In the first six months of the year, this country shipped to England twice as much unmanufactured tobacco as in the same period of last year. This year's exports were 8,094,708 pounds, as compared with 3,994,023 pounds last year, and 2,958,631 pounds in the first half of 1930."

The United States still dominates the British market, imports from that country in the first six months of this year amounting to 50,004,486 pounds but this is a large drop from the 66,918,496 pounds imported in the first six months of last year and the 68,640,631 pounds imported in the same period in the previous year.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Six bandits come aboard the steamer, Midnight Sun, while she is tied to the bank of the Mackenzie. Father Claverly and the other passengers on the boat are amazed at the sight of banditry in this Great Waterways country, a thousand miles north of Edmonton. Jimmy Montgomery, who had spent years with the Canadian Mounted draws his gun in the face of the covering rifles and fires upon the ruffians. He is shot through the heart by a half-breed. The bandits set away with gold dust and choice peltry.

CHAPTER II.—Corporal Bill Hardlock brings the news of the crime to Sergeant Alan Baker at the Mounted police post at Fort Endurance. After a brief dispute over plans with his incompetent superior, Inspector Haskell, Alan starts out after the bandits in the big police launch with the corporal and four constables.

CHAPTER III.—Reaching the Midnight Sun, they stop long enough for Alan to board her and consult witnesses of the crime. Alan asks the skipper to let Jimmy Montgomery's orphaned four-year-old daughter off at Fort Endurance and leave her in the care of Alan's fiancée, Elizabeth St.- auding at the MacMillan trading post on the Big Alouka. Joyce MacMillan is alone, awaiting the return of Dave, her father, from a fur-buying trip. She is thrilled when the police launch comes
seen Alan Baker for months. Secretly
she had hoped to marry him; then she
was stunned by the news of his engagement to Elizabeth. She is happy
now to perceive from his halting talk
that the planned marriage is not definitely certain.

CHAPTER IV.—Larry Youngie, one of Alan's men, discovers in MacMillan's fur shed a bale of pelts stolen from the Midnight Sun. The evidence in-criminate Dave so strongly that Alan is compelled to tell Joyce. She hotly defends her father. Alan leads his expedition up the Big Alouka.
Compelled by Haskell's foolish orders
to divide the party, Alan fails to capture the bandits. The police expedition returns to Fort Endurance
with Larry badly wounded.

CHAPTER V.—Haskell, who is Alan's old enemy and is trying to win Elizabeth, blames Alan for the failure and orders his demotion to the
dered Alan to split the police party.
He refuses to let Alan lead a second expedition against the bandits. Seeing only one way now to go after the bandits and clear Joyce's father from the charge resulting from the obviously planted evidence, Alan buys out of the Mounted. Haskell gives Alan his release on condition that he signs a paper to the effect that Haskell did not give the order to split the expedition.

Bill nodded. Personally he hoped that this news might lift Dave Mac-Millan out of his despondency. Dave's state of mind was causing Bill anxiety.
Resenting any kindness, he had sunk into a sullen mood, uncaring, hopeless
—a man brooding self-destruction.
Joyce forced herself to ask, "Have you heard anything at all of Alan, Bill?"

"No, not a word. I don't expect to for some time."

"You must know where he is and what he's doing. . . ."

Bill realized she was asking him to tell her of Alan's venture. He wanted to tell her; and he knew he could trust her, but Alan had asked him not to let her know where he'd gone, and Alan might have personal reasons for it.

He lied: "No, I don't know. I'd just be guessing."

"But he's coming back, sometime, to Endurance?" Joyce persisted.

"He may come back and may not.
But not to stay. He's out of service, broke away complete. He turned his cabin and things over to me. He isn't intending to come back. I know definite. He's going to take that job in Victoria. Told me. One of the last things he said."

There was a moment's silence. Bill looked at Joyce curiously. She was staring down at the rock, plucking with trembling fingers at the wolf-foot moss. She was pale. "Did Alan say—" the words came slowly, like reluctant footsteps—"say anything about when he'll get married?"

"He didn't exactly say when, but it'll be as soon as he's carried through this scheme of his."

A question came from Joyce:
"He and—Elizabeth—have decided definitely, then, Bill?"

"Yes. She's waiting for him to come for her or send for her. They've made plans to be married in Edmonton and have their honeymoon in the Selkirk and then go on over to Victoria."

Joyce asked one last question. She asked it calmly, without faltering or even pausing on the precipice edge.
"Did Elizabeth say that, or did Alan?"

CHAPTER VII

By Lone Camp Fires

That gray dawn when he said good-by to Joyce at Fort Endurance, Baker set off alone on a journey of a thousand miles. Instead of heading northeast toward the Thal-Azzaah where the bandits were hiding, he turned his canoe prow directly away from them and started south, up the Mackenzie.
He did not delude himself about his plan. It was little better than a deperate gamble, and he knew it. But the usual man-hunting methods were useless against those criminals; and his plan was the last thing in the world they would be expecting.

By traveling in his own motor canoe, depending entirely on his own resources, he expected to cut ten days from the fastest time of the fur-company boats.

In those lonely hours, as he stared in reverie at the shimmering pine hills, it was borne in upon Alan that he had forever cut himself off from life here in this North country. He felt as though he had been torn up by the roots. The system he had founded at Fort Endurance had been his own creation. He had been a builder in his own right. From the ground up, Fort Endurance belonged to him. He and Curt and Jimmy had cut the very timber for barracks and cabins. The work had been his particular work in life. "Sergeant Baker of Endurance" stood for something. There was but one such man in the Dominion. Now he was cut off from it, an alien of lost identity, never to be a part of it, the guiding genius of it, again.

On the third day he met a lone-fire
Indian, a young Chipewyan wandering aimlessly, with some secret personal tragedy preying on him. Alan took him into the motor canoe, and together they traveled on. Hardly speaking a dozen words a day, they worked on up the Mackenzie, sleeping by turns, spelling each other at the motor. Raising a blanket sail to a northeast wind, they scudded across the island-dotted lake from Resolution, and whipped up the Quatre Fourches delta toward Fort Smith.

Watching the dim clouded stars above him, Alan looked steadily at the two girls who had loomed so large upon his manhood. In this last week a cataclysm had happened in his life, breaking into the old order, blasting the even routine of week and month and season. It had opened his eyes in a deeper way than ever before to the preciousness of his intimacy with Joyce, to the priceless quality of their former comradeship. Now, when it was irrevocable, he was asking himself whether the motive and powerful circumstance which had actuated him were humanly justifiable. Had not he and Joyce had a right to happiness?

Had he, in his stern sacrifice, been blind to the needs of the human heart?
Tired out by days of incessant travel, he fell asleep at last, and dreamed that in his cabin it had been Joyce, not Elizabeth, whose arm had been around him and who was waiting for him when this lone adventure should be ended.

At Fort Smith the heavy rains had rendered the sixteen-mile portage impossible to teams and to the motor trucks which plied that stretch. Alan dared not wait; his days were too precious. In his decision to go on, his young Chipewyan friend stuck with him. Shouldering their craft, they plodded stolidly across that slippery, red-clay stretch to Fitzgerald.

Among the north-bound crowd waiting there, he spotted the tall, slightlystooped figure of Superintendent Wil-lamson, who was going north to inspect the down-river posts. The superintendent was the last person in the world whom Alan wanted to meet.
His first superior officer when he graduated from the "Awkward Squad." Williamson had been good to him and taken a fatherly interest in his brilliant work. What would he say when he learned that his protégé had bought out and deserted the Force?

"Your commission wasn't forthcoming, so you quit! Your loyalty to our work went no deeper than that!" In his eyes a quiver was worse than a gross incompetent.

Passing by, ten feet away, Williamson merely nodded slightly and said,
"Good luck, Baker."

Alan understood. He thought: "In civilian clothes, so far away from Endurance. . . . He thinks I'm on some detective detail. Good Lord, when he finds I'm out, bought out—!"

Williamson's esteem was a precious thing to Alan, as precious as a father's. An impulse swept him to talk with the superintendent and tell him the whole sorry story. But there was the matter of that signed affidavit.
Alan refused to go back on that; and even if he did he would literally be branding himself a liar. What did his personal feud with Haskell matter now? He was out of the Mounted.
And the superintendent would try to stop his venture if he heard, for it was beyond the law.

He allowed Williamson to go past.
Setting their boat to water, he and the young Chipewyan hurried on to the great delta-mouth of the Peace, where they caught up with a steamer going on to McMurray. The young Indian wanted to turn west to the Rockies and see the Land of Ice Mountains.
Giving him the motor canoe and the outfit, Alan shook hands, said Klahowya, and went aboard the boat.

A Different Way.

"Miss Fligthy made all her money in letters."
"She doesn't look literary."
"She isn't. She won a breach of promise suit with 'em."

Lesson for August 14

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS—DUTIES TO MAN

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:12-21.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Leviticus 19:18.
PRIMARY TOPIC—The Ten Commandments.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Ten Commandments.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Loving and Helping Others.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Christian Interpretation of the Commandments.

The first table of the law sets forth the duties Godward, the second manward. The fifth commandment is the centerpiece of the Decalogue, key-stone of the Sinaiic arch.

I. The Fifth Commandment (v. 12). This commandment rests upon the fundamental basis of fact that parents stand with their children in the place of God.

1. How this commandment may be broken.

(a) By showing disrespect to parents. Disrespect is shown to parents: (1) By speaking of them as "the old man" and "the old woman." (2) By living such lives as cast reproach upon them. (3) By being ashamed to be seen in their company.

(b) By disobedience. It is right that the child should obey its parents and it is the responsibility of the parent to see that obedience is rendered.

(c) By not supporting them in old age. When parents are no longer able to care for themselves it is the children's duty to care for them.

2. Promises annexed to this commandment.

(a) "That it may be well with thee" (Eph. 6:3). (b) That thou mayest live long upon the earth.

II. The Sixth Commandment (v. 13). The Scriptures show man's life to be sacred. Man was created in God's image. Every attempt to take human life is a thrust at God. This commandment may be broken:

By sinful anger (Matt. 5:22). By hatred (I John 3:15). By immoderate use of meats and drinks. By immoderate recreation. By selling adulterated foods and diseased meats. By employers having unsafe surroundings, thereby causing the death of their employees. By failing to provide proper food and clothing for wives and children. By sending children to toll in shops and factories. By suicide. By infanticide. By wars.

III. The Seventh Commandment (v. 14).

This is a bulwark thrown around the home. The home is not only the oldest of God's institutions, but the foundation of them all. This commandment may be broken:

By unclean thoughts, affections, purposes, and imaginations (Matt. 5:27, 28; 15:19). By unchaste conversation. By wanton looks (Isa. 3:16; 2 Pet. 2:14). By immodest apparel. One's clothing is a strong factor in revealing character. By actual adultery. By divorce.

IV. The Eighth Commandment (v. 15).

This commandment strikes at the sin of theft. Many things are legally right which are morally wrong. This commandment may be broken:

By taking that which belongs to another. By using false weights and measures. By selling adulterated foods and inferior goods. By extortion. By employers defrauding employees, and employees failing to do honest work or to put in full time. By borrowing and not returning. By going into debt, knowing that payment is impossible. By usury. By graft. By lying advertisements. By making assignments to escape payment of debts. By gambling. By strong nations oppressing weaker ones.

V. The Ninth Commandment (v. 16).

The sin aimed at by this command is the most deadly one—that of lying. This commandment may be broken:

By actual lying. By perjury—swearing to falsehoods by the name of God. By slander—speaking against another falsely with a purpose to injure. By tale-bearing (Lev. 19:16). This is commonly done by repeating a report without investigating its truthfulness. By creating a false impression (Exod. 23:1). By a breach of promise. By withholding the truth. By perverting the meaning of a statement. By exaggeration. By flattery. By recommending for a position of honor and trust a man who is unfitted for it. By granting a church letter to a man who is unworthy.

VI. The Tenth Commandment (v. 17).

This commandment strikes at the desire for that which is unlawful for one to have. The sin does not lie in the desire to possess things but in the desire to possess that which belongs to another.

GLEANINGS

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE TOPIC

"SOUL" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon for Sunday, the 14th of August, in all Christian Science Churches, throughout the world.

Golden Text: "Now the just shall live by faith: but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. But we are not of them who draw back into perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul" (Hebrews 10:38, 39).

Among the selected passages which comprise the Lesson-Sermon are the following from the Bible: "O God, thou art my God; early will I seek thee: my soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee in a dry and thirsty land, where no water is. "Because thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice. My soul followeth hard after thee: thy right hand upholdeth me." (Psalm 63)

Once Was Circus, Now Exhibition is Big Annual Event.

This Year Finds More Interest Than Ever in Ottawa Exhibition Opening Aug. 22. Low Rates Are Announced By Railways. Empire Features

In the days of yesteryear, young and old looked forward to the annual visit of the circus. Now it is the Ottawa exhibition, the big annual event of the Capital, and this year finds more interest than ever. The exhibition will open on Monday morning, August 22nd., and will continue for six full days and nights.

This year the railways have announced lower rates than have been given for years, single fare being applicable to a large area for certain days and fare and a quarter for all Ontario and Quebec for other days. In addition the highways appeal to motor owners and inquiries received by the secretary indicate that there will be quite an influx this year not only from rural and urban Canada but from a wide area of the United States.

For the first time in Canada, except over the radio, the United States Marine Band will be heard each day of the exhibition. Under the leadership of Tiplor Branson the band will come at its full strength, 75 musicians. The visit was made possible only through the Dominion and United States governments. In addition to its States Marine Band comes with official standing, the United States highest reputation of playing the best in music.

Formation flying by Siskin planes from the Royal Canadian Air Force, the Winter Garden Revue, with a Broadway cast of stars; unusually strong vaudeville, horse races, spectacular fireworks, a new and bigger midway, government live stock and industrial displays and a hundred and one other factors undoubtedly will not only maintain the high standard set in former years but should establish new records.

The Imperial Economic Conference is adding interest to the exhibition and many are planning to visit the exhibition and to see the distinguished delegates at the same time. Then too it has resulted in a number of Empire exhibits, from Gambia in West Africa, Ceylon, Fiji Islands and New Zealand. The Dominion and provincial governments also will make displays that will be educative and highly interesting.

Henderson—"Did you get my cheque?"

Pennington—"Yes, twice. Once from you and once from the bank."

THOS. GORE

(Too late for last week.)

Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan have returned home, after a pleasant holiday at Mrs. E. Ward's.

Mrs. T. Noble visited Montreal, on Wednesday and Thursday last.

The quilt raffled by the Ladies' Aid at Mrs. G. Silverson's on Wednesday of last week, was won by Mrs. Alec. Mason, of Brownsburg, the winning number being 118.

Mrs. Elmer Berry was a recent visitor here.

Quality Materials and Fine Work in Town's Newest Structure

Interesting Observations of Method and Material in New Building.—"Lachute High School."

This is the name that appears to-day above the main entrance to the new wing of the school building. The name "Academy" is obsolete. We no longer have a mere "village school", but a modern consolidated high school serving a large community.

Work on the building has progressed so far that one can already get a good idea of the finished school. The speed and sureness with which the work has advanced reflect great credit on the contractors, Messrs. Richard and E. J. Ryan, and it is with pride that the citizens of Lachute recall the fact that the Ryan Brothers are "local boys", who, after making an enviable name for themselves in the building world, have come back to their native district to build a modern school.

It is well worth one's while to visit the school grounds from time to time, and note the excellent quality of the workmanship. The bricklaying, in particular, has called forth a veritable chorus of praise. All express their unbounded amazement that so much has been done so well in so short a time.

As one approaches the building, the first thing that strikes his eye is the large, well-lighted basement dining room. The walls, floor, and ceiling here are of solid reinforced concrete. The floor will later receive a coat of mastic. At the end of this room will be a fully-equipped kitchen.

On the north side of the basement are the rooms for the heating plant. This is being installed by R. McArthur & Son, of Lachute, whose name assures us that no work will be done, nor material be used, that is not the best.

The steel and cement work used in the construction of the floors is of a very interesting type. It is, in fact, the newest kind of floor structure, designed especially for buildings requiring a maximum of strength and rigidity, together with a minimum of weight. It consists of a cement slab resting upon light, but exceedingly strong, steel beams. On the top of this will be laid the hardwood floors of the classrooms, while on the bottom of the beams will be fastened the steel lath which holds the plaster ceilings.

The walls also are most up-to-date. They are constructed largely of "Haydite" blocks. This is the newest kind of building block, and combines strength, lightness and warmth to a degree heretofore unknown.

Only the best materials are being used, and none but the most skilled workmen are employed.

When finished this school will be a credit both to the town and to its builders.

ANNUAL BAZAAR AT LAKEFIELD

The ladies of Trinity W. A. held their annual Bazaar on Thursday, Aug. 11th., and in every way the affair was a successful one. The weather was favorable, the attendance was large; buying and selling flourished, while everywhere was manifested a spirit of cheerful helpfulness which could not fail to bring the prospering blessing of God upon the work. Where all united in doing their very best it would not be fair to particularize any department; but, congratulations are in order to all concerned. As usual, the genial patronage of the summer colony helped greatly in making this gathering the pleasant success it was.

After deducting expenses, the proceeds amounted to about $145.00, an encouraging financial help to the much needed work which the ladies are carrying on.

BROWNSBURG UNITED CHOIR PICNIC AT LAKE LOUISA

A successful picnic was held by the Brownsburg United Church Choir at Lake Louisa, on Saturday, the 13th. Despite the ominous date, the weather man was very considerate, a certain lady member thereby losing a box of chocolates.

On arrival at the lake the party became soon engaged in such pursuits as boating, swimming, water polo, etc.

There followed a game of soft ball, which was very keenly contested and apparently much enjoyed; the contest, however, was abandoned, with the score at 13 to 9 in favor of the "heavy hitters"—supper call being the cause of interruption. A generous meal was taken on the verandah of Mrs. White's cottage nearby, and full justice was done the good things provided.

Group photographs were taken and pleasant pastimes again resumed, the occasion concluding with a sing-song and late supper.

The gathering reached home again, in the early hours. Appreciation is expressed to Mrs. White and family, for their kindness and the generous use of their property.

New Mark for Mail Delivery

Another delivery of English mail in Ottawa in record time is expected today when an air mail plane makes connections with the Empress of Britain on the St. Lawrence below Quebec, and will transport mail to Ottawa. The Empress of Britain sailed from Southampton Saturday afternoon.

This will most likely be the last delivery of English mail via the air route for Imperial Conference delegates as the conference is expected to conclude this week.

Activities of Q.W.I. in Argenteuil County

During the first week in July Chatham Branch sponsored a three days' course in Household Science and Practical Nursing, with Miss Nish, Miss McCain's assistant, as instructor. Later in the month a successful garden party was held. Canadianization was the subject of study at the monthly meeting. Frontier had an interesting lawn meeting, with a splendid address on Child Welfare by Dr. Wales of St. Andrews East. Lakefield Branch enjoyed the report of the annual Provincial Quebec Women's Institute and united with the local Farmer's Club in a picnic. Lachute catered for a C.P.R. visiting picnic and Pioneer Branch has been especially busy sending out fruit and flowers to the sick, holding discussions on practical subjects as well as giving a lawn social.

FIRST MASS IN CHURCH

The first mass to be held in the new church at Huberdeau, Que., will be heard by pilgrims from Montreal who will accompany the tenth annual pilgrimage now being organized by Father Antoine Berthiaume, of St. Helen's parish, Montreal. Father Ricardin is patron of the trip, which will be made by special Canadian National Railway train, on August 28th.

The records show that since 1930 the divorces are becoming fewer in Canada. As the people become poorer, the less they think of divorces, and the more they think of helping one another. After all poverty has charms the rich cannot know or ever enjoy.

Lachute Lad Rescued from Drowning

A young man well known among our High School athletes owes his life today to the presence of mind of his friends, with whom he was swimming last Sunday at Lakefield. Howard Jones, a fair swimmer, has been dogged by ill luck in that pastime, but his close scrape Sunday morning was, we believe, quite the narrowest escape from drowning, in his experiences of having been rescued four different times from the water.

Tired from swimming in the lake, Howard had climbed onto a raft to rest awhile. His companions happened at that time to move to one side of the raft, causing it to tip, and throwing him back into the water. Whether Howard was overcome by faintness, or whether he gulped water into his lungs, is not certain; but he could scarcely shout to his friends; and was sinking for the third time when they realized he was in difficulties.

Mr. Stanley Andrews of Montreal, a week-ender at Lakefield was on the spot when his wife drew attention to the mishap, and dived down, catching Jones 6 feet beneath the surface. The lake is very deep at this place, and Mr. Andrews' quick move alone averted a fatal outcome. He was assisted by another swimmer, Bob Tobin, and together they lifted the unconscious lad back on the raft. They applied artificial respiration immediately, and Jones commenced to regain consciousness after 20 minutes. He was taken to the shore by boat, and was later put to bed in the Miller cottage nearby. Howard is little the worse for his narrow escape, and is grateful to be living today, thanks to the resourcefulness of his Lakefield friends.

Grain Sixty-five Inches High

Seymour Township, Ontario, is noted for its land and soil yield, but a record for oats seems to have been reached this year by Mrs. Peter Stephens, who has an exceptionally fine field of grain with stalks approximately 65 inches long. The grain is well headed.

It is estimated that the annual income from wild life in Canada is $53,000,000. This value includes the worth of pelts and carcasses of animals, the revenue from the trade in firearms and ammunition, in supplies for hunters and sportsmen, and their transportation, guides and accommodation.

Land values as a basis for taxation and rating, would seem to me the most reasonable way of coming at matters properly and to the satisfaction of all concerned. Said land values fluctuate from time to time, these fluctuations being governed by the movements in modern times of population. Great inequalities of local taxations have resulted, with extraordinary distribution of land values. To both of these changes it stands in the relation of cause and effect.

Land Values depend greatly upon the population. The flood of population to a particular area may be determined by the natural advantages of its position. The commercial possibilities of the North and West Rivers here have attracted large numbers to the towns of Lachute and Brownsburg, and to higher up the North River. At St. Jerome factories and law courts have attracted numbers also, and land in and around these towns has become more valuable; even soil of the poorest character has become valuable for building purposes. When population increases land values promptly tend to rise. And if the population shifts

Talented Trio are heard in Sacred Recital

A most enjoyable musical treat was accorded the people of Lachute and vicinity, when on Sunday last, at the close of the evening service in the Lachute United Church a Recital was given by Mrs. Thom, soprano soloist of St. Andrews Church, Westmount; Mr. Anlon Young, Operatic baritone, of New York, and Dr. A. MacKay, Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit. It is indeed a gracious act when those who are gifted with such marked ability are pleased to render gratuitous service and present such an excellent programme as that of Sunday evening.

The solo "Hear Ye," from Elijah, was sung, with marked feeling by Mrs. Thom, who possesses a rich and sweet soprano; her other numbers being "The King of Love" and "The Voice in the Wilderness." Mr. Young's rendition of "It is enough" from Elijah was sung with spirit and great pathos and his rich full baritone was heard to advantage as he presented "Page's Road Song" by Novello, and "Hallelujah" by Morris. Dr. MacKay's organ selections, "Cantabile" by Demarest and the popular "Londonderry Airs," gave ample evidence of his true artistry as a renowned organist. Argenteuil may be justifiably proud of Dr. MacKay, as an old county boy who has since distinguished himself as a master.

On behalf of the congregation, Rev. Dr. MacLeod extended a hearty vote of thanks to the trio who had given their audience this unusual musical treat.

W. C. Miller Lands a Big One

Gentleman of 76 Catches 13 lb. Maskinonge.

Recent reports from the apostles of Isaac Walton have not been mightily cheerful in these parts. But Mr. W. C. Miller, 76 years young, broke the spell yesterday by catching a 13 lb. maskinonge. He was alone, trolling from a rowboat with minnow and spoon-spinner, in the familiar reaches of our North River near Walker's farm. Mr. Millar felt a cheerful tug on the line, and pulled for the shore in the neighborhood of the bathing beach. Here he could haul in the fish with greater ease, and was rewarded for his efforts by a maskinonge which tipped the scale at 13 lbs.

Toronto Writer Takes Adverse View of Waterways Development

Frank J. D. Barnjum Makes Extravagant Statements, but Raises Good Argument.

"OUR ST. LAWRENCE HERITAGE"

Letter to the Montreal Daily Herald, August, 2nd.

I am not surprised that those who have not made a careful personal study of this problem should support the Waterway Scheme. "A seaway to the heart of the continent" sounds very alluring and as a loyal Canadian I heartily wish it were feasible but if the supporters of this gigantic undertaking will take the pains to read the following short summary of the results of my investigations observations and experiences covering a period of forty-seven years, a study that embraces every phase of a development of this nature, I feel very sure they cannot fail to reach the same conclusion arrived at by me, namely, that it is an impossible and dangerous proposition viewed from any angle.

When the opinion of experts is quoted in connection with any large undertaking it only amuses me. Every dollar I have in the world was made because I acted directly contrary to the advice of experts. When I first began buying timberland I was repeatedly advised by all of my friend experts not to do so; they informed me that timber was growing as fast as it was cut and consequently timber-

Automobiles in Collision

A painful accident occurred on Saturday afternoon, in the neighborhood of Gordonville when a car driven by Mr. Gerald Phelan was struck by another car, driven by Mr. Lainesse, of St. Jerome. Mr. Phelan received severe cuts on face and head, and was taken to the General Hospital for examination and treatment, where reports of his recovery are very favorable. Mr. Phelan's car was completely wrecked, while the other automobile driven by Mr. Lainesse was also badly damaged.

Lachute Anglican Church Has Successful Social

A beautiful evening favored the Ice Cream Festival of the St. Simeon's Church, held on the spacious lawn of Mrs. R. Miller, last Friday. Throughout the day the dark clouds hovered over, with threatening downpours, but towards sun-set the evening was ideal for the social. The lawn, artistically decorated, was a scene of merriment as friends from far and near gathered together for the occasion.

After the serving of the ice cream and cake, the audience witnessed a programme of very high quality, featuring Miss MacGibbon, Scotch dancer, Messrs. Ben Maiden and Fred Stansfield, tap dancers, Mr. R. Wood, and Prof. Peet, magician of Montreal. The first item of the program was much appreciated, when Mr. Wood sang one of the good old-time comedy songs, "Finnigan's Ball." This brought forth many a hearty laugh. Messrs. Maiden and Stansfield, tap dancers, also contributed a fine number with their "Clog Dance" and were well merited of their encore, which featured the well known favorite tune "East Side, West Side," accompanied vocally by Mr. Wood.

Next, the Scotch Dance exhibition by Miss M. MacGibbon was graceful indeed. This artist is a pupil of Mr. Aitken, and congratulations were evidenced by the hearty applause she received.

Prof. Peet, magician and humorist, of Montreal, gave a splendid hour's entertainment land would never be worth more than it was then. When I can say that up to the time I retired from business twelve years ago I never bought an acre of land that failed to show a handsome profit—and I was an investor in timber for forty years and the experts continued offering the same advice as long as I remained in that business—I think I have very good reason for amusement on being referred to the opinion of experts. The experts in any profession are more often wrong than right. The late Hon. George H. Murray, who was premier of Nova Scotia for twenty-five years and was a man of wide experience, told me that experts got him into more trouble than any other class in his entire career. In building a large mill I ordered a steam plant installed of just double the capacity that my engineer's specifications called for and still I had no surplus power and I could quote experiences of this nature without number.

When I urged our governments not to grant any more pulpwood concessions for the erection of additional paper mills and advised the public not to invest in paper stocks, I was informed that the pulp and paper development was in the hands of experts who must know better than I what they were doing.

I now want to place myself on record, and am willing to stake my reputation on the statement, that there will not be sufficient water by the time this waterway is completed to float the ships that it is being built for. I make this statement not on the advice of experts, but based on forty-seven years' study and investigation of forest and river development. All the rivers in Canada are gradually lowering, take the river Don as an example, sixty years ago this river was used by boats and its water powers supported four mills at its headwaters; the same thing applies to the Humber and so on right across the continent.

If, as I have previously stated the river ran the other way so that we had the sea to draw from, instead of shrinking lowering streams running through drying-up watersheds, then we should be on safe ground in so far as a supply of water is concerned, but regrettably this is not the case and we have to take our dwindling rivers as they are.

Further, the operation of this waterway would be a continual source of friction between the two countries and between the power and shipping interests. The power interests of the United States will demand that the full head of water be maintained in the dams, and the shipping interests will be calling for more water down river in order that they may load their ships to capacity, instead of being partly loaded as is the case in low water periods utilized simply for power and the driving of logs. This same friction is continually arising and bloodshed has frequently been the result of these controversies, when even the blowing up or cutting of a hole in a dam has been resorted to in order to obtain sufficient water for log driving.

which pleased those who were fortunate enough to be present. Mr. Wood rendered by request, "The Egg" for the last item on the programme, followed by a more serious song "Clowning."

The Rev. Lackey thanked all who had contributed in any way toward the success of the social and "God Save the King" was sung as a fitting close.

LOW RAILWAY FARES AS INDUCEMENT FOR OTTAWA EXHIBITION

Single Fares Approved by Canadian Passenger Association. United States Marine Band in Its First Visit to Canada. Outstanding Factors.

Lower railway fares than have prevailed for years are another inducement for visiting the Ottawa Exhibition, August 22 to 27. The Canadian Passenger Association has approved of a fare and a quarter, good going on August 20 and returning not later than August 30 for the territory between the Toronto-Sudbury lines in the west and Quebec, Levis and Megantic in the east. Good going on August 24 and returning not later than the 26th., and going on August 26, returning not later than August 27, a single fare return rate is announced. Special rates also are announced by various bus lines.

Possibly the most-talked-of attraction for the exhibition is the United States Marine Band of Washington. This famed organization will make its first visit to Canada and will come at full strength, 75 musicians. Two concerts will be given daily during exhibition week, no extra charge being made for this attraction. THE CAPTAIN'S WEEKLY LETTER

"A BOY WITH BADGES IN HIS CAP."

Dear Boys:—

There he was sitting in front of me, as we were traveling together in a motor bus on our way to a city in the State of Oregon, U. S. A.

He was an American boy of about 14 years of age, and he wore a brown suit with a blue shirt, the collar of which was wide open at the throat. He had taken off his coat and had rolled up the sleeves of his shirt, for the day was very warm, but he kept on his little round cap which he had decorated all round with badges, and of which, without a doubt, he was very proud.

I became interested at once, in the cap with the badges, and his steady brown eyes quickly noted the fact. With a friendly smile he said, "You see my badges?" I knew he wanted to talk about them so I replied, "Yes indeed, and where did you get them all?"

He put up his hand and removed his cap, revealing a head of brown curly hair, which did not appear to have made acquaintance with a brush for a very long time.

"See here," he said, placing his finger rapidly in turn on the badges, "Some of these are not much good,—just look fine; but this one is real good and worth all the others. It's my athletic Badge." "Won at School?" I asked in all innocence. The brown eyes opened wide. "Say, Mister," said their owner, "You ain't making' fun o' me, are you?"

Feeling guilty without a reason, I hastened to assure him I was not, and the smile returned on the young brown face.

"There are some of these I sure won at school, but they're nothing 'cos all the kids have them. But this one," and he stroked it affectionately with his hand, "They haven't got, but I have—and after fighting hard, believe me!"

I looked out of the window and saw the long winding road ahead. I leaned forward. "Tell me about it," I invited.

His boyish face lit up with enthusiasm. "Say, Stranger, you're kind. Sure you would like me to tell you all about it?"

Receiving my nod of encouragement he started. In a few minutes he had carried me out of that bus into the cool depths of the green woods, and the youngster was offering me all the hospitality of a boys' camp. With him I walked under the shade of the trees and down by the stream to look for trout. He it was who pointed to where they had discovered the three small bear cubs and how they had tried to capture one of them but without success. Then he took me to the camp sports ground to view the races and other trials of endurance. I saw him take his part in competition with his fellows, and noticed how his lips tightened and the light left his eyes as he, to use his own expression, "failed to make the grade." He would not let me move until the last big race of all. "I must win" he whispered to me, as he took his place. Now the eyes were looking ahead to the goal, the slight body, was strained and alert, the small fingers clenched. Then they were off ... and afterwards he, as it seemed, almost fell panting into my arms. "What are they shouting about?" he gasped. "What, don't you know you've won?" I replied.

The bus stopped. "Twenty minutes for dinner" called the conductor.

"This is where I get off" said the boy. "Well, you've made a good start," I said, looking at he badge, "keep it up, sonny."

"You bet!" was the happy reply and then added with real courtesy, "Safe journey, Sir". I smiled a little sadly. He was just starting while I had travelled more than half way, but both of us had to "keep it up."

That's the only thing to do in the Journey of Life.

Your affectionate friend,

THE CAPTAIN.

By Capt. O. J. Aldom.

There was no doubt about it, Mr. Williams was not in a good mood at all, and there were many on board the Dauntless, who were aware of this. Henderson, who was Jack's senior in the Pursar department of the ship's work, was in almost open rebellion and more than once expressed strong views on the subject to his Junior. "I believe in discipline at sea alright" he said indignantly, "but our Chief Officer is going a bit too far, and the worst of it is the Commander takes no notice at all. Can't you sound your Uncle, youngster, and find out what he thinks?"

But to this outburst Jack only shook his head. "Not a bit of good, Henderson, doing that" he replied. "The Commander is no more my uncle than yours on board ship, as you very well know. It was only yesterday he ordered me double watch because he found a mistake in my store book, and he warned me that if it happened again I would soon find myself cabin boy, swabbing decks" Henderson grinned. "And so poor Mickey out of a job, which by the way he is not doing at present any way!"

Jack looked up at his friend in surprise, for though there was a big difference in their ages, the Senior Pursar being over nineteen years old, their work had brought them very close together and each respected the other's good qualities. Henderson's motto in life seemed to be "It's better to travel slowly and to Arrive," while Jack with his eager enthusiasm and quickness of temperament was rather inclined to accept as his guiding influence, "He who hesitates is lost." "Why," he asked a little impatiently. "What's the matter with Mickey, for now I come to think about it I have not seen his cheerful grin or heard his whistle lately."

"Our friend the Chief, to get back to that subject, is responsible" replied his chum. "He caught the ever-energetic Mick helping himself to his superior's dessert, yesterday, and it was a rope's ending and confinement in the dark hole for 24 hours that he dished out to satisfy the claims of discipline."

Jack whistled in dismay: "My word, that's a bit thick, the poor kid must be frightened out of his life as well as sore after his punishment."

"Oh don't get excited" admonished his friend, "he will be alright, your little sister has made things easy for him, so I hear; for she happened to be standing in the corridor by the Chief's cabin, when a sailor was sent for to put Mick below, and I suppose it was the boy's piteous look that roused her indignation."

"Where are you taking him?" she asked imperiously "To be shut up below for stealing ship's food, Miss," said the sailor.

"Let him go at once, he was only hungry" ordered your sister, stamping her foot in temper. "It's a shame to treat a little boy like that."

'At which outburst the sailor laughed and even Mick in spite of his distress could not help looking amazed at this distinctly original version of his crime, but all the same he did not relish being called 'a little boy'!

"Can't do that, Miss" says the sailor, "Official's orders, and I have to obey them."

"Which officer," asks your sister.

"Mr. Williams, Miss." And with that the man takes off Mick to his confinement and the little lady enters the Chief's cabin. Of course I don't know what happened then, but if you ask me I guess the Chief was talked to some!"

"Which," added Jack, "would not improve his temper, but Babs can get away with anything, even with the old man." He corrected himself hastily, "the Commander takes orders from her, I mean."

Henderson nodded in agreement, "Anyone with half an eye can see he is devoted to her, as indeed we all are. Do you know the sailors say, she has brought good luck to the ship; and that means a lot to them. But don't you think we had better be getting to work, or we shall join our hardly-used Mick in the 'dark hole'!"

Jack agreed hastily and in another minute these two Junior officers of the ship were industriously working over their books.

CHAMPION FREIGHTER PLAYS IMPORTANT PART IN NATIONAL CEREMONY

Canada Steamship Lines' S. S. Lemoyne was Chosen to Break Ribbon at Welland Canal Opening.

Stripped of her flags and bunting but still the world's greatest grain carrier and holder of all fresh-water records, the Canada Steamship Lines' freighter Lemoyne returned to the head of the lakes after her historic first voyage through the new Welland Ship Canal.

Never in her short but glorious history on the lakes has the Lemoyne been the centre of so much attention as during that ceremony. On the opening day this giant freighter nosed into the canal and stood ready until His Excellency the Earl of Bessborough, released the lever opening the canal gates and allowing the Lemoyne to pass along the waterway. Thousands of people lined the canal banks as the freighter crept by, and cheered as she severed the white ribbon stretched across the canal, officially opening it to the commerce of the nation.

As the Lemoyne emerged from the canal and entered Lake Ontario for the first time, she was again given a great and noisy welcome. Dozens of smaller craft waited for the queen of the lakes to go by, greeting her with shrill blasts from their sirens; on shore thousands of motor cars sounded their horns, adding to the din. A single deep blast from the Lemoyne's siren acknowledged the salute and the 633-foot long freighter first felt the water of Lake Ontario beneath her bows.

The Lemoyne's arrival at Kingston was the signal for an elaborate civic reception. Speakers extended welcome to the Canada Steamship Lines' president and officials, and the honor of the day marked an auspicious note in the records of this all-Canadian navigation company.

But the pomp and ceremony are over. Admired by thousands of Canadians and by noted leaders from all corners of the Empire; hailed as the largest freshwater boat in the world and the forerunner of a new era in Canadian navigation, the Lemoyne today is back on her regular job. Once more she plys the lakes—only this time with a cruising radius of over a thousand miles—bringing from the lakehead her cargoes of Canadian wheat to the busy port at Kingston at the lower end of Lake Ontario. Her day of hectic praise is over and she returns to her task as leader of the great grain fleet that links east and west by the newly completed waterways.

ANNOUNCING

Daily Demonstrations of the

STERLING OIL BURNER

Canada's Finest Oil Burner

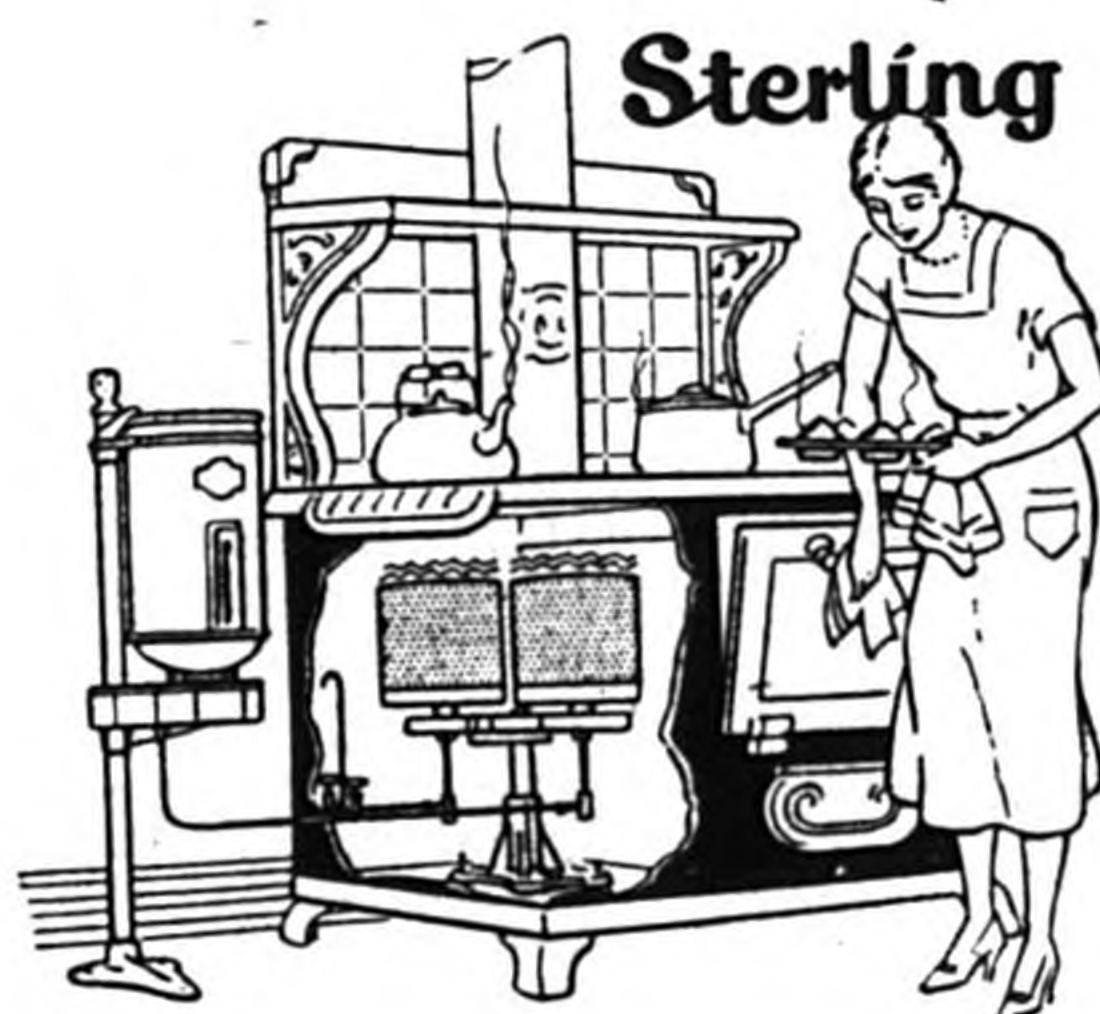

= The Seven Points of Sterling Superiority =

1. Metal containers that cannot be accidentally broken or cracked by the heat.

2. Special oil strainer that is durable, covering large area, prevents blockage.

3. Oil bowl of large capacity has reserve space, a feature which prevents overflowing.

4. Heavy chromium nickel sleeves that are fire-resisting. Guaranteed for ten years.

5. Specially thick wicks that are efficient, also lasting.

6. Adjustable base which can be moved to meet the exact requirements of each individual stove or heater.

7. Specially designed valve that prevents fading fires.

EVERY PART OF THE STERLING OIL BURNER IS MADE IN CANADA BY CANADIAN LABOR FOR CANADIAN HOMES BY CANADIAN CAPITAL.

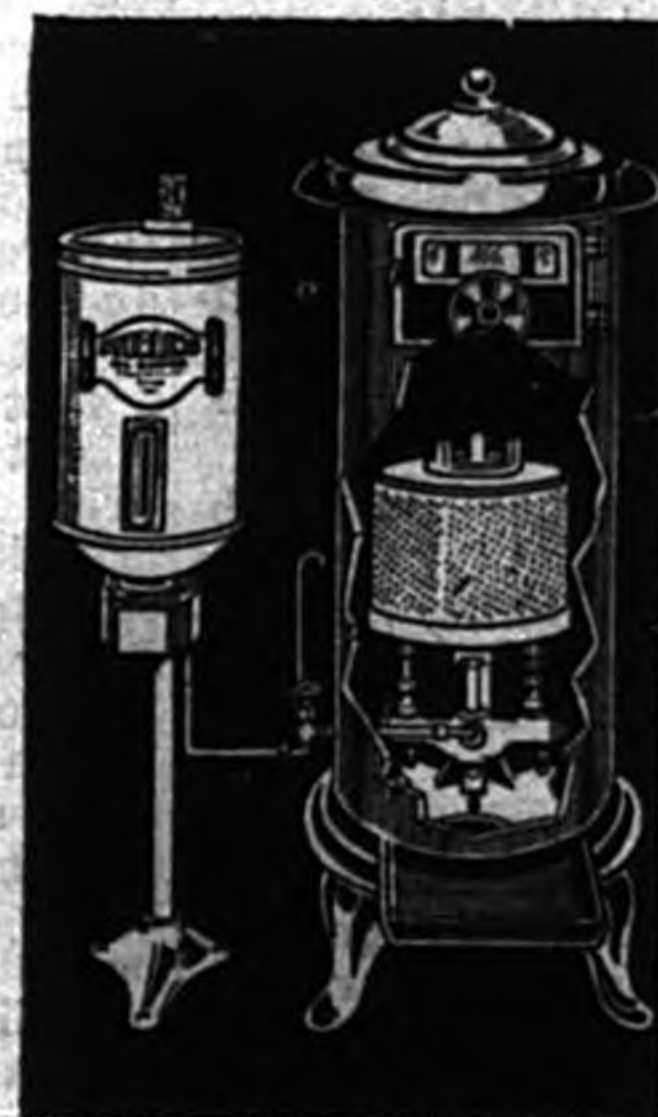

Absolutely Guaranteed for 10 Years

Do not fail to take full advantage of these demonstrations, for here, indeed, is a rare opportunity to see for yourself how the use of oil for cooking and heating does away with all the dissatisfaction, dirt, work and nuisance of burning coal or wood.

Come in by all means and let us show you why. Coast to coast, the STERLING OIL BURNER is the unanimous choice of the wise housewife. Why these Burners are so economical in operation, so easy and safe to use, and why you can depend on them for years of carefree, enjoyable service.

There is a correctly designed STERLING OIL BURNER for every type of Stove, Range, Heater or Circulator, and every installation is backed by a definite, far-reaching guarantee! STERLING OIL BURNERS are exceedingly cheap to operate. They are easily and quickly installed without trouble or fuss. Just imagine how you would benefit from installing one with no more cinders to sift, ashes to move, and full freedom from harmful dust or odors.

However, come and see for yourself. You will be surprised how little it costs to install one of the truly modern and decidedly better Oil Burner, and how really effective they are for all heating and cooking purposes.

The Efficient Modern Housewife Cooks and Heats With OIL

DEMONSTRATIONS ARE BEING HELD DAILY

9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Come in at any time
but be sure you do come!

NO OBLIGATION
NO URGING TO BUY

In business and manufacturing plants and on steamships, Oil has long been given preference. Now it is brought to your home—at the highest point of efficiency—by the STERLING OIL BURNER. It does away with all carrying of coal, bother of ashes and continuous stoking of fires, at the same time providing clean, uniform, healthful and economical heat.

The latest of home improvement devices, STERLING OIL BURNER easily ranks as the most useful of these, because most other recently adopted household appliances, such as vacuum cleaners, washing machines, etc., are used only a few hours each week, whereas STERLING OIL BURNER serves you from 10 to 24 hours per day almost every day in the year.

Your Dealer
Will Show You
The Simplicity of the

STERLING
OIL BURNER

It is odorless, noiseless and works automatically. It will give you more clean healthful heat than you can possibly require . . . and an especially designed valve regulates the exact amount of heat you want, correctly at all times. Once tried, you will not want to be without one.

MODERN THEORY OF SELF-EXPRESSION CRITICIZED

Dr. G. W. Parmalee, former Deputy Minister of Protestant Education for Quebec, recently criticized theory that children should have full liberty for self-expression, or as he phrased it, "letting the child do just as he pleases."

While a certain amount of liberty in the choice of action might be a good thing, Dr. Parmalee expressed his belief that this idea is being carried much too far to-day.

Giving as his reason the inevitable trouble which too much liberty would make for the child in later years, Dr. Parmalee criticized the principle of self-expression as destructive of all self-control and as ignoring the rights of others. "These independent ideas of absolute freedom will have to be knocked out of the child before any progress can be made in his character," Dr. Parmalee stated.

IN MEMORIAM

McMAHON—In loving memory of dear Douglas and Clarence drowned at Crystal Falls, on August 17, 1928.

In our hearts your memory lingers,
Sweetly, tender, fond and true,
There is not a day ever passes,
That we do not think of you.
God is kind, he gives us strength
To bear our lonely cross,
He is the only one who knows
Our loneliness and loss.
Sadly missed by mother, father and Sisters.

The water level, on this continent is gradually lowering, and when we deepen our main artery the St. Lawrence, it is merely a temporary expedient and we are simply adding to this lowering process and are accelerating the run-off. Likewise, as I have previously pointed out, every dam that is placed across a river reduces the amount of the flow below the dam through the loss of evaporation and seepage that is caused by the increased water surface that is thereby exposed. The lowering of the water level in all of our lakes and rivers will be much more rapid in the future than in the past as we approach nearer and nearer to desert conditions, through the increased devastation of our remaining forested areas. The loss by erosion is also becoming greater every year, which will necessitate continual dredging operations in order to keep the channels clear of silt.

The disfiguring mud flats that would be created (through channel deepening) along the shores in the reaches of the river not flowed out by the dams, would not only be a continual eyesore but would necessitate the building of long wharves in order to reach the channel.

The flooding out of historical sites of which we as a young country have none to spare, and the wiping out of whole communities as well as the priceless scenic feature of the entire St. Lawrence River, the Lachine Rapids, should alone cause our people to pause and think of the cost of this entirely unnecessary scheme. Thousands of tourists from all parts of the world visit Canada for the sake of this sail down the river, with the shooting of these rapids as the most attractive and thrilling experience of the entire trip.

Our most valuable commercial asset is our tourist industry, an industry that produces our second largest item of revenue without taking a dollar from our natural resources, and still we are engaged in destroying the very attractions that produce this revenue namely our forests and now our incomparable river the St. Lawrence.

Mussolini, one of the world's wisest leaders, is devoting his great ability and untiring energy in making Italy attractive to tourists, and we could not do better than to follow his lead, not only in this direction, but in many other lines of national activity.

What will this waterway treaty amount to when the U. S. banks of the St. Lawrence become lined with towns and cities that are dependent upon this water power for their very existence? Any demand that we may make for more water for our shipping will be headed about as much as our demands on Chicago; we can protest and keep on protesting, and that is all it will amount to. The day this treaty is ratified Canada will permanently lose control of the second greatest asset we have left. The only reason the two countries have got along peacefully in the past is because we have allowed them to do as they pleased with us, stripping our country of our raw materials and slapping on a tariff here and there as they felt disposed and in addition allowing us only 65 per cent for our perfectly good dollar.

Many of my most intimate American friends, and they represent some of the very best citizens of that country, have frequently asked me: "What is the matter with you Canadian people that you allow the American politicians to put it all over you and take it lying down?" I have been asked this question so often that at times I feel almost ashamed of my Canadian citizenship.

The most recent estimates of the cost of this huge work are of course ridiculous. When the Transcontinental Railway was built the actual cost exceeded the first estimate made by the government by more than five to one. This is merely a sample of what estimates of any great work may amount to, and with its many complications and ramifications this huge undertaking will prove no exception to the rule.

As far as a division of the cost on anywhere near a 50-50 basis is concerned as between a country of 120,000,000 people who are clamoring for cheaper power and a people of 10,000,000 who have more power and transportation than they can use this is also ridiculous.

A great deal of stress seems to be laid upon the fact that Ontario will be obliged to pay a hundred million dollars of the cost, though just what compensation this is I am at a loss to understand; one might almost think that Ontario was a foreign country instead of being an integral part of Canada. Speaking of Ontario one might also think that its burden of debt is sufficient to satisfy the most profligate spend-thrift.

The development of this large amount of water power for the U.S. will without any question new industries to Canada to a prevent the influx of further very large extent. This goes without saying.

There is still another very serious feature in connection with the impounding of such a vast wall of water in a river of the dimensions of the St. Lawrence with its huge and largely denuded watersheds, and that is the perpetual danger of the bursting of a dam. We must be prepared for the inevitable fact that we shall have increased extremes of low and high water stages as we approach nearer and nearer to conditions that exist in China, with occasional periods of sudden and extreme flood conditions when the puny works of man are swept away before the powers of nature; this is a very real menace that we must be prepared to face with its loss of human life and destruction of property that would make the Johnstown flood sink into insignificance.

As some of our Canadian newspapers have devoted whole pages to the so-called favorable features of this waterway scheme, I feel that I am not asking too much in craving space for just a few of its dangerous aspects in order that the public may be allowed to form an intelligent opinion on this vital question. Personally I cannot think of a single favorable feature in connection with this great disfigurement except that it will furnish temporary employment but at what a cost!

It is called a seaway, but the strange feature is that sea-going ships cannot afford to use it.

With the development of this huge amount of additional power for which there will be no demand for a very long time, our present power companies, (in which I am thankful to say I have no interest other than as a Canadian citizen) will all be forced into bankruptcy, just as our paper industry has been with the consequent loss of hundreds of millions of dollars by the people of Canada.

When we already have such a large surplus of power and transportation why add to our huge burden of debt to increase these surpluses?

Why not take a moratorium on debt raising and stop long enough to catch our breath and see where we are heading?

If this waterway turned out as great a success as its advocates claim, it would put all our railways out of business, as they could not afford to operate for the small amount of traffic that would be left. In addition to the two great systems, the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific, with the Hudson's Bay and James Bay roads added, we have fleets of trucks and busses on every highway—fleets that are being added to with every new road that is opened up. Is there to be no limit to our development of surplus transportation?

The original dream of ocean-going steamers docking at the head of the Great Lakes has been abandoned even by its most enthusiastic advocates, as it has been proved that these high operating cost ships cannot afford to make the slow tortuous trip.

When the rate on grain from the head of the lakes to Montreal by this long inland waterway, even by the present low cost operating lake carriers, is double what the ocean rate is from Montreal to Liverpool it is perfectly obvious that the higher cost operating sea-going ships could not afford to use this water way even if built. The time made by the larger ships would necessarily have to be much slower on account of the danger of grounding and the large displacement of water would cause a dangerous wash along the shores.

BROWNSBURG

Mrs. Kilgour, of Montreal, spent a visit with Mrs. F. Jordan last week.

Mr. Harry Gardiner is in Montreal this week, owing to the illness of his brother.

Mrs. Jas. Graves and son, of Windsor, Ont., are visiting her father, Mr. John Turney.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Parizeau and Mr. and Mrs. O. Legault have returned from a very pleasant trip on the Gaspé peninsula.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Donaldson and son Kenneth have just returned from a very enjoyable motor trip through Tennessee and neighboring States.

Members of the Brownsburg United Church Choir spent a very pleasant afternoon and evening on Saturday at Lake Louisa, as guests of Mrs. White and family at their cottage.

Brownsburg Boy Scouts thoroughly enjoyed their week in camp at "Tamaracouta", and express the hope for a longer stay there next summer. Swimming, boating, hiking—all the pastimes a boy loves, are afforded to youngsters resident at this camp; and kindly thought goes to the memory of Colonel Edward Ashworth Whitehead, who made it possible. His memorial tablet standing on the hill at Tamaracouta, commands reverence and gratitude from the boys who find such healthful enjoyment in these surroundings.

Any artificial inland waterway of such great length can never be an economic success for large ocean shipping.

The so-called favorable international agreements that have been signed are just so many "scraps of paper" as history proves, to be honored only so long as it may be beneficial to the more powerful of the two nations. The mere fact that the U. S. has been so willing to agree to everything that our government has asked for is, in itself, suspicious. They are willing to agree to anything just so long as they can once secure a foothold, and if we give them a foot they will take a mile. Any so-called opposition to the scheme from some quarters in the U. S. is in quite a measure mere camouflage to fool the Canadian people.

A fair sample of what easy-marks we Canadians are is that we are paying a handsome profit to foreign interests for water power, the rights to develop which were practically given away by our government; and not only that, but in the agreement it was stipulated that payments for this power must be made in American funds, an added indignity and additional loss of some 15 per cent. Consequently, the Canadian people are buying their own Canadian power at a profit to foreign interests and are paying for it in American funds. Such imbecility or worse cannot be duplicated outside of Canada.

When our governments say they are so short of money that they were forced to reduce their forest protection service down to a mere skeleton, exposing our most vital, most necessary, and most valuable natural resource to the danger of being wiped out by fire, insects and disease, how can they justify the expenditure of such a vast sum of money on an uncalled-for and unnecessary undertaking as this proposed waterway?

If this waterway is ever proceeded with I am very much afraid that our incomparable St. Lawrence may like a famous river in China, have to be referred to in the future as our "river of sorrows."

Canada is rapidly recovering conditions are daily improving and will continue to improve from the results that should be accomplished at the Imperial Conference; consequently, why continue to add to our burden of debt for the sake of entering upon an uncalled-for scheme that is fraught with so many complications, and dangerous possibilities?

CARD OF THANKS

Mr. Stewart C. Smith wishes to extend his sincere thanks to the many friends of his mother, the late Mrs. Wm. Smith, for flowers, and for the kindness given him in his sad bereavement.

Marriage of Interest Here

Lester—Candlish

The marriage of Miss Thelma C. Candlish, R.N., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Candlish, and Rev. Harold G. Lester, B.A., B.D., son of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Lester, formerly of this district, took place quietly Thursday afternoon, Aug. 11, in the chapel of the Divinity Hall, Montreal. Rev. Dr. R. B. Y. Scott, of the United Theological College, and Rev. T. A. Allen officiating, with Mr. Henry E. Colcomb, F. R. C.O., at the organ. The bride, who was given away by her father, was attended by her cousin, Miss Margaret Sleep. The best man was Mr. Alex. G. Lester, brother of the bridegroom, Mr. Fred Wood acted as usher. The bride wore a dress of white georgette, with large white straw hat and white slippers. She carried an arm bouquet of Columbia roses and lilies of the valley. The bridesmaid's dress was of apple green georgette, with hat and shoes of the same color. Her bouquet was of pink Johannah Hill roses. After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the groom, 550 Ash Avenue, where the rooms were decorated with yellow roses. The bride and groom sailed on the Letitia on August 12 for Scotland, where the groom, winner of a travelling fellowship, will take a year's post-graduate course in New College, Edinburgh University. The bride's travelling costume was a brown and fawn printed silk dress and dark brown coat and hat. Among the out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Mrs. J. A. Good, of Shrewsbury, Que.

Lachute Mills

Welcomed to Scotland

Six hundred Canadians who call Glasgow home, were greeted on their arrival in the Clyde city by Sir Thomas Kelly, I.L.D., Lord Provost, and the magistrates of the city, when they arrived recently in the Canadian Pacific liner "Duchess of Bedford" for a reunion. Gathered together from all parts of Canada, and transported by special train to Montreal, the Glaswegians are making a two-months stay, during which they are being entertained by the City of Glasgow, its manufacturers, and their friends. Proceedings opened Tuesday, July 26th, when the Lord Provost, magistrates and councillors held a reception in the Art Galleries at Kelvingrove. The party, which left Montreal in the Duchess of Bedford, July 6, returns from Glasgow Saturday, August 20, in the same 20,000-ton liner.

LEARNING TO CHOOSE FRIENDS

What do you do when your children make friends that are not desirable? Do you arouse all their latent opposition by talking against their new friends or do you just sit tight and say nothing. To my mind any mother who can learn to say nothing has gone a long way towards being a successful parent.

To say nothing does not mean to do nothing. But the children methods. Young people yet do not need to know all your very violent crushes and their latest friend is always a wonder. They are very anxious to be proud of them and will be most critical when they are being shown off at their own home. So the thing to do is not to forbid your young person to go with their friend, but encourage them to bring their new friend home. Have them there very frequently and you will almost always find that your child will see that their friend is not desirable when they find them in the atmosphere of their own home. This of course will not always work with the small child but it usually does in the teen age. Children are loyal and when you talk against their friends you arouse all their loyalty. Handled in this way, you do not antagonise your child and you have helped them to learn to choose their friends wisely. That last is a most valuable asset.

TO KEEP CUT FLOWERS

If you crowd cut flowers in a vase you shorten greatly their lease on life. They need air and plenty of water. Vases which are wide at the top and taper sharply at the bottom are a snare and delusion as they seem to be quite large while in reality they hold very little water. Put your flowers in a container that is wide both top and bottom and they will repay you by lasting much longer.

Sometimes you can revive flowers that have wilted by giving them plenty of air and water. This spring a friend brought me a very beautiful bouquet of peonies. Without thinking much about it I put them in one of those pesky tapered vases. In twelve hours they had absorbed all the water and were all drooped. I filled a pail with water and put them in it over night. Of course they had lots of air and water and by morning were revived and lasted for days.

If you are keeping flowers for a special occasion it is wise to keep them in a large container and not to arrange them until almost the last moment. Keep in mind that flowers may be revived with proper treatment.

BROWNE NEW POTATOES

Do you brown your little new potatoes? They are delicious, but they must be small potatoes nothing larger than a golf ball, qualifies. They are a bit tedious to prepare but are worth the extra effort. Scrape and boil in salted water until tender, then brown in fat. If your oven happens to be hot, pop them in it until gently browned. If not, brown in a frying pan on top of the stove.

Every time I get these small potatoes ready, I think of an old gentleman who sold us vegetables one year. We insisted on having the young potatoes and every time he dug a hill he groaned audibly. It worried him so to dig them before they had reached their full growth. We were paying him far more than he would have got for them if he had left them to grow, but that did not make any difference. He felt it was an awful waste. As a rule it is not necessary to dig them too soon as you will find enough small potatoes for the purpose. My grocer saves me the small potatoes as long as they are new.

As every one else wants the large ones he is delighted to do it.

A steel mitt is quite a help in scraping new vegetables as it is faster than the usual paring knife.

WHITE MOSQUITO NETTING

Wash cloths made of several squares of mosquito netting are most useful on a motoring trip as they dry very rapidly. It also makes excellent dish cloths, in fact, I think they are the nicest I have ever used, because of its quick drying.

TOMATO SANDWICHES

Arrange sliced tomatoes on thinly sliced buttered bread. Sprinkle a little finely chopped or scraped onion on the tomato. Season with salt and pepper and top with another slice of buttered bread. Tomato sandwiches should be served shortly after making as they soon become soggy.

CORN FRITTERS

1 can corn
1 cup flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
2 teaspoons salt
Dash of pepper
2 eggs

Sift the dry ingredients into the corn. Add the beaten egg yolks and fold in the stiffly beaten whites. Drop by spoonfuls in hot fat and cook like pan cakes. These are a delicious accompaniment to a vegetable dinner.

AUTO LICENSE FEES ARE CUT TO HALF

Though originally designed to assist farmers in harvest time, the 50 per cent cut in automobile license fees in Saskatchewan to be effective from August 15, will apply to all owners, city dwellers included, it has been officially announced.

Any motorist allowed the new price will be required to make a statutory declaration proving non-use of his vehicle in 1932 prior to August 15, by him or with his consent.

LET A MOTHER TELL YOU

Mrs. Albert Bolton, Toronto, gratefully speaks of what Eagle Brand did for her little daughter, Margaret Jean. "For the first three months she was nursed, but this did not seem to satisfy her, so after trying nearly everything, I read an advertisement in a newspaper about Eagle Brand and decided to try it. She took to it right away and there has been no trouble since. She has 14 teeth, all coming through without difficulty. Her flesh is firm, lovely straight limbs, good bone development and so contented. She won third prize at the Canadian National Exhibition Baby Show last September in Class D, with 102 entrants."

If you are unable to nurse your baby, or he is not gaining as he should, follow the advice of hundreds of thousands of other wise mothers and try Eagle Brand Milk. If you will send us your name and address, we shall be glad to send you helpful, free booklet on infant welfare, filled with advice and practical suggestions that will delight you.

Every photograph and letter published by the Borden Company is voluntarily sent us by a grateful parent or other relative.

rest. The spacious comfortable rooms inside, and the friendly gracious hostess as well as the walk through the beautiful garden surrounded by its old high stone walls made our visit such a pleasure that it was with a feeling of real regret that we left to return home.

All this combined with a delightful tea ended a perfect afternoon.

Scouts Draw Stakes at Tamaracouta

Tamaracouta, which has been the camping site for hundreds of Boy Scouts from the Montreal district, has closed after its season of eight weeks. The camp has been a success this summer, accommodating various scout groups, without hitch or mishap, in the style of vacation which proves most healthful and congenial to boys. Local scouts who attended this camp under leadership of Scoutmaster Davis, of Brownsburg, unanimously report a splendid time. The Brownsburg boys left after a week of camping, leaving the small Lachute contingent under command of Patrol Leader Sidney Roberts. It is to their credit that, in a troop inspection of the entire camp, the Lachute boys were particularly complimented on their smart turn-out.

Camp Tamaracouta is situated on Dawson Lake, near Lakefield, extending along the southern shore, and the north side being used for "pioneering" by the scouts. Patrol Leader Roberts gives the following description of the campsite and outlines the interesting daily routine.

On first entering the camp one notices a small building on the right, which is used as the library. On the left is the Trading Post, Equipment House and Mess Hall. Directly behind the Mess Hall is the wharf, with three diving boards, a canoe-slip on one side and boat-slip on the other.

Each troop attending camp has a separate camp-site. These sites are spread out through the bush and many cannot be seen from the road of trails.

"Rouse" is sounded at 7 a.m. followed immediately by the flag-raising and a "dip." After the dip breakfast is prepared by the boys. Badge period is from 10 to 11 a.m., when tests for the various classes and proficiency badges are conducted.

St. Patrick of Ireland

Interesting Lecture at St. Andrews East.

On Tuesday evening last in the Anglican Church at St. Andrews East, an interesting and informative lecture on "The Life, Doctrine and Labors of Saint Patrick, the Apostle of Ireland," was given before a representative audience, by the Rev. J. W. S. Lowry, of Cambridge, Massachusetts. Rev. Mr. Booy presided and briefly introduced the lecturer, who proceeded to give a detailed account of the social, religious and national condition of Ireland at the coming of St. Patrick to the country in A.D. 432, the 1500th anniversary of which event was this year being commemorated at home and abroad. Though there were christian disciples in Ireland before the coming of St. Patrick, it remained for him to accomplish a complete triumph and conquest of the Island for "the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus." The old religion of Ireland was Pagan, Druidism with its sacred yew and rowan, and hawthorn. St. Patrick came hither from Scotland, after having been previously a captive slave in Ulster for six years, from which captivity he escaped and having studied for the sacred office in France, he set to work to evangelize Ireland, preaching the three Rs—Ruin by the Fall, Redemption by Jesus Christ, and Regeneration by the Holy Spirit. Preaching at Tara on a memorable occasion, he illustrated the doctrine of the Trinity by the three leaved shamrock, which led to its adoption as Ireland's emblem. A vote of thanks to Rev. Mr. Lowry was enthusiastically passed on the motion of Rev. Mr. Macaskill, of St. Andrews, seconded by Rev. J. W. Maclean, of Cushing, and the proceedings concluded with the Rector pronouncing the apostolic benediction.

From 11 to 11.45 a.m. instruction is given in swimming, diving and canoeing, and the regular morning swim is staged at 11.45. Dinner is the next feature in the day's routine; it is prepared by the boys and received with healthy young appetites. Then follows a rest period, during which it is compulsory for every boy to remain quiet. The afternoon is spent by playing games and boating, and the afternoon swim is held at 4.30. At 6 p.m. the whole camp assembles at the flag-pole, scouts in full uniform, for the ceremony of lowering the flag. Supper is then served in the Mess Hall, this meal being prepared by "pro." cooks. The Trading Post opens after supper, selling fruit, candy, and wares adapted to camp comforts. The evening is spent in playing games, sing-songs, competitions, and more boating, and the camp settles down at 9.30 for the night. Lights are extinguished, and vigorous young bodies restore their energy in a sleep imbued by healthful fatigue.

Anyone who has seen, in person, the regulated routine and supervised pastimes of the scouts at Tamaracouta, is duly impressed with this splendid form of vacation for boys, and with the ideal surroundings of the camp. Local Boy Scouts are pleasantly anticipating another such visit, and next summer's vacation cannot come around too soon to please them.

Man Driving Cow is Killed by Auto

Boris Chantal, Grenville Bay Farmer, Victim of Unusual Accident.

A young man, Boris Chantal, 30-year-old farmer of Grenville Bay, met instant death on the highway one mile west of Grenville last Thursday evening, when an automobile owned and driven by Hector Boizelli, left the road and turned over in the ditch, pinning the unfortunate man beneath it.

Chantal was driving a cow along the roadway and as the automobile approached the driver in an effort to avoid striking the animal turned sharply to the right. Chantal was unable to move out of the way of the toppling car and died shortly afterwards.

Coroner Dr. Wales, of St. Andrews conducted an inquest and the jury decided that the tragedy had been purely accidental.

Mayors of Torontos in U.S. Asked to C.N. Exhibition

Mayors of five Torontos in the United States are being asked to attend the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto, Ont., this month. Invitations have been forwarded to the Mayors of Toronto, Kansas, Toronto, Iowa; Toronto, Ohio; Toronto, South Dakota and Toronto, Missouri.

SOUND ADVICE TO SWIMMERS

The advice of Johnny Weissmuller, who achieved movie stardom through his championship as an American swimmer, might be well observed in an effort to decrease the numerous drowning fatalities which occur every summer. Concluding an article in last month's Cosmopolitan Weissmuller impresses this profound warning, which sounds a very personal note to every summer bather:

"I am a champion swimmer, yet I would no more swim a half-mile from shore alone, with out a boat in attendance, than I would put a loaded gun to my head and pull the trigger. It is as dangerous as that. — Don't show off, and just keep cramps in the back of your mind when you are tempted to swim out of sight or aid of others!"

Let Us Give a Real Welcome!

On Friday, Sept. 2nd., the School Board and Staff of Lachute Academy will be "At Home" to all old scholars, as well as new ones.

The purpose of this gala gathering is the dedicating of the new wing, which has just been added at a cost of nearly $50,000 to accommodate the extra number of scholars that will be brought in by the consolidation of the surrounding schools.

Invitations have been extended to old-time pupils to attend this function, which has for its purpose not alone the re-union of old friendships, but that the public may realize that education holds a high place in the county seat of Argenteuil where as in the past, scholars may receive the best of training to fit them for their life's work.

It is fully expected there will be upwards of a thousand people present and from reports received there will be a great influx of old-timers, as the responses have been beyond expectations; and now it is up to the citizens of Lachute to extend the glad hand of welcome. The general distribution of prizes will take place at 10 o'clock a.m., and those having cars are asked to be on hand at the school grounds, where the parade will start sharp at 2 o'clock for a trip around town, returning to the school for the ceremony of laying the corner stone.

A banquet is being tendered in the Auditorium at 7 o'clock, after which there will be an informal dance with Royal Highlanders' pipers and drummers and a 6-piece orchestra in attendance.

Knowing the kindly, hospitable nature of our people, it is hardly necessary that The Watchman should urge the point to make this occasion a gala day. Put out your flags and bunting and let the boys and girls, many of whom have now grown to maturity, realize that Lachute is really glad to welcome their return to the old town.

I Like the Depression - No More Prosperity for Me!

The following article appeared recently in the Dunnville Chronicle and was from the pen of an unknown writer. It is worth passing on in view of the large amount of common sense and philosophy it contains:

I Like the Depression

I like the depression. No more prosperity for me. I have had more fun since the depression started than I ever had in my life. I had forgotten how to live what it meant to have real friends, what it was to eat common, everyday food. Fact is, I was getting a little high hat.

Then—And Now

Three years ago only one man of our outfit could be out of town at a time and he had to leave at the last minute and get back as soon as possible. Many times I have driven 100 miles to a banquet, sat through three hours of bunk in order to make a 5-minute speech, then drive the 100 miles back so as to be ready for work next morning. Nowadays we make these trips and we stay as long as we want to. The whole outfit could leave the office now and it wouldn't make any difference.

Time, Neighbors

It's great to drop into a store and feel that you can spend an hour or two or three or a half day just visiting and not feel that you are wasting valuable time. I like the depression. I am getting acquainted with my

Sad Drowning at Clear Lake, Dunany

The funeral of the late Miss Wilma Joss, who was drowned at Clear Lake, on Sunday last, took place Tuesday afternoon, interment being made in the family plot at Lachute Cemetery.

Deceased was in her 34th year, being born on Dec. 4th., 1898, and was the youngest daughter of the late Daniel and Mrs. Joss, former residents of this town, now moved to Montreal. The family were as usual spending the summer months at their camp, Clear Lake. Wilma had gone out in the boat & having been absent some time Mrs. Joss sent a boy to look for her. The boat was located some distance away and it was anchored but had no occupant. Search was immediately instituted and the body found in shallow water close by. An inquest was held the same evening when a verdict of "Accidental Drowning" was returned by Coroner Wales of St. Andrews East.

The funeral was conducted by Rev. T. C. Cassidy, of Montreal, and was attended by a very large gathering of friends and old schoolmates of Lachute Academy, where Wilma had been a general favorite and dearly loved by the pupils whom she successfully taught, after passing from pupil to teacher.

She leaves to mourn their loss, her mother Mrs. C. M. Joss, and three sisters, Frankie (Mrs. Henry Gilbert) and Violet (Mrs. J. H. Armstrong), both of Montreal, and Mildred (Mrs. J. F. Carleton), of Dunham, Que.

The pall-bearers were Bert McIntosh, Harry Gilbert, Jas. Armstrong, Henry Heavyside, of Montreal, Chas. Joss, of Three Rivers, and Rev. J. F. Carleton, Dunham, Que., and among others attending from a distance were Mr. Walsh, Supt. of Outremont Schools, Mr. Samson, Principal of Alfred Joyce School, Messrs. McQuaig and Tucker, of Montreal School Board.

Conference Evokes General Satisfaction

Successful Outcome Casts Credit upon Premier Bennett as Host and Leader of Empire Gathering.

The words of Premier Bennett, "What way lie faith and hope, that way we follow," found lodgment in the hearts of the delegates as they deliberated upon the issues for which the Imperial Conference was brought together at Ottawa.

August 20th., 1932, will surely rank for all time as one of the red letter days in the history of the British Empire, as on Saturday last nine trade agreements embodying the basis of a new era of imperial economic co-operation, were signed in the House of Commons chamber by the heads of the delegations. These agreements will be submitted for ratification at a session of Parliament, early this fall and until then full details of the 220 changes in the Canadian tariff, on which additional preferences are being given, will be withheld.

It may safely be said that the success of the conference has greatly exceeded the expectations, as prior to the gathering little else but grim failure was predicted. But Mr. Baldwin's tribute to Premier Bennett at the closing sessions of the conference were such as to make Canada feel truly proud of his able leadership.

While Mr. Bennett's visit to the London Conference in 1930 was not considered so favorably constructive, the proposals he then put forward certainly left an impress that has today borne fruit, and the credit of having brought the Empire to Canada is largely a personal achievement.

The men who had to pilot this Conference had no easy task. They had to deal with the commerce of a fourth of the world's inhabitants, had to face the problems that are inseparable from the diverse interests and local ambitions and sometimes conflicting needs of nations over a fourth of the earth's surface.

Difficulties were inevitable. They were the sort of difficulties that called for patience, for tact and skill, for candor and plain speaking, for an overpowering will to achieve a common good. And while there were times when sectionalism seemed all but triumphant, and when local interests appeared impossible of conquest, the compelling challenge and need of co-operation, plus the appeal of a common brotherhood and heritage, were too strong.

ACCIDENT FOLLOWS BLOW-OUT.

Among this week's auto mishaps, Mr. Jim Small, foreman for Ryan Bros., Contractors engaged in the High School building, met with misfortune on the Montreal highway last Saturday. While travelling at a speed around 35 miles p.h., a blow-out in one of the front tires threw his car off the road. It collided with a fence and broke a telephone pole, the impact throwing the driver forcibly against the steering wheel which broke in two, severely bruising his body. Mr. Small's face and hands were also badly scratched, and his car suffered considerable damage.

Ontario Fruit Growers Bid for Montreal Market

In times of depression, it is interesting to know that fruit imports from Ontario are more than twice as much as last year, as far as arrivals at the Montreal terminals are concerned, and in the last week of July, the increase was over 240 per cent.

For the last seven days in June, 1931, the number of packages of fruit arriving by express at the terminals was 11,076.

This year the number of packages arriving at the new fruit terminals for the corresponding period was 29,076.

Of the last seven days of July, 1931, there were 29,653 packages received from Ontario fruit shippers. This year, during the same time, 71,490 packages reached Montreal.

Ontario is going to make a bid for Montreal markets, and the fact that the fruit consumption is up from 200 to 300 per cent in a depression year indicates what can be done.

Popular Couple United in Marriage

A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Wednesday last Aug. 24th., at the home of the bride's parents in Lachute, when the Rev. W. B. Rosborough, united in marriage Annie Donaldson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Miller, and Mr. Allan A. Rodger, son of the late Mr. Charles R. Rodger and Mrs. Rodger, of East Settlement.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, entered the drawing room to the strains of wedding music played by Miss Eleanor Rodger. She wore a gown of ivory satin with bodice and short puffed sleeves of lace, with long tulle veil and coronet of orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of roses and baby's breath. Miss Cora Miller, the bridesmaid was gowned in a baby pink lace dress with jacket to match and large picture hat. She carried a bouquet of pink gladiolas. Mr. Erskine Rodger, brother of the groom, acted as best man.

Following the ceremony a buffet luncheon was served to some fifty guests. The house was beautifully decorated with summer flowers. Mr. and Mrs. Rodger left later on a wedding trip through New York State, the bride travelling in a brown tweed suit, with accessories to match. They were the recipients of many beautiful gifts.

Celebrates 80th. Birthday

Went West in Covered Wagon 53 Years Ago

Concerning Mr. James Muir, who left this community 53 years ago in the settlement of the Canadian West, the MacGregor (Manitoba) Herald writes as follows:

We extend congratulations to our respected fellow citizen, Mr. James Muir, who celebrated his eightieth birthday on Friday last.

Mr. Muir was born at Lachute, Quebec, on August 5th., 1852, and came west to Manitoba in March 1879. The trip from Winnipeg to MacGregor was made by prairie schooner, and soon after reaching here Mr. Muir took up a homestead south-east of town.

Our friend farmed successfully for forty years, and retired from active work after the death of Mrs. Muir, in 1919. He has always been a strong advocate of mixed farming, a breeder of good horses, and was one of the first in the community to start raising Shorthorn cattle of which he built up a fine herd.

He also took a keen interest in municipal and other community affairs.

He is at present enjoying very good health, and the Herald joins with friends in wishing him a continuance of same for many years to come.

Mr. Muir, as a young man, occupied the Muir farm at Upper Lachute, and is a brother of the late Richard Muir. He is doubtless remembered by many of Lachute's older citizens, who will join with the MacGregor Herald in congratulations on his four-score years of constructive and successful life.

COUNTING THE COST OF FOREST FIRES

Many times this year newspapers have carried vivid accounts of the forest fires which have raged in various parts of Canada. These items of the drama of man's struggle against a great force, have made most interesting reading. But too often, perhaps, we are seized with the glamour of the battle and forget its cost. Remember that during the war, too, we were all so interested in the ebb and flow of the action that we never paused to think of the cost and never dreamed that the present years of poverty and stagnation would be a result. Forest fires can breed the same trouble for Canadian provinces that the war has bred for the world.

For one thing, revenue from the forests brings millions of dollars annually into the provincial treasury. If this revenue is reduced through depletion of the forests and through expenditure for fighting fires it will have to be made up somehow by the taxpayers of the Province. Moreover, it is quite possible that forest fires could kill the paper industry of the Province. If the better stands of timber are burned, poorer stands will have to be cut, costs will rise and foreign competitors will be one step nearer our market.

When the fire trucks go by us on the city streets we wonder if our home or office is threatened and we are relieved when we find that it is someone else's property that is burning. It is different with forest fires. No matter where the blaze may be it is our property that is burning and our welfare is at stake. More and more people are realizing this and are careful with fire in the woods; but more and more does it become vital that the remaining forests should be saved. Perhaps care will come in time, perhaps it will come too late.

A BUSINESSMAN'S TROUBLE

I wish to inform my creditors that the shattered condition of my bank account makes it impossible for me to send out a check in response to their request of recent dates, writes a business man.

My present financial condition is due to the federal laws, provincial laws, county laws, corporation laws, bylaws, mother-in-laws, brother-in-laws, and outlaws that have been foisted upon the unsuspecting public. Through the various laws, I have been held up, held down, walked on, sat on, flattened out, squeezed until I don't know who I am. These laws compel me to pay a merchant's tax, sales tax, turnover stock tax, excise tax, stamp tax income tax, real estate tax, school tax, syntax, carpet tax, auto tax, gas tax, light tax, check tax and street tax.

In addition to these taxes I am requested and required to contribute to every society and organization that the inventive genius of man can organize.

The government has so governed my business that I don't know who owns it. I am inspected, suspected and disrespected, examined, re-examined, checked and double checked, informed, required, instructed, commanded, ordered and compelled until all I know is that I am supposed to provide an inexhaustible supply of money for every known need, desire, hope of the human race, and because I refuse to donate to all and go out and beg, borrow or steal money to give away, I am cursed, discussed, boycotted, talked about, talked to, lied to, lied about held up, held down and robbed until I am nearly ruined and the only reason I am still clinging to life is to see what the heck is coming next.

The Captain's Corner

"IT IS FOUND"

Dear Boys:—

I have been looking for It for a very long time. True it has taken many years to discover; but I have always been held up by the knowledge that if I kept on looking my patience would at length be rewarded. Between ourselves I did not think I should discover it quite so soon or in the manner I have done so. When you have been searching for something for a very long while; when you have been travelling in far and distant countries and still seem to be as far away from your quest as ever, you do not quite expect to, as it were, turn round a corner and find it there waiting for you.

At one time I thought I should discover It under the shadow of the tall waving palm trees by the great river Nile in Egypt. Surely now, I thought, as I looked at the wonder of the setting sun, with its golden, crimson beams stretching far across the deep purple blue of an Eastern night, here is the end of my search. But it was not so. No message came to me out of the wondrous stillness of that magic evening; no gift from the romance of an Arabian night was given me as a sign or symbol that I had reached the journey's end. Only the great brown river rolled on its everlasting course, and it came to me then and for long afterwards, that I, also, must likewise resume my travelling.

Again amidst the old stone walls and in the narrow cobbled Normandy streets, I said — "Here at last my weary pilgrimage is over. See, I have only to wait until the sun has fully risen and this old clock in the Church tower has rung out, the noon-day chimes, and then indeed will be given me that which I have come so far to find." So I stood there, watching the sunlight grow stronger, until it was easy to distinguish the deep green moss so cosily tucked away in between the old grey stones; until I could even read the ancient inscription beneath the burnished copper hands of what must indeed be the quaintest time-piece in the whole wide world "Time is a very shadow that passeth away."

And then it was that I looked over the wall and saw a grey haired old man, leaning on a crooked stick. His shoulders were bent and his eyes dim.

"You be on a journey, Master?" he asked, when at length he noticed my presence. This startled me out of my day-dreams. Journey! Why I had thought that was over. But I looked round and saw that there were still places where the early morning mist remained as yet quite undisturbed by the sun's rays.

"Safe journey. God be with you," said the old man, raising his battered hat in farewell benediction.

It was a salutation not to be ignored, so I went on my way leaving him with his grey stones, soft sweet moss and the morning mist for company.

But it is found!—What? Don't be impatient I will tell you next week how it all came about. Can you wait till then? I hope so.

Your affectionate friend,

By Capt. O. J. Aldom.

Chapter 14.

Though Babs thought otherwise it was not Mickey, the cabin boy's desire for that which did not belong to him, that had been the real cause of Mr. Williams' shortness of temper. There were other reasons, that this young lady knew nothing about at all.

Mr. Williams hated mysteries. All his life he had trained himself in the belief that the only things worth doing were those that, to use his own blunt method of speech, "stood out as plain as a hand-spike." You knew then what you were about and everything was up to you, to do the best or worst as circumstances permitted. Up to the present he had had no reason to complain at all. Captain Somerville had, in past voyages, given him clear sailing orders, where they were bound for, and what cargo was being carried, and what cargo would be brought back. Indeed, so highly satisfactory from this angle had the ship's journey been, that the Chief Officer had been entirely happy with his lot. Now, however, the case was different, and he was consequently in a very bad mood, made all the worse because it was unnatural where he was concerned. After his interview with his Commander's little niece, he walked the deck in moody silence, enumerating in his mind the many reasons for his mental unrest.

"I don't like this voyage, not at all," he muttered to himself. "First the Commander goes and gets these two children and brings them aboard, which is no place for them anyway. Then he goes and ships a lot of boxes with the cargo that he tells me nothing about, which isn't right, if I'm to be held responsible for them. And last but not least, there's a lot of new crew that never ought to have been signed on, and judging by their looks we'll have trouble with them before long, or my name ain't what it is! . . . I know what I'll do," he said, speaking the words out loud, which is a custom sailors have acquired during long and lonely watches at sea. "I'll go to the Commander and get an explanation. No mysteries for me, thank you." Having reached this conclusion he determined with characteristic promptness to carry it into immediate effect. Reaching his Commander's cabin, he knocked loudly at the door and in response to a hearty invitation to enter, pushed his way through.

Captain Somerville was seated in his easy chair, with Babs occupying a very prominent and comfortable position on his knee.

"Hallo Chief; glad to see you," was his cheery welcome. "Come in and make yourself at home and don't mind Miss Babs."

Mr. Williams' stern set features did not in any way relax. "I thought you would be alone, Sir," he replied. "There are several matters I want to discuss with you, but I'll see you later on."

"No you won't, my lad," retorted Pat Somerville. "You'll sit yourself right down on that chair there, get out your pipe, and tell your warn, whatever it is, right now. Babs can go on with her picture book by herself."

There were certain times when genial Pat Somerville was every bit commander of his ship, and from the sudden change in the tone of his voice both his listeners knew instinctively that this was one of them, and obeyed instructions without question. Babs disengaged herself from her Uncle's arms and with her book made for the lounge in the further corner of the cabin, while the Chief officer, without another word of protest, settled himself down in the chair indicated and pulled out his pipe.

The Commander waited until he saw that it was going well, and then said, "Well, Williams, what's on your mind? Get it off your chest, man. I know something is worrying you. We've been shipmates too long for me not to sense that." The other looked up to meet a pair of very keen brown eyes fixed intently upon him, but not lacking a kindly twinkle all the same.

"You are right, Sir," he agreed. "There is something troubling me; a mystery about this voyage that I don't like and I would be obliged if you would let me into any secret, you may have. That is," he added quickly, "if as maybe you think fit to do so."

For a minute or two the Commander was silent. Then suddenly he leant across and placed his hand on his Chief Officer's knee.

"Dick, you're right. There is a mystery about this voyage, and I am going to tell you what it is.—Should have done so before long anyway, but as you have brought the matter up yourself, just listen to what I'm going to tell you. Your remarks can come afterwards.—Now, attend to me . . ." To be Continued.

SHOES TO BE TAPPED WITH BANANA WASTE

Walking on banana peels may not be as slippery a process as it sounds when a U.S. factory begins producing shoe soles, among others, made from banana waste.

This waste, which now is burned, with fiber from the sisal plant, which grows in Jamaica's dry plains, will be used to manufacture brown paper and a form of tough cardboard. From the cardboard will be made the shoe soles and many other articles of leather.

GORDONVILLE

Mr. and Mrs. Perrigard and son Gordon are spending their vacation with the latter's mother, Mrs. Waters, of Mountview Cottage.

Mrs. Owens and family, with Mrs. Downey, are spending the remainder of the season in Bijou Cottage.

Mrs. Pease, Mr. Horton Pease Mrs. Dixon and sons were the guests of Mrs. Maybury last week.

New arrivals at the "Kaulin" are Miss Dawson, Mr. Judd, Mr. Hutchings, Mr. Thompson, Miss Dunsmuir, Miss Somerset, Miss Hargraves, Miss Mercer, Miss Kiely, Miss McCartney, Miss Marsden, Miss Jones, Mr. Bourcier, Mr. Foley and Mr. Verne LeRiche.

Great excitement prevailed when Mrs. Perrigard was out fishing, and landed a maskinonge weighing 17 lbs. The fish measured 40 inches long and 19 inches circumference.

and I would crawl in mine. She came in last, it was vice versa.
Beds and Clubs.
We like the depression. We have come down off our pedestal and are really living at home now. The twin beds are stored in the garage and the family affair is being used. We are enjoying life. Instead of taking a hot water bottle to bed these cold nights she sticks her heels in my back, just like she did before Bennett was elected. I haven't been out on a party in eighteen months. I have lost my book of telephone numbers. My wife has dropped all the clubs. I believe we are falling in love all over again. I am pretty well satisfied with my life. Think I will keep her at least until she is forty and then if I feel like I do now, I may trade her for two twenties. I am feeling better since the depression. I take more exercise. I walk to town and a lot of folks who used to drive Cadillacs are walking with me. I like the depression.

I am getting real honest-to-goodness food. Three years ago we had filet mignon once a week now we have round steak with flour gravy. Then, we had roast breast of guinea hen; now we are glad to get sow-bosom with the buttons on it.

I like the depression. My salary has been cut to where I can't afford to buy lettuce and spinach and parsley and we can't afford to have sandwiches and frozen desserts and all that damfoolishness which has killed more good men than the World War.

I like the depression. Three years ago I never had time to go to church. I played golf all day Sunday and besides I was so darned smart there wasn't a preacher in West Texas could tell me anything. Now, I am going to church regularly; never miss a Sunday. And if this depression keeps on, I will be going to prayer meeting before long. I like the depression.

WHAT QPEBEC AGRONOMISTS ARE DOING

A class of men to whom agriculture in Quebec owes much is the agronomist once characterized as "men who gave advice," but now known as "research men" who have learned to take their cue from nature. These men are educating agriculturists, particularly the younger groups, along the lines of better and more scientific methods of farming and marketing of farm produce. They are experimenting with plant varieties common to the province, and are bringing in others from the four quarters of the globe.

Not only are these new varieties producing useful crops, but they are leaving behind them valuable plant foods upon which other and weaker varieties flourish to full development.

The agronomist is doing his level best to teach that farming is an exact science, and that only those who recognize and act on this fact can hope for great and lasting success as tillers of the soil.

CLAIMS FATIGUE IS CAUSE OF MANY ACCIDENTS

Fatigue plays a great part in motor accidents. Ed. Quinn, chairman of the Province of Quebec Safety League's Traffic Section, told members of his committee at a recent meeting. Figures showed that a large proportion of accidents were due to the fatigue of the driver.

In this connection Dr. Edwin C. Bullock, discussing the matter in a paper entitled: "Why tired drivers have accidents" had said, "Fatigue as it relates to motor vehicle accidents may be due to either physical or mental conditions. It may arise from lack of sleep, from improper food, from hours of cramped position in driving or from worry."

Factors to be considered in contracting fatigue are the mental and physical health of the driver: a safe limit on the hours of operation; restriction on the overloading of vehicles; the proper ventilation of the cab; the care that one does not over eat or drink; efficiency always decreases with fatigue.

In view of these facts, Mr. Quinn declared that automobilists who drive for pleasure, particularly in the summer, should take precautions to prevent fatigue. They should not start out on a long trip without sufficient sleep. They should see to it that they stop for a rest if they begin to feel sleepy on the road. Those who drive automobiles should be careful what they eat at the picnics they attend. They should not touch any intoxicating liquors as these tend to make them sleepy. Also they should not think about their worries while driving and persons riding in automobiles should refrain from worrying drivers.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE LESSON TOPIC

"CHRIST JESUS" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon for August 28, in all Christian Science churches.

Golden Text: "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and forever." (Hebrews 13: 8)

Selected Scriptural passages comprised in the Lesson-Sermon will include the following: "And John . . . sent them to Jesus, saying, art thou he that should come? or look we for another? Jesus answering said unto them, Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard: how that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached." "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end . . ." (Luke 7: 19, 22, and Isaiah 9: 7).

Also included in the Lesson-Sermon are the following citations from the Christian Science textbook "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "Jesus was born of Mary. Christ is the true idea voicing good, the divine message from God to men speaking to the human consciousness." "Jesus was a human name . . . On the other hand, Christ is not a name so much as the divine title of Jesus. The name is synonymous with Messiah, and alludes to the spirituality which is taught, illustrated, and demonstrated in the life of which Christ Jesus was the embodiment." (Pages 332, 333.)

ORANGE CHURCH PARADE AT LOUISA

Sunday, Aug. 21st., was a red letter day in St. Aidan's Church, Louisa, when the members of Lachute, Shrewsbury, and Louisa Orange Lodge united in their annual parade and service. Rev. J. A. Lackey, who, for many years had been pastor of the Church and people was the special preacher for the occasion; and as usual, gave a thoughtful and earnest address. Rev. J. W. H. Lummis, of Valleyfield, was present and assisted in making the service an impressive one. The incumbent Rev. Allan E. Mount, referred feelingly to Mr. Lackey's approaching departure from the district and expressed the sincere wishes of all, for a happy future to a faithful minister, and one who had never failed in sympathetic service throughout the community in which he laboured for so many years.

The Orangemen are to be heartily congratulated upon the success which crowned their efforts. The Church was filled to overflowing by the crowds who took advantage of the perfect weather; and careful organizing was manifested by the orderly and dignified parade and service. Many beautiful flowers decorated the altar.

LAKEFIELD.

The ladies of Trinity branch of the W. A. held a meeting at the parsonage on Wednesday evening, Aug. 24th., at which final arrangements were made for the Deanery meeting of the W. A. branches and friends.

Mrs. Ferrabee, Dominion President, and Mrs. Strachan, Diocesan President will D. V. both be present; and a pleasant and profitable time is anticipated. Service will be in Holy Trinity Church at 10.30 a.m., standard time, followed by a luncheon in the Gibb Parish Hall. After a brief interval the conference will take place, when matters of general interest will be discussed. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Every effort is being put forth to make this event in keeping with the various activities carried on by this devoted band of workers. At last year's meeting at Ste. Agathe a pleasing feature of the day, was the number of men present at the morning service and it is earnestly hoped that the men will cooperate in making this day the time of blessing it ought to be.

Miss Reta Tiffany, of Montreal, entertained the patrons at Ralph's Corner, with her toe & tap dancing exhibition.

Messrs. G. Bennett and S. Simon, accompanied by the Misses Ida Godin, Lillian Bennett and Alethea Marshall, motored from Arundel to attend the dance at Ralph's Corner on Saturday night.

Guests at Brae Mar Cottage on Sunday included Mr. S. Langille, and Mr. B. McArthur.

Week-end guests at Brae Mar cottage were Mr. and Mrs. G. Campbell of Saint John, N. B.

Mr. Stanley Andrews is spending his holidays with his family at the Lookout. Recent visitors also included Mr. J. Hughes, of Toronto, and Mrs. M. Hairman, of Vancouver.

Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Staniforth also Messrs. Percy and Haig Staniforth, have left by motor for Bridgewater, N. S. They will return in two weeks, accompanied by Mrs. P. Staniforth and son Curle.

Mrs. Eva Morrison, of Montreal, is spending a few days here, the guest of Mrs. Henry Morrison.

Miss Viola Moncrieff has returned home having spent the past week in Montreal as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Heathcote.

Miss Cassie Morrison & Mrs. Frost of Smith Falls, Ont., are spending a few days visiting the former's relatives.

Rev. Mr. and Mrs. J. Fulton our retiring United Church minister and his wife, have now moved to Longueuil to live.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Mahon and Mrs. Jas. Mahon, of Canton, N. Y., Mrs. David Dixon and Miss Ethel Dixon were recent guests of Mr. and Mrs. George Marshall of Arundel.

Miss Amy Marshall, of Arundel, is spending a few days with Miss Edith Dixon of Dalesville.

New freight rates on live stock with low minimum weights to meet the competition of motor trucks in the transportation of animals to market have been put into effect by the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways covering movement from stations within a radius of 150 miles of Toronto, and these were effective from August 15. The new rates are being tried out as an experiment, and it is expected they will result in a very substantial increase in the rail movement of cattle, sheep, and hogs.

One of the most interesting passengers arriving in Montreal by the Canadian Pacific SS. Duchess of Richmond on August 13 was "Miss England III", the world's fastest motor-boat. After the international races with Gar Wood's boat at Detroit, Kaye Don will take "Miss England III" to Toronto, where visitors at the Canadian National Exhibition will be able to see an attempt by the powerful vessel to lower her own or any other new world's record. The big speed boat was accompanied in the Duchess of Richmond by R. E. Garner, senior mechanic, and "mate" to Kaye Don during the races.

Two hundred organizations affiliated with the governing body of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, whose seventh annual convention will be held at Halifax, September 13-15, will send members to a pre- and post-convention sea cruise and land tour with the Clarke Steamship Co., the Dominion Atlantic and the Canadian Pacific Railways, scheduled to leave Montreal September 3 and return there September 19. The sea cruise will be on the S.S. New Northland, calling at Charlottetown, Sydney, St. Pierre-Miquelon, St. John's, Newfoundland, and Halifax, prior to the convention, and will cover the Maritime Provinces after it.

Cost of travel to Eastern Quebec, the Lower St. Lawrence and to resorts in the Maritime Provinces has been deflated this summer in a fare revolution that has never been equalled in the history of the railways of Canada. This reduction works out at about fare and one-tenth for the round trip to any one of a score of glorious summer centres on Canada's unsurpassed Atlantic seaboard with proportionately reduced fares to many other destinations in eastern Quebec and the Maritime Provinces which are also in effect from stations in the province of Quebec, Montreal and west, and also in Ontario, Sudbury, Capreol, Windsor, Sarnia and east. This great concession by the railways of Canada is on offer during the month of August with a return limit of 21 days, ending the date of sale. (1932)

Why Traffic Signals ?

By J. H. Doughty-Davies, Town Planner, Calgary.

To the average individual a system of Traffic Signals is one of two things. It is either an evidence of the progressiveness of his City or else it is just a "darned nuisance." As is so often the case, both opinions may be partly right. If the latter opinion is wholly correct then there is something wrong. It may be a lack of understanding of signal operation, its possibilities and limitations, or it may be that the location or arrangement of the signals is at fault.

The majority of us drive, or ride in automobiles, or at least we did until recently, and hope to do so again, so that, whether we wish it or not, some interest in signal operation and location, is forced upon us. It is for this reason that a discussion of such points is entered upon here.

Increasing traffic increases the usefulness, or value, of a street. That is the "law of increasing returns" operates. But this works only up to a point. At a certain traffic flow congestion is felt and from there on the "law of decreasing returns" functions. (It should be understood that density is not the same thing as congestion. Congestion has been defined as that condition where one unit of a traffic stream interferes abnormally with the movement of other units.)

The law of decreasing returns eventually results in a condition where the economic loss to a community is greater than the cost of installing a regulatory system. If traffic signals are designed for the particular conditions they are to govern and are properly located they will permit greater usefulness or value.

The problem is to discover when the stage is reached where signals become an economic necessity. One way of ascertaining this is to make a traffic survey at busy intersections, whereby the intervals between cars arriving at any intersection can be established and also the delays caused by cross traffic. If the installation of a traffic signal system is going to reduce the total delays it obviously is going to increase the value of the street and this increase in value has to be weighed against the cost of installation. If on the other hand the total delays cannot be reduced by a signal system—well, there is the occasional town which wishes now that it had not spent the money on a system that it did. For, and this is an important point, if signals are used before they are required, they increase, in fact create, delays rather than reduce them. But again, and this may or may not be important, there is the accident risk to the poor pedestrian that may have some bearing on a decision.

How are we to tell whether delays will be minimized? To be in a position to answer this it is necessary to consider the details of modern signal operation for a moment. The time elaps-

ing from the beginning of a colour until that same colour shows again is known technically as a cycle length while the time lengths and order of the individual colours constitutes a "colour sequence." In interconnected street intersections it is possible now to have the sequences varying one from another as required by local conditions but the cycle length is the same at all such intersections, although it may be varied at different times by a master controller. The simplest sequence is red followed by green with a later green-amber combination for the protection of pedestrians and traffic clearance.

In designing a system the first consideration is the ratio of the red or stop signal to the green or go signal. When the red colour shows on one street, green is showing on the intersecting street so that the red - green ratio is the same as the "go" ratio on the two intersecting streets. This ratio should be the same as the ratio of the average groups of vehicles approaching the intersection on the corresponding streets, and each green period should be long enough to pass the average group. It needs emphasizing that the minimum workable cycle causes the least total delay.

So far it has been simple but as soon as more than one intersection has to be considered then complicating factors enter our consideration.

The modern method of traffic regulation has evolved from the synchronised arrangements through the stagger system (referring to the system, not the mode of progression) to the present system. Where this system is in proper operation it is possible for a car, which has got into step, to go through all intersections on a street without a halt. It is obvious that to obtain this condition of continuous movement the green light must show at each intersection after a sufficient time from that of the preceding intersection to permit a car to traverse the length of the intervening block. If the blocks are of varying lengths then the lag must vary accordingly. This modifies the colour periods.

That does not seem so difficult to accomplish, but - the average street has two opposite streams of traffic, and it is very easy to arrange a perfect system in one direction only to find that at various intersections cars travelling in the opposite direction will be halted. Another modifying factor is the width of the block. In addition other conditions which are due to local causes help to determine the most efficient sequence and consequently the cycle.

After consideration has been given to the various requirements a design can be produced in diagram form which shows clearly the traffic possibilities of all intersections.

Miss Marjory Burwash, of Victoria, B. C., Mrs. Jack Findley, of Montreal, and Miss E. Stevenson, of Ottawa, are the guests of Mrs. Geo. Creswell

The local fire brigade were called out at 12.45 Monday night to a fire at the residence of R. Belanger. The outbreak occurred in the woodshed adjoining the dwelling, and thanks to prompt action little damage resulted.

The C.P.R. local trains have been on slow orders the early part of the week, due to damage to the track between Ste. Therese and Calumet. It is said a large quantity of new rails have to be laid along this section.

A truck driven last Monday by Mr. Montpetit, road patrolman between Lachute and Grenville, caught fire on Lachute Rd. and was completely destroyed. Mr. G. Y. Deacon, being notified, immediately dispatched two fire extinguishers to the scene, but they arrived too late to avert the damage; the cause of the outbreak was not known.

Lacrosse, which at one time was a very popular game in this town, has been revived and Mr. Lemuel Barron has undertaken the work of coaching the players. A game is scheduled for Labor Day at 3 o'clock with the Oka Indian Team, who will visit Lachute on that day. Particulars of the game will appear in our next issue.

A lacrosse game will be staged on the Brownsburg D. C. Co. Picnic Grounds, Sunday, Aug. 28th., at 3.30 p.m., between Lachute and Calumet teams. All enthusiasts are welcome.

The "Dollar Day" C.P.R. excursion to Montreal was well patronized last Sunday. The first special from Hull passed through with a thousand odd passengers aboard, while the second special, from Calumet, east, proved equally popular. About 100 trippers from Lachute took advantage of the cheap rate.

The marriage of Dr. W. Carleton Whiteside, son of the late Rev. Arthur Whiteside, of Victoria, was solemnized recently at Edmonton, Alberta, to Miss Lila Belle Calvert, resident of that city, and following their honeymoon in the South, they have returned to take up residence on 115th. street. Dr. Whiteside, his sister Joy, and brother Barlow, were formerly known in this town, the latter having attended the Academy and later sacrificed his life overseas. Good wishes are extended to Dr. and Mrs. Whiteside by many old friends in this community.

Work on the highway from Montreal to Lachute will, it is expected, be completed by the end of this week as far as Lachute, and in order that it might be continued on the Grenville this year a delegation from Lachute and Grenville, headed by our local member Geo. Dansereau, interviewed Hon. Mr. Perreault, Minister of Roads, but no definite promise was given, although the necessity of continuing the road through to Hull is fully realized. Owing to the curtailment of his budget Mr. Perreault has had to forego much of the work intended, but he is hopeful that same will shortly be executed.

FORMER RESIDENT PASSES AT RIPE OLD AGE

There passed away at Montreal, yesterday, one who was well known as an old resident of Hill Head, in the person of Mrs. Thos. E. Evans, eldest daughter of the late Thos. Pollock. Death occurred Wednesday afternoon, at the Montreal residence of her son, Garnet, at the ripe old age of 84 years. Beside her son, one sister Mrs. Eakin also remains, in Montreal.

The deceased lady was married 62 years ago to Thomas Evans, of Dunany, who predeceased her 48 years ago. Before marriage however, she had been a pupil in the original Lachute Academy and had taught in the County schools. It is now 25 years since Mrs. Evans had resided in the vicinity of her birthplace, but only three weeks ago she paid a visit to her nephew Arthur Pollock and former friends in town.

The funeral will take place at St. Simeon's Church on Saturday morning, on arrival of the train from Montreal. Rev. J. A. Lackey will officiate, and interment will follow in Lachute Cemetery.

LET CHILDREN SWIM

These are the days when mothers heave a sigh of relief when their children arrive safely home from swimming. We want to let them go but we are always thankful to see them get home. Whatever you do, do not prevent your children from learning to swim. It may be dangerous for them not to know. Swimming should be a part of every child's heritage.

If you will not let them go because you are frightened, how about going with them yourself. I can just see some of you throwing up your hands in horror, and saying how in the world could I find time to go swimming. Granted you are very busy, you would be surprised to find how many things can be eliminated, if you really put your mind to it.

Children who are old enough to swim are old enough to help. If they are helping in order to be taken swimming, they will undertake things that they never tried before and will work with a speed and a willingness that you did not know was in them. If you are frightened to have them dust because they may break your treasurers, put the said treasurers away for the summer. Do less cooking and baking, eat more fresh vegetables and fruits, and both you and your family will feel the better for it.

If you go swimming with the children, so much the better. If you can't swim, your children will get a great kick out of trying to teach you. If you just sit and watch, the sun and air and above all the change and rest will be good for you. It is quite possible to darn and mend and still keep an eye on the children. Whatever you do, leave your don'ts at home. If you are going to keep at them forever it is no fun for any one. One of the nicest things about it is the freedom. If you look at it sensibly there is very little that need be forbidden.

If you feel that you cannot manage to go quite as often as the children want, which will usually be every day, look about and see if your children's chums mothers do not feel about the same way as you do and they may be willing to take their share of the white woman's burden.

This is not a matter of theory. It can be done. I know because I trailed my way and sometimes it was a weary way, to the river almost every summer afternoon for years. It was my chief occupation, until finally the family could swim better than I, and had learned that the swimming was just as good and not half so dangerous in water that could be bottomed, instead of very deep water.

So many women are terrified of the water. That must be a hangover from the days when we tried to swim with skirts well below the knees and yards and yards round. To say nothing of the shoes and stockings. A sure-fire laugh at the movies is a picture of girls in bathing suits such as I wore when trying vainly to learn to swim. And yet some people think those were the good old days! I know one woman with several well grown children who lived in sight of the lake—and not one of those children could swim. Simply because their mother was frightened of the water and would not let them go near it. Yet she had more courage in other things than almost any other woman I know. Oh well! I guess we all have a blind spot.

The moral of this tale, is let the children swim, even if you have to go with them yourself.

PICKLED WATERMELON RIND

Peel watermelon rind and cut into pieces the desired size for pickling. Soak over night in a brine in the proportion of one tablespoon salt to one quart of water. In the morning drain and boil in fresh water until clear and tender. Drain and cook in the following syrup for ten minutes.

1 pint vinegar
2 pounds sugar
1 ounce stick cinnamon.
1/2 ounce whole cloves

Tie pieces in a bag and bring the syrup to a boil and then add the rind.

CANNED BEANS

Cut beans in suitable pieces and cook until tender but not overcooked adding to 9 cups of beans 1/2 cup salt and 3/4 cup sugar. Bottle in sterilized bottles. Before using freshen in at least two waters.

FRUIT PIES

A young married woman has just telephoned to see how to make Cherry pie. As she did not know, it occurred to me that perhaps there were others who were not sure of fruit pies. The technique of all of them is about the same.

The chief thing is to devise some scheme to thicken the fruit juice. There are various ways of doing this, but after many trials I have come to the conclusion that sago makes the best thickening, and next to that is quick tapioca. We like it much better than flour or corn starch.

Acid fruits such as rhubarb or cherry require about a cup of sugar to the average sized pie; sweeter fruits require somewhat less, usually about three-quarters of a cup, depending on the sweetness of the fruit. Mix a level teaspoon of sago with the sugar. Put a thin layer of this mixture on the bottom crust. Fill the pie with the fruit. Dampen the edge of the bottom crust and ly. Put on the top crust and press the crusts together at the bottom of the side of the pie to seal it and to help retain the juice. Press the edges carefully together. Finish by marking with tines of fork. Bake until gently browned in a hot oven of 450 degrees.

With things the way they are golfers are probably yelling "three" this year. —Life

This is what Mrs. Albert Bolton, of Toronto, writes: "Our little girl, Margaret Jean, was nursed for the first few months, but this did not satisfy her. I had heard about Eagle Brand and decided to try it. She took to it right away and there has been no trouble since. Her flesh is firm; lovely, straight limbs, good bone development, and she is so contented. Last September she won third prize at the Canadian National Exhibition, against 102 entrants.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Six bandits came aboard the steamer, Midnight Sun, while she was tied to the bank of the Mackenzie. Father Claverly and the other passengers on the boat were amazed at the sight of bandits in this great Waterways country, a thousand miles north of Edmonton. Jimmy Montgomery, who had spent years with the "Canadian Mounted," drew his gun in the face of the covering rifles and fired upon the ruffians. He was shot through the heart by a half-breed. The bandits set away with gold dust and choice peltry.

CHAPTER II.—Corporal Bill Hardstock brings the news of the crime to Sergeant Alan Baker at the Mounted Police post at Fort Endurance. After a brief dispute over plans with his incompetent superior, Inspector Haskell, Alan starts out after the bandits in the big police launch with the corporal and four constables.

CHAPTER III.—Reaching the Midnight Sun, they stop long enough for Alan to board her and consult with the skipper to put Jimmy Montgomery's orphaned four-year-old daughter off at Fort Endurance and leave her in the care of Alan's fiancée, Elizabeth Sault. At the MacMillan trading post on the Big Alouka, Joyce MacMillan alone, waiting the return of Dave, her father, from a fur-buying trip. She is thrilled when the police launch ties up there for the night, as she has not seen Alan Baker for months. Secretly she had hoped to marry him; then she was stunned by the news of his engagement to Elizabeth. She is happy now to perceive from his halting talk that the planned marriage is not definitely certain.

CHAPTER IV.—Larry Young, one of Alan's men, discovers in MacMillan's fur shed a bale of pelts stolen from the Midnight Sun. The evidence incriminates Dave so strongly that Alan is compelled to tell Joyce. She hotly defends her father. Alan leads his expedition up the Big Alouka. Compelled by Haskell's foolish orders to divide the party, Alan fails to capture the bandits. The police expedition returns to Fort Endurance with Larry badly wounded.

CHAPTER V.—Haskell, who is Alan's active enemy and is trying to win Elizabeth, blames Alan for the failure and orders his demotion to the ranks. He flatly denies that he ordered Alan to split the police party. He refuses to let Alan lead a second expedition against the bandits. Seeing only one way now to go after the bandits and clear Joyce's father from the charges resulting from the obviously planted evidence, Alan buys out of the Mounted. Haskell gives Alan his release on condition that he signs a paper to the effect that Haskell did not give the order to split the expedition.

CHAPTER VI.—After making arrangements with Hardstock and old Dad Pence to look after Joyce's safety while she is alone at the MacMillan post (her father being jailed at Fort Endurance), Alan starts out of the country in a motor canoe. As the days pass and she does not hear from him, Joyce is heartick for Alan. She questions Hardstock when the latter pays her one of his brief calls, and from what Hardstock tells her she believes final arrangements for the wedding have been made.

Buzzard grew impatient. "Suppose we get down to essentials. You said you wanted to leave as soon as you could. Then let's talk sense. How about gas? This crate of mine isn't one of these transatlantic planes. It'll do about seven hundred miles in a pinch, and then it stops and sets down. I'll have to get a pack-chute for you. A decent one'll cost three hundred. I've got to put on a new propeller; that toothpick on the old crate now is about ready to quit. A new prop costs like sixty. Then we need navigating instruments on a long trip like this. They come high. I could use fifteen hundred dollars."

Buzzard was thoughtful for a moment. "Maybe," he said finally, "you won't have to raise it. I'll tell you what, Alan: you give me two hundred, and I'll try to manage the rest of it. You'll need money for your outfit and we'll have to keep some for operating expenses."

They went back to the Chateau and waited. At three o'clock, the wire came from Victoria.

"The five hundred is accompanying this let me know if need more looking forward to seeing you and presumably meeting Mrs. Baker."

"S. G. V. STEELE."

Alan was grateful for the desperately needed money; grateful for the personal warmth of Colonel Steele's message. But he felt that he had sold his freedom now and indentured himself.

Stubbornly he forced his mind away from the heavy cost and regrets that tore at him. Putting aside three hundred dollars for operating expenses, he gave Buzzard two hundred and kept two hundred for himself. After arranging to meet out at the field that night, they separated.

At a pawn shop Alan stopped and bought a pair of binoculars. Powerful x-12's of a costly make. They put a sad dent in his roll. Farther along he managed to purchase two heavy automatics, slipping the proprietor ten dollars extra in lieu of a permit. Then came emergency food for the trip and the flying togs Buzzard had advised him to get.

He still lacked a folding canoe, a number of small items, and one last piece of equipment—the most vital of all his adventure. Down to fifteen dollars, he went into another pawn shop and soaked his expensive watch and a diamond hairloom of his mother's, making the owner promise to hold them for six months. With a hundred and seventy-five in his pocket, and a second-hand Ingersoll which the old gentleman had kindly given him, he walked out, breathing easier.

As he passed a fashion shop, his eyes happened to be caught by an exquisite ceinture flechee, a broad sash-belt hand-made. In old Quebec. Thinking of the worn and faded one Joyce owned, he stood admiring this beauty. Imagining how rapturous Joyce would be if she had it. She knew how to wear it properly, with a saucy grace that only the metisse girls could match, for the wearing of the bright girdle was an ancient voyageur custom rapidly dying out. . . . Forty precious dollars . . . but worth the price if she'd like it, a gift from him.

Later, through the gathering twilight, he walked to the armory. Two companies were practicing there that evening. By pretending to be a new Edmonton citizen anxious to learn how to drill and perhaps to join the militia, he not only got inside but was shown all around the place by a lieutenant impressed by his stalwart powerful physique.

The lieutenant went back to his duties, the companies went on drilling, the privileged spectators began trickling homeward. When the armory was closed at eleven, when the gaunt big building was locked up and deserted, it was Alan Baker who rose up, like a thief in the night, out of a big bass drum case in a corner on the ground floor.

Not daring to strike a light, he groped across the parade floor to the room where the lieutenant had showed him the machine guns and explained their use to him, commander of a machine gun platoon through a dozen major battles! He felt around among various types till he laid hands on an old friend, the Browning air-cooled, A-10. He found plenty of ammunition, a better tripod, and lastly a tarpaulin to wrap the whole outfit in, for if he started down an Edmonton street with a machine gun over his shoulder he was not likely to get far.

Gathering all his things at the Chateau, he whipped on out to the rendezvous arranged with his new-found partner.

Buzzard had put in some busy hours too. He had filled up on gas and oil; had attended to several repairs and replacements; had acquired a pack-chute, new propeller and half a dozen costly flying instruments.

With a couple of mechanics whom he had awakened at an all-night garage, he was busy putting on the new prop.

Vaguely suspicious, Alan took him aside and asked quietly:

"Say, Buzzard, how did you get all this equipment? You've got more than a thousand dollars' worth here, and you only had two hundred."

"I borrowed that stuff temporarily. There's several government planes here, and they had extra equipment."

"Borrowed it? Temporarily?"

"Well, stole it."

"Stole it? Government property? Good Lord, man! That's a penitentiary offense. The authorities will dead sure catch on to who took it."

"Yes, I expect they will. At least the night watchman'll know. I invested five dollars in liquor for him; and he's sleeping it off over behind that hangar. He'll put them next to us."

Buzzard's voice became serious. "But Alan, I couldn't get it any other way. We simply had to have it, or give up our trip."

"Yes, we had to have it," Alan admitted reluctantly. "I guess you did right, Buzzard." But it staggered him to realize that he and his partner were criminals now in the eyes of the law. Their motives would be no excuse. They faced a prison term if caught. And their capture was inevitable: soon or late they would have to show up somewhere.

He could not bring himself to reproach Buzzard. He himself had stolen a machine gun, though he had covered his tracks pretty well; and Buzzard after all had done this for his sake. And he felt that this theft was justified, if ever theft could be. With no chance of personal gain, at heavy cost of their own hard-earned dollars and at risk of their very lives, he and Buzzard were flinging themselves against a pack of murderous criminals.

They donned their flying togs. Buzzard showed Alan how to put on his pack-chute, how to jump clear in case of disaster and jerk the rip-cord. They climbed in and snapped their safety belts.

Revolving up in short order, Buzzard flected the throttle, jumped over the chocks, taxied down the field, and gave it the gun.

Just as the first rosy fingers of dawn were reaching up into the eastern sky, they hopped off, left the sleeping city behind them, and roared away into the North.

CHAPTER VIII

A Deadly Trap

"Slob-ice" Jensen was glaring around him at the other five faces in the tent.

"Some of you lubbers," he growled, "ain't got the sense you was borned with. You gimme a pain with your whining and growling and always wanting to argy about what I tell you. Now I'm gonna explain just what's ahead of us and what we gotta do."

The six men were as motley a crew as ever the whaling fleets of Bering's sea and the Western Arctic could muster up. With one exception the six of them were deck hands—wharf wolves of gutter speech and alley vices; strange men to be camped in the heart of a wilderness that even the Indians seldom penetrated.

There was John Sieblelski, a square-faced squat Alaskan, a descendant of the Cossack Promyshleniki (fur-hunters) who for generations, when Russia ruled the northwestern shores of America, had held brutal sway over the Aleuts and Kalosh in their lust for peltry.

There was Pete Gonzales, a Sandwich Islander, brown-skinned, his white teeth flashing, his dress gaudy and picturesque.

There was "Lunnon Dick," a wiry stunted limpy, with Battersea accent and quick jerky ways.

There was "Chink" Woolley, a quarter-Chinese, an olive-faced, silent non-descript, with his right arm in sling from Bill Hardstock's bullet.

The fifth was a Dogrib meti named Andre, a thin small weasel-like man of fifty. He had just returned from a scouting trip down the Big Alouka.

The six of them were talking, or listening rather to Jensen talk, of final plans to escape. Echoing the identical line of reasoning which Alan Baker had sketched in Haskell's cabin, Jensen went on: "Some of you wanta go back to the River and git outside thataway. H—i's fire—you'd mebbe git ten miles afore the Yeller-stripes 'ud grab you off. Some of you wanta go north to the Arctic coast. Whanor? No ships to git away on, and the Yeller-stripes've got patrols there to boot. You say, 'Head south.' Yeah—and run into the nest of p'lice posts down there around Athabasca. We can't go south ner west ner north, but we kin go east—"

Lunnon Dick spoke up: "Clear hover 't' Udon bay er Manitoba? Two thousand miles away? That's a bloody long 'ard trot. Slob-Rice."

Jensen turned on him with a fierce anger and withering sarcasm that silenced Lunnon for an hour.

"Sure it's a h—ish long hard trot, you runty bilge rat! Don't I know it? But I'd rather tramp ten thousand miles than do them twenty slow short steps from a hoosegow to a scaffold!"

The Others All Nodded Emphatically

The others all nodded emphatically, fearful of Jensen's scorching anger. They were sitting there on a hundred and fifty thousand dollars which he had got for them. They owed their very lives to his quick thinking aboard the steamer, when he had pulled their trick out of the fire. And they were leaning on him now to save them from the Mounted and get them out to the oblivion of a big city.

He went on explaining the escape. "— here, all of you—look 't' here."

GIFTS FOR BUILDING THE TABERNACLE

GOLDEN TEXT—Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase.

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 35:4-36:7.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Meeting Place That Love Built.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Meeting Place That Love Built.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Giving Our Best to God.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Giving in Church Life.

I. The Plan of the Tabernacle (Exod. 25:27).

It was a rectangular structure thirty cubits long, ten cubits wide and ten cubits high. It was divided into two rooms: the Holy Place, and the Holy of Holies. These rooms were separated by the veil. The tabernacle was within a court one hundred cubits long and fifty cubits wide. Within the court, before the door of the tabernacle, was situated the brazen altar; between the altar of sacrifice and the door was the laver; inside the Holy Place the candlestick and table of shewbread; directly in front of the veil the altar of incense which was closely connected with the brazen altar in the contact of fire and blood. In the Holy of Holies was found the Ark of the Covenant, the most sacred object of the entire tabernacle.

II. The Meaning of the Tabernacle (Exod. 25:30).

The tabernacle was the symbol of God's dwelling place. The bond of union affording a medium of communication was the priesthood. The priest was the mediator between God and the people. The tabernacle typified the incarnation of God in Christ (John 1:14). The furniture of the tabernacle, beginning with the brazen altar, symbolized the spiritual history of the worshiper, making clear the sinner's method of approach unto God. The position of the brazen altar at the door of the tabernacle indicated that no one could draw nigh unto God except by way of that altar. The question of sin must be settled before man dares approach God. The laver typifies the sanctification of the believer. Sanctification was effected by the washing at the laver, prefiguring the influences of God's Word. The candlestick with its central shaft and its extending branches indicated the unity and diversity of God's people. The candlestick also shows the purpose of the sanctification of the believer; namely, to shine for God. The table of shewbread was for a memorial unto God of his chosen people, one loaf for each tribe. The altar of incense symbolized communion with God in worship. The putting of the blood from the brazen altar on the altar of incense shows that acceptable prayer rests on the ground of the atoning work of Christ. The veil symbolizes the flesh of Christ. The rending of the veil at the time of Christ's crucifixion shows that the death of Christ gives access to God. The mercy seat upon which the blood of the sin offering was sprinkled indicates that the claim of God's law had been satisfied.

III. The Offerings for the Tabernacle (Exod. 35:20-29).

1. The motive of giving (v. 21, cf. v. 5). "Whoever is of a willing heart, let him bring it, an offering of the Lord." Giving which meets God's approval must spring from the heart (II Cor. 9:7). The offering must not only be made of a willing mind, but it must be as unto the Lord, an expression of love and godly fear.

2. Who had part in giving (v. 22). "They came both men and women." It was God's purpose from the beginning that women should unite in the support and care of the worship of God.

3. What was to be given (vv. 23-28). Two features characterized the giving: measure and variety.

a. The measure. They brought what they had to bring. No one is under obligation to give that which he does not possess. This is emphasized in such expressions as "every man with whom was found," "all the women who were wise hearted." What one has to give is clearly the measure of one's duty in giving.

b. Variety. They brought jewelry (v. 22), gold (v. 22), fine linen (v. 23), goat's hair and rough skin (v. 23). Wise hearted women would spin with their hands (v. 25). The rulers brought the expensive things that were needed (v. 27).

IV. The Workers Who Constructed the Tabernacle (Exod. 35:29-36:7).

1. Wise hearted women (35:25, 26).

2. Skilled artists (35:30-36:4). Bezaleel and Aboliab, with others, executed this task. Their wisdom and skill were the result of the Spirit of God upon them.

WORDS OF WISDOM

The devil does not have to worry about the children of a card-playing mother.

I see that spirituality of mind is the main qualification for the work of the ministry.—Urquhart.

There are two things we should be aware of—that we never be ashamed of the gospel, and that we never be a shame to it.—Philip Henry.

MORIN HEIGHTS

The Mille Isles folk are proud of the fact that Ryan Brothers have the contract for Lachute High School building.

In the Clerical world, this community has produced two well known figures, in Canon Strong, of Alberta, and Archdeacon Parker of Winnipeg.

When the new highway to St. Jerome is finished a great future is anticipated for Mille Isles, especially in the summer tourists business, as we have every attraction for visitors.

Dr. and Mrs. Willey, of McGill, are occupying their new home in the Valley road. We trust they will be with us all winter.

The Boys' Camp at Tamara-couta is closing one of its most successful seasons, and without accident. Every year finds the plant and equipment improved.
